Profile

Russian neo-nazi bitch.

Katya is a Russian resident for Pripyatory

She is a recurring character and attends Carie's class regularly.

PERSONALITY

- Hot-Headed
- Bitter
- Outcasted
- Gun Nut
- Extremist
- Cynical

Racist, Violent, Emotionally Stunted

Katya is hostile, volatile, and ideologically hardened, but not without contradictions. Her affection for stray animals, for example, stands at odds with her otherwise combative demeanor. She is loyal to a fault, particularly toward her brother, and deeply distrustful of institutions or anyone who offers help.

BACKGROUND

Katya Borovnikova, often referred to by her street alias Kislaya ("The Sour One"), was a radicalized Russian youth figure and co-founder of the neo-Nazi group known as the Blood Battalion. Born in Leningrad (modern-day St. Petersburg), she grew up during the post-Soviet 1990s in a household marked by ultranationalist rhetoric and alleged law enforcement connections.

KATYA BOROVNIKOVA

From an early age, Katya exhibited signs of social withdrawal and anger issues. By her teens, she was active in underground far-right forums and began attending nationalist marches alongside her older brother, Borya "Buryat" Borovnikov. Her political views intensified during her time at a regional law faculty, which she dropped out of after two and a half years.

Katya joined the Sparrow Crew, a local youth gang, at age 16. Her aggressive presence and public-facing propaganda made her a notable figure in Russian far-right circles. Online, she posted anti-immigrant videos and amateur ideological essays; offline, she was suspected of involvement in multiple racially motivated attacks — though formal charges were consistently dropped or reduced.

In 2005, she co-founded the Blood Battalion — a more disciplined, secretive offshoot of her former gang. Under her and her brother's leadership, the group focused on militarized training, tight operational secrecy, and connections with foreign extremist organizations. Her notoriety grew, though so did internal tensions.

In 2007, she was arrested in relation to a violent assault and eventual death of a Dagestani man. The trial resulted in mixed verdicts, and Katya was convicted of hooliganism rather than murder, receiving a reduced sentence.

DEATH

Katya died in 2008 at age 19 alongside her brother. Their bodies were discovered in a rundown Moscow apartment with clear evidence of execution-style killings. The case was quickly labeled a drug-related incident by authorities, though survivors from the Blood Battalion later claimed it was part of a larger internal purge.

The killings were reportedly carried out by rival factions during a leadership split between Moscow- and St. Petersburg-based neo-Nazi cells. Katya's murder was both retaliatory and strategic — eliminating a liability in a movement already collapsing from within.

AFTERLIFE

Katya was originally marked for Hell. However, a psychological evaluation by the Bureau of Soul Administration revealed a documented history of early psychosis and behavioral disorders, leading to a reassignment to Pripyat Purgatory under a high-risk rehabilitation clause.

Now a resident of Pripyat's most volatile sector, Katya is classified as non-cooperative and socially toxic. She is officially enrolled in the Department of H.O.P.E.'s rehabilitation program, though she participates inconsistently, mocks staff, and undermines group sessions. She is unemployed and rarely interacts with others beyond her brother, whom she remains fiercely attached to.
