Loud, Chaotic and Fun

Margaret "Maggie" Barrows is a loud chatolic nun from Manhattan, New York, a loudmouth punk girl with a knack for pissing off authority.

BACKGROUND

Maggie was born and raised in Manhattan's Hell's Kitchen, in a working-class Irish-American Catholic family. A natural loudmouth with punk in her veins, she grew up sneaking into downtown venues like CBGB during its twilight years, moshing in ABC No Rio and played bass in a crust punk band.

SISTER BARROWS

GENERAL

Despite her chaotic lifestyle, Maggie had a strange reverence for faith. At 19, after a series of bad relationships, too many drugs, and one near-death experience, she shocked everyone by joining the Sisters of Charity, an urban-based Catholic order known for their blue habits in NYC's toughest neighborhoods. Even in the convent, she stood out — cracking jokes, going commando under her robe, and chewing gum during chapel silence. But she meant it. All of it. Even if she didn't always act like it.

DEATH

Maggie died in a car crash in Washington Heights, just a few blocks from where she first took her vows. It was a rainy night, and she had just helped run a youth outreach event at a homeless shelter, She was killed instantly. Her death devastated the local community, especially the kids she mentored

AFTERLIFE

Now residing in the Pripyat Orphanage, Maggie works under Sister Olga, much to the older nun's spiritual exhaustion. Maggie serves as the chaotic big sister figure to the dead children in purgatory.

Her behavior clashes constantly with Olga's discipline, but even the strictest residents can't deny her heart's in the right place.

Despite being an adult nun, Maggie often behaves like one of the kids: skipping, sneaking out at night, playing horror games, or stealing snacks from the locked food pantry. She causes daily headaches for Olga — yet, ironically, she's also the one who helps calm crying children and ease the fears of the newly dead.

While Olga serves as a Stric Mother, Maggie's the big fun sister figure of Purgatory. Loud, dramatic, immature... but deeply loving.
