Profile

Creepy Chzech Doctor

Dr. Buriánek is a Czech resident for Pripyatory

He is a resident in Pripyat Purgatory, Dr. František Buriánek is an imposing Czech psychiatrist and neurosurgeon currently residing in Pripyat. Once the highly respected face of mental health care in the Czech Republic, his reputation masked a disturbing reality: behind his pristine academic record and calm professional demeanor lay a man with a cold, clinical fascination for the suffering of others

PERSONALITY

- Stern
- Serious
- Loner
- Narcissistic
- Intellectual
- Criminal

František is highly intelligent (IQ 155), articulate, and unnervingly composed. He carries himself with the quiet confidence of a man who believes he is the smartest person in the room—and often is. His speech is precise and formal, with little room for small talk or pleasantries, and his stern, unreadable expression makes him difficult to approach. Though he can display charm when necessary, it is usually calculated and manipulative rather than genuine.

He is deeply pragmatic, viewing morality as a flexible concept in the pursuit of scientific advancement. His infamous remark—"Just because you're insane doesn't mean you can't be evil"—perfectly encapsulates his philosophy when dealing with violent or psychopathic patients. Despite his sadistic tendencies, František is still a capable and skilled doctor, often providing life-saving aid to residents in Pripyat when needed.

BURIÁNEK

BACKGROUND

Born in Brno in 1949, František excelled academically from a young age, graduating top of his class in both psychiatry and neurosurgery. He earned numerous scholarships, international accolades, and eventually became the director of "Whispering Heights Institute for the Criminally Insane", a high-security asylum for the criminally insane.

While the public viewed him as a pioneer of mental health treatment, the reality inside the asylum was far darker. Under his leadership, the facility implemented questionable surgical procedures, aggressive experimental drug trials, and lobotomies under the guise of rehabilitation. Though these practices were justified as attempts to understand and control extreme criminal behavior, they often crossed into outright cruelty, His ability to maintain an untarnished public image despite these activities became a hallmark of his career.

DEATH

On the night of October 3, 2007, a severe lightning storm struck Whispering Heights. A sudden blackout caused the facility's electronic locking systems to fail, opening every cell door simultaneously. In the ensuing chaos, patients roamed freely through the asylum causing a riot.

František, determined to regain control, attempted to personally apprehend one of the more dangerous inmates. In the dim emergency lighting, the patient lunged at him, stabbing him repeatedly in the neck with a ballpoint pen taken from an unattended desk.

He collapsed in the asylum's corridor, dying within minutes as alarms blared and patients screamed around him. Staff discovered his body hours later.

AFTERLIFE

František arrived in Pripyat under the designation of "pending approval," a status preventing either ascent or descent. His placement here was less due to crimes committed than to intentions—plans for future experiments that never came to fruition but were considered morally damning nonetheless.

In Pripyat, he has assumed the role of Head Doctor at the city hospital, overseeing both emergency care and complex surgical procedures for residents. While he remains a cold and calculating presence, many begrudgingly respect his skill and commitment to medical precision. He often walks the hospital corridors with a clipboard in hand, his posture upright and his expression locked in perpetual scrutiny.He manages all processes in the hospital as well as the maintenance of BABS, the artificial intelligence of the facility
