PERSONALITY

- Cold
- Stubborn
- Loner
- Nationalistic
- Athletic
- Quiet

Gabriel "Gabe" Espinosa is a no-nonsense ex-legionario who believes in strength, tradition, and the sanctity of steak. Though his politics lean hard right and his views are very much from another century, Gabriel isn't malicious — just stubbornly locked in his macho worldview. He's the type to fix things with duct tape and discipline, and believes emotions are best left unsaid (or drowned in wine)

BACKGROUND

Born and raised in Huesca, a rugged province nestled in the Pyrenees, Gabriel was brought up in a culture of hard labor, gun oil, and regional pride. He joined the Spanish Legion at 18 and served across the Mediterranean, North Africa, and even brief peacekeeping stints in Eastern Europe.

GABE

After retiring in his mid-30s, he became a survivalist hunter in Sierra de Guara, known for its dense forests and wild boars. There, Gabriel carved a solitary, military-like life — lifting, hunting, reading about Carlist history, and grumbling about the state of modern men. Despite his gruffness, he held a Political Science degree and could quote philosophers… right after cleaning his rifle.

DEATH

Gabriel died during an illegal wild boar hunt deep in the Sierra de Guara. He was joined by a group of old military buddies — all seasoned veterans, all thinking they were still invincible. As the group spread out through thick brush, one of them misfired while taking a shot at a boar. The bullet struck Gabriel just below the collarbone, severing a major artery. His friends did everything by the book — military-style field dressing, emergency evac — and stuffed him in the backseat of their jeep. But the nearest hospital was too far. Gabriel bled out quietly on the way, eyes fixed on the passing sky, saying nothing.

Fearing prosecution for illegal hunting on protected land, the group staged the scene to look like a solo accident. The case was ruled "unfortunate misadventure." No arrests were made.

AFTERLIFE

Gabriel now resides in an apartment complex, He refuses to work or integrate into the structured community, claiming “he already served enough.” He spends his time lifting weights, repairing old cars and smoking meat. Gabriel frequently headbutts with other residents — politically, personally, or just out of principle. Whether it’s over noise complaints, meat smells, or his general attitude, he’s always one bad mood away from a verbal brawl. Still, most leave him alone out of respect (or fear).

Despite everything, he rescues stray animals and keeps a few dogs around — though he insists they’re “just guard dogs,” and not “his pets.”
