Profile

French Gay Nightclubber

J.B. is a French resident for Pripyatory

He is a resident in Pripyat Purgatory. Jean-Baptiste Plantier, more widely known as J.B., is a prominent and flamboyant resident of Pripyat Purgatory, known for his deep voice, dramatic flair, and electric presence in the city's developing nightclub circuit. A former bartender and after-party regular from France, J.B. died in 2022 following a drug overdose and multiple blunt-force head injuries sustained after falling from a rooftop during a high-profile after-party in central Paris.

PERSONALITY

- Nightclubber
- Flamboyant
- Vain
- Social Butterfly
- Pot-Head
- Gay

J.B. embodies a theatrical, hyper-stylized version of himself, a performance he delivers both on purpose and by instinct. With exaggerated gestures, melodramatic sighs, and a fondness for "Valley girl" inflections, he is never seen without flair—be it a glittery scarf, a cocktail in hand, or a smug smirk mid-monologue. Beneath the surface of sparkle and sass, however, lies someone deeply perceptive, fiercely loyal, and surprisingly thoughtful.

He has a reputation for being snarky but sincere, often doling out ruthless observations followed by genuine advice or support. Friends describe him as a walking contradiction: sensitive yet sharp-tongued, egotistical yet nurturing, obnoxiously loud yet oddly comforting to be around. His deep baritone voice adds an unexpected layer of gravitas to his flamboyant personality, making his sarcasm all the more disarming.

He refers to most people with pet names like “doll,” “gurl” or “bitch” and has an habit of air-kissing.

BACKGROUND

Born in Lyon, France, Jean-Baptiste grew up in a upper-class family, raised by a single mother who worked in fashion retail. From a young age, he was enamored by glamour, drama, and anything resembling attention. He dropped out of university after a semester of art history, choosing instead to immerse himself in the Parisian nightlife scene, where he found work as a bartender, part-time dancer, and eventual promoter for LGBTQ+ clubs and underground events.

He lived fast, partied harder, and created a small cult of personality around his nightlife persona. A lover of club music, vintage French cinema, and perfume commercials, J.B. was known to throw themed parties like “Champagne & Breakdown Night” or “Dress Like Your Ex Gala,” usually hosted in overcrowded apartments or illegally rented rooftops.

DEATH

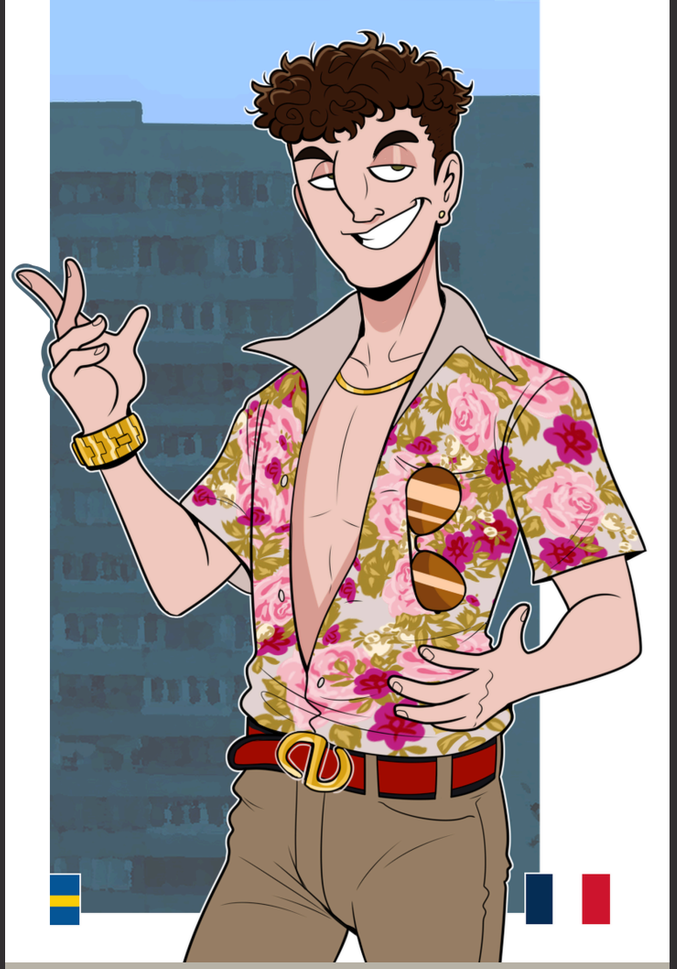

J.B. died on July 2, 2022, during what authorities described as an unauthorized rooftop after-party in the Montmartre district. Surveillance footage revealed he was under the influence of multiple substances when he lost balance during a playful reenactment of a fashion runway walk and fell backwards from the balcony, striking his head multiple times. He was pronounced dead on arrival at the hospital.

The incident sparked a minor debate in French media about substance abuse and safety in nightlife spaces, though J.B.'s inner circle mostly remembered him with hashtags, tribute videos, and hand-drawn flyers featuring his face, filtered beyond recognition.

AFTERLIFE

J.B.’s case was labeled "non-malicious accidental death”, with no major moral infractions or red flags. As such, he was processed and placed in Pripyat Purgatory, where his official case status remains “pending approval.”

In Pripyat, J.B. quickly found community within the nascent nightlife growing around the city’s re-purposed industrial sector. While J.B. has no official job, he refers to himself as a “culture architect” and has lobbied the Purgatory Committee to recognize nightlife as a form of therapy. He continues to assit in events, including karaoke nights, themed balls, and Raves. His apartment is entirely covered in self-portraits, with each painting more exaggerated and neon than the last. One hallway features nothing but stylized images of himself.
