THESE ARE A FEW OF MY FAVORITE THINGS

Congratulations, you have been selected from over 1200 applicants to become a member of our corporate family. Hopefully your presence will help alleviate the personnel shortage we are currently experiencing within our Resources Transportation Department.

As you are no doubt aware, Herpes-Simplox is the world's largest producer of ethanol suitable for use in internal combustion engines. In order for this corporation to maintain its control of the liquid synfuel market it is imperative that all Herpes-Simplox employees possess a clear understanding of company policy and at all times maintain total congruence between their own beliefs and actions, and those of this corporation.

This orientation manual has been especially designed to outline the job responsibilities specific to your employment classification [Department of Resources Transport - APTV Operator - #51A-024-4B06].

This manual will also present an overview of the historical events which lead to the founding of Herpes-Simplox and influenced the development of the corporation.

A Short History Of Herpes Simplex

In the closing days of the twentieth century, a major portion of the world's oil reserves were accidentally destroyed during a limited nuclear exchange between South Yemen and Liechtenstein.

This brief conflict, aptly named the "Silly War," caused severe dislocations in the world economy.

In the desperate years that followed the Silly War, much attention was focused upon developing a viable substitute for petroleum.

The breakthrough finally came when a French pharmaceutical conglomerate, Herpes Unlimited, discovered a method of cheaply producing large quantities of ethanol from potatoes.

After several years of negotiation the French firm eventually merged with the Simplex Corporation, to form Herpes Simplex - the world's largest producer of potato-based ethanol fuel.

With a large percentage of its agricultural production already in the form of potatoes and an extremely low wage rate ($57.65) it was only logical that Herpes Simplex base its operations in the state of Idaho.

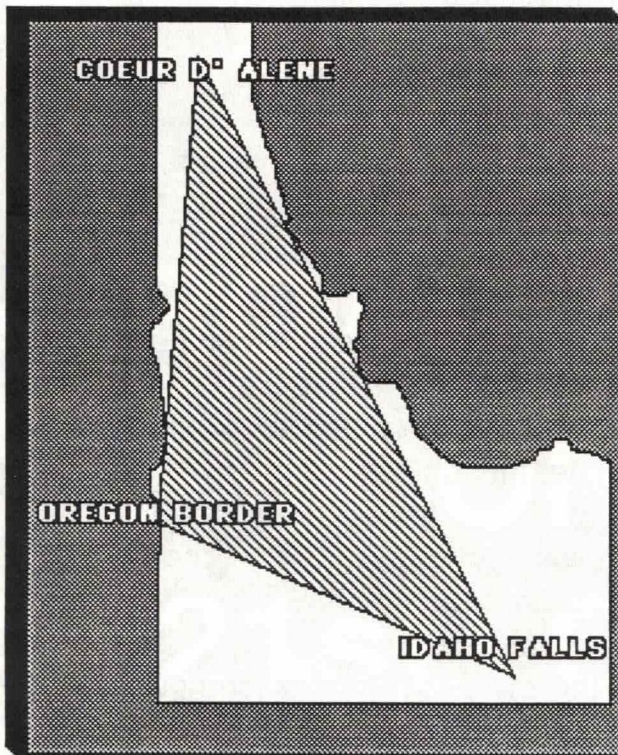

Over the course of several years Herpes Simplex created a vast network of automated potato farms. This area, known as the "Starch Triangle," stretches from Coeur D'Alene in the north to Idaho Falls in the south to the Oregon border in the west.

Security around the Herpes Simplex facilities is extremely tight due to the spreading lawlessness and brigandage caused by severe food shortages and a 37% unemployment rate. Both the automated potato farms and the central potato processing plant are protected by a series of computer-controlled x-ray lasers. Attempting to enter these areas with the proper entry codes is inevitably fatal.

The most dangerous job of the ethanol conversion process falls to the Spudboyz and Spudgirlz who transport the harvested potatoes in their APTV's (Armored Potato Transport Vehicles) from the farms to central processing plant.

On a daily basis, they must convey their precious cargo across a blighted landscape filled with a multitude of dangers....

COMMON ROAD HAZARDS OF THE 21st. CENTURY

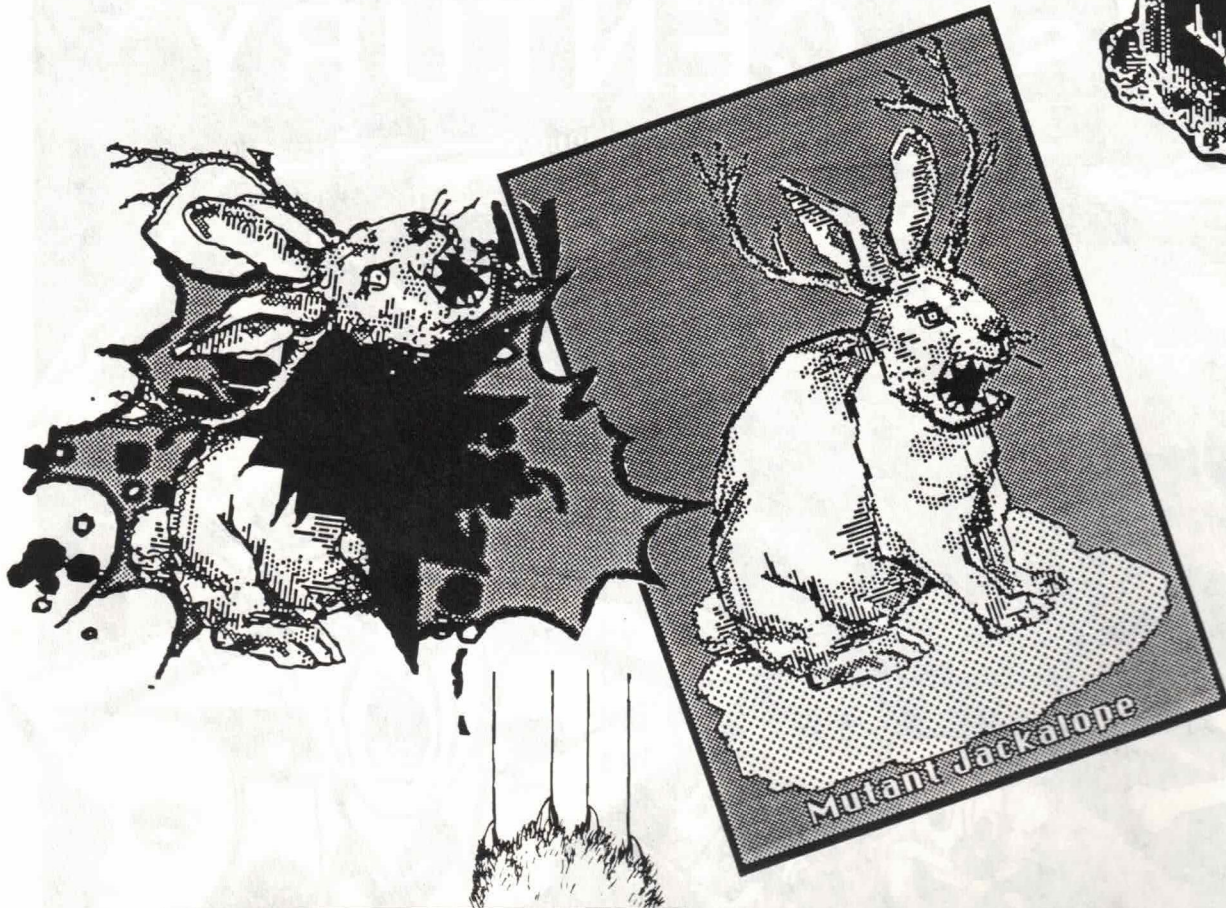

MUTANT JACKALOPESES

In the late 2010's the United States Army conducted recombinant DNA research for the purpose of producing a new and extremely lethal animal species to fill the niche left vacant when the incredibly virulent "Chinese Dog Flu" decimated the world's canine population.

One of the experiments which combined the genetic material from a rabbit, a pitbull and a bull elk resulted in an extremely vicious 350-lb. monstrosity not too dissimilar in appearance from the mythological jackalope.

The experiment had to be scrapped, however, when the test animals burrowed out of the top secret research facility where they were being held and began reproducing prolifically in the wild.

Mutant Jackalope attack is now a leading cause of death for residents of the Pacific Northwest, second only to death by Postum overdose.

To garnish these dishes, Parriah's uses only the best pommes de terre... which of course are produced by Herpes-Simplex.

Due to the severe economic downturn that resulted from the advent of the Silly War, most of the funding for public works projects was curtailed.

Rather than disband, one group (the Ada County Highway Department) began waging a campaign of terror and road repair upon the populace of South Western Idaho.

This conflict, now in it's 10th year, has rendered most of the state's roads impassable to automobiles. Currently to drive from one end of Boise to the other requires at least four hours and 120 mile detour through Mountain Home.

MUD LAKE BUNNY BASHERS

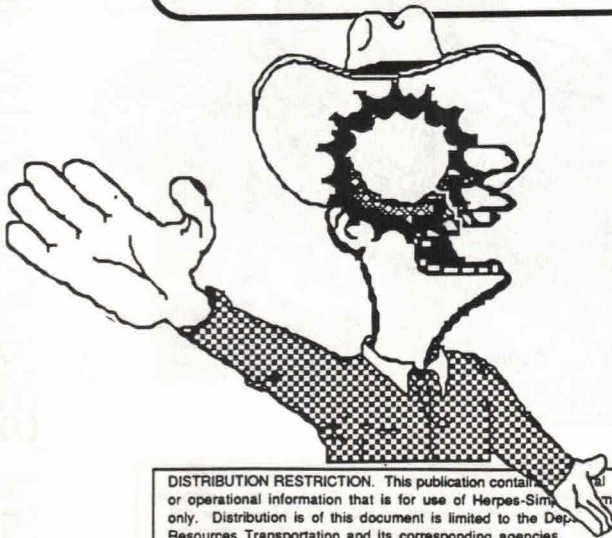

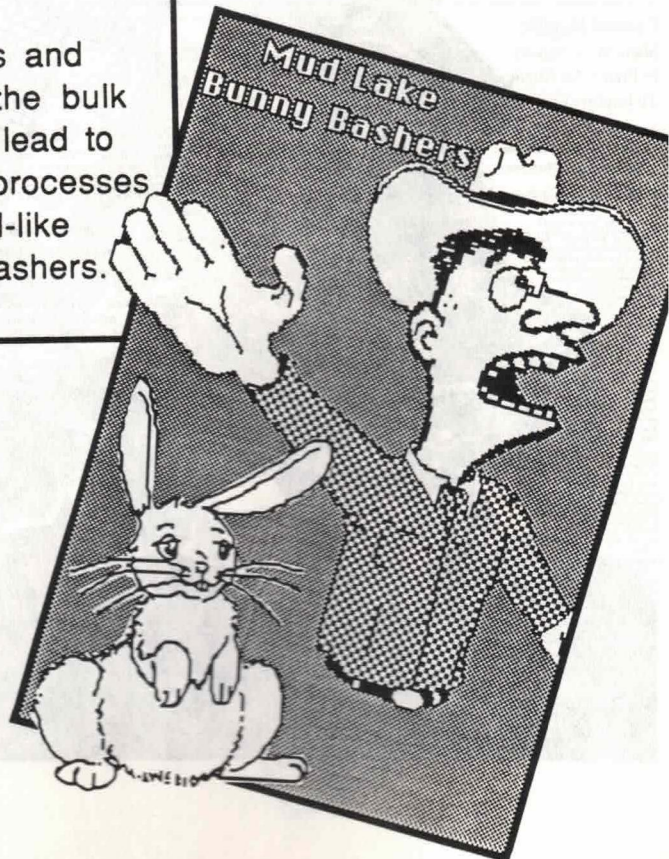

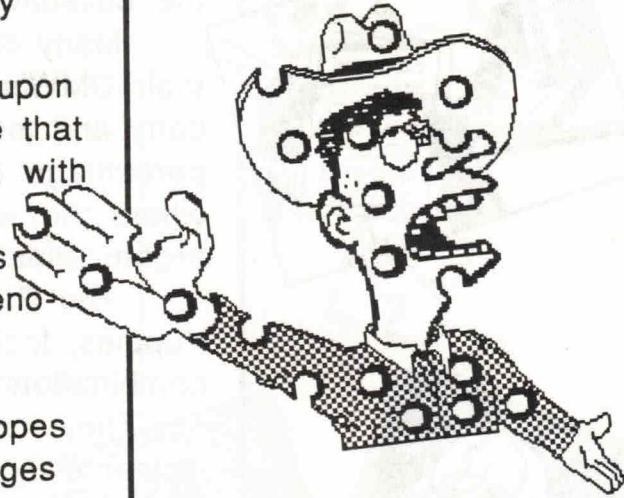

In the early 1980's the town of Mud Lake, Idaho became the focus of national attention due to its quaint local custom of rounding up enormous herds of rabbits and subsequently bludgeoning them to death.

So much scorn and ridicule was heaped upon the residents of Mud Lake for this practice that they eventually withdrew from all contact with the outside world.

The inbreeding which resulted from this isolation only served to reinforce those genotypes particularly suited to the rigors of bunny bashing. This coupled with the ever present danger of attack by mutant jackalopes forced Mother Nature to make drastic changes in the physiology of the average Mud Lake resident.

With each new generation, the fingers of the right hand have grown shorter while at the same time the palm has become elongated until the right hand resembles a small, flesh-colored cricket bat.

In conjunction with this, the reflexes and automatic nervous system now control the bulk of the bunny basher's actions. This has led to a severe atrophy of the higher thought processes and has resulted in the conical, pinhead-like skull which is common to most bunny bashers.

Humanity's first contact with extraterrestrials was with the benign yet mysterious Snardbezzel. Shortly after the conclusion of the Silly War the Snardbezzel seized control of the world's entire complement of nuclear reactors.

It was first assumed that the Snardbezzel were attempting to save humanity from the dangers of atomic power. However it was eventually discovered that the Snardbezzel are actually quite indifferent to the plight of humans, and that their true reason for seizing nuclear power plants was to obtain uranium which is a vital element in the production of Snardbezzel mood rings.

On their day off the Snardbezzel at the Idaho Nuclear Engineering Laboratory amuse themselves by jamming satellite transmissions, dropping mutilated cattle carcasses on unsuspecting earthlings and projecting holograms of Slim Whitman commercials on the clouds above small towns.

"Potholes are a virus from outerspace."
- William S. Furrows

With the ever increasing urbanization of the planet, many animal species found that their survival was directly related to their ability to mimic common household objects.

While many of these creatures such as clothes hangers, plastic grocery bags and paperclips can be hazardous when provoked, the most dangerous of these animal mimics remains the pothole (Voidus Carnivorous).

With its highly adaptive digestive tract, the pothole can consume just about any part of an automobile it can manage to knock loose. Consequently the most successful potholes are those that can produce a vicious screw-loosening concussion even at low speeds.

Idaho potholes have been known to grow over 5 feet in diameter and capable of consuming a mid-size luxury sedan in just under 45 seconds.

Having grown up in an age of affluence, many senior citizens were unable to adapt to the harsh realities of the post-Silly War era.

A number of these maladjusted individuals sought refuge in the nomadic lifestyle of the outlaw Winnebago gangs.

The most notorious of these groups is the Bad Sam Club. Clad in the leather support hose and denim trusses which are the trademarks of the Bad Sam Club, members of this organization frequently undertake such criminal activities as driving too slowly, free-basing Geratol and sending tacky postcards to random victims.

Bad Sam Club member also are heavily involved in the potato black market and operate a number of mash houses where illegal potato products are bought and sold.

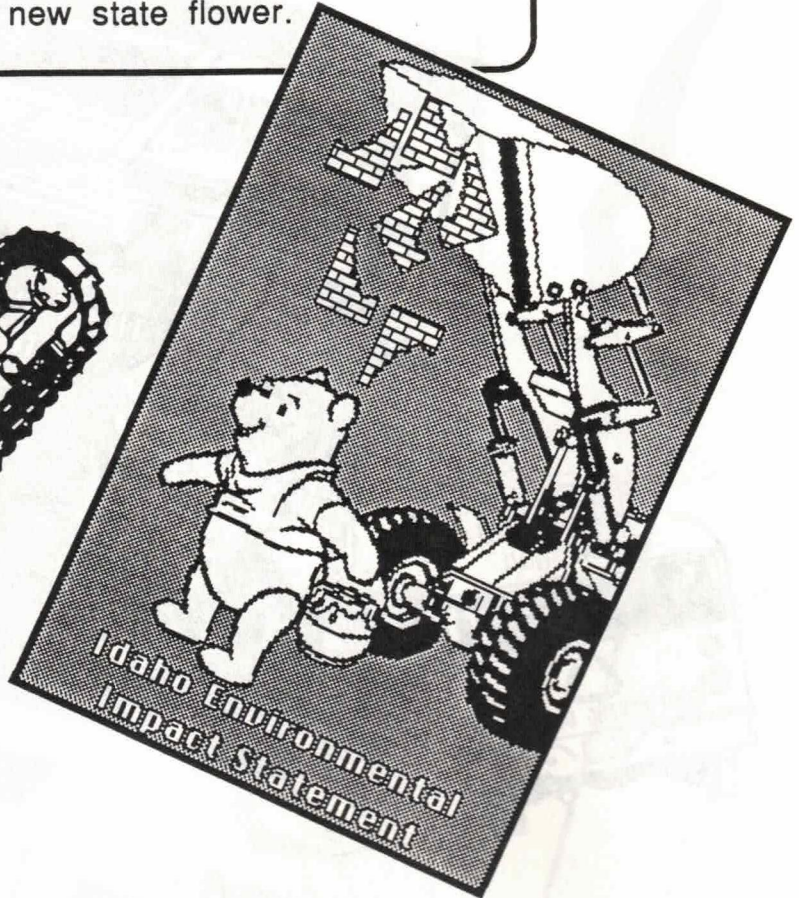

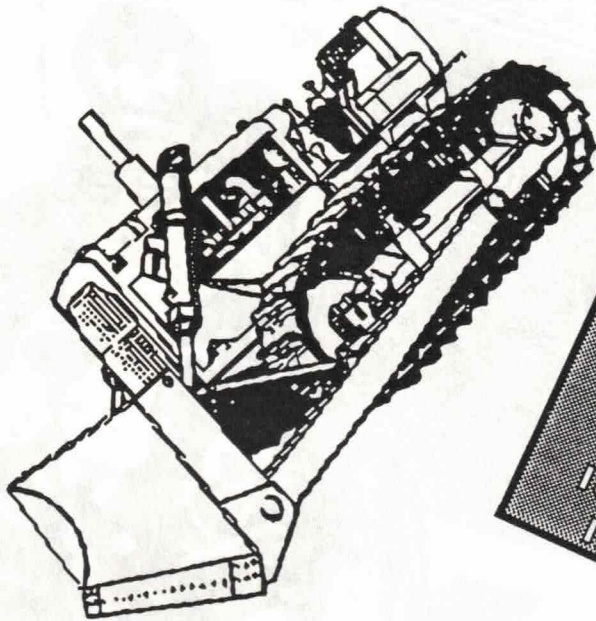

In order to more thoroughly exploit the remaining natural resources of the United States, President Jim Bakker used the emergency powers granted to him by Congress to repeal all environmental legislation.

President Bakker effectively neutralized the environmental lobby's opposition to his plan by issuing Executive Order 63021 which made the possession of Goretex and trial mix a felony.

This new direction in national policy known as "Stripmining For Jesus" opened vast areas of wilderness to the highest bidder.

Twenty years after President Bakker's decree extensive stripmining and timber harvesting have radically altered the topography of the Pacific Northwest, and may have been the driving force behind the 119th Idaho Legislature's motion to make the dirt clod the new state flower.

Several years after the furor over several racist statements allegedly made by television commentator Andy Rooney has subsided, Rooney is once again the center of controversy... this time due to inflammatory remarks made during his segment of "60 Minutes."

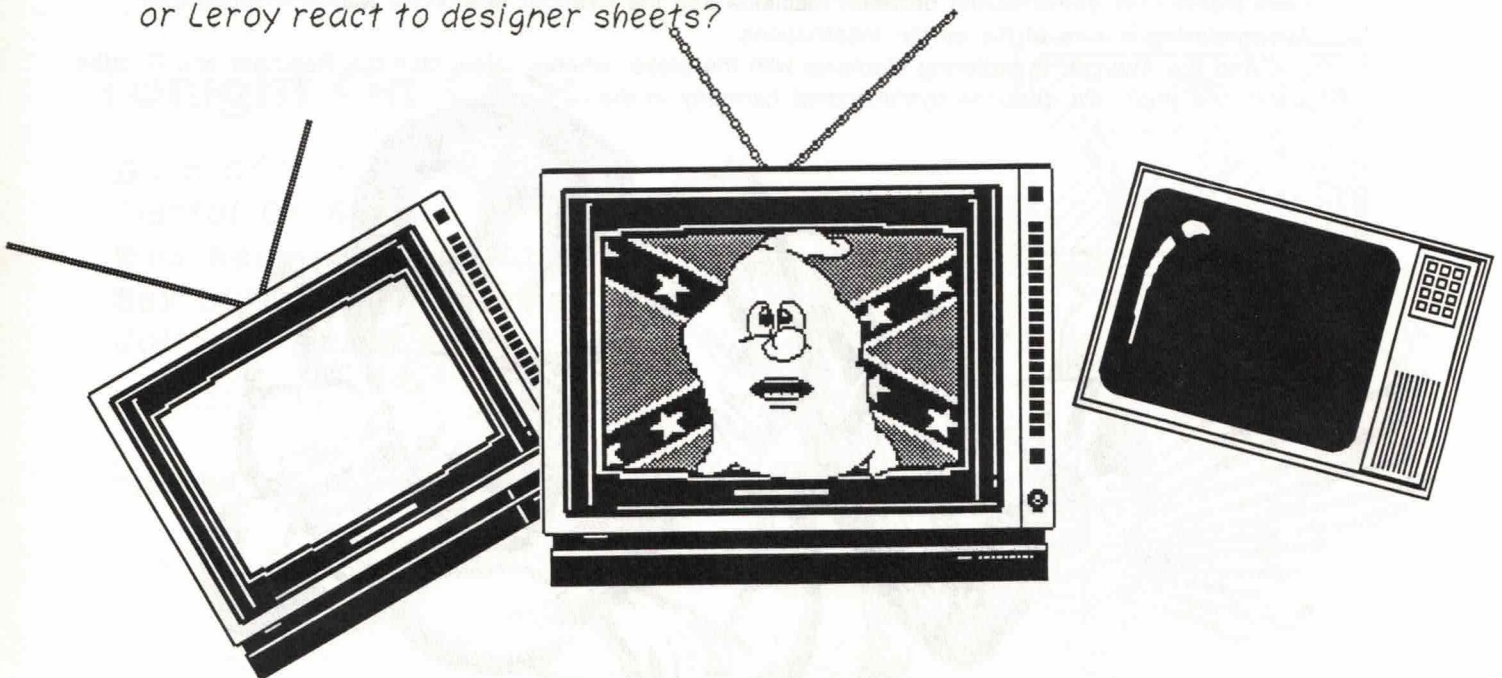

CBS decides to send Rooney out of the country on special assignment until the controversy surrounding him abates. Unfortunately Rooney's "special assignment" is to do a piece on the dismal condition of sidewalks in downtown Beirut and he is never heard from again.

Ever notice how you can never get an arm band that fits right? Every arm band I ever owned always falls off when I lower my arm. Maybe that's why all the Nazis in movies always were saluting with that arm, so that their arm bands wouldn't fall off.

If there's one thing that bothers me more than an arm band that keeps falling off, it's a cross that won't light. It's funny how a guy can throw one snuffed cigarette butt out of a speeding car and set half of Yellowstone on fire, yet I can't light a gas soaked cross made out of presto logs with a flamethrower.

Of course it'd probably help if I could see what I'm doing, but it seems that whenever I need my white hood and robe that my wife's sent them out to the cleaners.

Do you know how embarrassing it is to show up at a Klan meeting wearing a fitted sheet? Especially if it's one of those Calvin Kline designer sheets? Do you know how badly people with names like Bubba or Leroy react to designer sheets?

During the early years of the 1990's, New Age religions which had been popular with many yuppies during the 80's began to gain wide acceptance with America's growing underclass. In the process many of these belief systems were somewhat altered in order to better serve the new class of people who were embracing them.

One example of this was New Age Professional Wrestling -- a sport which combined Aquarian spirituality with the theatrics and violence of professional wrestling.

New Age Professional Wrestling's popularity remained strong until the latter part of the decade when it was eclipsed by the Christian sport of Holy Roller Derby.

"...And now for the main event of the evening - a no-holds barred, tag team Texas death match between the teams of Shirley Maclaine and the Rebirther and the team of Trauma Shaman and Ramtha.

There's a lot of bad blood between these two groups, so this match promises a lot of action. There's the bell...

Trauma Shaman squares off against the Rebirther. Both entities are stalking each other, looking for an opening.

Trauma Shaman slams a hard right forearm into the Rebirther's aura! The Rebirther responds with a crushing blow to the Shaman's chakra. Boy, that'll give the Shaman some personal transformation. The Shaman enlightens the Rebirther with a drop kick to the forehead!

And the Rebirther's down! He's hurt, but he manages to network with Maclaine.

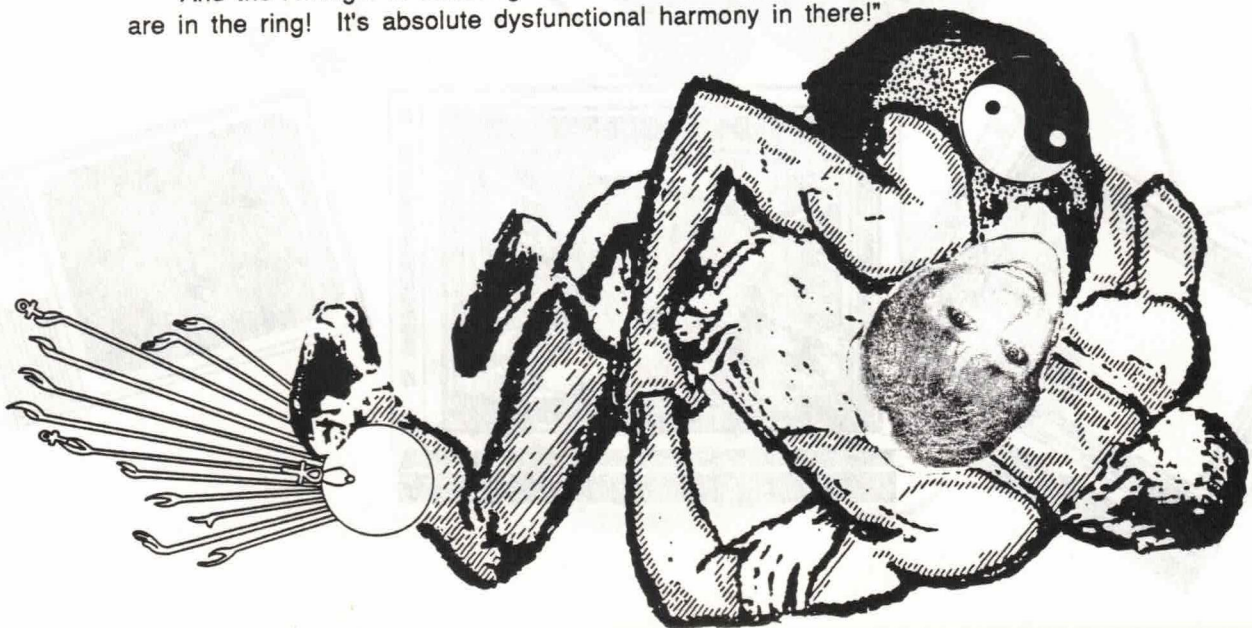

Maclaine's over the top rope and exploding on Trauma Shaman with a series of vicious lefts and rights! But the Shaman slipped his Holistic Death Strangle on Shirley and she's in real trouble!

What's that? Maclaine's pulling something out of her trunks and the ref doesn't see it!

It's a crystal! Maclaine's got a crystal in her hand and she's sharing it with the Shaman's head and neck! Why doesn't the ref stop this? Trauma Shaman's face is covered with a sheen of ectoplasm!

But wait! The Psychic Avenger has entered the ring and he's carrying a huge prayer wheel! There's been plenty of negative karma between Maclaine and the Avenger ever since Maclaine broke the Avenger's leg in one of his earlier incarnations.

And the Avenger is battering Maclaine with the prayer wheel! Now both the Rebirther and Ramtha are in the ring! It's absolute dysfunctional harmony in there!"

Probably the most controversial innovation involving the medium of television during the 1990's was the Cable Filth Network.

Conceived of by media mogul Ted Tuner during a bout of malarial fever, the Cable Filth Network televised nothing but the most vile and disgusting pornography... 24 hours a day without intermission.

When CFN was first introduced, critics in the cable TV industry pointed to the demise of the "Playboy Channel" earlier in the decade and suggested that the Cable Filth Network would suffer a similar fate.

However, Tuner's brilliant marketing strategy for CFN soon proved the critics wrong.

Rather than charge for CFN, the Cable Filth Network was offered for free as part of a basic cable TV subscription. However, if the cable viewer so desired, CFN could be disconnected from their television for the small fee of $20 per month. Any time the customer discontinued making their monthly CFN payment, CFN would immediately be reconnected.

Even though no one forced them to view CFN, a large number of Christians and other blue noses were so disturbed by the very idea that their set was capable of receiving the Cable Filth Network that they gladly paid the $20 a month disconnect fee.

The plan soon backfired when it became apparent that the aforementioned parties were not satisfied with just themselves being unable to view CFN -- they simply could not stand the idea of anyone being capable of watching the Cable Filth Network.

Three months after its inception, the studios of CFN were destroyed in a blaze ignited by a tear gas grenade used by a DEA strike force which claimed to have mistook the CFN offices for crack laboratory.

Even though death did somewhat restrict her acting ability, sitcom queen, Lucille Ball returned to television as the star of a new series, "I Love Lucy... Dead."

Co-starring with Ball was Bob Vila, who portrayed the character "Poppa Doc" - an evil yet wacky Haitian voodoo priest and necrophiliac who adored Lucy to the point of stealing her corpse from the grave and storing it in an upright deep freezer.

Although the writers desperately struggled to produce scripts which thoroughly exploited Ms. Ball's condition, viewers were turned off by her total lack of animation and advanced state of decomposition. This coupled with Vila's insistence of substituting Black & Decker power tools for traditional ceremonial knives during live animal sacrifice scenes caused the program to be removed from the airwaves almost immediately.

As Iran begins to reestablish ties with the West, it undertakes a series of cultural exchanges with several southern states.

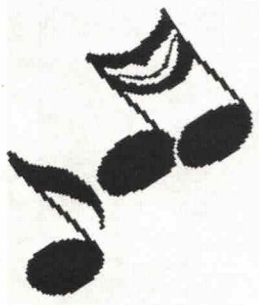

Much to the surprise of all involved, the similarities between the rural white southerner and Islamic Fundamentalists greatly outnumber the differences.

The end result of these exchanges is the production of a bi-cultural television series entitled "Ji-Hawd." The show which is broadcast both in the U.S. and Iran features a mixture of Country and Western music, downhome humor and religious warfare.

The show also marks the return of singer Cat Stevens who introduces such hits as "Another Border War and I Ain't Killed Nobody," "I'm Being Followed by a Big Moslem," and "Munitions Train."

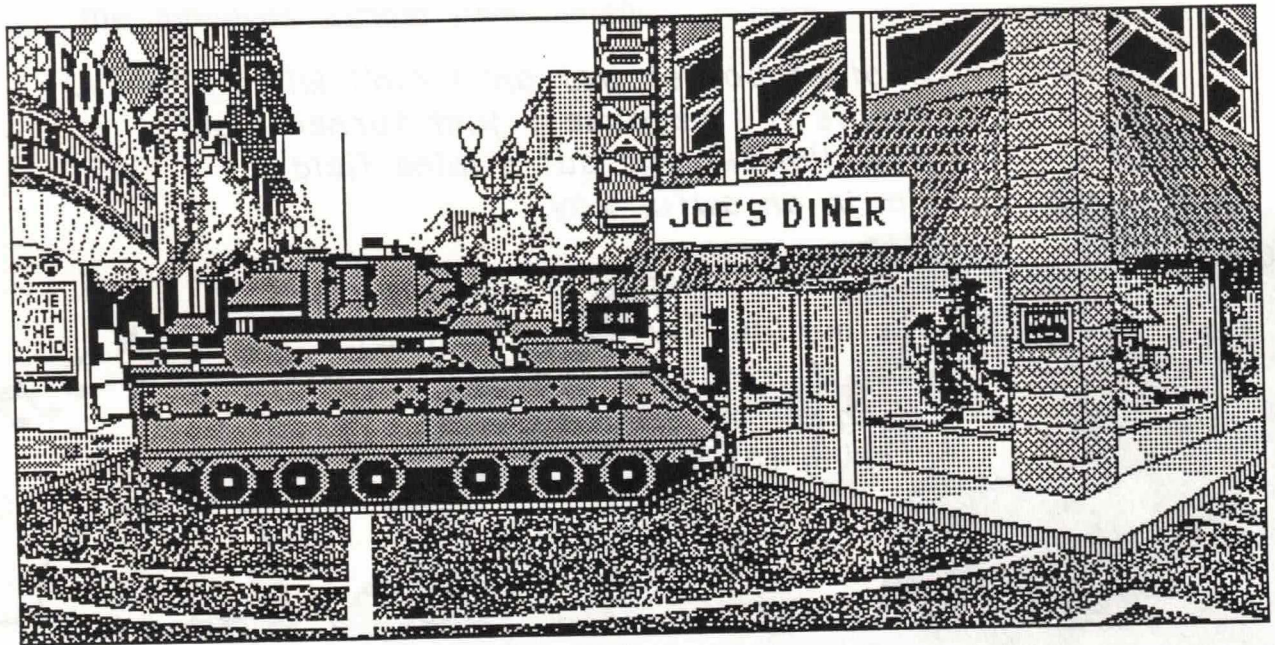

*Another border war an' I ain't killed nobody,
Maybe it's because I just turned eight.

As more and more of the world turns vehemently against the United States, middle-class Americans begin to develop a severe persecution complex. The situation worsens when a TV movie depicting hapless white Americans being discriminated against by a non-white shopkeeper is shown on NBC. The film directed by Spike Leibenstromm and entitled "Do The Reich Thing" becomes the cause of much controversy and several race riots.

Male Urinary Dysfunction In The 90's

Just as the 1980's were a period where many female maladies were openly discussed (most notably PMS) so too were the 90's a time where several male dysfunctions were closely examined. Most notable amongst these were the dreaded Askew Penile Disorder and the insidious Partial Urethral Closure Syndrome.

Askew Penile Disorder most frequently strikes males who wear extremely tight underwear and/or regularly sleep upon their stomach. Sufferers of APD upon urinating discover that while their penis appears to be straight it is in fact bent (usually to the left). This causes the urine stream to also curve and miss the toilet bowl, usually striking either a waste basket or a shower curtain (the likelihood of striking the shower curtain is directly proportional to its cost).

Although short in duration, there is no cure for Askew Penile Disorder when it strikes. Longtime sufferers have learned that quickly turning 90 degrees can redirect the urine flow in the proper direction, however an error in judgement due to perhaps sleepiness or dyslexia can cause even greater havoc by aiming the stream towards expensive wallpaper or monogrammed towel sets.

The Seven Most Common Impact Areas
For Sufferers of Askew Penile Disorder

-CONTINUED-

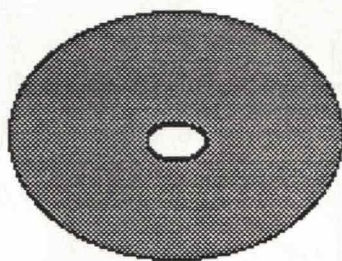

Partial Urethral Closure Syndrome, also, severely affects the integrity of the urine stream. Unlike APD, the malady is not caused by a unusual penile curvature, but instead is the result of a temporary partial obstruction of the urethral opening located at the tip of the penis.

This affliction typically strikes males who have recently had intercourse or a "nocturnal emission," as the most common cause of PUCS is dried semen.

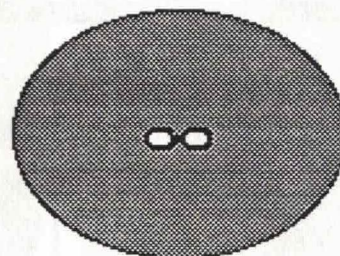

Upon urinating, this affliction manifests itself by dividing the suffer's urine stream into two smaller streams, each perpendicular to the penis. Thus the afflicted discovers himself urinating on both the shower curtain AND the monogrammed bath towels.

Re-direction is not a viable option for dealing with PUCS as the divergent nature of the streams makes it impossible for both streams to be simultaneously directed into the proper receptacle.

Also the suffer must consider that due to this malady's short duration, re-establishment of stream integrity is highly likely and therefore any maneuver which re-orientes the urethral opening in a direction contrary to normal stream trajectories is an invitation to further disaster.

Safe Sex In The 21st Century

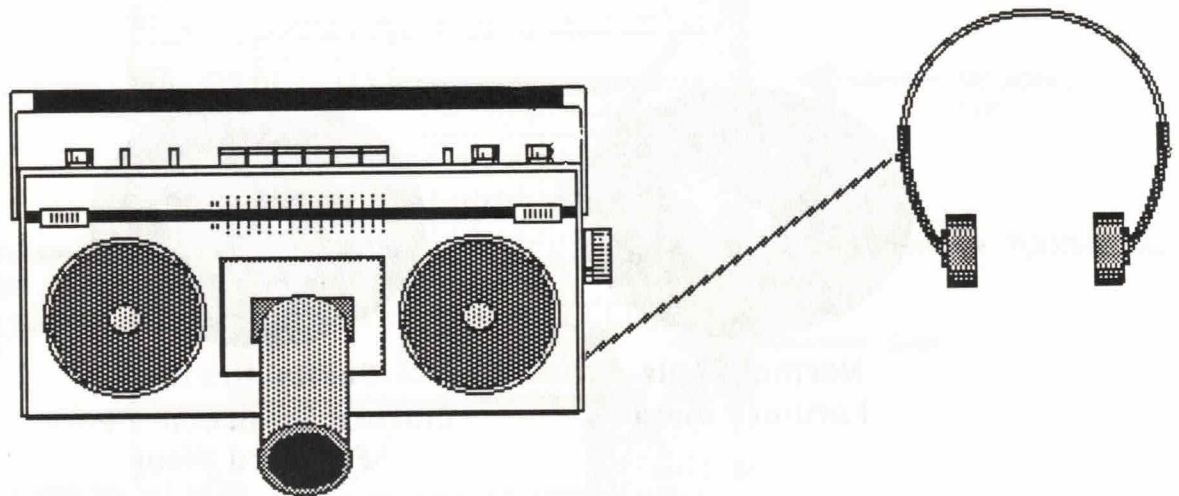

With a good portion of the world literally bombed back to the Stone Age, humankind's old companion, pestilence, began reassert itself into human affairs. This coupled with the discovery of mutated strain of the AIDs virus which was spread by voting Republican or reading Rod McKuen after sex lead to a great deal of hysteria and a large number of people seeking sexual satisfaction without the unnecessary danger of a sex partner.

Amongst the myriad of devices developed to meet this need, two, the Sony Wankman and Torrid Torso Deluxe, stand out.

The Sony Wankman was an inexpensive personal CD player which doubled as a male masturbation aid. In fact, due to the Wankman's unique design, the very act of personal gratification could be used to power the CD player. This made the Wankman very popular, as batteries were expensive and always in short supply in the years following the Silly War.

As an added bonus Wankman owners found that switching the Wankman's generator from "charge" to "direct feed" caused the CD player to play in cadence with the user's act of self love.

Eventually a whole new musical form reminiscent of the record scratching antics of Rap musicians three decades earlier developed from this feature of the Wankman.

Sony Wankman

-CONTINUED-

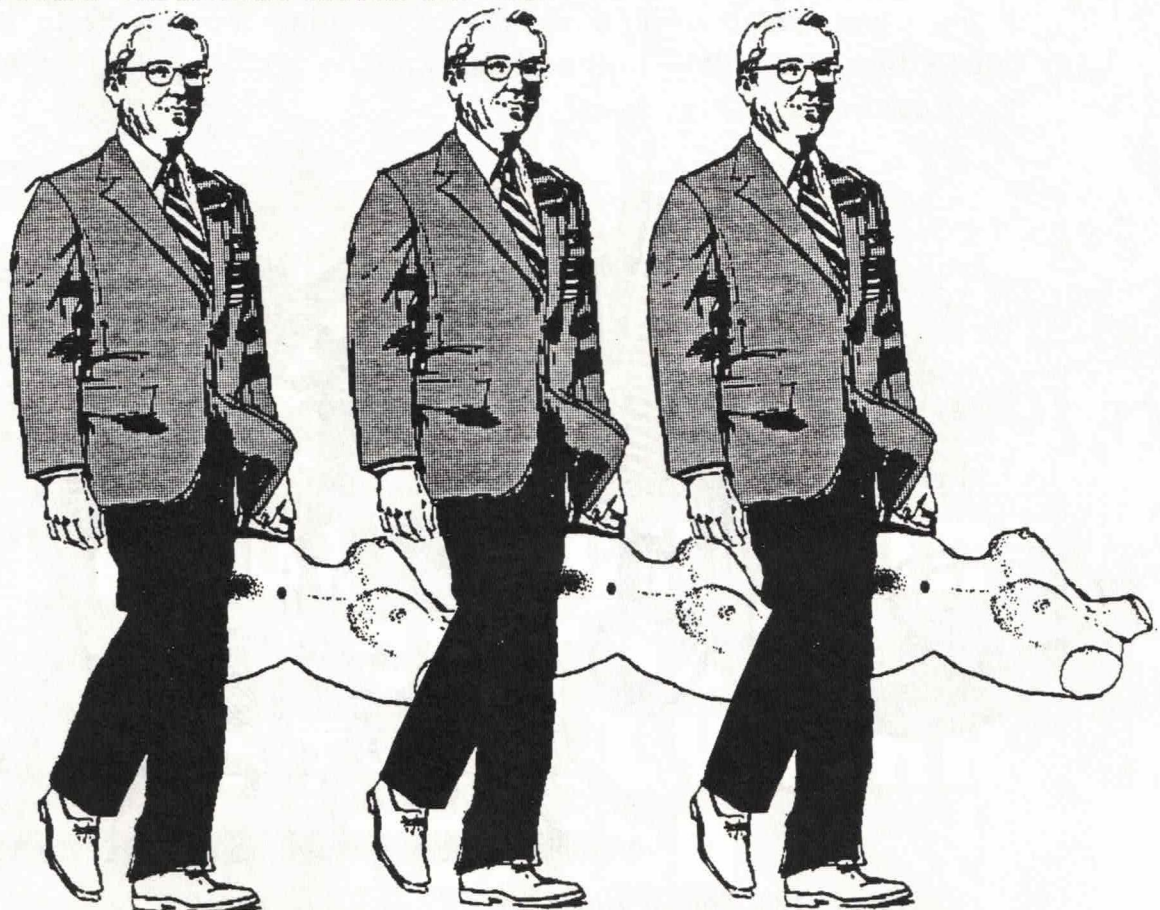

Unlike the Sony Wankman, the Torrid Torso Deluxe was not made of scarce petroleum-based materials like plastic or latex, but instead was composed of a new inexpensive yet more realistic material... vat-grown human flesh.

Using state of the art cloning and genetics technology, Torrid Torsos of New Mexico developed a method of vat-growing both full-size male and female torsos. This new form of wetware was totally devoid of unnecessary appendages (such as head and limbs) and contained a highly developed mass of ganglion located at the base of the spine which enabled the torso to be extremely responsive to sexual stimulation.

Upkeep of a Torrid Torso Deluxe was quite expensive as each torso required a daily nutrient IV and regular bathing.

However, many large corporations were more than happy to supply their executives with a company torso in order to safe guard a valuable employee's health and to free the employee from the distraction inherent in a relationship with a full-bodied human.

As the company car began to vanish from the landscape of executive perks, the phrase "Dad, can I borrow the torso?" was heard in more and more households across the U.S.

Executive models of the Torrid Torso Deluxe include such features as carrying handles and a built-in beverage holder

Elvis' Final Gift: Boon Or Bane?

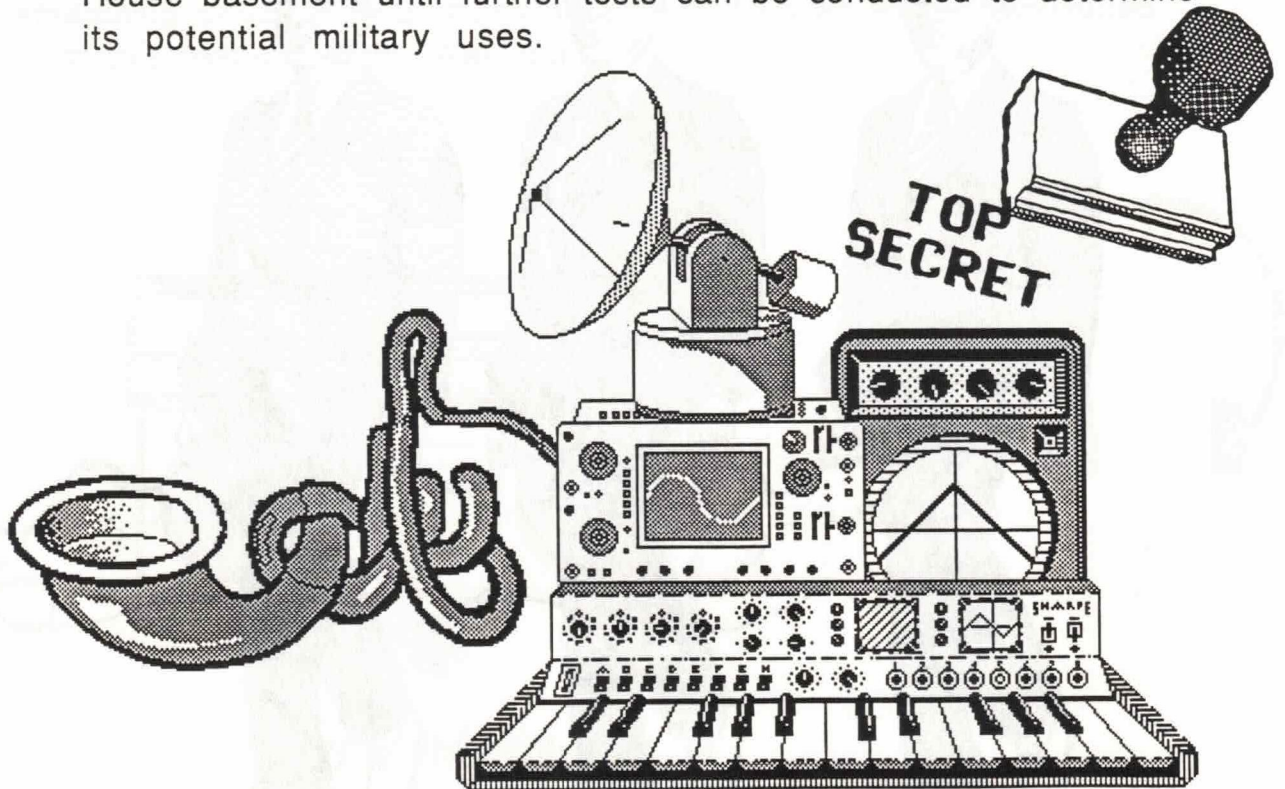

Thirty-five years after the death of Elvis Presley, a series of revelations concerning his demise are brought forth with the publication of the bestselling "Elvis Died So That You May Cum."

The book, written by Dr. James Leechmore, paints a picture of a tired and jaded Presley relentlessly searching for ever-increasing sexual satisfaction. After years of research and millions of dollars of investment, Leechmore claims that Elvis perfected the ultimate sexual aid - the Love Me Tender Penis Extender.

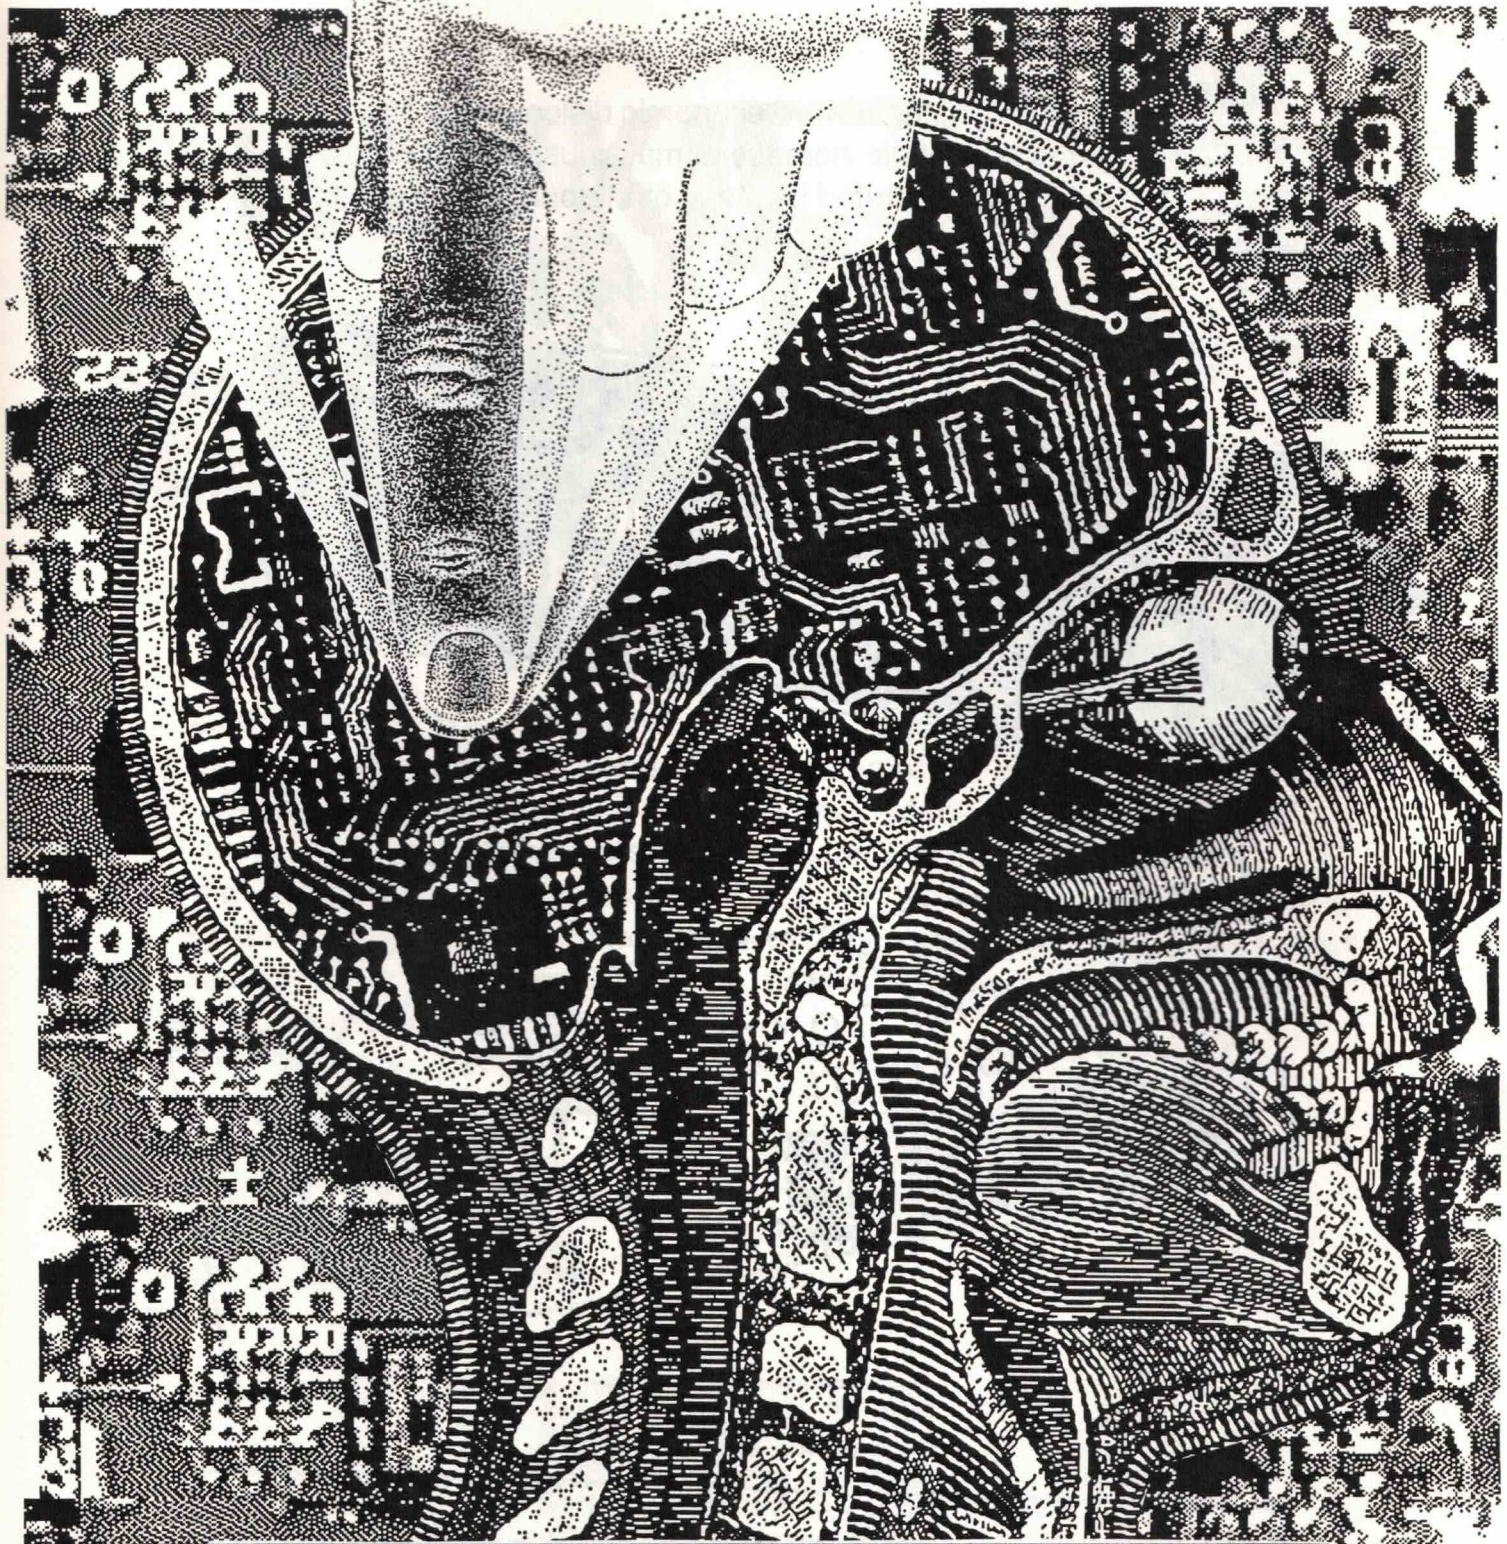

Rumored to have been the unholy marriage of an atomic particle accelerator with state of the art latex technology, this device allegedly produced orgasms of such mind-wrenching intensity that even the King was impressed.

Unfortunately, Elvis' appetite for orgasms produced by the Love Me Tender Penis Extender was just as extreme as his other appetites and in the end cost him his life.

According to Leechmore, the U.S. Government was so afraid of the consequences of this device being made available to the general public, that immediately after Presley's death that it took possession of the penis extender and is currently storing the device in the White House basement until further tests can be conducted to determine its potential military uses.

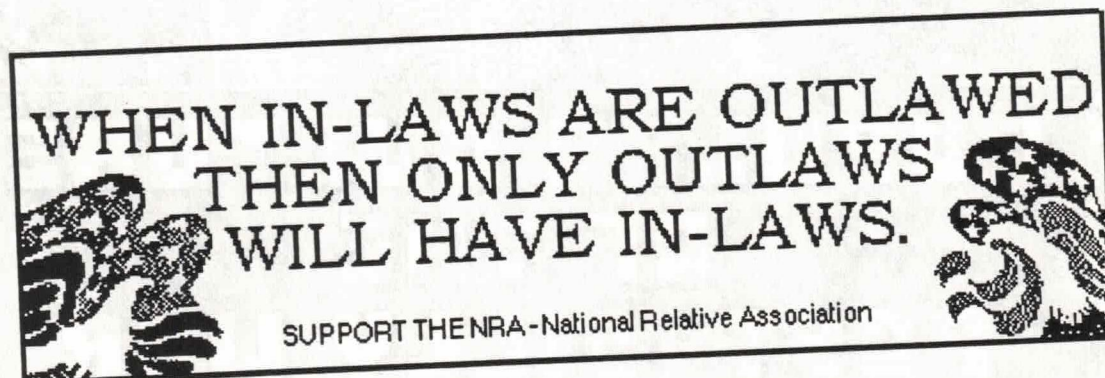

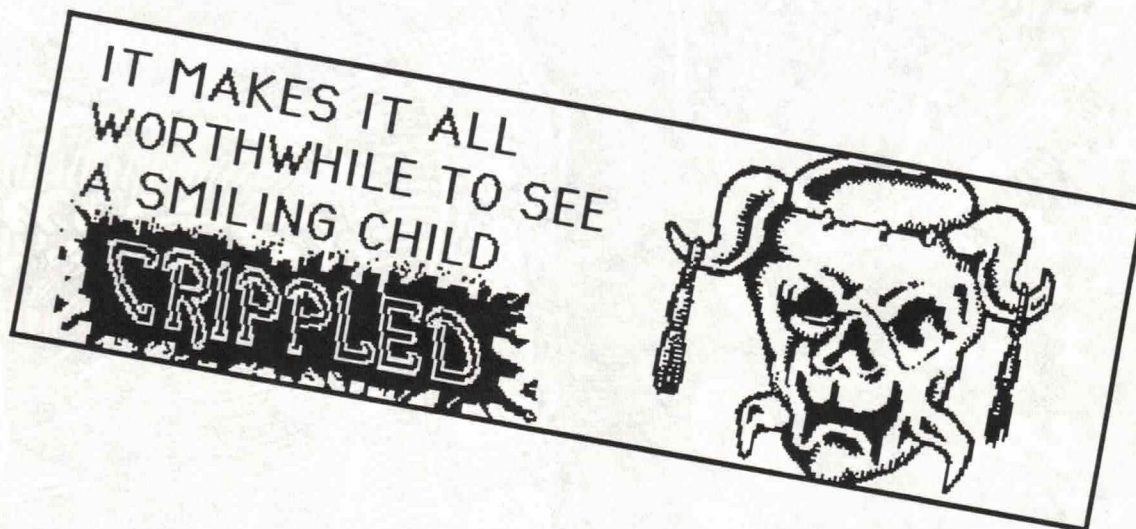

Is This The Device Which Took Elvis' Life?

POPULAR CULTURE OF THE
POST-SILLY WAR PERIOD

One repercussion of the severe economic dislocation following the Silly War was a dramatic increase of maliciousness amongst the general public, as illustrated by many of the bumperstickers popular during this period.

NEW KIDS ON THE CELL BLOCK

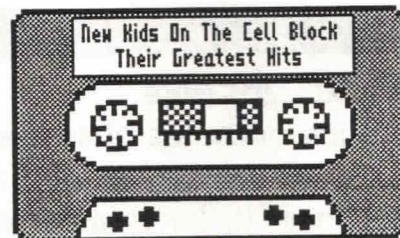

During the aftermath of the Silly War, the U.S. Government unleashed a blizzard of repressive legislation in an attempt to contain the social unrest which was sweeping the nation. Many personal freedoms which were taken for granted before the Silly War no longer existed and vast numbers of Americans were incarcerated.

By the early 2010's the percentage of Americans in prison was so large that Madison Avenue began developing products and advertising geared for a literally captive audience.

One of the first marketing strategies designed for the incarcerated was a musical group called "New Kids On The Cell Block." Dressed in prison coveralls and sporting leg irons, the New Kids On The Cell Block played songs dealing with the joys and hardships of prison life.

Several of their songs such as "Fresh Meats, Clean Sheets," and "Truncheon Luncheon" became million sellers.

"Brewaqqatsi" is the second in a planned trilogy that began in 2010 with "Soyannisqatsi" ("life without textured vegetable protein"). Brewaqqatsi documents modern industrial society's attempt to eradicate the more primitive white trash kitch culture from which it evolved. By juxtaposing images of condos with trailer houses, oriental rugs with black velvet paintings of Elvis, etc., director, Graham Cracker, suggests that the world's problems could be solved by a quick jaunt to K-Mart for a crocheted poodle toilet seat cover.
