Was Dantinne a freemason, or did he at least belong to a masonic organization at some time during his life? I have very little information on this, which is fairly contradictory. In his time, Péladan had hardly any sympathy for masonic mysteries and he went so far as to write "I think nothing of freemasonry if I don't despise it." It seems that his faithful disciple did not think much better of it, except for one of its branches.

A dignitary from the Grand Orient of Belgium wrote to me:

> "Having known Dantinne personally (...) I would be very surprised if he had never been a Mason."

This brother also told me that Dantinne's name is not on the files of this organization either before or after the war. (However, it must be noted that the files of the Grand Orient of Belgium were completely destroyed by the Nazi invaders and that it has not been possible to completely reconstruct them.) If fact, I am convinced that Dantinne never went to the G. O. of Belgium, which, from the year 1871-1872, had abolished the obligation for its brethren to believe in the Grand Architect of the Universe and in his revealed will. I do not think that Dantinne belonged to either of the Scottish branches. This is not at all the case where the ancient and original ritual of the Memphis Mizraïm is concerned, which, at the time, was very much in vogue in Belgium and throughout much of Europe.

Many friends, all or almost all of whom worked with Hiéronymus within the microcosm of Belgium occultism, were members of this order, most of them as dignitaries, amongst whom Jean Mallinger and the faithful Lelarge must be included. All the officers of the FUDOSI were also members, and in particular, his two "colleagues" who were Imperators of the first triangle of the Federation: Victor Blanchard and Spencer Lewis. Let us note, finally, that the FUDOSI was constituted in the continuation of the convention of the Memphis-Misraïm of August 1934 and that two organizations drawing their inspiration from the order were represented in the Federation until 1935.

On several occasions, the correspondence in the Lelarge collection, written by Lelarge himself or by Mallinger, implied that Hiéronymus was indeed a member of the order. Several times, both of them refer to "F.˚. Dantinne". Finally, on May 28, 1933, Mallinger wrote to Lelarge, referring to Dantinne: "Does he think he is dying and does he wish to avoid a masonic funeral?"

So, was Dantinne a Freemason? I am very tempted to believe he was. But I also believe that his membership, still questionable, it is true, was very brief and that Hiéronymus did not very often attend the Memphis Misraïm lodges of his day if he was a member.

Finally, let us mention that Dantinne was one of the organizers of the Pythagorean Order, also known as the Order of Hermes or OHTM, a kind of reconstitution of the ancient Pythagorean school, which had taken on some aspects of freemasonry, notably in the titles of its degrees. But it was strictly speaking neither a masonic order nor a masonic branch and its members willingly denied the title of masons which could sometimes incorrectly be attributed to them. (See following chapter on OHTM.)

A CURIOUS AND UNEXPLAINED DECISION

Possibly a freemason, but most certainly a Rosicrucian, Martinist, occult master and friend of God, Hiéronymus was all of these things, in depth and with all his heart and soul. That is why the decision he made one fine day in May 1933 seemed impossible to those of his friends who were occultists and who had just found out: Hiéronymus had decided to give up all esoteric activity! It was Dantinne in person who informed his close colleague, Mallinger, (in a letter which, unfortunately, I have been unable to trace), with absolutely no explanation. The little that is known of these facts is to be found in another letter from Mallinger to Lelarge, where the former admitted that he could not understand it and that he was in despair. Here, excluding the first paragraph, which has no bearing on this matter, is the text of that letter dated May 28, 1933, in which one cannot remain indifferent to the writer's emotion:

> "The letter from F. .D... (brother Dantinne) which you sent to me with a stamp (I am returning the stamp for you to give back to him) brings me the bad news that our friend has decided to stop all initiatic activity, even R+C (Rose-Croix)? Is this possible? This is a terrible blow to me, and I am replying urgently to him, through you, in an enclosed letter in which I am begging him to reverse his decision.
> "What could be the reason for it? Is it general lassitude? Is he tired of people? or, alas, because of the Church? I am asking him frankly. This news, coming from an initiate, who is a "sacerdos in aeternum" (an avowed priest) seems to me so staggering that I would like to believe it is a cruel test. It would be a terrible blow to the international R+C and for all the orders which are dependent on it. Do not tell him that you know of his intention but try to make him understand that his mission is not over and that we urgently need his exceptional advice and lum .. (wisdom). Or has he entered a higher order that we do not know of and which requires the sacrifice of all those he was with to gain entry? Alas, alas, what can we think or do? It is making me sick and dismayed and it has thrown me off balance... For it is he who gave me the light. Perhaps some people you know abused his kindness and he was distressed by their mercenary attitude? Perhaps he saw the futility of all human effort and the uselessness of the fight?

"Try to fathom out the unfathomable which gives us its hand over the wall" he said. What will? Since when does a father abandon his children? Unless, when sick, he was visited by some negative religious entity or other who called on him to break off with us (...).

"For goodness' sake, explain it to me, try to find out.

"(...) Make enquiries quickly and try and find out what could have happened. Does he think he is dying and wishes to avoid a ma .. (masonic) funeral. Where is there to go and what is to be done? Tell me when he can get up and I will come straight away, but not to his home, where he is surrounded by strong believers.

"Your unfortunate

Jean"

No other document in the Lelarge collection refers to the matter, nor any document outside this collection that I know of, so that, unfortunately, we have to leave it at that. At most, we can ask ourselves whether any of the theories put forward by Mallinger in his letter corresponds to the truth of the facts? Anyone who closed the matter would be rash. There is one certainty in the matter, but it is a great certainty: Dantinne soon went back on his decision, to the great joy of his friends, and no doubt of his "children", and to ours today. And what is more, he then gave a new dimension to Belgian esotericism, which in the following year, began to spread to neighbouring countries and even across the Atlantic under the auspices of the FUDOSI.

FUDOSI ... these initials have occured repeatedly in our text from the beginning of this chapter. It would have been the time to give it proper consideration if the third chapter of this work had not been concerned with the conception and then the birth of the Federation, the area which saw it being organized as an emanation of the international or universal Rose-Croix and finally its extension today. Since Dantinne's life before the war can be merged with the history of events which will be explained later on, I will not mention that here. But a few words must be said about our subject and his hermetic companions under the terror of the Nazi occupation.

DURING THE OCCUPATION

Whereas all initiatic societies, whether masonic or not, were forbidden to be active (because the main function of any traditional organization is to liberate man from within and this internal liberation cannot help but have an effect at the social level) the FUDOSI was no exception to the rule, and was even considered by the occupying authorities to be the most dangerous initiatic order, which is understandable because of its international nature and the fraternal union it had with a number of initiatic societies under its auspices.

Now, as is well known, strength comes from unity: the occupiers saw in it another masonic plot, often believing this term to be synonymous with initiatic.

However, work continued for the FUDOSI as such, as well as for orders which were affiliated (and others, almost everywhere in Europe which were not) at the constant risk of the lives of the brethren; communication between them was practically cut off. In Belgium in particular, and especially in Huy, meetings took place, often in Lelarge's home, where Dantinne came to officiate or even confer initiations.

Jean Mallinger undertook the coordination of general work, even though he was under surveillance of the Gestapo who searched his home seven times and even arrested him during one search, and then let him go. Lelarge was the intermediary between Hiéronymus and Mallinger. Just now, I mentioned the help given by Dantinne to Lelarge in his resistance activities, whereas, as we shall soon see, he published a series or articles on the history of folklore in Huy at the request of the occupiers. Now this matter, as we shall see, was not without consequences.

My friend, Roger Maréchal, collected accounts given by Dantinne's neighbours in Huy at that time, which he passed on to me. They saw how, often hardly having eaten anything himself, he spent most of his spare time helping to feed the starving people in the town, especially within the framework of a humanitarian association, the Leopold III home.

THE LIBERATION

As a historian and librarian, Dantinne, as I just mentioned, had written a series of articles about the town of Huy for the occupying administration. They wanted to find evidence of collaboration in them. That is how some unfortunate person, when things were being settled following the well-founded euphoria of the Liberation, rushed up to him and cut off his beard, which had, it appears, been very long and well-looked after. Dantinne was seen to break down and cry, no longer even daring to go before the courts to justify his behaviour under the occupation.

Jean Mallinger, a lawyer to the court in Brussels, who was also his friend and faithful colleague, acted as his defence. A short time before he passed out of this world, he gave his testimony to Roger Maréchal in a letter which the latter passed on to me and from which, with his permission, I am reproducing the passage which interests us"

"I believe it is no longer necessary to clear our friend's name on the accusation of the lack of public-spiritedness which was brought against him. Indeed, I have pleaded in his favour before the magistrate's court in Huy and I have succeeded in having his name, which was wrongfully included on the list of anti-social people, deleted from this problematic list. I had brought forward as witness for the defence the late Léon Lelarge who was attaché to the Cabinet of Minister Rongvaux who came to testify to the patriotism of our friend and of his devotion to the resistance."

The matter was taken care of legally by a no-case submission and a deep wound in Dantinne's heart. I do not doubt that he forgave those who had accused him, but he did not resume his office of librarian.

THE DEATH OF DANTINNE

Concerning the period between 1946 and 1969, the date of his death, I have, unfortunately, little to say due to lack of information. In 1948, "the work and thoughts of Péladan" was published and was well-received by occultists. In 1951, the FUDOSI was dissolved, whereas the Belgian Rose-Croix fell into silence, though it by ne means became dormant.

On May 21, 1969, Emile Dantinne departed from our world at the creditable age of 85 years. He died in Huy, where he had lived and given light, in silence, almost in solitude.

I do not know, although this was said, whether the funeral ritual that he himself had prescribed for the Pythagorean Order, according to the teachings of the former master, was used on his body on the night of his death. In accordance with the teachings of the Western Tradition, he was not cremated. His body now rests in the cemetry in Huy. Roger Maréchal gave me the following description of his grave:

> "At each of the four corners of the horizontal stone, a square has been carved out, which itself is made up of four smaller squares, separated naturally from each other by an equilateral cross. On the upper part of the stone there is a fully opened rose and in its center an equilateral cross is marked out in the rose. And below is the Martinist Pentacle."

Dear Companions: #112

How often, in moments of stress and frustration, have you exclaimed - "Oh, if I could only be myself!" What have you really meant by that remark? If you are not yourself, then pray, who are you? ! Or is it that you have been acting a part and are tired of the performance of it? Just when do you make such an exclamation? Never when joyous and happy! You always make such a remark when you are discouraged, unhappy, hampered by circumstances -- and especially when you believe you are being misunderstood by those around you. Is this not true?

We believe, mistakenly, when under the circumstances mentioned, that existing conditions are preventing us from "being ourselves." But in reality, the opposite is just what is taking place! When we are not "ourselves" things begin to go wrong and become confusing and irritating and discouraging conditions arise and develop.

The occultist knows that matter is crystalized spirit. To say it another way: all matter has a spiritual source. Matter is a result, not a cause. Confusion, discouragement, discord and inharmony are likewise results -- not causes.

If you were to ask a group of persons what they regard "being oneself" means, the majority would answer along these lines: "Freedom to express myself without any restrictions." "The ability to do just what one pleases without regard to conventions or the pleasure of others." "To have people accept me just as I am, with all my faults and habits." And so on. How many, do you think, would say: "Being able to express my finer self at all times and under all circumstances." ?

We have become so accustomed to our habits and mannerisms that we regard them as ourself! Our habits change many times during a lifetime, showing how ephemeral they really are -- and yet how deeply we resent anyone criticizing our habits as though they were challenging the finest and best in us! Habits are paths of action developed and used by our vehicles. Some of these paths are constructive, others are definately destructive. We call them good or bad habits. The good habits increase our ability to express the Divine Spirit within, while the so-called bad habits actually hamper the Divine within from expressing freely.

Because we have three definately formed vehicles we have habits that affect each of them. We have physical habits, mental habits and emotional habits that affect us physically, mentally and emotionally. All affect each other -- and eventually, all either hinder or help the Ego. Habits, therefore, are very important in our lives, especially so because they are so difficult to change when once firmly established and yet: they CAN be changed.

The general impression seems to be that habits formed early in life are those which remain with us throughout life. Also, most habits are formed early in life. This is true of young souls but progressive and advanced souls are acquiring new habits almost daily, as the need arises. But why am I stressing habits so much -- when the real subject is "ourself" you may wonder. Because our habits are the outer expression of our inner selves. When we change within, our outer habits change also. IT NEVER FAILS. Then, according to this, do we carry some of our habits from one incarnation to another? Ponder and think. What is a habit? It is doing, feeling and thinking something in the same way so many times that it becomes automatic and therefore gradually a part of us.

Take any habit you may have, analyze it carefully and you will find just what I mean. If you have regular sleeping habits you will find yourself awakening daily at precisely the same time, almost to the minute. If you have kept a diary of your daily activities you will be amazed to discover how closely they repeat themselves each year following, to a degree of exactness that is really outstanding and yet -- at the time -- you felt that each day was different from the previous one.

Habit functions through the rhythm of cycle and that is why habits are difficult to break. It is because they have entered into a cycle of expression in every vehicle we possess. Mundane science claims that habits form grooves in the brain processes, but that is only the physical structure. What mundane science does not deal with as yet, and therefore does not consider, is that there are counterparts in the etheric body and the astral body. That is why, when people "pass over" to the other side of life and have relinquished their physical bodies they still have the same habits they possessed while incarnate. The physical brain and its grooves are gone ... but the individual still has the same habits. Does this begin to clarify something for you? Are you beginning to appreciate the importance of habits? Do you realize the part they play in your life? Can you allow a so-called habit to control you ... and not feel that it is important to correct it, if it brings you pain? If you do not correct that habit here you will have to correct it on the other side of life, if you wish to progress on the inner planes. That is how important a habit becomes.

Take the habit called drinking. That habit not only causes great distress on the physical plane but when the individual makes the "great change" the distress is even greater on the inner planes. In cases like these we have all been told repeatedly about the astral body's thirst for liquor and of the inability to satisfy that thirst because of the absence of a physical body which is the instrument necessary to fully gratify that thirst. Did you know that a habit does not become such until the astral and etheric bodies respond to the same path of action? We then say that it is the "subconsious" that is doing the work. All our "involuntary" activities are definately controlled by our other vehicles.

Habits should have for their purpose facility for expression -- and not, as is more frequently the case -- hinderance of expression. When your habit, whatever it is, is helping and facilitating the expression of the finest that is you on every plane of being and is causing no one distress, that habit is worth cultivating and encouraging, for eventually that habit will develop into a talent and, if continued to its ultimate capacity: a faculty.

Most people are not aware that habits are the channels used for the easiest expression of what we are. For this reason, what we really and truly are is ever seeking expression, and this constant inner urge is forming paths of action for the inner vehicles before they finally find expression on the physical plane.

Take the infant who insists on using his left hand in place of his right. Where did it acquire that habit? Surely not upon the earth plane for it has not lived long enough to acquire that habit. It was born that way. It brought the habit with it. Had we been able to follow the experience of that Ego we would find that in the previous incarnation use of the left hand had been greatly developed, perhaps by necessity of some kind, possibly through even having lost the use of the right hand by amputation or some accident that compelled the constant use of the left hand. This would not be heredity. It means that the vehicles became schooled to the use of the left hand and, as a result, many habits were modified to fit the needs. The habit did not become automatic until the etheric and astral bodies were responding synchronously. When the final change came, the path of action or habit had become transferred to the left side. This was incorporated and carried over with the seed-atoms of these vehicles and when they returned to physical expression the left side still had greater facility of expression.

The reason why habits are easier to nurture in children than in adults is that in a child the etheric and astral bodies, as well as the physical, are in the process of formation and even though the seed-atom is acting as the matrix or pattern for these, nevertheless their substance is pliable and plastic and more easily subject to change than later, when crystallization of the physical body has taken place. Habits we possess at the time our various vehicles attain their maturity are more difficult to overcome or change because they have crystallized into all the vehicles. Therefore, any change must affect all the vehicles and not just one. With a child, the habit is usually only in the physical and has not yet taken hold in the other vehicles.

Take the habit of biting one's finger nails. Nearly all children have had it and, if allowed to go uncorrected, they are miserable later on trying to overcome it. Now this habit may seem trivial and unimportant and not worth mentioning but it has caused untold misery to all possessors of the habit to the extent of affecting them emotionally and mentally.

The reason for this result is that they feel, subconsciously, that they are doing something that is looked down upon by others. From childhood they have been told of all kinds of dire things about biting finger nails. Parents, with good intentions, have inculcated the most fearful thoughts into these little nail-biting offenders until, every time the child bites its nails, it develops a sense of guilt about the act itself ... but as it has not received the proper handling for correction of the habit, the habit has continued with fear added to it. This has produced a peculiar condition between the astral, the etheric and physical bodies. There is not a complete and harmonious blending between these and, as a result, emotional unbalance is created. Such people will be found to be very high-strung and excitable, and if undue pressure is placed upon them or in their lives, they are apt to break under it and among such persons we frequently find nervous break-downs. It is often found that those who have had the nail- biting habit at some time in their lives have had a so-called nervous break-down.

Now all this may seem adrift from our original subject which is "being ourself" but, strangely enough, our habits and being ourself are very closely related. Our habits are not ourselves but our habits reveal us. To illustrate: a fine, sensitive soul, regardless of background and environment, will acquire and develop refined and sensitive habits -- quiet ones. They constantly surprise us with their instinctive gentleness and kindness, while others, who have been brought up in surroundings of culture and refinement may show coarse, uncouth habits and their habits may be contrary to their childhood surroundings and up-bringing. This shows that habits are not just the product of environment but of something far deeper than that and are most important in the expression of ourselves.

Whenever we are compelled by life or our associates to change a habit we have formed, whether it be on the physical, emotional or mental planes, we cry out: "Oh, how I wish I could just be myself." In other words, we resent charting a new path of action. The habits we form on the planes just mentioned determine whether we are leading full, happy lives, -- or lives of restriction, repression and unhappiness.

Companions: the repetition of a given action, feeling or thought becomes a habit. Through repetition it forms a pathway or cycle on all the planes of consciousness and functioning and that is why it facilitates or hinders action. When we are truly happy, we are being ourselves, because it means that our vehicles are co-ordinating and working together in harmony to give easier expression to the Divine within us.

When the Divine within feels free and unhampered by the vehicles and the habits these have acquired, the soul is free to feed or nourish the Ego and the Ego is free to commune with the soul of us. It is an exchange that uplifts and vitalizes our entire being to such an extent that those who have the vision will look upon these individuals and see so much light around them that they seem almost to be on fire. The Divine Fire within us reflecting through all the vehicles and transforming them into one unit of light and power.

Being ourselves is a wonderful experience. It is not giving in to all our habits and whims and weaknessess which limit -- but allowing all our strength and beauty and fineness full and free expression, controlling all the factors that otherwise limit and inhibit the expression of our best. It was said earlier that a habit can become a talent and later, even a faculty. By the same analogy a habit can become a fault and, eventually, a deformity.

You wonder about this last statement? If a wrong habit affects the etheric and astral bodies, can't you see where it is affecting the matrix of the next physical body? Frequently people acquire so-called bad habits through carelessness and indifference and their disinterest in correcting it shows an inner lack that is bound to express outwardly in a subsequent incarnation or manifestation. Let us get this point perfectly clear: our bodily imperfections are not the fault of our parents. If that were so it would be unjust to us. Yet they are frequently and popularly believed to be so. Bodily imperfections are the fault of our own carelessness, the carelessness of the incarnating Ego.

This does not mean necessarily that it is a young soul; frequently it is a very old soul who incarnates in an imperfect body. In previous lives it has concentrated all its thoughts and habits in mental things so that the physical vehicle has been neglected through careless lack of interest in it. This is not BALANCE and therefore the seed-atoms of the physical and etheric bodies, not receiving the proper care and nourishment, have suffered a lack that must be duplicated or repeated until corrected. They have not accumulated a sufficient reserve stock for future use. It is very difficult to convey this thought, in all that it implies, I know.

Remember that cells have an intelligence of their own. They have feelings of their own and physical manifestation of their own. We hold, within our bodies, a universe as marvelous and intricate as the universe without us. When we acquire habits, we are harnessing these cells into a definite path of action and so long as our habits are constructive -- the cells will respond to the constructive effort. But if there is carelessness and slackness as one or more of your habits -- disorganization takes place and the inability to form a new perfect body is the result. Well, these are the facts.

Accordingly, the soul of an incarnating Ego may be that of a mental giant, one tremendously talented, but through too profound concentration in previous lives has lost the art of physically constructive habits and so, for the time, has lost the art of guiding to a perfect conclusion the building of a perfect body. Strangely enough, the carrying of an imperfect body through one or even two incarnations will make such a deep impression upon that soul that it will quickly overcome its deficiencies and through the law of polarity learn to build a beautiful physical instrument or body in the next. Mankind is moving onward, forward and up, and the beauty and perfection will come on all levels. And it will be by the effort of Man himself, that this will come.

 Brethren interested in this study should read Papus' REINCARNATION.

Nothing in nature is wasted; everything is utilized. The next time you see one who is born physically imperfect remember that such a one is learning many valuable lessons and growing faster, possibly, than he who is pitying him.

Deformity is not a karmic punishment but the result of one's own inability to produce a well-formed body, due to habits in the previous incarnation. This is not punishment in the sense of the word as it is generally understood. It is simply a RESULT.

Now what about the loss of a faculty due to an accident. Will this affect the vehicles in a subsequent incarnation? It all depends on the cause of the accident. If the accident was due to one's personal carelessness, unless such a one ceases to be careless he/she is likely to have other accidents, until they learn to be careful and thoughtful. If the accident was caused by the carelessness, (or seeming carelessness) of another, the 'victim' may be paying off some karma, but is most likely acquiring some new and valuable habits and gaining in spiritual strength.

It is though our habits that we retain some degree of our previous personality from incarnation to incarnation. Study your habits and I believe you will begin to understand. Habits are a very important part of our outer being because they are revealers of what is within. Watch your habits and transmute them all. It can be done! It MUST be done ere you can progress. Whether we know it or not every habit we possess reveals our personality and personality is the expression of our real self, - our Ego.

SKILLFUL WORKERS HAVE ACQUIRED CONSTRUCTIVE WORKING HABITS.

CLUMSY WORKERS HAVE ACQUIRED HINDERING HABITS.

If you are not making a success of your life, EXAMINE YOUR HABITS. Remember: Habits eventually take form. If you possess a bad habit that you do not wish to see take form, change it now, before it is too late and becomes a deformity. Transmute it into a talent and rejoice in an added opportunity of being yourself.

Are you distressed, discouraged and unhappy? Why? Analyze your habits of living, your habits of feeling and your habits of thinking. In one of these three groups you will discover the reason and the answer or solution. Dear Companion: constructive thinking can become a habit just as destructive thinking can. Which do you prefer to acquire?

Habit is such a subtle thing that, at times, it is difficult to know where habit begins and our true self ends. However, if you penetrate sufficiently deep, you will always find that a habit, no matter how trivial, has a spiritual, mental or emotional foundation or cause. Take, for example, the simple habit of eye-blinking, and coughing. These are two natural habits nature has developed. One to help spread moisture over our pupils and also as a protection against outer particles. Yet the persons who have an inner fear of some kind, of which even they themselves may be unconscious, will find themselves blinking with great frequency until it becomes such an unconscious habit they are not even aware of it. The same applies to coughing. It is nature's way of clearing our throats of impurities. But frequently persons who have been distressed by certain things or embarrassement and have wished to speak out but for some reasons of tact, fear or resentment have remained silent, acquire a dry, nervous cough which eventually becomes a true deformity and they cannot stop. Doctors call it hysteria. The seat of the trouble is in the astral body - the emotions.

The inability to sleep is a habit which has mental and emotional sources with fear as its basis. An individual who is emotionally and mentally undisturbed, usually sleeps very deeply. The inability to sleep is caused by the inability of the etheric body to separate readily from the physical. Of course, purely physical conditions can cause this and the most frequent is irregularity of the blood stream or, as you term it, blood preassure. Do not forget that the blood is the home of the Ego and therefore anything that affects the blood causes an instant effect upon the Ego and the vehicles through which it functions. The blood can affect these quicker than anything else in our bodies.

This is why fresh air is so vital and important to our health. Fresh air is our greatest blood-purifier, yet how sadly we abuse and deprive ourselves in this respect. Sitting in a smoke filled room is one of the poisionous things we can do without! Yet it occurs everywhere and seems to be regarded as smart and proper. Man's folly truly knows no bounds.

Companions: try to cultivate and acquire the habits of health and well-being that will improve and increase your usefulness, your power for good; increase your ability to serve your family, your immediate fellowmen and your country and -- above all -- our heavenly Father, the very Source of our being. The Mystics Menu and the breathing exercises given earlier are a reasonable guide which will pay great dividends. Take care that you do not neglect to follow the suggestions.

"Being ourselves" is expressing the Divine qualities and attributes we all possess. When we feel uplifted, inspired, strong and in harmony with those about us, we never feel or say, "Oh, if I could only be myself." And why? Because in those flashing moments of upliftment and happiness we are really being ourselves, strange as it may seem.

Oh, why not give the Divine within you the greatest opportunity for expression instead of hampering it at every step? Do not jealously guard your habits as though they were your real self, in the notion that without them you would lose your personality or identity! Man has built his worldly conventions which are nothing more than social habits, some of which have been carried to senseless extremes. These will all the replaced by others as man increases in his ability to choose the real from the false.

Habits can become great blessings, talents, faculties and avenues of beauty. They can also become just the reverse. The choice is always your own! We all know when we are "being ourselves". A feeling of well-being fills the heart and mind, and we have a glowing feeling of friendliness for every living thing. Some of us have these feelings only fleetingly, while others are able to hold them for a long period. The longer we are able to sustain this condition, the easier it becomes and the longer it will remain the next time. TRY! You will be forming the practice of "being yourself".

Your Ego, the Divine Fragment within, knows that being yourself produces joy, health, happiness and well-being not only in yourself, but in others as well. Know this! When you feel "out of sorts," resentful against life or people, when you are discouraged or unhappy, you are not yourself, and that is why you cry out "Oh, if I could only be myself"!

Leading an upright, constructive life can become just as much of a habit as breathing is. Think that over! Yes, breathing is itself a habit, just as is the beat of your heart and your digestive processes. All are responses to habit.

Habit is the means we can use to gradually change and transmute ourselves.

Before we can transmute a fault into a blessing we must alter the habit that produced it. Were alteration impossible, there would be no such things as growth and progress in this wonderful world of ours.

Right now, the world is undergoing tremendous changes in its living habits, emotional habits and thinking habits. Think what that means! It is an opportunity for breaking up the old crystalized patterns on a gigantic scale and replacing the old habits with better ones, for only better habits will survive what is coming.

The world is going through a period of spiritual regeneration and all obsolete and insufficient habits must give way to new paths of action. The world is in a condition similar to that which faces the individual who has developed a deformity because of his personal carelessness and indifference. The world has been careless and indifferent to the national needs of its humanity, just as the individual became careless of the needs of his physical body and the result is, the world has developed its own deformity and the present world-chaos is the result. This world-chaos must and will be corrected by man himself through the development and establishment of right habits.

Just as we are, individually, beginning to appreciate the importance and necessity of avoiding personal neglect, whether it be physical, emotional or mental, we are also sensing the necessity of avoiding world neglect. Isolationism is becoming a thing of the past and the future holds an increased sense of not only personal but world responsibility.

As esoteric students, let us, individually, reconstruct our lives from the bottom up and revitalize our entire being by eschewing the habits that hinder us, and cultivating the habits that produce healthy and constructive living on every plane of being.

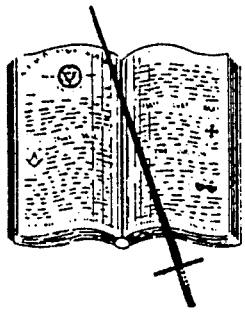
THE INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MARTINIST STUDIES



Dear John:

We were certainly glad to hear from you and thank you for your nice letter and observations.

There is no person, or no organization on earth that knows Absolute Truth although a lot of them, (perhaps most of them), would like their members to think that they do! We, as an organization, have no doctrines or opinions on anything! But of course all of our "staff" have their own individual ideas -- and so does yours truly! We are simply a re-distribution center, relaying the traditional teachings of the Martinists, Rose+Croix, Kabalists, Alchemists, Gnostics and Hermeticists. We despatch this information to students who are free to take what they can use and leave the rest.

You may just find, as you go along, that many views you hold now will change, and many things you reject now, you may begin to consider later on! This is as it should be for there can be no advancement if there is no movement! Do yourself a favor and keep a flexible mind --- take what seems to vibrate with you best and dont worry about the rest!

We follow the world reports on television and when there is unusual activity -- tornados - hurricanes - earthquakes - bad weather - etc. - our prayers go out very particularly for brethren there. Just this morning we were hearing of the unusually large "hail stones" that fell in your area! Hope you were safely indoors!

Please accept our best wishes in your personal endeavours and progress on the Path.

Sincerely,
INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MARTINIST STUDIES

LIBER 31

Dear Companions:

Greetings and welcome to Liber 31! Over the past several months we have been considering, among other things, the Martinist Doctrine as it was espoused by Saint-Martin and Martines Pasqualez. This has prepared and placed us in the required position whereby we can now receive the series of 10 lectures given by Saint-Martin to the Elus-Cohen Lodge in Lyons. Because the work of the past months has been quite heavy, however, we think it would be a good idea to have a little change of pace before presenting the lectures, and so we will give the first of Saint-Martin's lectures in Liber 33.

Among the material that has been passed on to us is a series comprising five lectures which were given by Dr. Julia Seton, M.D.. The series was/is entitled FIVE VICTORY KEYS. Needless to say these are five excellent lectures and we will give the first two or three in this Liber and the remaining in Liber 32. We are also beginning in this Liber, the history of the Martinist Order! (Wow, I can hear the applause!) This history, along with Sâr Hieronymus and the FUDOSI which we are currently carrying, will complement each other and comprises information making its debut in English. Along with all this will be the second Alchemic lecture taking us a step past the introduction given in Liber 30.

We thank all Companions for their encouraging letters.

Sincerely yours in the Work,

THE FIRST VICTORY KEY

RELEASING THE LAW OF ABUNDANCE AND SUPPLY

(Editor's Note)

Dear Fellow Student:

You have in your hands the First Victory Key Releasing the Law of Abundance and Supply. This is the very heart of the message of the New Civilization which Doctor Seton has proclaimed from hundreds of platforms and to multitudes during the past thirty years. (We do not know the date when these lectures were given - Saccas).

We are introduced to the finer forces controlling all life. We meet with the Law of Spirit, which, cooperated with, brings Wealth, - Health, and the satisfactions of the Good Life.

"Health, wealth, freedom and happiness, are our birthright - we claim all - possess all - distribute all - in our divine almightyness ..... We are the guests of God - we are kept by the love of good - we walk in happiness, prosperity and worship ..... Peace - Peace - Peace - Peace."

The student will gain most who prepares his mind for the reception of this great message.

If possible, be alone as you take up these lessons. If this is not possible, consciously shut out any awareness of the presence of others - of all outside noises or interferences.

Be still.

Forget your likes, dislikes, - even your wishes.

Just - BE STILL.

When quite composed, we will take up the

FIRST VICTORY KEY
or the
"CONSCIOUSNESS OF THE DIVINE UNION"

THE PASS KEY to the understanding of the inexorable, invariable and never-changing Law of Abundance and Supply is found in the words of Jesus, The Christ, "For unto everyone that hath (The Positive Pole of the magnet of life) - shall be given, - but to him that hath not, (The Negative Pole of the magnet of life) shall be taken away even that which he hath."

THE NEW CIVILIZATION

finds Five Keys of Victory, opening hitherto shut doors, which, when once opened, no man, (other than yourself) can shut.

These Five Keys are:

First: Consciousness of Divine Union.

Second: Consciousness of the Abundance of Universal Supply.

Third: Conscious USING of the Power of Infinite Opulence.

Fourth: Conscious DOMINION over all forces of the Finite World.

Fifth: Complete Realization of our identity with the Life of God here and now.

. . . THE FIRST KEY . . .

The inscription on the Arch of the New Civilization is

GOD IS ALL

We know there is but ONE universal substance. That ONE Universal Substance is in all things great and all things small.

It IS all things.

Everything which IS, is Universal Substance in some form. Substance is composed of atoms. These atoms form localized centers attracting other atoms. These atoms so attracted classify as forms.

MAN is the highest form of localized atoms. MAN is an attracting center. MAN'S THOUGHTS are the power with which he calls together the atoms from out of formless Universal substance. By the sheer power of THOUGHT he calls together the atoms out of the formless universal substance, lifting them aloft into objective form. It is thus that MAN and his ENVIRONMENT become the expression of his thought world.

Life in all its differentiations is only a "becoming" until the plane of consciousness is reached, then it passes into "being."

Most of humanity at the present point of unfoldment, recognizes only consciousness and self-consciousness. Unconsciousness is the condition of the mineral, the vegetable, the animal, and reaches into the infant life on the human plane.

Self-consciousness is faintly begun in the mineral, when the molecules arrange themselves into geometrical forms in answer to enforced vibration. It is again hinted at in the vegetable kingdom, in the walking trees of Australia, in the sensitive plants, the morning glories, four o'clocks and night-blooming Cereus of our own gardens.

On the human plane it begins in infancy, varying according to the race, country and individual, and reaches its fullest expression in the adolescent period of each life.

Self consciousness is the first knowledge which the soul has of its separate existence. It is the beginning of the pole of being. Consciousness commences at any point in the cycle where the soul makes union, and brings itself back into harmony with the Universal.

When we go into the parks of the City we see examples of unconscious and self-conscious life. On one hand we see the beauty of the trees, the flowers, the shrubs, the water of the lakes, and all the glory of the natural world.

On the other hand the crowd of human beings are living, hoping and walking amid all this unconscious grandeur. These express the same life force. One is the harmony of the unconsciousness, the other is the inharmony of self-consciousness. Within both there rests the germ of a yet higher unfoldment. All of life is on its Godward journey, and out from unconsciousness, through self-consciousness it passes into Divine consciousness where it stands face to face with its own "I AM."

Those who have learned the power of Soul at-one-ment, need no longer compete or strive.

Each day they draw nearer their desires. They have entered that divine atmosphere where achievement is made easy, because accomplished through their own creative power in the field of conscious creation.

The life that drinks from THIS fountain of Immortality becomes the master of every negative condition on earth, - for that life, limitation has ceased, - that life has been set free from the law and has become the Son of God or Good.

In every age men have searched for God. No other search compares with it in interest. In its facinating grip men have ever found themselves searching for that FIRST GREAT CAUSE, whether they consciously willed it or not.

When the eye of man first became aware of the facts and beauties of life surrounding him, when his reason told him that he lived in the midst of an orderly and systematic universe, he began his search for the FIRST GREAT CAUSE.

Different peoples have given this FIRST GREAT CAUSE different names. The Anglo Saxons called it God. All are in agreement that there must be a great Original Source from which everything proceeds. With the early Greek philosophers we believe that "God is One," that God is all there is; that God is the Great Universal Intelligence, manifesting in all things seen and unseen. There is only one thing in existence, - GOD - "As it was in the beginning, is now and ever shall be."

God manifests as consciousness, force and substance - or intelligence, action and form. Form is God consciousness expressed, differentiated, diversified. The formless is God consciousness in form so high that it does not appear as form to human intelligence.

There is but One Life in all and through all, and this One Life manifests in its own way from atom to man, - and on up to higher expressions.

The OLD CIVILIZATION said, "There is no life or intelligence in matter."

The NEW CIVILIZATION says there is nothing in this or any other world but intelligence in some form, and that the material - the things we sense - are but the grosser forms of Divine expression.

All matter is alive with Cosmic intelligence. It is radiantly alive in mineral, vegetable, animal and human life. Every grain of sand, every leaf, every tree, plant, flower, bird or beast stands forth a resplendent point of intelligent expression of Divine Consciousness.

From the very rim of matter, to the very center of Cosmic Life, each atom links with every other forming a body of intelligence which links all kingdoms, worlds and dominions into one vast undivided whole.

This is the Truth Spinoza tried to teach to his blinded age. It is the Truth of the glory and greatness and majesty in the world, which is projected from himself. But the world of Spinoza's day, as multitudes today, interpreted God to fit their own unfoldment, and lost the centralized point of consciousness and followed the diversified expressions of intelligence and form.

The New Civilization is calling the race mind back to the center. While it still maintains cosmic consciousness in the atom, linking these with the center, the infinity and diversity becoming one.

The Sun of this planet is the center of the atomic intelligence and through the sun man connects with the centralized currents of Cosmic intelligence, which is in kingdoms, worlds and dominions. We have here an intelligence so high that man is incapable, at his present point of unfoldment, of entirely transmitting it into terms of consciousness, so he calls it light and heat.

The whole universe has become to the man of the New Civilization, simply God consciousness, and he contacts God at every turn of his path. God has only one thing out of which to make the universe and man, and that is Himself, so all that is seen or unseen is God. With this knowledge man reaches out to the atomic mind of his material universe and speaks to God, touches Him, - knowing that "in Him we live and move and have our being."

Then, turning to the center of his own mind he contacts the transcendent lines of communication between him and his source, and he is consciously face to face with his own "Father."

In the New Civilization men worship God face to face. They have immediate and direct inspiration. There is nothing between God and man, - neither priest, king, prophet nor seers. Man has risen to the Christ conscious plane where Christ stood in conscious at-one-ment.

With the new idea of God, we take a new position with regard to all of life. The New Civilization knows but ONE substance, ONE action, and ONE intelligence, the several manifestations or grades of life as different degrees of God consciousness expressing in their own way and plan, so that the "works of God may be fulfilled."

With this fundamental concept established, there is nothing in this world of which men need fear.

With this new idea of God, we become free, whole and perfected individuals. God is love. Man, therefore, is love. As God is justice, so man is justice.

Man lives in a realizing sense of Life's eternal laws. As the days pass he expresses more and more fully the privileges and perfections which come to him in his unity with the divine.

So the Son of Man becomes the Son of God.

He walks each human pathway in his true God consciousness, with God as his constant companion, friend and guide. God is not lost in diversity, or swallowed up in infinity. God is real and tangible, a never changing entity. Man has an abiding sense of the indwelling over-shadowing presence - he is always and ever ONE with his source.

- The End of Lesson One -

NEXT WEEK: "Consciousness of the ABUNDANCE of Universal Supply."

Dear Companions: #114(A)

In this lecture we will study The Three Principles and the Four Elements. As we go along you will be introduced to the exact verbiage of Alchemy. Keep it firmly in mind that you are dealing with spiritual qualities and principles --- otherwise the entire significance of the Instruction will be lost. The reason for this will be found embodied in the Instruction itself. The exegesis of the Magnum Opus will be developed to a further conclusion, and the nature and characteristics, as well as the activities of the Four Elements and Three Principles of Alchemy, will be given. (You will remember that early in the Works we already touched this topic.) This instruction requires your closest attention and deepest concentration; for to those who skim lightly over it, it will be meaningless. But to those who seek earnestly and sincerely to see beneath the surface, a new Light will be given. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith. ... To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the Hidden Manna, and will give him a White Stone, and in the Stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it." Rev. II-17

In our first lecture (#111A), we observed that although the Great Work is not alone a mere chemical operation, it is, nevertheless, a search for the knowledge of the power to transmute baser metals into Gold.

And Gold was defined as "an emblem of perfection upon the terrestrial plane, as the Sun is a symbol of perfection upon the celestial plane."

"To make Gold," said the celebrated Alchemist Raymond Lully, "one must HAVE Gold and Mercury, and to make Silver, one must HAVE Silver and Mercury. I mean by Mercury that mineral spirit so fine and pure that it guilds even the seed of Gold, and silvers that of Silver," meaning by this either electricity or OD, the astral Light.

Referring to the previous instruction, Mercury it will be remembered, is the most important principle in the magical process. There Mercury was defined as the Astral Light, the Principle of Mind, the Spiritual Quintessence of all things. Alchemically we are instructed in the transmutative process to prepare our Mercury by the aid of Salt and Sulphur. Salt being Will and Wisdom, and Sulphur being the Principle of Love, the Invisible Fire, we find then that our process consists in the utilization of the Astral Light, the tremendous power of the Spiritual Quintessence of all things, with strength of Will, Wisdom to apply, actuated by the Principle of Love, energised by the Invisible Fire.

In modern renditions of ancient truths, we are taught to seek and find God or Good in all things; that God is Good, all things are in God, therefore all things must be Good. This is a confused expression of an Alchemical Principle that "there is Light in Gold, Gold in Light, and Light in All things." Therefore, the Hermetic Process is essentially magical and of the highest order since it has to do directly with the essence of the Absolute itself.

In the old Dispensation, by paradox, the Ancients used to worship and adore the Sun under the symbol of a Black Stone, named Elagabalus, or Heliogabalus. In the new Dispensation we are told by John the Seer, in Revelation, that to those who overcome, will be given a White Stone. (Rev. 2:17).

This is the Philosophical Stone sought by the Alchemists since the passing of the ancient dynasties and the renaissance of the Hidden Wisdom Religion of Hermeticism in modern Alchemy.

This Philosophical Stone is the TRUE Salt of the Philosophers, and forms one-third of the composition of Azoth, the Universal Creative Principle of Life. It was represented under the symbol of a CUBICAL STONE.

The Philosophical Stone, therefore, as one-third of the Creative Principle of Life, is the basis of Absolutism, the science of supreme and unalterable Reason. This Supreme Reason is the touchstone of Truth. Albert Pike, the Masonic Sage, has well said: "A man who is the slave of prejudice will never become a King of Nature and a Master of Transmutations."

How shall we attain this Supreme Reason? From the Smaragdine Tablet we learn that we must "Separate the subtile from the fixed, with great care and extreme caution (attention)." In other words we should separate carefully but certainly, and with extreme caution, attention or concentration, our certainties from our beliefs, and it has been very finely stated that "Science rests on Reason and Experience and Faith rests on Reason and Sentiment."

Let us consider some of the known properties of the Philosophical Stone.

1st. Its stability is derived from the Sun and Moon, or Gold and Silver. The sun is the symbol to man, of Truth, because it is to him the Source of Light. The Stone itself, especially the Rough Ashlar of Masonry, is the symbol of Stability. Thus, our medieval Brethren taught that the Philosophical Stone was the first necessity in the production of Philosophical Gold, meaning thereby, the transmutation of the vital powers of man, six in number, figured or symbolized by the six alchemical metals, into Sun; in other words into Truth and Light. This was called the first operation.

Whoever is able to accomplish the philosophical, spiritual and living Gold can by application of the analogies of Nature, discover also the natural and palpable Gold.

Whoever discovers the Philosophical Stone will also find the Absolute, the immutable; that which is without error; is Fixed, not Volatile, is the Necessity of Being; in which all Being IS; is Reason and Truth; IS ALL THAT IS.

This is the real Magnum Opus, to find the Absolute in the Infinite; in the Indefinite, and in the Finite. This is the work called by Hermes, - the "Work of the Sun."

THE HERMETIC SECRET IN ITS ENTIRETY IS THE DISCOVERY OF THE IMMUTABLE AND UNALTERABLE BASE OF RELIGIOUS FAITH: OF PHILOSOPHICAL TRUTH, AND OF METALLIC TRANSMUTATION.

2nd. Our Stone must express Unity in Diversity. Thus it may be decomposed by Analysis, and re-composed by Synthesis. In Analysis it is a Powder; the powder of Projection. In Synthesis it is a Stone.

3rd. It must not be exposed to the knowledge of the curious or the profane, nor to the atmosphere. It must be kept under lock and key in strictest privacy at all times, the medieval Brethren insisting often that it be preserved in a leaden box.

4th. The work of the Philosophical Stone consists entirely in projection; the motif is Attraction, the Law of the Magnet, as given by Paracelsus, and the signal and single operation of importance is sublimation, which, according to Geber, is described as the elevation of dry matter by means of FIRE, with adhesion to its proper vessel.

Sublimation, alchemically speaking, means the rising of a lower state into a higher: thus vices may become sublimated into virtues. Take the example of lightning:

"Lightning, at first only a dry and earthly exhalation, united to the moist vapor, by self-exhalation, takes on a fiery nature, acts on the humidity inherent in it, which it attracts to itself and transmutes in its nature; after which it precipitates itself rapidly towards the earth, whither it is attracted by a fixed nature like unto its own."

Alchemically this again defines Azoth. Put in alchemical verbiage it would read, MERCURY fecundated by SULPHUR becomes the Master and Regenerator of the SALT, and is the Azoth, the Universal Magnetic Force, the Astral Light of Life, fecundated by the Mental force, the Intellectual Energy.

Now in the light of previous definitions of both terms, note the following further definition: SALT IS ABSOLUTE MATTER. All matter is the precipitation or manifestation of Absolute Will and Wisdom. All matter is Salt. Therefore Salt is Absolute Matter. And all Salt or Matter may be transmuted into pure Gold by the assistance of Sulphur and Mercury, through the necessary operation.

The length of time required depends upon the operator.

There are in Nature two essential laws, which by opposition maintain equilibrium. These are FIXEDNESS and MOVEMENT.

Alchemists denote as FIXED everything ponderable and the nature of which tends to repose and immobility.

They denote as VOLATILE everything that obeys readily the laws of movement.

Thus, in the process of forming our Stone, we must form it first by analysis, which is the volatilization of the fixed, and then by synthesis, which is the fixation of the volatile.

This is accomplished by applying the Sulphurated Mercury to the Fixed, or Salt, the sulphurated Mercury or light of Life being directed, energised and made almost omnipotent by the power of Sovereign Will.

Thus, even the vilest Matter, or the vilest Character may be changed into pure Gold, for each contains the original Salt Principle symbolized by the Cubic Stone.

To extract from Matter the PURE Salt that may be contained therein is a more difficult process. Our Stone being a Saline Stone, this is accomplished by the action of OD Force or Universal Light (astral). Dissolved by this Force and analyzed, it is known as the UNIVERSAL SUBLIMATE, AND WHEN CONSIDERING THIS STATEMENT, REMEMBER THE DEFINITION GIVEN HEREIN OF SUBLIMATION.

Pure Salt found by Synthesis is what was termed by the ancients the Panacea.

In the secret knowledge of the combination and transmutation of substances it is stated that "All matter and all material substances are composed of combinations of Three Several Substances, extracted from the Four Elements, which Three Substances in combination are SALT, SULPHUR, and MERCURY.

Salt produces SOLIDITY.

Sulphur produces SOFTNESS.

Mercury produces Spiritual, Vaporous particles, or SPIRITUALITY.

"These thee compound substances work potently together; and therein consists the true process for the transmutation of metals."

God Creates, Nature produces, Art multiplies. God created Chaos and out of it brought Order. Nature produces Forms. Nature and Art multiply and perfect those forms. Nature and art are symbolized alchemically by two figures surmounted by a cross, signifying the marriage of the White Woman with the Red Servitor from which marriage will come a MOST POTENT KING. This last forms an excellent subject for meditation for every student of the Hermetic Tradition.

Chaos is Universal Matter, formless, but containing potentialities of all form. Form is the supernal Light enclosed in the seeds of species, its home being in universal spirit.

It must not be assumed for one moment that the nomenclature of Hermeticism is meaningless. The terms employed are, as stated in the first lecture in this series (#111A), for the purpose of misleading those who are not by right entitled to receive them. And in this class, they will be meaningless to those who seek to interpret them literally, and in any other manner than the spiritual.

Therefore, in continuation of the preceding paragraph on Chaos we are instructed by the Masters of the Art, that to work on Universal Matter we must use the Internal and External Fire. Hermetically, the Four Elements will result, namely, Fire, Air, Water and Earth; the Principia Principorum and Immediata.

These Four Elements have Four Qualities; -- the Warm and Dry, and the Cold and Moist. We have come into contact with these qualities in our readings of the Divine Pymander. They apply as follows:

To the Fire. . . . . Warm and Dry
To the Air . . . . . Moist and Warm
To the Water . . . . . Cold and Moist
To the Earth . . . . . Dry and Cold

From these we see that Fire connects with Earth all the Elements, as stated by Hermes, in Circles.

From the compounding of these Four Elements and their Four Qualities result the Three Principles or Substances, Mercury, Sulphur and Salt -- Philosophically.

"From these three Principles result the Four Elements duplicated, or the Grand Elements -- Mercury, Sulphur, Salt, and GLASS."

Two of these Elements are Volatile -- Mercury; (Water); Sulphur, (Oil). For all substances liquid in their nature avoid Fire which takes the one (water) and burns the other (oil).

The other two are dry and solid, to wit -- Salt, wherein Fire is contained, and the Pure Earth, which is the Glass, on both of which the Fire has no other action than to melt and refine them, unless one makes use of the liquid alkali; for, just as each element consists of two qualities, so these great duplicated Elements partake, each of two of the simple Elements, or, more properly speaking, of all the Four, according to the greater or less degree of each, -- the Mercury partaking more of the Water, to which it is assigned; the Oil or Sulphur, more of the Air; the Salt, of the Fire, and the Glass of the Earth; which is found pure and clear, in the center of all the elementary composites, and is the last to disengage itself from the others.

These Four Elements and Three Principles reside in all the Compounds, Animal, Vegetable, and Mineral, but more potently in some, than in others.

Fire gives them Movement; Air, Sensation; Water, Nutriment; and Earth, Substance. * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

(All of this may seem rather recondite at the moment but will clarify soon... Principal.)

EDITOR'S NOTE

Dear Fellow Student:

We have now in our hands the Second Victory Key Releasing the Law of Abundance and Supply.

We are conscious of the Divine Union.

Our next Key is the Consciousness of the Abundance of the Universal Supply.

Let us again, BE STILL.

When quite composed we will take up and examine

THE SECOND VICTORY KEY

or the

"CONSCIOUSNESS OF THE UNIVERSAL SUPPLY"

. o .

"Where God is, there is no need".

As we make conscious and continuous contact with the universal energy it manifests for us all along the way of life's expression.

When we touch the universal energy, the work is done. We lift formless universal substance aloft in our life in any form in which we may desire to express it. We can demand that it shall be health, wealth or any other attribute of our environment.

Opulence is the natural physical expression of life. Everything in nature bears witness to this self-evident Truth.

There is nothing in the natural life, of which we can conceive, that does not overwhelm us with its profusion. The billions upon billions of blades of grass, - the seeds, the trees, the shrubs, the flowers, the weeds, - everything is prodigal to the very last degree.

There are millions of seeds and eggs scattered every day, - to ONE that is employed in the scheme of production.

ABUNDANCE - OPULENCE - is the natural law of the infinite Life. Man alone recognizes economy, and man alone is conscious and capable of personal creation.

Reason as we will, we are brought back to see that because of this same personal power, man has made his own laws, and in so doing has departed from universal opulence.

There are three laws under which humanity works.

One of these laws is the law under which Supply is always unequal to the demand.

Another of these laws is the Law of Equality between Supply and Demand.

The third is the Law of Over Supply, to the Demand. THIS is the Law of Abundance and the natural Law of Universal Life.

We all know multitudes of lives working under the first law. It finds expression in ignorance and under-development. Such often never have enough of material things for their actual needs. They seem shut away from supply. They seem never to learn the truth of Attainment. They seem never to understand, or to make the proper effort to bring themselves into union with the natural Law of Universal Life.

"The poor ye have with ye always", seems to be the mosaic of life. As soon as one is lifted above the plane of want, there are dozens ready to slip into his place. They pass on as they become fit and make way for the evolving mass beneath them.

Then come those who are living just within the Law of Supply for limited demands. They learn to have exactly enough to get on with, but they see a limit of what they consider necessary. They pinch down in their money spending. They are afraid of their desires. They never learn to look a big want in the face, feeling they dare ask for it with the expectation of receiving.

You hear them saying, "I know I shall never want. I shall always have what I really need." But they deceive themselves. The truth is, they are hourly living with wants they dare not name, and much less dare to boldly declare for.

Life for such is a long, long trail of economy, and trimming down to fit what they believe to be their supply.

This is NOT real life.

This is NOT the Law of Abundance.

ABUNDANCE is the everlasting birthright of every child of Life.

We no longer make the mistake that Abundance means the same to everyone. Give a beggar of pennies ten dollars and he is affluent. To you it may be a pittance.

ABUNDANCE rings true to its name ONLY when it gives us what we need and want and some LEFT OVER.

It is a waste of time to talk of spiritual unfoldment to one who cannot pay his rent. It is a waste of time to tell him to "Seek first the kingdom of God" and all good things will be added. The essential fact IS true ... but it is only words and idle talk until he understands the Law of his own POWER of Attraction and is taught how to open his Soul to a real union with the Law of Universal Life.

It is entirely senseless to tell anybody about our own spiritual unfoldment, and our sense of Divine Union, and then go among our friends borrowing money with which to pay our actual living expenses.

"Where God is - there is NO NEED".

Poverty is not a companion to true Spiritual Union. It is a sign-board declaring separation, personally and intellectually, from the Law of Universal Life and Supply.

This sign board tells all who read that that life has not yet made union with the Divine Attraction.

AT THE CROSSROADS

Whether you are eight or eighty -- irrespective of your environment -- you may change the operation of these negative laws.

Get this -

THERE IS NO LAW BUT THE ONE WE MAKE THAT HOLDS US RELATED TO POVERTY AND LACK.

No matter where you are - when you awake to this truth, you then and there begin building new causes, the effects of which will connect you with the condition you desire.

Have you lost money?

Are you loaded down with debts?

Have you met with what the world calls failure?

Are you, with it all, getting on in years?

Recall this: There is NO LOSS in the Universe of God.

There is no lack in the Kingdom of God.

That which manifests loss and lack on the physical plane is there only because of your mistaken efforts.

Our job is to stand firm in the knowledge that the I AM within us wants us to have whatever we want and will help us to get it.

Then, sensing the Truth of Divine Abundance, take your desires into our Soul and walk each day in the knowledge they WILL BE REALIZED.

Begin right where you are to build new conditions. Place them in the cosmic energy. SEE the perfected picture of the new conditions fully realized. That is what imagination is for. Finish this picture in your mind to the very last detail. Water these thoughts with your constant conviction: Then Opulence and Abundance will slowly begin to manifest for you. And this new Opulence and Abundance will be yours forevermeore unless you again separate yourself from it in your own ignorance.

There is no use in giving up and laying down in despair. There is no sense in accepting the law of undersupply, when our birthright calls for the Law of Abundance.

Time has no meaning but to the human mind. If we do not know how to build it into conscious union with the Law of Universal Life all in a day, then take the needed time to do it. Don't hurry. Don't blame the law because others have plenty and we have nothing.

There is never anything wrong with the Law of Supply. There may be much that is wrong with our application of the law in our lives.

We all live under the same laws.

The starving -- and the bloated aristoctats with folly and millions -- all live together under their own law.

There is no difference in the universal supply. It is for all. THE LAW IS NO RESPECTER OF PERSONS.

We can all break into the field of Universal Abundance the moment we understand it, and our lives and circumstances will react to this divine union.

"All that I have is thine", saith the Father.

Satisfy yourself as to the truth of infinite abundance and the fact of universal supply.

Shut out all the old thoughts which relate you to the world of lack. Begin your new building in the direction of the Law of Abundance. Connect yourself with the Divine Opulence. Put your faith into works in your everyday business life. Wherever you are, whatever you are doing, BELIEVE, and the thing you think will come unto you.

THEN - whether you are under the first or the second law of demand and supply, we may pass in one conscious leap from all limitations and stand free in Divine Abundance!

NOW - let us turn to the Silence - that we may listen ... to the voice ... ever ready to direct ... out of all chaos and limitation ... into the open spaces of Divine Opulence.

. O .

SO IS IT.

MARTINIST HISTORY *

INTRODUCTION

We shall now start with the History of Martinism and of the Martinist Order. We make this distinction because Martinism as a great spiritual movement is much older than any organization of that name. The early organizations connected with Martinism had other names and we must emphasize that neither Martinez Pasquales nor Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin intended to create Orders called after them.

We should be sufficiently conversant by now with the difference existing between the system of Martinez and the philosophy of Saint-Martin not to confuse them anymore. We shall therefore revert for the purpose of this study to the use of the word Martinism to designate the whole movement, leaving the members to make the necessary distinction in their own mind.

Martinism began with Martinez Pasquales and with his Order of Elus Cohen or Elect Priesthood. It evolved in different directions to come down to us in a modernized form that owes much to Papus and his associates. We shall follow the historic evolution of each branch of the movement and we shall also study the question of the doctrinal and initiatic origins of Martinism. All this should be of great interest to everyone but especially to those of us who are members of the Martinist Order, who are the links in the Initiatic Chain which ensures the transmission of the Light.

MARTINES PASQUALEZ AND THE ELUS COHEN

We may say that no Masonic movement has exerted more influence in 18th century France than that initiated by Martinez Pasquales which became loosely known as Martinism. We saw earlier that Martinez' full name was Jacques de Livron Joachim de la Tour de la Case Martines de Pasqually, and that he was born in Grenoble, France, presumably in 1727. His father was born in Alicante, Spain, and held a Masonic patent delivered by Charles Stuart, "King of Scotland, Ireland and England", dated 20th May 1738 and granting him as Deputy Grand Master the power to erect Temples to the Glory of the Grand Architect. This patent and the powers it confered were transmissible at death to his son, "the powerful Master Jochim Don Martinez Pasqualis aged 28". We see therefore that at 28, Martinez was a Master Mason.

Martinez spent all his life working at the creation of a great spiritualist movement within the ranks of Freemasonry. When he eventually organized this movement as an Order, not strictly speaking masonic but composed exclusively of Masons, he gave it the name of

"Ordre des Chevaliers Macons Elus-Cohen de l'Univers"
(Order of Knights Mason, Elect Priests of the Universe)

(*KINDLY NOTE THIS IS THE AUTHENTIC AND OFFICIAL HISTORY)

Martinez' spiritual mission began probably around 1758 but there is no doubt that prior to that period, he had worked actively at the promotion of the Freemasonic Order as such. This was the time when the so-called High Degrees were being introduced into Freemasonry, to complement the three basic degress of Symbolic or Blue Lodge Masonry: Apprentice -- Fellow-Craft -- and Master Mason.

The introduction of further degrees (the "High Degrees") was often resented and disapproved of by the Masonic Authorities controlling the Symbolic Degrees. Martinez himself was not actively engaged in creating Masonic grades as such ... but worked at forming a kind of "side" organization which would have a more spiritual character than Freemasonry itself. To this organization however, he would only admit Master Masons who had taken the additional degree of "Elect". (Although this seems to be the general position in the early days, in the book Martinist Tradition Vol. 1, among the letters of correspondence given, there is one dated October 12, 1773 which speaks of special instructions for the reception of women into the Order).

We said that before setting up the Order of Elus-Cohen, Martinez had worked in the vineyards of Freemasonry. Thus, in 1754, he had founded in Montpellier the masonic chapter "Les Juges Ecossais" (The Scottish Judges).

Between 1755 and 1760, we find Martinez travelling extensively through France, recruiting followers for his own system. In 1760, he is in Toulouse where he is received in the United Lodges of St. John. (Loges de St. Jean Réunies). Later the same year, he is received in Loge "Josué" (Joshuah) of Foix where he initiates several Masons and forms a chapter called "Le Temple Cohen".

In 1761, Martinez is in Bordeaux where, on the strength of his Stuart Patent and with the recommendation of the Comte de Maillial d'Alzac, of the Marquis de Lescourt and of the brothers d'Auberton, he is received in Lodge "La Française".

It is here that he opens his "Particular Temple" under the name of "La Perfection Elue Ecossaise". The founder-members are: Comte M. D'Alzac, Marquis de Lescourt, the two brothers d'Auberton, de Oasen, de Bobié, Jules Tafar (ex Major Grenadiers Guards), Morrie and Lecombard. On May 26th 1763, Martinez forwards his Stuart Patent to the Grand Lodge of France and informs them that he has "erected in Bordeaux, to the Glory of the Grand Architect, a Temple housing 5 Degrees of Perfection of which I am the Trustee under the Constitution of Charles Stuart, King of Scotland, England and Ireland, Grand Master of all Lodges spread over the face of the Earth". The name of this lodge is then changed to "La Française Elue Ecossaise".

On February 1st, 1765, the Grand Lodge of France approves and charters this Lodge.

#117 EDITOR"S NOTE

Dear Fellow Student:

We now come into possession of the THIRD VICTORY KEY releasing the law of Abundance and Supply.

We have established our consciousness of the Divine Union.

We are conscious of the ABUNDANCE of the Divine Supply.

We are ready to USE the Third Victory Key enabling us to consciously avail ourselves of this Power and supply of the Infinite Opulence.

Listen! It is Dr. Seton speaking.

"Where do we go when we go into the Silence?

"We go into the transcendental part of our consciousness.

"There is a place within each one of us ... where ... our localized spiritual consciousness LINKS us with the Universal Consciousness.

"THAT is our SOURCE.

"THAT is the 'Secret Place of the Most High.'

"THAT is the indwelling Presence of the Spirit of God within us.

"THAT is the CHRIST in us - 'Our hope of glory.'

. . . . .

"Close your eyes ... have the sense of a great stillness ... and a White Light ... If you can see a Great White Light, dissolve yourself into it.

"HERE is a plane of consciousness higher than thinking. Here is something the physical life cannot give ... the Divine Exaltation!

. . . . .

"Breathe deeply.

"AFFIRM that the DIVINE SUPPLY is yours to use - NOW."

. . . . .

We now take up

THE THIRD VICTORY KEY

or the

"CONSCIOUS USE OF THE POWER OF INFINITE OPULENCE"

How am I to gain the consciousness of anything? This is the first question of the growing soul as it seeks to use the Power of Infinite Opulence. It all depends upon your position towards the things you do not recognize through the senses.

We first accept as fact our consciousness. Next, we accept as fact our power of mental application. This application may be forced at first, but very presently it becomes natural and constant.

We can get what we want and keep what we want in life only by becoming conscious of and living consciously the Abundance which we seek. Any other kind of possession is not real. We may secure something today and lose it tomorrow. After we have attained conscious living, things no longer "happen" for us. They ARE, and they continue to be, because we will that they should be. We do not attain consciousness by spasmodic application. We do not allow our minds to accept or think negative conditions, even for a moment.

We think, believe and LIVE just WHAT we desire, until through this thought activity we BECOME the thing itself.

When we desire Wealth, Health, Peace, Love * ANYTHING * everything * we must think of these things. When we lack the goods of life and want supply and abundance, we keep every thought of our minds upon Supply and Abundance and the possibility of possessing it.

We must fill ourselves with Abundant Thoughts and hold ourselves to those thoughts until they permeate our whole being and are felt even in our environment.

Go back again and again to the fullness of life we discussed in our last lesson. Become conscious of the ABUNDANCE of Infinite Supply and its availability to your USE - NOW.

Over and over again you will say, "All that my Father hath is mine." No matter how evident the lack may be to mortal eye, refuse to recognize it inwardly. We thus train our thoughts to abide in the fullness of Universal Opulence.

Of this be sure: There is no condition of lack that long can continue when the consciousness of the richness and fullness of the omnipresent Life enfolds us.

There is always a case to study when life becomes a drudgery or a burden, and its manifestation is disease and poverty. It is a signal of a soul astray from conscious living.

Power, plenty, a calm serene life, and the true inheritance and possesion of the soul that has come in touch with this consciousness. It HAS Abundance, for it has passed into the Infinity of Abundance.

"Out of the deeps of ultimate being proceeds the achieving life. The energy behind all evolution, the progressive consciousness, is GOD or GOOD. It touches the tiniest atom and makes it psychic. It breathes upon the air and sets it in rhythmic motion. It draws force to force. It gives birth to activity. It moves upon the formless and LIFTS IT ALOFT INTO FORM.

"All change, all growth, is primarily due to this quickening. Beginning with the very lowest form upward through every phase of activity which the universe knows, all things exist in order and degree, due to this action of divinity upon the individual life of man."

Tomorrow, today, - even this very moment, may be the dawn of our real consciousness. When we train our minds, day after day, to fill our vital centers with the fullness of "life abundant," and then harmonize our daily thinking and existence, so that we are poised in a beautiful creative thought vibration, we will soon become the perfect expression of the Abundance and Supply we are seeking. We will soon live, move and have our being in that great thought world of peace, power, plenty, Abundance and Supply. The spoken word will clothe itself in living manifestation, not only for ourselves, but for all toward whom we direct it.

When we have reached this plane of perpetual illumination, we not only heal our own lack but we can speak the word of power, healing and plenty to others.

We will be blind, deaf and dumb to the absence of ample supply and abundance. At the sound of our voice "life might come gladly back along the veins of our dead (environment) or death stand still and wait an hour upon our will."

Do we want money?

Hold fast to the thought of abundant supply of wealth, until every atom of our being is made over into the image and likeness of the God we worship.

We must not divide our forces. If we charge our atoms with thoughts of money today and poverty tomorrow, both will manifest in the degree we have vitalized them.

Let us look with the all-seeing eyes of our soul upon the boundless ocean of Infinite Supply, THEN, with faith and courage, cast ourselves upon it, letting the fullness of ABSOLUTE ABUNDANCE permeate every atom of our being.

NOW, as we drink from this immortal fountain which our souls know, and to which our lives bear witness, we may turn to the earth life about us and the "lack" with which we are hampered and see it slowly dissolve before us.

"Barren walls will stretch away into stately halls," and we will live henceforth in a world where everything will clothe itself in the forms of Abundance and Supply.

This does not mean that we can sit down without effort and have Abundance poured over us.

It does not mean this at all.

It does mean that from our own point of contact with supply, we open our lines of transference, and whatever our work may be, it brings us the results we desire.

No matter how barren our lives may appear today, they may be made glorious tomorrow. The very fullness of existence encompasses us. We have but one single need, - and that is to know how to reach out and grasp it. This is the purpose of these instructions.

Our point of contact with the Universal Substance is our immortal birthright. Nothing and no one can take it from us. Wealth, Power, Happiness, Love, Everything the human heart can hope for, is held for our keeping. To know this is to have grasped the secret of securing it.

Dear Student, KNOW this great truth beyond all doubting. Know it with every breath you breathe, - Not alone in the things great in your life, but in the little things will be found this Infinite Substance. We call out, and from the Absolute we get expression in form. Utterly rest in this knowledge, and to you will come Peace, Power and Plenty.

Union first, - then REALIZATION.

"Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with ehom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."

SO IT IS

. . . . .

(The end of Lesson Three)

NEXT WEEK: "Consciousness of the Abundance of Universal Supply."

SILENCE

(Dr. Seton speaking:)

"Let us again go into the Silence.

"Be still.

"Here in the Silence the Great Universal Forces flow through us as the current flows in the electric wire. Here we step down Infinite Power to our different levels of consciousness.

"Do not think of anything.

"There is no 'you' just now.

"There is nothing at all but God - or Universal Light ... Light ... Light.

"Have a sense of Great Stillness.

"Take long easy breaths, as if you were a child asleep.

"Breathe through your nostrils.

"Be still!

"Breathe!

"Infinite Peace!

"So be it.

. . . . O . . . .

We followed last week the masonic activities of Martinez in the furtherance of his plan to create a spiritual Order: The Elus Cohen. We followed him in Bordeaux where he founded his "Temple Particulier" under the name of "La Perfection Elue Ecossaise", name altered later to "La Française Elue Ecossaise". This Lodge is recognized by the Grand Lodge of France on February 1st 1765.

In 1765, Martinez leaves for Paris where he stays with the Augustinian Friars, on the "Quai de la Seine". He meets there the Bros. Bacon de la Chevalerie, de Lusignan, de Loos, de Grainville, J. B. Willermoz, Fauger d'Ignéacourt, etc. to whom he delivers his first instructions. He founds with them on March 21st 1767 (Spring Equinox), the Sovereign Tribunal of the Elus Cohen with Bacon de la Chevalerie as his Deputy.

By 1770, the Rite of Elus Cohen has Temples in numerous cities: Bordeaux, Montpellier, Avignon, Foix, Libourne, La Rochelle, Versailles, Paris and Metz. A Temple is opened in Lyons and thanks to the enthusiasm of Jean Baptiste Willermoz, this town will become for many years the spiritual capital of the Order.

Meanwhile, in Bordeaux, in March 1766, Lodge "La Française Elue Ecossaise" closes down. We note that Martinez's secretary up to that date was Father Bullet, padre to the Regiment of Foix, who bore the title of S. I..

In May 1772, Martinez sails for San Domingo on the "Duc de Duras" after having applied for a certificate of catholicism. He undertakes this journey in order to take up a legacy. On Tuesday September 20th 1774, Martinez dies in Port-au-Prince, Haiti. He leaves a son then at the Lescar College, near Pau. This son will disappear during the French Revolution, 20 years later. He was baptised on June 24, 1768.

- - - - - - - - - - - - -

According to which set of documents one studies, the Order of Elus Cohen seems to have nine, ten or eleven degrees. This has caused some confusion. We think that like in other Orders, a certain amount of development occured in the course of the existence of the Order and that the degrees were modified, with certain additions authorised by Martinez, as his members progressed, between the early days and a latter period. We give here the more reliable constitution. The Order was divided into three main classes followed by a Secret Grade.

THE FIRST CLASS contained the normal 3 degrees of Saint John or Symbolic Masonry: i.e. the Craft degrees of Freemasonry: 1. Apprentice, 2. Fellow Craft, 3. Master. This class of normal masonry was separated from the following class by a complementary degree, that of 4. : Grand Elect or Particular Master.

THE SECOND CLASS contained the Porch Degrees, three in number: Cohen-Apprentice, Fellow- Cohen and Master-Cohen.

THE THIRD CLASS contained the Temple Degrees, also three in number: a) Grand-Master Elect Cohen; b) Grand-Architect or Chevalier d'Orient (Knight of the East); c) Commandeur d'Orient (Commander of the East) or Grand Elu de Zorobabel.

THE SECRET GRADE or Order contained the degree of Réau-Croix. (This should NEVER be confused with Rose+Croix!) We see therefore that there are altogether 11 degrees but that if we consider the 3 symbolic degrees of Craft Masonry and the qualifying degree of Grand Elect as belonging to the Outer Order, the Order of Elus-Cohen itself contains 7 degrees. This we feel is in line with Tradition.

References in correspondence between Saint-Martin, then secretary to Martinez, and Willermoz, Chief of the Elus-Cohen of Lyons, to the degree of "G.R." has led some scholars to believe that, above the "known" secret grade of Réau-Croix, there was an "unknown" secret grade of "Grand-Réau" which may never have been conferred. No further information on this point has ever been found.

Dear Companions:

This is the second of the two Libers we said we would field before taking up the first of Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin's series of 10 Lectures which he gave to the members of the Elus-Cohen at the Lyons Lodge.

We begin by presenting #4 in the series 'Five Victory Keys' by Julia Seton, M.D.:

THE FOURTH VICTORY KEY
Releasing the Law of Abundance and Supply

"CONSCIOUS DOMINION OVER ALL FORCES OF THE FINITE WORLD"

. . . . .

Again, let us be STILL.

Listen to Dr. Seton speaking!

"There are no errors in the Great Spiritual Plan ..... The Tabernacle of God ..... Good ..... is with men, - The Kingdom of Life ..... Love and God are one, - we are anchored in this consciousness.

"The Universal Spirit wants us to have whatever we want and will help us to get it. We are always ONE with Divine consent. There are no obstuctions in Spirit. No one gives to us but ourselves. We are judged by the Law of our own being.

"It shall be unto us even as we think. We are the divine Thinker of our own thoughts.

We think the perfect thoughts. We see the perfect vision. We speak the perfect language. We know only the ALL GOOD.

"Be still.

SILENCE

When an individual doubts the power to attract Substance and Supply, his atoms take on the form of lack. He manifests lack.

If his mind is capable of taking up the thoughts of Abundance and Supply, his will power projects these things through his being, then his atoms begin to arrange themselves accordingly. This is the method of controlling conditions. This is the way we proceed when we want to change conditions, by which an interior correlation of forces may be made to manifest corresponding conditions.

Our THOUGHTS are our creators.

They create exactly what we direct them to create. When these thoughts of ours have finished their creation, it is not their fault, if WE do not like our production.

When once we get this truth into our consciousness, we will train our minds to hold only such thoughts as will build for us the things we desire.

We are all mental statements of our conditions. Whatever we have or do not have is a true picture of just what we believed we could obtain.

No one limits us but ourselves. This is the LAW and there is no appeal from it. When we wonder why we do not have what we want, and why our desires are never realized, let us remember this.

The answer to all "lack" is perfectly plain. We do not believe we can manifest our desires. We are halting in our beliefs and demands. There is not one thing of which we can think that does not overwhelm us with its profusion. Yet we stand destitute. We want for clothes, shoes, hats, books, food, houses, land, stocks, bonds, money, love, everything, - yet there is just NO END to the supply. The Law of Abundance and Supply is so simple that it seems everyone must know it, and that NO life should go destitute in this world of overflowing plenty.

GOD (the Law) is no respecter of persons. All are equal under the law. If we have lack while another has plenty, there must be something wrong with us and not with the philosophy of Supply. Even God is powerless to help us unless we know how to help ourselves.

The whole secret of "lack" lies within ourselves. Have we become hopeless and helpless? It is because in our ignorance we have charged our atoms with thoughts of limitation. We have taught them to recognize and build for poverty. We have deliberately detached our lives from the fullness of "being."

Every thought, -spoken or written - makes its impression upon the atoms. These thoughts of ours run like water in a channel. Each channel carries the same stream, so, if we think Abundance and Supply thoughts one hour, and poverty thoughts another hour, we are sowing mixed seeds of creation, and the outcome will be a mixed manifestation. We cannot afford to fill our thought currents with conflicting creations, for, if we do, it will mar the perfected form.

The vast majority of mankind go through life little suspecting the Great Abundance that is so near to them, that it only awaits their awakening demand. It takes but a touch of higher consciousness to connect us with this limitless ocean of supply. As we develop our recognition of it, we find that every step leads us into higher and grander attainment, and gives us an abundance which no one but ourselves can stint or hold back.

When we look at the world of hungry and poverty striken, we cannot help wanting to go out among them, and tell them that they will not need to suffer from lack when they learn the great truth about themselves. We long to point them to that great ocean of ABUNDANCE and SUPPLY, which is indeed all about them, and in which they may bathe and be made whole.

Looking out over a poverty striken world, we now know that all this inharmony is an inevitable expression of growth. We can only express that which we know. When we do not know Opulence, Abundance and Supply, we must express the absence of it.

When we have reached the plane of thought where we come into consciousness of the Abundance of Supply, we will leave every old poverty-striken condition behind us and pass into the Abundance of Life. The Soul that knows the Law is free from want, for when it knows the Law, it knows GOOD, and knows itself and takes its true position toward Divine Opulence.

Jesus, the Christ did not differentiate between the things in form and the things in the formless. He said: "Whatsoever ye ask believing, ye shall receive."

He knew that God, his Father, was All and that God had but one thing out of which to build the world, and that was Himself. He knew that all things were God's and that the race was in a God-world of God-substance; that whatever the race wanted or needed it had only to ask and receive, to seek and to find.

He stirred the higher etheric vibrations of spiritual substance and the water turned to wine. He touched the higher law of the unmanifested substance down through the etheric waves. He fed the multitude. He projected silver from the mouth of the fish for their supply. From the invisible realm of spiritualized consciousness he brought forth visible form, and at his touch Spirit became matter and passed into tangible use.

With the matchless picture of the Christ message, the Student of the New Civilization is awakened to a higher idea of Abundance and Supply, and money; and the goods we desire and need are only a picture of the form of Supply you have projected for yourself from the abundance.

All material phenomena is spiritual arrangement within the consciousness of man. Everything the world calls "matter" is but an emanation from the ONE Substance. The finite is but a Symbol of the Infinite.

The power back of the projection into form is DESIRE. The desire in thought lifts it out into expression. Desire is the prophesy of fulfillment, - "as a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

Money is only a symbol of race consciousness and a medium of exchange which is used to give each life the fullest expression objectively of its subjective self.

As the race evolution went on, there came about between individuals and peoples a legitimate exchange of those possessions in form. One gave to the other something he had for something he had not, but needed, and it soon came to be seen that the one who had the most desires had the most things, or symbols of desire; and that having the most things, they could make the largest number of changes.

So, it came to pass that barter and trade and competition came into the world. If one tribe had a large number of sheep, and another had no sheep, but owned a vast number of cattle, then, if they desired exchange they could express their desires in trade. If two cattle were of more value to the one desiring them than four sheep, he then paid the equivalent of his desire and possessed the cattle.

As human desire grew more and more in its intensity, and peoples learned finer and finer methods of expressing those desires, there came about a new race consciousness of those who knew naught but the desire to amass things in form. Many desired only material possessions and material good. They forgot there were many forms of desire within the soul which had at some time to be expressed as they went on into perfect unfoldment. This is the state of consciousness which the rich man in the New Testament lived, who said: "I will pull down my barns and build greater, and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods, and I will say to my Soul, 'Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease: eat, drink and be merry.'"

But God said unto him, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee; then whose shall these things be which thou hast provided?"

"So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God."

. . . . .

The centuries have come and gone. Our days in this life-experience swiftly pass, but the race mind has gone on in finer and finer concentration of its desires, and discovered finer methods of expressing them, until today the symbol by which we manifest our desires for material expression of supply has taken finer centralization. We no longer barter in cattle, gems, slaves and servants, but every human desire is summed up and symbolized by gold, silver, and other mediums we call MONEY. This money stands as a line of transference between the man invisible and the man visible. With it he brings around him and works out in form all the desires of himself.

Money is the connecting link between spirit mind and spirit form. It is a divine substance used by man. It is of itself neither good, bad or indifferent. It is neither high or low. It simply IS.

. . . . .

So, as we seek "conscious dominion over all forces in the finite world", we seek to understand them. Once UNDERSTOOD, the mystery of dominion greatly lessens, and finally disappears.

. . . . .

Let us again enter into the Silence.

Let these Great Truths of reality sink into our inner consciousness. (End of Lesson Four).

(NEXT WEEK: "Complete Realization of our Identity with the Life of God Here and Now.")

Be still.

We are conscious of the indwelling spirit of God. In the consciousness of this Union, we are too close for prayer or supplication. Our hearts are filled with gratitude.

We are no longer supplicants. We are Divine Realizationists. We claim all, distribute all in our new found understanding and authority. We walk as walk the angels, - free and unlimited! A new conscious dominion over all the forces of the finite world comes to us!

The peace that passeth all understanding fills our hearts!
Peace, Peace, Peace.

Dear Companions: At this time we are carrying two historical series:

(1) Sâr Hieronymus and the Fudosi;

(2) History of the Martinist Order.

When following from Liber to Liber, please notice which series you are studying! Sâr Hieronymus and the F.U.D.O.S.I. is from a French book written by Serge Caillet; the History of the Martinist Order is the official history of that Order. We continue with the latter:

Martines Pasquales and the Elus Cohen

We saw in our last lecture (Liber 31, p. 24) that whereas the General Doctrine of the Elus-Cohen was "ne varietur", the constitutions and operations in some lodges did vary and the structure of the Order appears differently in successive documents. However, we did give the general structure of the degrees divided into three main classes.

At this time, the Grand Lodge of France did not recognize the "High Degrees". Visiting Masons were therefore received in Blue Lodge form in the Temples of the Elus-Cohen. (The term 'Blue Lodge' in Contenental Masonry [and in the U.S.A. today as far as this writer knows] refers to the three first or Symbolic Degrees, usually known as the 'Craft Degrees' in Anglo-Saxon countries, and constituting the first class of the Elus-Cohen under the name of St. John's Masonry - Editor).

The second class, that of the Porch Degrees, was still externally masonic but contained hints of an underlying secret doctrine.

The third class, formed by the Temple Degrees, constituted the High Degrees of the Order. It used Masonic regalia and symbolism but the catechism was based on Martinez' General Doctrine. In the degree of Grand Architect, identical with that of Chevalier d'Orient (Knight of the East), the member undertook a physical purification by diet under which he abstained from certain types of meat and from certain organs of the authorized animals, of fats, etc.. This diet which was highly selective and not to be confused with straight vegetarianism, was similar to the Levites' diet described in the Old Testament. The "Grand Architect" performs "operations" designed to expel the Powers of Darkness which have invaded the Earth's Aura. He also collaborates in spirit with the special operations undertaken by the Grand Master, Martinez. This degree of Grand Architect constitutes in practice that of Apprentice Réau-Croix.

The highest Temple Degree, that of Commander d'Orient or Grand Elu de Zorobabel, is a passive degree in which the member undertakes no operation. It is a period of rest before ordination to the Secret Order of the Réaux-Croix. The teaching is based on the legend of Zorobabel (or Zerubbabel) and there is a mention of the mysterious Bridge that must be crossed by the candidate to the Mysteries on his way from Eleusis. (Please always remember that the word 'Réau-Croix' must never be confused with 'Rose-Croix' and has nothing to do with "rosicrucian".)

In the secret degree of Réau-Croix, the Initiate is put in touch with the Worlds Beyond (the spheres of Celestial Powers) through High Magic. He draws the Celestial Powers into the Earth's Aura. Auditory and Visual manifestations enables the Réau-Croix to evaluate his own evolution (and that of other "evocators") and to see whether he or they have been re-integrated into their original powers.

The "unknown" secret degree of Grand-Réau is supposed to have stood for the Supreme Test of the Order, the never-achieved ultimate "operation" which was the evocation of "Christ Glorious", the Repairer, Adam Kadmon Re-integrated.

We note that the Porch Degrees were separated from the Symbolic Degrees by the grade of Grand-Elu (Grand Elect) or Particular Master. This was probably what is known as a "vengeance degree" in which the vows of secrecy are renewed in a ceremony held to have the magical power of bringing retribution to whoever forsakes his obligation.

We shall close this chapter of the History by observing that Martinez conferred the title of Sovereign Judges and Superieurs Inconnus of the Order on 5 Réaux-Croix dignitaries: B. de la Chevalerie, J. B. Willermoz, de Serre, du Roy d'Hauterive and de Lusignan.

Dear Companions:

The Alchemical Seven Canons of the Metals.

"Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man." Col. 4:6

We continue with our Alchemical instruction. This lecture has to do with the "Coelum Philosophorum". This instruction is of the greatest importance to the student of the Mysteries, for as you extend your reading you will encounter almost continual reference to the various metals as applied to Man; also equally, continuous references to planetary qualities, attributes and characteristics in correspondence to and with both the metals and Man. Obviously, there must be a reason for this; furthermore, there must be an equally good reason why metals, planetary influences, qualities, natures, characteristics and attributes are used to indicate, describe or explain ethical qualities such as love, truth, justice or even their opposites.

The object of this lecture is to present the reasons intimated above, in such a manner as to afford an easy approach to a correct understanding, yet leaving you to accomplish original work and original thought in arriving at an individual conclusion. Let it be understood that in all study of the kind now before you, it is the INDIVIDUAL mentalism performed that counts, not merely the absorption of definitions prepared by others.

The Seven Alchemical Metals are: Gold, Silver, Lead, Mercury, Tin, Iron and Copper. They are symbolized by the Planets as follows:

1. Gold, by the Sun or Sol.
2. Silver, by the Moon, Luna.
3. Lead, by Saturn.
4. Mercury, by Mercury.
5. Tin, by Jupiter.
6. Iron, by Mars.
7. Copper by Venus.

These alchemical metals explain, occultly, the composition of Man, and his transition and passage from a state of Nature to a state of Grace under the figure of their transmutation. Here is an explanation of their natures and properties.

GOLD (Aurum, Au.)

Gold has been explained previously as "the emblem of perfection upon the terrestrial plane, as the Sun is a symbol of perfection upon the celestial plane." Also we learned that "to make Gold, one must have Gold and Mercury." It was further defined Alchemically, Hermetically and Philosophically, as:

a. The Absolute and Supreme Reason in Religion
b. The Truth in Philosophy
c. The Sun in Nature
d. The Perfect and Pure Gold in the Mineral and Subterranean World.

In gender it is known as the King. In this lesson we shall add another application -- in Man, it is the EGO, purified, sublimated, -- KNOWING ITSELF.

SILVER (Argentum, Ag.)

This has been defined as an emblem of Intelligence, symbolized by the Moon; amalgamated with Mercury (the Mind) and penetrated by the Fire of Divine Love, it becomes transformed into the Gold of Wisdom. In gender it is designated as the Queen. In its nature, it offers resistance to Fire, yet it can be fashioned, molded and wrought into the purity of whiteness. In Man it is the Intelligence quality known as the Soul or Soular Body. Further properties will be mentioned later.

LEAD (Plumbum, Pb.)

Lead is the densest of the Metals, the emblem of Matter as such; it is symbolized by Saturn; it is the Element of Earth. Saturn is the symbol of the Universal Principle of Matter, the Producer and Destroyer of Forms. While the heaviest, it is also the softest of the Metals, the most malleable; adaptable to any form or shape, over any mold or matrix. In Man it is the Physical Body, which is moulded over the Form or Matrix of the Etheric Body; the lowest of Man's vehicles; adaptable to any intent of the Ego or Soular Intelligence. It is symbolized by Saturn. "Common or vulgar Saturn" therefore means common or vulgar Man. Higher Saturn, Higher Man.

MERCURY (Hydrargyrum, Hg.)

Mercury has previously been defined as a Water and a Spirit, corresponding to the Elementary forms of Water and Spirit; dual (with Quicksilver) in its Nature, symbolized by the planet Mercury. In Man, it corresponds to the lower, or conscious mind as Mercury. As Quicksilver to the higher or super-conscious mind. Its product is Spirituality, and Spiritual, vaporous, particles of Matter.

QUICKSILVER

As Quicksilver, Mercury is described by the Alchemists as a Fire yet not a Fire, but Sulphur; and not Sulphur only, but drawn from Sol and Luna by our Water; that is, the spiritual extraction and liberation of the Higher Mercury or Mind from the lower, from the Ego and Soular Intelligence. Quicksilver is also known Hermetically and Alchemically as the Water of Hollandus, and the Antimonial Vinegar of Artephius, i.e., Conscience in the Light and sight of God. This is an aspect of its "Moist Nature". Alchemically a "Projection upon Quicksilver" means the improvement of Man through his Spiritual Nature. Yet Mercury must not be considered as Quicksilver nor vice versa, for though one is said to be the higher aspect of the other they are dissimilar in that Mercury per se is said alchemically to be dead, while Quicksilver is Living; in other words a more forceful presentation of the essential meaning and purpose of each expression. (De Hydropisi.)

Mercury is said to be that from which Quicksilver is generated; that is, it is alluded to as the Mercurial Prime Principle from which Quicksilver is generated. It is not ductile, and is opposed to ductility. Although of all metals it is chiefly assimilated to Mercury, it differs in this, that it has not received ductility from the Archeus (the great invisible storehouse of Nature, wherein the characters of all things are stored and preserved, in one sense the Astral Light; in another Primordial Matter) through the weakness occasioned by its small quantity of Salt and Sulphur. It can however by the Spagyric process of addition, become a ductile metal, as is demonstrated by the philosophy of transmutation, which shows that it is capable of transformation or conversion into any metal. (De Elemento Aquae. Tract. 111, c.7).

TIN (Stannum, Sn.)

Tin is the metal symbolized by Jupiter. While one of the least regarded of the metals as commonly considered among men, yet it is the appropriate symbol of the mightiest and most considered planet, and the greatest benefit in its nature. Naturally, it is of the colour of Silver, lacking its purity. Brought near to either gold or silver it takes on more "goldness" or more "silveriness" than under normal conditions. Yet it is also equally capable of reflecting the redness of Mercurial conditions, the red hues of Copper, the colour of Iron and the lustre of Quicksilver. In other words, it will appear to be just what its environment and surrounding circumstances make it. Alchemically, Tin is said to be pure Mercury coagulated with a small quantity of Salt, but combined with a larger portion of White Sulphur. It derives its colours from Mercury, white, yellow or red. Its sublimation is also by Mercury and its resolution by Salt, and it is sublimed and resolved by these. (De Elemento Aquae. Tract. 111, C.6). In Man therefore, Tin corresponds to the Soul or Soular Body.

COPPER (Cuprum, Cu.)

Copper is the metal symbolized by Venus. Alchemically, Venus is said to be the first generated by the Archeus of Nature from the Three Prime Principles after the Marcasites (a metallic, bronze-yellow, brittle iron, crystallization in the orthorhombic system) and cachimiae (dross of metals and undigested metallic matter) have been separated from these. It is formed of the gross redness of the purgings of the primal Sulphur; of the light red expelled in the same manner from the Mercury and of the deep yellow separated in the purification of the prime Salt by this same Archeus. In other words, alchemically, copper is the precipitation and crystallization of the higher metaphysical attributes and as such corresponds in Man to the Astral Body, in which the colours, forms, etc. of the higher vehicles are crystallized in the process of perfection -- colours which in themselves are not real but the reflections of the real, and the action of which originates the stimuli to action through desire which in itself is illusion.

IRON (Ferrum, Fe.)

Iron is symbolized by the planet Mars and represents the Mars element and Nature in Man -- just as Venus represents in Man the Nature that finds its affinity in the love and appreciation of beauty, the esthetic and the cultural. Mars: the stern, unyielding, resistant, warlike Nature that acts as the basis of our ability to combat the problems and vicissitudes of life. Mars: the mold upon which we base our actions, etc.. Through the Mars element in Man the Etheric Body acts as the mould upon which the Physical Body is based and by which it is crystallized into expression. As the Mars or Iron element is necessary to the blood, (which is the particular vehicle of the Ego), as a powerful and absolutely necessary source of strength -- so the Etheric Body is the Martian Force in Man that builds his physical vehicle up, when it is depleted in strength, each night during sleep and at every rest opportunity. The Etheric Body maintains and upholds the weakened physical vehicle at all times. So alchemically, it is the Mars/Iron property of Man's Nature that enables him to accomplish the transmutation and process of perfection of his lower vehicle for the use of the higher, and his lower natures to the use and purpose of the higher. Alchemically stated, in the generation of Iron there is a larger proportion of Salt and Mercury, while the Sulphur from which Copper proceeds is present in a smaller quantity. It contains also a cuprine salt (a copper crystallization in isometric form) but not in equal proportions with Mercury. Its constituents are its own body, which preponderates; then comes Salt, afterwards Mercury and lastly Sulphur. When there is no more Salt than the composition of Sulphur requires, the metal can in no wise be made, for it depends upon an equal weight of each. For flexibility proceeds from Mercury and coagulation from Salt. Accordingly, if there be too much Salt, it becomes too hard.
(De Elemento Aquae. Lib. IV, Tract 111, c.4)

Having given the nature, properties and characteristics, as well as the application of them to Man, I will now tabulate the metals as to names and correspondences:

Metal	Planet	Nature	Human Correspondences
7 GOLD	Sun, Sol	Perfection, Primal Fire	EGO
6 SILVER	Moon, Luna	Higher Intelligence	Spiritual Body
5 LEAD	Saturn	Density, Malleability	Physical Body
4 Copper	Venus	Reflectibility	Astral Body
3 Iron	Mars	Stability, Strength	Etheric Body
2 Tin	Jupiter	Essential qualities of Higher	Soular Body
1 MERCURY (Quicksilver)	Mercury		(Lower Mind (Higher Mind

In the Coelum Philosophorum the order of the metals is given as: 1. Mercury, 2. Tin, 3. Iron, 4. Copper, 5. Lead, 6. Silver, 7. Gold. Of the metals as listed, four, namely - Lead, Tin, Copper and Iron are known as Cold Metals.

The EARTH is decribed by the Alchemists as ANTIMONY -- Man.

In connection with Earth, it is to be noted that the ancients and the alchemists designated Earth as EVA, or Eve, feminine, the Principal of the R+C doctrine of the Immaculate Conception. As Eve the female or generative power in Nature, Earth, is the eternal mother of us all, an ever immaculate virgin; because she has no connection with any external God, but contains the fructifying principle, the spiritual Holy Ghost within her own self.

Eve is considered under two aspects; the Terrestrial, or Nature in her material aspects, as the womb or matrix out of which forms are continually evolved, and into which they are continually reabsorbed.

Spiritually, Primordial Man was a bi-sexual being. The separation of sex took place in consequence of the differentiation of Spirit in Matter. Man is still to a certain extent bi-sexual because each human male contains some female elements, and each human female some male elements. Sex is merely the attribute of the external form. The spiritual man who inhabits the outer form has no particular sex. (Hartmann, Secret Symbols of the Rosicrucians, p3; Genesis 2:8 & 1:27; Heb. 7:3; Luke 20:35).

The term "metals" is also frequently used to designate Man in his entirety. Thus, good men are often referred to as Gold and Superior Metals; likewise inferior men are referred to as Inferior Metals. Suspicious, sensitive folk, and those in error, are referred to alchemically as Arsenic, Vitriol, Vipers, etc..

Man is also known alchemically as a Magnet. The Ego in its descent to rebirth attracts to itself the necessary matter for the formation of the requisite vehicles ... and it does not lose this power of attraction after incarnation. It continues to draw to itself those conditions which are necessary for its functioning in a given environment. The exemplification of this power is shown in the saving that is written of the man Jesus: "and I, if I be lifted up, will DRAW all MEN unto me." (John 12:32).

In respect to his eartly Nature, Man is designated frequently as Antimony in the sense of a mineral participating of Saturnine parts. As Saturn symbolizes Lead and corresponds to Man's lowest vehicle (the physical body), even though the best organized at the present time, Saturn also symbolizes humility and this is why the alchemists so often stated that "Gold cannot so easily be made of anything as of Saturn (Lead)," meaning that from Man in a state of true humility great things can be confidently expected, and we also recall in the Beatitudes (Matt.5:5) the saying "Blessed are the meek (humble) for they shall inherit the Earth". Then, in the same chapter at verse 13 it is also significantly written in alchemical language, "Ye are the SALT of the Earth, but if the salt has lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under the foot of man." Also "Ye are the Light of the World." The Bible in the Old and New Testaments teems with the alchemistic verbiage and it would be well for you to hold this in mind as we progress in the study of the Divine Art.

The Sage Pythagoras said, "all things and all secrets are hid in Saturn" (or Lead). In other words: all things in Heaven and Earth are contained in the Microcosm Man and by the process of transmutation of his leaden nature and attributes into the higher vibrations, man can unfold and show forth the powers of the supernal grades.

As we continue these alchemic lectures the emphasis will gradually shift more and more to practical methods. In the next alchemical lecture we shall consider the real goal of the Alchemists, sought under the perplexing and distracting verbiage of their formularies, which have so carefully and successfully concealed their discoveries for ages.

QUESTIONS FOR YOUR OWN SELF-EXAMINATION

1. To what constituents of man do Gold, Silver and Lead apply?
2. What is meant by "Vulgar Saturn"?
3. What is the peculiar property of Tin?
4. To what constituent of Man does Copper apply?
5. What does the Mars element represent in Man?
6. What is the Alchemical idea of the "Immaculate Conception"?
7. How is Man sometimes designated?
8. What is the sex of spiritual Man?

A S S I G N M E N T

Present your personal interpretations of the use of the terms "Salt" and "Light" in the Biblical passages cited in the last paragraph of the previous page, from the standpoint of the definitions of those terms already given in the Alchemical Instructions (which can be identified by the letter 'A' following the lecture number). ALSO: Give your concept of the true interpretation of the changing of Lot's wife into a Pillar of Salt as recorded in Genesis 19:26. What do you consider the real meaning of that story to be? Write on one side of the paper only and give clearly your name, full mailing address and key number.

Martinez Pasquales and the Elus-Cohen

Before his death, Martinez Pasquales had appointed as his successor his cousin Armand Cagnet de Lestère, General Secretary of the Navy in Port-au-Prince, Haiti. This Brother had very little time to give to the Order and could just manage to look after the Cohen Temples of Port-au-Prince and of Léogane in Haiti. Divisions occured between the Temples in Europe. A. C. de Lèstere died in 1778 after transmitting his powers to the V.P.M. Sebastian de Las Casae. This new Grand Master did not attempt to reconcile the different branches of the Elus-Cohen nor to unify the Rite. Little by little, the Elus-Cohen Temples fall into dormancy.

The Doctrine continues nevertheless to be transmitted from person to person or within Qabalistic Areopagoi composed of 9 members. In 1806, concerted "operations" were still taking place on the dates of the equinoxes. One of the last known direct representatives of the Elus-Cohen was the Ven. Master Destigny who died in 1868.

Many of Martinez's disciples distinguished themselves, such as the Baron d'Holbach, who wrote "The System of Nature", the Hebrew scholar and qabalist Duchanteau who is the author of the "Magic Calendar"; Jacques Cazotte, famous author of "Devil in Love"; Bacon de la Chevalerie; Jean-Baptiste Willermoz who was to play an important part in Freemasonry; and the celebrated "Unknown Philosopher" Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin.

We have come to what looks like the end of the original line of the Elus-Cohen. Fortunately, Martinism did not die with that first Order founded by Martinez. Long before the Order lost its vitality, two eminent Elus-Cohen were to preserve the original doctrine : the first, Jean-Baptiste WILLERMOZ, by integrating it with some Rites of Freemasonry; the other, Louis-Claude de SAINT-MARTIN, by incorporating it in a modified system of philosophy perpetuated by personal Initiations.

Jean-Baptiste Willermoz and the Knights Beneficient

Jean-Baptiste Willermoz was born at Lyons, France, on July 10th 1730. His father, Claude Cathrin Willermoz was a haberdasher. J.B. Willermoz was educated at the Trinity School of Lyons. He opened his own silk business in 1754.

From 1750, when he was twenty, Willermoz had been a Freemason. In 1752, he was appointed Worshipful Master of his Lodge. In 1753 he founds the Lodge "La Parfaite Amitié" of which he is elected Master on St. John's Day, June 24, 1753. In 1756, this Lodge joins the Mother-Lodge of Lyons. Its charter of regularization by Grand Lodge of France is dated November 21st 1756.

On May 4, 1760, the Worshipful Masters of the Lodge "L'Amitié" (20 members), "La Parfaite Amitié" (30 members) and "Les Vrais Amis" (12 members) set up, with the approval of the Grand Lodge of France, a Provincial Mother-Lodge called "Grande Loge des Maîtres Réguliers de Lyon" (Grand Lodge of the regular Masters of Lyons). Willermoz is the Provincial Grand-Master from 1762 to 1763 and becomes after that Keeper of the Seals and Archivist. In 1763, he founds the "Souverain Chapitre des Chevaliers de L'Aigle Noir - Rose+Croix" (Sovereign Chapter of the Knights of the Black Eagle - Rose+Croix). We see that up to this point Willermoz has been a very active Mason.

In May 1767, Willermoz undertakes a journey to Paris where he meets Bacon de la Chevalerie, Deputy Grand-Master of the Elus-Cohen. He is initiated by Martinez himself in Versailles. In 1772, Willermoz learns of the existence of a German Masonic Order called "Strict Templar Observance". On December 14, 1772, Willermoz applies by letter for affiliation. He receives an answer dated March 18, 1773 from Count Weiler. The Duke of Brunswick replaces Von Hund at the head of the "Strict Observance." From August 11 to 13, 1772 Count Weiler is in Lyons where he has come to found personally the Strict Observance Lodge which is called "Loge Ecossaise Rectifiée 'La Bienfaisance'".

We saw last week that Willermoz had been a very active Freemason and that he became an Elu-Cohen in 1767. While directing the Cohen Temple of Lyons, he became interested in Templar Masonry and affiliated with the Order of Strict Templar Observance.

In December 1777, three years after the death of Martinez, Rodolphe Salzmann, "Master of the Novices of the Directoire of Strasbourg" arrives in Lyon where he is received as Elu-Cohen. We know that at that time, the Order of Elus-Cohen was sufering from internal dissentions and from a lack of leadership. Like many other sincere members, Willermoz can see that the Order was doomed and he is anxious to preserve all that can be saved. With the help of Salzmann and with the approval of Bacon de la Chevalerie, Willermoz conceives the project of implanting the secret doctrine of the Elus-Cohen in the Rite of Strict Observance. This he planned to do by adding to the first classes of the Strict Observance, a higher class called the "Profession" (because the members would be 'professed', meaning that they would have taken vows) containing two degrees : Knight and "Profès", in which the doctrine of the Elus-Cohen would be transmitted, thus alleviating the disparition of the Réaux-Croix. It was not the intention to implant the "operations" of the Elus-Cohen in the Strict Observance.

A general meeting called the Convent of Gaul was held from November 25th to December 10th 1778 in Lyons, at the instigation of Willermoz. It was decided to reform the Auvergne Province of the Strict Observance and the French Templars took the name of "Chevaliers Bienfaisants de la Cité Sainte" (Knights Beneficent of the Holy City, or: C.B.C.S.) This is the Scottish Rectified Rite of today. The degrees were: 1° Apprentice, 2° Fellowcraft, 3° Master, 4° Maître Ecossais (Scottish Master), 5° Ecuyer Novice (Squire), 6° C.B.C.S. (Knight) to which was to be added the "Profession" class of 2 degrees: 7° Chevalier-Profès (Professed Knight) and 8° Grand-Profès (Professed Grand-Knight).

After this reformation, Willermoz decided that it would be right to carry this action into the bosom of the mother branch, the German Strict Observance. It was with this in mind that he went to the Convent of Wilhemsbad in 1782. He found supporters of his plan in the Princes Ferdinand of Brunswick and Charles of Hesse but found stiff opposition on the part of the Illuminati of Bavaria (Weishaupt's Order) and met the hostility of Francois de Chefdebien de Saint-Amand, representative of the Philalethes, and of Savalette de lange. After heated arguments, Willermoz and his supporters won the day and succeeded in having the title of Knights Beneficent (C.B.C.S.) adopted by all the members of the inner Order. A committee was formed under Willermoz to prepare the High Degree Rituals and those of the secret degrees of the "Profession". This work was well advanced when the French Revolution interrupted Willermoz's task. The "Rectified" Temples of the C.B.C.S. and the Elus-Cohen Temples still active had to close down. The Brethren were dispersed by the events in France.

After the Revolution, in 1806, the C.B.C.S. became active again in France and they soon joined the Grand Orient with which the Strict Observance had friendly relations. We have seen that the Elus- Cohen had not officially resumed their work. Their last Grand-Master, Sebastian de las Casas, had the archives of the Order handed over to the Philalethes. In 1806 however, Bacon de la Chevalerie "Deputy Grand-Master for the Northern Hemisphere", sat in this capacity in the Grand College of Rites of the Grand Orient of France. He tried to obtain the authorization to re-organize the Order of Elus-Cohen within the Grand-Orient but it was refused.

The Rite of Knights Beneficent passes into Switzerland when the Directoire of Burgundy transmits its powers to the Directoire of Helvetia. It is from this Swiss Jurisdiction, now headed by the Great Priory of Helvetia, that the C.B.C.S. will be re-activated in France after successive wars and particularly the Second World War. On May 5, 1824, Jean-Baptiste Willermoz died in Lyons.

Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin and the Supérieurs Inconnus.

Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin was born in Amboise, in the the French province of Touraine, on January 18th, 1743. As we have already studied in some detail the life of Saint-Martin, we shall only review rapidly here those points that have historical importance. We know that he was a barrister at Tours and that, tired of the petty intrigues of that life, he entered the Regiment of Foix on the recommendation of Choiseul and took a commission. It was whilst in the army that he met de Grainville who was Elus-Cohen.

Saint-Martin was initiated into the Elus-Cohen in October 1768. For more than 6 years, he will practise the Works of the Order. He gradually feels uneasy about the theurgic "operations". Towards the end of 1770, Saint-Martin leaves the army and becomes secretary to Martinez. In the course of his new duties he frequently visits Lyons which has become the center of Martinism. It is during these visits that he drafts his first book "Des Erreurs et de la Vérité" which is published in 1775.

Saint-Martin continues to evolve away from the "practical" side of the works of the Elus-Cohen, i.e. the practise of theurgic operations, prefering the "Inner Way". In 1777, he stays in Versailles. Martinez has been dead for three years. Saint-Martin tries to bring the Elus-Cohen 'round to his ideas and to pure "speculative" mysticism. He fails to convert them and they remain faithful to the operations that Martinez has taught them. Saint-Martin is an entirely disinterested agent in this work of reforming Martinism and, having failed within the Temples of the Elus-Cohen, he carries on his action in the Hermetic circles and esoteric aeropagoi of the time. He publishes further works and, insensibly, assumes the role of a teacher, or Master. While in Strasbourg, he meets Rodolphe Salzmann who is then known for his translations and commentaries on the works of Jacob Boehme. Saint-Martin becomes connected with the Order of Unknown Philosophers. Saint-Martin carries on with his personal mission, forming followers and disciples and travelling extensively. From January to July 1787, he is in London. In September 1787, we find him in Italy. He establishes numerous contacts in all countries.

By 1790, Saint-Martin has become entirely divorced from his earlier work. On July 4th, he resigns from Freemasonry, asking that his name be removed from all Masonic records. This forces him also to resign from the Elus-Cohen. Saint-Martin then undertakes a journey to Russia. Prince Galitzin, who becomes a disciple of the Unknown Philosopher, spreads the mystical teachings of Saint-Martin within the Russian Order of Strict Templar Observance.

It has sometimes been denied that Saint-Martin created an organization of any kind. This argument rests on Saint-Martin's well-known aversion for societies organized on the Masonic pattern and for the elaborate ceremonies as well as on the lack of positive evidence. With regard to this last point, however, one should not forget the essential difference between secret societies of the Masonic type which are officially known about and registered and which would be more accurately described as "discreet" or "private" societies -- and the really secret societies whose very existence is generally unknown. Furthermore, the evidence, if slight, is not altogether lacking. It is generally found in private correspondence and we see there references to the existence of what is sometimes referred to as the "Société des Initiés" (Society of the Initiates) and at other times as the "Société des intimes" (Society of Intimate Friends). You will no doubt note the fact that in both cases this society hides its name behind the initials "S.I." In fact, all these names only serve to indicate that the organization in question was constituted by people bearing the title of "Supérieurs Inconnus".

INTRODUCTION TO COSMOSOPHY

(From the archives of the Hermetic Teachings)
Taken from THE F.U.D.O.S.I. Vol I, No. I, November 1946

Through the medium of his senses, man has a provisional representation of the universe sufficient to give him some elementary knowledge of it, although it is incomplete, limited and necessarily relative.

Now, there exists, besides the material realities perceived by the senses, a whole group of primary truths which may enable those who possess them to have an approximate knowledge of all that which does not fall into the sensorial realm though it, too, may have an objective reality.

We find these truths in Cosmosophy which is the integral knowledge of the universe and of man himself, that is, of the Macrocosme and of the Microcosme.

The same as the body must be nourished in order to maintain animal heat and life, likewise the mind must be given a spiritual nurture so that the intellectual faculties do not become atrophied. We must realize that "the brain has also its way of breathing" and when it is soaring unto the plane of ideas it is then functioning in the midst of the realities of this plane, emitting and receiving waves of thought. Man does not live only on the material bread he eats; he requires something else so as to preserve the natural balance of his being; this is why he must have a knowledge as extensive as possible of the whole universal reality. Cosmosophical research is therefore indispensable for the initiate.

The profane is not under the same obligation. In his self conceit he pursues but selfish and limited aims, that is, working in his special line of business and drawing from it the greatest possible material profit and enjoying but social and worldly pleasures; all the rest is uninteresting to, and has no meaning for, him; he is just like an animal, leading an aimless life and he does not even think that there are stars in the heavens.

The initiate, on the other hand, acquires new knowledge each day. He knows that the Cosmic revelation is inscribed in the great Book of Nature and he also knows that from it he may derive a great number of primary truths, through the mere observation of natural laws. Reading in this Book of Nature is one of the purposes of true initiation.

What are the teachings of this wonderful, living book?

First, a revelation that there exist natural frontiers to our spontaneous activities - for example, eating and drinking are natural and necessary activities; however, all and any excess in such functions tends to break the natural balance and equilibrium in the physical body and to cause illness. There is therefore a natural barrier limiting human activities to that which is strictly indispensable for the maintenance of life. Likewise all overexertion in the intellectual realm is liable to bring cerebral anemia or brain exhaustion.

Second, there is the revelation of occult barriers to moral or psychical activities; we can observe in Nature an automatic equilibrium in the seasons, in the motion of the heavenly bodies, etc., and no human will is capable of opposing it. This automatism has material effects on humankind such as the alternation of day and night, of light and shadow, and so forth; but likewise there are moral manifestations for no man may enjoy permanent good fortune or suffer constant trials; and the same alternation is acting in what refers to joys and sorrows, happiness and misfortune, and man has no right to interfere in other people's fate as it is fixed by occult barriers, independently of his will. This natural law was expressed by ancient wisdom which taught the forgiveness of offences and renunciation of revenge. The ancients knew that man will automatically bring upon himself the punishment of the evil he is doing, and that he must compensate for all his actions. We find this law rightly established in the Holy Scriptures: "He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity; he that killeth with the sword will be killed with the sword."

Therefore we have but to let Nature respond automatically; it sets things in order and re-establishes the harmony of all things without our cooperation, and there are moral and ethical barriers which alone the initiate can perceive and detect, and this is why he knows that it is useless to take revenge upon an enemy.

We also read, however, in the great Book of Nature the revelation of some laws which are beyond our understanding; for example, any sensible man is meeting daily with facts that are hurtful and which seem to run counter to our most rational and respectable moral conceptions: what is the reason of this abominable law of struggle for life which requires that each and every animal species must feed on murder and destruction of lower species? Why this same ferocious struggle between members of the same species? Why do war and competition exist? The very murder of a fly or of a spider seems to be a challenge to Divine Mercy: each murder of a human being is like unto an insufferable scandal.

And yet Nature seems to remain indifferent and to tolerate impassively this struggle and extermination of animals and men. Is it only because we cannot grasp the whole scheme of nature? Is it possible that alone a thorough knowledge of all the elements of the Cosmic and human problem might lead us to the understanding that that which seems to be evil is actually for the best and that the victims are not to be pitied. . . .

The ancients considered death as a liberation, a mere change of condition and they thought that those who died while they were still young were those the gods loved best.

There is, in this, one of the greatest mysteries of Nature: what is the actual nature of physical death? Again, we see in the Book of Nature the revelation of realities and of symbols of the deepest meaning: one of the most wonderful and common mysteries of manifested nature is that of the change of the caterpillar to the pupa and then the transformation from pupa to butterfly. Therefore such changes of condition, or state, of outer appearance are possible and we may admit that in the moment of transition, or death, man may pass through such a modification of state, the corpse being but the shell from which the new form springs out towards another plane of life.

Furthermore, in our study of the Book of Nature we also find the revelation of Powers that are beyond our ken and understanding, for man must realize that he is not the acme of perfection and the ultimate expression of Nature in its way of evolution. He is still heavy, earth-bound, ensnared in his physical form and subject to low desires and vulgar instincts. If there exists a more evolved condition than his own, there must be beings who are more spiritually inclined than he is, less material, who do not need any more a visible, physical vehicle and whose possibilities of intellectual and mental radiation are more powerful and extensive. Such beings must transcend man and his understanding, for there is between them and man a barrier as high as that which exists between a tree and a stone, or an animal and a tree, or a man and an animal. Through reasoning and intuition man may surmise the existence of more evolved entities; he cannot perceive them through direct vision, except on extremely rare occasions, when, to be able to approach them, he must physically die and project his spiritual principle in order to attune with these transcendental beings, on their own plane, and thus receive an osmotic revelation of a higher reality.

Such ecstatic proceedings were taught in ancient time to some neophytes who, when coming back into their physical bodies, were able to state truthfully that "they had seen Gods." (Cf. Apuleius, the Rhetor Aristides, the apostle St. Paul, etc.) The whole scheme of the universe has been built up according to a superhuman scale; men cannot control, create or govern the heavenly bodies or their revolutions; this higher plane is therefore altogether beyond our understanding; we are limited to a perception of its harmony, which no human event can oppose or stop, and we must abide with such humble limitations and realize that we are not the leaders of the Universe; with regard to the higher realities we are hardly more than ants compared to men and according to some writers man is of very little use or interest on the higher planes; no doubt through his self-conceit, his follies and crimes, man has forfeited there his Divine birthright.

We must read the great and wonderful Book of Nature; it will lead us to initiation and wisdom and attune us with the universal harmony of life.

From Saint-Martin to Jacob Boehme

"JEHOVA"

The following short note by Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin, hitherto unpublished and kept in the L. A. collection at the head of the handwritten collection "H. 1773", has to do with the name of the Eternal and its pronunciation, in other words, its use; the great Name.

It concerns the Tetragramme יהוה , IHVH, and the various ways of pronouncing it. This name, which the Eternal himself gave as his own to Moses on Mount Horeb and which means that He is and that He lives, any pronounciation, or rather the only possible pronounciation, because it is the only correct one, was reserved for it from the 2nd century before our era, and thought to have been lost since the fall of the Third Temple in 70. (Some denominations today believe that the Tetragramme must be pronounced and that they know how it should be pronounced.)

This name, then, is referred to by Saint-Martin, for convenience - and apparently for no other reason - as "Jehovah". This form is entirely artificial; the Jews, the ancient Christian Occident and oriental christianity do not know it. It corresponds approximately to the vocalisation by the Masorets of the four ineffable consonants according to the pattern of the symbolic name of God: "Adonai" (Lord) which the rabbis substituted for the unpronouncable name in their reading. The vocalization in question (in which the first letter is usually given a short e instead of a long a) can only draw attention to this confusion; if its oral use was common in the Renaissance, particularly among the protestant authors, it dates back not to 1520, contrary to belief, but to the middle ages.

Saint-Martin, as we shall see, researched well into the various hypotheses concerning his subject and once more shows the attention he paid to the Bible, to the Hebrew language and its virtues.

Jacob Boehme received, researched into and advocated the version "Jehova" (which Swedenborg also favours for his own reasons) and he drew from it many a theosophical consideration. From the beginning to the end, "the holy Name of God", that is Jehovah, reveals the Holy Trinity: Je is the Father; O, the Son; Vah the Holy Spirit.

The note in question probably predates Saint-Martin's meeting of Jacob Boehme. Now, Boehme attached great importance to the sensitive pronounciation of the divine Name in the form that he favoured. But, even though Kirchenberger pointed it out, in 1795, to his correspondent, the Unknown Philosopher, the latter tried to establish that Boehme did not contradict him at all in his firm stand (the times of ceremonial theurgy had passed and the demands of the ritual did not carry on into his private religious devotion): never to use the great Name for ourselves, but to wait until it generates itself, is formed and spoken, of itself, within us. Grammar and exegisis are not to serve magic, for magic is nothing - for the best and for the great concern. Thus, the rôle which the "doctor of doctors", the "most belovèd B." attributes to the substantivating imagination cannot be mistaken for the deification, full of imagery, of the man of desire, no matter whether Saint-Martin, who has such a high opinion of Boehme, wishes or believes it to be.

To me, this note for thought offers an excuse for two subjects of meditation in the full sphere of influence of the author.

First, let us admire the infinity of the treasures contained in the Tetragramme. But, for want of the right to choose, let us hear an observer, who is searching gropingly, and who is perceptive without knowing it: Edmond Jabès. "The identity is the name. Four letters sufficed for God to be God. For man, five were needed, one of which was duplicated. What does this mean? Well, it simply means that language deprives us of identity by giving us one which is only a collection of letters which belong to him alone and which we find dispersed almost everywhere. (...) The absence of dots in the traditional great Jewish writings continues to demand special attention on the part of the reader who must, of himself, recreate the word, which implies more than a profound understanding of the text, true intuition about it. It is at this stage that the reader joins the creator for, as he penetrates the scripture, he gains intuition about the book" ("From the desert to the book", P. Belfond, 1980, p. 18 and p.118). All this must be understood from at least two levels; from which may be found the Kabbala upstream and Saint-Martin himself downstream; and Boehme follows the course.

Yet how can it be concealed - and this is the second theme of meditation - that this great Name, the pronunciation of which, according to Saint-Martin, originates not from some disguised, even partial self knowledge, but from theosophy in its strictest sense; that, when Christ came, he made the pronunciation of this great Name more central or more internal than under the ancient law? In fact, the Tetragramme expressed the quaternary explosion, the sign of all life; Jesus Christ, by bringing down from above the Shin of the Hebrews, or our letter s, joined the holy ternary itself to the quaternary name, of which three is the principle.

The great Name, the Name of God, is thus from now on, according to Saint-Martin, the perfected Tetragramme: it is the name of Jesus. Once more, Saint-Martin joins the tradition of Christian Mystagogy: Saint Paul and the first Judeo-christianity, the Christian Kabbala and the mysticism of the Eastern Church. (Without prejudice to similar problems, in this case, relative to the pronunciation and even to the spelling of the name of Jesus: יהושע or ישוה .)

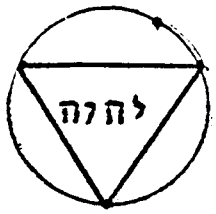
NAMES OF GOD, JEHOVAH

by THE UNKNOWN PHILOSOPHER



Je ho va, or the letters Ie-Ho-Va-H, is the name which befits only God, because it expresses not only attributes, but his being and his substance.

+ + +

It is made up of four Hebrew letters, the first of which, reading from right to left, is (י) Jod, (ה) He, (ו) Vau, (ה) He.

+ + +

The Greeks called it the Tetragrammaton (Τετραγράμματον), which means "name with four letters", nomen quatuor litterarum.

+ + +

It is not commonly known how this ineffable and mysterious name, which comes from the word (הָיָה) haïah, and which means The one who is, should be pronounced.

- Sanchoniaton writes Jevo;
- Diodorus of Sicily, Macrobe, Clement of Alexandria, Saint Jerome and Origen pronounce it Jao;
- Saint Epiphany, Theodoret and the Samaritans, Javé;
- Louis Capel, Javo;
- Drusius, Javéh;
- Mercerus, Jehevah;
- Nottinger, Jehva;
- others write Jehvah, Javu, Jaho;
- the Latins, Jovis;
- the Greeks, Zeus.

The true pronunciation of this incommunicable proper name of the Lord has always been known by few persons.

The divine laws of the Jews, contained in the Scriptures, emphatically forbid it to be pronounced at the wrong time, and institute the death penalty against those who use it in vain.

The chief Priest pronounced it in the Temple once a year, in his invocation on the day of atonement. He was then surrounded by a small number of chosen disciples who could hear it pronounced in the correct way, without the people hearing it; noise was even made on purpose.

+ + +

The Jews were convinced of the power of these sacred letters, and that, when spoken with their basic pronunciation, they could bring about the greatest things.

+ + +

This name of the essence of Being is from the Original Revelation, God used it to make himself known to his chosen 'Minors'.

God did not by any means reveal it to everyone. I appeared, he said (in Exodus VI,3) unto Abraham, unto Isaac by the name of God Schaddai (שדי), Almighty, sufficient unto himself, but by my name Jehovah (יהוה), The one who is, was I not known to them.

The seventy, out of respect for this holy name, avoided writing it in their translation, and they expressed it with the Greek word Kirios, Lord; in this respect they were copied by our translators. Jews read the name Adonai in the passages where they find Jehovah.

N A M E S O F G O D

All these precautions did not prevent laymen from trying to abuse it. Origen (Adversus Celsum) tells us that the pagans of his time used it in some of their exorcisms; Clement of Alexandria (Stromat. 5) reports that initiated Egyptians, who were able to enter the temple of the Sun, carried on them the name of Javu.

Trallien brings magic verses with the name Jas, or Jaath.

In the Golden Verses of Pythagoras, we have an oath to The one who has the four letters (Tetragrammaton).

The name of God Jehovah contains all things. Anyone who utters it shakes the heavens and the earth. This name has a sovereign authority, its power rules the universe. He who knows all the mysteries of this divine name knows all the ways of divine justice and providence.

The (י) Jod signifies the essence par excellence which must exist because of its nature. The other three letters, (ה ו ה) Ho, Va, Ho, being joined to the Jod, denote the essential Being, accompanied by its three powers and faculties. So that this name is the only one which perfectly expresses the Divinity.

The other names only express attributes:

(אל) El, denotes the Source of light, which lights up with its rays; (אלהים), Elohim, the plural of (אלה) Elah, which the Arabs and the Mohammedans pronounce Allah in their invocations, expresses the union or the unity of the three divine faculties. Even though it is always used in the plural in the Scripture, when it is referring to God, it is constructed in the singular, that is that the verb or pronoun refering to it is in the singular, as if one were saying: Dii fecit coelum et terram (The gods has made heaven and earth). On the other hand, when false gods are referred to, the word Elohim is used with the plural.

(שדי) Schaddai means Almighty, He who is sufficient unto himself.

(אדני), Adonai, plural of Adoni, is only used in the plural when speaking of God. It means God who judges, who rules.

The name of Jehovah is therefore the only one which expresses completely the basic existence, the force, the power and the action of the Divinity; the thought, the will, the act, and the existence which is the basis of these faculties.

Dear Sar Saccas,

I must write to you and let you know how estatic I am to receive Liber 31 and the lectures by Dr. Julia Seton. A profound full circle is making itself apparent.

My journey along the path began many years ago -- long before joining or) -- it began with the personal instruction by a woman who was in her nineties at the time. She had not taught for more than 20 years but to my inquiries she answered and said that she would come out of "retirement" to teach me.

Her name was Dr. Juno Jordan, the daughter of Julia Seton. It is an honor to be the last student of her chain.

The further I go along this path seeking the light the more I am taught to accept the long and patient workings of that light. Are we not indeed all guided by the Grand Architect of the Universe to fulfill His plans.

Bound in Service, I am your humble servant.

EDITOR'S NOTE

Dear Fellow Student:

Into your hands has been placed four Keys enabling you to enter chambers of consciousness in preparation for the "Complete Realization of our Identity with the Life of God here and now," which is that high estate wherein we, with utter naturalness, come under complete dominion of the Law of Abundance and Supply.

. . . . . .

The Student who gains most from these lessons is the one taking up a second lesson ONLY after the first has been mastered. To "glance over" them superficially is wrong. It does a wrong to yourself and to your teacher. The student, who, "in the silence" prepares his or her mind for the reception of these great lessons, will find one day such release and exaltation that they may well wonder why all the world does not know these truths of incalculable value.

Let us now enter

THE SILENCE

Dr. Seton is speaking.

"Let go.
"Rest.
"Have a sense of Great Stillness.
"Forget your likes and dislikes. Utterly forget the world about you.
"Just - BE STILL."

We now take up the

FIFTH VICTORY KEY
or the
COMPLETE REALIZATION OF OUR IDENTITY
WITH THE LIFE OF GOD HERE AND NOW

The unlocking of any doors offering resistance or holding us back from a full realization of the operation of the Law of Abundance and Supply is so simple that the least of the earth's children may confidently use these Keys with absolute assurance of success.

Now, take your Key.
First, RECOGNIZE the existence of the Abundance of Supply.
Second, CHARGE your whole mind with it.
Third, HOLD it so that your atoms CREATE in this belief.
Fourth, POISE your life in this current until you become mentally opulent.
Fifth, ABIDE in this consciousness.

When we want wealth we see to it that our atoms are charged with the thoughts of wealth.

Wanting Abundance and Supply, we create thoughts of Abundance and Supply.

Wanting money, we hold thought fast to the idea of the Universal Supply of Wealth until every atom of our being is made over into the image of the God of Abundance whom we worship and "in whom we live and move and have our being."

We will not divide our forces. To charge our atoms with thoughts of money today and poverty tomorrow, means that both will manifest for us in the degree with which we have vitalized them.

We are to constantly look with the all-seeing eye of our soul into the boundless ocean of Infinite Supply, and then with faith, hope and courage cast ourselves upon it, letting the fullness of absolute Abundance permeate every atom of our being.

When we place ourselves as a normal scientific link between the Universal Supply and our finite lack, plenty of whatever we want will come from out of the Infinite and group itself around us, obeying our conscious call.

No matter how barren our lives may appear today, they may be made glorious tomorrow. The very fullness of existence encompasses us. We only need to know how to reach out and grasp it. Our point of contact with the Universal Substance is our immortal birthright, and it comes directly through the channels of our own consciousness. No one can take it from us. Abundance and Supply, and everything the human heart can hope for is held for our keeping. To know this is to have grasped the secret of securing it.

When we know these things past all doubting, know them with every breath we breathe -- not only in the trifling things in our lives, but also in that which we conceive to be the greatest, it will be found in this Infinite Substance. We will find it -- and our call will bring it out from the Absolute to our expression of it.

This knowledge will give a new hope, and around us will come peace, power and plenty. Union first, then loving supplication, and realization must follow.

Now, at this point, let me make one thing clear: The base of the Law of Abundance and Supply lies in a condition of being in which one's own life becomes ONE with what it desires, - or attraction.

When one continues in this condition, he naturally accumulates. This is the logical result of a continuous ONENESS with what one desires.

There are two stages of the Law of Attraction and Accumulation. One is under the laws operating on the plane of competition. The other is under the laws operating on the plane of

D I V I N E T R A N S F E R E N C E

The power to attract and accumulate is an immortal birthright. We should come into life correctly poised between them -- but few of us do. We come into this life in an imperfect union of these qualities because we are born into families which represent the line of thought with which we have connected ourselves in our previous lives. It is of supreme importance to each one of us that we understand the truth, and to so arrange our lives here and now, as to set new causes into action and thus make both of these forces manifest for us in equality and power.

There are so many lives that never seem to get anything they want. Everything passes them and goes to some more important individual. They are always losing out. For them life seems a failure, while they are always assisting others to success. Such persons have neither attraction nor accumulation - are outside these laws.

Then there is another class. We know many persons in whom the power of attraction and possession is spasmodic. They seem to get the things they desire, but lose them again. They lose their business. They lose their positions. They lose their friends. They lose their money. Now and again they succeed. But more often they lose. You meet them today with money, friends, peace, power and plenty. Again and they are "down on their luck."

Then we have the other type. These persons get what they go after. Their lives are particularly free from loss or lack. Negative and depolarized people always refer to them as "lucky". Their whole lives express the truth of the Bible truth, "To him that hath shall be given," (and he shall have an abundance), "but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath."

It in on the plane of competition that the majority of mankind are working out their life experience. They are under the "get" and "take" laws. It is still an "eye for an eye" although the great Teacher of the Law of Divine Transference brought us the message of the dawn of a new day of non-resistance and cessation of effort. It was the Great Master also who said: "If a man smite thee on one cheek, turn to him the other also; and if he ask you for your coat, give him also your cloak."

Mankind has to work with things on this objective plane in order to live. God gave us a brain with which to direct our affairs. At the same time he gave us a soul through which to receive revelations, so that we might rise superior to the condition into which we were born.

Everything comes to us from the Infinite. The very atmosphere in which we live is cosmic intelligence from which we can attract supply.

The cosmic energy which makes for Abundance of Supply, exists always, and is capable of being attracted into our environment by special development. We attract it by filling our minds with thoughts of it. Then it is ours to ABIDE in a continual universal recognition of it.

What happens when we abide in a continual atmosphere of union with these things? Simply this: every physical cell in our body takes on the consciousness of Abundance of Supply. We THINK it. We FEEL it. We RADIATE it. It breathes from our very presence and we become so vital and so magnetic with this cosmic energy that we become like a walking magnet and attract to us the things we desire. As long as we remain magnetized with this consciousness of union we have complete possession of the Law of Abundance and Supply.

If we have a business, it will increase along its line of connection. Do we want a position? We are so full of the knowledge of union with what we desire and the Abundance of Supply that when we ask for it, we get it, and half a dozen other things come to us because of the attracting energy that has been built into our very atmosphere.

Externals - whether environment or supply, are only the expression of our thoughts. The external world is ever the slave of the inner world of thought.

Conscious creation through the power of thought builds us into union with the high spiritual laws, and the higher laws are the POSITIVE laws, and are always the master of the negative condition.

Our business, our position, soon comes to be what we want it to be. We build for ourselves far above the plane where it can be touched by change.

We now are free from the law of lack, loss or fear, and are working with new laws and reaping the beneficent harvest of our new understanding.

The one true way to secure Abundance and Supply is by the interior unfoldment, the process of interior Divine union. We must leave forever the plane of "get" and "take" and "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." Two thousand years ago Jesus the Great Teacher brought us the message of non-resistance and cessation of effort.

Under the higher law of transference, lines never become mixed. Everything is in its right place. Everything finds its own. It comes to us on a plane of consciousness so high that we have undisputed possession of it forever.

And it can be instantaneous. We need not wait long. The Divine Union may be yours in this very moment as you read and absorb these words.

At first you become as a magnet, attracting all things to you. But soon every sense of separatness passes away and you are really IT. We pass from "becoming" into "being."

We are poised forever in the full expression of the plane of Divine Abundance and Supply.

Beloved: Let no obstruction or "problem" slow your progress. Make a definite PLAN today to reach your dream of fulfillment. SEE your plan in all its finished detail. VISUALIZE it in COMPLETED OPERATION. WRITE it all down - then study for improvement. Then - KNOW it shall be unto you even as you THINK.

(CONCLUSION)

Let us be STILL.

In the white light of our Inner Self we now find union with God. We are face to face with that Great Light which lights every man that cometh into the world. Our light becomes brighter, warmer, whiter, all in all.

So be it.

EDITOR'S FINAL NOTE

The application of these great lessons lies with you. The truths herein enunciated by Dr. Seton are timeless and universal. A hurried superficial reading renders these studies worthless.* May they to you, dear Student, become as "pearls of great price."

Read and reread each lesson until the text is well understood. Proceed to a self-examination. Do not send your answers in. Preserve them for personal reference.

Because the topic fits right in with the theme set by the series FIVE VICTORY KEYS, of which the last one has been given above, we bring at this time the following piece of Architecture given at Lodge Star of the East by Sister Miriam, S.I..

Dear Brothers & Sisters:

I will entitle this piece of Architecture:
HOW TO INCREASE YOUR MIND POWER
and hope you will benefit from the ideas. In the Libers we are being given many wonderful insights about the creative use of the mind and in this talk I hope to reinforce what has been given so far.

Scientists think we use only ten percent of our mental potential. If this is true, did Einstein, Beehoven and Edison make their phenomenal contributions using only the same 10 percent we use -- or did they instinctively know how to use more of their mental abilities?

Just what is our "mind" anyway and how does it work? Even the difference between "brain" and "mind" is a subject of argument! As generally understood -- and to put it in simplest terms -- our brain is the equivalent of a living computer --- only far more sophisticated than any man will ever invent. The brain contains over 20 billion neurons, with each one of them functioning to absorb and store infinite amounts of information --- and one of its wonders is that it functions without a conscious effort on our part!

The 'mind' on the other hand, as it seems to be understood in the scientific community, is that conscious part of our being that evaluates each bit of information we see, hear, feel, taste and smell, and makes judgements about its value, and decisions regarding its use.

Progressing one step further --- there is more to our mind than just the consciousness of which we are aware. It is generally agreed that the mind operates on two levels: the conscious and the subconscious, -- with the conscious, reasoning mind responsible for only 10 percent of our mental activity.

It is the function of the conscious mind to judge information, make decisions, set goals, etc. The subconscious mind is responsible only for carrying out the commands of the conscious mind. The subconscious mind is not able to judge or decide -- Only to create -- and WHAT it creates is based on the information fed to it by the conscious mind.

We all make use of subconscious mind power every day, BUT FEW PEOPLE ARE AWARE OF IT! Let me give you a few examples:

Have you ever spent hours wrestling with a problem and no matter how hard you tried to find the solution nothing seemed to work? By the end of the day you dropped into bed in a state of exhaustion, or perhaps you just gave up on the problem altogether, deciding the situation was hopeless. Then , upon awakening in the morning, or in the middle of your favourite television programme, the solution suddenly popped into your conscious mind -- often something so obvious you wondered why on earth you never saw it before?

Have you ever worked and planned and sacrificed in order to achieve a goal, but that goal was always just out of reach? Finally, you gave up, abandoned it altogether and moved on to do something else. Then out of the blue, your goal or the means to achieve it suddenly materialized with no effort at all on your part?

What happened in these instances? When you slept, watched television, or "gave up" on your goal you turned your conscious thoughts to something else. Then, your subconscious was finally able to do what it does best -- create the results you asked for on a conscious level.

Why did it take so long? Because all that time, your conscious mind was in the way -- fussing and fuming, trying this and that, worrying about the apparent lack of a solution (negative imput). When you turned your attention to other things, your conscious mind no longer blocked the path to your subconscious solution.

A more basic example of desired results brought by your subconscious mind is in the area of physical skills -- typing, driving and dancing. At first you had to make a concerted conscious effort to direct each physical movement. On a conscious level you stated your goal: to learn a skill. Your subconscious mind accepted that goal as a result it would eventually manifest in your life, and with each practice period (positive reinforcement) that goal was strengthened. In a short time, that physical activity became second nature. (And herein you can also see how habits, character traits, etc. are formed and operate.)

Does it sound easy? Like most new skills it requires practice to achieve positive results. The subconscious mind is programmed throughout our lifetimes and responds according to the information our conscious minds have fed into it. Thus, we often set up our own stumbling blocks with regard to our health, happiness and well-being.

Consider the programming you received as a child and how it manifests on a physical level today. I remember my grandmother always telling me, "Bundle up. You catch cold very easily." As I got older I recognized a number of those childhood "colds" for what they really were -- hay fever -- but in the meantime I probably set a new world record for recurrences of colds, flu and related respiratory illnesses. Once I recognized the programming that had been at work in this area of my life I realized I didn't have to have a cold all the time and I'm pleased to note that I haven't had more than two minor cases of sniffles in the last twenty years! Could I suggest that in performing the introspection exercise given in Liber One you take a look at yourself, your habits, your goals, the way you are, and so on - and see if you can discover WHY you are what you are, maybe even why you are who you are - and why you THINK the way you do. You can then set about changing any patterns you don't like by consciously planting the appropriate seed.

Learning to use our subconscious mental abilities is a double-edged sword, however. In order to better use this potential we must acknowledge that we do have control over the results in our life. Once we acknowledge that we do have this control, we must also accept the responsibility for the way our life and health are going -- whether it's positive or negative. We can't continue to blame our lack of a Ph.D. on a high schol teacher who implied that we were stupid. And that's the hard part: accepting that responsibility.

Another and often equally difficult, block to overcome is accepting our good fortune. For instance: many of us have been 'programmed' to believe that "If you work hard you'll get ahead." Thus, we often have trouble accepting our good fortune because we feel we did'nt "work hard" enough to deserve it. So it helps to begin practicing the acceptance of your good fortune at a very basic level. For example, when someone says, "That's a lovely dress you're wearing," how often do you respond, "What, this old rag?" or "I got it on sale for $9.95." ?

Remember, that person didn't ask you how long you had the dress or how much it cost. She simply commented that it was attractive on you! So, accept your good -- the compliment -- and simply say, "Thank you!" This may seem an insignificant way to begin, but you must learn to walk before you can run.

Let's look at a more extreme example to demonstrate the point. Have you ever wished for $1 million? Who hasn't? The catch is when you're earning $4.00 an hour and have much more month than money, it's hard to conceive of an amount as vast as $1 million. It then follows that if you can't conceive of it, you can't believe that it can happen to you, therefore it won't. Again, the same theory applies to your physical health. If you grew up believing you were "sickly" it's hard to accept a major cure until you have learned to accept smaller ones first.

Programming your subconscious mind is very much like planting a garden. You purchase the seeds for the flowers you want (setting goals on a conscious level.) Then you spread the seeds in the yard where you want the results - flowers, to grow. You cover them with soil (letting the goal be absorbed on a subconscious level) then you water and fertilize your garden (positive reinforcement). Even though you can't see what's happening underground, you trust the laws of nature to bring forth the flowers (getting your conscious doubts out of the way) and at the perfect time your flowers grow and bloom (realization of your goals).

When you allow your thoughts to dwell on negative aspects or doubt ("Will this really work?") it has the same effect as going to your garden every day and digging up the seeds to see if they were growing yet. Nothing would result except maybe weeds (old negative thought patterns and their attendant results). That's why it's so important to programme your subconscious clearly and positively.

May I deviate slightly and ask you whether you have ever considered how prayer works and exactly how prayers are answered? Is it that some external agent influences the result? Or is it that the one who prays brings about their own results through subconscious response? I do not propose an answer, I simply ask the question.

The next time a burst of negativity tries to sneak up on you, stop and ask yourself "Is this really what I want?" Remember: Your subconscious mind does not have the ability to say, "Surely you jest!" It can only create according to your conscious instructions.

Saint-Martin and the Unknown Superiors

We saw that Saint-Martin, after moving away from the practices of the Elus-Cohen and of Freemasonry, spent the rest of his life spreading the Martinist Doctrine in a modified form, purely spiritual and speculative and devoid of theurgic or magical practices.

Saint-Martin acquired numerous followers in many countries. These followers, secretly known as "Supérieurs Inconnus", were grouped in a very loosely knit organization called the "Society of Initiates", later to become known as the Society of Saint-Martin. In fact, this Society was not created by Saint-Martin but simply animated by him on the basis of an older secret society known as the Order of Unknown Philosophers. We shall come back to this point when studying the origins of Martinism.

The Society of Initiates of Saint-Martin was based on INITIATION. This was nearly always a personal and private ritualistic transmission of initmate character, confering the quality of "Unknown Superior" or S. I. .

We know from records and from signs used after his signature that Saint-Martin was a Réau-Croix of the Elus-Cohen. We also know from a letter from Joseph Pont, successor of Willermoz, to J. F. Mayer, senator from Metz, a letter dated from the year 1829, that Saint-Martin had transmitted a high degree of the Elus-Cohen to his friend Gilbert. We note, furthermore, that before he left for Haiti in the West Indies, Martinez had designated Bacon de la Chevalerie as his successor at the Head of the Elus-Cohen of France and five "SS.II." to assist him: Saint-Martin, Willermoz, de Serre, Duroy d'Hauterive and de Lusignan. This information comes from Prince Christian of Hesse, Knight Beneficient of the Holy City (C.B.C.S.) and member of the "Society of Saint-Martin" of Strasbourg. It is obvious, therefore, that Saint-Martin was entitled to transmit the Elus-Cohen degrees. We doubt, however, that the "S.I." grade transmitted by Saint-Martin within the "Société des Initiés" was the S. I. grade he had held in the Elus-Cohen and which corresponded probably to the rank of "Souverain Juge", an administrative degree. The Initiation transmitted by Saint-Martin constituted nevertheless a link with the Elus-Cohen, owing to his position in this Order. It is doubtful whether we shall ever know exactly how much the Elu-Cohen influence penetrated the Rite of Saint-Martin's Initiation. It would seem reasonable to accept the principle that the "essence" of the Initiation, that which is "passed on" at the most intimate moment of the ceremony, comes directly from the Order of Unknown Philosophers, and that it has been "clothed" with a ritual inspired partly from the Rites of the Elus-Cohen. The Society of Unknown Philosophers is known to have existed at least 75 years before the Freemasonic Grand Lodge of England. The personal transmission owes nothing to Freemasonry.

Saint-Martin died in 1803 leaving many disciples in several European countries. After his death, his disciples carry on with the transmission of the Initiation and with the diffusion of the doctrine of the Unknown Philosopher. They are particularly active in France, in Germany, in Denmark and in Russia. In 1821, Initiations from person-to-person are known to take place. From that year to the 1880's, groups of Initiators carry the transmission everywhere and particularly in Italy and in Germany.

Papus and the Ordre Martiniste

After the death of Saint-Martin, in 1803, the S. I. Initiation continued to be transmitted from person to person within the framework of a very loosely knit organization. During the 19th century, the occult teaching of Martinez Pasquales had therefore been transmitted:

a) In the bosom of Qabalistic Areopagoi composed each of 9 Elus Cohen who refused to conform with the decision to close the Order and remit the archives to the Philalethes of Savalette de Lange.

b) By some Freemasons of the Scottish Rectified Rite who had received the secret instructions from Willermoz and from the Knights Beneficient of the Holy City.

c) By the SS.II. of Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin.

In this last category, let us now follow two distinct lines of succession: Saint-Martin had initiated, among others, the Abbé de Lanoüe and Chaptal, Comte de Chanteloup. The first one then initiated J. A. Hennequin who in turn initiated Henri de la Touche, who initiated A. Desbarolles, Comte d'Hautercourt who initiated Amélie de Boisse-Mortemart. This Sister initiated P. Augustin Chaboseau. Whilst we are here, it is interesting to note that it is the Abbé de Lanoüe who had initiated André Chénier, the French poet who was to die by the guillotine during the French Revolution. Chaptel, Comte de Chanteloup, had initiated a Brother whose identity has never been discovered but who initiated in his turn Henri Delaage. When on his death-bed, Henri Delaage initiated Dr. Gérard Encausse, better known as Papus. This was in 1880.

In those days, Dr. Encausse, Augustin Chaboseau and several other young intellectuals were in the habit of lunching together whilst discussing matters of interest. It was thus that Papus and Chaboseau discovered that they had both received the S. I. Initiation. This coincidence, Papus took as a sign of Heaven and he began the work of creating an organization that would gather in its fold all those who had received the "mysterious legacy" and which would serve as a center of study of the Martinist Doctrine and as a means to propagate the movement. In 1884 was drafted the constitution of this organization which was given the name of "Ordre Martiniste" or MARTINIST ORDER. In 1890, it was decided to place the Order under a Supreme Council of 12 members with Papus as President and Grand-Master. The 12 original members of the first Supreme Council were:

Papus; Augustin Chaboseau; Stanislas de Guaïta; Chamuel; Sédir, (Yvon Leloup); Paul Adam; Maurice Barrès; Jules Lejay; Montière; Charles Barlet; Jacques Burget and Joséphin Péladan. Very soon two of these resigned: Barrès and Péladen, and were replaced by Dr. Marc Haven (Lalande) and Victor-Emile Michelet.

In 1893, the Martinists of Lyons were handed the archives and records of Willermoz and of the Cohen Temple of Lyons which the widow of J. Pont, successor of Willermoz, had left to Brother Cavarnier.

It would appear that when Papus created the Martinist Order, there were still in existence, unknown to him, direct representatives of the Elus-Cohen and of the Early Martinists, in Lyons and outside France. Names given in this respect are those of the Brothers Bergeron and Bréban-Salomon in Lyons; of Karl Michelson in Denmark and also of Dr. Edward Blitz in the U. S. A.. This last one contacted Papus and became Head of the Martinist Order in the U. S. A.. Dr. Blitz was associated with Freemasonry and he tried to give a Masonic outlook to the Ordre Martiniste and, in this matter, he had followers in France: Dr. Fugairon and Charles Détré (better known as Teder). Dr. Blitz unfortunately went too far in his interference with the spirit of the Martinist Order and his charter was recalled. He was replaced by Mrs. Margaret B. Peeke who became "Inspectrice Générale" for the U. S. A.. She died in 1908.

Dear Companions:

This address is on the subject of "giving advice" -- especially "unsought advice". Have you ever given unsought advice? Have you ever received unsought advice? Yes you have! and I might ask "Who has not?" This giving and receiving of unsought advice has caused untold misunderstanding and unhappiness -- and yet the motives have almost always been good and for the purpose of helping another in some way. Let us examine this paradox together.

How can someone stand silently by and see another, possibly innocently or ignorantly, walk into a situation that is likely to produce unhappiness or distress in the life of that person, if unchecked by proper warning through advice, even though it may not be sought? How far are we justified in the attitude of "minding our own business"?

How may we become helpful with constructive suggestions and yet not offend or antagonize another when we think we have something valuable to say? These may sound like simple questions to which simple answers might be expected, but they really involve the most delicate fabric of our human relations, ranging from the cradle to the grave, in every phase of human experience and environment.

You have undoubtedly found yourself in the position of seeing someone for whom you cared a great deal, doing or planning something that you, from your own experience, well knew would produce only a negative or unfortunate result. Yet, at the same time, you felt to advise him would awaken antagonism and produce or create an unfavourable situation. So, while feeling morally certain that it was your duty to do something about it, or "say a word in time", under the circumstances, the inner conflict as to whether you even had the right to say anything, especially when your advice had not been sought, confronted you. But in spite of everything , you said your bit and experienced a sense of relief. Relief from what? Relief because you felt your advice would be followed? and the pain or unpleasantness you had experienced under similar circumstances in the past would be avoided by the person(s)? -- Or was it relief because you had discharged what you regarded as a duty? If the first, your motive was sincere. If the second, "self" was involved.

Have you ever given some advice and then thought: "I've given my advice and if those concerned wish to follow it, all right, and if not, well -- I've done my part." ? My friends, advice given in this state of mind is really valueless, because the element of true spiritual understanding is completely absent.

Giving advice is a serious responsibility and one not to be undertaken or assumed lightly, and that is just where much of the misunderstanding arises. Unfortunately, however, the great number of those who, on all occasions, rush forward with advice vigorously proffered, are the least qualified to give it. Then trouble starts.

Advice should be given only when one is capable of giving it from positive personal knowledge, and then very carefully. Think! Every time an individual comes to you and says "I'd like your advice" he is asking you to share a responsibility with him. If you have unloaded your advice without being asked for it, you have assumed a share of responsibility with the one to whom you have given it.

When a person asks you directly and outrightly for advice, it is a tacit admission that he needs help and is showing his trust and confidence in you that you can render such help. Some individuals take the attitude that they will not advise anyone, no matter what the circumstances. They will offer suggestions and express "opinions" but leave the decision to the individual seeking the advice. Well, decisions should be left to the enquirer for decisions are personal matters which we are in mortal life to learn to make. No decision made for us by another is of our own volition.

People who take the attitude that they will not give advice, mistakenly believe, or profess to believe, that because they did not use the words "You ought (or ought not) to do this or that," they have escaped responsibility; or that what they "suggested" was not really giving advice. Well my friends, that is all advice ever is: suggestion, for real advice leaves the decision to the one to whom it is given and gives him the inalienable right to accept it and act on it or not, as he chooses. Too many people force their advice upon their friends and then exhibit marked displeasure if it is not taken. That would not be accepting the advice, it would simply be obeying the advisor and there is a vast difference.

But what is "giving advice?" It is imparting information, whether by counsel or suggestion. Real advice is not requesting or demanding that the person do thus or so, but suggesting and counselling him, and the most powerful advice in the world is personal example and encouragement.

The mere fact that someone turns to us for guidance or advice is an indication that he is, in some way, bewildered. Do we have the right to turn a deaf ear when asked for help? It matters not if we may think the problem absurd, simple or self-caused; the fact remains -- someone has turned to us for help and something has to be done. Evasion is not the answer. "Then, what is" you ask?

First of all let us consider advice under two separate groupings, namely: (a) Sought advice; and, (b) Unsought or unsolicited advice.

Some people may think that sought and unsought advice is the same but it is not. Sought or solicited advice is where or when an individual approaches someone and asks for help and advice. This indicates confidence and a faith in the person approached the person approached has been given a spiritual responsibility they cannot escape. We may not wish the particular responsibility and we may resent its being imposed upon us. But we cannot escape the responsibility of living and this is part of it.

It is true we cannot live another's life anymore than we can eat food for another or breathe for him -- but let us not forget that when someone is in low spirits, confused or bewildered and in need of good, wholesome advice -- to withhold it is uncharitable.

But the manner of giving advice makes all the difference in the world. Many people simply need a sympathetic or sound-minded person with whom they can talk things over; someone willing to be attentive and allow the speaker to think out aloud without continuous and frustrating interruptions. Frequently, in just talking about the problem to someone else, the troubled one already realises what he should do -- before the listener can even say a word; just "talking it out" has helped him to actually "see" and understand his own problem. It is often only necessary to OBJECTIFY one's problem in order to understand and see through it.

I said earlier that we could not evade the responsibility of giving advice, once it is asked of us, if we are capable and qualified to do so. Maybe you have wondered what is meant by that. Well, life is a matter of sharing, whether you want to accept that truth or not. It actually seems to be cosmic law. We ALL share the elements of life: the air we breathe, the light of the sun, the earth upon which we walk ..... everything upon which life subsists is shared by all mankind alike. This same analogy has it correspondences on the mental and spiritual planes as well. Just as the air you just expelled from your lungs may now be in some other person's --- so too your thoughts are in the mind of and are affecting those about you (any of whom you may not ever know). This, of course, is entirely unconscious on your part, but is occuring just the same. For this you cannot be held intentionally responsible because you have not consciously and with purpose directed your thoughts towards anybody. But when an individual approaches you personally for advice or help, a spiritual chain or bond is established that must not be swept aside with the inane remark "I never give advice."

So then, what should one do, especially if the advice sought is on a subject that one knows nothing about? Well, why is it that one ever seeks advice of another? Is it not because we have somehow lost our way and do not know the right thing to do?

The best advice we can ever give another is to encourage him to see his problem from the angle of "What is the right thing to do?" If one's purpose is to adhere to the constructive way or principle, the problem will solve itself as soon as it is approached from that angle.

The trouble, almost always, is what we want and what is right, are not always in agreement, and that is where the inner conflict sets in. That is why, in giving advice to another, our own motives must be clean and fine, and not arise from a mere desire to appear important, all-wise and ubiquitous, but from a real and deep-seated desire to be of silent, unostentatious, solid help. Otherwise, we assume a personal karma that cannot be escaped and cannot be lightly compensated for and balanced.

When being asked for advice, therefore, your first endeavor is to permit the seeker to speak fully without interruption, and then when he has completed the giving of his confidence, ask a few leading questions, designed to steer the seeker to resolution, such as:

What purpose do you wish to accomplish?
Do you believe you have the right attitude?
What would you like to do about it?
What are you willing to do about it?
How do you propose to do it?

In other words, try to guide the seeker's thought processes into constructive channels, for when we are upset and bewildered, we have simply strayed away from clear thinking, especially if the problem is of an emotional nature for then we have a tug from the heart to deal with as well. So -- ask leading questions which causes the seeker to think constructively. By stimulating him to look his problem squarely in the face and helping him to think through it, the seeker will come to his own conclusion, which produces the most lasting and permanent help - self help - and you in the meantime will have done your part and performed a great service

If you merely give advice without the other being able to benefit from the constructive principle of personal realization and conviction, you simply encourage him to become a "leaner." Do you see the difference?

Now the problem of giving unsought advice is far more complicated, for it involves not only the stimulation of constructive thinking but the fact that the individual is unaware that he needs help. When we are asked for advice our path is clear and the responsibility obvious, but when advice is unsought yet obviously needed -- how can we help? Do we have the "right to interfere?" Well, it all depends upon the issue at stake, whether the individual is breaking a principle through ignorance, viciousness, carelessness, indifference or a thousand other negative motives.

If we see an individual begin to fall, we instinctively reach out to help and support him. It never dawns upon us then that it is not our business whether he stands or falls. In fact, we feel that if he had fallen and broken any part of his body because of our failure to reach out a hand to break the fall, that we would be partly responsible for his fracture. Yet, when that same analogy is carried into the mental and spiritual planes our attitude changes. Why is that?

It is because man's sense of responsibility is a spiritual faculty which is not yet fully developed but which he is gradually developing as he progresses on the scale of evolution. "Am I my brother's keeper?" is beginning to take a new meaning in the world.

Time was, when man was so irresponsive to responsibility that he could have witnessed another's fall with total indiference, and not lifted a finger to have prevented the acident.

Man first misuses a faculty before he learns to use it and the impulse and desire to give unsolicited advice more frequently causes trouble and offense rather than help -- mainly because the recipient of the advice is not ready to receive it (not having sought it), also too, because those who rush in with unsought advice are the least qualified to give it, the least capable of giving it, and the least aware of how to give it.

Ignorance is never better seen at its worse, than in the indiscriminate giving of unsought and unsolicited advice by ubiquitous individuals who have not yet made a success of their own lives, in the direction of the advice they so vigorously give.

Yet, just as we may be saved from an accident by another grasping our arm and pulling us to safety, so may we also be saved from mental and spiritual danger by the grasp of a friendly hand extended with the sincere purpose of helping us and not meddling with us. Here is the great diference. When our motive is right there is spiritual understanding which involves the capacity and ability to be inspired with the correct approach for the individual need.

ANY ONE WHO BELIEVES HE CAN GIVE UNSOLICITED ADVICE WITHOUT FIRST ASKING FOR SPIRITUAL GUIDANCE IS CARRIED AWAY BY EGOTISM AND LACKS THE PRIME SPIRITUAL ESSENTIAL — UNDERSTANDING — AND IS THEREFORE MERELY INTERFERING IN THE LIFE OF ANOTHER.

Sometimes it is necessary for a given person to go through specific experiences, no matter how distressing, in order to learn particular lessons, and if this is the case, all the advice in the world will be of no avail, because only the experience itself will teach the required lesson.

All that any one can ever hope to accomplish in giving another advice is to direct the recipient's thought and attention to constructive attitudes of outlook and purpose, knowing that if this is accomplished the final results are bound to be constructive too.

The giving of unsolicited advice is a duty that cannot be ignored -- yet it is one of the most difficult tasks. It is a duty which must be undertaken with great care and prayerful thought. We are all prone to indulge in this matter and do so without even realizing it -- hardly a day passes that we do not witness our dereliction in this important issue. We cause unhappiness, distress and the breaking up of otherwise long and seemingly fine friendships. It is simply that we do not stop to think and WE RUSH IN where it is said that even angels fear to tread.

None of us resent being saved from a physical fall. In fact we are grateful to our benefactor. But the moment that act is translated into terms of the mental and spiritual plane -- we set up a resistance and resent the intended help, unless we have asked for it ourselves. Again: "Why is this" you ask. Because we do not believe we are in need of any advice and are well able to take care of our own personal affairs. We resent any intrusion and feel quite strongly that the advice-dispenser should very well mind his own business (and we even hope he has some business to mind). In other words, our consciousness is not aware of any amiss in our life and we feel everything we are doing is quite justifiable and right -- no matter how wrong anyone else may think it to be. Our mind is therefore completely closed to any suggestion and any suggestion is viewed as "interference".

Here is a very common occurence: Someone rises in life to so-called success and it "turns their head," so that they become impossible to deal with. You can't tell them anything because they know everything there is to be known -- and yet, right and left they are offending old friends by their manner and attitude and losing the respect of those about them. They cannot see themselves and attribute the change of others toward them to the fact that their friends are jealous or envious of their success. In reality, all the friends are missing is their former friendly, natural unaffectedness. The friends feel no envy or jealousy only deep regret that success has turned the perspective and values of a former associate. They wish to help their success-blinded friend, yet can do nothing. To attempt to give advice under these circumstances is folly because it falls on spiritually deaf ears.

Then we can turn to the opposite polarity and see the man or woman who has lost a grip on themselves but doesn't know it. The loser attempts to place the blame for all their difficulties on everybody else and never on themself. How to help such people is even more difficult than the previous instance because, as conditions become more strenuous and adverse, bitterness and resentment toward all life is added to the picture. They do not realize that their negative attitude is what is keeping them from the success they so keenly desire and miss. Do you know any of these people? Do you believe that such people would accept advice? If you attempt to give any, the immediate reaction is: "You don't understand the situation." It is curious that when one becomes so blinded to the facts and others can even hear the blinkers clinking, that person remains absolutely convinced that he/she is the only one who understands.

What should you do in a case like that? First of all, restore the other person's self-esteem and self-confidence. Likewise his self-respect. All three of these are important. This restoration cannot be effected by mere advice but by encouraging and stimulating them into activity wherein they can become enthusiastic. Enthusiasm is the greatest stimulator toward constructive thinking. Whether you realize it or not, life is a constant exchange of SILENT ADVICE. We are constantly advising and influencing each other, often unconsciously, THROUGH THE WAY WE ACT and the ATTITUDES we take toward life and things. *The most potent unsought or unsolicited advice should always be SILENT. It should be given through PERSONAL EXAMPLE AND PERSONAL STIMULATION.

If you want to help a friend in distress, do not plague him with advice but refresh and stimulate him with confidence and a sense of well-being through your own friendliness, affection, understanding and cheerfulness. These are far more potent and lasting that all the words in the world.

If a friend is sick and in distress and has become such through foolish mistakes and behavior, do not take that occasion to admonish him as to how he could have avoided such problems. Take care of him instead, cheer him up and make him as comfortable as possible, not only physically but mentally and spiritually as well, by being so cheerful and confident yourself that, through induction he partakes of your constructive attitude. Thus, silently, you become a living tonic and stimulator.

Do not labor under the misconception that the only way of "giving advice" is through "talking to". Again I tell you: the most potent advice is SILENT, exemplified or lived. If you feel inclined to question that -- look around you and see who it is that you respect and try to emulate. Have any of them asked you to do anything? No. They "just are" and you want to be like them.

We have a Great Examplar in the Master Nazarene, in this matter of giving silent advice. He did not condemn, he comforted and prepared those to be helped by placing them in the attitude to receive by the things he was and did. Before he helped an individual he did not require them to make a long or humiliating confession of all their errors and mistakes. He simply was friendly and understanding and he exuded and radiated these qualities so potently that everyone felt his benevolence (even miles away). His personality was such that those who came in contact with him responded to his vibrations by wanting to do what was right. They were responding to SILENT ADVICE.

In our present world of confusion it is not the promises made by the heads of different governments to each other that will bear lasting fruits, but the way in which WE, individually, behave and act towards each other, that will win the day. Of what avail will it be for us to advise the conquered nations what to do, or what not to do, if they see the conquering nations in conflict and difficulty with themselves? BASICALLY, ADVICE IS FRUITLESS UNLESS THE ONE GIVING IT PERSONALLY EXEMPLIFIES WHAT HE IS ADVISING OTHERS TO DO. We resent a judge. We welcome a friendly hand.

All humanity is alike. Human beings respond to symphathetic friendliness and understanding and are quick to sense insincerity and idle curiosity and inner criticism. We can sense unspoken criticism. Sometimes it stands right out in the face although not a word is spoken. Although some people have "poker faces" or "dead pan" features and can conceal their feelings easily, the majority can't. Our unspoken criticisms are often quickly sensed and if our attitude is critical while trying to help, instead of sympathetic and understanding, nothing of real constructive value will come forth from that particular circumstance, because the constructive attitude is lacking within ourselves.

If your motive is pure and wholesome and you are not simply being "nosey" or meddlesome, you will ask Heaven to use you as a channel for help in the specific situation; you will ask for inspiration and guidance as to how best to approach the specific situation without producing resentment or antagonism.

If you have ever extended what you term "the friendly hand of advice" to another and it has been resented, closer and honest investigation will reveal to you that, somewhere, you have harboured unspoken criticism in your heart and the person has sensed it. You, yourself, may not have sensed it -- but it was there nevertheless.

Astrally, criticism is a dart that pierces the astral body of the other and it matters not whether it has been spoken or not. The dart is there, the person feels it, and it does its work.

In giving advice then, it is most important for you to examine your own motives first. Make sure ALL PERSONAL MOTIVES ARE ABSENT and only a sincere desire to be helpful is present. Otherwise, you are permitting yourself to be presumptuous and meddling in what truly does not concern you.

You may ask: "are we interfering in a person's karma when we strive to save him from making a mistake?" The answer is: "No." Not so long as we leave him with the CHOICE of rejection or acceptance. Advice that forces an attitude is wrong, in fact -- it is not advice, it is an ill-concealed command. We are here in mortal life to help each other and it may indeed be the other person's karma to receive a help he has asked for -- it may be that YOU are in the scene because YOU are the person who can help. No, you will not be interfering in the person's karma, you will be fulfilling your own.

Let me draw this lecture to a conclusing by restating certain essential points. The manner of giving advice, assuming you are qualified to do so, is acutely important. Advice ceases to be advice if it is given in a way that makes the recipient feel obligated to adopt it. May sure you do nothing to make the recipient feel that if he does'nt take your advice that you will feel hurt. Do not give advice merely to have your own way in a matter. Advice must leave the recipient totally free to make his/her final decisions and with no hard feelings in the advisor or advisee. Advice should never be given as though you were scolding or in a mandatory manner. Counsel the person, help them to see the problem from different and constructive angles.

No two people ever see the same set of facts in the same way, otherwise we would all be more or less identical and we know that variation is almost endless in the human species. The old saying "two heads are better than one" is often true because the same thing is looked at from at least two different known angles, even though many other angles may remain unknown in the secrecy of each mind.

Let there be no thought of reward or compensation for advice truly given. Otherwise it ceases to be advice and becomes an investment. Above all, try to conquer the seemingly universal banality that goes like this: "my friend, if I were you I would do thus and so." You would do nothing of the sort. If you were the other person you would be doing exactly what he is doing and how much would that help? The seeker is not interested in what you think you would be doing under suppositious circumstances. He wants to know what HE should be doing in his existing situation.

Don't try to impose your own ideas. Give the seeker his freedom and remember that 'advice' comes from the Latin ad - to, and video - see. To give advice is to help another to see and not to try to make it anything else or more. Then you have done your duty.

EXERCISE FOR THE MONTH

In this era of freedom of expression, when everyone is eager to air their views, it is rare to find those who are willing to "listen", for they are so busy doing the contrary.

As a spiritual discipline, for a period of one month starting from NOW, endeavour to become a good "listener". This does not mean that you are to remain totally silent, but use "listening" as a therapeutic activity. People need to share their troubles with others. Train yourself to listen with interest and sympathy. Let the other person do most of the talking. Notice how greatly you will help him by just being a sympathetic listener. While he is reciting his problems and troubles, silently pray that God may guide and help him to solve his problems correctly, and should you be asked for your advice, give it as outlined in the lesson -- with love in your heart and understanding in your mind. Pray that God guide you and inspire you to be of help to that individual in whatever advice you may be able to give him and may God help you with His Light.

With kindest thoughts and best wishes for your continued progress on the Path,

Sincerely and fraternally,

Sacca

Dear Companions:

Those of you who are in the front line will realize that it is way past the 15th of the month and you have not received your mailing for this month as yet. The reason for this delay is because we have been awaiting the arrival of the translation of the first of the L Y O N S L E C T U R E S given by Saint-Martin and are experiencing a delay. We said in our last Liber that we would bring the first of these lectures in this Liber and we do not like to make a promise and then not keep it. However: we are already receiving calls from members enquiring if their material may have been lost in the mail! So circumstances are forcing us to take a "rain check" on the presentation of that first lecture in this Liber. We ask for your patience and understanding and will have to defer the first presentation until next time. We will complete this Liber with a continuation of Martinist History which we know is being very well received by you all.

Papus and the Ordre Martiniste - con'd # 129

We saw last week that Papus and eleven other Brothers had formed in 1890 the first Supreme Council of the Martinist Order. It may be interesting to note at this point the other esoteric interests of some of the members of this Supreme Council as it would explain the various tendencies that were to develop as time went by. Stanislas de Guaïta was GrandMaster of the Kabbalistic Order of the Rose+Croix to which Papus and others belonged. Péladan, who, as we know, soon left the Supreme Council, was to create at a later date the Ordre de la Rose+Croix, du Temple et du Graal. Some of the Brothers were Freemasons. Whilst on this point, let us mention that the main Masonic Obediences of France, particularly the Grand Orient, were at that time predominently materialistic and composed of free-thinkers. On the fringe of the Masonic movement, there existed smaller Obediences of a more spiritual character. Most Martinists were connected with one or the other of these. In particular, as we shall see, the Ancient and Primitive Rite of Masonry comprising 33 degrees had amalgamated with the Oriental Rites of Memphis and Mizraïm, composed of 90 and 96 degrees, to form an organization with which many Martinists were to become connected. Furthermore, the Universal Gnostic Church and other organizations were represented among the members of the Supreme Council.

The Martinist Order had a period of flourishing activity in France and in other countries. Papus was an indefatigable worker and he introduced the Order even in the Russian Court where Martinism had been known for over a century. The Tzar, Nicolas II, was Master of a Lodge held within the Royal Palace, it is said.

In 1908, Papus and Teder organized in Paris a Congress of Spiritual Masonic Rites with a view to connecting the Martinist Order with the High Degrees of Masonry. In 1911, the Supreme Council issued a decree recognizing the Universal Gnostic Church as the official Church of Martinism. In 1914, Papus and Teder came to an agreement with Dr. de Ribeaucourt, GrandMaster of the Scottish Rectified Rite (the old Knights Beneficient) to create a Martinist Grand Chapter which would be composed exclusively of High Degree Masons and which would act as a "bridge" between the Martinist Order and Scottish Freemasonry. Unfortunately, (or fortunately, depending on how you look at it) for this project, the First World War broke out before it was carried out. The death of Papus in 1916 and the change of GrandMastership of the Scottish Rectified Rite brought an end to this project.

We have just said that Papus died in 1916. He died of tuberculosis contracted whilst doing his duty as a physician with the French Army. He had played a vital part in furthering Martinism, creating an Order of that name and keeping it united while he was alive. With his death, the Martinist Order was to loose its unity and to become divided.

Papus was succeeded by Teder whose real name was Charles Détré. The war was still on and the activity of the Order was curtailed. Teder was assisted by Victor Blanchard who acted as his Deputy. Teder died in 1918 and was succeeded by Jean (or Johanny) Bricaud. Bricaud then decided that the Martinist Order would gain by being established on the firm basis of Symbolic Masonry. He decreed therefore, that the Martinist Order would only admit Masons of the 3rd Degree (Master Mason) of any Rite. The headquarters of the Order was transfered to Lyons. This is why this Branch of the Martinist Order was to become known as the "Ordre Martiniste de Lyon".

This "masonizing" of the Martinist Order did not please all Martinists and many refused to recognize the new régime which was imposing restrictions on certain classes of members and particularly the Sisters. They decided to uphold the principle of Free Initiations, inherent in the degree of Initiateur Libre -- and so pursued their activities independently of Bricaud's Order.

The Martinist Orders after Papus

We saw last week that Teder (Charles Détré) succeeded Papus as GrandMaster of the Martinist Order in 1916 and that at his own death, in 1918, Jean Bricaud was elected his successor. Bricaud thought that the Martinist Order would gain in structure by being established on the basis of Symbolic Masonry and he restricted admission to the Order to Freemasons of the 3rd degree. This decision did not please all Martinists and many members upheld the principle of Free Initiations and pursued their activities outside Bricaud's Order. Among these Brothers desiring to preserve the original character of the Martinist Order was Victor Blanchard, who had been Deputy-GrandMaster to Teder. (Blanchard was also a Bishop in the Gnostic Church). The Martinists who disapproved of the Masonic character and the restrictions imposed in the Martinist Order headed by Jean Bricaud and known henceforth as the "Ordre Martiniste de Lyon" because its Supreme Council met in that town, remained for a long time unorganized, albeit carrying on with the Works according to the original constitution of the Order and accepting both Masons and non-masons, men & women. It would be wrong to consider the position at that time as the result of a "split". There was only one Martinist Order but not all the Brothers recognized the legality of the restrictions imposed by Jean Bricaud and acted accordingly. Victor Blanchard was already forming a nucleus of those who chose to maintain the system of Free Initiations. Nevertheless, Jean Bricaud died on February 21st, 1934 leaving his succession to Victor Blanchard. This Brother felt he could not accept the GrandMastership of the Ordre Martiniste de Lyon because he disapproved of its structure and its Masonic nature. Constantin Chevillon was elected GrandMaster and the Ordre Martiniste de Lyon maintained and even stiffened its Masonic structure. It had an outer circle of diffusion in the "Collège d'Occultisme" at 17, rue Washington, Paris, and as an anti-chamber to the Order, the 2 Lodges of Memphis-Misraïm "La Jerusalem Egyptienne" and "L'Age Nouveau" provided the Masonic qualifications required for membership. These members progressed simultaneously in the two organizations having to qualify as Master Masons in Memphis-Misraïm before being admitted as Associates, then having to obtain other degrees in Memphis-Mizraïm before being admitted to the degrees of Initiates and SSII. Between 1936 and 1939, the Ordre Martiniste de Lyon kept its Lodge "Papus" open in Paris.

After refusing the Jean Bricaud succession, Victor Blanchard gathered the free Brothers and formed a branch of the Martinist Order which adhered to the original constitution of the Order and disapproved of the masonic requirements of the Ordre Martiniste de Lyon.

In 1934, in Brussels, Belgium, in connection with a Congress of non-Masonic Spiritual Orders, there was held an International Convention of Martinists. On the 9th of August, Victor Blanchard was unanimously elected Sovereign Universal GrandMaster of the Order by representatives from France, Belgium, Austria, Switzerland, North & South America, Denmark, etc.. The Supreme Council of the Order was reconstituted and it was decided to add the adjective "SYNARCHIQUE" to the name of the Order to distinguish it from from the Ordre Martiniste whose headquarters were in Lyons. The masonic qualifications for membership was abolished. Thus was born officially the Order Martiniste et Synarchique, the Order which marked a return to the original tradition with the constitution laid down by the Supreme Council of 1890. On the same occasion, the Congress of non-Masonic Spiritual Orders organized itself in a federation known as the FUDOSI (Fédération Universelle des Ordres et Sociétés Initiatique) and Brother Victor Blanchard, as Sovereign Grand Master of the Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique, became one of the first three "Imperators" of this federation.

We saw in our last lecture that the UNIVERSAL GNOSTIC CHURCH was recognized as the official Church of Martinism in 1911. We think it appropriate to give here some information on the connection between the Gnostic Church and the Martinist Order. We will also give a summary of the Gnostic Doctrine. The summary which follows later, and which we have a photocopy of the actual handwriten document, was written down, we understand, by Jules Doinel.

Jules Doinel (Tau Valentine II) founded the Gnostic Apostolic Church (another name for the Universal Gnostic Church) in 1891 on a succession coming through the Order of the Temple of France, and going back to the Bishops of Lyons in the 5th & 6th centuries. Doniel died suddenly in 1892.

There became, however, several Gnostic Churches deriving from different streams. John Bricaud, whose ecclesiastical name was TAU JOHN II, was consecrated by Louis Francois Giraud (FRANCOIS) on May 5th, 1918 in the Gnostic Apostolic Church and Bricaud later became Patriarch of this Church. Giraud held several different successions deriving from different lines (one of his consecrators was Julien Houssaye (JULIO) of the Villate succession who consecrated him on January 21, 1913). Giraud again consecrated Bricaud on that same day: January 21st, 1913. -- Giraud then again consecrated Bricaud on the 21st July 1913 in the Gallicane Church. Bricaud, in turn, consecrated Victor Blanchard (TARGELIUS), on May 5th, 1918. Victor Blanchard, as you now know was the founder of The Martinist Order and Synarchique. We do have in our possession a photocopy of the original missal for the celebration of the Mass, handwritten by Jean Bricaud.

Just as a matter of interest, Giraud also consecrated Papus, Chamuel and Sédir. (Chamuel and Sédir, you will remember, were two of the twelve members of the first Supreme Council of the Martinist Order, under Papus, so it can be seen that there was a close association between the Gnostic Church and the Martinist Order from the very beginning.) Here is the Summary of the Gnostic Doctrine:

BEING, the universal substance, is first of all the power to be, and the tendency to be, to pass from the power to the act and to do so in two states: the state of a perfect being and the state of imperfect, individual beings or monads. The perfect Being is called God; the group of imperfect beings is called the universe.

2

God manifests Himself in the universe in various aspects or theophonies, various determinations, various rôles or personalities, which are called Aeons, but all these Aeons are one and the same God.

The divine Aeons form three groups of three. Each of these groups, then, bears the name of Eridyname. There are three major Eridynames which are: the Father, the Son - Christ - and the Holy Spirit.

The Father is the power of will, giver of life to all beings out of Nothingness, attractor of all beings.

The Son is intelligence, universal logos (science) and the archetype. The logos resounds throughout the universe, and causes the ether, (light and heat or fire) to vibrate. And, just as the sacred fire of the altar, which is his image, is annointed, we call this universal fire the Christ, (the annointed one).

The Holy Spirit is love, life, the law of organization or gathering of beings. It travels the universe, while forming currents in the ether. The Son and the Holy Spirit proceed parallelly from the Father. The totality of divine Aeons form the Divine Pleroma.

In the original state, all beings are formed by a monad or absolute individuality (absolutely indivisible). Each monad is capable of endless development. The totality of monads constitute the Ether.

5

While developing psychically, the monads group themselves, the lower ones around the higher ones, and these groupings of diverse complexities constitute the etheric or subtle beings which we call Spirits.

6

All the spirits are organized in a hierarchy and form an immense organism which, with the ether, constitutes the universe proper, or the ordinary universe. Each degree (level) of the hierarchy fills a portion of the vast space which we call Aeon, but they must not be confused with the Divine Aeons. - Three great chains or classes are distinguished amongst the spirits and consequently three major groups of Aeons: the Aeons of the elementals, the Aeons of men or children of God, and the Aeons of the angels. The elementals are characterized by their predominance of will and power; men by the predominance of intelligence; the angels by the predominance of sentiment. The angels and men form two divergent series. Moreover, men form androgynous beings having conjointly, a masculine and a feminine nature.

The world of bodies or hylic world, is not a normal part of the universe. It comes from an accident which occured in the passage of time within the world of spirits; thus, it has not always been in existence and it is destined to pass away. The world of bodies forms only a small part of the universe.

8

The world of bodies is the result of a revolt of some of the angels, of a great confusion which occured at a particular time in the universe of spirits. The perpetrators of the disorder were driven out of the Aeons and banished from the confines of the world of spirits into the outer darkness. (The world of spirits is the realm of light). In their Fall, they took with them all the elementals, and it is through them that they organized themselves into a hylic world made up of stars. (Suns, Moons, Planets, Heavenly

The beings which make up the hylic world were thus brought into being from nothingness by the Father, like all other beings were, and they had to be formed under the laws of the divine logos, but they organized for themselves a universe according to their own ideas, erroneous ideas for the most part, and from which emanated hylic evil and the imperfection of the hylic world. The chief of the fallen angels is in fact the Demiurge of this world and creator of the hylic world and is not the true God.

10

There was in the world of spirits or spiritual pleroma a remarkable man. (The intelligence of his masculine nature had been strongly developed by the use of his will and was more assimilated into the divine logos. His feminine nature was always aspiring to higher levels. That is what incited the jealousy and hatred of the chiefs of the angels who had rebelled.) The male part took on the task of reorganizing the pleroma and, with the unanimous agreement of the spirits, was elected head, prince or king of the Pleroma; the female part became the princess, queen of the Pleroma. The former is given the name of Saviour and the latter the name of Wisdom (Sophia). The royal being forms the Star of the Pleroma. This Being directs in second place the universal Christic movement. - The Saviour is the Son of God par excellence and this Son of God must not be confused with the Son of God who constitutes the second Eridyname, even though they are inwardly linked with each other.

11

The Demiurge and the chiefs of the fallen angels or Archons tried to seduce the spirits of the Pleroma. The terrestrial Archon was able to lure them with hylic forms which facinated some of the spirits of the human series and these spirits descended to earth and took on an anthropomorphic animal body and soul. That is how earthly man was formed.

12

Man differs from animals mainly through his spirit endowed with reason, which makes the human being capable of knowledge and progress. The presence of the Spirit made the first men shine in the darkness, agile, without sickness and putrid death, facinator of animals. His powerful will controlled all the appetites of his body; he had retained the holiness that he had in the pleroma; finally, he remembered what he had learned in his previous estate.

13

In coming down to earth and in becoming united with the anthropomorphic animal, the heavenly spirits had believed that they could perfect the soul of the animal and took it with them to the pleroma. But, seduced by the pleasure which their animal soul brought them, far from remaining masters over them, they became enslaved. Man degenerated and lost his original qualities and this Fall was carried on to us through heredity. Moreover, as a result of his Fall, man became the slave of the Demiurge and of his terrestrial archon.

14

One of the most serious consequences of the Fall was the loss of the personality after the death of the body, which constitutes the true death, and the reincorporation (reincarnation) on earth of another form of the personality. This reincarnation does not occur by chance, but according to the law of Karma, the law of consequence.

15

But in the midst of degenerated humanity, a core of the original, undegenerate race was preserved in the center, a community which, remembering its celestial origin, referred to itself as sons of heaven. It was these sons of heaven who instituted argricultural techniques and the implements of stone men used, the use of fire, and who put into rhythmic language the memories of their celestial origin, passing them on to the memory of their descendents. It was these memories which constitute the original religious knowledge or gnosis, also called the oral religious tradition.

It was also the sons of heaven who constructed the first city and who organized the first civilized society. The king or God, who held the title of sun, chose outside of the celestial city a very intelligent man to whom he gave the task of giving laws to other men, and of civilizing them by teaching them to domesticate animals and cultivate the soil. Hatred of the kingdom of heaven, which was very prosperous, began to grow and it was not long before this man fell victim to the jealousy and hatred of the savage people whom he was charged to civilize. The Man that was sent was seized through trickery, and was cut into pieces and eaten by these cannibals, his fellow men.

The descendents of the gods or sons of heaven, who were later banished from their city, took refuge in Egypt and it was in that country that the original religious tradition or gnosis was preserved, all the secrets were taught only to a few initiated people previously subjected to the harshest tests and to purification rites. Amongst other things taught were the expectation of a future, the coming a new man who would reestablish the kingdom of heaven on earth and who would give to humanity the means of freeing themselves from the earthly archon and from death and to be reintegrated into the spiritual pleroma.

In the 15th year of the Empire of Tiberius Caesar, there appeared in Palestine a man whose name was Saviour (Ieshu), who claimed to be the long-awaited of the nations, the one who was to reestablish the kingdom of heaven. He also claimed to be the prince or the head of the pleroma who had come down from heaven to earth, in possession of the Christ, the expression of the divine logos, or of the true light which lights all men coming into this world. He did not manifest that light fully until the time he received from a certain Joannes the baptism of water, until the time of his arrest by the Jews to be crucified. All civilized nations have acknowledged the mission of Ieshu.

We now utilize the remaining space and continue with the History of the Martinist Order.

We saw last week that after refusing the succession of Jean Bricaud at the head of the Ordre Martiniste de Lyon, Victor Blanchard was elected Universal GrandMaster by all the Martinists who did not approve of the masonic character of that Order and who gathered in Brussels, Belgium, on August 9th, 1934. The Order then took the name of Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique. As its Universal Grand Master, Brother Blanchard was one of the three original "Imperators" of the federation of secret societies known as the FUDOSI. He held this high office at the International conventions of 1934 and 1936 of this federation.

We now come to a bewildering period of Martinism. It is not our purpose to pass judgement on any of the well-intentioned Brothers who were responsible for a further division of the Order nor do we wish to take a biased view of the subject. We feel that the time has come for objectivity, without which no attempt at reconciliation could ever be possible. To many outsiders, the dissensions which occured in the Martinist Order appear distasteful and incomprehensible. It is important that our members should have an objective knowledge of the facts as, whether we like it or not, they are part of the history of Martinism and because the general ignorance of these facts has been exploited to circulate preposterous claims.

First of all, one must understand that the sudden birth of numerous Martinist Orders does not imply in every case the setting up of new organizations starting with entirely new members. The best way to see the position in the right perspective is to imagine a large number of Brothers & Sisters, all regularly initiated, forming a flexible kind of body called the Martinist Order. The Order had not always been strictly organized and if there were 160 active Lodges registered in 1916, these Lodges were often semi-independent bodies and there were many Martinists who did not belong to any one Lodge. The divisions must then be regarded as authorities setting themselves up to defend or organize a certain aspect or tendency of Martinism. The great mass of the Lodges and members would then recognize one of these higher authorities and, indeed, it has been known for members to recognize more than one and to adhere to two different branches of the Order. There was always a certain amount of interchange and shift of loyalties from one to the other. These disputes may seem often very "unbrotherly" but where is the family in which the brothers never quarrel?

We therefore had two Orders: one with its headquarters at Lyons, headed by Brother Chevillon, the other, with its headquarters in Paris, headed by Brother Blanchard.

Now, not all the Martinists at large who disapproved of the Masonic organization of Bro. Chevillon were willing to accept the authority of Bro. Blanchard. One of these was Bro. Augustin Chaboseau who had been with Papus from the start. From private correspondence it would appear that Bro. Chaboseau felt that as one of the originators of the Order, he could not admit the authority of Bro. Blanchard who was his junior in the Order. With some other Brothers, Augustin Chaboseau founded a third Martinist Order which he called "Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel" and whose first GrandMaster, Bro. V. E. Michelet, was soon succeeded by A. Chaboseau himself. Owing to the prestige of Chaboseau's name and to the many qualities of this Brother, this Order, well organized, developed very rapidly in France, whilst the Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique remained dominant in other countries, particularly in Switzerland and Belgium.

By 1939, the Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel was by far the bigger of the non-masonic Martinist Orders. Meanwhile, some undesirable tendencies towards commercialism had developed in one of the big organizations affiliated with the FUDOSI, and Brother Blanchard felt he could no longer associate himself with this federation as one of its three heads. - - - He resigned and was replaced as "Imperator" by Brother Augustin Chaboseau. In 1946, Augustin Chaboseau died. He left his succession to his son, Jean Chaboseau. According to the constitution of this Order however, this succession had to be confirmed by the Supreme Council. Jean Chaboseau did not receive the required support and was not confirmed in his GrandMastership. The split threatened to destroy the Order and Jean Chaboseau renounced his claim in 1947 and resigned from the Order which he dissolved. Several members of the Supreme Council also resigned.

As Augustin Chaboseau had also been an "Imperator" in the FUDOSI where he represented Martinism, this function became vacant and was filled by an interim-Imperator until such time as the situation of the OMT was clarified. An interim committee known as the Council of Regency was formed to try to hold the Order together while efforts were made to try to find a GrandMaster who could obtain the required support. Meanwhile, the majority of the societies belonging to the FUDOSI had become increasingly uneasy about the propaganda methods and doctrinal deviations of one of its most important member-societies. A general meeting was called and as the arraigned member-society was unwilling to mend its ways, the FUDOSI dissolved itself in 1951. With it disappeared the Regency Committee of the Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel and the remnants of this organization were also dissolved. The Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel disappeared from the scene, leaving an American branch which was kept alive by its associated rosicrucian body and which soon resorted to such corrupt and invalid methods as "postal initiations" which banned it from recognition by Martinists everywhere. To be continued.

Dear Companions:

Without further delay, we begin the series we will call "THE LYONS LECTURES" which many of you have been anxiously awaiting. These will comprise the 10 lectures given by Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin to the Elus-Cohen Lodge at Lyons, in the days when he was an active Elu-Cohen.

May we say that the translation of these lectures has been a major undertaking and we are indebted beyond measure to the several brethren, who have really toiled and laboured to make them available in English, FOR YOU. It has NOT been an easy task.

Saint-Martin was a most unusual man; he possessed tremendous insights, but he seems to have concerned himself more with WHAT he was saying, rather than with HOW he was saying it; and to complicate matters even more, Saint-Martin spoke and wrote in old style French which is very difficult to translate; it is entirely possible, for example, to come up with phrases which are totally meaningless, so that these translations call for someone well versed in the philosophy, who can interpret what otherwise would be meaningless verbiage.

We have all been blessed with good fortune in having as a final adjudicator, a scholar eminently qualified to put the finishing touches to the translations. He says: "I suspect he (Saint-Martin) wrote these lectures simply to serve as basis for an oral exposition, and that he gave a lot of explanatory comments as he advanced with his lecture, thus filling in." He concludes: "Regarding an approach to the right interpratation and understanding, I feel that I have succeeded far better than I dared hope at the outset ... It is a true pleasure to be of service to the College and to Martinism in this way. I reap the reward of a greater understanding through the work itself. Therefore, I wish to express my gratitude in thanking you for having chosen me to assist in the translations." (We see here, Brothers & Sisters, the spirit of a true Initiate.)

Before we turn to the first lecture, let us have a little humour and a comment. Here are a few more words from our adjudicator: "My secretary truly wonders what she's been writing!! Absolutely incomprehensible to the uninitiated it seems to be - I hope though, that the two additional footnotes will help whoever is going to be the confused reader! I'm sorry that I could'nt do anything with the last drawing. The copy I can't read."

Companions will be acutely aware that without the preliminary foundation laid in Libers past, they would be in the same boat as the goodly secretary!!! Everyone will now have a practical guage to measure the progress they have made since first placing their feet on the Path a few moons ago, and see the reason why these lectures could not have come earlier.

Brothers & Sisters, all of us at the College are happy and proud to be able to make the material in these Libers available to you. We hope our humble efforts are helping you to more and more understand this paradox called "LIFE". Praise be to God for His benevolence.

Instructions to men of desire

FIRST LESSON

Joy, peace, salvation to him who hears me

My brothers,

With the help of the Eternal I will try to explain to you the principles forming the fundamental basis of our Order and which, united in one body, could make up a course of temporal, passive physics and eternal, spiritual physics.(1)

In the science we cultivate, the first principle is desire. No craftsman has ever succeeded at any temporal art without application, work and continuous effort to grasp the different aspects of the art he has chosen to take up. It would thus be pointless to think that one can achieve wisdom without desire, because the fundamental basis of this wisdom is nothing but the very desire to know it, surmounting all obstacles that close the way to it, and to be surprised that desire is necessary, for it is certainly thoughts contrary to this desire that have led astray all those who seek the way to wisdom.

Now, in order to return to wisdom, you must make your path according to the distance of your position. He who thinks he has reached it still has far to go, and he who thinks he has a long way to go has only one step left to make; thus we can see that the first step to be taken must be on the path of humility, patience and charity. These virtues are so necessary in our Order that we cannot make any progress other than to the extent that we advance in their application. But one may ask what connection these virtues have with the sciences? This lesson intends to demonstrate the necessity of that connection.

From out of Its divine immensity, Being, necessarily existing only by Itself, the Eternal Creator and Guardian of all beings, emanated, before time, free beings for Its greatest glory. He gave them a law, a precept, a commandment on which their emanation was based. These spirits were free and they cannot be considered otherwise without destroying their distinct personality.

They began to transgress divine law. What was their transgression? Without entering into all the details, I would reply that the first crime was disobedience. Being free, they conceived, in their complete and utter freedom, a thought contrary to the law, the precept and commandment of the Eternal. To give a better idea of this disobedience, I imagine a sentry who has been put on guard duty and who has been told to observe various points of his duty: The sentry is free, he needs noone to come and whisper to him to stay or not to stay. Of his own free will, he leaves his post and disobeys all aspects of his duty, he is caught and taken to task. This gives an idea of the transgression of the first spirits. Their sin was to have disobeyed the law, precept and commandment they had been given from the time of their creation, and to have conceived an idea contrary to that of the Eternal.

From then on, their communication with the Eternal was broken; God created space and cast them into it. But whom did He make serve Him to drive them from His divine court? He used spirits of the same nature, having been created at the same time as they were, and who also conceived their evil thought because they were tainted by it, but made different use of their free will, remaining inviolably attached to the law, precept and commandment of the Eternal. What proves demonstrably that the first spirits conceived their thought of transgression of their own free will, is the fidelity of the latter spirits, who, being neither more nor less gifted than the transgressors, made good use of their free will by rejecting the bad thought that was exposed to them by the transgressors, and then served as instruments of the justice that God cast upon the transgressors from the moment of their transgression. That is the war the Scriptures speak of when they say that Michael and his angels fought against the demons and their angels, and that, victorious, Michael cast them out of the divine court into the space that had just been created.

Time, which is simply the succession or revolution of the different bodies, did not yet exist. There was no subtle or base matter, only pure and simple spirits; good spirits in the divine court and evil spirits in space. From then, God in His thoughtful imagination conceived the creation of the universe in a visible, passive form, to serve as a limit and barrier to the evil acts of the demons. To this end, He freed the compound spirits from the central fire axis and they came to close the circle of space wherein the perverted spirits were contained, and in His divine thoughtful imagination, he conceived the creation of the main body of the head of this universe, equally divine and temporal, spiritual and passive, in the form of the equilateral triangle. This equilateral triangle, considered by all the peoples of the earth to contain the visible image that the Eternal had conceived in his imagination for the creation of the head of the universe; this triangle, I may say, is still represented to us in our Churches by four ineffable characters that I will go on to explain.

God manifested His thought of creation to the spirits of the central fire axis through this same equilateral triangle, in the centre of which was contained his threefold word of creation as shown in this diagram:

From the principle of their emanation, these spirits had the innate ability to extract from within themselves the three spiritual essences. From out of themselves they drew forth these three essences to carry out the word of the Eternal. One may ask what was this Word? I would say that the word contained the plan, the execution and the workings of the universe. Consequently, the spirits of the axis began to execute it by bringing forth their 3 innate essences from within. These three essences were, in their principle, matter in its neutral state, since they had not yet been shaped by these same spirits and no distinction could be made between them. Thus according to the language of the Scriptures, they were without form, or in their neutral state and void, and passive life could not enter into forms, for they were not yet. This void must be understood to be the lack of the principle of movement necessary to all bodies in the universe.

Before going any further, I must speak of the basic principle of all emanation, of all creation, which is the number. All wise men of all times recognized that one can have no sure knowledge of either the divine, spiritual part nor of the general universal, earthly part, nor of individuals, without the science of numbers, since it is through numbers that the Eternal makes all plans of emanation and creation. The number, being co-eternal with Divinity since, for all eternity, God is the number which has been within Him forever, for God has His number. If God had been able to create the number, it would seem as if He could have created Himself, which is impossible, for nothing subsists without its number. God, the indispensable Being, existing by Himself, has therefore contained all numbers throughout all eternity. He has endowed all spirits with numbers according to His infinite wisdom and His eternal action. None of His creations have left His hands without being marked with its seal; from the emanated spirits to the creation of the universe, everything has its number. Now, it follows manifestly that knowledge of all the works of God is contained in the knowledge of numbers. Thus, my brothers, we must seek to admire the works of the Eternal, not with the senses of our apparent passive form, but with the senses of our divine eternal and spiritual understanding.

In all eternity, God has been One, or Ⓘ. The unity reveals the Divinity to us because it is the principle of all creation; and the circle enclosing it, contains the unity, contains everything issued from it. The first spirits which came forth therefore had their number: the superior ones 10, the major ones 8, the lesser ones 7, and the minor ones 4. Their number before their corruption was higher than those we usually give to the cherubim, seraphim, archangels and angels who had not yet come into being.

I will stop a while to consider the state of the universe of the spirits before their corruption. The whole court of the Divinity enjoyed the most perfect peace, no trace of evil existed since the possibility of evil never existed in the Divinity. Each being was made pure, holy with no stain in its breast. Then where did evil come from? Evil only took its principle from the thought which the leader of the demons, who was free, conceived by himself, opposing the law, precept and commandment of the Eternal; not that the demon was evil itself, but because, if he were to change his evil thought from today, his action would also change, and from that moment, there would no longer be any evil in the whole universe. Evil, I repeat, was only born from the demon's thought as opposed to that of the Divinity, a thought which he conceived of his own free will and through which he separated himself from the Divinity, giving rise to the number two, or confusion, through a wish to exist independently of the Divinity or almighty Creator.

God demonstrated His justice towards this perverted spirit by casting him with his followers from the divine court into the sphere of the universe, the space that was created after their transgression and enclosed by the spirits of the central fire axis(2), being freed at the same time. This is what the psalm means when it says: Non accedet ad te malum -- Evil will not come to you -- through the barrier formed by the spirits of the central fire axis against the evil actions of the demons. As soon as the spirits of the central fire axis received the word from the Eternal, they brought forth from within the three spiritual essences, which were innate, from the moment they were liberated, and they changed matter in its neutral state by making a distinction between the essences so that they could retain impressions. The work of the spirits of the axis caused a distinction between the three essences being in their first principle formless. As soon as differentiation occurred in the essences, everything took form and the various bodies were created, and, as soon as they received their shape, the spirits of the axis placed into each of them a vehicle for their spiritual fire, being the principle of life in all bodies.

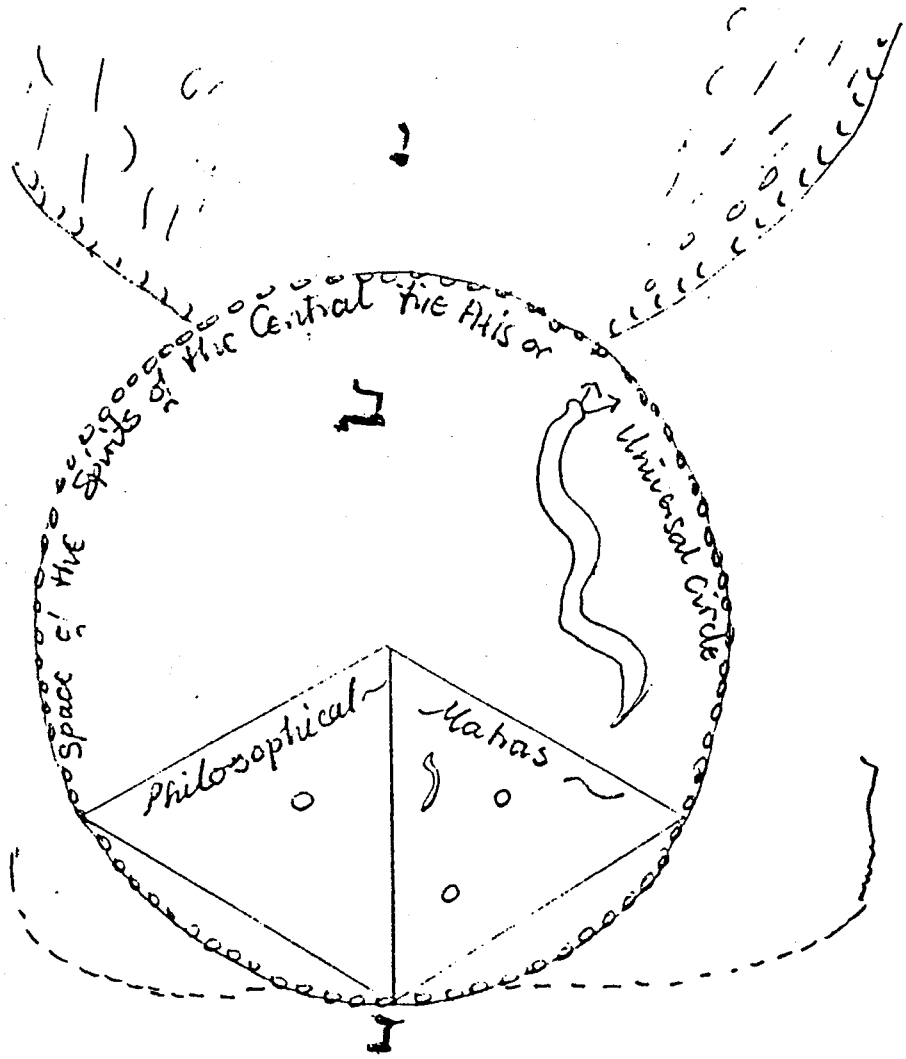
One might ask me where all this matter was before the confusion commonly called chaos, and which we call matter in its neutral state. I would answer that this matter, void and without form in its neutral state, resided in the philosophical matras(3) as the following figure shows:



The work of all the different spirits of the axis was led by the wisdom of the Eternal, represented to us by the Holy Scriptures as moving on the waters. Now, nothing better represents matter in its neutral state than water with no course and movement. It was on this principle of the essences that the doubly strong Spirit of the Eternal led, directed and defined the limits of all the different beings of the universe, and led all the various activities of the work of the spirits, agents, operators or makers of the central fire axis, or uncreated fire. It is this wisdom, that went before the Eternal and approved with holy transports each divine thought that the Eternal manifested for the creation of the universe saying "I am in you and in your works, almighty Creator, as you are in me and in mine. The one who comes after us will instruct your creation concerning the worship by which you must be served". This work of the different spirits of the axis is still being operated on this plane, and will continue to be operated for ever, just as they operated it in the principle of the creation of all the bodies of the universe, as I will go on to demonstrate clearly.

For the time being, I shall content myself with giving the explanation of the figure א representing the Divinity. This Hebrew letter represents an ineffable name of the Divinity. That is why the Jews, in respect for this name, have never pronounced the letter aleph. The pronounciation they gave to it, is not the true pronounciation. ב beth, the second character, represents the direct action of the Divinity; ג gimel represents the holy spirit directing the action of the spirits of the axis; and ד daleth represents the threefold word of the Eternal, by which He manifests His vast thought for the creation of the universe to the spirits of the axis.

The three dots in the philosophical matras represent the principle of the essences, or matter in its neutral state. Although mercury is considered to be the principle of the three essences, it is nonetheless not given absolute unity, since this only belongs to the Divinity, or to the superior 10 spirits, and not to any essence. Thus, the unity given to mercury is threefold and represents the three essences in their neutral state as aspects of one another, without movement, without form, because they had not yet been wrought, modified and operated by the immensity of the spirit agents, factors or operators of the central fire axis. They are called the central fire axis because they are the centre of all movement, and they are called uncreated because they are members of the court of the Divinity and are eternal.

Perhaps one might ask me why God, having foreseen the evil thought of the demons, did not contain them within their prescribed limits? To this objection I would reply that God is unchanging in His decrees, whether he approves or disapproves of His creation or not, and He does not take any part in secondary causes, having founded all beings on invariable laws, and the first of these laws is freedom. God cannot destroy thought in any spirit without destroying its freedom; if He destroyed its freedom, He would destroy the law He gave this spirit when it was emanated into being. Since the immutability of God is irrevocable, He can in no way know what use all free spirits will make of their free will, for, if Divinty had known this, it would appear as if He had planned for evil, which is impossible. God, necessarily being good, can only create beings like himself, but with their own distinct personalities and free. Now, God could not destroy thought in these spirits, even though He was aware of it, without destroying the attributes and the manifestation of his favour and of his justice; of his favour towards the faithful spirits and his justice to the perverted spirits.

Let us then be well convinced, my brothers, that the Eternal never foresees what does not actually exist in the thoughts of a free spirit. For if he could foresee the use it would make of its free will, this spirit would, from that moment, cease to be free, but what Divinity perfectly conceives of is the use any Spirit makes of his free will. From the moment a spirit conceives his thought, whether good or evil, it is read and judged by Divinity. This gives him the name of a vengeful and rewarding God; vengeful of the insult made to his law, and rewarding of the good use made of his law to his greatest glory.

Thus, my brothers, we clearly see that the principle or the origin of evil came from pride. Then it follows that the principle of all good should be humility, patience and charity; patience through the obligations we are under to endure the fatigues of a difficult journey, and charity through the absolute necessity of putting up with the faults of our fellow men and of trying to correct them by making them good. This virtue is so necessary that a group of scoundrels would not last 24 hours if it were entirely without this virtue. This virtue, in its perfection, unites all others because it is the one closest to Divinity. Thus, my brothers, it is through constant practice of these virtues that our union will be lasting and that it will produce uncountable fruits of intelligence, knowledge and wisdom. By establishing more sustained relationships between members, the personal knowledge of each individual may be shared, thus producing unity, which is the basis of the Order.

I am very pleased, my brothers and sisters, that the Eternal has granted me the favour of speaking to you. Please be assured of my zeal, attachment and sincere desire for the general good of this lodge. The favour I ask of you is for each of you to contribute the same zeal and God will help further our plans.

NOTES

(1) Spiritual in the sense active as opposed to passive; passive in the sense material as opposed to spiritual. Remember that the word physics in the days of Saint-Martin had a somewhat different meaning than today.

(2) The spirits of the central fire axis are emanations or entities of the pure, fiery spirit of God, residing outside of creation proper, being the cause of all movement or vibration, such as we may perceive it from the atom and up.

(3) The philosophical matras represents the same as does the vase or vessel of alchemy (from arabic matara, vase), i.e. the Divine retort, the alembic of God.

Immensité de Dieu sur toutes choses

THE INTERNATIONAL ROSE+CROIX AND THE F.U.D.O.S.I.

Thanks to the papers in the Lelarge collection, it is now possible to define the structure of the universal Rose-Croix, which was active under the aegis of Hiéronymus. He had, as we remember, restored strength and vigour to Péladan's Rose-Croix and, after the Great War and the death of the Sâr, gathered together some Belgian Initiates from the Order. This resurgence took place in 1919 according to Dantinne's own statement made in confidence. From the time of Péladan, the Order consisted of three degrees: Squire, Knight, Commander. Hiéronymus introduced a fourth degree which was higher than the three preceding degrees, that of Imperator, but I do not know whether it was created in 1919 or later. This degree seems to have only been conferred on a small number of Initiates, and certainly on all the dignitaries of the Order.

It remains to specify the numerical size of the Order, but let us say, it was certainly never very big.

THE UNIVERSAL ROSE-CROIX

In 1923, Hiéronymus organized in Louvain, the University Order of the Rose-Croix, the "Archons of the Sciences and the Arts", which was mainly restricted to universities and students. From that time on, the University Rose-Croix constituted a stepping stone to the Catholic Rose-Croix, usually referred to as Universal, which then became the inner Rose-Croix.

The University Rose-Croix was made up of nine degrees, the names of which are standard in Rosicrucianism:
1st Zelator, 2nd Theoreticus, 3rd Practicus, 4th Philosophus, 5th Adeptus Minor, 6th Adeptus Major, 7th Adeptus Exemptus, 8th Magister Templi, 9th Magus. (This information is obtained from an undated letter from Jean Mallinger to Léon Lelarge, in the Lelarge collection.) At the moment we do not have any of the rituals of these degrees which would enable us to define and appreciate their esoteric value. However, a vital document has come into our hands: a plan, which, unfortunately, bears no date, of the programme of teachings of the University Rose-Croix, made out by Jean Mallinger and corrected by Dantinne. (Lelarge collection.) Thus, we know what the subjects of study were for each degree of the Order.

The first degree was devoted to man, comparative religious philosophies, Christianity and prayer.

In the second degree, occult powers were studied.

In the third degree, the life of the great mystics, physio-chemical alchemy and the works of Kunrath.

In the fourth degree, the celestial hierarchies were studied.

The fifth degree was devoted to the study of the theory and then the practice of theurgy.

The sixth degree was entirely devoted to the Christian mysteries.

From the seventh degree onwards, the mystical training of the initiate began, and it continued into the following degree.

Finally, in the ninth degree, the occult rôle of the Rose-Croix was apprehended.

For further details, the reader may refer to the section on "documents" of this work, where there is a fac-simile reproduction of this programme of study. From this document, the Rose-Croix appears to be a new embodiment of the hermetic rosicrucian movement of the XVIII and XIX centuries. This is an additional reason for hoping that the rituals for initiations and operations will be found.

The history of the Belgian movement between the two wars may be summarized, mainly for the period between 1923-1927 which is covered by a typed list of activities apparently written by Hiéronymus (Lelarge collection). On July 30, 1923, in the "Vale" of Brussels, Hiéronymus admitted to the University Rose-Croix, which was constituted at the same time, the lay persons Jean Mallinger, Georges van Steenbeek, both students of the Louvain Catholic University, and Jean Pastel, student in Brussels. On August 15, Hiéronymus authorized the University Rose-Croix to hold their first conventicle for the 25th. On December 31, 1925, Hiéronymus opened a "R+C center" in Brussels under the leadership of brother François Soeteway. Jean Mallinger was appointed Secretary.

On February 12, 1926, Hiéronymus appointed the dignitaries of the University Rose-Croix as follows: Sâr Sucus (François Soeteway) was appointed Imperator-coadjutor. Sâr Essenius (?) was appointed Secretary. Sâr Ignifer (?) was appointed Archon of Sciences and Arts. Sâr a Mare (?) was appointed Almoner. I do not know who were in charge of the Order from 1923 until that date, apart from Dantinne and possibly Soetewey. On a date which I am unable to specify, Jean Mallinger replaced Sâr Essenius as secretary.

BIRTH OF THE PYTHAGOREAN ORDER

On May 9, 1927, Hiéronymus gave the University Rose-Croix the task of forming hermetic centers in Belgium under the leadership of its Imperator, François Soetewey. (List of activities, Lelarge collection). Thus the Pythagorean Order, also known as the Ordre Hermétiste Tétramégiste et Mystique (O.H.T.M.), or simply the Ordre d'Hermès, which was intended as a "resurgence" of the ancient Pythagorean school. Here is an extract from a text, probably written by Mallinger, planning this resurgence, dated "the first day of the Era of Rectified (Revised?) Hermetism":

"The restoration of the Pythagorean Order under the form of a rectified hermetic Mas:: superior to all the usual symbolic Orders of the modern Mas:: can only be realized by a thorough modification of the Scope and Rituals of the Order.

"The greatest stringency should govern the recruitment of members of the Order. For, just as the R+C, although in a different domain and with different means, the Hermétists should be the Masons' guides.

"THE SQUARE OF PERFECTION, made up of 4 members, the Sublime Grand Master of the Order and his 3 secretaries or Unknown Superiors, should be the only executive, legislative and judiciary and administrative organ of the Order.

"The 4 grades may be called:
1) PYTHAGOREAN LODGE or First Degree.
2) SOVEREIGN OCCULT CHAPTER or Second Degree.
3) GRAND HERMETIC AREOPAGUS (Learned Assembly) or Third Degree.
4) SUBLIME LUMINOUS CONSISTORY or Fourth and final Degree.
These are ritual titles and their names originate from Ancient Traditions.

"Each of these Degrees will be unknown to the others. Their locations will be separated. The Masters to be studied in each of these Degrees will be designated by the Imperator or G::M:: of the Order". (Lelarge collection).

The restoration of the Pythagorean school took shape in the form of an Order made up of a preparatory degree followed by four degrees of initiation: Apprentice of Hermès, Companion of Hermes, possibly Master of Hermes. I do not know the name of the fourth degree. The Order was mixed, as was the case with rosicrucian Orders for which it constituted the antechamber. All candidates for rosicrucian initiation had to have the fourth degree of the OHTM. At the head of the Order was the universal unknown grand master, who was none other than Hiéronymus. The OHTM was divided up into national jurisdictions: The Perfect Squares, which were equivalent to a Masonic Grand Lodge. Each perfect square had a grand master at its head, usually assisted by four Archons: the Archon of the Order, the Archon of the Sciences and the Arts, the Archon of external relations, the Archon Almoner, as well as by a general clerk. From 1927 to 1938, François Soetewey took on the responsibility of Grand Master of the Perfect Square of Belgium, aided by Jean Mallinger in the position of Archon of the Order.

The motto of the OHTM was "Liberty - Equality - Fraternity - Wisdom". Its teachings seem to be based on those of the Pythagorean school. Let us note here that Jean Mallinger published two works on this subject which must be recommended: "The esoteric secrets of the Pythagoreans", 1946, and "Pythagorus and the mysteries", 1944 (re-edited today by the printery F. Planquart, Lille.), dedicated respectfully to Luis Fitau and François Soetewey.

THE INNER ROSE-CROIX

After having passed through the four degrees of the Hermetic Order, then the nine degrees of the University Rose-Croix, the initiate, having undergone the test of time, could be admitted to the inner Rose-Croix. The latter Order was made up of four other degrees which were very exclusive, the first three (Squire, Knight, Commander) having come from Joséphin Péladan's system. The fourth degree (Imperator) was only for a very select few. The latin motto of the Order was: "Ad rosam per crucem; ad crucem per rosam. In hoc signo gemmatus confidenter resurgam" and its symbol was a cross contained in a wide open rose. The general meetings were held according to the ritual of the degree of Squire. Finally, beyond the grade of Imperator, a final circle made its appearance: the Celestial Rose-Croix, made up of a single degree with that name. Since the meetings of the very rare members of this degree implied a high personal realisation, they could only ever have been informal. (In fact, one could never clarify the term Celestial Rose-Croix without debasing the idea it conveys. The studious reader will of himself grasp the meaning only for himself, the symbol and the great esoteric significance. With the Celestial Rose-Croix, the "terrestrial" ritual initiation must be surpassed to leave room for the internal initiation on which Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin insisted so much, the only valid initiation and the only true one.)

PROLOGUE TO THE FUDOSI

On a date which I have been unable to pinpoint exactly but which can be said to be around 1930, Hiéronymus planned to extend his activities outside Belgium and meet representatives of the initiation abroad, claiming to go back to a rosicrucian tradition, as was the case with Spencer Lewis, in the United States in particular. I will say a few words about the latter and his Order: Lewis was in touch with some occult groups in Europe. In 1926, he went to France for the second time and perhaps he even met Frédéric Jollivet-Castelot there. During that journey he may also have been to Switzerland and met occultists of that time who were connected with the rosicrucian tradition.

In 1930, Lewis associated with the German occultist Heinrich Traenker (1880-1956), known as "Recnartus", who considered himself to be the successor of Théodor Reuss and had formed the Collegium Pansophiae. At the same time, AMORC was introduced into France under the leadership of Dr. Hans Grueter who thus became the first Grand Master of the French jurisdiction.

Around 1932, Dantinne began to correspond with Lewis. Even though one would like to believe otherwise, I do not know that there was any relationship between the two men and, therefore, between the movements they were respectively in charge of, before the thirties. And Dantinne certainly was not the supposed initiator of Lewis, which would have enabled him to found AMORC. (Since the file is open, I would nonetheless like to specify early on that Spencer Lewis could have been in contact with rosicrucian groups in France and Switzerland before meeting Dantinne and before he gave him the responsibility in 1934 of representing the Rose-Croix on the American continent.)

Lewis responded to Dantinne's fraternal call. Close cooperation between them ensued. In 1933, Lewis received the honorary grade of Doctor in Psychological and Hermetic Sciences of the University Rose-Croix of Belgium and was thus entitled to have the title of Sâr. A copy of this diploma is kept in the Municipal Library in Lyon. Here is the text:

"SOVEREIGN ORDER OF THE OCCULTIST GOLDEN ROSE + CROIX, UNIVERSITY R + C OF BELGIUM. FREE FACULTY OF INITIATIC PHILOSOPHY. SALUTE TO ALL THE POINTS OF THE TRIANGLE AND RESPECT TO THE ORDER. A... F... A... E... R... C... B... D... D... N... Q... D... N... S.

"We, the Director and Professors of the Free Faculty of Initiatic Philosophy of the University Rose + Croix of Belgium, after deliberation, seeing that F... Spencer Lewis F.R.C., domiciled in the Vale of San José, has shown, in the interest of humanity, his perfect knowledge of the Initiatic Philosophy of Antiquity and particularly of Egyptian Hermeticism, of the Occult and Kabbalistic Science and of ritual Magic. Declare that F. Lewis, F.R.C. has received, on an honorary basis, the grade of Doctor in Psychological and Hermetic Sciences, and is thus entitled to bear the title of "Sâr" or Dr. of Initiatic Philosophy. This diploma having been issued and registered and signed on March 12 in the year of our Lord 1933, March 12 of the year 555 of CHR... R... K... our V... M... in the Vale of Brussels".

This certificate, registered under the number 21 in the official book of the University Rose-Croix, was signed by the archivist, Lucien François; the Director of the Faculty, Sâr Sapiens; by the Grand Archon and Secretary, Jean Mallinger and the Imperator for Europe, Dantinne. In addition, a letter from Jean Mallinger to Spencer Lewis concerning this was published by AMORC.

In the same year, Dantinne came into contact with Victor Blanchard, the Grand Master of the Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique, who had collaborated with Papus to establish an initiatic federation resulting from the Spiritualist Congress of 1908. Dantinne, Lewis and Blanchard prepared the international convent of August 1934, out of which the FUDOSI was to come into being.

AT THE AUGUST 1934 CONVENT

On August 8th, 1934, Hiéronymus opened the international convent of Initiatic Orders and Fraternities with a rosicrucian meeting to which only the rosicrucian Orders of the convent had been called. The opening speech by the Imperator Hiéronymus on the Rose-Croix has been partially reproduced in an article signed "Fra Amertis", entitled "What we are and what we want", published in 1935 in the magazine, The Rose + Croix, by Jollivet-Castelot, which was the organ of the Alchemical Society of France and of the Ancient and Mystical Order of the Rose-Croix. "Amertis" was the nomen of August Reichel, high leader of the Brotherhood of the Illuminated Brethren of the Rose-Croix, Grand Master of the Order of Unknown Samaritans and faithful disciple of Jollivet-Castelot. This article by Reichel followed an earlier study published in the previous issue of the same magazine under the evocative title of "Fama Fraternitatis". It would benefit the reader to refer to these two texts in which the programme and the intentions of the Swiss and French jurisdictions of the AMORC at that time were laid out as nowhere else.

At the convent of August 1934, a number of rosicrucian societies were represented, some of them from August 8, and others from the following days:
The Order of the Inner (or Universal) Rose-Croix by its Imperator Hiéronymus; The Order of the University Rose-Croix by Hiéronymus and Jean Mallinger, Imperator and Grand Secretary, respectively; the AMORC of America by its Imperator Spencer Lewis; the AMORC of France by its Grand Master Hans Grueter and its Grand Secretary, Jeanne Guesdon; the AMORC of Austria by its Grand Secretary, Many Cihlar; the Milicia Crucifera Evangelica by the Imperator Spencer Lewis; the Kabbalistic Order of the Rose-Croix by Victor Blanchard, delegate of the Grand Master Lucien Mauchel (known as Chamuel); the AMORC of Switzerland by August Reichel, delegate of the Grand Master Eduard Bertholet; the Brotherhood of the Illumined Brethren of the Rose-Croix by August Reichel, also the delegate of the French Alchemical Society representing the President Jollivet-Castelot.

The Convent had many positive consequences for the International Rose-Croix. Spencer Lewis received the mandate from the Imperator Hiéronymus to represent the Rose-Croix on the American Continent and AMORC was recognized as the only Order authorized to represent them over the Atlantic. Was this mandate, given by Hiéronymus, accompanied by a ritual investiture, conferred at the time of the Convent or later? We will return to this in the following chapter which more particularly concerns Spencer Lewis and AMORC. It appears that Spencer Lewis was initiated into the 13th degree of Dantinne's Inner Rose-Croix, but I do not know whether this individual initiation (degree of Imperator) should be classed as an investiture.

In Europe, the Convent of 1934 enabled hitherto practically non-existent links to be sealed between the various rosicrucian Orders which gladly went under the patronage of Sâr Hiéronymus, as was the case with the French and Swiss jurisdictions of AMORC. As the University Rose-Croix in Switzerland, AMORC became, in France and in Switzerland, a way of entry into the Inner Rose-Croix. According to August Reichel, the Grand Masters of the two latter rosicrucian jurisdictions were regularly consecrated, probably by Hiéronymus, in 1934. I do not know whether it was at the time of the August Convent.

In October of the same year, the introduction of a section of the University Rose-Croix into Switzerland was planned, of which Reichel and Bertholet were to be the leaders. I do not know what became of that plan.

On August 9, a Pythagorean meeting took place at which it was decided to extend the activities of the Ordre Hermétiste Tétramégiste et Mystique (OHTM) or Pythagorean Order, in France and Switzerland. Dantinne, as the Universal Grand Master of the Order, entrusted this task to Georges Bogé de Lagrèze with the title of Grand Master of the Perfect Square (the equivalent of the Grand Lodge) of France and Switzerland. In December 1934 or January 1935, France and Switzerland separated to form two distinct jurisdictions. Lagrèze became Grand Master of the Perfect Square of France and August Reichel the Grand Master of the Perfect Square of Switzerland. From the latter, a letter dated March 4, 1935 stated that two Swiss Pythagorean Orders were working under his leadership and gave the list of the members (10 brothers and 5 sisters) complete with the degree attained by each of them: eight members of the first degree, five members of the second (amongst which Dr. Eduard Bertholet is seen), one member of the third and one member of the fourth degree (who was none other than Frédéric Jollivet-Castelot, who was living in Clairac in France at that time).

Luis Fitau, the Chilean consul in Brussels, was also authorized by Dantinne to introduce the OHTM into his country with the title of Grand Master. He took on this task until his death in October 1939.

THE MEMPHIS-MISRAIM CONVENT

On August 10, on the demand of the "sublime grand world hierophant", brother Guerino Troilo, a lawyer in Rosario de Santa Fé in Argentina, opened the Convent of the Supreme International Council of the Oriental Masonic Order of Memphis-Misraïm. Troilo was absent, but on June 12, 1934, he authorized brother Jean Mallinger to represent him; he was also representing José-Rafael Canedo, Grand Master of the Rite for Bolivia. Present at the opening of the Convent were brothers Georges Lagrèze, representing Jean-Henri Probst-Biraben; Gattegno, delegate for Uraguay; Victor Blanchard; Hans Grueter; August Reichel, who were joined a few days later by brothers Spencer Lewis, Maurice De Seck, Many Cihlar and Luis Fitau.

After verifying the charters and powers of the delegates who were there, the Convent was solemnly opened by Georges Lagrèz, in the 97th degree of the rite. At subsequent meetings, some brothers who had only received charters without the corresponding ceremonial investiture received the necessary initiations. Thus, Georges Lagrèze, Jean Malliger and Maurice De Seck, 33rd 97th, initiated in accordance with the regular liturgy, Many Cihlar into the 18th degree, Spencer Lewis into the 66th (non-occult), 87th, 88th, 89th, and 90th degrees; Grueter, Fructus, Blanchard, Fitau, Reichel and Gattegno, into the 66th (occult), 87th, 88th, 89th and 90th degrees.

At the same time as the Convent of the rite known as "strict observance" (strictly male), a Convent of the mixed rite of the Memphis-Misraïm was held on August 11th.. For the two Orders of the rite, an International Supreme Council was formed, headed by the Grand Invisible Hierophant, Armand Rombauts, who was only to be known by the nomen of Or-Zam.

The works of the Memphis-Misraïm Convent were closed on August 14..

MARTINISM

Under the high presidency of the Grand Master Victor Blanchard, a Martinist group also held its sittings at the general Convent. Blanchard was also representing the Holy Synod of the Universal Gnostic Church, Lucien Mauchel (usually referred to as Chamuel) whose patriarchal nomen was T Bardesanes. Note that Blanchard was also representing Chamuel, President of the Supreme Council of the Kabbalistic Order of the Rose-Croix, which was complementary to Martinism.

The presence of the Martinist stream at the Convent, embodied by Blanchard's Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique, resulted in the reintroduction of Martinism into Belgium. At the time of the Convent, Emil Dantinne was received into the OMS, probably by Georges Lagrèze. It seems that that was also the case for other officers of the Convent, notably Spencer Lewis.

BIRTH OF THE FUDOSI

On August 14, 1934, fourteen spiritualist or initiatic fraternities were assembled in Brussels, the actual list of which is as follows:

Ordre de la Rose Croix universalle (ou intérieure)
Order of the Universal (or inner) Rose-Croix

Ordre de la Rose-Croix universitaire
Order of the Universtity Rose-Croix

Order kabbalistique de le Rose-Croix
Kabbalistic Order of the Rose-Croix

Confrérie des frères illuminés de la Rose+Croix
Brotherhood of the Illumined Brethren of the Rose-Croix

A.M.O.R.C. d'Amérique et son cercle de chevaliers de la Milicia crucifera evangelica
A.M.O.R.C. of America and its circle of Knights of the Milicia crucifera evangelica

Ordre ancien at mystique de la Rose-Croix (Suisse)
Ancient and Mystical Order of the Rose-Croix (Switzerland)

Société alchimique de France
Alchemical Society of France

Ordre des samaritains inconnus
Order of Unknown Samaritans

Ordre hermétiste tétramégiste et mystique (ou Ordre pythagoricien)
Tetramegist and Mystical Hermetic Order (or Pythagorean Order)

Ordre martiniste et synarchique
Martinist Order and Synarchique

Fraternité des Polaires (Polish Fraternity?)

Ordre maçonnique oriental de Memphis-Misraïm (dit de "stricte observance")
Oriental Masonic Order of Memphis-Misraïm (said to be of "strict observance)

Ordre maçonnique mixte de Memphis-Misaraïm
Mixed Masonic Order of Memphis-Misraïm.

At the time of the general Convent, the delegates of the fourteen societies represented unaminously decided to form the Initiatic Federation planned by Hiéronymus since 1930, which was in fact only the outcome of the plan launched by Papus at the time of the Spiritualist Congress in 1908 in Paris. Papus had had the idea of forming a federation of certain spiritualist organizations of his time which he was often thought to be in charge of. Under his leadership, and thanks to the collaboration of Victor Blanchard, the spiritualist Congress of June 1908 was held in Paris. The Martinist Order, the Kabbalistic Order of the Rose-Croix, the Order of the Illumined of Bavaria, various Masonic rites, such as the Memphis-Mizraïm rite, were represented. A short-lived Federation was created with its headquarters in Paris. Papus, having been mobilized in the Great War as a military doctor, then having died suddenly in 1916, the project had no immediate sequel.

The new Federation willingly became the successor to the former one and it adopted the name of Federatio universalis dirigens ordines societatesque initiationis (Universal Federation of Initiatic Orders and Societies) and the initials F.U.D.O.E.S.I. then F.U.D.O.S.I..

TEMPLE DE LA ROSE-CROIX

Dear Companions: # 134

We now carry on with our Alchemical study. This lecture has to do with the goal of the alchemists and will complete most of the introductory work. From the Instructions already given, you will have noted one predominant feature: the obvious emphasis placed upon Salt, Sulphur, and Mercury, which are referred to as "substances" alchemically, and "principles" philosophically.

These Three Principles or Substances are said to be compounded of the Four Elements and their Qualities, which we list as follows:

1. Fire . . . . . Warm and Dry
2. Air . . . . . Moist and Warm
3. Water. . . . . Cold and Moist
4. Earth. . . . . Dry and Cold

Let us amplify these and note first, that:

FIRE and WATER are opposite, and EARTH and AIR are opposite

EARTH and WATER and Heavy, (Passive or suffering) and AIR and FIRE are Light, (Active).

These classifications are according to Cornelius Agrippa, giving to each Element two specific properties, the first of each group being the exclusive property of the Element itself; the other being "like unto a medium connecting the Element with another Element."

According to Plato, each Element has also Three Qualities:

FIRE Sharpness, Thinness, Movability.
EARTH Darkness, Thickness, Rest or Quiet.

According to this designation, Fire and Earth assume opposite polarities so far as the qualities listed are concerned, and the other Elements borrow their qualities from these two:

AIR has with Fire, the Thinness and Movability, but takes of the Earth the Darkness.
WATER takes two qualities from the Earth: Darkness and Denseness (Thickness) and one quality from Fire: Moveability.

FIRE is 2 times as thin, 3 times as movable, 4 times as sharp as AIR.
AIR is 2 times as sharp, 3 times as thin, 4 times as movable as WATER
WATER is 2 times as sharp, 3 times as thin, 4 times as movable as EARTH

Now, as FIRE is in proportion to AIR, so AIR is to WATER, and WATER to EARTH, and vice versa.

Again, referring to alchemcial lecture 114(A), we note that in the process of extracting the Three Principles from the Four Elements, we find in Mercury a Water and a Spirit; in Sulphur a Fire and a Soul; and in Salt, an Earth and a Body; the whole process being completed in the bosom of the AIR.

This recapitulation has been made so as to make clear the relation of the Elements and the Principles to the ultimate goal of the Alchemists, which is the subject of this lecture.

The Great Central Point around which all our study revolves is the Sun, which has already been described both terrestrially and celestially, as well as philosophically.

The Sun is our immediate Author and Source of Being. From it result the Four Elements, which are the Sun in manifestation under the name of Nature. From the Four Elements or Nature, we extract the Three Principles and Substances, philosophical and alchemical.

The Four Elements and the Three Principles and Substances in their ultimate manifestation as known to us, compose Man, Physically, Mentally and Spiritually.

We are taught in the R+C that the subject of the Art is Man. The Object of the Art is the Perfection and Improvement of Man -- his transformation FROM A STATE OF NATURE TO A STATE OF GRACE.

This means the amplification and expansion of Man's human and mortal consciousness into the Cosmic Consciousness, which is the knowledge of and at-one-ment with GOD.

In other words: the attainment of the Supreme Wisdom.

Let us see how this is borne out by the teachings of Scripture and the Traditions of the Sages, after we first make a brief observation.

The Scriptures of all ages and races are absolutely at one upon this point, so we are justified in appealing to those most familiar to us for ready reference. In translations, as we have already observed, it is often necessary for the translator to be an interpreter, for he gets confronted with semantics, the exact meaning of words, and just what the original author is really trying to say. In all esoteric study of scripture, the word "fear" when rendered as "know", will be found to amplify and clarify the particular passages. Instead of "fear" God then, we have "know" God.

"Fear (know) God, and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man. Eccles. 12:13.

"The fear (knowledge) of the Lord is the beginning of Wisdom; a good understanding have all they that do his commandments."
Psalm 111:10.

It will be noted that the first citation "fear (or know) God and keep his commandments" is commonly ascribed to Solomon to whom is accredited the superlative wisdom, and this sage informs us that to KNOW God is the whole duty of man. Then in the next citation, we are told that to KNOW GOD is the BEGINNING OF WISDOM.

Now, the very name Solomon is impressive and commands our attention at the start, inasmuch as it is simply the name or word expressing Deity in three different languages; Sol, Om and On collectively, and in alchemical usage signifies the Sun of Wisdom. And co-incidently, we find the name Solomon ascribed in Hebraic history to be the human being who is alleged to have been the wisest man who ever lived.

The fact therefore that the name of the so-called wisest man is that of the Sun of Wisdom,and that the imperative statement of the "Sun of Wisdom" as represented by the threefold names of Deity is to "know God", and that to "know God" "is the beginning of wisdom", leads us at once to connect the process of the attainment of the goal of the Alchemist with a specific Divine Fiat.

The three greatest fiats ever known in connection with this planet and its evolution are: "Let there be Light." (Light is also wisdom). "Let us make man in our own image," (i.e. a reasoning creature). "Man, KNOW THYSELF."

As Man progresses through his incarnations and evolutionary waves, each human unit comes sooner or later to the realization of its divine sonship, and still later to its own inherent divinity in latency, and this realization when fully awakened means at-one-ment with God.

Therefore, when Man knows himself, he knows himself to be God in manifestation, because IN God and PART OF God, and INSEPARABLE from God at any moment of time, in eternity past or future.

And when Man knows himself to BE a God in latency, he becomes at-one-with God and KNOWS God, because in the consciousness of God's immanence, and when the process of Man's development and unfoldment has reached THIS stage, that of KNOWING God, then Wisdom just begins; for we are told that the KNOWLEDGE of the Lord (God), is the BEGINNING OF WISDOM.

So, going back to our starting point, the Sun, which is dual in its nature, i.e. a physical body for the inner spiritual Sun or God of our Solar System, we find resulting therefrom the Four Elements, the Three Principles or Substances, and finally in obedience to the primal fiat: Man.

The process and progress of the Art is therefore Man's unfoldment and his transformation from a state of Nature OR THE FOUR ELEMENTS -- to a state of GRACE -- by the proper application of the Three Principles and the Three Substances; the "state of Nature" being a state of ignorance and blind obedience to the guidance of Nature principles, and the "State of Grace" being the attainment of the state of Wisdom by the proper understanding of the Three Principles compounded of the Nature Principles or Four Elements.

The ultimate goal therefore, of the Alchemists, was the supreme or divine wisdom, and back of all the apparently incoherent jargon of allegorical, symbolical, and scientific nomenclature and formulae, Wisdom will be seen to be their goal, plainly and indisputably to the initiate; their processes, operations, coagulations, subliminations, etcetera, being symbolical of the processes, trials, tests and victories of the seeker and pilgrim along the Path of Attainment.

Therefore the term:

Putrefactio, means the gradual putrefaction and decomposition of the accretions of the Astral and Physical Bodies; desires and lusts.

Purefactio, The purification of the lower vehicles of Man for the greater facility of use by the Ego.

Regeneratio, The act of being reborn in the Spirit. The penetration of the Soul and Body by the Divine heat of love, and the light of intelligence, emanating from the divine fire within the heart. The awakening and development of spiritual self-consciousness and self-KNOWLEDGE.

Resurrectio, means the resurrection or initiation into a higher state of existence. It refers to the new life into which the perfected elements of a being enter after the imperfect ones with which they have been amalgamated have been destroyed.

(Note to student: Kindly remember these lectures were originally given orally and on those occasions the Biblical quotations were articulated at the time. So as to save space we are omitting to write out the following quotes, but would ask you to pause and read them for yourself in your Bible so as to follow exactly. Thank you.)

The Solomonic advice is reiterated many times. In Proverbs I:7 " ... ". Again, Proverbs 9:10 " ... ".

And you are urgently requested to study carefully the 7th, 8th and 9th chapters of Proverbs covering the whole of Solomon's teachings on the subject of wisdom.

It will be seen immediately, in the light of the Solomonic teachings and our present knowledge of the Hermetic Arts, that the only true goal of the Alchemists could only have been: the perfection and improvement of Man to the attainment of Wisdom, his transformation from a state of natural ignorance, to a state of grace or intelligence, which is wisdom; and finally, the attainment of the alchemical gold or Sol, which is the Sun of Wisdom through processes analogous to the transmutation of metals.

We are told that with the philosophical Stone we can accomplish great power.

Hear what Wisdom sayeth of herself:

Proverbs 8:10-36 "Receive my instruction, AND NOT SILVER; and KNOWLEDGE, rather than choice GOLD. ....." (Please be sure you read this quotation completely).

Proverbs 4:7 "....
Romans 11:33 "....
1 Cor. 3:18-19 "....

Companions: If WISDOM is the PRINCIPLE THING, if wisdom of this world is foolishness with God, if Wisdom was the one thing chosen in place of all else, by the personage who has been called the wisest among men, can we doubt that Wisdom in the esoteric or highest, inner sense, was the one thing sought by our ancient and medieval brethren?

The complicated processes of their art are the sure methods of success and ultimate attainment for us to follow if we would attain the sublime heights they undoubtedly attained ... for these methods were based upon principles of proven scientific accuracy.

THE IMAGE OF GOD IN YOU

The quest for Truth is really a search for the Self. Of course we know a little about the "self" as we express preferences for certain foods, clothes, music, or even preachers. But do we know the person who makes these choices?

Often we say, when we have done something wrong, "I just wasn't myself today." But who is this self? This implies that, of all the various levels of consciousness on which you function, one of them is really you, and the rest are something (or someone) else.

Some years ago, a leading magazine published a series of striking articles entitled, "The Girl With The Hundred Selves." The writer portrayed the different and often contradictory selves that from time to time assumed ascendancy in the girl's life. This was an exaggerated case, but in a very real sense, it is typical of human nature. We are, all of us, men and women of "a hundred selves".

We are so accustomed to revealing these selves like a chameleon in the face of different experiences that we often predict which self will express: "Oh, you know me, I will probably freeze up as soon as I face that audience." Yes, I know me, but do I know "I"? Do I really know my true self? Or do I simply have a self-image of limitation? Actually, you can tell what you think you are by the way you see yourself acting. The man with the positive self-image acts as if he were capable and confident. The man with the poor self-image acts, and sees himself acting, as weak and worthless.

So often we say, after some disappointing performance, "What's wrong with me?" But, that doesn't help at all. It is much better to turn the question around and ask, "What's right with me?" We already have reflected in our self-image the shortcomings, but what is wrong simply hides what is right. Our weaknesses obscure our strengths, and our failures frustrate our success potential.

We must remember, "God created man in his own image." This means that you were created with Divine potentials and the power to fulfill them. Know this and you will discover how harmful it is to be self-effacing. To downgrade yourself is to demean God. To be created in the image of God means that you have in you all the attributes of God--love, goodness, truth, and beauty.

If it were possible to remove all of these positive attributes from every living person on earth, and recombine them into one entity or one unity, what would happen? I think that without a moment's hesitation, the whole world would turn to that unity and worship it and call it God. And this is right. For to worship God we must be able to find Him in the qualities of man. Jesus said, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father."

The greatest need in the world is for the expression in man of the qualities of his innate Divinity. The world hungers for persons who have a self-image based on their insight of their divine image.

We see the perfect image of God in the life of Jesus: His love for children, His devotion to the common people, His concern for the sick, His desire to reveal to others the nature of the Kingdom. And we see glimpses of God in others, too: Lincoln's pardoning the soldier who "couldn't be blamed if his legs were cowardly," in Schweitzer's ministering to the natives of Africa, in Churchill's rallying of men to the cause of freedom while London burned. And God expresses in everyday life--in the smile of a baby, the voice of a devoted loved one, and in any act of kindness. Goodness is God breaking through into human life.

At his best, man does not create a glorified self-image--he creates an image of God. The image may be partial and incomplete; but to the degree that a man expresses the highest and the best, he is expressing God. The more goodness a man expresses, the more God-like his image becomes. Being created in God's image means that man can "think God's thoughts after Him." He is endowed with the ability to understand the Universe and the atom and the whole of things of which he is a part.

You have the potential for total goodness within, and the ability to rejoice in that which is pure and good and wholesome despite the appearances of that which is evil. Goethe puts it this way, "If the eye were not of a sunny nature, how could it see the sun? If God's own power did not exist within us, how could the God-like delight us?"

There is much talk these days about improving our self-image through psychological means. But we are directed to pick what "other" image we want, to replace the one we have. Often this leads to picking someone else's image and trying to make it our own.

You are a unique creature with the image of God stamped upon you. You may not be expressing it, but there is no-one on earth quite like you. Your job is to fulfill this uniqueness and to let God be God in you, and as you. As E.E. Cummings wrote, "To be nobody but myself, in a world which is doing its best, night and day, to make you everybody else, means to fight the hardest battle which any human being can fight, and never stop fighting."

It is your privilege to uncover your uniqueness and to fulfill it. Rather than trying to get a self-image that conforms to outer accomplishments that you yearn for, the great need is to know that your divine image is seeking expression in creative and wonderful ways. Take time in meditation to get acquainted with yourself, and thus experience the inspiration of creative mind. Knowledge is ours for the asking, we only need plug into it.

It is vital that we realize that revelation is progressive. It is not a special dispensation of God, but a quality of Divine Mind and a faculty of the mind of man. What God revealed to the prophets in the Bible may be less important than what he is revealing to you today. What He said to them addressed the needs of their time and their culture, and most of the truths that were revealed are still relevant today. But, as life is lived and time unfolds, new understanding is needed.

God still speaks to man. He speaks to you. You must listen and not hesitate to proclaim to your age what you hear. And the way to do that is to build this inspiration and new-found image into your life and affairs.

This is the way to form a good self-image based on Divine Image. As Emerson says, "Intuition is the continuation of the divine effort that made the man."

Let your intuitive forces lead you to know and express the God-qualities within you. Let the inspiration of the Almighty lift your thoughts of self-limitation to the realization of your Divinity.

DEVOTED TO THE ADVANCEMENT AND MYSTICAL ENLIGHTENMENT OF MAN

ANSWERS TO FOURTH COLLEGE EXAM

1. Regular rythmic breathing induces calmness to the mind, so that it becomes clear. Outside disturbances does not interfere, so concentration becomes easier, facilitating the expression of the will, permitting it to gain in strength, as it will flow forth with less resistance.

2. The average person does not breathe through both nostrils at the same time, but alternates breathing through the right and left nostril in a slow rythm varying individually from less than an hour to more than three hours. This changing of nostrils causes a change in the intake of positive and negative Prana. The pranic respiration corresponds completely with the physical respiration, but takes place in the eteric body and is received in the pranic organ whereas the physical respiration enters the lungs. The pranic organ is made up of two channels or nadis, Ida and Pingala, beginning in the nostrils, left and right, respectively, and ending at the lower end of the spinal column along which a third channel is running. The air we breathe vitalizes the blood and cleans it through the activity taking place in the lungs, but there are other qualities in the air that is subtly taken up by the various glands in the head, the throat and the chest being close to the air passages, and regulates their various functions. The prana is very similar to these subtle qualities in that it is polarized, almost electrical in character. The changing of nostril in respiration causes periods of negative or positive domination, of lunar and solar activity, in the subtle and in the physical nervous system. Breathing through the left nostril gives a negative predominance and a peroid of dominance to the right half of the brain, thus to feeling and intuition and artistic expression, whilst breathing through the right nostril gives a positive pranic predominance and a period of dominance to the left half of the brain, thus to reason and logic and scientific expression. This alternation is important in that it gives the opportunity for a fuller experience of the opposite aspects of life, but it is vital to man's health and sanity. Mastering physical respiration is also mastering the pranic respiration, and is one key to releasing the fiery snakes of the so-called Kundalini-power, being coiled up at the root of the spine, but then it is important to realize the dangers involved in waking such beasts abruptly!

3. An Egregor is a collective entity. It may be a human organization or a nation, but its structure reaches beyond the merely visible or physical, since it is analoguous to the human being. The egregor is the complete collective entity having its astral and mental "bodies". An egregor is thus a spiritual force created and accumulated by the individuals making up its organization, and may therefore be a good or an evil force. Like the human being, an egregor dies not when its vehicle, i.e. the individuals parttaking in it, is destroyed or dies. Instead, its energies are freed from its physical weight and may find a new vehicle for its expression, reincarnating, so to say, in a new group, organization or nation. An egregor working in harmony with the Divine, receives strength and guidance from the divine plane in working out its mission, and every member of the egregor will benefit from it. That is an important fact to keep in mind!

4/5. The whole of the Martinist doctrine rests on the premise that Man's first achievement and endeavour along the Path of Reintegration must be directed towards self-knowledge and self-realization. The meaning of this is that the first, and every step thence, that man takes towards Reintegration needs must be through himself to realize that all he really is, is also God. There is only one beacon pointing towards Reintegration, and it points through the Self. Achieving truer self-knowledge is actually achieving greater God-knowledge, for as man comes to know himself, he will also know that he is, has always been and will ever be one with God. Reintegration is entering into this one-ness again. This also describes "The Inner Way", the way through self-realization and self-knowledge to full realization of divine unity and certainty of God.

Dear Companions:

Let us talk about intuition ... What it is, and so on. Intuition is a relatively new word, although the faculty itself is as old as man himself. It is not mentioned in the Bible as such, though its result — prophecy — is mentioned constantly and you may wonder why. The reason is because propecy was regarded in ancient times as a divine faculty, which God bestowed upon a chosen few, instead of being seen as a faculty all men have, and will develop eventually, as a result of definite spiritual development and perception during their evolutional journey.

Well, are intuition and foresight the same thing, you might ask? Yes and no. Intuition is a word which is being used very freely among many groups and people these days. They have "feelings about this and that," when in reality they have only had a keen sense of observation and good common sense -- and subconsciously put the two together and arrived at the so-called "hunch". But intuition, real intuition, is something far greater than that. Usually, intuition manifests at unexpected moments, and from an absolutely clear sky. In other words, from "no-where", because intuition is a faculty of the soul, not of the mind. Intuition is the intelligence of the soul, its perceptive awareness.

That is why intuition always manifests as "feeling" more than thought, because it is "spiritual sensing" which comes to those who have a sensitive soular constitution. What do I mean by a sensitive soular constitution? Spiritual refinement.

Intuition is a faculty we can and do develop as our feelings become more sensitive and refined. An unfeeling individual is rarely intuitional, and the purely intellectual, almost not at all. That is why the coldly scientific individual is unable to feel any intuition (or rarely so) and as a result his work lacks vital essence. Look at individuals who have had great intuition, in them you will discover persons who have done much for the well-being of mankind. Biographies are replete with intuitional experiences of the great. Many of the world's greatest achievements have been accomplished through the direct operation of real intuition.

But just what is intuition? Some may say "spiritual sight," "spiritual consciousness," "supersensory perception;" others: "spiritualized common sense." Intuition is not only a faculty of the soul, but a product of the Ego. It is the result of spiritual perception. It is the Ego speaking through the soul to the outer man. That is why intuition comes in "flashes" and not as a constant flow -- because with the majority of humanity, there is not a sufficiently continuous balance between the vehicles. When this balance is attained, intuition is the result. Observe the flashes of intuition that came to you - they usually come at moments of relaxation, seldom under tenseness. When you are upset or tense your intuition fails you, or so you think. It is there but is unable to express itself, so long as you are distressed. Disturbed emotions prevent the operation of real intuition, because your emotions are part of your soular constitution, and your mental distress is also causing confusion, because your soul is also a product of your thinking. We cannot ever escape the close relationship between our emotions and our thoughts, because it is these that make us what we are.

Then what about our intuitional warnings of danger, when one is truly upset and in a difficult situation, where intuitively one senses danger and averts disaster almost by a hair's breadth? At such times, though one is truly keyed up, the predominating thought, feeling and action is one of self-preservation and we must remember that self-preservation is the most keenly developed instinct in man, for otherwise he would not have survived in aeons past.

Are instinct and intuition two different faculties, then? They are different to the extent that they manifest on different planes of consciousness. Instinct pertains to the self entirely; intuition is born when man begins to sense spiritually and perceives truth instantly. Intuition requires a soul through which to express. The materialist, devoid of spiritual awareness, is still guided by instinct. Many persons have had instinctive flashes of self-preservation and have interpreted it as intuition. Animals have instinct developed to a wonderful degree, yet we do not refer to it as intuition, but instinct. Study all nature and you will marvel at her intelligence and wisdom. Yet we are informed that animals do not reason but are guided by instinct.

Salmon have been known to swim various oceans to return to the river of their birth for spawning. The life of the bee is so wonderfully organized that even man has not been able fully to live up to it. Follow the living habits of all species of animals and you will find intelligence and wisdom manifesting, while the instinct of self-preservation seems to be the most keenly developed. Animals sense danger even before it manifests outwardly, yet at no time do we refer to that sense as intuition, -- yet we translate that sense to man ... and erroneously call it intuition.

The instinct animals follow are the group intelligence of their species, which is under the direction of a Group Spirit. If we truly realized and understood what a Group Spirit is, we would appreciate more fully this instinct of the animal kingdom. Obeying their so-called instinct is the closest to the Divine the animal kingdom is capable of expressing at this stage of their evolutional career. For the instinct expressed by animals is under the direction and guidance of the Group Spirit of each particular species.

Although this lecture is not on Group Spirits it might be well to get a better understanding of the tremendous work conducted by these little understood, marvelous spiritual beings. If any of you have thought of Group Spirits as beings of low intelligence and spiritual evolution, you should immediately alter your ideas. Group Spirits are beings of high evolutional and spiritual development who have terminated earthly incarnations and have chosen as their work the guidance and protection of their younger brothers.

Have you ever met a person, intelligent, capable and fine, who so dearly loved animals they practically devoted their life to their care and well-being? Carry this same love and care for the animal kingdom to a much higher degree and you begin to understand the love and intelligence of what we call a Group Spirit. It requires many incarnations to prepare for this task, and only when one has been found capable and worthy is one allowed to take part in this wonderous work.

Just as in everything else, there are many grades and degrees of capability and understanding among these helpers who work in groups and not alone. The term Group Spirit is truly meant in a plural sense, for it is not the intelligence and effort of one being -- but of thousands of beings devoted to the cultivation and improvement of our younger brethren. Is it any wonder that under the guidance of such intelligent, wise and loving care, our younger brothers display the engineering, architectural and artistic genius that they do?

Could anything be more beautiful, symmetrical and well planned than the wing of a bird, or butterfly? Consider the eye of a fly, and the bee, the latter "which has 6,000 to 7,000 facets to its lateral eyes and a triple cyclopean eye on its brow." Or look to the Sea Gull -- it can see a fish at an unbelievable height with those tiny eyes of his, requiring no telescope to find his prey.

Take any ordinary city anywhere and meditate upon all the various activities taking place at one time to make that city possible: you will begin to understand what it must signify on the inner planes to have all of creation functioning in order and in rhythm. The mayor of the city may be its nominal head, but the activities of the city are the result of the work of individuals who comprise that city.

Likewise, on the inner planes of consciousness we are constantly striving to improve, build and create better conditions, not only of our surroundings but of those immediately under our care. As we become thoroughly trained in one field we are transferred to others when ready and willing, for nothing is compulsory, but comes from within us, for unless we wish to do something, we cannot and will not do it well.

Perhaps it may be difficult for you to accept the fact that the tiniest forms of life are under the guidance of highly evolved beings, but realize this: only very highly evolved beings would be interested in the tiniest of creation. The younger the soul ... the more it craves for importance and size, whether in numbers or dimensions. A being who has attained real spiritual illumination knows that everything in cosmos has value and importance and all creation is serving a Great Purpose.

The instinct displayed by animals is their response to the collective intelligence and guidance of the group spirit. As animals progress in their own evolution, their capacity to respond increases, and as the capacity increases, their evolutional growth advances likewise.

Now, what has all this to do with intuition? A great deal. At least by analogy. Exactly what is meant by the animal kingdom being under the guidance of the Group Spirit? Let us regard our younger brothers as forms of evolving life. In their limited development they are as yet unable to respond directly to the tremendous spiritual vibrations of God, or to partake of the benefits from Universal Mind and that is why individual thought or reasoning is impossible -- but they are evolving toward it. The Group Spirits gradually expose them to the amount of intelligence they can absorb in diluted form, through the process of induction and developing their instincts through their senses. It is a long and laborious process, but in eternity time does not exist: it is only results that matter. To achieve a given result in the evolution and development of a given faculty, it may require thousands upon thousands of years, as we calculate in so called time, but to those on the spiritual side of life that does not seem important. What is important is the development of the particular faculty or vehicle that is being encouraged to be formed as part of the Creative Plan.

Man's intuition is a faculty he is now beginning to develop or awaken, because he has not had the equipment necessary with which to express it before. Intuition is the instant perception of truth or reality. It is a divine or spiritual faculty which is unfolding or growing, as man evolves and grows spiritually. Just as instinct is a preliminary step to intuition, likewise the development of intuition is a pre-requisite to the attainment of spiritual illumination and cosmic consciousness. If a person's intuition increases as he grows older, it is an indication that the person is growing spiritually, while if the contrary is the case, it is an indication he has allowed physical conditions to become more important for the time being.

Man's intuition is his spiritual periscope. Real intuition never leads one astray, because it is an expression of the divine. Many earnest and sincere persons are misguided because they think they are following intuitional guidance when all they are following is the cry of the astral body. Our intuition will never guide us to harm ourselves or another, regardless of the circumstances. That, you can take as an infallible rule. If at any time you receive a so-called "hunch" and it did not work out -- it was not an intuitional flash.

Did you ever experience a "feeling" of not liking someone for any reason? Is that your intuition warning you? What does it signify? It is not your intuition! Many people experience these feelings who are not in the least way intuitional, but have very strong likes and dislikes. This feeling again is a matter of the astral body. Repulsion and attraction are functions arising from the astral body -- they are not intuition. It is a matter of astral chemistry, or the blending or clashing of auras, which is extremely important in our relationships with others ... attraction and repulsion are, however, not characteristics of the intuition.

How many individuals there are who have not liked each other upon first acquaintance and later have become staunch friends -- and how many who were desperately in love "at first sight" (they just "felt" they belonged to each other) -- and have since separated or have been divorced. The astral body and its sensorium was again in operation here. Astral attractions and repulsions are not always based on truth, but on temporary reactions based upon many different factors, some deep seated but most of them superficial and transient in nature, in other words changeable and fleeting -- (and that, by the way, is why the predictions of many so-called "psychics" who pick up impressions from the astral level, are as often wrong as they are right.)

Now you ask: "if intuition is the intelligence and perceptive quality of the soul, how is it that it expresses through the "feelings" instead of through our intellect and minds? Is this a contradiction?"

Only until one understands the function of the soul.

Remember the soul is three-fold in nature. It is conscious, emotional and intellectual. The function of the soul is to extract from our present life expression, the essence of experience from each vehicle, for final absorption by the Ego. It is a living essence upon which the Divine Spark feeds and grows. The soul therefore acts as a channel between the outer and the inner man. Although man builds, as it were, a new soul in each life, he does bring over the essence of the previous ones, not only in the seed atoms, but in the Ego itself. That is why we speak of "old souls." During man's involutionary career, he was governed largely by instinct, just as the animal kingdom is today, but as soon as he became a self conscious being, began to use his free will, commenced to think, developed his feelings and carried out plans, -- he began to develop a soul.

The reason that intuition expresses mainly as feeling instead of thought is because man's astral body is more perfected than his mental sheath. Eventually, intuition will operate through the mind, as the mental body becomes more evolved and co-ordinated. It is not that intuition, to be intuition, must function only through the feelings. It is rather that man is not ready to respond in any other way at the present time. Remember this always: man's ultimate destiny is to spiritualize all his faculties. Eventually the mental body will respond to all that at present requires the etheric and astral to effect. Through ignorance, many disparage the mind and intellect. Eventually the mental will supercede all ... but not until the mental body has acquired the ability to express all the spiritual qualities necessary, without the aid and assistance of the other vehicles which at present are necessary.

You may wonder how this can be accomplished and not lose something thereby. Here is an illustration which may help to clarify: When man first appeared on earth his one means of transportation was his feet. Then, as he domesticated animals, he used those. Then as he began to develop imagination he developed or discovered the use of the wheel ... and the wheel has finally taken him to the sky!

Has man's travelling been impeded because he flies instead of walks? By no means, just the reverse. It has increased his usefullness. So with the mental body. When man fully develops this vehicle, he will not miss a single one of his present ones, because they will all be included, as far as functions are concerned, in that body. Man will then think and feel SYNCHRONOUSLY. The conflicts between his emotions and mind or reason, will be under control, because they will both be working together,- instead of independently. This is something difficult to describe because it involves the understanding of consciousness.

Right now, strive to seek balance and equal use and control of the emotions and the mind & intellect. The more man uses his mind and controls his emotions or feelings, the greater will be his spiritual progress and this is the lesson for YOU to learn, at this time.

Perhaps you may wonder how intuition actually operates and through which plane of consciousness. It operates through the reflecting ether, and the intuitional principle is centered in the Pineal Gland.

As you know, the reflecting ether contains, just as its name implies, a reflection of all that exists -- or reality, therefore when our soular being is sensitive or refined it can in flashes pick up the truth, as reflected in the ethers. As I said earlier: Intuition is the intelligence of the soul ... its perceptive awareness. It is the intelligence of your inner senses. It is your intuitional faculty that knows there is a God. It is something so deeply rooted in man, that it cannot be swerved nor changed by outer conditions. That is why when an individual has intuitional perception, no amount of argument will change him. It is not that he is stubborn, he KNOWS, ... but through an inner conviction of the truth, which no words can alter. It is a precious gift, which man should cultivate, treasure and follow, for it is the divine in him seeking natural expression.

What is intuition?

When do you begin to experience intuition?

What is the difference between instinct and intuition?

How does intuition reveal itself?

Can intuition be developed, and if so, how?

How can you know when you are being intuitive and not just experiencing a fancy of the imagination?

Is intuition a product of spiritual development?

Is psychic development and spiritual development the same?

What is the difference between a "psychic impression" and an "intuitive flash"?

EXERCISE FOR THE MONTH

Intuition, being "inner knowing", can be possessed only through the slow and natural way of developing spiritually our inner faculties -- through the exercise of RIGHT THOUGHT, RIGHT FEELING, and RIGHT ACTION.

The Divine in us is ever there -- but how rarely do we allow it to express in its fullness and beauty? Intuition does not depend on "getting" ... but in giving forth or flowing uninhibitedly from the Divine in us. This "knowing" depends only on our Inner Divine Self; it gains a glimpse of "what is". Therefore, our intuition being a function of the spirit, this activity can only find a channel of expression when we are ready instruments or vehicles. Observe that intuitive persons usually are sensitive to the needs of others, considerate and out-going. It could'nt be otherwise, when you understand that intuition is a spiritual faculty.

It is in moments of quiet meditation and prayer that our intuition is given the proper atmosphere or climate to grow more fully - though flashes of it do come through on other occasions.

Meditate this month on "I and my Father are one" and let your intuition flow! When you succeed in feeling a unity with your Divine Source, you will experience something akin to spiritual freedom. The inhibiting conditions between your various vehicles will dissolve, and the Divine in you will flow through to your outer consciousness. All these lessons have been preparing you for the light to SHINE THROUGH. Realize the Divine in you is eager to express through the vehicles you possess. The cleaner they are, the clearer the channel becomes. TRY! AND KEEP ON TRYING! Do not allow discouragement to stop you.

With kindest good wishes and loving thoughts for your progress always.

Sincerely yours in the Work

Soeur

Dear Companions:

This lecture is entitled Technique of the Inner Way.

Did you know, like Hinduism, that Eastern Christianity has its yoga ... a mystical technique to achieve union with the Divine Logos? The method is through uninterrupted prayer, just like breathing or the beating of the heart. We call this yoga the *"Prayer of the Heart" and it is the true "way of the heart" of the Christian tradition.

This technique is not a playing on the sensibilities of the faithful and the devoted; on the contrary: it demands self-mastery, a method of prayer, a whole spiritual science to which certain monks of old consecrated themselves entirely. This method of uninterrupted prayer is found in the ascetic tradition of the Eastern Church and has been traced far back into antiquity.

This technique of the "inner way" was transmitted from master to disciple, following the same method applied in the eastern schools. Regarding historical notations: it was first written down at the beginning of the 11th century in a treatise by Saint Simon. Later, in the 12th century, it became the central theme to which the monk Necephores dedicated his essays. Saint Gregory of Sinai re-established this technique in the 14th century among the monks of mount Athos. We find references to this practice with Saint John Climacus in the 7th century and with Saint Hysechius of Sinai in the 8th century, also with the great mystics of the 3rd and 4th centuries in some texts, where certain attributes of Christ were linked to the theory of Divine Names (or names of power) of the Kabala.

Saint John Chrysostomos tells us that: "For the name of our Lord Jesus Christ to descend into the depths of your heart, and for him to vanquish the dragon that devastates your surroundings and for him to save your soul and vivify it, you have to attach yourself constantly to the name of the Lord Jesus, so that your heart takes in the Lord and the Lord your heart, this way you both become one."

GENERAL RULES OF THE TECHNIQUE

In order to practice this technique of the "Inner Way", you must begin at sun down. (Usually between the hours of six and nine p.m., depending on where you are). Your Oratory should be dimly lighted and you should sit comfortably on a chair, with the spine erect. You should be facing the eastern wall of the room, upon which a Greek cross should be drawn (at eye level while sitting). You should burn some incense which has previously be exorcised.

While sitting as comfortably as you can and looking at the cross, pronounce the following mantra inwardly:

KYRIE IESSOU CHRISTE IE THEOU
ELEISON IMAS AMARTANON

[Lord Jesus Christ, Son of God, have pity on me, sinner that I am]

It is interesting to observe how much this litany resembles the Tibetan mantra "OM MANI PADME UM ... OM MANI PADME UM ..." which is the mantra for the Buddha of Mercy, Avalokitesvara. The Eastern and Latin liturgies also use this formula "Kyrie Eleison" and the bija, or sound vibrations, are close to one another in the Tibetan formula, as well as in the Christian Eastern formula.

Before beginning this technique, meditate on yourself and your life; go over your past, your present and the outcome of your future.

Meditate on how this cycle will end and how it will be replaced by the next Eon.

Next,
meditate on the reward which is but the fixation of the fire principle.
Acknowledge your weaknesses and your sins, as well as your contribution to the present state of the world.

From this interior climate must result feelings of remorse and repentance.
This state of transmutation of the interior being, analogous to the alchemical "putrefaction" (which we will soon learn more about in the alchemical series) must be attained and maintained until this climate is no longer felt.
If you see that this state has no effect on you, you should pray for the grace to feel it.

Also, keep in mind that this exercise is not geared to turn you into a pessimist. On the contrary, the rule of this technique states that you must live a joyous life, have a good sense of humor and feel happy that you are treading the right path. But this "putrid" state must be attained before you continue with the exercise.

It is recommended that you use a rosary of 72 beads for this exercise.
You use them as markers while repeating the mantra on each bead.
(You can make a rosary by tying 72 knots in a piece of cord.)

Breathing should be regular and made rhythmic with the formula which is said only inhaling (through the nose). Remember: the pronounciation of this mantra is said inwardly, never verbally.

Be warned that this technique is concomitant with great temptations, even infestations, hauntings and demoniacal apparitions. This is why the air must be purified by censing with exorcised incense prior to commencing.

Just as the true yogi rejects the siddhis (psychic powers) as means used by inferior paths in order to lead him astray while trying to tread the spiritual path, so the "way of the heart" of Eastern Christianity rejects all desire and prominence. In this regard, Saint Nil of Sinai tells us:

"If you want to behold the celestial Father, do not try to discern any image or figure while praying.
Reject any desire to see the Angels, Powers, or the Christ in any physical form.
To persist in doing so is to risk loosing your sanity, to mistake the way for the shepherd and to adore demons instead of God.... the road to error, is in the desire of the mind to attempt to grasp divinity in an image or figure."

This technique, by its very nature, has a tendency to awaken the kundalini. On the awakening of that force, which is a sort of psychic energy of an innate nature, of which the writings on it always warns of the dangers of trying to control it if you are not guided by a master, the Judeo-Christian Scriptures also refer to it in Deut. 4:24; Jeremiah 23:29; Isaiah 2:2; and Hekhaloth, Rebbati 3:4.

This fire has two aspects. We know that the Temple of Solomon, which was a replica of the Tabernacle, was built by Solomon according to the plans he received from his father David, from the hands of the prophet who was the keeper of Israel's esoteric tradition of that time.

We know that the Temple was built according to the image of God, Man and the Universe and that to study the Temple ... was to study the others also. In the Temple, there were two altars upon which were burnt two different fires. One was the altar of incense and the other was the altar of sacrifice. The first altar corresponds to the heart and the second to the mind, where we have to sacrifice our passions.

Each one of the five sacred objects: the Arc of the Covenant, The Menorah, the altar of incense, the altar of sacrifice and the sea of brass ... corresponds to one of the psychic centers which are essential to our interior temple. The Rosicrucian, Robert Fludd, reminds us of this when he writes: "When the temple will be consecrate, its dead bricks will become alive once again. The impure metals will be transmuted into fine gold and Man will once again regain his first estate."

EXERCISE REPORT: We would wish to have reports on the experiences of those Companions who elect to use this technique.

Dear Companions:

You have certainly heard the word "chakra" before ... it is a Sanskrit word. In Western language a chakra is called a "psychic center". In this lecture (and in ones to come) I will use these words interchangeably. You will remember in an earlier lecture the point was made that in matters transcendental, the English language lacks a vocabulary which adequately covers the area of metaphysics. The problem with the "Eastern" vocabulary is that the names and words are quite foreign to Westerners and they often have difficulty in remembering and pronouncing them. As usual, however, we will try to keep things as simple as possible.

For centuries, anatomists have been studying the human body, and by observation and disection and with the aid of instruments that have become more and more perfect, they now have an extremely detailed knowledge of its physical structure. But for all that they are still very far from the intimate understanding of man's subtle anatomy which Initiates have gained through clairvoyance and spiritual experience.

One of the most striking aspects of this is the discovery made by Indian Initiates concerning the Chakra System of man. For thousands of years they have taught that beyond the limits of the physical body, in his etheric and astral bodies, man has a series of subtle force-centers lying particularly along the axis of the spine.

The chakras are subtle force centers situated in the etheric body, that vitalize and control the physical body. This word means "wheel", indicating that these force centers are wheels of energies.

The etheric body is sometimes called the "vital body" and is composed of the four ethers. Although of a tenuous nature, it is the framework or foundation underlying every part of the denser physical body; it vitalizes or energises the physical cells; it is the clearing-house for all the forces coming to the physical from higher dimensions, transmitting them through the nervous, endocrine and blood systems; it is the transmitter and receiver of telepathic impulses of an intuitive, mental or emotional nature and it provides the channel for the physically focused consciousness to register the subtler worlds.

The etheric body is below the threshold of consciousness and is generally recognized only in terms of vitality. It has been described as "a body composed entirely of lines of force, ... and of points where these lines of force cross each other." In crossing each other, these lines of force form centers of energy. In Sanscrit, these lines of force are called nadis, and the centers of energy formed are called chakras. The nadis constitute an extensive intangible network of energies and it is said that the physical nervous system is an externalization of the nadis.

Where only a few lines of force intersect, a minor chakra is formed, but where great streams of energy meet and cross, as they do in the head and along the spine, then a major chakra is formed.

Understanding this, you can see there will be a number of these crossings of force in the body, and some of the 'centers' formed will obviously be more significant than others. Of these centers, SEVEN are considered as major and the others minor.

You will remember that in Liber 19, a chart was given which included the names and location of the seven major chakras. Let us recall them now, in ascending order, noting also the Eastern names: (Please refer to the chart in Liber 19 at this time, and to the ones included.)

At the base of the spine: Muladhara. (1) Position on the Tree of Life: Malkuth.

Immediately above the sexual organs: Svadhishthana. (2) On the Tree: Yesod.

In the region of the navel and solar plexus: Manipura. (3) On the Tree: At the intersection of Paths 25 & 27.

Over the heart: Anahata.(4) Position on the Tree: Tiphareth.

At the nape of the neck: Visuddha. (5) On the Tree: the invisible Sephirah Daath.

Between the eyebrows: Ajna. (6) On the Tree: At the intersection of Paths 13 & 14.

On the top of the head: Sahasrara.(7) On the Tree: Kether.

(There is also another important center: The Throat Center. This is associated, in the body: with the thyroid gland ... on the Tree with the Sephira Daath, which associates it also with the center at the nape of the neck (medula oblongata.)

Of the minor centers, these include:

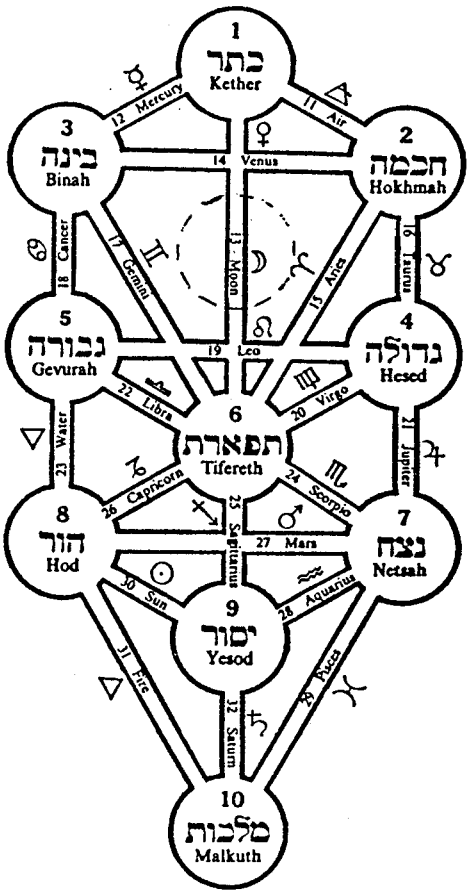
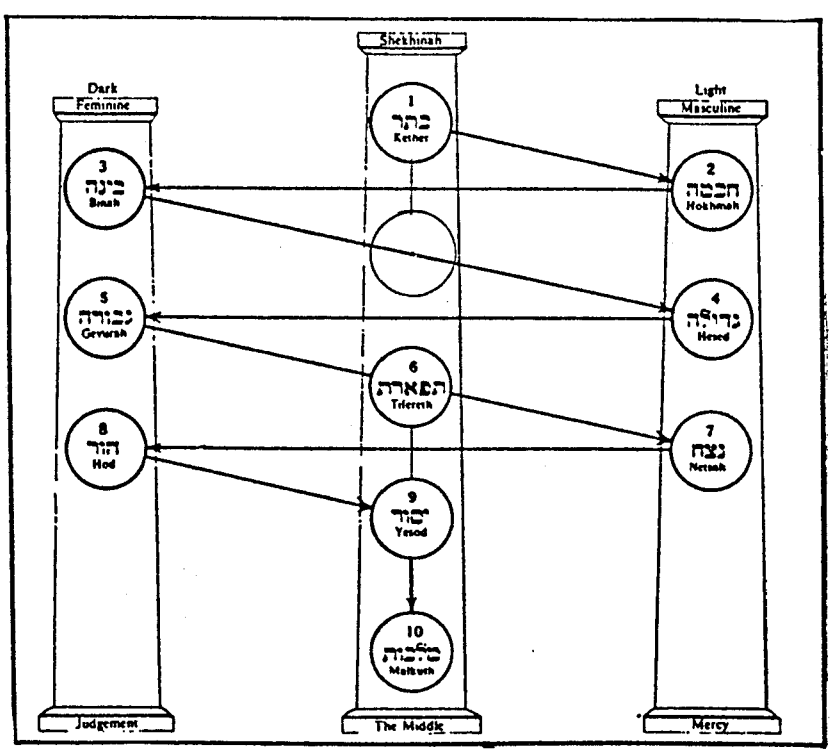
Two, in front of the ears, close to where the jaw bones are connected.
Two, just above the two breasts.
One, where the breast bone connects, close to the thyroid gland. This, with the two breast centers, makes a triangle of force.
Two, one each in the palms of the hands.
Two, one each in the soles of the feet.
Two, just behind the eyes.
Two, connected with the gonads.
One, close to the liver.
Two, one at the back of each knee.
Two, connected with the spleen. These form one center in reality, but such a center is formed by the two being superimposed one on the other.
One. There is one powerful center which is closely connected with the vagus nerve. This is most potent and is regarded by some schools of occultism as a major center; it is not in the spine, but it is no great distance from the thymus gland.

There are no visible signs of these psychic centers in the physical body because they are situated in the etheric body. But the organs of the physical body are influenced by them.





(7) Pituitary Gland, Sahasrara or "Third Eye" chakra. Kether on the Tree.

(6) Pineal Gland, Ajna or "Crown" chakra, between the eyebrows. On the Tree, intersection of paths between Kether & Tiphereth, and Binah & Chokmah.

(5) Medulla Oblongata, at nape of neck. Visuddha chakra. On the Tree: the invisible Sephirah Daath, mid-way between Kether & Tiphereth.

(4) Anahata or heart chakra, situated over the heart. Cardiac ganglion. Tiphereth on the Tree.

(3) Solar Plexus; region of the navel. Manipura chakra. On the Tree: Intersection of paths between Tiphareth & Yesod, and Hod & Netzach.

(2) Svadhishthana chakra, the prostatic ganglion. Yesod on the Tree.

(1) Muladhara or Sacral Plexus at the base of the spine. Root or Kundalini chakra. Malkuth on the Tree.

In the vast majority of human beings, these subtle centers are inactive. In order to stir them into activity the initiate has to awaken the "Kundalini force" lying dormant at the base of the spine and direct it upwards so that it passes through the chakras, liberating the potentialities of each one as it goes. Kundalini is represented as a serpent coiled three times on itself inside a triangular form at the heart of the Muladhara chakra. When it is awakened it is like a flame, a fire leaping up in a spiral movement along the spine, stimulating each chakra on its way. Tradition says that the Serpent Kundalini uses its tongue to weld together the different elements of each chakra so that it starts to spin.

A chakra is an extremely fragile system of very fine wheels and, it is said, only the Serpent Kundalini has the power to set these wheels in motion, and it is only then, when the chakra begins to spin, that its latent powers and faculties can begin to manifest themselves.

The chakras all differ from each other in colour and the number of their "petals", which means that the frequency and intensity of their vibrations are different, the divinities which dwell in them are different, and above all: on awakening ... each bestows different powers and virtues on a human being. Muladhara bestows life force; Svadhishthana: creative powers; Manipura: collective consciousness; Anahata: universal love; Vishudda: wisdom; Ajna: clairvoyance; and Sahasrara: omnipotence and total freedom.

When Kundalini has completed her ascent through the chakras, she has reached her goal and is united with Shiva, the masculine principle. As the union of the masculine & feminine principles, ... the head and tail of the serpent ... is consummated, it produces a blinding light and henceforth the initiate has reached the summit, he is totally free.

Now let me digress for a moment. Have you ever wondered where the tradition of giving Angels wings comes from? If you see a painting or sculpture of a winged being you don't need to be told to know that it represents an Angel. But why do we give them wings and what do the "wings" mean? Do Angels really have wings? No, of course not, but the tradition stems from the very ancient science of man and his subtle centers.

The great initiates of old knew that human beings have two very powerful centers in the back, at shoulder level. These centers, situated in the etheric and astral bodies, when correctly developed, create a kind of a "whirlwind" which gives the person the freedom to move through space at will. On the other hand, the tradition of ancient Greece represented the god Hermes with wings also ... but his were on his heels. Well this is because there is also a powerful center in the heel which too is related to the ability to move through space.

There are, as we have seen, a number of these centers in our body. When you contemplate the rising sun on mornings, for instance, you absorb sunlight through a center which lies just over the spleen. The sun sends us energy in the form of minute luminous spheres and the spleen chakra absorbs the white light of the sun and breaks it up into the seven colours of the prism, then the different colours are sent to the different parts of the body: red and orange to the sexual organs; yellow to the heart and lungs; green to the stomach, liver, intestines and kidneys; blue to the throat and nose; and purple to the head. Red can also be used to strengthen the nervous system. (If someone is suffering from "nervous deficiency" their health would be improved by concentrating on this colour.)

The physiological function of the spleen is, as you know, to manufacture red blood cells. It is not surprising, therefore, that the etheric organ of vitality lies over the equivalent physical organ. If you want to absorb these tiny globules of vitality sent by the sun, remember to concentrate on this chakra in the mornings, at sunrise, and in that way it will be more receptive and capable of assimilating even more sunlight and you will find that your health will improve and you will have more energy.

It is my intention to give you some specific methods for stimulating and developing the chakras but I think I will confine this talk with you to a general overview, and leave those particulars for subsequent lectures.

The secret science of Kundalini is to be found in different forms in the various spiritual traditions. For instance, the age-old custom of burning incense or other sweet smelling substances in churches and temples goes back thousands of years. The smoke spiralling up from the censer symbolizes Kundalini force as it spirals up through the chakras. The perfume burner, or censer, containing the glowing coal, represents the basal chakra, Muladhara, while the smoke represents the fiery serpent, Kundalini. The symbolism of the perfume burner points to the necessity of feeding the fire with fuel so that the Kundalini force can begin to rise. In spite of having lost the knowledge of its original significance, Christianity has always maintained the tradition of burning incense in church, thereby preserving the rite inherited from the far-distant past.

In the traditions of ancient Greece, it can be seen in the form of the Caduceus of Hermes with its two serpents twined about a central rod. The two serpents represent Ida and Pingala, the two currents surrounding the spinal channel Sushumna which are triggered into activity by the breathing exercises designed to awaken Kundalini.

In the Qabalistic tradition, too, we find this science in the Sephirotic Tree with the central Pillar of Equilibrium flanked on either side by the Pillar of Severity (which is positive) and the Pillar of Mercy (which is negative). Two currents flow from the Sephirah Kether, one through Chokmah and the other through Binah. They cross over in Daath, pass through Chesed and Geburah, cross back again in Tiphereth, pass through Netzach and Hod and cross once more in Yesod which symbolizes the genital organs.

If you go to Tibet you will see that Tibetan architects have concealed this science of Kundalini and the chakras in the form they give to the sacred structures they call stupas. Wherever you go, in the courtyards of shrines and monasteries and along the roads, you will see these structures which are all on the same pattern: a base in the form of a cube; on this cube is a spherical form surmounted by a cone. On top of the cone is a concave form like a bowl or crescent moon, and finally, surmounting the bowl, is a form resembling a flame, a raised thumb or the Hebrew letter Yod.

All the secret science of man and of the universe is concealed in the shape of these structures. The five geometrical shapes correspond, in Tibetan tradition, to the five elements: The cube represents the earth; the sphere represents water; the cone, fire; the semi-circular bowl, air; and the flame, ether. These five forms and five elements correspond, in man, to five chakras, for the Tibetan system twice combines two chakras into one. This means the cube represents both Muladhara and Svadhishthana which are both connected with earth, the densest form of matter. Above these is the umbilical chakra, Manipura, represented by the spherical form; then comes Anahatta, the heart chakra, represented by the cone or triangle. Above this again is Vishuddha, represented by the crescent moon, and crowning the whole is the flame which represents both Ajna and Sahasrara.

Is'nt it interesting to note that Vishuddha, the center at the nape of the neck, (medulla oblongata), which you concentrate on (exercise "D") to stimulate dreaming and psychic insight ... is represented by the moon?

So there you have a brief description of the way in which the Tibetans, who have received the same teaching about the chakras as the Hindus, express their teaching in their sacred structures whose forms reflect the structure not only of human beings but of the whole universe.

Brothers & Sisters: ... I salute you!

History of the Martinist Order

Present day Martinist Orders

We continue the History of the Martinist Order, taking up from where we left off at lecture #131.

We saw that after the War 1939-1945, the three Martinist Orders had resumed their activities. We also said that after the death of Augustin Chaboseau, his successor Jean Chabosseau could not receive the support of the Supreme Council of the Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel, that he abdicated and pronounced the dissolution of the Order, that some members with the help of of the FUDOSI tried to keep the Order together until the dissolution of the FUDOSI in 1951, when the Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel disintegrated.

After Jean Chaboseau's abdication and the dissolution of the Order, a member of the Supreme Council of the O.M.T., Bro. Jules Boucher, of Paris, attempted to gather the members of the Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel into a new Order which he founded in 1948 and which he called "Ordre Martiniste Rectifié. His success seems to have been limited and Bro. Jules Boucher died in 1955. He was not replaced at the Head of the Ordre Martiniste Rectifié.

After the dissolution of the Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel, there were, mostly in France, a large number of Martinists left without an organization of their own. A few found their way into the Ordre Martiniste Rectifié of Bro. Jules Boucher. It is then that the son of PAPUS, Dr. Philippe Encausse, whose very name was a powerful magnet to Martinists, drew together a large number of unattached Martinists and decided, with their help, to re-activate the original "Ordre Martiniste" according to the constitution drafted by Papus. This Order was given a Supreme Council, whose See was in Paris, France, and it became officially active in 1951. The "Ordre Martiniste" (de Papus) developed rapidly and in 1960 was the Martinist Order with the largest membership.

Soon after the war 1939-45, a few Brothers holding the C.B.C.S. grades of Scottish Rectified Masonry (Knights Beneficient of the Holy City) decided to revive the Willermoz kind of Martinism. Thus was born the "Ordre Martiniste des Elus-Cohen" which operates the three normal degrees of Martinism and which is the antechamber of the "operative" Order re-activated under the name of "Ordre des Chevaliers-Maçons Elus-Cohen de l'Univers" as in the time of Martinez Pasquales. It was headed by Brother "Aurifer", (Robert Ambelain).

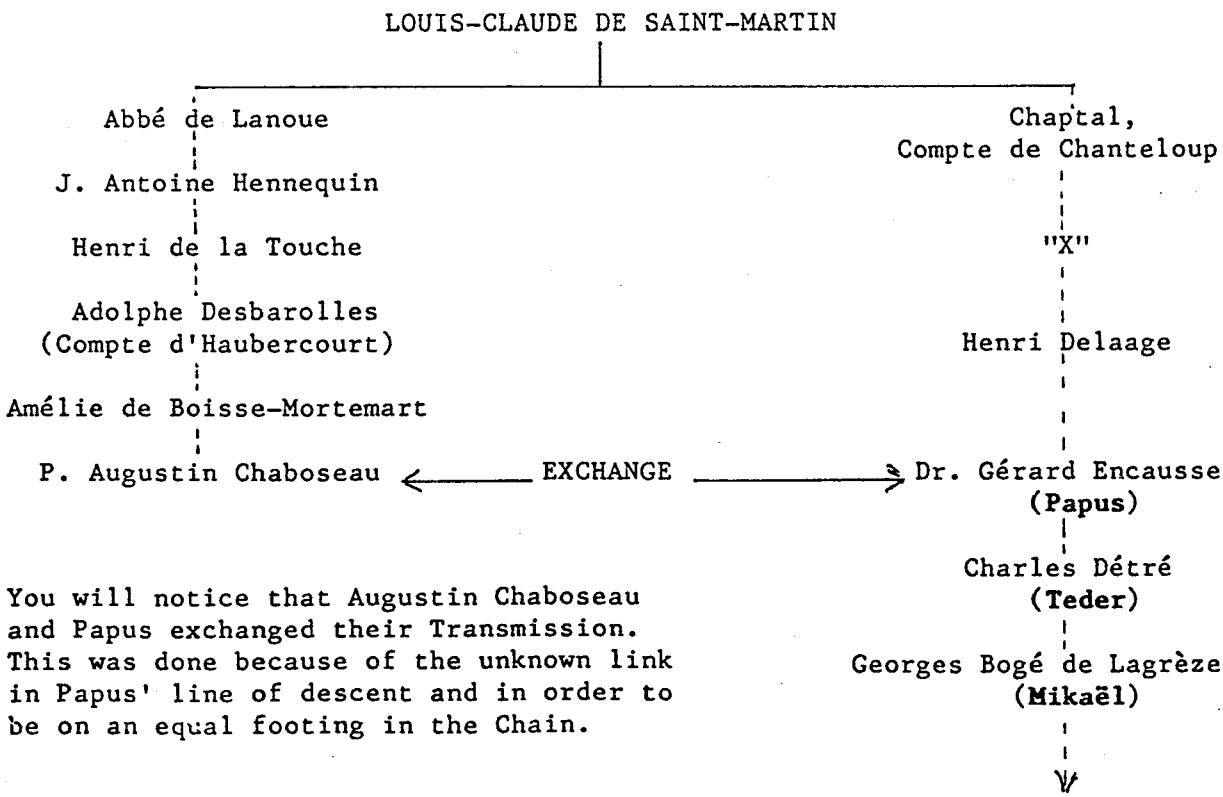
On March 14th, 1955, Brother Victor Blanchard, Sovereign Universal Grand Master of the Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique, died in Paris, aged 75. Under the name of Paul Yésir, he had directed for many years the "Eglise Gnostique Universelle" (Universal Gnostic Church) of which he was the last representative. He was a Christian Mystic, a man with high ideals.

The senior Grand-Master in the Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique was recognized as Sovereign Grand-Master upon the death of Brother Victor Blanchard. This was Sâr ALKMAION, (Dr. Edward Bertholet), of Switzerland. It was from Sâr Alkmaion, Sovereign Grand Master of the Order that the Grand Master of the Britannic Grand Lodge received his Charter as Sovereign Delegate General for Great Britain and the British Commonwealth. The Britannic Grand Lodge is ruled by an inner committee known as the Sovereign Tribunal of which the Grand Master, Sâr Gulion, is the Chairman. He is assisted by two officers: the Principal and Grand Inspectors. It is traditional in the OM&S to designate Officers and members by their mystic names, during their lifetime.

The OM&S, under Sâr Gulion, has chartered National Grand Lodges and Districts in Barbados, Canada, France and Nigeria. The Grand Master of the OM&S of Barbados is Sâr Savitar, his Principal Inspector is Sâr Septimus and his Grand Inspector, Sâr Asunta. Sâr Savitar is also Patriarch of the Gnostic Apostolic Church of Barbados.

Every Martinist Initiate is entitled to know the path taken by the Initiation to reach him from the time of the Unknown Philosopher. Historically, we do not carry the genealogy beyond Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin because of a lack of factual confirmation due to the highly secret character of the Orders through which the transmission was channelled.

We are giving here the diagram of the "Chain of Light" such as it affects members of the British Jurisdiction of the Ordre Martinist et Synarchique. In this diagram, the identity of Martinists still alive will be hidden under their Mystic Names:



You will notice that Augustin Chaboseau and Papus exchanged their Transmission. This was done because of the unknown link in Papus' line of descent and in order to be on an equal footing in the Chain.

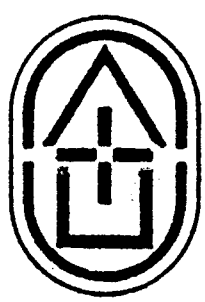
We continue lecture #133 dealing with "The birth of the FUDOSI".

An advisory Supreme Council with 12 members was formed, with delegates from the Orders present, and it went on to elect three Imperators, forming the Supreme Triangle of the Federation. Emile Dantinne (Sâr Hiéronymus) was elected Imperator for Europe, Spencer Lewis (Sâr Alden) Imperator for the American continent and Victor Blanchard (Sar Yésir) Imperator for the Orient. Finally a Grand Chancellery was organized to provide permanent links between all the fraternities, headed by Marc Lanval (Sar Hélios) who held the position of secretary.



The Symbol suggested by Spencer Lewis for the Federation was adopted. This emblem was made up of a triangle, an incomplete square and a cross incorporated in an egg, representing all the traditions of the Federation, thus symbolizing spiritual unity. Let us say, by way of an anecdote, that at the FUDOSI Convent in Paris in 1937, Hans Grueter (Sâr Iohannes) told the participants at the congress that, on placing this symbol on a record turntable, and turning it, a time comes when, before the eyes of the observer, it turns into a swastika.

Soon after the convent of August 1934, serious incidents occurred within the two persuasions of Memphis-Misaraïm, which led to unending rivalry between various people in charge. This rivalry resulted in the two Masonic persuasions being excluded from the FUDOSI, through a decision made by the three Imperators Dantinne, Lewis and Blanchard, on August 1st, 1935. At the same time, Marc Lanval was replaced at the Chancellery of the FUDOSI by Jean Mallinger, as Grand Chancellor.

That same year of 1935 saw the break-up between the FUDOSI and August Reichel, who had in vain sought an agreement between the groups of Constant Chevillon in Lyon and the Orders of the Federation. In the final analysis, with the Memphis-Misraïm crisis, Reichel went under the authority of Chevillon, who, in rivalry with the FUDOSI, had organized another initiatic Federation of Orders and Fraternities of Initiates (FUDOSFI) in collaboration with R. Swinburne Clymer, who was in charge of the Fraternitas Rosae Crucis of Quakertown and an enemy of Spencer Lewis.

A new convent of the FUDOSI was organized in September 1936 in Brussels, under the authority of the three Imperators who had been elected two years before. A third convent was held in Paris in August 1937, which lasted two days and began with a meeting of the Martinist Supreme Council of the Federation and the Martinist initiation of delegates from Poland. This convent ended with an organized tour of the Initiatic monuments of Paris.

The fourth convent of the FUDOSI was held in Brussels from September 4 - 7, 1939, opened by Imperator Hiéronymus. The succession of Imperators Victor Blanchard and Spencer Lewis within the Supreme Triangle of the Federation, among other matters, was on the agenda. As the events transpired Victor Blanchard resigned and he was replaced as third Imperator of the FUDOSI by Augustin Chaboseau, who from then on became the representative of Martinism in the Federation, into which the Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel made its entry to replace Blanchard's OM&S. Some of the officers of the latter then went over to Chaboseau's OMT, such as Jeanne Guesdon and Georges Lagrèze with the respective positions of Grand Chancellor and Principal Inspector. Lagrèze also became General Inspector of the FUDOSI.

Spencer Lewis, who died on August 2, 1939, had, in his will, designated his son, Ralph, as Supreme Secretary of AMORC, to succeed him as Imperator of this Order. On August 12, 1939, the Supreme Council of AMORC confirmed this designation by vote, and in the September convent, Ralph Lewis, representing AMORC, was elected Imperator of the FUDOSI to replace his father. The new Supreme Triangle of the Federation was thus made up of the Imperators Emile Dantinne, Augustin Chaboseau and Ralph Lewis.

Following Blanchard's resignation, he was replaced by Augustin Chaboseau at the head of the Ordre Kabbalistique de la Rose-Croix, who was elected President by the Board of Directors of the Order. The Fraternité des Polaires, of which Blanchard was Grand Master, separated from the FUDOSI, whereas the Ordre du Lys et de l'Aigle and the Union Synarchique de Pologne were admitted.

Following the fourth convent of the FUDOSI, Ralph Lewis made a request to the Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel to obtain permission to set up a Martinist General Delegation and a Grand Council in the United States. The Belgian brethren being favourable, and following a report by Jeanne Guesdon and Georges Lagrèze, Augustin Chaboseau appointed Ralph Lewis as "Sovereign Delegate and regional Grand Master of the TMO for the United States".

THE POST-WAR YEARS

After the second World War, the works of the fifth convent of the FUDOSI were opened in Brussels on July 21, 1946 with a solemn speech by the Imperator Hiéronymus and closed the very next day. After the funeral oration in praise of the brethren who had died, followed by a ritual prayer in memory of them, the succession of numerous officers, both in the FUDOSI and in the affiliated fraternities, had to be considered. Augustin Chaboseau, who was elected Imperator of the Federation in 1939, had left this world on January 2, 1946, followed shortly afterwards, in April, by his faithful assistant Georges Lagrèze. It was decided to leave the third position of Imperator, held by Chaboseau, vacant until the nomination of his successor to the Grand Mastership of the Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel ... and Father Cordonnier (Sâr Gregorius) was elected deputy Imperator. While waiting for the election of a new Grand Master of the OMT, a Regency Council was set up, made up of a President (Sâr Leukos) (?), a Secretary: Jeanne Guesdon (Sâr Puritia) and a Treasurer (Sâr Renatus) (?).

At this 1946 convent, Victor Blanchard, as Grand Master of the OM&S, having reconciled with the FUDOSI, represented the Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique, but did not take up his former position Imperator. The minutes of the convent gives the following list of societies represented:

Ordre de la Rose-Croix Universelle
Ordre de la Rose-Croix Universitaire
Ordre Pythagoricien
Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique
A.M.O.R.C.
Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel
Eglise Gnostique Universelle
Société d'Etudes et de Recherches Templières
Ordre Kabbalistique de la Rose-Croix
Société d'Etudes Martinistes
Union Synarchique de Pologne
Ordre de la Milicia Crucifera Evangelica

The Ordre du Lys et de L'Aigle and the Société Alchimique de France were invited to elect their representatives at the Federation to replace their deceased officers. At the suggestion of Ralph Lewis, the FUDOSI decided to publish a journal prepared by the latter and financed by AMORC. Only the first issue of this journal called The F.U.D.O.S.I., an international journal of the ancient and honorable esoteric orders, published in November 1946 by the Supreme Grand Lodge of AMORC, seems to have seen the light of day.

KNIGHTS OF SAINT JOHN OF JERUSALEM

THE ART OF SLEEPING

Did you sleep well last night? You know for many folks sleeping is a problem all of the time, as it is with some of us some of the time. Shakespeare spoke of sleep as "the realm of hurt minds, great nature's second course, chief nourisher of life's feasts." Yes, sleep is all of that, but for many who are burdened and tense it can be a very scarce commodity. We are told that each night millions of pills are required by Americans to put them to sleep. "Why," we ask. There is no easy answer, but man's physical and emotional life certainly doesn't follow any logical pattern.

Keeping up with the fast and furious pace of contemporary living, sometimes we become pretty well wound up by the end of the day. Many a person who thinks he is run down is really wound up from too much stress. A most interesting discussion came up at a businessmen's luncheon; the subject was sleep and the problem of getting to sleep. The men were complaining about their insomnia and discussing their favorite methods of inducing sleep--counting sheep, deep breathing, taking various medications, and so forth. One man was quiet throughout most of the discussion, and then he ventured that he never had any trouble getting to sleep because he always took a mountain for a pillow. Upon retiring for the night, he always turned his thoughts away from his tense and burdensome life and took a mental walk up into the mountains where he stretched out beside a rippling stream beneath whispering pine trees and the overarching canopy of twinkling stars. A mountain for a pillow is an interesting thought, isn't it? Anyone who finds himself tossing and turning at night might reflect upon this. If you have trouble sleeping, then you might first check what you are thinking about. In other words, what are you using for a pillow? Worries, the complications of your life, your concern about what is going on in the world, the national economy or shortages, your job, your business? Or, are you resting your head on feelings of peace and quiet calm?

One teacher relates that during the Second World War, he spent many a fitful night trying to sleep on his luggage. Certainly, a suitcase is not a comfortable pillow. Perhaps one major cause of our insomnia is our attempt in a figurative sense to sleep on our luggage. We climb into our bed at night with our minds teeming with all that we are carrying through life, all the material things and conditions that represent our outward security, and such as these, I can tell you, make mighty unsatisfactory pillows. How many businessmen sleep on their briefcases, figuratively? There are times when it is imperative that work be brought home to be tackled after dinner at one's leisure, but there is no reason ever why it should be taken to bed. The work can figuratively be left on the desk instead of under the pillow. "Let's sleep on it" is a frequently heard expression, especially among business people. The original intention of this was to put the thing out of mind until the principles in the matter had had a night's rest, but so often it is taken literally, and we do indeed sleep on the problem or the situation. The following morning we are exhausted and certainly far less likely to be able to make a proper decision. Many of us sleep on grudges, resentments, pet peeves and a variety of hurts. One of the cardinal rules for happy marriages is never to go to sleep at night holding a grudge or bearing within oneself hurt feelings against one's spouse. Slept on, such feelings surely become bones of contention.

In ancient times, sleeplessness was called the malady of Kings. The opening chapter of the Book of Esther states, "On that night could not the King sleep..." In those days, the Monarch carried the burden of all of his people who no doubt could sleep peacefully and securely because the king was taking care of them. They were ignorant of any impending crisis. But, in modern times the malady has become a contagion, infecting high and low, rich and poor. A tailor gave what I found to be interesting advice. He said, "Keep your clothes in good condition by emptying your pockets every night." That's pretty good advice figuratively and literally. While preparing for sleep, always remember to empty your mind of fear and worry, bitterness and resentment, just like you clean out your pockets. Make a practice of discarding mentally all the little things that are no longer of use, even those matters that may require further attention on the morrow. They can be laid aside at night, just as surely as you lay aside your street clothes. With a little practice and a lot of imagination anyone can develop real skill in this technique.

In the 7th Chapter of John there is an interesting statement, "And they went every man into his own house, and Jesus went unto the Mount of Olives." At first I read this verse with a deep sense of pity; it struck me as very callous of all the disciples to go to the comfort of their homes with the company of their families and leave Jesus alone out of doors. Remember, we read, "The Son of Man knew not where to lay his head..." I thought that was a terrible thing--poor fellow, all alone out there, nowhere to go. But, now I can see through the appearance to the reality. Little men toss and turn in their beds with wakefulness; for many there is no comfort, no peace, no restful sleep because unaware of their inward resources, they devote their waking hours to laying up treasures on earth. Thus, they are doomed to spend many an uncomfortable night sleeping on their luggage. But, Jesus, his head resting on a mountain, sleeps the sleep of pure refreshment. Without the concerns of script or purse to mar the softness of his pillow, he's relaxed and free. So, while every man goes into his own house, Jesus goes apart and finds the peace of prayer and meditation and his oneness with God.

We are told, "Except the Lord build the house, they are in vain that build it. Except the Lord build the city, the watchman waketh, but in vain." Now, this is a clear statement of the futility of worry and anxiety. It is sometimes said that if someone doesn't worry about the nation, the economy, the family life or whatever, then who is going to worry about it? With the power, guidance and strength of the infinite process, we can do all things. Without that spiritual resource, we can do little or nothing. Empty your pockets of concern while getting ready for bed at night. Relax and let go! Know that as you approach sleep, you get into the flow and the rhythm of life for as we are told, "Underneath are the everlasting arms." Know that God is with you and part of your business, home, family life, your job, your relationship with the community, and know that there is a flow of guidance and direction. If you are in tune with it, you will be lead always in right and wise ways. When we are not working, God continues to work. When we stop stewing about a particular problem, the divine process, "the Father in us," as Jesus refers to it, who knows our needs and whose pleasure it is to give us the Kingdom, moves to resolve the problem, filling the need. This is precisely what is meant by taking a mountain for a pillow.

However, the pillow is not only useful for sleep, but the pillow brings comfort to the heart during the rough places of life. When tempers flare and you become tense, angry or anxious, concerned about any number of situations or conditions or people, just get still for a moment and take a mountain for a pillow. Get some hilltop thoughts, some lofty ideas into your consciousness. Take a moment quietly to meditate on your oneness, to get into the flow of the creative process. A coffee break is a good time to take a mountain for a pillow, to give thanks for a few moments, to find peace and renewal of spirit. Taking the long view is taking the mountain for a pillow. Quite often one peers at his life through the magnifying glass of worry--how terrible this or that is. Whenever you are so tempted, how important it is if you will just turn the spiritual telescope toward God. Remember, the Psalmist says, "He who sitteth in the high heavens shall laugh." You can sit in the high heavens, and you will find laughter and relaxation that counts for rest. Find a mountain for a pillow, and you will find that sleep and rest come easily.

Dear Companions:

What we all want is a key to the meaning of life. Can we find answers in the concept of a life that begins with birth and ends with death? The materialist has always averred that this is all there is...enjoy yourself, "Eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow you may die, and when you die you will be a long time dead." But, this is no answer to any person of faith. From the beginning of time man has intuitively felt life to be greater than death, and thus he has entertained all sorts of possibilities: Happy Hunting Grounds, Elysian Fields, Heaven. The Christian doctrine has held that birth is the beginning of life, but that death is but a step into an eternal experience of Heaven or hell in which there is atonement for life on earth. But, this has been unpalatable to the clear-thinking person. It is absurd to say that souls are created in a point in time and then survive the death of the body and go on living forever. It is illogical and unscientific to say that we survive the body, but that we did not pre-exist it, that we have a beginning but no end.

Then we are faced with the problem of the inequity of life. Consider these hypothetical and contrasting lives. Betty Smith is born into a prosperous home, surrounded by every opportunity. She is given an ideal education; she falls in love with a man and is married and is kept in a kind of environment she is acustomed to. She has a half a dozen happy, healthy children, and she lives a happy and full life. Jane Jones, on the other hand, is born blind or deaf or crippled into a poverty-stricken home where an alcoholic father makes life a hell for everyone. Jane can never escape, can never have a home of her own, can never be given the things that Betty enjoys. Some will say that things will be squared up in Heaven, and what do we mean by this? Is Betty to suffer in Heaven because she is happy on earth? What is the justice in that? Would Betty's future suffering do Jane any good? Is Jane to be rewarded or compensated in a later Heaven for her present suffering? But what kind of compensation makes up for half a century of earthly misery? Is human distress just a matter of luck then? If so, how unjust is life! Is it God's will? Then how unlike any human father God must be. Jesus said, "Be ye perfect as your Father in Heaven is perfect." This was a clear command telling us of the ultimate goal. But, how can we all be expected to reach the same end when we start at different levels? Isn't it possible that Jesus' command "Be ye perfect..." is given as the ultimate toward which we all must inescapably move? And, perhaps even as in the visible world, life evolves and develops, so in the invisible world a spiritual evolution takes place by continuous rebirths, whereby we may work out our salvation and achieve our goal.

What of the amazing feats of child prodigies? Is there any other explanation than reincarnation for Mozart who played a concert on the harpsicord at age five and toured Europe at age six? Is it an accidental grouping of genes that makes a little child of six a musicaian far in advance of grown men and women who have slaved for years in the field? If so, life seems surely to be whimsical and unjust. Or, is it that they have been here before and bring with them a development of past lives? A person no less than Plato believed wholeheartedly in reincarnation. In his famous Theory of Reminiscence he said, "Knowledge easily acquired is that which the enduring self had in an earlier life so that it flows back easily." What of the strange phenomenon such as that told in the life of Shelley who was walking with friends in a part of the country which he had never before visited, and he suddenly said to a companion "Over that hill there is a windmill." As they crested the hill and saw the windmill, Shelley fainted with emotion. Of course, these strange phenomena can be brushed aside as hallucinations or evidences of ESP and clairvoyance. But, there is a great deal more evidence to consider.

The Christian asks, "This wild idea of reincarnation, is it Christian? Is it Biblical? Why didn't Jesus say something about it if it is true?" Well, it is true that Jesus never taught the idea of reincarnation directly, though it was taught by the Essenes, a prominent sect of his day which many believe Jesus was associated with. However, he does refer to it as though it were part of the accepted ideas of the day. He never repudiated it or denied it, and he was outspoken about those things that prevailed that he thought were wrong. So, it may be more significant that he said nothing against the idea of reincarnation than that he didn't actually speak in favor of it. In the 16th chapter of Matthew, we read that Jesus asked his disciples, "Who do men say that the Son of man is? Some say John the Baptist, some Elijah, others Jeremiah or one of the prophets." Obviously, he was suggesting that people thought that he was a reincarnation of these people. The idea of reincarnation was common, and though Jesus did not accept or reject the information it is noteworthy that he did not rebuke the disciples for talking nonsense. An interesting passage for study is found in the 9th chapter of John where we read that a man born blind was brought to Jesus with the question, "Master, who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?" Now, here again, you see the prevalence of the idea of reincarnation. If it were contemplated that a man born blind was being punished by blindness for a sin committed, then the sin committed must have been done in an earlier life before he was born into this world. In answer Jesus said, "Neither did this man sin, nor his parents, but that the works of God should be made manifest in him." Jesus indicated that both theories were reasonable because he didn't reject or ridicule them. He simply said that they did not apply in this case, that the affliction was simply a process of growth for the individual.

What of the intelligent seekers after Truth in the fields of science and philosophy? What do they believe? Well, we find people like Cicero, Seneca, Pythagoras, Plotinus and Plato of early days; Maeterlinck, Ibsen, Lavater, Schopenhauer, Hume, Goethe and the poets Walt Whitman, Longfellow, Tennyson, Browning, Swindburne, W.E. Henley, Morris, Kipling...all these people enthusiastically supported the concept of reincarnation. Now, you may ask, "But, if I have lived before, why don't I remember my past lives?" The answer is, you probably do. Character is memory; it is the cumulative distilled essence of your previous experience. Genius is memory, cumulative memory. You might say, "But, if I don't remember past incarnations, what is the point?" The point is, life is progress and growth and unfoldment. As Jesus said, "Be ye perfect as your Father in Heaven is perfect," and we are on an endless round of achieving that perfection. We don't complete it in one lifetime. The goal is to let the "kingdom come on earth as it is in Heaven." It is as when at the close of the day we have arrived at a point short of the goal; we go to sleep to awaken again at morning to begin again the quest. But, we are forever saved from taking a road we have taken if we have gained a blessing from it.

There are a lot of questions other questions and thoughts that puzzle. For instance, a person asks, "I count on meeting my dear ones again after death, and if we all go on into new lives what hope is there?" Well, it is hard for us in human consciousness to entertain the idea of spiritual unfoldment in its eternal sense. We are insecure, and we hold on to people and to things and to places. These give us a sense of security. Perhaps, we must come to know that the only true and changeless relationship that man has is with God, his indwelling Father. All else comes and goes to bless and enrich us. As the poet puts it, "We must go out into the darkness and put our hand into the hand of God, which shall be to us better than life and safer than the known way."

The important thing, of course, is that man was born to live and not to die, so we want to think in terms of life. Reincarnation is not God's final plan for man. It is a token of God's love for us, whereby if through some limitation or missing the mark of perfection, we lose the body, we may be reclothed with another so that we may try again to complete the great work that the Father has given us to do. Not what you have been, but what you now are--that is the important issue. As Paul says, "Forgetting that which is behind and stretching forward to that which is before, I press on."

-o-o-o-o-o-o-o-o-o-o-o-

Dear Companions:

Do many of your friends talk about death? About what they think happens on that occasion which is in store for EVERYONE? If so, what do they say? You may have already noticed it is a topic quite a lot of people would rather not talk about; some are afraid to even think about it; some have no ideas at all; some say it's oblivion, ... others have strong religious beliefs about it, etc. etc.

So to you, at this time, I ask: After death - what? Perhaps the question would be more properly put if I asked: After life - what? This subject would fill a whole book -- but for YOU, the answer you all know or should know already, that answer is: more life, but on a different plane of consciousness.

To us here, on this side, all life is one, manifesting, or rather expressing on various planes of being or consciousness. What, on your side, you call "death", we call transition or birth from one state of life or consciousness to another. So-called death or transition is not confined to the PHYSICAL PLANE only! It operates on all planes of being and I will explain further on just what this means.

Remember: death is birth, in reality. We are born into another phase of life and leave behind what is no longer necessary. Again and again you have had the ancient mantram stressed: "As above, so below." Many, however, repeat this mantram only partially conscious of all it implies, overlooking the fact that it applies to every phase of life, for it is not only a mantram -- it is a statement of cosmic law -- something from which no one can escape.

Every experience on the physical plane is duplicated in the spiritual planes. On the physical plane your birth or expected arrival occurs nine months prior to the visible event, and preparations are made in advance for your arrival and well-being. Even in the most difficult situations this condition prevails. Exactly the same law applies on the inner planes: the passing of every Ego from the physical plane is known in advance by us and preparations are made also for its arrival. No Ego ever makes the passing over alone; always he is helped, only he does not know it any more than an infant is aware of the attendants at his physical birth.

It takes a child a certain time to become aware of his physical surroundings and his relationship to them. Exactly the same law applies to the spiritual. It depends on your spiritual awareness or consciousness just how long it will take you to become aware of your surroundings and your relationships to them over here. It is a period of adjustment. Everything is the same and yet everything is different. A paradox, you say? Yes, indeed, -- a paradox. Your consciousness is the same but your environment is different.

Life is for the purpose of experience. Does this mean, that so long as all life is continuous that we are gaining experience all the time, no matter on what plane of being we may be at the time? The answer is: yes. But with this difference: there is a time for gathering experience and a time for assimilating it. Just as the physical food you eat must be digested and assimilated before more food can be consumed, so with experience, it must become a part of your inner consciousness before you can take on more. This assimilation takes place on all the planes of being that you can function in, and if the assimilation does not take place on a specific plane, that particular experience, be it what it may, will have to be lived or undergone again. There is no escape.

You do not have to go very far in the physical world to see yourself undergoing the same experience over and over again, until you learn the particular essence that experience has in store for you. Just as man comes back to earth over and over again (not only to gain experience, but also to learn how to use constructively all that the physical has to offer,) so has he to come back to the various inner planes over and over again to learn how to use constructively the phases of consciousness on those given planes. It is only in this way that all the vehicles of man are gradually perfected. The more he acquires on the spiritual planes the more he can accomplish on the physical plane upon his return. The more he accomplishes on the physical plane, the more he can carry over to the spiritual.

Man is a most complex being -- yet in his complexity he is simplicity itself. I mentioned that, on the inner planes, we know when some one is soon to leave your plane of being. It is indicated by an increased luminosity of the astral body, that occurs only when the physical metabolism of life itself is preparing for the change. This light of which I speak, is evident even in cases where a sudden accident will be the cause of the transition. There is nothing on your side to which I can compare this, excepting possibly that you can determine by the light in a person's eye when they love. Every one can see it. It is evident to all.

Now, just as on earth there are those who specialize in caring for the arrival of infants, so on this side, caring for those about to arrive from the physical is in the care of especially prepared Egos who devote themselves to this noble and important work. The Lords of Destiny have many, many helpers. It is part of their task, to observe the condition of the Ego arriving. Just as the attendants at mortal births observe whether one's physical faculties are functioning, so too on the spiritual planes those in charge of this specific work observe the condition of one's spiritual faculties.

Most Egos are unaware of what has happened. Others come over here with sick souls that require healing and restoration to the normalcy of their particular state of evolution. On your side of life, your scientists would refer to these cases as psychopathic. In truth, the psyche, or soul is ill and in need of proper treatment, for remember: the soul is the nourishment of the Ego and when this is out of focus or ill - the Ego suffers. It all depends upon the "age" of the Ego how long this adjustment period takes place.

Some Egos are so bound up or imprisoned within themselves that it requires much patience and continuous effort to break through their self-created shell of crystallization. On earth you have hospitals to take care of your sick. We likewise, have centers or havens of rest and healing. These centers have for their specific work the restoration of balance between the vehicles of man. Although man may have discarded his physical body -- he is still bound by the limitations of that body. Release, in most cases, does not occur all at once. Remember those who have lost a limb: they still feel sensation in a limb they do not have. Likewise, the discarnate still feels through his etheric vehicle. And strangely enough, what holds him back the most from releasing these limitations are his prejudices, his resentments, and his hatreds. He cannot be released from physical limitations until his soul is purged of his negative emotions.

On our side of life, man's emotions are very important. It is his emotions which we must heal and not his mind. This, earth's physicians ought to know. There is no such thing as a disordered mind for the mind is cosmic -- therefore, relatively perfect. Man's emotions are self-created, therefore, imperfect -- and it would be more correct to speak of disordered emotions rather than a disordered mind. Man cannot disorder or disarrange the cosmic. It is his physical apparatus ... the brain ... that needs the attention, not his mind.

Man's physical body functions on the physical plane, and all his physical activities take place on that plane; however, the Source of Power of that activity comes to him from and through his etheric body, which is like a generator to the physical. It is the etheric body that replenishes the energy or power acquired by the physical. The etheric body receives its impulses to action from the astral body, which supplies the motivating power or desire to do. The mental sheath is feeding the astral body with Will-Power, for Will-Power is a mental attribute. It depends on the receptivity of each vehicle as to which vehicle will be ill or out of harmony, for that is all that disease (dis-ease) really is: dis-harmony. On your plane of being, at present you heal only the physical and etheric bodies. You are only just beginning to touch upon the astral and mental.

Many believe that as soon as they "pass over" all their troubles and ailments will be over. That is a great fallacy. It all depends upon what is causing the physical ailment. If the cause is emotional or mental, so-called "death" does not stop it. If it is purely physiological at so-called death, then there is release.

If you regard the earth as a place of great activity and change -- then be well aware that the spiritual planes are much more active and progressive. There is nothing static in Nature.

Through a desire to escape responsibiliies, man has created for himself an after-death condition which he calls "rest" and "peace", but in reality, he usually regards it as inactivity, having nothing specifically to do but what he personally wants. The spiritual planes, regardless of whether they are high or low, are planes of consciousness of intense activity. Everyone is busy! We have no drones. Those who are inclined to be drones are ill and are treated accordingly. Laziness or inactivity on any plane of being is not normal --- and indicates illness or lack of development of some particular vehicle. Those showing this tendency are taken by kindly hands and placed where, through experience, they will develop the desire to do, if the desire or astral body is what needs nourishment and care.

And again: just as you have schools of all types on your side, covering all subjects, we too have schools to teach man many things, especially how to function on the spiritual.

When a child is born on the physical plane he goes through many years of preparation before he can take care of himself. Likewise, on our side of life, when an Ego first comes over, he must go through exactly the same processes, even to learning how to accomplish the equivalent of walking, for here gravity is not the same as on earth. He must learn how to propel himself on the spiritual planes. Every experience on the physical plane has its counterpart in the spiritual. "As above, so below" -- also the concerve: "As below, so above."

Another thing that must be learned is communication of thoughts with other beings -- what you call "talking". You may think this is very simple because you probably believe all one has to do is just think and have some one receive your thoughts. You've tried it -- and found out it's not easy! Those arriving here have to learn to propel their thoughts and not every one will receive or understand them -- only those who are functioning on their own plane of consciousness. Just as on earth you could speak English to a Portugese and he would'nt understand what you were saying. Always remember that consciousness is awareness of the soul.

This subject is so vast that it is impossible to cover it in a short talk like this. All that I can give you is a glimpse into the immensity of life and its purpose. No act, no matter how trivial it may seem to you on your plane, is unimportant. Try to remember that. Some day you will find out how vitally important and far reaching in the lives of others, was that kindly word spoken to a stranger; that sudden smile given to one whom you never saw before.

Now you ask: "When does the panoramic review of life actually take place, in view of the fact that so many are unaware that they have passed over"? The "panoramic review" has nothing to do with man's consciousness of what is happening. On first thought this may impress you as being somewhat strange, but a man, for example, when drowning, is not thinking of death --- he is thinking of saving himself and is frantically trying to do so, yet in the midst of all this turmoil and conflict a panorama of his life passes before him. It is one of those cosmic mysteries where events of a lifetime are crowded into seconds and yet most complete. It proves how incompetent are man's inventions of time. It is Nature's way of preserving the experiences in the etheric and astral consciousness. At the moment when the panoramic review is taking place, a negative plate, as it were, is being etched in one's consciousness and preserves the features for future use.

You ask: "Why does one have to undergo this panoramic review many times"? For the same reason one incarnates many times! It is not possible to shorten the number of them, rather the number is apt to be increased by individual necessity. One cannot crowd into any incarnation the experience that only several can give. Let me illustrate:

Suppose you say - "I am in perfect health. I cannot be inconvenienced by eating so often. I will eat a large meal now and that will be sufficient". You would pay a penalty of pain, distress, suffering. Even then you would not accomplish your purpose. Nature orders that you eat in rhythmic intervals, according to your needs and your capacities for assimilation and digestion.

Suppose you are ill. Does the doctor give you one dose of medicine that cures you all at once? No, he cannot do so. He prescribes dosages at regular rhythmic intervals or time and according to meals. That is the Law -- the Law of Rhythm that you have studied in the Hermetic lessons. Apply it here! Incarnation is the rhythm of experience in Matter. It is taken at rhythmic intervals, according to mortal capacity. So our panoramas review only what relates to the immediate past incarnation, with a pre-view of the next, later.

Although man does go through a period of purgatorial experience or purging, right after his transition -- the purging, which is the cleansing of the dross or useless and the assimilation of the essence of the useful experience gained while in physical manifestation, takes place all the time as new understanding and new consciousness are acquired. It is a matter of gradual unfoldment and revealment.

One could not possibly digest and assimilate the experiences of a mortal lifetime in just a few days or months, as you consider time. It requires a slow process of assimilation through new personal experience and revealment. Remember the Hermetic Law "As above, so below" -- and do you not say "Give me time to think it over"? It is the same over here.

On this side of life we are permitted to see the outcome of every act and word of ours while incarnate. It is not taken up as a morbid subject but as an illustration of a given lesson. I mentioned before that we have schools on our side of life just as you have schools on yours. All life here, as well as on your side, is a school or center of learning, only you forget this fact while on earth.

On your side of life, learning in your schools is often compulsory, but here it is natural and eagerly sought. No one can attend a school here unless he is eager and has a strong desire to do so. Therefore, all those who attend our schools are those who wish to learn and are in a receptive state to do so. They remain in one state of consciousness until they desire to go to the next and prepare for it. No one can hold you back but yourself. When ready to go forward the way is opened for your spiritual advancement.

On the physical plane, as soon as man can take care of himself, he begins to look about and see what there is for him to do, to be useful to himself and to others. So too, on this side, the same law abides and man begins to look about and see what he can do to help others. Here all social barriers of every kind, which are man-created, cease to exist and THE ONLY BARRIER, strangely enough, is still man-created: it is his own individual consciousness, his own limitation of awareness -- which is all that keeps him from anything on the spiritual planes. He soon learns, after his arrival here, that all his progress, or the lack of it, is entirely due to himself, and so he prepares to strengthen his vehicles as never before.

During all this time he gains understanding, little by little, of the effect of his activities while incarnate and why the experiences he underwent were necessary. Gradually, through this process of digestion, assimilation and new experience, he relinquishes old prejudices, old hatreds, old resentments ... and is free to go ahead.

Just as on your earth there are those who are limited in their field of activity to just one form of work, - so on our side, those same Egos, when arriving here, are limited in their activity, until they learn the great lesson that they themselves are their only limitation, to many things and causes. Here they try the same reasoning -- but gradually, through examples on the part of others, and understanding, a new light begins to dawn for them and the real cause of their problems and limitations while on earth takes on new significance.

On our plane of being, colour, light, music -- which is all vibration in different states of manifestations -- are used extensively for the healing of the sick and distressed. In time to come, all your healing on earth will undergo great changes. In time, surgical operations will be unnecessary. Rays of light of different types, which you are now beginning to use, will restore dead tissue to life and will destroy unnecessary or surplus tissue as well. Colour and music will be used more and more, even as we use them on our plane of being, to restore balance between the vehicles that have become mal-adjusted, or out of harmony.

The poet calls music the language of the soul. It is more than that, it is one of the FOODS of the soul.

You ask: "What about rest? You have described to us a place of great activity on your side, but when do Egos rest and how? On the physical side we sleep, what do you do on the spiritual plane"? Remember, Companions, that what rests on the physical plane is your physical body! But your real self never rests; it does not need it. While "resting", your thoughts, as you say, and your consciousness, are elsewhere and very active. While resting, you may, in your mind, be planning new things to accomplish and do. When then is the rest you so earnestly ask us about? Real rest consists in giving another vehicle an opportunity of expression. That that over.

The one who is tied to a desk and mental work finds physical exercise a relaxation and rest. The one who engages in physical labour and has no other life expression, finds rest only in one way: oblivion. He has no other means of expressing himself. When this last type arrives on our side of life, he goes through the various planes of consciousness in exactly the same state of oblivion he did while on earth. He has nothing in himself and therefore cannot become aware of what surrounds him.

You ask: "How can one tell how evolved or awake an Ego is"? Those who have eyes to see -- can see. Every Ego has a light he carries with him. It is the light of the Ego itself. Some Egos are brilliant and illuminating; others are dull. You ask how this can be when the Ego is the Divine Spark. Should not all Egos be alike? Companions, an Ego is the Divine Spark in man, but in different states of expression or manifestation. Some are "older" than others and have, shall we say, acquired more polish. The polish is experience. It is like the diamond. ALL Egos are diamonds, but the more friction (life) a diamond (Ego) has been exposed to, the greater its light or luminosity.

There are beings on our side of life whose light is so powerful and strong that only those who are ready, can look at them without suffering actual blindness -- this can be illustrated by using the example of the sun -- you cannot cannot look at it steadily without blinding effect. This light, or aura, is the spiritual power generated by these entities, just as naturally as you generate your own physical and magnetic energy. The aura of these beings is healing, vitalizing and energising. They are vortices of spiritual life and light. These are the beings who are referred to as the "Bearers of Light" or, "The Enlightened". Their very presence radiates spiritual light and love, just as on earth, there are those who radiate cheerfulness, vitality and enthusiasm. It is a state of being. This quality is possessed in varying degrees of intensity by those who have travelled the road of Life many times, or "old Egos". It is to these Egos that we look, and upon whom we depend for our "Invisible Helpers". It is they who are devoting their energies to helping man, both on the finer and on the denser planes of being.

There are those who devote their attention to humanity on the spiritual planes and there are those who devote their efforts to helping humanity while incarnate in physical bodies. The extent to which they can help mortals on earth depends upon the awareness or consciousness of the individuals and the receptivity of their vehicles. I do not mean by receptivity: negativity -- but sensitivity. To be sensitive to something one must be aware of something. There are those on earth who deny the existence of things on earth -- simply because they have not experienced those things themselves; much more so is this the case on the higher planes of consciousness.

Many deny that it is possible to receive or obtain spiritual guidance simply because they themselves have not placed themselves in the position to receive it. It is simply a particular Ego's limitations. As his consciousness and awareness is developed, he soon alters this attitude and finds himself receiving more and more inspiration in his daily tasks. It is not that man shall become a puppet, but that as he tries to help his fellow-man with suggestions and ideas, so on our side -- we likewise try to help man with suggestions and ideas. It is an interchange between two worlds, and a communion of experience.

There are times when we are not able to help because an individual Ego must learn to stand on his own feet. When he has exhausted all the means at his command, then we step in. It is like helping a child: if you help too much when learning to walk, it becomes backward in learning to walk alone. Only when man has used all his faculties and means at his command, do we, on this side, lend our aid. This is to prevent spiritual cripples. But remember: the aid is always there when asked for, when all possible effort has been made to help one's self.

DOES THIS BEGIN TO REVEAL ANYTHING TO YOU?

Companions: in your darkest hours of discouragement and blindness, remember that you truly do not walk alone. When you feel alone it is because there is a decision or condition you must face yourself -- and although there are those on our side who are eager to help you and will do so -- the decision must be made by you and ONLY by you, in order that it may become a part of your individual experience and consciousness. It must come of your own free will. Those on our side will supply you with courage and strength, -- if you will ask for these, but the decision itself must be made by you individually.

That is where the Invisible Helpers can help, - to give strength and courage, but they cannot interfere with your free will. If they could, it would defeat the purpose of life - individual experience.

Invisible help is always at hand when you have done your part.

Have you not received the help you asked for? Then, ask yourself -- have you done all that you can? The answer is usually right there.

We have often said that what separates the Seen from the Unseen is only a thread. It is the thread of consciousness and nothing more. Become more aware of life on your side of life and strangely enough, you will become more aware of ours. ALL IS ONE. Always remember: "As above, so below."

Dear Companions:

In our last Liber we considered The Technique of the Inner Way of Eastern Christianity (lecture #137) and I thought if I shared some ideas on the concept of -- Initiation -- as it is understood in the Christian and Magical Traditions -- it would tie in nicely at this time.

We find, in the religious rites of all nations, from time immemorial, certain ceremonies of admission into the tribal membership, or the religious life of the nation. These initiations have certain common elements and Sir James Frazer, in his Golden Bough, has brought together many examples of initiatory rites from all over the world. By studying them, one can observe the common elements, whether it be in the induction of a boy into the tribe by Australian aborigines, the reception of a postulant into the Catholic Church, or the present-day forms of initiation in fraternal Orders.

The word "initiation", deriving from a root signifying "a beginning or first step", is, of course, just what initiation is: the first step in a new life, -- whether that life be the tribal life of the clan, the religious life of the monk, or the ethical and benevolent life of the Martinist or modern Freemason. All these have their initiatory rites, through which the neophyte is introduced to, and linked up with, a new life. We may here add to the list: the baptisimal rites of the Church, the ceremonies of knighthood and the coronation of the British Monarchy.

It is obvious that all initiations will not have the same power -- that some will affect the candidate at entirely different levels to others -- but, (and this is the point to be stressed), even the most innocuous and naive of initiatory ceremonies may, if built upon true foundations and worked by men of knowledge, be the means whereby radical and far-reaching changes of consciousness in the postulant may be brought about.

It is a remarkable fact that practically all organized societies sooner or later develop some form of initiatory ceremony, and although this may be considered as due to the natural desire to make a clean break between the old life and the new, it has yet to be explained why the basis of all such initiations seems to be the same.

Associated with the rites we find the "laying on of hands" or some similar act, and it would appear from anthropological research that where such rites commenced without the laying on of hands, the process was nevertheless introduced at an early date.

It will be seen therefore, that there are two essential components of a true initiatory rite. First: the severance from the old life dramatised in certain symbolic forms, and secondly: the transmission of power to the neophyte, by his initiator. The former is built upon the departure from blind wanderings in the darkened and chaotic conditions of ignorance -- into the realms of light and order -- the "coming forth by day" of the Egyptian Book of the Dead; the "entrance into the clear light" of the Thibetan Bardo Thödol; the "Royal Transmutation" of the Alchemists; the "new birth" of the Christian mystics, etc.. But each in its degree.

For obviously the masonic initiation has rarely such thaumaturgic effect. Neither have many of the formal initiations of East or West.

Yet some effect is produced, and some power conferred, but 'under the veil of earthly things', for these formal initiations, valid and valuable though they may be, are the earthly shadows of the true initiations which are conferred in the timeless and spaceless eternities. In the words of the Kabalah, they are 'reflections into Malkuth', i.e., the representation in earth terms of supersensible realities. Thus, we are not made adepts by the ceremonial initiations in a lodge (though certain powers, as we shall see DO acrue to us as a result of the ceremony), -- WE BECOME INITIATED WHEN WE HAVE OURSELVES VOLUNTARILY CHANGED OUR HABITUAL CONSCIOUSNESS AND BEGUN TO LOOK AT THINGS FROM A DIFFERENT POINT OF VIEW. The word which is translated in the Authorised Version of the Bible as "conversion", is a word which can best be described as meaning "the turning of the mind around and the regarding of things from another point of view." This is, of course, just what initiation ... and conversion ... really is.

Here we come to one of the points at issue between the Catholic and Non-conformist. The Church teaches that infant baptism is efficaceous and sufficient; the Non-conformists look for conscious change of heart, taking place in youth or adult life, which brings the person concerned into the true fold. From the occult point of view, both sides are right in what they affirm and wrong in what they deny.

Baptisimal regeneration and conversion are both valid and efficaceous and should be complimentary to each other. The magical tradition gives a clear explanation of this, and it is reinforced by the findings of the pyscho-analysts. In order to understand the magical tradition it will be necessary to study what is known in psychology as "the group mind".

When a number of people associate themselves together in pursuit of a common object, their minds link up together and form -- for the purpose they have in mind -- a composite or group mind. The more emotional the object of their combined thought, the stronger and more clearly built becomes the group mind. The permanence of the group-mind depends on many factors; for instance, some group-minds formed by the impassioned oratory of some demagogue may last only a few minutes or hours. Others, formed by united thought over a period of years may have a life of many centuries. Even though they may seem to cease to exist, they will again recur when conditions are suitable, for quite apart from the original mental impulses, the combined mental action of the group builds a "form" in the inner worlds. (See lecture #79 on the Egregor). Each age sows in the inner worlds the seeds that, even if they do not take objective being, will ultimately come to germination and fruition in a later age. And, the esoteric teaching avers, -- those who originally started the group-form will find themselves back in reincarnate life at the period when the results of their former group-thinking are becoming objectivised on the physical plane, and they will have to work and possibly suffer under the conditions they themselves originated in the past.

There are four types of emotion which may energise such group-minds: Power, Sex, Herd and Religious emotions. Most of these are interblended in varying proportions in every group-mind, but one is predominant. Now the great religions of the world, with their more or less stereotyped rituals, their common emotion and their long life -- have built up very definite group-minds, as have the systems of government which have stood for many centuries, as, for example, the British Monarchy. Chivalric Orders, and initiatic fraternities such as the Masons, the Martinists and many others, all have built up very definite and very powerful group-minds in the inner worlds.

The strongest religious group in the Western world is the Christian Church and here we have a closely knit and vitally charged group-mind going back for nearly two thousand years. But in the case of Christianity we have to deal with much more than the sum total of the mental and emotional activity and aspiration of its members. It may help if we consider our physical body: it consists of myriads of cells, constantly growing, reproducing and disintegrating, but retaining a common relationship, the result of which we term our physical body. But each cell has its own psychic life, and the combined cell-life forms the NEPHESCH or Animal Soul of the Kabalists. Moreover, the co-ordinate psychic lives of the many cells form a receptacal or vehicle by means of which the Ego or self may come into contact with the material Plane.

So the common group-thought, emotion and idealism of all the members of the Christian Church forms a vehicle or body through which, and by means of which, the head of the Christian religion may come into close contact with all the material world. In theological terms, the Church is the extension of the Incarnation. Just as the psychic health of each cell in the body depends upon its co-ordination with all the others, and just as certain groups of cells are specialized within the general group for special duties, e.g.: organs, skin, teeth, nerves ... so in the body which is the Church, we find a similar specialization and functionalism. Entrance into the corporate cell-life of the body is possible by an identification of the psychic life of the individual substance ingested into the system with the common life, and herein, incidentally, is the key to the varying problems of bodily nutrition.

In exactly the same way, the individual becomes part of the group by a similar identification of his psychic self with the common life of the group, and this mental and psychic process is almost invariably accomplished by some rite of admission, such as baptism. Possibly the only exceptions to this are the Society of Friends or Quakers, as they are commonly known, and the Salvation Army.

Now in the baptismal service, the individual is linked mentally with the group-mind of the whole Church, and this link is made thorough the agency of one who is a member of that group and acts by its authority. Even in cases where baptism is performed in emergency by a layman or even a non-Christian, their mental "intention" to link up the newcomer with the group is sufficient. But, it may be objected, in the rite of infant baptism, the child cannot consciously identify itself with the Church. Consciously, no; but man is greater than his conscious mind, and the child links itself subconsciously through the officiating minister, with the life of the whole. The god-parents should also provide extra links between the child and the Church -- though it is doubtful whether many do, (or even realize they can!)

Now what is the result of this piece of initiatory magic? The child is put into the circulation of the Life of the Divine Head of the Church, and the conditions are provided whereby he or she may begin the journey from the chaos of the past, which is built into the subconsciousness, and becomes in posse what they have always been in esse, -- a child of God. So the Anglican Catechism says that baptism is "a death unto sin and a new birth unto righteousness", and this is the formula of all true initiations. Water is used as a symbol of cleansing lustrations and the waters of baptism are the Christian counterpart of the lustrations of the Mysteries.

Although the child has been initiated into the Christian community, and has begun to partake in the spiritual life thereof, this baptisimal initiation is but the earthly shadow of the true Christian initiation of New Birth. The true initiation takes place when the personal self is for a moment caught up to and united with its Greater Self of which it is the earthly representation, and through that Greater Self with the Logos in whom it lives and moves and has its being.

The experience of "conversion" is an unregulated form of this Christian initiation, hence its importance from the Non-conformist point of view.

To return to the general question of initiatory rites, all true ceremonies link up the neophyte with the life of the group-mind and also implant within him the seeds of power which it is hoped will at a future time bring him to the conscious "realization" of his true nature.

A friend possessing psychic vision made the following report upon an initiatory rite which was worked in his presence:-

"When the minor Officers in the Lodge made their ceremonial contact with the candidate, his aura became luminous, each portion of the aura corresponding to the particular Office shone brilliantly. Observation of the new member at a later date showed that the effect is relatively permanent - at least in this case.

"When, however, the magus of the lodge made his contact, it appeared as if a minute portion of his subtle body was detached from the region of the heart center; a brilliant minute seed of golden white light seemed to pass down through the aura of the candidate until it came to rest in the region of the solar plexus. Later observation suggests that this is a permanent effect."

A similar, though far more intense phenomena has been recorded by other clairvoyants studying the ordination of a priest in those sections of the Church which have retained the "Apostolic Succession". Perhaps after all, it may fall to the lot of the despised magician to confirm the claims of the Church concerning its priesthood!

Now, you ask, -- "what is the validity of those "mail-order initiations" peddled by some correspondence-schools, which are to be performed by the members in their bed-rooms"? Such organizations, many of whom claim linkage with traditional and historical Orders, try to put over the idea to their affiliates that they can take an object such as a piece of stick, pretend it to be a sword, mumble a few words, tap themselves on the head, and then proclaim themselves to be duly initiated members. One can find many otherwise clear-thinking people who have allowed themselves to become so gullible, that they are hood-winked by that spoof ... and believe through a "postal initiation" and subsequent self-conferred "degrees" they are now high-ranking and bona fide members of this or that Order ... and they even produce a membership card to proove it! This is lamentable.

The question regarding the validity of such practices can easily be resolved by asking if any of them would, (for example) obtain a Roman Catholic liturgy for the ordination of priests, read it through, put their own hands on their heads, proclaim themselves ordained, and then turn up at a Roman Catholic church to say the Mass? I think not. One must be careful not to mistake eggs for bacon.

In this lecture I have used Christian baptism as an illustration, but the principles involved are not peculiar to Christianity. The Mystery religions of the Mediterranean basin in the classical period used the same symbolism and very similar rites. In the Mithraic rites the "washing in the Blood of the Lamb (or Bull)" was realistically performed in the "kriobolium" or "taurobolium" where the initiate, robed in white, stood under a grating upon which a lamb or bull was slain, and was thus literally washed in the sacrificial blood. Some of the parallels with Christian symbolism are very close, so much so, in fact, that some of the Christian Fathers explained them by saying that the Devil, knowing what Christianity would be, had guided the heathen to copy what would later be revealed! Others, not Christian apologists, have said that this similarity proves that Christianity borrowed its sacramental system from the preceding religions.

The magical tradition avers that the Christian religion, founded on certain principles, expressed itself in similar forms to those of the pagan world around, but redeemed them from the corruption into which they had fallen. It also suggests that the Christian Church had no need to borrow its rites and forms, since it had its roots in the secret tradition of the Hebrews, and what is infinitely more, it was founded and directed by the Supreme Master of all the Mysteries. The "Mysteries of Jesus" of the early Church could hold their own against any of the surrounding Mystery religions. In any case, a religion manifests its vitality in just this assimilation of the best elements of other systems. The Church, like the wise householder of the parable, brings forth from her treasure store things both old and new.

Dear Companions:

In Liber 34 we presented the first in the series of the "Lyons Lectures" given by Saint-Martin. (There are 10 in the series). We will present the lectures in alternate Libers and as such, #2 should appear in this Liber; however: we have received an article prepared by the Martinist Study and Research Group entitled The Arithmasophy of Martines de Pasqually and feel it would serve a valuable purpose to present this article now, for your careful study, because the information will serve as further foundation and assist your comprehension of the ideas to be put forward by Saint-Martin in the "Lyons Lectures". Bear in mind that Saint-Martin was an active Elu-Cohen at the time he gave those lectures, so the more you understand Pasqualez' conceptions ... the better you will understand the "Lyons Lectures".

The article has to do with the occult philosophy of numbers according to Martinez Pasquales. The mystical doctrine of numbers, termed ARITHMO-SOPHY, is an indispensible element of the Cosmogony of the Martinist Doctrine of the Reintegration of Beings, and particularly to the ceremonial operations of the Elus Cohens.

This treatise is a translation of Chapter II, "THE REINTEGRATION", Typology, Arithmosophy and Mystic Geometry, written and compiled by R. Forester in his authoritative work called in English, The Occult Freemasonry of the 16th Century and the Order of the Elus Cohens.

The author, in explaining the doctrine of numbers, cites many selections from the REINTEGRATION OF BEINGS of M. Pasquales and these extracts are to be found in quotation marks.

THE ARITHMOSOPHY OF MARTINES DE PASQUALLY

The light brought about by the knowledge of symbols and classes of beings is completed by the information given by the secret science of numbers. This science, of course, has nothing to do with ordinary arithmetic. Numbers, which are for the profane, an external and superficial expression of relationship, are for the initiate both symbols and definite types (denoting definite characters). Having an absolute transcendental value and substantial reality, they are both the essence and the justification of things.

> "All laws of temporal creation and all divine acts are founded upon diferent numbers...., all numbers are co-eternal with the Creator, and it is through these different numbers that the Creator makes all his forms appear, and all his covenants with His Creatures."

Numbers are "the secret divine spiritual resorts which contain and govern the whole nature", they represent "the immutable laws of the Eternal". "It is the virtue of numbers which made the sages of all ages say that no man can become learned (in things) divine, spiritual, celestial or particular (stars, earth and living beings) without the knowledge of numbers. Knowledge of the laws regarding the spiritual nature is one thing and of the laws of order and of the covenants of material men - another. The laws of men vary, like shadows, but spiritual laws are immutable - everything being innate in them from their first emanation."

Arithmosophy became known to man only through divine revelation. "The Creator Himself taught the blessèd Seth the science of numbers through His spiritual messenger, HELI", and Pasqually having exposed at length the mystical values of the numbers 10, 7, 6, and 4, assures us that he has thus reproduced faithfully "the sublime spiritual instructions which Seth had received from the Creator through His deputy Heli."

It is thus in Arithmosophy that Pasqually finds justification and develops from it his cosmology and mystical anthropology.

* * * *

UNITY is the first principle of all being, spiritual as well as temporal" and appertains to the Creator (Himself).

TWO is "the number of confusion". It is a number which "controls the association of the will of man with the demoniacal suggestion". It is this combination of the two that caused the first fall of Adam and effected "the operation of confusion" which brought forth HOUVA; thus "the number of confusion appertains to woman (feminine aspect).

THREE or the TERNARY marks the character of matter. It represents the three fundamental substances: sulphur, salt and mercury, "emanated from the imagination and intention of the Creator". The different combinations of them have produced the elements which constitute the terrestrial and celestial bodies as well as the living organisms. However infinite may be the multitude of the "spirituous principles" and their manifestations, in the final analysis they always bring us back to the three primary substances. "The Ternary number teaches us to know the ternary unity of the spirituous essences used by the Creator for the creation of the different apparent material (visible) forms."

It is in this way that Bezaleel and his two assistants in building the Ark "make a true allusion to the ternary number which constitutes the powerful faculty of the inferior spirits - producers of the three spirituous essences from which all corporeal forms originate."

The threefold combination is found again in the body of man and in what constitutes the existence of the Minor. In fact, "the whole carcass of a human form" is divided into three parts: Head, trunk and iliac bones. Each part has its own proper characteristics and faculties and "these different faculties make a perfect allusion to the three kingdoms we know in Nature: animal, vegetable and mineral". The body of man has likewise three kinds of life: life of matter, of instinct or passive life which animates pretty well the animals deprived of reason as well as those endowed with it; the "demoniacal spiritual" which can incorporate itself into the passive life, and the "divine spiritual" life which presides over the other two.

The part played by the ternary is not only to enable us to know the composition of matter but it indicates the origins of the three spirituous essences constituting all forms - the direct (result of the) action of the inferior Spirits since it was they who emanated mercury, sulphur and salt for the structure of the universe", it is not only a specific sign of the class of these Spirits called "ternaries" but it is also the Word, as it is the reason for "the creation of all and any form, by the conjunction of the Intention with Will and the Word which begets divine action".

FOUR or the QUATERNARY is "the divine spiritual number which the Creator utilized for the spiritual emanation of all living beings." The "fourfold divine power" is the number of the Superior, Major and Minor classes of Spirits - states of being of the manifestation of Divinity. It is this number of creative energy which the Eternal utilized in order to emanate and emancipate the spiritual Minor.

"Man finds in himself a repetition of that quaternary number, thus making him conformable to his Creator: (1) the body (which is) the organ of the soul (2); the soul - the organ of the Major Spirit (Celestial Spirit) (3); the Major Spirit - the organ of Divinity (4)".

"All emanated and emancipated beings (contained in the four classes of Spirits, i.e. Superior, Major, Inferior and Minor) as well as their laws and their powers, derive from the same quaternary number or the fourfold essence of Divinity which encloses all."

"The Eternal has clothed man with all divine spiritual power since he was the act (the manifestation, the product) of the fourfold essence of Divinity". "The Minor, emanated from the fourfold essence, must contain the number of his owm emanation distinguishing him from all (other) emanations which had taken place before him and placed him above all other emanated spiritual beings."

"Out of the quaternary proceed all temporal things and all spiritual actions".

It is also the number of "the central axis fire" which condensed, modeled and combined "the spirituous principles brought forth in a state of indifference" (inert by nature), to give birth to "all corporeal forms, as well as by its action it maintains them during the course of their temporal duration as fixed by the will of the Creator". Because, "there cannot exist a body not having within itself a vehicle of the central fire, upon which vehicle the inhabitants of this axis continually act as if being originated from themselves".

Note: The above sentance, rendered practically unintelligible by Pasqualles' inability to express himself clearly, means really that life cannot exist in any organism without that particle of the central fire (animal heat) with which the Inferior Spirits presiding over this axis animate the bodies.

"The central fire continually directs its action upon all corporeal forms of the apparent matter, consolidated by that same operation, to impart to them motion - the faculty to act and to react.

"This central axis is the general, particular and universal agent (which means: acting upon the earth, the living beings and the whole universe) adhering to the supercelestial circles, and the organ of the Inferior Spirits dwelling there and operating in it upon the principle of the apparent corporeal matter".

The body of man contains "a vehicle of that fire which is the principle of material life". It "carries the quaternary number - namely: first, the central axis; 2nd, the organ of the Inferior Spirits; 3rd, the organ of the Major Spirits (meaning that the Inferior Spirits are the organ of the Major Spirits); 4th, the Major Spirits - the organs of Divinity.

The number four, as the number of the central axis fire, "contributes to the perfection of form taken on by the indifferent matter, because, being the principle number from which everything proceeds, it gives motion and action to the form because it presides over all created beings".

The quaternary is moreover the sign of the spiritual corespondence existing between the human soul and the fourfold divine essence through the intermediary of the good Major Spirit. This relationship includes in effect four terms: minor soul, divine intellect, good Major Spirit and Divinity. To add, the body of man is the organ of the soul which, in its turn, is the organ of the good intellect (intelligence) which is an organ of the Major Spirit, which is in its turn, an organ of the divine Creator, a scale equally expressed by the number four. Finally, the quaternary is the number indicating to the Minor from whence he comes and what his power was originally. Adam originally had the quaternary in his possession, however, he was deprived of it due to his fall. He shall be able to recover it by adding together the four characteristics he is composed of and which designate the different faculties given to him by the Creator. Only then will he be able to know "all the numbers of the spiritual power which are innate in him".

FIVE or the QUINARY is the number of the demoniacal Spirits. The Quinary has been formed by the demons when they wanted to add to the quinary the number of their own emanation, an arbitrary unity, i.e. when the will to create without consent and cooperation of Divinity has pretended to join the divine creative energy. This prevarication of the perverse Spirits "distorted their spiritual power and transformed it into a limited and purely material power under the guidance of a chief chosen amongst themselves".

SIX or the SENARY, called by initiates "the number of the daily operations", is the number of creation because "it is through the Senary that the Creator released from His thought all the species of images of apparent corporeal forms which subsist within the universal circle". This is the explanation of the six days duration of creation according to Genesis. The symbolical picture used by the Bible means that the Creator "a pure Spirit, superior to time and successive duration" has "operated six divine thoughts for universal creation". "Each of these days, or thousands of years, should be considered only as the duration of the operation of the six divine thoughts". These six days express the duration and limits of the existence of matter "which shall last six thousand years in all its perfection."

SEVEN or the SEPTENARY is "a number more than perfect which the Creator used to emanate all Spirit out of his divine immensity". Its evident value is manifested by our impossibility to divide it into two equal parts "without destroying or distorting it". Its indivisibility by number 2, the number of confusion, is the mark of its perfection. It is the sign of the Superior Spirits "which should serve as first agents and a definite cause contributing to the operation of all species of motion in the forms created within the universal circle". Because "the particle of the ex-central uncreated fire (see note) would never produce anything within the corporeal forms if it (the particle) was not reacted upon by a principal and superior cause which is nothing else but the divine septenary agents which preside as chiefs over the diferent actions and different motions of all bodies upon which they make their own thoughts and will operate according to how they have received it."

Note: This expression probably designates the vital energy emanated from the divine center. Now, is the "central axis fire" mentioned above a material manifestation of it? Such as the ordinary mercury was a gross form of the "mercury of the philosophers" for the alchemists? The supposition seems to be logical, but in fact, Pasqually uses these two expressions indifferently, without trying to establish any difference between them.

Similarly, as the soul of a Minor has a body (the human corporeal form) as its organ, so also the Septenary Spirits have corporeal beings as their organ. The Eternal, after having "operated six divine thoughts for the universal creation", gave on the seventh day "seven spiritual gifts" and "he appointed seven principal Spirits to his whole creation to sustain it in all its temporal operations, in accordance with the septenary duration he had set for it." "The cooperation of the seven principal Spirits is shown in the physical world by the action of the seven planets, influencing the temperature, seasons, and maintaining the universe."

Note In other words, the vital energy which has organized and which animates matter, acts only on the organism due to the influence of the planets which regulate the rhythm of the universal life, and a Major Spirit presides over each of the seven planets serving as an intermediary between the First Cause and material creation.

"The septenary number is philosophically (mystically) reckoned by seven thousand years as far as the temporal and duration are concerned. However, when the Scriptures say that on the seventh day God dedicated his own proper work to Himself by blessing the universal creation, one must conceive by this benediction, the uniting of the seven principal Spirits, which the Creator re-united with all the creatures included or contained in His whole universal creation".

"The "correspondence" between the seven Major Spirits which the Creator "appointed to His universe to instruct the inferior and minor creatures of His will, and among which is the Holy Spirit, is taught to us by the Scriptures when it mentions the seven Angels, seven Archangels, seven Seraphim, seven Cherubim, seven Dominations, seven Powers, seven Judges of Israel, seven principal chiefs under Moses and Aaron, seventy years of Captivity, seven weeks of Daniel, seven days of the week and the seven branched Chandelier, placed in the temple of Solomon which is still displayed in the Church of St. Peter in Rome.

However, the Septenary "which has given perfection to all created being, is the same which shall destroy and abolish all things". When the Senary will have exhausted its power, i.e.: when the purpose of the six divine thoughts will be accomplished, "the seventh period shall come, the seventh millenium, during which matter will fall into a terrible decay lasting until its total dissolution". "The central axis fire shall dissipate the apparent forms as swiftly as it had shaped them". Because, just "as elementary fire has power to reduce into ashes whatever it embraces, likewise the central axis has the faculty to devour and dissipate totally all what had been reintegrated into it, without even leaving a trace or some suitable substance for a Spirit to inhabit it." At that moment "the Creator will withdraw the matter into Himself with as much swiftness and ease as with which He had (originally) conceived it for the creation of His work. Thus, just as everything will have subsisted in a succession of degrees by a divine order, likewise everything will gradually approach its end and return to its first principle."

"The universe, having been conceived in its entire perfection by the Septenary number, will also become reintegrated by this same number into the imagination of Him who conceived it." "There shall not remain any trace of creation after it is reintegrated into its principle of emanation."

EIGHT or the OCTONARY, is the number of "the double divine power which had been entrusted to the first Minor (Adam) to triumph over the prevaricating spirits." The Creator assigned it to the Spiritual Elect, or Elect Minors, "whom He wanted to favour and place in charge of the manifestation of His glory." The Octonary also belongs to the Spirits of the supercelestial world, who "act not only upon the celestial and material worlds but also upon the circle of the universal axis". Thus, they fulfill a double duty, and moreover, "by their rank and mission, they enjoy the action of double power" since they "serve as a double rampart against the atrocity of demoniacal operations".

NINE or the NONARY, is demoniacal because it is the number of matter multiplied by itself. The (esoteric) Scriptures give us several proofs of this diabolical character of Nine. Here are some examples: "Cain and his two sisters, penetrated by a demoniacal intelligence, had but one thought, one intention and one action. Their three spirituous principles and first essences, their three virtues (faculties) and their three powers all add up to make nine."

The proof that number nine is radically evil is that the sum of all digits which make any multiple of nine is always NINE. Thus, when Cain joined his two sisters to surrender himself to a demoniacal operation, the accursed operators, by adding their three demoniacal numbers nine formed number 27. This total is also obtained by adding eight times number three to itself making thus 27 or two plus seven, i.e. nine; and again 27 multiplied by 9 makes 243 which, when added up: 2+4+3 makes 9.

TEN or the DENARY, is the "divine number". Initiates represent it by the number one inscribed in a circle. The denary is "the origin of all major, inferior and minor spiritual beings, and of all laws of action whether they be spiritual or spirituous", since it "contains the first nine numbers which stand for them".

"No minor being can become a sage without a perfect knowledge of that great denary number of the Eternal and of its content of emancipation and creation". The Spirits of the first class are called superior or denary Spirits. There are ten Patriarchs and ten Elect Minors. These groups of privileged beings "form a complete spiritual divine denary number".

ELEVEN is apposed (imprinted, the original text reads 'opposed' which must be a printing error as it makes the sentence unintelligible) on all species having a complete corporeal form analogous to the terrestrial bodies, and on all forms deriving from it".

TWELVE "has been the principle of the division of time".

Arithmosophy not only teaches a mystical value of the first twelve numbers but it also shows us how they beget each other. It assigns absolute value and reality to numbers by which they express themselves. We find confirmation of the principles just exposed by separating the numbers into their constituent digits, by arriving at their sums or products or adding up their values to obtain new numbers.

The proof that manifestation of divine power is identical with the very power itself, follows the fact that the Quaternary contains in itself the Divine Denary since the addition of the four numbers which are in the power of the Quaternary makes TEN, i.e.: 1+2+3+4 = 10. "Add its numbers from 1 to 4 and you will see clearly that everything derives from and exists through that famous divine number which is the denary number". Moreover, the first four numerals are the elements out of which the four numbers of the divine powers are composed, i. e. : 10 "the first and great divine power"; 7 (3+4) "the second power of the Creator"; 6 (1+2+3) "the third power of the Creator; 4 "the quaternary number which terminates and concludes the four divine powers of the Creator contained in His coeternal denary number".

The first four number can also be grouped as follows:

1+2 = 3	The number of matter.
1+2+3 = 6	The number of creation.
1+2+3+4 = 10	The number of divine power.

On the other hand, the quaternary has been made up of "ONE" (number of divine unity) and "THREE" (number of matter). Thus it is the number of the Minor who originated from an emanation of the divine Unity enclosed within matter as the punishment for the first fall of Adam. The property of the Quaternary as explained above is that it constitutes the Denary by the addition of the numbers it contains. This proves that the Minor is superior to both the major and inferior worlds, since to be able to form the perfect Denary of the Creator they must necessarily add themselves together 7 3.

The Quinary, "the number used by the demons to operate counteraction (reaction) against the spiritual divine action" is made up of TWO (the number of confusion, or of carnal procreation) plus THREE (the number of matter).

The Senary, "the number of the divine thought which had operated the universal temporal creation" can be decomposed in three different ways:

by 1+2+3 = 6
by 2+4 = 6
by 3+3 = 6 (number of matter added to itself).

This means that the following formula applied in the creation of the universe:

Divine Unity plus material procreation plus matter, or material procreation plus emanation, or matter combining itself with matter.

The Septenary is the sum of FOUR plus THREE, in such a way that SEVEN is "the number constituting the power of action of the major Spirit, which (power) is double, i.e. - that it acts upon the forms through the number THREE and upon the spirit of the Minor though the number FOUR".

The passive (vegetable) soul is in possession of the Ternary and the impassive (spiritual) soul of the Quaternary. However, these two lives, inferior and minor, passive and impassive, come from a pure Spirit and are intimately linked together which is proved by the addition of the Ternary to the Quaternary, the sum of which is the Septenary, the number of the major Spirit from which they have emanated.

The Octonary, "the number of double divine power" is made up with ONE plus THREE plus FOUR and the "Unity joins the Ternary only to form with the Quaternary the number of the double power".

MARTINIST HISTORY ... Recapituation

Historically, Martinism originates in the Order of Elus-Cohen, founded in 1767 (March 21st) by Martinez Pasquales. This Order sinks into inactivity shortly before the French Revolution although individual members carry on privately with the "work" for many years. The original Order may be considered as totally extinct.

Prior to the closing down of the Order of E-C, Brother Jean-Baptiste Willermoz, chief of the E-C of Lyons, introduces the basic elements of the secret doctrine into French Templar Masonry and is instrumental in the creation of the "Order of Knights Beneficient of the Holy City" (C.B.C.S.) to which he adds the two secret degrees based on the Martinist doctrine. (The lectures given in these two secret degrees may be found in the Martinist Tradition vol. 4).

The "Knights Beneficient" are still in existence today in the Masonic Obediences of Switzerland (Great Priory of Hevetia) and of France (Grand Prieuré des Gaules. Régime Ecossais Rectifié). The title is confered honorarily in other Masonic Jurisdictions. The two secret degrees introduced by Willermoz have disappeared from present day workings.

One of the early Elus-Cohen, Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin, secretary to Martinez Pasquales, deviates from the practices of the E-C and evolves a different system, fundamentally based on Martinez's doctrine, but influenced by other traditions. Saint-Martin is affiliated to the Order of Unknown Philosophers and becomes a great admirer of Jacob Böehme's philosophy. He develops into a teacher, publishes books under the name of "The Unknown Philosopher" and trains personal adepts to which he transmits an Initiation. These adepts are loosely gathered into an organization known indifferently as "Société des Initiés" or "Société des Intimes". They are in secret known as the "Supérieurs Inconnus" (Unknown Superiors). After the death of Saint-Martin, these Unknown Superiors continue privately with the personal transmission of the Initiation.

Two of these Unknown Superiors, having met by chance in Paris, they decide to gather all the admirers of Saint-Martin's philosophy into an organization known as the Martinist Order. Papus is the instigator of this movement and he is assisted by Augustin Chaboseau.

The Supreme Council of the MARTINIST ORDER is formed in 1890. This Order grows rapidly until the death of Papus in 1916. Thereafter it acquires a Masonic leaning which leads to internal divisions. As the constitutions were changed after the death of Teder (and partly during his lifetime) one may consider that the original ORDRE MARTINISTE of Papus ceased to exist towards 1918. [Teder, you will remember, was Papus' successor]. The Order, now headed by Jean Bricaud, successor to Teder, becomes known as Ordre Martiniste de Lyons, its headquarters having been transfered to the city of Lyons. The Ordre Martiniste de Lyons stiffens its Masonic stance and will only allow persons who are Freemasons of at least the third degree to become members; this causes a problem and many Martinists upholding the principle of Free Initiations refuse to adhere to the directions of Bricaud. Jean Bricaud is succeeded by Constantin Chevillon and this last by Brother Henri Dupont. At this point the Order, as well as all other fraternal Orders and Societies, are at a low ebb, World War II having devastated almost everything. Brother Dupont leaves his succession to Papus' son, Brother Philippe ENCAUSSE.

In the meanwhile, in 1920, the ORDRE MARTINISTE ET SYNARCHIQUE is created by Bro. Victor Blanchard, also known as Paul Yésir, who was appointed successor to Teder. Bro. Blanchard refused his succession as Grand Master of the Ordre Martiniste de Lyons because he did not approve of the Masonic tendencies that had developed in that Order. His aim is to draw together all the Martinists faithful to the original constitutions into a liberal Order. He represents Martinism in the FUDOSI as one of the three original Imperators of that federation. After his death in 1955, he is succeeded as Sovereign Grand Master by Dr. Edward Bertholet (Sâr Alkmaion), Grand Master of the Swiss Jurisdiction. Of the original Martinist Orders, the Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique is the only one which has operated continuously.

The Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel was created by Martinists who did not accept the Masonic restrictions imposed by Bricaud and who did not want to join Brother Victor Blanchard. Its first Grand Master, V. E. Michelet was quickly replaced by Augustin Chaboseau. Upon the death of Augustin Chaboseau, his appointed successor and son Jean Chaboseau could not obtain the necessary support from the Supreme Council of that organization so he pronounces the dissolution of the Order and abdicated. His declaration is ignored by some members who attempted to keep the Order together but it finally collapsed entirely with the dissolution of the FUDOSI in 1951. The American branch called Traditional Martinist Order, is kept alive by its parent organization -- a Californian rosicrucian correspondence school -- but is soon shut out by the regular Orders because it turns* the symbol of the Martinist Order upside down, resorts to "postal initiations" and other outrageous and untraditional practices.

At the collapse of the Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel, Bro. Jules Boucher attempts to gather its members in a new Order which he founds under the name Ordre Martiniste Rectifié. Success is limited and he was not succeeded as Grand Master after his death in 1955.

In the meanwhile Brother Philippe Encausse, assisted by ex-members of the O. M. Traditionnel, around 1950/51, forms a new Order to be known as the Ordre Martiniste de Papus, on the basis of the original constitutions of his father, Papus, and having no Masonic prerequisite. Then, Brother Henri Dupont, head of the Ordre Martinist de Lyons dies and leaves the succession of this Order to Brother Encausse. Brother Encausse thus becomes the head of two Orders which he fuses (i.e. the Ordre Martiniste de Papus which he founded and the Ordre Martiniste de Lyons which he inherited from Brother Dupont).

Amidst this activity, Brother Robert Amblain, known as "Aurifer", assisted by other Martinists in possession of the Masonic grades of Knights Beneficient (C.B.C.S.) founds the Ordre Martiniste des Elus-Cohen which serves as an antichamber to the Ordre des Chevaliers Macons Elus-Cohen de l'Univers (modern version) which perpetuates the Martinism of Willermoz.

Let us now come to 1988 and review the situation as it exists at this date. (The writer has recently returned from a visit to Paris and is in a position to give the following accurate information):

1. ORDRE MARTINISTE. The original Order was founded in 1890. After the death of Papus the constitutions are changed and Masonic tendencies introduced. The original Order is thus "replaced" by an organization of a somewhat different character which becomes known as The Ordre Martiniste de Lyons. It eventually becomes inactive. Its Grand Master, Henri Dupont hands over to Brother Philippe Encausse who merges it with the Order he created called Ordre Martiniste de Papus. Brother Philippe Encausse hands over to Brother Irenée Séruget and then at a later date takes the Order over again from Séruget. Brother Encausse hands over to Brother Sitael on May 20, 1978 who is now President. (The present organization prefers their head to be called 'President' rather than 'Grand Master'). Brother Sitael is ably assisted by his wife, sister Sephora. Both Sitael and Sephora were born in Barcelona, Spain. They were both Initiated into Martinism by Sephora's father, Josep de Via, in 1957. Coincidentally, Sephora's father died on the very same day that Sitael was proclaimed President of the Order by Brother Philippe Encausse. There is no Masonic pre-requsite in the present Order.

*It has now turned the Pentacle right way up again - but still continues the "postal initiations"!

2. There has been the creation of several new Orders which are splinter groups of the O.M.. A sister, C. B., decided to start an Order called Ordre Martiniste Initiatique. She asked Brother Robert Amblain to lend his name and support. Later, Brother Amblain 'excommunicated' the said sister and her husband and claimed a Russian affiliation.

   Another is the Martinist Order of Lebanon which meets in Paris. This was started by an Arab brother who decided that the rituals of the O.M. could be improved.

   Another is the Ordre Martiniste Libre.

   Then there is the National Martinist Order of Belgium which has a loose affiliation with the O.M. of France. etc. etc. etc. .....

   RUSSIAN MARTINISTS. There are several stories about these. One is that at the time of the French Revolution many people fled and some went to Russia, where, those who were Martinists started Lodges operating independently, i.e. not under the aegis of a particular Grand Lodge. Then at the time of the Russian Revolution in 1917, many fled to various parts of Europe where, again, they formed lodges. It is said that there is one such lodge in Paris at this time, operating very secretly, and open only to Russians or to persons who can speak Russian.

3. ORDRE MARTINISTE TRADITIONNEL. This Order has been reintroduced into France by its American affiliate and is presently working. Contrary to what was said in an earlier Liber, this Order is NOT recognized by the regular Martinist Orders in France. The American T.M.O. continues to perpetuate the practice of "postal initiations" and continues to be banned by Martinists everywhere.

4. ORDRE MARTINISTE ET SYNARCHIQUE. This Order is the only one which has maintained an unbroken tradition since its inception. It is presently operating in the British Isles, Nigeria, Canada, Barbados, the U.S.A. and in Paris.

What is the position today with Martinism, generally? Whether the divisions that have occured in the Order, due to circumstances outlined, are "good" or "bad" ... is left to the judgement and opinion of each interested person to determine for him or her self. Of the traditional esoteric Orders transmitting an authentic Initiation, the Martinist Order remains unchallenged. Today, the Order is operating in many parts of the world and is getting stronger with each passing day. There are friendly and fraternal relationships between the Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique and the Ordre Martiniste and, hopefully, all the various Orders will sooner or latter reconcile their differences. Martinism has as its aim the unification and reintegration of Mankind, it is the ego and the personality that keeps everybody at a distance, but, as people standing on the perimeter of a circle come closer together as they walk towards the center, so will all divisions be removed in due time.

In the next Liber we will begin to look at the traditional origins of Martinism. Again, we thank all those who write us such encouraging letters. Let us all pray for Peace in the world.

GRADE: COMPANION

Private & Confidential

The International College of Martinists Incorporated, is a non-profit institution existing for the purpose of disseminating information on the Traditional Esoteric Arcana. The lectures/instruction contained in this Liber comprise material which was previously delivered orally to an esoteric group and has subsequently been given to the College for its use. Under these circumstances the College does not claim to be the author or originator of the contents of this Liber which is distributed in good faith. This Liber is loaned, not sold, to the receiving member as an incident of membership, for personal and private study, and its acceptance by the student is an acknowledgement that it is being held in trust for the College and is to be returned to it upon request.

DEVOTED TO THE ADVANCEMENT AND MYSTICAL ENLIGHTENMENT OF MAN

This Liber contains a very clear explanation of the meaning of the word "Christ".

We give below a concurrent definition which was written by Luc in November, 1887.

"Christ, the true esoteric Saviour, is no man, but the DIVINE PRINCIPLE in every human being. He who strives to resurrect the Spirit crucified in him by his own terrestrial passions, and buried deep in the "sepulchre" of his sinful flesh; he who has the strength to roll back the stone of matter from the door of his own inner sanctuary, he has the risen Christ in him."

LIBER 37

Dear Companions: #146

Having passed through a rather tedious period of alchemical introduction, we have succeeded in preparing a foundation upon which we can begin to build on some alchemical principles. This lecture will be on the subject of RE-GENERATIO, and it will be my intention to correct some of the mistaken concepts entertained in regard to this important truth of and to show as clearly as possible just what Regeneration really IS.

As a scriptural text, I will quote John 3:3 - "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God". If you will observe carefully, you will find that academic and spiritual interpretations both agree in all fundamental essentials connected with the subject.

Regeneration is defined academically as "the process or act of regenerating anew, reproducing or changing; renewing spiritually by the power of the Holy Ghost; improving greatly and reforming as to character and morals". It is the radical and permanent change of morals wrought in the spiritual nature of Man by the Holy Spirit through knowledge and participation in the fullness of spiritual power, consequent upon recognition of personal error, sincere repentance for the same, a strong persevering intent to reform and make restitution for the effects of one's errors upon innocent associates.

Above all: it is the gracious, divine impartation of spiritual force and new life.

DOCTRINALLY, it is held in the Roman, Greek, Eastern and Anglican Churches as the beginning of the new spiritual life, called the Sacrament of Baptism. By other religious organizations it is regarded as a change in the governing purposes of one's life, or as the reformation of one's habits; or again, as the creation and continuation of a new series of holy acts by the Holy Spirit or Spiritus Sancti.

BIOLOGICALLY, it is the renewal or reproduction of cells, tissues etc., in the ordinary vital processes; a process in which, by various devices, HEAT IS SAVED and RE-UTILIZED.

Facultative regeneration is the reproduction of an entire organism, from a portion of a complete individual, or polygenesis.

In HERMETIC ALCHEMY, Regeneration, termed REGENERATIO, is the act of being reborn in the spirit. It is the penetration of the soul and body by the divine HEAT of love, and the Light of intelligence, emanating from the divine FIRE within the heart. IT IS THE AWAKENING AND DEVELOPMENT OF SELF-CONSCIOUSNESS AND SELF-KNOWLEDGE.

Recapitulating, -- we find the whole morale of Regeneration synthetically resolves itself into five "R's":

1/Recognition 2/Repentance 3/Reform 4/Restitution 5/Regeneration

The literature of occultism teems with treatises on Regeneration and many processes are described, nearly 90% of which depend upon unnatural sexual practices or observances for their efficiency -- if such is the right word to use. Occult literature is replete with both recommendations and injunctions regarding sex usages and even the most moderate treatises occupy much otherwise valuable space with lengthy disquisitions regarding alleged "unused sex currents", etc. It is a notable fact that these lengthy disquisitions are usually the real feature of the book.

This is undeniably an age of sex, in which forces long held in leash by custom, convention, ethical codes, varying states of evolving modesty, physiological ignorance, and social & ecclesiastical inhibitions are now being rapidly released. We may confidently expect that for many long years to come, these unfettered and dangerous forces fast becoming actively unrestrained in community and national life, will give ample evidence of the power of the destructive forces and elements in Nature ... (the disease "AIDS" being just one). They will in due time, however, give place to a saner, equilibrated status.

The Brotherhood of the R+C never has been, nor is it now, a vehicle for the exploitation of sex subjects -- and it is for this purpose that the present instruction touches upon the subject -- to clear away any apprehension on the part of its members regarding such a possibility.

Sex perversions, and the subject of sex as a general topic for the prurient minded, are now -- and always have been -- the results of distinctly materialistic ages. There is no perversion in Nature. Nature equilibrates and balances her forces perfectly and the homo or man, in harmony with Nature, will not need the discussion, injunctions or pledges of secret or other societies to regulate such activities.

This is just where the true understanding of real Regeneration becomes of greatest value to the student. REGENERATION IS A PURELY SPIRITUAL PROCESS. IT HAS NOTHING TO DO WITH SEX CONSERVATION, REGULATION, OR SPECIAL PROHIBITIVE PRACTICES.

The reason for this vigorous statement lies in the truth, that REGENERATION ONCE ACCOMPLISHED, WILL AUTOMATICALLY ADJUST ALL SUCH MATTERS WITHOUT NECESSARILY DRAWING THE CONSCIOUS FACULTIES THERETO, OR FOCUSSING ATTENTION UNDULY UPON THEM.

Let us now see how many ideas have been legitimately misinterpreted and have thus given rise to ideas based primarily on sex matters.

It is well know to students who have reached the Hermetic Grades, that ALL the vehicles of man are not born at one time. The Physical, Etheric and Astral Bodies, as explained in earlier instruction, each have their own definite times of birth and maturity.

This is necessarily true of the mental sheath and faculties as well, and is therefore true OF THE SOUL AND TRULY SPIRITUAL POWERS.

Soul, as you have previously learned, is an essence extracted as pabulum, from the Threefold Body by the Threefold Spirit. This extraction cannot be made until the mental faculties are matured. Therefore, Soul, born of the SPIRIT, that is: brought forth, delivered, or brought into being by the Threefold Spirit, is NOT born into the world co-incident with the birth of the Physical Body, and therefore it may be truly said, "ye MUST be born again", and "unless a man be born of Water, and the Spirit he cannot see the Kingdom of God".

That which is flesh (the Physical Body), is flesh (the Physical Body), and no physical organism can enter the Spiritual Worlds, or Kingdom of God. That which is born of Spirit IS Spirit, (the Threefold Soul, born of the Threefold Spirit from the Threefold Body). This Soul CAN enter the Kingdom of Heaven, IF it awakens actively to its proper functions. It cannot be destroyed, but it may require more than one incarnation to bring it to the requisite degree of awakening.

This birth of Soul is the "second birth", or birth of Spirit, and CAN enter the Kingdom of God whenever it awakens to the Self-Consciousness and Self-knowledge previously described.

The Soul itself is Threefold, like the other divisions of Man. It is Conscious, Emotional and Intellectual. The last two states may be awakened and active, yet they may not entitle the Threefold Soul to enter the true Kingdom.

The Heavens, as will be remembered, are in varying grades. The first occupies the three higher sub-regions of the Astral World. The 2nd Heaven occupies the first four sub-regions of the Thought World, or the Division of Concrete Thought; the 3rd heaven occupies the three higher sub-regions of the Thought World, or the Division of Abstract Thought. This is the highest Heaven, or Kingdom of God, to which the present wave of humanity attains, and the greater part of humanity pass THROUGH THIS THIRD HEAVEN UNCONSCIOUSLY.

The CONSCIOUS ASPECT of the Threefold Soul must be awakened and fully functioning before the Soul with the Ego can pass through this 3rd Heaven CONSCIOUSLY, and that is why it is so necessary for the man to be "born again", "reborn", or "regenerated" -- recreated, reproduced, that he may be fully SELF-Conscious, and SELF-Knowing, in order that he may experience the happiness of entering and passing consciously through the 3rd Heaven.

This is true spiritual birth. It is born of water, because water Hermetically is the great universal menstruum, and the birth of soul from the physical body is effected by the same great universal fluid or menstruum, the WATER OF UNIVERSAL SPIRIT or MERCURY, the subtle cosmic medium by virtue of which the visible form of Water is but the crystalized manifestation in one of its elemental forms.

When the soul is truly born into active functioning and self-consciousness, REGENERATION HAS TAKEN PLACE and then it is that the outward visible change in morals and character is apparent.

Like the governor of an engine, when soul begins actively to function, it assumes control over the faculties of man to such an extent, that all his energies are disposed to the most completely equilibrated and balanced efforts and usages, and all questions regarding sex conditions come especially under its dominance.

The truly spiritual man or woman whose soul is in active control of the vehicular functions, can no more become a sex maniac or faddist, than he could become a drunkard, or a gambler, yet he does not require special prohibitive injunctions to prevent him from engaging in the last two, nor does he need the same to prevent him from the former.

Regeneration pertains solely to the Spiritual processes, and after awakening, co-ordinates the physical processes to an equal degree of regeneration, automatically correcting physical abuses.

This birth of the soul is the real BIRTH OF THE CHRIST within. "The Christ within" means not the incorporation of a spiritual personality, but the awakening into life and light of the Spiritual Consciousness. It is the Divine element in all humanity, which, if it manifests actively in the individual, becomes the personal Christ within that individual. "Christ" means therefore, an internal spiritual, living, and conscious power or principle, identical in its Nature with the Logos (or WORD of God made flesh) with which the highest spiritual attributes of each human being becomes ultimately united, if that human being has developed any such Christlike attitudes. Christ, then, is one's own inner Light, the revelation and presence of the divine in humanity and, as the Gnostic Apostle Paul says, our "hope of glory". This principle is Threefold in its Nature, but, as Hartmann says, "it is almost useless to speculate about its attributes, as they will be comprehensible only to him who realizes its presence within himself".

Psychology teaches us that the process and sensation of thought in the neural centers is accompanied by the liberation of HEAT. It is also apparent to all that heated discussions, dialogues, arguments, etc., often bring a rapid train of thought almost approaching inspiration. HEAT therefore, is shown to be a most active agent in establishing correspondences and communications between the inner and the outer, the physical and the spiritual; the seen and the unseen worlds and realms.

This incident of Heat is one of more than passing interest to the occult student. The fact that heated conversations develop rapidity of thought, indicates that the activities of spiritual processes and acts are also accompanied by the liberation of heat, for thought phenomena relate directly to the spiritual worlds, and the spiritual vehicles of its transmission to the Ego. The presence of heat is therefore extremely significant, as it indicates a closer approximate to the actual cognizance of the greatest and most central of all the teachings of the R+C, the SPIRITUAL FIRE.

True Fire is as invisible as true steam. Flame is merely the physical body or envelop of Fire. Fire is Hermetically defined as "an internal activity whose external manifestations are heat and light." This activity differs in character according to the plane on which it manifests itself. FIRE, ON THE SPIRITUAL PLANE, REPRESENTS LOVE or HATE; on the Astral Plane it represents Desire and Passion; on the Physical Plane it represents Combustion. IT IS THE PURIFYING ELEMENT, AND IN A CERTAIN ASPECT IS IDENTICAL WITH LIFE.

On the mundane plane, Fire is the polarity opposite to water among the Elements. Spiritually, however, the True Fire will be found actively potent in Water because it is the vivifying principle in all things. Just as there is visible substance and invisible substance, so there is a tangible physical water and an intangible spiritual water, and the purifying potencies of the Hidden Fire in the Spiritual Water make possible the cleansing and purifying of the homo or human who truly seeks by the "Five Steps" (the five R's) to attain complete and genuine Regeneration.

Then again: Water, Hermetically defined, when referring to the realm of Spirit and particularily SOUL, is the connecting link between Spirit and Matter. IT ALSO REPRESENTS THOUGHT. Therefore when SOUL is born from Matter, (the Physical Body) we see at once that Regeneration is even more distinctly a TRUE MENTAL PROCESS; in fact it is the personal application of the Martinist principle of Right Thinking, to one's own personal experience.

Also, you will note that the process of Regeneration is the spiritual birth resulting from the marriage or union of the Divine and Mortal Elements in Man, or the Union of Physical and Spiritual Bodies, each threefold in their natures.

Regeneratio therefore, reacts on both the physical and spiritual vehicles in awakening and renewing the Soul powers. Thus by stimulating to Right Speaking, Right Acting and Right Thinking, it renews the cells and tissues of the physical body, raising them to higher planes and states of vibration, and thus helping them to co-ordinate their functions more agreeably with the spiritual vehicles.

Continuing to summarize from the opening premises, Regeneratio does actually reproduce, renew and regenerate an entirely NEW organism from a portion of a complete individual, when we consider that it is the process of renewing , recreating and reproducing latent soul powers into new life, activity and functions, from a part of a complete individual (the physical body) by the action of another part, (the spiritual vehicles or principles of Man).

The complete Man is said to be Body, Mind and Spirit.

Regeneratio reproduces from a portion of each, through Mind, the awakened SELF-CONSCIOUS SOUL.

Regeneratio is the rebirth IN THE SPIRIT, i.e. of the Spiritual Essence or Soul in the Spiritual World (not the outer or exoteric world) for Soul functions only within, never without.

The process of Regeneratio includes the penetration of the entire structure of Man -- spiritual and physical -- by the Divine Heat of Love, and the Light of Intelligence. No Regeneratio can be attained in fullness without the action and vivifying touch of True Love, for Love is creative in the individual homo or human, as well as in the Divine. Love born of the new consciousness of participation in the Divine Nature and attributes, brings about the putting away of the "OLD ADAM", and putting on of the "New Man" which is the SELF-CONSCIOUS Man.

As Love is creative and recreative in its action, so the Light of Intelligence is the QUICKSILVER which illuminates the new Man or recreated, reborn Man.

This is the "New Creation" referred to in Gal. 6:15.

The words, "for his seed remaineth in him" from 1 John 3:9, refer to the SEED ATOM OF THE SOUL BODY. SEED is one of the greatest of the R+C and Hermetic principles. Hermetically, Seed is termed a "germ, element, or power from which a being may grow". There are germs or seeds of Elementals, Minerals, Plants, Animals and Humans. The Seed Atoms of the Physical, Etheric and Astral Bodies of Man are already familiar to students of the Rose+Croix, but heretofore no mention has been made of the Soul Body Seed Atom.* And while Soul is an essence extracted from the Physical or threefold body by the threefold spirit -- yet the seed of soul must have been previously implanted in the threefold body by the Ego when incarnating. (*In Liber 38 we will give a talk on the subject of "Seed Atoms").

Now -- the Physical Body results from seed sent forth from a Physical Body. Such seed remaineth not in Man. But the new birth, the birth of awakened Soul or Self-Conscious Soul, comes from the Seed that remaineth IN man -- the Seed of the Soul, or Soul Seed Atom. Regeneratio is the spiritual rebirth that comes from the seed remaining IN each human being; the Seed of Right Thought, Right Acts and Right Feeling; NOT Physical seed, but Spiritual Seed, the offspring of the true marriage of the Threefold Spirit and the Threefold Body, not simply the association of the two threefold principles.

Male and female as Body, Mind and Spirit, marry their exoteric or exterior vehicles for the close association of the higher vehicles, but the regenerated soul, the purely spiritual offspring of the true marriage of the Spirit and Body IN a single individual, exists only spiritually, and needs not therefore, to associate with the lower vehicles, and therefore NEITHER MARRIES NOR IS GIVEN IN MARRIAGE.

Ignorance of the spiritual nature of the process of Regeneratio has been largely responsible for the perversion of its correct interpretation. It does not relate to the physical body so far as the results of regeneratio react upon the same, and tend to raise its vibrations to a higher plane.

Regeneratio is therefore neither an ABnormal nor a SUBnormal sexual practice, principle, or theory -- but at all times a purely spiritual process.

The process of regeneratio, alchemically, is accomplished by the process of Sublimatio, which is the raising of a lower state into a higher one. (Vices may become sublimated into virtues).

When the newly awakened or reborn soul rises into conscious activity as the result of sublimation, the lower or denser material or matter of the unawakened soul is known as Tartarus; residium, substance which has been deposited by a fluid, (the Water or Mercury of Regeneration) or crystalized out of the latter. The gross elements of the soul. The process of Regeneratio is effected by the Venus principle of love acting within a Man.

All things work only in their proper environment or worlds. Air is a perfectly natural element to birds, but not a natural element to fish. St, too, the spiritual realms are perfectly natural to spiritual beings and the spiritual nature of man -- but not to physical man. Therefore, regeneratio should go hand in hand with the striving for At-one-ment (which we will study in our next Liber) and which will outline the steps by which At-one-ment may be attained. It is essential for you to understand very very clearly right now: no gross soul can enter into at-one-ment with the Divine, and regeneratio or spiritual rebirth MUST BE ACCOMPLISHED AS A PREREQUISITE OR CONCOMITANT WITH THE DESIRE FOR AT-ONE- MENT. Thus shall the aspirant enter the Kingdom, and entering, he shall have rest.

Until we meet again, read and reread this lecture numerous times, understand it, and make every effort at sublimatio, using exercise #1 as a powerful tool. You will thus place yourself in the proper position to receive my instruction on At-one-ment.

May the Almighty, along with all His angelic hosts encourage you, brood over you and keep you steadfast.

Dear Companions: Greetings!

The foregoing lecture has no doubt opened your eyes to a great deal of new light. The lecture was from our alchemical affiliation.

We have said many times that ours is a school for the mature and serious student and in saying this we not only refer to the quality and depth of the instruction, but also to the fact that we are not dogmatic. We do NOT try to enforce or require our members to accept or subscribe to any particular teaching or practice. Our job is to present information from the many different and time-honoured traditional streams -- for study by our students -- and allow them to draw from the material whatever substance and nourishment they find palatable and can use.

On this occasion then, because we have some material on hand from a different stream, which has to do with a similar topic -- regeneration -- we thought we would bring it at this point and throw more fuel on the fire!

Let us turn to the archives of our French heritage and refer to the Martinist Doctrine which we studied in some detail earlier on -- and consider the following two papers on the subject.

The first is a summary of the Doctrine by Alice Jolly, which will serve as a refresher and an introduction; the second is an opinion by Robert Amblain, based on his interpretation of The Doctrine.

At the conclusion of the second paper, we will have some questions.

TREATISE OF THE REINTEGRATION OF BEINGS

The doctrine of Martinez de Pasqually

SUMMARIZED BY ALICE JOLLY

The Treatise of The Reintegration of Beings is the principal written work of Martinez de Pasqually. It contains all of his doctrine and is presented as a commentary of the first books of the Bible. Pasqually did not finish it -- but his discussion of the biblical personalities such as Adam, Noah, Abraham, and Moses, are enough to convey what Don Martinez was teaching about the nature of God, the world and the Fall and Redemption of humanity.

To briefly summarize the contents of the Treatise... let us just say that the original Fall of Man was general. The revolt of the spiritual beings preceded that of man. God had created these beings for his glory, but having emanated them from Himself, He made them distinct and free and placed them in a first circle "where they read clearly and with precision that which we happening in the Divinity".

Many of these spirits were not satisfied in this state of contemplation and of playing the role of a secondary cause in which "powers, virtues and operations" were assigned to them. Some wanted to be like unto God, ... and used their criminal will. As punishment, God created the material universe to imprison them, "a fixed place where these perverse spirits were to act out, and exercise their malice, while in privation."

The universe being thus created, God emanated Man who was to guard and keep watch over this universe inhabited by the perverse beings. Although he came after these first spirits, man was their superior by virtue of the divine will who emanated him as "God-man" and true Réau-Croix. He was the master of the whole universe and its three parts: the universe, the earth and the particular. The Particular was the sum total of all the terrestrial and celestial spirits. Man, in his Original Estate, was the master of all spirits, good and bad. In this state, man was totally free and became intoxicated with his own power. Instead of following the divine plan, he made an improper choice, and was impelled to enter the demoniacal realm. His spirit engendered evil: he wanted to equal God. In other words he repeated the sin of the first spiritual beings (which was: they wanted themselves to create other entities which would be dependent on them - Ed.) The result of his criminal operation was a physical body which poorly reflected his glorious form and which was subject to corruption. Through his pride, Adam "operated the creation of his prison". His punishment was immediate.

God transmuted him in this impure envelop which he created and man, instead of having a spiritual posterity, by joining his will to that of his creator, he had a posterity of impure and passive men. He was thus thrown out of paradise onto the earth of which he was formerly the master, to live just like the animals.

THE TREATISE ...
as INTERPRETED by Robert Amblain

The time has come for us to continue our study of the Martinist Doctrine.

The Martinist Doctrine comes from Pasqually's Treatise... It is taken from the Judeo-Christian and is commented upon with the help of the "Sepher-ha-Zohar" and the keys of the Jewish Kabalah.

To begin our study; let us take a look at primitive cults and their worship of the phallus. In these primitive cults, the sexual organ was a sacred thing. We also find this worship with the ancient Greeks in the Elusian Mysteries. Sexual esotericism is one of the keys to finding the truth which lies hidden behind the veil.

To reiterate: Man (in his fallen state) is a creation of the universe. He is the spiritual reflection of God and the material reflection of the Cosmos.

As Man is the Microcosm to the Cosmic Macrocosm; so the phallus is the microcosm to the macrocosm which is man. It is an organ which is almost independent from the will of man. That is, it depends more on the sub-conscious than on the objective consciousness. In the thoughts of primitive men, there was a more or less direct association between Archetypal Man and this natural organ. We can then understand why the Fall is associated with an attempt of an act of creation.

For these primitive people, the phallus eventually became the living symbol of the divine power manifested in man by Man. What teachings can we extract from the activities of the phallus? The same exact ones that the mythologists of Genesis have extracted.

I It is with his desire to create that the Absolute created the Logos, His reflection, His intermediary. The second comes from the first.

II Adam Kadmon was to create by thought and by his word, on a purely spiritual plane. Man must conserve his sexual energy to the benefit of his intellectuality. The waste of this energy for purely sensual (pleasurable) means, marks spiritual decadence.

III Adam emanated in turn Heva, (Eve) "the flesh of his flesh", according to Genesis, he then penetrated this inferior nature in order to give it life, in his turn, a new cosmos. By doing that, he only trapped himself and became subject to death.
Man, like Adam Kadmon, penetrate woman, "flesh of his flesh" in order to give life and to create a being like him, as God did. The phallus is thus his natural intermediary.
But like Adam Kadmon is spiritually dead for having covered himself with inferior matter -- the same way the phallus "dies" after having exteriorized the life it carries.

IV It is under the telepathic suggestion of the fallen entities that Adam wanted to create. And it is by the impulse of impure thoughts, of mental cliches, sometimes obscene and always momentarily separated from spirituality, that the man of flesh remembers the generative act.

V It is by fighting these impure thoughts that the man of flesh can liberate himself from sexual enslavement (which lowers him to the state of the animal sometimes), and spiritualize himself. It is by fighting these fallen entities that Adam Kadmon could have conserved the glory he had in his First Estate. It is by ridding himself from their domination that he will master them anew.

VI In the time that he is fighting these entities, Adam Kadmon necessarily conserves his own personality. While the man of flesh is fighting his own desires, the phallus manifests itself physiologically and becomes erect.

VII When Adam Kadmon overcomes these fallen entities, when they have reintegrated into the Absolute, or he has dissolved them, his role will then have come to an end and he will disappear in the bosom of the Absolute.
When the man of flesh totally overcomes the enslavement of the senses and of desire, he no longer will have to fight them, and indifference will replace repression ... then all physiological sexual activity disappears and the phallus no longer manifests itself.

Q U E S T I O N S

1. Are the authors of lectures #146 and 148 talking about the same thing, or the same process? Is there a conflict in the ideas expressed?

2. What thoughts do YOU have about regeneration ... and exactly how do you think it can be attained?

There is a great deal more to these two lectures than is apparent at first reading. STUDY them over and over again before reaching even a preliminary conclusion.

Write your answers on a single sheet of paper and send them in.
Kindly remember to include both your Key Number AND your name & address.

We should be interested in having your views on the above.

Traditional Origins of Martinism

We have dealt in some detail with the factual history of the Martinist movement. The history presented has been based on verifiable events and dates. In order to keep within reasonable limits however, the causes and results of some events, and the circumstances surrounding them, had perforce to be omitted. The complete and detailed history of the movement is of course readily available in numerous books, in French, but even as we write, more and more material is being translated and is finding its way in English publications. Quite a lot is now available on the shelves of many comprehensive bookstores.

We now come to examine the doctrinal and traditional origins of Martinism. This is a delicate subject as it rests mostly on transmitted oral indications, although there emerge here and there verifiable landmarks.

We know that Martinez Pasquales had lived on Timor Island, in the Malay Archipelago, and it is possible he also travelled to China. However there seem to be no influence from the Far-East in his doctrine. The most likely influences can be traced to Hebrew, Greek and Alexandrine sources with a strong Christian Gnostic undercurrent. There are numerous works available on the Gnostic movement and we recommend Brethren to familiarise themselves with the Gnostic doctrine and to form their own opinions on its resemblance to the doctrine of Martinez. The Cathars, who succeeded the Gnostics and were cruelly persecuted are also worthy of investigation.

It is interesting to note that Martinez used after his signature certain signs in which a symbol looking like number 4 was predominant. (See diagrams at end of lecture). It is significant that this sign or glyph is found as a symbol of the "AGLA" Society which originated as a kind of Guild of Printers and which grouped under that front many philosophers, hermetists and Qabalists who were concerned with the publication of occult works and treatises. The French King Francois I is said to have belonged to this Society. The members adhered to a liberal interpretation of Christianism that was strongly reminiscent of the Cathars and used as personal insignia the basic figure 4 supplemented by other symbols indicating their main interests and personal tendencies.

In the beginning of the 16th century, Henri Cornelius Agrippa founded a secret society known as the "Community of the Magi" which gathered together the masters of the occult sciences of Alchemy and Magic. In 1510, Agrippa founded in London an English branch of the French society. This branch developed and spread to other countries where it set up "chapters" for the study of the forbidden sciences. From a manuscript by Michael Maier kept in the Leipzig Library, the "Community of Magi" gave birth in Germany, around 1570, to a secret fraternity called "The Brothers of the Golden Rosycross".

About the same time in 1598, Simon Studion organized in Nuremberg, Germany, a society known as the "Militia Crucifera Evangelica". About 1605, this Militia adopted as its symbol the Rose & Cross. A century later, the Militia Crucifera Evangelica merged with the Fraternity of the Rose+Croix. In 1614-1615, the publication of two pamphlets called in short Fama Fraternitatis and Confessio Fraternitatis Rosae Crucis, (Ratisbonn 1614) revealed publicly the existence of the secret society.

In 1616, Michael Maier --personal physician to the Emperor Rudolph II, protector of the Hermetists -- went to London and met Robert Fludd. Fludd organized the English adepts on the pattern of the Rose+ Croix. In France the first manifestations of the activities of the Rose+ Croix take place around 1623.

Eventually, owing mostly to the problems of the time, two different tendencies manifest within the rank of the Rose+Croix and lead to a split in the movement. The members attracted by mysticism, the Qabalah, Christian Theosophy, ancient Gnosticism and, more generally, the Inner Life, gather into the AUREAE CRUCIS,(Brothers of the Golden Cross) and from them will stem the initiator of Jacob Böehme and his followers. The members attracted by the practical researches and investigation of natural phenomenon gather into the ROSAE CRUCIS (Francis Bacon, Thomas Vaughan) and from them will be born the "Invisible College" later to become the "Royal Society of London for Improving Natural Knowledge" (generally known as the "Royal Society") which receives a charter of recognition from King Charles II.

Around 1645, Elias Ashmole, Robert Moray, Thomas Warton, George Warton, William Oughtred, John Hewitt, John Pearson, William Relly and others form a society whose avowed object is the study of Nature but which transmits a secret teaching. In order better to hide its existence and its action on the occult and mystical plane, they decide to integrate in a medium which would provide it with a cloak.

At the time, all London citizens who had a craft had to affiliate with a Guild. Elias Ashmole entered the Fraternity of Builder Masons which, since the Middle Ages was placed under the protection of St. John. He then requested that the Society of the Rose+Croix be allowed to meet in the headquarters of that guild, Mason's Hall, Mason's Alley, Basing-Hall Street, London.

In 1717, the mysterious Order takes a leading role in the Fraternity of Free Masons. In 1723, the operative degrees of this Fraternity are modified and a third degree called the Master degree is introduced. Its ritual is based on a Death & Resurrection Rite of rosi-crucian inspiration.

Thus can be traced the development of a secret and esoteric tradition within the Freemasonic movement. Martinez Pasquales, as we know, worked inside that movement and there can be little doubt that he brought with him in the Freemasonic Order a fresh intake of influence from the rosicrucian society of which he was a member and of which very little is known historically.

We saw that Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin inherited from Martinez Pasquales in the Order of Elus-Cohen the principles derived from the mysterious rosicrucian society working within the framework of Freemasonry. But Saint-Martin himself came under another influence -- that of the Order of Unknown Philosophers.

In a lecture with which many of you are familiar, allusion is made to a mysterious and secret society that has existed for a very long time, remaining itself nameless but manifesting at different periods under different names. This was given as a "legend" which the hearers are asked to accept or reject as they see fit. It is not our purpose to enlarge on this point in the historical study of the origins of Martinism, but we ask the Brethren to keep it in mind and to interpret the History in the light of that legend. Thus they may come to realize the True Origin of Martinism and of the Initiation transmitted under the Cloak of Martinism.

The Order of Unknown Philosophers dates from around 1643. It was a mystical fraternity of a secret nature composed of the adepts of a rosicrucian school which was mostly evangelical and Protestant character. Heinrich Khunrath, Alexander Sethon the "Cosmopolite", his disciple Sendivogius (the Polish Alchemist), and Jacob Böehme, are among those whom the tradition gives as having preceded Rudolph Salzmann in the Order of Unknown Philosophers. One fact is certain, that is: the historical existence of the Order of Unknown Philosophers whose statutes were published in 1784 in the review "L'Etoile Flamboyante" by the Baron Tschoudy.

The Order of Unknown Philosophers is said to be descended from "Les Frères d'Orient", an Initiatic Order created in 1090 in Constantinople under the patronage of the Emperor Alexis Comnès.

We leave here the historical antecedents of Martinism. We have given a fairly comprehensive picture and the Brethren who feel particularly attracted by this side of our Tradition will find more details in a list of works, a copy of which I will hand out after the meeting. We remind everyone that there are certain aspects of Martinism which will not be found in published works and we also advise you to use a certain discernment about the bias that exists in these works, particularly when they are written by members of other organizations, like Freemasonry, who are trying to prove something in favour of their particular movement.

PERSONAL NOTES & THOUGHTS

LOUIS CLAUDE DE SAINT-MARTIN

Instructions to men of desire

SECOND LESSON

Brethren,

In the last discourse, we looked at the theme of the creation of the universe or of time, which should only be taken to mean the successive duration of the various bodies of which it is composed, and whose interrelated courses form equal intervals commonly called time, (I will go on to demonstrate later how the âme is subject to time while it is in its prison, or in man's body). For it should not be thought that the Divinity could be restricted by any limitations: His vastness being infinite, no creation could contain nor define Him. On the contrary, the Divinity contains all kinds of emanations of spirit and creation of visible forms. This is so true that a pure and simple spirit could not be subject to time, since, having no material body, no body made of visible matter could limit it. Because its law is above that of forms, it penetrates through all the different laws which shapes their appearance and it commands them and orders them according to the will of the Eternal. This is why no part of creation can exist except through the actions of these same spirits, as I will explain better later, when I go on to speak about planetary bodies. Let us continue with the creation.

Matter resided in the philosophical matras in a state of neutrality, as explained in the previous diagram. Nothing had shape. The spirit essences, being motionless, were in the state of what is commonly called chaos. What broke this state of indifference and caused the original formation of the various bodies? It was an act of the spirits of the central fire axis, or uncreated fire, which had sent forth these same essences from within themselves. What was their act? Their act was to modify the essences in such a way as to be able to mantain impressions, and to create a distinction between these essences. This distinction gave the rudiments to the forms by adapting the different divisions and subdivisions of the ternary number to the changes which the spirits of the axis had made to the essences, i.e. their act made the essence of mercury more solid than those of sulphur and salt, that of sulphur more mobile than those of mercury and salt, and that of salt more fluid than those of mercury and sulphur (1).

This first distinction initially gave rise to the senary number, 6, since, in the first neutral state of matter, the ternary mixture, being in a neutral state in the philosophical matras, formed no visible body, nor was it capable of retaining an impression. Thus, it was the spirits of the central fire axis who, through their action, in accordance with the thought of the Eternal, that had been conveyed to them by his ternary word, gave rise to the senary number, by distinguishing between the essences: mercury 1; sulphur, being the second distinction, 2; and salt being the third, 3. Now, by mystical addition, 1 and 2 are 3, and three make 6. This is the manifestation of the six thoughts of the Eternal, and not the 6 days that the Scriptures symbolically attribute to the Eternal, for, as I said earlier, the Eternal being infinite in His immensity cannot have any limits of duration since time is only the changing succession or relationship of bodies with each other. But the Eternal manifests thoughts which the different spirits carry out according to the plan given to them. Thus we see that the senary number came from the ternary number, because the ternary word of the Eternal, being forever with Him, cannot have a beginning since it emanated from the Eternal, while the senary number was created by the act of the spirits of the axis. Thus I demonstrably have proven that this universe must have an end since its beginning was brought about through the act of the spirits of the axis, and since the act of all spirits is finite, it can only last as long as the Infinite Being commands it to; this refutes the objection of the eternity of matter, because it is impossible for that which has a beginning to last for ever, as it must necessarily also have an end. Thus we see the birth of the senary number regarding forms. Numbers must not be confused with bodies. The number, as I have already said, is co-eternal, since the number has always been with God. But as the bodies are purely apparent, and only exist through the operation of the spirits, they can only be considered as passive. As soon as the operation of the different spirits is finished, they will cease and there will be no more universe than there was before it was formed. I call the separation of the essences - mercury $\underline{1}$, sulphur $\underline{2}$, and salt $\underline{3}$ - the birth of the senary number since it is the act of the spirits $\overline{\text{of}}$ the axis $\overline{\text{which}}$ caused it to come into being. The origin of all bodies, then, was the ternary number; the formation of these same bodies was the senary number, which completed the six thoughts God had for the creation of the universe, as they were manifested to the spirit agents, builders or makers of the central fire axis. As soon as the senary number was completed, forms were born; and to demonstrate this more clearly, one only has to look at what follows the three numbers, 3, 6, 9. The number nine is the subdivision of the essences in all bodies. The principle of mercury is a threefold mixture which contains sulphur and salt, 3; sulphur contains salt and mercury, 3; salt contains mercury and sulphur,3.

The subdivision makes 9; for unity proper cannot belong to the body, but only to the Divinity. The unity attributed to mercury in simple division is only considered realtive to the mixture of mercury, which is the basis of the other two. The number 9 is therefore the sub-division of the 3 essences, or of the different bodies as follows: 3 for mercury, 3 for sulphur, 3 for salt makes 9. Thus, 3 for the essences considered individually, 6 for the division, 9 for the sub-division: 6,3,6, 9/18/9. That is the origin of matter.

It remains to consider the triangle and that we are going to do in what follows. At this stage, I will only consider it in terms of its number, , 1 to the West, 1 to the South, 1 to the North, gives us the number 3, or the 3,6,9/18/9,3/12/3. We have the product 3, by which we can clearly see that the complement of the act of the spirits of the axis gives us the number 3 after the process of division and subdivision, which still fulfills the law that the Eternal had manifested to the spirits of the axis. The word of the Eternal was threefold, as is the operation of the spirits of the axis. Add the word 3 to the act of the spirits of the axis, and we obtain the number 6. Now the 3-fold word, having come from God, must return to him, but the threefold product of the spirits of the axis having had a beginning, is passive or must end. Thus it is only the thought of the Eternal that formulates the law of the universe, and supports all creation. The laws of the appearance of these different bodies can only last as long as this law exists, because it supports this very operation. The man of desire who follows the laws of the eternal will thus no longer suffer deprivation since, by unifying himself closely with the eternal law, the passive law of forms could not be a restriction to him.

Thus, my brothers, you see the necessity that we all must follow the holy laws, for as we get nearer to the Eternal, the light comes closer to us. If we separate ourselves from it, darkness takes over. In the following explanation I will give the different dimensions of the triangle. For the moment, I will continue to talk about the creation of the different bodies.

Perhaps you will ask how the spirits of the axis could emanate from within the three essences, and how, through them, they were able to form all the bodies of the universe without any matter whatsoever? I will reply that, from the origin of their emanation, the three essences were innate in these beings, which should only be considered as a product of their act. Thus it is from this act alone, in accordance with the thought of the Eternal, that all forms came into being. Now, I would say that the physical proof that this act of the various spirits is the only thing which brings these forms into being, is that the spirits commanding the various bodies of the universe could not be limited by these same bodies, just as one can see that there are men who, in the body of a man see the circulation of the blood, others who, in the body of the earth see the circulation of water, others who, from a great height or distance see bodies which other men cannot perceive. The particular virtues of these men show us that the laws of privation are not the same for all men, since the majority of men are deprived of seeing the things I have just spoken about. If matter were real, all people would see it in the same way, there would be only one law for them all, thus one may convince oneself through thought, which is the same for every man like similar eternal things, such as number. The triangle △ known to all men in the universe, gives rise to distinct thoughts of the number three, since one angle is not the other, even though the properties of this figure are vast, but, whenever any man looks at it, the resulting thought where numbers are concerned is always the same.

Thus, the superiority of men comes from the greater or lesser degree of purity which allows them to observe a greater number of characteristics. Now the distinctive characteristic of each man where spirit is concerned comes from thought, which has more or less varied properties relative to the act of these same spirits. Matter is therefore only apparent, and only exists through the work that the various spirits do to make it appear to us as it does. None of the spirits which operate it are infinitely superior to it, because, their operation being limited, and they themselves being eternal, they order all their works, existing only through the law of the Eternal, and will only end when this law has been fulfilled. Thus, brethren, it is from the number 3 that the making of forms took place as follows: 1 to the Divinity, 2 to the demon, and 3 to the shapes which came to contain these same demons (2).

The spirits of the central fire axis carry within themselves all kinds of faculties for the production, maintenance and reintegration of the different bodies. Thus it is not surprising that their act produced this universe, created in order to contain the acts, which will never prevail against the unchangeable laws that the Eternal has assigned to each part of the universe. The ternary number, as we have seen, is the operation of the various spirits in order to contain confusion. Thus, all the efforts of these spirits will never destroy any kind nor any species of the bodies which make up this creation, nor will they change its duration, for the supports of these same bodies are the spirits which are superior to all of their antagonists, and they have God at their head; whereas the evil spirits are constantly limited in their works of destruction, for the power of destruction is limited by the disunity which results from it, and so it is forced into an indissoluble union with the component parts of the whole, operating for the support of nature, as can be seen when one looks at the reproduction of vegetation. If the sower who plants a field planted wheat or other seed, and half of the crop produced was good and half spoiled, we would never be able to reap wheat from the earth, for if the spoilage is equal to the good vegetation, it would give rise to an uneven mixture, which would never yield flour. Now it is seen that from the different seeds sown on the general body of the earth, more good grain is taken than bad grain, because all beings with visible forms on earth feed on it. This deduction may lead us to notice that the same is true of the different bodies which are constantly attacked and are all subject to sickness. However, since the beginning of the universe, none of the various bodies have been destroyed. This should convince us of the superiority of the acts of the spirits working for good over those working for evil: the one is benign, pure, holy and lasting, and the other is impure and passive, because as soon as the universe becomes reintegrated, the working of the evil spirits against it will end, or the works of all good spirits which contributed to its production, maintenance and reintegration would begin a new type of act following the very holy laws which the Eternal would draw up for them. This, brethren, concludes the number three. In the following discourse, we will speak of the different properties of the triangle and of the emanation of man.

I wish you all an eternal, indissoluble union which nothing can change. Your constancy in becoming unified will be the seal to your happiness. Join with me in prayer to the Eternal that He may give us all the grace to progress forward into light. The Order you have joined is the repository of the flame which should lead you there. Your precision, your zeal and your perseverance in following it will be richly rewarded, and while everything is conspiring to remove man from his principle, you will be the repositories of the way which should lead man there, never again to leave it. May charity remain with us all eternally. Amen

(1) Mercury, Sulphur and Salt are the Alchemical equivalents of spirit, soul and body. To work transmutation or reintegration the Salt of the body must become the workingplace of spirit and soul. On the level treated here, Mercury, Sulphur and Salt are the three aspects of the basic matter of all Being, conciousness. They are the most sublime emanations of Divinity brought to work upon one another as represented in the upper trinity of the Quabalah.

(2) Demons in this sense is to be understood as the fallen spirits dividing from Divine unity through their own free will, the corrupt spirits.

I DARE YOU!

According to a fable said to come from Denmark, there was once a spider who slid down a filament of his web from the lofty rafters of a barn to establish himself on a lower level. There he spun a new web, caught flies, grew sleek and prospered. One day, wandering about his premises, he saw the old thread which stretched into the unseen above. Wondering what it was for, he unthinkingly snapped it, whereupon his whole new web collapsed.

This is a great parable for all of us. Whenever man forgets the route by which he came, the thread of life is lost. All troubles may be said to have their genesis in this loss of insight. We become preoccupied with things material and temporal until it seems that all that is really important is acquiring new cars or better jobs. We may occasionally launch ourselves into periods of prayer and study, but we never really enter and close the door.

There is constant exhortation in the teachings of Jesus to let go of human desires and put God first. He said, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added." Jesus taught no pollyanna philosophy; He was forever challenging those who gathered around Him. He said, "I came not to send peace, but a sword" [In other words, "I dare you to put God first in your life, to walk by faith instead of by sight, to make your dreams come true."] Jesus first came to Peter, James and John when they were fishing. He called to them to launch their boat out into the deep and to let down their nets for a draft; thereupon they caught a record haul of fish. Though their friends may have called this chance, the experience caused them to lay down their nets and follow Him.

It is sometimes said that religion has its place, but that people shouldn't get fanatical about it. But, in the sense of the root word from Latin that means, "inspired by Divinity," perhaps more of us should be fanatics. Unless we are willing to launch out into the deeps of spirit, there is little hope for us.

Much of what passes for religious experience is in the shallows, in the comfortable confines of a church or in the security of ceremonial worship or in the utterance of crystallized creeds. In a certain contemporary drama, the question is asked of one of the characters, "Have you ever reached the heights?" He answers, "No, but I saw them once, and they are there, all right." The tragedy of life is not that the heights are not there, but that so few see them or strive to reach them. I dare you today to lift up your eyes unto the hills and realize that your help always comes from the allness of God. Knowing this will open new doors of limitlessness to you.

Walter Russell, an expert on music, finance, and architecture as well as a war correspondent, novelist, horse fancier, sculptor and nuclear physicist, tells of his method of keeping wide open to the inner source: "Entering my studio, I do not say that I am a sculptor or that I ought to be able to do that thing. Instead, I say that I am an interpreter who can think that thing within me which is worthy of being done. When I get that feeling, that rhythm, that meter, that measure coming to me as inspiration, then I know that I can produce it, and nobody can tell me that I cannot * * * If you are alone enough to get thoroughly acquainted with yourself, you will hear whisperings from the universal source of all consciousness which will inspire you, actual messages, revelations, showing you the way; you will find things you never knew before. Knowledge will be yours for the asking; you will have only to plug into it."

Dare to feel that innate presence yourself. Accept its inspiration and launch out into faith that you are supported. Step out and believe in the thread that unites you with the creativity of Spirit. Up to this day you may have been misjudged and you may have limited yourself, but the moment you dare to believe in this God-potential within you, that moment you are plugged in, and you begin to do even the greater things which were promised by Jesus.

A.J. Cronin, an outstanding contemporary fiction writer, started adulthood as a doctor of medicine. The urge to write was so strong within him that he gave up the practice of medicine and made a highly successful career in writing...but only after a substantial overcoming in his early years of practice.

In medical school, he had assisted one of the most brilliant surgeons in London, who was unfortunately given to nervousness and impatience. At one time he remarked to the young Cronin with contempt, "You will never make a surgeon, you are too inept and too clumsy." Although Cronin had graduated well up in his class, that negative statement was remembered by him and it eventually grew into a complex.

He went off into the western Highlands of Scotland to practice his profession; but whenever a patient needed even the simplest surgery, Cronin sent him to Perth or Edinburgh. Cronin would prescribe pills, but was afraid to do what he was trained to do--perform surgery.

One day, in the heavy snows of winter, a frightened boy came to him. The son of a minister had been crushed by a falling tree and was home, unconscious. Cronin walked the three miles to the cottage, examined the boy, and found that his legs were paralyzed because four vertebrae had been crushed. He knew that this called for one of the most delicate operations known to his profession, and he attempted to call for assistance--but all the lines were down and the roads were blocked. Since no other surgeon could be reached, it was left to him to perform the necessary surgery. Yet he heard his old teacher telling him that he could never do it, and told the boy's family that he couldn't help them.

The country preacher said to him, "Doctor, under these circumstances, you will have to operate, and God will help you." When Cronin insisted that he couldn't, the father insisted, "You must do it, I dare you to do it. God will help you."

Dr. Cronin sent the family from the room, and with the help of a Scottish nurse, swabbed the area with antiseptic, took the scalpel in his trembling hand, and found that the sneering face of his former teacher was replaced by the kindly visage of the preacher who said, "I dare you. God will help you." In that moment, something happened. His hands grew steadier, his mind grew cool, and he felt renewed confidence. He worked for an hour, putting together the crushed vertebrae, knowing that he had the boy's life in his hands. When the operation was over, he saw the boy's lower limbs move feebly. Sitting by the bed, he knew that he had succeeded for the boy and that he himself had become free. It was good to rejoin the family and with Scotch understatement say to them, "I think he'll do."

There is a thread in you and in me by which inspiration and strength flows to us in every time of need. We so easily forget it, and we forsake it, but it is always there. I dare you to make an effort during the days of this week to really know this truth from the Old Testament: "Prove me now herewith if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." I dare you.

Most of us who call ourselves students of Truth are over-read and under-done. We have shelves full of books on Truth; but it would seem that many of us would fit Shakespeare's description in Troilus and Cressida: "All lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform, vowing more than the perfection of ten and discharging less than the tenth part of one." In other words, we need to challenge ourselves to really do something about the ideas of Truth that interest and inspire us. I dare you! I dare you to commence right now. I dare you for once to enter into a time of study and prayer, without any particular demonstration in mind. Let these next few days be simply days of spiritual unfoldment, a time of strengthening of faith, of broadening of vision, of a deepening of consciousness. Yes, my friend, I dare you.

DEVOTED TO THE ADVANCEMENT AND MYSTICAL ENLIGHTENMENT OF MAN

KNIGHTS OF SAINT JOHN OF JERUSALEM

Dear Companions:

In our last Liber, I said I would say a few words about "Seed Atoms" so we will begin with this. Just what are "seed atoms" and what is the need for them? Any one who has made even a superficial study of biology has discovered that everything in nature has its birth from seed of some kind. It may be an organic cell -- or it may be the nucleus of energy in an atom. No matter how minute or gigantic a creation, it originates in a seed of some kind. Even man, a reflection of the divine Mind, originates in a seed, the form of which only a high-powered microscope will reveal.

Now, just what is a seed? Humble as it appears, a tiny seed contains the complete structure and blue print of what it is to be when and if placed in the ground, in proper soil. That seed will not be anything you want it to be. It will only be what it is already and you cannot alter that fact. The negative or blue-print of the tree-to-be is in that seed and even its species is predetermined. This points to one salient fact: the order and plan in nature.

I will endeavor now to define in simplest terms the other half of the word "atom". While making great strides, science as yet knows comparatively little about the true nature and purpose for the atom and its sub-atomic structures that hold the secrets of life -- because it is a carrier of life -- but not life itself. Science is finding out that an atom is almost a little universe or world in itself, so minute in fact that it cannot be seen even with the most high-powered optics. So how does science know all that it has learned about these marvelous structures? Simply by observing what they do -- just as we mortals are judged by what we do.

Everything in nature is made up of these infinitesimally tiny particles. The Inestimable ocean of ether or space is composed of countless particles of etheric substance and so from the most rarefied phase of matter to the grossest plane that we analyze with dynamite -- all is one, everything has the same organic or inorganic base, and in every instance: the same identical seeds of building and growth. While things may differ in manifestation, their foundation blocks are identical. And this is true throughout the cosmos.

In moments of humility we sometimes feel that, compared with the vast creation about us, we are so microscopic, constructed as we are of comparatively few cells, that we must be of little real importance and that surely God cannot be particularly interested in us as individuals. God cannot be other than interested in man simply because, right or wrong, good or bad, man is the species reproducing the image of its Creator. Each human being is a temple of God by itself. Each of us is a Divine Cell in the Cosmos and is one of the building blocks of the intelligent part of the Cosmos.

Until recently, the atom was regarded as the smallest particle of matter; indivisible and final. Now, thanks to the electron microscope and other modern instruments, it is known of course, that atoms are divisible, capable of being analyzed and their constituents broken down into still more mysterious units of energy.

An atom is an etheric particle of the Body of God. It is through the atom that energy is transmitted to physical or visible life, from an etheric or superphysical plane of being and consciousness. The atom holds tremendous power because it is a carrier of life, just as our bodies are carriers of the Divine Spark or Fragment. The least modicum of life has powers beyond man's ability to duplicate by himself. Let nature show you great trees growing straight up through immense boulders, an operation man could not duplicate. The atom displays wonderful intelligence, an intelligence that is almost supernatural but which is merely unquestioning obedience to nature's laws. This is because, as a carrier to life, it must render strict obedience to the Source of Life and therefore of its own existence. So by induction, it takes on the nature of the Divine attributes of that which it carries. All atomic energy responds instantly to etheric vibration or frequency and is, therefore, most sensitive to all etheric currents.

When we consider the atom, we are in a world of light and motion. It is the motion that produces the light. Try to visualise this picture if you can. Everything that has existence, anywhere, develops a frequency all its own. There is nothing in cosmos that does not do this. This radiation and frequency varies in every element. All wood (for example) does not show the same vibratory frequencies. But were you able to count their vibrations you would discover that while one species differed from another, all plants of the same species would have the same basic frequency. A trained biologist could tell by the vibratory frequency of a given piece of plant structure, to just what species it belonged, its nature and habitat.

Why is vibration necessary at all? Vibration is necessary to life and growth because it is the primary activity of life in manifestation even though it be a rate too low or too high to be perceived by man. Vibration is a phase of growth; the act of expansion we call growth is a slow vibratory process. No organism merely lengthens out in a single movement. Growth is a series of exceeding fine "short-wave" processes, each overlapping the other like waves, hence the use of the term. In its highest aspect, vibration is the Breath of God, or the Logos in manifestation, i.e., his creative manifestation. Vibration makes it possible for motion, growth and life not only to manifest, but to register their manifestations in relative permanency. Without vibration there would be no manifestation of life. Without frequency we should not be able to see those manifestations, for it is the status of vibration under certain limited frequencies that gradually effects the development of the faculty of sight. So, without vibration & frequency, creation would not manifest but would remain merely the image in the Divine Mind of the Absolute, the Unmanifest.

Vibration is a result -- not a cause -- yet it is a result that produces further results. Frequency is the status of the astral constituent of cosmos. It is what determines growth, motion and other activity in cosmos.

Even stones have their life and the guidance of the Group Spirits of the Mineral Kingdom through frequency. We have been told that the original natal cell of an elephant, a chicken or a man are practically identical. Were we able to examine the atomic structure of either of these cells closely enough, we would discover the difference to lie in the rate of frequency of the atomic orbits and the resultant vibratory status of a given cell, somewhat like those of plant species. Thus far, man has not been able to do this; eventually he will. When the cells in our body step out on their frequency, there is disorder or disease.

It is the atoms in our system that are the propelling influences, physically, because the cells are our physical structure, whereas the atoms are etheric and act as the carriers from the spiritual to the physical world. It is through our atomic structure that we express on the other planes of being. Why then, you might ask, do not the other forms of life which have atomic structure show as much intelligence as man? Simply because their vibratory rate or frequency is lower. The higher the vibration, the more light or intelligence.

Now what has all this to do with what we call "seed-atoms"? Just this: man's physical, etheric, & astral bodies, and mental sheath -- each vibrate at different rates of frequency. A man may have very well developed physical and etheric bodies yet his astral may be quite defic-ient. Or he may have a very well developed astral body yet his physical body may not be strong and healthy. This definitely shows that these bodies have had an unequal development. One has progressed faster than the others. This has been due, of course, to progress made in a given field during an incarnation. Some persons are very careful of themselves physically but when it comes to their emotions and thoughts, they are careless and negative; drifting with the tide. Result: an undeveloped astral body.

If all the rest of nature is preserved through a seed, including man, is it difficult to understand that his spiritual vehicles are likewise preserved through the same means, -- seed? A seed does not have to be visible in order to be a seed! Chemically we have discovered this to be so.

Let us fix some thoughts in mind.

1. All organic life, except those protean organisms that reproduce by fission, grow from their own seed.

2. Alchemists, in fact all esotericists, agree that everything from metals to man, inclusive, grows from its own seed.

3. It is obvious that seed is merely the body or sustaining vehicle for something far more important, far more potent. Seed in solid form is an aggregate of chemical matter containing in latency certain properties. Seed, as viewed in the cells of organic structure, is predominantly protoplasm; semi-liquid matter. Neither the genes nor chromosomes are seed. They are the active principles through which seed works.

4. No one has ever seen a true seed -- any more than one has seen an atom, for TRUE SEED IS A MATTER OF ATOMIC STRUCTURE, its results being determined by established atomic valencies, which produce specific types and species under the condition of systematic, identical processes; the only variants being those developed by climate, geographical locale, food supplies and safety.

5. True seed, therefore, is always invisible.

You do not deny the existence of your physical body. You concede it grows from seed. But neither the ovum nor the spermatozoon are seed. It is the active principle within them, always invisible, that is the true seed. It is atomic in its nature and properties and the valences established by a long line of evolutional developments ensure that this particular atomic frequency will always produce a human organism. That is all this particular atom and its inherent properties will do. It is the seed-atom of the body and it will produce only a physical body. Blood, bone, tissue, cannot think; they cannot feel, they only furnish organs or instruments for thinking and feeling.

So then, how do we feel and think? Obviously with something other than the physical body. There must be some sort of organism that is purely mental in its own nature that can contact the physical and produce the phenomenon of consciousness. Let us call it our mental sheath, or mental-body-in-the-making.

Let us call the factors that enable us to function consciously in the directions we have mentioned, "bodies". No matter if you have not seen them. You know you have a physical body. But you know it has no consciousness of its own. It is your other bodies that enable you to function in the different phases of consciousness.

Just as everything must grow from its own seed, and just as the seed of the physical body is invisible, so it is with the invisible bodies. Their seeds are what we call "seed-atoms" and each according to its atomic attainments, produces the same sort of vehicle each time it is planted.

The human embryo grows from the seed-atom of the physical body, planted in the prospective parents at the time of insemination. That seed-atom finds its habitat in the embryonic heart. But that is not birth. Real birth occurs, like all things of transcendent importance, in the spiritual world. When the Ego desires new birth expression, it emerges from the 3rd Heaven or the Region of Abstract Thought on the Mental Plane. That emergence, from the 3rd back to the 2nd heaven or Region of Concrete Thought on the Mental Plane, is the moment of real birth, turning back to earth and expression in matter. In the Region of Abstract Thought the Ego rests, inert, assimilating and digesting the spiritual stimulus it has received in these realms, and then with the equally inert but latent seed-atoms of its bodies-to-be, it emerges, as stated, into the Region of Concrete Thought where it awakens and invigorates the seed-atom of the Mental-Sheath-to-be and attracts to it the matter for its mental nourishment and substance. The desire for rebirth is here made permanent. This descent back into Matter is effected by the Law of Attraction, here set into operation by the constructive effects of the Astral World into which the Ego and Awakened Mental Seed Atom now emerge. In due time, in this Astral World, the seed atom of the Astral Body-to-be is planted in the Astral Matter.

At this time, the Ego, with its germinating seed atoms of the Mind and Astral Body, is close to the mundane world, namely: the three divisions constituting the Etheric World where the seed-atom of the Etheric Body-to-be is planted and receives the germs of soul-power -- revived memory through the Reflecting Ether, sense perception through the Light Ether, and desire and power for procreation through the Life Ether. Finally, by chemical assimilation, made possible by the Chemical Ethers, the group is brought, by the Lords of Destiny, to the parents to be, where the Etheric Body is moulded to "fit" the womb of the prospective mother, and the seed-atom of the new Physical Body is enshrined in a spermatozoon of the father.

All this time, birth has been going on, and at the end of nine months the physical body emerges into the light of day. This makes us realize the truth of what the Gnostic Apostle, Paul, wrote to the Church in Corinth (Cor. 4:38) "And to every seed (atom) his own body". Man's bodies are built in the invisible spiritual world to function in the visible world of matter.

Birth in the spiritual worlds is a series of progressive steps. "As above, so below". Birth on earth is likewise a series of progressive steps. Each spiritual step was the planting of a seed-atom. Each step on earth is the blossoming and fruitage of that seed-atom.

At about 7 years, the Etheric Body is matured. It is the period of formation of permanent physical characteristics and a tense struggle for existence.

At 14 or thereabouts, the Astral Body is matured. This is the age of adolescence.

At 21, the Mental faculties are supposed to mature and the law of the country steps in and proclaims the new individual personally responsible and morally accountable for his or her subsequent activities.

From 21 to 28 constitutes what may be called the settling age when one is expected to know what the purpose of life is to be and is well on his/her way to it.

From 28 to 35 is the beginning of the prime of life, when endurance is put to the test in the battle of life.

From 35 to 42 is the turning point, from which time on the change of life may be expected at any time and the journey back to the tomb begun. Yet it is also in most noted instances, the period of greatest and best productivity. From 42 to 49, all other things being equal, man's resourcefulness is at its best.

Now, WHAT ARE THE SEED-ATOMS OF MAN? They are the essence or soul of the atomic constituents of each vehicle or body, that we carry over with us as the Biblical "Treasure in Heaven" and which hold, in their established valencies, that which expressed in physical life as principles, emotions, attributes, on the physical, mental and spiritual planes. They are substantive but impalpable beyond any sub-atomic potencies known to present day science, although science is getting close upon their track and has already partly run them down under other names.

In the completed and developed human organism, the seed-atoms inhere as follows: the seed-atom of the physical body in the heart; the seed-atom of the astral body in the liver, and the seed-atom of the etheric body in the spleen.

What are valencies? Valence is that property of an atom by virtue of which it has powers of combining with or replacing other atoms in definite, constant and established proportion. This makes possible the phenomena and usefulness of chemistry. The degree of this property is expressed by the number of monad elements, represented by hydrogen, with which the atom can combine or replace. Thus valance is a unit of combining capacity and nowhere is this combining capacity better shown than in the human organism with its complex vehicles operating synchronously. Just as the physical vehicle alone, gaseous, (breath and breathing apparatus), liqueous, (blood and body fluids), and the solid or bony structure shows the harmonious mutual interdependence.

In the valence of the seed-atoms, in their capacity for combining or replacing, we see the blue print or working plan of the plant, animal or man-to-be. In those possible combinations and replacements are enshrined the essence of our past thoughts, and our karmic record, also part of our cosmic memory faculties. Yet the seed-atom is invisible. Not only that -- it is not even the whole of an ordinary atom. It is the essence or soul of a single dense atom. Do you wonder that the possibilities of a whole human incarnation can be so confined and wrapped up? If so, just see what happens on the ordinary chemical plane. One micro particle of certain poisons taken on the tongue causes instant death. Potency is revealed in infinitesimals my friends!

I said that seed even predetermines the species. How does this apply to man? Man usually incarnates in his recurrent births in the same race but not necessarily in the same nationality. Race in the human kingdom is comparable to species. Each race has a "race consciousness" of its own, or a race frequency and it is this frequency that predetermines the race through which we shall express in a given incarnation.

Therefore, the way we follow is determined by what we are. We carry our consciousness and our accumulated experience in the various seed-atoms we possess. Our etheric seed-atom contains, at death, the essence of all our etheric experience up to that time. It is the seed of what we are so far as our etheric body is concerned. It is the seed of what we are so far as our etheric body is concerned. The seed-atom of our astral body contains the essence of all the experience of our emotional life thus far. The mental sheath has as yet no true seed-atom, although it has the germ of one because it is not yet a fully developed body. Therefore, the major part of our consciousness is, as yet, carried over in the astral seed-atom. You may wonder just where and why these seed-atoms are so necessary, even in view of the explanations already given. It is because all nature preserves and conserves all that she has ever produced. Nothing is wasted, even over many aeons. All man's experiences are etched into his consciousness from times even before he functioned consciously. How else, do you think, could man derive the ability to even conceive of such things as eternity past and to come, or of any state of consciousness above or beyond that required by his daily needs? Yet he does possess such a consciousness or ability.

This permanent etching into man's consciousness has to have manifestation or expression somewhere, at some time, so it must also have preservation for future use, and nature wisely provides for this in seed. This ensures the preservation of our personality and individuality. By personality, in this instance, I refer to those peculiar traits that are regarded as part of us and of no one else.

For example: the energetic and ambitious person, who is often bombastic and arrogant, will carry these traits with him in the seed-atom of his astral body, until these qualities are transmuted and corrected. We may +++ and often do +++ blame some so-called ancestor for our temper, etc., but were we to actually follow our previous life-expression we would find that the causes inhered solely within ourselves and no one else. This so-called apparent inheritance of temperament is only apparent. The truth is, that vibrationally we were attracted to where the spiritual valance was appropriate to, and attuned to our attainment and our need. We cannot get any more than we have earned. Each time we go on from where we left off, and the choice of the work laid before us is largely, though not completely, in the charge of the entities called the Lords of Destiny, one of the Scriptural groups of "Thrones, Powers and Principalities."

Remember that all permanent character changes we effect upon ourselves during a life-expression are carried over by the seed-atoms for our future use. Therefore, any self-improvement is not wasted but is utilized to the very limit and to such an extent that a person having a complete reversal of thought and feeling just prior to death, can transmute and help the evolution of its seed-atoms even at that late moment, for, if the transmutation is genuine, just as chemically we can make great changes in an instant of time; alchemically we can transmute ourselves so that the seed-atoms carried over will be different from what they would have been had death overtaken us sooner, and before the instant reformation had occurred. Evidently, this was the lesson intended to be inculcated by the example of the penitent thief on his cross at Golgotha, where the Nazarene Master met his fate.

It may seem to some of you like a contradiction, that a life-expression of so-called "sin" or error can be wiped out by an act of instantaneous remorse or understanding. But it appears less of a contradiction when you understand that the error has not been wiped out and that karma will exact payment for it. It means that our consciousness has become aware of the futility of that error, the lesson has been learned and consciousness has been awakened to that which is real. So we carry over the consciousness of truth and reality instead of the consciousness of unreality, and when one has learned his lesson, one does not merit the severity of punishment that comes through ignorance.

The purpose of life is to learn, not to punish and when we have learned we have fulfilled the purpose for existence. This learning may require years or an instant in time. The thing that matters is: whether we know. Not how long it takes us to know. When we pass on from the physical world all that we leave behind us is the physical body, but the seed-atom of that physical body is carried over with the etheric body by the Ego for its future use. At so-called "death" the etheric body plays a greater part than it ever has done before. It has in its keeping for nourishment and rehabilitation the seed-atom of the physical body. During physical life expression its duty was to preserve and maintain the flow of life through the physical channel; on the etheric plane it has a similar function and duty -- only here it uses the seed-atom.

If the physical body has had an ailment it is because the contact with the etheric body, its source of supply, has broken down somewhere. The real cause for the disease is still there in the etheric body and has to be corrected. When someone who has been ailing for a long time passes on to the other side, that one is cared for as carefully over there, until the etheric body has been restored to complete harmony and strength as in the prime of life. By this process, the seed-atom of the physical body, by the same induction the etheric body possessed over the physical body, is able to restore that seed-atom to a healthy, normal condition. Its ability to do this work well will determine whether a healthy physical body will be developed during the next incarnation. Some Egos are careless, being too anxious to go forward in the spiritual realms without adequately providing for their future needs.

After the etheric body has thoroughly rehabilitated itself to the extent of its own capacity, then the so-called second death takes place, in the etheric realm. By this is meant that the physical seed-atom as well as the etheric seed-atom, are both ready to be released from etheric contact and can be carried over by the astral body to the astral plane.

During the "rehabilitation period" the Ego has been going through an "educational period" or "experience". During this experience the Ego has been reviewing its recently terminated journey through mortality and is etching the memory consciousness of that journey upon the seed-atoms of its vehicles. This etching process is most important for it is the essence of our earth experience. In its turn it nourishes the Ego and determines what we have become up to date -- and what we therefore ARE.

It is the seed-atoms that carry the vibrational frequencies of each vehicle. If an individual vibrates on a low plane of consciousness while on earth he most certainly is not going to vibrate any differently on the other side -- at least not until he earns the ability to do so. Likewise, the individual who has led a constructive, useful life here and lived in harmony with his fellow human beings will find the same conditions wherever he goes for he is the personification of these qualities. Not until we begin to fully realize that we create our own situations by our attitudes toward them, will we begin to make the decided progress we seek. Man is prone to blame everything that occurs to him, to others -- rather than to the reality of himself.

Knowing then, that all you do, feel and think is truly important to your growth and happiness -- can you (if you do) continue to take life indifferently? Can you not see that our station in life or social position is of no real value and that what truly matters is what WE are OURSELVES?

Those who are forever dwelling on the other side of life in their speech and thought and neglecting the opportunity to be useful while right here ARE GOING TO EXPERIENCE A SAD AWAKENING WHEN THEY PASS ON. Responsibility and its acceptance are indications of spiritual growth. Those who shirk responsibility are avoiding the opportunity to learn, to acquire strength and spiritual power. Let us regard our individual life, regardless of age, position, nationality or race -- as a period of divine opportunity -- and use it accordingly, wisely, happily and constructively.

Dear Companions: #153

Continuing with my promise in Liber 37, I will now share some ideas on the subject of At-One-Ment in this alchemical lecture.

"I and my Father are One", said Jesus. (John 10:30)

You will recall that in previous alchemical lectures, the subject of WISDOM was brought up and discussed most thoroughly. Now, in this lecture, we will give our attention to the method by which we can make Divine and Cosmic Wisdom our very own, by personal participation. That method is the attainment and accomplishment of what has so often been referred to in the R+C as AT-ONE-MENT.

"That all may be ONE; as thou, Father, art in me and I in Thee, that they also may be ONE in us; I in them, and Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in ONE". (John 17:21-23)

The struggle for AT-One-Ment brings to mind almost immediately, our origin from the one Universal Source, as expressed in the motto "Omnia ab Uno". (All from One). This motto "expresses the idea that ALL has been evolved from ONE; or in other words that God or Deity is one and indivisible, and that the multifarious activities of Life which we see in the Universe are merely various forms of manifestations of God; or to express it more correctly: of the Creative Power, The Light and Substance of Life, which emanated from the eternal Cause of all Existence in the beginning of our Day of Creation, and which has been called the Logos, Verbum, Word, or

the Christ."

Franz Hartmann says, "As the Universal ONE manifested itself, it assumed various aspects, and it therefore appears as a great variety of Powers, and as innumerable forms of various substances, although all powers and substances are essentially and fundamentally one."

The various terms used in occult science are consequently not intended to describe powers and principles radically different from each other, but merely the various aspects of the One Universal Principle; and as the aspect of things changes according to the point of view from which they are considered, so a name applied to a power, if considered from one point of view, may not be applicable if the same principle is considered from another point of view.

The four sides of a Pyramid originate in One Point and end in one, each side appearing to have a distinct individuality of its own. But the higher we rise toward the summit, the more does this differentiation disappear, and the more does the Unity of all things and their identity with each other become apparent, until all difference is absorbed in the ultimate ONE.

"He who knows the ONE, knows ALL; he who believes to know many things, knows nothing". The ONE is the starting point for all Occult Science and all Spiritual aspiration and progress.

This illustration of the Pyramid gives us the direct clue to the true process of the attainment of At-One-Ment; the process of aspiring or rising to the higher consciousness or realization of one's unity with one's Divine Source.

Returning therefore to our alchemical exegesis, we may say this process is the manifestation and expression of the activity of the Jupiter principle within the aspirant, termed by the sages, the Aquila, or Eagle, the symbol of the Spiritual Soul.

The motif by which the Spiritual Soul energizes the aspirant toward this high ideal is two-fold: the Pure Spiritual Love of spiritual things and the sincere desire to discern them; and secondly, the fiery substance of the spiritual soul itself, which vivifies and animates each human Ego.

This pure spiritual Love and Fiery Substance of the Spiritual Soul was termed by the Alchemists, the Gluten of the White Eagle. It is called Gluten from the power of adhesion it gives to the aspirant regarding the ideal cherished and the attainment of which is sought persistently.

The word At-One-Ment has been distorted by theological formularies into meaning something quite foreign to its original intent. There is a vast difference between the meaning of At-One-Ment and atonement. With the orthodox concept of atonement, we, as spiritual scientists have nought to do, for the inexorable Laws of Karma and Compensation will ensure atonement in the shape of restitution on the part of each individual, for every transgression against the Laws of Nature and the Divine Will. But Atonement in the shape or sense of restitution made by one man for all men is unthinkable, impossible, illogical and unscientific, and nowhere will it be found to be insisted upon by the generic principles of any of the recognized world religions.

At-One-Ment means first and last: unification. It is the art or process of uniting into One. Unification with the eternal One is the only aim and object of all true religion. All things were originally one; they are all states of one Universal Divine Consciousness; they merely appear to be different from each other on account of the Illusion of Form.

Differentiation and Separation exist merely at the surface of the perifery of the All. The Center is ONE. To become reunited with the Center is to enter the REAL, and to become Divine and Immortal. After a man has become united with his own higher self, he may become united with Christ, the Christos, or Sun Principle.

The Sun Initiate is well known to Initiates of the R+C. But the use of the word "Sun" requires our deeper consideration. As explained previously, it is the Symbol of Wisdom, the Center of Power, or HEART of things. The Sun is a center of energy and a storehouse of Power. Each living being contains within itself, A SUN, or center of life which may grow or be developed into a sun. In the heart of the regenerated man, the Divine Power stimulated by the Light of the Logos GROWS INTO A SUN WHICH ILLUMINATES THE MIND. This Logos or CHRIST is the Spiritual Sun of Grace, and as the Natural Sun is the center of all powers contained in our Solar System, so the Spiritual Sun or Christ is the center of all the spiritual powers inherent in each human individual.

The terrestrial Sun is the image or reflection of the invisible celestial Sun; the latter is in the realm of Spirit, what the former is in the realm of Matter, but the former receives its power from the latter.

The process of regeneration and unification is taught in all the religions of the East, but -- although the whole Christian religion is based upon this truth -- it is nevertheless universally misunderstood by modern Christians, who expect to obtain salvation through the merit of another, rather than by their own exertions. To understand the process of regeneration and unification requires an understanding of the real nature of man and his relations to Nature; a science which in our modern times is nowhere taught in schools because our theologians and scientists are themselves ignorant of the true nature of man, and because *mankind finds it EASIER to accept a belief than to acquire knowledge.

The attainment of At-One-Ment or complete unification is the application of the principles of right living; right thinking; right speaking and right acting to the individual life. Such application reacts upon the three cardinal principles of man: Soul, Body and Spirit -- all three of which in their crude, unawakened state are termed by the alchemists The Dragons, and are described as of various colors according to the status of each; thus the Red Dragon, Green Dragon, etc., and are often confused with the Red Lion, Green Lion, etc., which as previously explained are the metals in a state of ebulition.

These dragons in terms of various colors are, of course, not to be taken literally but describe the Human Principles in what the alchemists called "Tinctures" or "Tinctura". A Tincture may be defined as an ethereal or spiritual substance which, by impregnating another substance endows or tinctures it with its own properties. Thus, if a gross principle is penetrated by a higher one, the former is said to be tinctured (or colored) by the latter.

Such terms as the above are used in accord with the generalised practice and usage of the alchemists in keeping with their concept of man as an alembic, retort, cucurbite, in which the allegorical processes of fermentation, distillation, extraction of essences and spirits, the preparation of salts, is supposed to take place. The head of man was termed the PHILOSOPHER'S EGG.

Alchemically, the attainment of At-One-Ment is to be reached first by transmuting Dead Matter or Caput Morticum, which as you learned earlier was the name applied by Initiates to all living bodies in a State of Nature, into Corpus Solis or the Matter or Body of the Sun or Gold, a process raising the vibrations of the lower vehicles or Dragons by the intense desire to discern and understand the higher consciousness. This desire must be born from the Philosophical Egg, which must be, as Swedenborg says, in the Highest Heaven, or the philosopher will see nothing. It is the raising of the Terra Mortua, or dead earth, sometimes called by alchemical writers Terra Dammata, and by the Gnostic St. Paul, the "body of sin".

The Philosophical Egg is the head of the philosopher and it is from the action of the spiritual centers of the highest intelligence, not from mere religious emotionalism that the desire for the higher consciousness or At-One-Ment must be born. This is shown in the words of the Apostle, in fine alchemical language, when he writes (I Peter 2:2-4) "As newborn babes desire the sincere Milk of the Word, that ye may grow thereby. If so be that ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious. TO WHOM COMING AS UNTO A LIVING STONE, DISALLOWED INDEED OF MEN, BUT CHOSEN OF GOD AND PRECIOUS".

In the language of the alchemists, the "Sincere Milk of the Word", the Virgin's Milk, the mercurial Water or May Dew -- all mean the Waters of Everlasting Life, -- on which, if a man lay hold, he shall not perish but have life abundantly. Hence, as the initial motif and desire for the At-One-Ment of the regenerated man with the Universal Source or One must come from the Higher intelligence of man, or the greatest, best, and truest product of his awakened cerebral faculties and intellection, so we are not surprised to find the alchemists referring to his spiritual activity as the Volatile spirit of the Human Skull.

A most active factor in the stimulus of such high desire is the direct result of the activity of conscience, called by the alchemists, the White Woman, Vinegar, Oil, Honey, Wormwood, etc., according to the state of the individual and the action of conscience in approving, warning, condemning, admonishing or chastising.

Under the urge of conscience the activity of the supernatural or elemental fire takes on renewed vigor, purging the dross and gross matter, conquering the Dragons and effecting a new mental and spiritual Creation or Universe, in which "all the old things (concepts) are passed away, and behold, all things are become new."

Hence Bacon says, "Just as a supernatural or elemental fire is that which disintegrates and fuses the elements of the whole world, and as the new creation will be born from the mortal, molten elements, and will be an equal Creation; even so has the Holy Trinity in the Celestial Stone also revealed unto us a supernatural fire. My son, philosophers in their books have concealed this Fire, describing it in parables and by countless names; in particular they call it Mary's Bath, Horse Dung, Menstruum, Urine, Milk, Blood, Aqua Vitae, etc. (Virgin and blessed Water, Heaven, Celestial Water, Heavenly Rain, Water of Paradise, Aqua Regis, Corrosive Aqua Fortis, a Sharp Vinegar and Brandy, a Quintessence of Wine, White Arsenic, Silver, a Moon, an Humour of the Moon, a Woman and a Woman's Seed and many other names).

By the action of conscience and the purging of the invisible Fire, is produced the Panacea, one great essence, composed of the Lion, and the Lamb, or the union of Meekness and Strength.

The Panacea individually applied as a curative of the Soul and a stimulus to the higher plane of consciousness results in five definite steps of progress in the spiritual life of the aspirant. They are:

1... Conviction
2... Contrition
3... Confession
4... Consecration
5... Communion

Reducing all alchemical formulae to the vernacular, these five steps are the grades and the path by and through which the aspirant may attain At-One-Ment with the Universal Source or Principle and enter consciously into the amplified, expanded consciousness and realization of his Divine Parentage.

C O N V I C T I O N

Conviction brings home to the aspirant, with compelling force, the knowledge and realization of his misdirected energies, dissipated powers for constructive accomplishment and their consequent destructive and disturbing effects upon his own environment and necessarily upon that of so many others, known and unknown. No one while clothed with the garment of flesh can see the ultimate results of even his most unconscious or inconsequential acts, but by meditation and the arrest of his attention, he may be convinced of their potentialities and thus know that results far beyond his physical ken must necessarily have ensued.

C O N T R I T I O N

Contrition brings to the aspirant the truest and most poignant sorrow and regret at lost or neglected opportunities, wasted energies, destructive results and effects upon others as well as upon himself, and above all: the consciousness of the invisible disaster he may have caused in etheric and astral realms of being directly traceable to his ignorance, carelessness, selfishness and thoughtfulness. Such contrition lead invariably to a desire for restitution which prompts -

C O N F E S S I O N

Confession. This comes easily to the true aspirant, for nothing in this world is so effective to clear the oppressed mind and spirit as complete confession of so-called wrong doing. It is for this very reason that we are advised, nay commanded in Holy Writ to confess our errors one to another, in the words "Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much". (James 5:16) And again "For with the heart, man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth, confession is made unto salvation". (Romans 10:10)

Above all, the value of confession to the spiritual scientist is that he knows that by utterance of his thoughts he concretes them, and thus his desire for restitution which finds its manifestation in the confession of his faults, when spoken aloud become concreted, and fixated in the astral worlds; a permanent testimonial to his sincerity and a constant, ever-present stimulus to right action, right thought and right speaking in the future.

C O N S E C R A T I O N

After confession, the aspirant is then in a position to seek consecration. That which is weighed down by the burden of error, and guilt is not in a position to receive spiritual consecration, no matter if it is given with all the pomp and authority of imposing ecclesiastical ceremonial. Consecration comes only from within, and outward ceremonial is but the symbol of the inward grace which comes only from the Divine Source of all grace. When, after freeing one's mind from the weight and burden of error, so that one can truly join in the great sursum corda (lift up your hearts) and really lift up his heart unashamed, then the outpouring of Divine Power will be felt and cognized as never before and the aspirant will realize the truth embodied in the words of the seer who wrote that he was lifted up into the third heaven and there saw unutterable things of which it was not lawful for him to write.

C O M M U N I O N

After consecration comes the greatest of all, communion, the goal of all aspirants whether alchemists, illuminati, R+C, Magians, or any others. Communion means reapprochment, mental & spiritual union, mutual understanding, complete harmony of purpose and thought. At rare intervals we approach this lofty state in the mundane world among proven friends, yet rarely indeed. When thought responds eloquently to thought through the unbroken silence; when an illumination that is not of this world pervades the mind of the aspirant; when things undreamed of in his individual philosophy come freely to his mind, showing him those things which have been, are now and must shortly come to pass -- it is AT-ONE-MENT, conscious unity with the Over-Soul.

Even though at first it be with the lowest of the celestial hierarchies, nevertheless it must be remembered that such is the beginning of the chain of correspondences that lead directly to God and through him to the very Throne and Being of the Absolute Itself -- not far off in space, but here, wherever we may be, WITHIN OURSELVES. If you look elsewhere for the Kingdom of God you shall be doomed to intense disappointment.

It makes no difference what system or school the aspirant may elect to study in, nor does it make that much difference what method be employed or recommended. If he succeeds in attaining At-One-Ment, he will have passed successively through all these steps. He may not at the time be conscious of the exact line of demarcation between each, but each nevertheless will have been accomplished. There is no other way, nor can anyone hope to approach the higher life without the preparatory steps leading thereto. Call them by which names you will, each of these steps will have been traversed by the aspirant if he ultimately attains his goal. If knowing them in advance, you approach them intentionally and consciously, with the intent purpose of making each step as thoroughly efficacious as possible, you shall save time, energy and strength that may be profitably devoted to the assistance of others whom you shall undoubtedly encounter on the same path.

These five steps to At-One-Ment constitute the "more excellent" way referred to in previous instruction. We have been taught that the object of the work of the Rose+Croix is the Perfection and improvement of man. This reaches its culmination and epitome in the At-One-Ment process which is the subject and purpose of this instruction. It means the Unity of the Human Nature with the Divine Nature.

For this, the greatest sacrifice in the world was made, the LIVING sacrifice -- note, NOT A DEAD SACRIFICE, was made by the Star of the Pleroma, at which time was enacted the greatest of all alchemical transmutations, whereby the Human Initiate Jesus rose to the sublime height of offering his corpus, that of the Sun Initiate or Christos might perform its mission; that Great Initiate who by vouchsafing to become a partaker of our humanity, raised us to become partakers of His Divinity.

Companions:

Simply put, the quality of the instruction and teachings being given you in our Libers is most excellent and unsurpassable. In Libers to come, you may expect to find continuing material of the highest quality and import.

But it is my fervent hope that you are putting the principles to active and practical use. It would be a dark day indeed, if the rays of this light are being shut out. "Unto him whom much is given -- much is expected." I could speak on this at great length but I believe my injunction is clear.

Sincerely yours in the Work

BLOOD

THE young man or woman just entering upon the study of elementary physiology in the common school grades, is instructed to nearly fill a glass bottle with water and then fill the bottle with red beads of as small a size as possible. Then he is told to view this arrangement from a reasonable distance and the bottle will appear to be filled with red liquid and this, he is assured, is an excellent illustration of the general nature and appearance of blood.

This was a good illustration twenty years ago, when much less was known by the medical fraternity regarding human blood, than now. At the present time we can agree most sympathetically with Mephistopheles, when he remarkt, "blood is a most peculiar essence." It has been called the "River of Life," and while this title is usually applied in the exoteric and common sense of being a body builder and sustainer, nevertheless, on examination, blood will be found to be a true River of Life in the highest esoteric and spiritual sense as well.

We will give as briefly as possible a simple scientific statement regarding the composition of blood. This fluid is red in all vertebrates except the amphioxus and is usually colorless in all invertebrates. It consists of a transparent, colorless fluid or "Plasma" in which are suspended the Corpuscles.

In mammals, the red corpuscles are bi-concave, non-nucleated disks that give the blood its characteristic color, and show a wonderful affinity for free oxygen. The white corpuscles or "leucocytes" are less in number and so far seem to be "masses of free formative protoplasm," assuming various shapes and having the power of locomotion. It is estimated that in a cubic millimeter of human blood, there are at least 5,000,000 red corpuscles and from 5,000 to 7,000 white corpuscles. Blood is bright red or scarlet in the arteries and bluish-red or purple in the veins.

The first constituent of blood that engages our attention is the Haemoglobin; (Gr. Haima—blood) an amorphous compound that forms the solid coloring matter of red corpuscles. "It carries oxygen from the lungs and is a mixture of hematin and globulin. Arterial blood contains oxyhaemoglobin and venous blood haemoglobin. From its mission, message and burden to the bodily economy, we will note that it has a markt analogy to the chlorophyll we have previously studied in connection with the vegetable kingdom.

The next constituent that engages us, is the substance in the blood that becomes and produces the Hormones, or secretions of glands that have excitatory properties.

Third, the Opsonins, regarding which the medical fraternity is not unanimous in its agreement, but which are the substances present in the blood, having a specific effect upon the ingestion of pathogenic bacteria by phagocytes.

Fourth, there are the haematoblasts or minute, colorless disks,, smaller than either the red or white corpuscles, which, with the haemaleucin or fibrin and the haematoidin or crystalline substance, play most important parts in the process of haemapoiesis or the formation of blood.

The blood has its living tenants, too, in the Haemameba or ameboid parasites, corpuscular in their characteristics.

Two more features are to be noted,—the haemoconion or small granules found in the blood and thought by pathologists to be the detritus of white corpuscles; and the process of haematosis, or the conversion of chyle and venous blood into arterial.

Now let us for a moment review the properties of the four ethers; The Chemical Ether is both positive and negative in its polarities. The forces of assimilation work along its positive pole and the forces of excretion work along the negative. In the Life Ether the forces work along the positive pole in the female, manifesting in the creative and gestative forces, while the impregnative forces work along the negative pole in the male. The Light Ether is also both positive and negative, the forces that generate blood heat work along the positive pole and the forces by which our senses become active work along its negative pole. In the Reflecting Ether a medium is found thru which the forces operative in the Thought World manifest in the homo.

It is obvious to all, that the blood, a nourishing, vitalizing, sanitary and constructive factor that must contact every conceivable portion of the human economy, must and does contain within itself all the elements and conditions that will make possible the operation of the forces thru these four ethers, for tho we may be surrounded or immerst in these very ethers, unless they have some avenue and vehicle of contact and application their mission and functions would be futile.

And while their activity began aeons ago in the development of nascent man or man-in-the-making, it is equally obvious that, in that process, the development of blood as the vehicle thru which they could function as the organism became more and more complex, was also in progress.

We have also learned as Rosicrucian students that the Ego, while occupying a specific position known to the Alchemical students, also extends itself thruout the entire circulatory system, the blood forming the express vehicle thru which it exercises control of and directs the bodily development and attains the requisite experience for which it incarnated.

Blood is indeed "a most peculiar ESSENCE," for it contains not only the EGO, but, that Ego being a Spark of the Absolute or Infinite, it is, residentially, of the very Nature of the Divine, while of purely human organic origin and formation.

This is why the Blood is such an important part of the Sublime Mystery of the Holy Eucharist. For in the Blood of the Master Jesus was essentially incorporated the Personality of the Divine Initiate, the Christos, and in the corpus of the Master were thus co-mingled the Divine and Human Elements. Thru the mystic power of the Blood, the human took on the Divine, and the Divine condescended to be come human.

The Mystery of Golgotha includes the great Sacrifice whereby the Earth Regent discontinued his guidance of the planet from without and INDREW into the same, the entrance being effected by the outpouring of the Blood at the Crucifixion and its absorption into the Earth, forming by this process the avenue thru which the Great Entrance into His Kingdom could be made. Prior to this entrance and while the guidance was from without, the process of crystallization had attained its greatest extent in the earth, an extent which was noticeably prominent in the Humanity on its surface.

Had this crystallization been permitted to proceed uncheckt, Humanity would have become so clogged by the impurities of materialism that it would have been doomed to remain an organism of the purely mortal status in endless incarnation without approaching nearer to that at-one-ment which is the union with God.

But this tendency toward abnormal crystallization and the consequent destruction or thwarting of the Divine Plan was checkt by the Great Sacrifice of the Earth Regent. This Sacrifice was not the mere surrender of his life or rather of the life of the Master Jesus, for as we now know, Jesus did not lose his life on the Cross, nor was it possible to blot out the life of the Christos who had triumft over physical death long ages before. Many men have since been sacrificed, even crucified, but such deaths while sublime on the pages of history have not possest the same merit as the Tragedy of Golgotha. The real Sacrifice at that time was the Sacrifice of his estate of freedom and his resigned acceptance of immurement in what was thenceforth to be his kingdom until the mission of that kingdom was completed; the entering into and remaining within, the Earth itself, so that the Real Presence of Divinity amongst Humanity objectively, should thenceforth be an accomplisht FACT.

And the same sacrifice is repeated microcosmically in every human birth, when the Ego, hovering around the womb of the mother, INDRAWS into what is to be its future kingdom until that kingdom or microcosmic earth has served its purpose of incarnation. It is furthermore to be observed, that this indrawing takes place only when the foetal circulation is so well establisht that the Ego can begin to occupy it and from that position of occupancy, direct the further formation of its future habitat, building along the lines for which it prepared the archetype while in the heaven world.

The Ego as we know, functions thru four specific vehicles, the physical, etheric and astral bodies and the sheath of Mind Stuff which is not yet, but will sometime be, likewise a true body. We have also learned that each of these four vehicles functions consonantly with the four ethers.

It is the teaching of the Brothers of the Rosy Cross, that just as the Ego functions in the four vehicles thru the blood, so the four ethers carry on the functions of those vehicles thru the blood also.

The Chemical Ether works thru the haemoglobin in the process of construction and destruction, assimilation and excretion;

The Life Ether works thru the haematoblasts in crystallizing the creative powers, and in the dissolution of the crystals releases the life force which vitalizes the organic structure;

The Light Ether works thru the opsonins, in the production and release of the necessary heat for the bodily organisms and the vivification of the sensoria;

The Reflecting Ether works thru the Hormones, transmitting thru them the impulses from the Thought World.

The Chemical Ether and the haemoglobin make possible the functions of the physical body.

The Life Ether and the haematoblasts make possible the operations of the etheric body.

The Light Ether and the opsonins make possible the functions of the Mind and sensoria.

The Reflecting Ether and the Hormones stimulate by impulse the Astral body.

All work together in the process of haemapoiesis or blood formation to produce the "River of Life," the haemaleucin holding the entire constituent mass in perfect suspension so that each is free to discharge its own individual function and purpose.

Thus, in the blood of the human organism we have the key that locks in complete union the visible and the invisible worlds in the microcosm Man.

In the blood of the human Master Jesus, the Personalities of the Human Initiate and the Divine Initiate met and mingled. Jesus while "occupied" by the Christos, did not lose or surrender his consciousness or individual personality. It was, so to speak, a condition of conscious trance. This is our great example of a demonstration against ordinary mediumship. The Master proved that he could become an instrument of the highest spiritual forces, while still preserving his own personality and consciousness and this he was able to do by virtue of the blood as the vehicle. His blood, while holding his individual personality, was by his perfected incarnations brot to a vibratory status that enabled the Christos to invest it temporarily with Divine attributes and powers, yet Jesus informed his Disciples and followers that greater things than they had seen him do, should they do also after he had departed from their ordinary vision. Later Biblical records bear witness that this was literally true and that the Apostles raised even the dead.

Now we have the promise of a great Initiate that all these things are possible to him who becomes a true follower; a promise which, in the vernacular, we may say has been "made good." And the fact that it is true and a possibility within reach of all is demonstrated in the appearance from time to time of men living exemplary lives, who possess the powers of healing to a remarkable degree and of spiritual insight to a very high extent. And it is a criticism on our times that the reason we see so few of such men is because the race has so far departed from the simplicity and purity of life originally intended by Nature, acting as the instrument of Divine Creative Wisdom.

The main point we wish to emphasize in this lecture is, however, that it is chiefly thru the blood that such attainment is possible. The Christos is ready and waiting for instruments today, as he was 19 centuries ago, and sometimes is able to partially utilize advanst Egos. All systems of development that are constructive and desirable will be found to have the effect of cleansing, purifying and raising the vibratory status of the blood of the aspirant, just as the blood shed on Golgotha had the spiritual power of cleansing from too great crystallization the earth and its evolving humanity. And this, in passing was the real mystery of what is or has been called, "the cleansing blood."

The truth that the blood is the most important factor involved in genuine attainment is shown by the fact that it responds to the dictates of the Ego. Students of schools of occult science which work principally along physical lines assert and with truth, that the persevering student or neophyte can, by act of will alone, raise or lower the vibratory status and pressure of his blood. This is true but it is not necessary to engage in Yoga to accomplish it. You may increase your blood pressure by walking upstairs, and the rate of increase will depend upon the rate of speed with which you make the ascent. Having demonstrated this to your satisfaction, you will find by experiment that you can also raise the blood pressure merely by thought. 20 millimeters rise has often accompanied a sudden unpleasant thought, even 30 millimeters in the case of a young woman on learning of her mother's death. Voluntary holding of the breath will raise the pressure; voluntary relaxation will lower it. Dr. Dearborn cites a case of a physician whose normal pressure was 135 and who lowered it in fifteen minutes to 111 by relaxing his body and mind, and raised it in 2½ minutes of breath holding to 230. Raising the blood pressure naturally and logically increases the vibratory rate. What then does this prove?

First, we must remember that man is a microcosm, a fact emphasized thruout all mystical study. If he is a microcosm he must contain and reflect the powers and attributes of the Macrocosm in a microcosmic degree. The notable basic attributes of the Macrocosm are Will, Wisdom and Activity, and these, it will be noted are essentially the attributes of the microcosm, Man. Thru the Activity of God, under the impulsion of the Divine Will, guided by Divine Wisdom, Man was started on his long involuntary and evolutionary journey. Thru his microcosmic inherence in the Divine Nature, Man thru activity under the impulsion of the trained will, guided by developing wisdom will effect his return journey to God.

The blood is the key interlocking both the seen and the unseen, thru which this complete cycle is made possible. Man cannot, by any act of will or wisdom known to him at present add to or decrease his stature nor can he grow new bone or delete the old. He CAN, as shown merely by an act of thought, produce definite changes in his blood. He CAN by act of will, control his nerves which depend absolutely upon the blood most closely for their very life. If, by ordinary, untrained thoughts, Man can effect such remarkable changes in his blood pressure, reflect what he could do by the exercise of thought constructively applied. In our blood lie all the possibilities we can desire. The morbid, unsocial, hermit type of being will be found to have thick, sluggish, partially vitalized blood. The optimistic, carefree, even over-social type will be found to have normal, healthy, vital blood, even to such an extent that it is a common phrase in the vernacular to speak of the ultra gay type busily engaged in sowing a splendid crop of wild oats, as "gay young bloods," and the blood inherited in families having a long line of ancestors noted for attainment will be found in markt contrast from the great mass of humanity that has not succeeded in rising from the more ordinary conditions of life. The man or woman of so-called "good blood" has every reason in the world to be proud of it, but to such come great responsibilities toward their fellow men; responsibilities which, alas, are not always recognized or assumed.

That the blood is the essential habitat of the Ego and personality is shown by the action of the thymus gland itself. In infancy this gland supplies most of the corpuscles. As the child grows, the gland decreases. At the age of fourteen the child is making his own blood and begins to think as "I". During periods of loss of control, in anger, or passion, we hear the expression, "it made my blood boil" etc., demonstrating the actual state of intense heat present. Abnormal states or conditions of the blood have the power of actually driving the Ego therefrom, and this also is evidenst in ordinary usage when we speak of a person who has totally lost control of himself, as "being beside himself." The Ego cannot work in the blood when it is too hot or too cold. Therefore, it is the full-blooded person of normal temperature who is most active, while the anemic person is dull, list-listless and sleepy.

Ordinarily, the bodily processes are directed unconsciously to the normal senses by the Ego within, who accomplishes its purpose by its power of directing the blood. Thus for digestion, the Ego sends the blood to the stomach, and during the initial stages of that process it is difficult to engage in intellectual labor. When it is desired to engage the mental faculties, the Ego sends the blood to the brain, and then the digestive processes slow down. When sexual activities are called for, the blood is sent to those particular organs, and during such times both digestive and mental faculties are in abeyance, and it is for this very reason, that the sex powers so often seem to act without reason, beyond its guidance and with sorrowful results, for once aroused as in processes of seduction, reason flees and only the strongest minded can hold their balance. In the state of Fear, the Ego draws the blood to the bodily center, as a barrier protecting the vital organs; therefore, the exterior presentiment of the person appears pale and bloodless.

In this connection, the great secret of the selective power exercised by the various organs of the body in choosing out from the nourishment provided, just what each requires for individual needs, will be found to be due to the state of Ego consciousness and personality inherent in the blood, which, the moment it contacts the food taken into the mouth sends to the stomach the indications for the exact digestive fluids required. During sleep, the blood leaves the brain where it is no longer required in the phenomena of waking consciousness and is centered in the region of the organs which are the physical counterparts of the psychical centers.

Further evidence of the fact that the blood is the habitat of the directive powers of the human economy is given in Leviticus, the 17th chapter and the 14th verse. Therein we find:—"For it (the blood) is the life of ALL flesh; the blood of it is for the life thereof: therefore I said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh: for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof: whoso eateth it shall be cut off." In the Hebrew the word "life" is not found for the corresponding word is "neschamah" meaning "soul". Thus we see that among the ancients it was recognized that the blood was the habitat of the group spirit of the lower kingdom, as in the human it is that of the Ego. And it was in the blood that the consciousness of ancestors of the race was perpetuated, giving rise to the idea of advanst ages so often met with in Scripture.

Warm red blood is an essential to the human kingdom, for it is thru the heat of the blood that the Ego works. When the blood of a higher kingdom is transferd to an organism of the lower kingdom, the spirit of the higher imposes itself dominantly upon the spirit of the lower and destroys the form resident in the blood of the lower. When the blood of the lower kingdom is transfused to an organism of the higher kingdom, the spirit of the lower is ejected and the spirit of the higher assimilates the blood thus furnisht, for its constructive purposes. And the blood insures the integrity of the higher kingdom or species, for it will not permit the propagation of hybrids. By ejecting the spirit of the lower it prevents the power of propagating from becoming operative.

This truth of the personality residing in the blood has further corroboration in an interesting demonstration made by a patient, Mrs. A. B. in the St. James Hospital, Newark, N. J., within the past few years. In this case transfusion of blood became necessary and a quantity was supplied by her husband. After a month she underwent a complete mental change, losing or abandoning her own former mental attributes and acquiring all the mental attributes, peculiarities and states of her husband. This was true even to change of voice. The lady had suffered from a tumor which had made such progress that the surgeons feared to operate unless a fresh supply of blood could be had. A pint of her husband's blood was injected through a silver tube into the wife's wrist. Quoting from the record:—"Until then Mrs. B. had been a morose, despondent woman, who saw little cheer in the world. She was of a quiet disposition and did not care for the gayieties of life. She seldom laughed. She did not care for amusements. Also, she was partial to dark purple and a dead slate, or a dark brown as colors. She abhorred bright colors, and especially was her antipathy to green. Her husband was of a gay disposition. He liked amusements. He was of a jolly disposition and very strong was his taste for green as a color.

The doctor paid little attention to Mrs. B. for three weeks following the transfusion of blood. Then, a week ago, when they found her strong enuf to undergo the difficult operation for the removal of the tumor, they were surprised to note the great change which had come over her mind. She was happy—almost gay—and she laughed as she assured the doctors she was ready for the knife. And, strangely enuf, after the operation, she rallied quickly, and when her husband askt her what he could do she askt him to bring her some green plants, some ferns—plants with plenty of green foliage. She had hated green before.

And since then she has been planning to have two green dresses made when she leaves the hospital, and she has spoken about the places of amusement to which she desires to go, and seems to have acquired her husband's happy, almost joyous disposition. She cannot stand the sight of sombre purple now. Her mind seems to have undergone a complete revolution since her husband's blood was transfused into her veins, and she seems to have lost her own former mental characteristics and to have assumed those of her husband.

Leading physicians and scientists now propose to debate the question if a person's mental attributes may not be completely changed by transfusing blood from a person of a different temperament.

Such change is undoubtedly possible, but it is to be noted that it was the imposition of the stronger, more positive temperament over a weaker, and to mystics, the karmic commingling involved will present a serious problem, for it is really the subjugation of a weaker personality and a type of obsession in part, by a stronger. Nevertheless, the incident is interesting as a demonstration of the truth that the blood is the home of the Ego and personality, a fact that was so well known among ancients and aborigines, who used it as a ceremonial custom in establishing what was known as blood brotherhoods, where the blood of individuals was mingled.

The blood is the crystallized solar essence, the liquid fire of the body, the active factor of the Four Elements operative in Man. It cleansed the Earth at the entrance of the Regent, the Christos, by raising the earth vibrations, and under examination microscopically by a competent psychic of independent development, will reveal the life history of a given individual, from the cradle to the grave, as has been on many occasions experimentally demonstrated by the writer. In the condition of haemolysis, or abnormal change of the blood involving destruction of the haemoglobin and blood corpuscles, the effect is obvious in the individual physiologically, psychologically, and spiritually. The blood is the vehicle for the functions of the Mars elements—IRON—particularly, blood deficient of this element being notably weak and ineffectual, producing pale, weak, anemic people. Strongly fortified by the Mars elements, in association with the Vitamines containing the requisite proportion of both water and fat solubles, a strong, healthy, vital organism is assured.

The supply of blood to the brain is regulated by the Pineal and Pituitary bodies, just as the adrenals similarly act for the kidneys, and it is noticeable that hyperaemia or anaemia both seem to be favorable conditions for the morbid visions, as often observed in the dying, when the circulation is altered.

Among the horrors invented by the Germans in the recent war. was a form of bomb which exploded laterally. It was called liquid fire but did not openly flame. A man struck on the arm, was not immediately disabled, and on the second day thought lightly of his burn, but on the third, or at latest fourth day, he died. It was found that this invention produced clotting and congealing of the blood, with consequent death. Mystically, it lowered the vibration so that the Ego could no longer tenant it.

This wonderful serum, the human blood, is a universe in itself. Like the drop of water that journeys from the clouds to the ocean and becomes merged therein, the ocean of human blood unites in perfect harmony countless millions of tiny cells thruout the human organism, and with which it must necessarily be in the most intimate contact. Each cell has its own individual consciousness. All together constitute the Human Lodge. When the Ego as Worshipful Master steps out at death all the activities of the bodily Lodge continue, but, lacking the guidance of the Master Mind they do not co-ordinate and their activity soon results in the disintegration and destruction of the form. Confusion in the Craft has occurred. But so long as the mystic River of Life remains pure and undefiled, the Master is in the East and the microcosm works along the plans laid down on the Macrocosmic Trestle Board in perfect harmony and Hermetic Unity—Hermetic because securely sealed from the intrusion of cowans and eavesdroppers of the outer world.

Dear Companions:

Greetings and Salutations as we continue up the rocky road! Scrutinizing the messages and communications from your group, I find the majority of Companions to be in favour of the advanced teachings being given at this time.

Two Companions in particular expressed their appreciation of the brighter Light they were seeing and felt it was a real privilege to be on Plane III.

From our side, we who are working here at heaquarters, striving to share with other souls some of the treasure we have inherited in our archives, feel equally appreciative in being able to give these teachings and instructions to those who ask to receive them. It is our sincere hope, however, that you who receive these principles are putting them to good use, for the Law says that to whom much is given -- much is expected.

In this Liber we will have Saint-Martin's Third lecture to the Elus-Cohen of Lyons; also a lecture by Sâr Agni. WHO WAS SAR AGNI ? (See Liber 24, lecture #89) ! ! !

Now, brethren, we have received a very interesting paper on the significance of the Eggregore, from a Brother in England; and I have chosen it to begin this Liber because it will serve as a good introduction to the lecture to follow by Sâr Agni:

"In the Astral, outside the physical perception of man, there exist artificial entities generated by thoughts of devotion, enthusiasm, or fanaticism of human beings. I emphasize that they are artificial beings because such thought forms are completely irrational - i.e. incapable of thinking for themselves. Because of this, they are not true spiritual beings.

"At their birth these individual metaphysical entities are very feeble and may dissolve if left alone. However, if several human beings unite their thought they can form a group or collection of entities of considerable strength. The Eggregore is then this collection of psychic entities, and as such it is the soul of all fraternal and religious movements whether it be " Catholicism, Buddhism, Islamism, Rosicrucianism, Freemasonry, or Martinism. Even political ideologies have individual Eggregores: i.e. Democracy, Fascism, and etc.

"While Eggregores are normally generated through the collective thought forms of groups of human beings, an Occult Master may, himself directly originate his own particular Eggregore, i.e. - Martinez de Pasqually and Martinism. It then receives further strength from the concentrated thought received by participation of the Master's chain of Initiates and in its turn the Eggregore offers a subtle force to the Initiates of the chain. Thus we find that a movement may commence only with the founder, later to be comprised of thousands of followers. The Eggregore has indeed become an Occult power.

"Let us take a look at Martinist Initiation. During the Initiation the candidate is placed within the influences of the Martinist Eggregore for the first time and the candidate becomes, in effect, a cell of the Eggregore. Then follows a sort of an interior psychic circulation between the cell and the whole. A subtle psychic flow takes place between the new member and the well established Martinist Eggregore with the new member drawing a certain sustenance and stimulation from it. If the new member responds to his complementing power of thought, even though feeble at first, or if he may initiate others into Martinism at a later date, he thus further strengthens the Martinist Eggregore thought form.

"During all "Chains of Union", as conducted in Lodge ceremonies of esoteric and fraternal Orders, we find that it is here that the physical, emotional and mental union of the participants take place, and it is here also that a strong interchange of Eggregore force on three planes also comes into play.

"Each Eggregore has its own sign on the material plane which particularly characterizes its nature and objectives. The Martinist Pentacle is the sign of the Martinist Eggregore, other such signs are the Masonic Square & Compasses; the Pentagram; the Seal of Solomon; the latin cross; the Rose Cross of the Rose+Croix, etc. etc...."

Initiation is derived from the Latin word "initium" (beginning); it is therefore the beginning of (a) a new state or condition, (b) in a new path, or way.

a. The profane is fettered, blinded, is a prisoner of darkness and of errors; he is a wanderer; and through the initiation, which really and truly places him in a new condition, he becomes enlightened, free from the bias and prejudices of the mundane world, and he is therefore stronger and more powerful.

b. A new path is opened to him, and the Cosmic Truth is revealed to him by means of symbolism which is the key given to the new initiate to unravel the Mysteries which are hidden to the profane world.

c. The consequence of it is: a possibility, and also a duty to utilize his newly given light on behalf of humanity; he must become himself a focus of radiations and free himself from all selfishness, all self-centered interests. And this emission of light will be at one and the same time: warmth, energy, and power.

The nature of this power:- It is the result of a mental induction, running from the Initiator to the Initiate, and creating a new mental condition in the initiate.

He is upheld by a magnetical polarization, born from the action of the Initiator, and which tends to create a more perfect equilibrium in all the actions of the initiate. For there is no doubt that a current is established between the giver and the receiver - that is, the Initiator and the Initiate - which is creator of Harmony, and once awakened, the new power becomes permanent: "tu es sacerdos in aeternum" and that which has been done can not be undone, even though the new initiate should become unworthy. The Initiator is a father for the Initiate, and when a son has been born unto his father, nothing can undo it.

Transmission of this power:- This power has been transmitted from man to man, through the uninterrupted chain of Initiates, through the ages; the Initiates being the human vehicles of Light and Power and this is called "APOSTOLICISM".

It is transmitted with the help of a special Ritual, which unlocks a current of celestial help, and causes the intervention of spiritual forces that are omnipresent and act as catalyzer: the burning up of the dross in the initiate is coming into effect and a new being is being born unto him.

The responsibility of holding such a power:- Man is at one and the same time beneficiary and vehicle for this power, and he is under the obligation to radiate it. This obliges him to choose for himself a disciple who will become his substitute and his successor so as to ensure the permanency of the uninterrupted initiatique chain. He has received the flambeau and he must pass it on and not let its flame be extinguished or be choked by the ashes of neglect and unworthiness.

And so also it entails an ineluctable punishment for him who uses this power for material or self-interested ends, like it is done in certain practices of magia, or through simony, as in the case of trading with initiations, or selling charts for money.

The purpose of this Initiation:- It is, individually, an inestimable source of elevation and salvation. Evolutionally, it is a means to understand, and to outrun and uphold the march of humanity toward the destiny that has been assigned to it by the Supreme Power. The Initiate climbs up the direct path leading to the final goal and helps men to leave the long and tedious paths of ignorance and evil. The Initiation makes of man a conscious, active and happy particle of the great cosmic and spiritual current, source of the life of the world.

The Individual Initiation:- There exists, however, an exception to the rule of Traditional Initiation, that is the acquisition: (a) of the Light; (b) Of the Initiatique Power, without intervention from a human Master. It is produced through a pure spiritual Osmose. It is, however, exceedingly rare, and is the case only with saints and the great Initiates who have become leaders of men or founders of Secret Orders; amongst them we may cite Moses, Pythagoras, Raymond Lulle, Martinez de Pasquallis, Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin.

Its validity is proved: (a) through certain signs representing certain cosmic secrets which are found in the oral transmissions at the summit of the hierarchy of the traditional Initiation; these signs, in the initiatique parlance, are called locks; (b) certain powers which are the consequence thereof, and are its keys; they are utilized for beneficent purposes.

The negative or malefic Initiations:- They are of two kinds: (a) those produced by the action of man; (b) those produced by the action of black forces.

a. Man may transmit a malefic, selfish and destructive power either through his conscious will; or the unconscious use of a malefic ritual as in the case in some practices of diabolical masonry or spiritualistic proceedings. It is possible to counteract and remedy the evil that is thus done, and then one must proceed in two stages: first, by neutralizing the malefic power with the help of a destruction of same, following with a purification of the bewitched neophyte; secondly by creating a beneficent power through the use of the completely traditional method.

b. The black forces, in some cases, are capable of vampirizing a human being, who may be possessed by them.

The remedy is then to dislodge the malefic forces through exorcism, following with a mental and physical purification. Next to this, a protecting barrier must be created, and furthermore it must be periodically renewed through prayers.

How to distinguish a good from a bad initiation:- By their effects, "as the tree, so the fruit".

1. The good initiation awakens in the Initiate altruism, personal disinterestedness, faithfulness, simplicity, the spirit of sacrifice; and it implies forgiveness of the offenses; from these, the initiate derives inner peace and joy, and an ineffable feeling of harmony.

2. The victim of the bad initiation becomes a prey to a ferocious selfishness, to pride and cruelty, to the spirit of dominion and material ambition; the malefic initiation also leads to jealousy, treachery, to revenge, to the traffic of influences and simony. A constant restlessness is the sign thereof, as also a tendency and need to injure people.

The importance of Ritual in the Initiation:- The Ritual is indispensable, thus the importance that has been universally granted to it; there are several reasons for this: (a) It is an immutable frame where is enacted the magical operation, the purpose of which is always the same. (b) It is the support of the spiritual operation. (c) It is a help to the operators, whom it protects against all distraction; it moves them and has a dynamical power upon them, placing them in a condition of radiation, at the same time harmonizing their radiations, condensing and amplifying them. (d) It is the direct link with the Heavenly Power, and without it, no contact can possibly be established.

Several conditions are required for the Ritual to fulfil its purpose:-

1. The place: the place where the Ritual is performed must be exclusively reserved to it; it must also be regularly consecrated, periodically purified, and a living fire (that of a candle, for instance - not electricity) must be maintained in it.

2. The time: considering the situation of the place, on the earth, the best cosmical moment must be chosen, and some days must be proscribed. There is also a well known fact in wireless, or broadcasting; that is that the sun's rays interfere with the transmission of waves. Therefore it is preferable to perform the Ritual at night, or during the evening; not with the full day light.

3. The condition of the operators. (a) It is necessary to take off from the assistants all that differentiates them in the profane world; this is done by means of ritualistic and obligatory garments which increase the physical unity. (b) It is also necessary to put them in an harmonious and spiritual frame of mind; for this, ritualistic recitations are used, which create mental unity. (c) All that tends to disturb the physical or mental unity must the eliminated: the bearing of profane insignias must be prohibited; the presence of non-members or profane people must not be tolerated; and the participators must have been very carefully and severely selected, so as to admit only the candidates who have met with unanimous sympathy.

The relationship between the Initiator and the disciple:- (a) A great stress must be put upon the link that unites them: it is a true paternity, for there is gift of life upon the spiritual plane. Consequently, the initiator is a father, and the disciple is his child; between them there is a real family link which entails reciprocal duties.

1. The Initiator must give as much Light as possible, control the efficaciousness of his teachings, defend the disciple against errors, weaknesses, discouragement, and profane temptations or harmful influences.

2. The Initiate must respect his Master, and give him affection, confidence, faithfulness and support.

a. Is it possible for a Master to initiate several disciples? A Rose+Croix tradition requires at least one disciple for each Master, in this, moreover, resides the obligation to pass on the flambeau for the Master must not let his be extinguished, or choked under the ashes of neglect.

Another tradition (which is even exclusive with the Rose+Croix of Bohemia) dissuades from the abuse of initiation, and they say that it is better to form one sole good child, than to have a number of imperfect and badly conducted children. And truly, there can be improper paternities on the spiritual plane as there are in the profane world.

In conclusion, it is better to limit oneself to a selected and small number of disciples, but to follow them through the course of their lives so that they may truly continue their Master's work.

b. What does the proverb, "The initiate kills the initiator" mean? It has two principle meanings: (a) the bad disciple, who has been wrongfully chosen, takes off from his own Master his secrets, his teachings, his powers, then he employs them not only self-interestedly - which is self-ishness - but at times he does even return them against his benefactor - which is ingratitude. The proverb, therefore, means that the master must be most careful and must not give initiation to whosoever asks for it, because it is then giving real powers to imperfect beings who may misuse them and be unfaithful to their trust. Consequently there is a punishing reaction against the imprudent initiator and this reaction is a terrible sanction: the rebellion and treachery of his own children.

This reaction is explained by the principle of the echo or of the returning shock; in effect, the magical force radiated by the initiator upon an imperfect disciple (who is untransparent), instead of being absorbed, is reflected and comes back to strike the initiator. In virtue of the law of action and reaction, this returning shock is always noxious.

One must never forget that one is responsible for the seed one has sown.

c. The second meaning is this: The disciple must naturally succeed to his master, as the son succeeds his father in the natural order of things. The initiate prolongs the personality of his master and it is obvious that on the day when he has acquired the same dynamism and the same science, the flambeau will be transmitted, the initiatique chain will be assured, without the initiator being indispensable to the permanency of the link. He may therefore disappear, the same as the flower which has given the fruit and ensured the continuity of the species, may disappear.

d. May a power once given be annulled? No: the father always continues to be the father of a son who has become unworthy. The birth, be it physical or spiritual, is a fact that cannot be suppressed.

There is only one recourse, which, in case of treason, is to suspend, for the future, the power given unto the culprit; it is the "suspensio a Divinis" of the Church, thus cutting off the link that connects the unworthy disciple with Heaven.

Is this efficacious? It can be so under certain conditions which are: (a) to give notice thereof to the traitor; (b) to give notice thereof also to all members of the Order who shall be obliged to consider him as being dead; (c) to really demand to the Supreme Power to cut off the channel through which the spiritual force goes down. This formula, however, presents very grave dangers, for almost infallibly the excluded member will fall in the black current and use in a malefic way what remains of his power of initiate.

II. Three essential initiatique currents must be taken into account:

a. The Egyptian current, the most ancient, teaching the immortality of the Soul, the Post mortem psychostasia, and the astral evolution of the Double.

At the basis of this doctrine is the theory of the weight of our actions and the predominating feeling of the fear of the weighing. A proof of it is found in the embalming, as a means to avoid the astral storms, thus constraining the double to an almost eternal fixedness; through this method the Egyptians tried to retard the sufferings awaiting the double after it has left the physical body, or, at least to alleviate them by extending them upon an indefinite period of time; whilst, were it not so, the double would have to pass in a comparatively short time through what is called by Catholics as the Purgatory purification.

But the consequence of it is surprising, because reincarnation becomes impossible; the influx of souls into matter ceased, and it was degeneracy and death in Egypt.

In this we also find the image of the eternal cycle of the drop of water.

b. The Buddhist current, teaching the immortality of part of the Soul, the multiple and inelectable reincarnations, the final annihilation (Nirvana).

It is based upon the belief that our actions follow us and condition our future; the dominant feeling is the desire to liberate the spirit from matter, through disinterestedness of the material realities; it requires the spirit of sacrifice and austerity, and teaches the principle of charity (alms) and the respect of all that is living.

c. The Christian current, it teaches the immortality of the soul, a unique post mortem psychostasia, no reincarnation, but an immediate and definitive sanction.

The basis of this doctrine is also the weighing of our actions classified in two categories, as faults, or virtues.

The prevailing feeling in the Christian doctrine is LOVE, going as far as solidarity with the defunct ones, at least in what refers to Purgatory; from there the prayers for the dead and the celebration of masses to help them pass through the sufferings of Purgatory, and to advance their liberation.

d. The relation of the R + C with these three currents: The R+C traditionally teaches the immortality of the soul, the post mortem judgement of our actions, our destination to a blissful eternity, and the doctrine of reincarnation.

This last doctrine is derived from a kabbalist idea upon the concept of the origin of the soul, fallen from heaven into matter, and remembering its origin, (the body being only its prison) and tending to be reintegrated. As an addition to this, the R+C affirms that Christ is the Mediator, who works out this reintegration for the souls, with the help of the Holy Ghost (Logos).

The initiate must therefore prepare the reign of the Holy Ghost. At the very beginning of the R+C we find the "Templum Sancti Spiriti."

e. Relation of the other Orders with the three currents:-

HERMETIST ORDER: It is the Egyptian current, modified and amplified by Pythagoras who revealed the harmony of the world, or Harmony of the Spheres, and affirms the existence of the Islands of the Blissful.

A trusting serenity basing itself upon the ethical principles of Pythagoricism is its characteristic.

MARTINIST ORDER: It is the Christian current, modified and amplified under agnostic influence. It states the existence of mediators other than Christ, and who may be terrestrial beings (great initiates) or spiritual entities (angels).

Dissimilarity between Men and Women with regard to Initiation:- Throughout all eternity, man alone has had a right to priesthood, because he is polarized to be, naturally, the generator, the father, as well materially as spiritually; alone, therefore, he has the right and the power to initiate, that is to transfuse the spiritual life from the Celestial Power into the disciple's soul. He is the chosen intermediary to pass on the flambeau.

The part of the woman is that of the mother, collaborating in the spiritual action to which she brings the support of her radiation, through prayer; and also collaborating in nourishing the mind of the initiate through her teachings, in her lectures, works, or studies.

She may help to the revelation of the Spiritual Light, through her sensibility and her clairvoyance, as she has a greater predisposition to perceiving the spiritual currents; as examples we may cite the Pythia, the Sibyl, the Saints.

She may acquire such a really deep enough elevation so as to be capable of opening the spiritual path to other women in whom, acting with a strength and affinity of sentiment of which man is hardly capable, she will reach better the emotive centers, and will unlatch a more enthusiastic outburst.

The creation of religious orders by such mystics as Saint Theresa of Avila is an example of the above.

The same as the Church grants to women the right to baptize, the Order also admits her right to practice the rituals of the first degrees of Initiation, which are the entrance on the Path.

She can not, however, initiate a man, nor, in any case whatsoever, communicate the major Initiation, which constitutes the true sacerdotalism.

Dear Sâr Saccas,

Thank you for your nice letter. I am glad that you appreciate my exam submissions, but truly speaking, I am the one who should be humble and thankful. If my reports are good, then it is because I learn a lot from the Libers.

Now please find the final version of Lyons lecture no. 3, and the first version of no. 5 for your remarks and corrections. In no. 3 I have made a couple of quite lengthy footnotes. Please just cut them down to the essentials if you think they are too long or outside the subject. In no. 5 I was unable to read the words inside of the triangle in the first figure, the one in the marge of the first page of R A's handwritten text. I would very much like to have an enlarged copy of that figure, so that I may insert them in the translation.

I think we all have good reasons to be bambooseled when reading the Lyons lectures. They are far from obvious! As I told you initially, they are written very loosely, like as if just to form a basis for a more complete talk. It might become an enormous, perhaps impossible job, but in order to clear up the meanings, we should have to study these lectures in relation to Saint Martin's books, re-writing them entirely without paying attention to the form, focussing entirely on the possible meanings. Just see how he uses the word principle again and again with different meanings: beginning, origin, primary element, force, cause, fundamental..etc., obsolete meanings and peculiar meanings as well as the most current one, namely: principle! This is not the only word, so no wonder if confusion arises. In the translations I try to use the original words of Saint Martin, but every now and then I must be more precise. In these lectures almost nothing is entirely obvious, so I have to spend quite some time with both the english translation I receive from you and the french original trying to figure out what it's all about. Then I am happy to recognize the terminology from his books!

You may now send the english translations of no. 6, 7 and up, so that I can start working on them before my professional duties overcharges me completely - I fear already the end of this month. In short: It will take longer now to get the lectures through the process, but if you can keep the pace of one lecture every other Liber, I should be able to follow up. We are almost half way through now.

On my side of the pond, we are sweating through a real tropical summer. The months of May and June we have been baked under a burning sun with almost no rain at all. Over the year, temperatures vary from below -20°C (-5°F) in mid-winter to above 35°C (95°F) in the summer, so no wonder we must be Vikings to to live up here!

Light and Peace, Sincerely Yours in the Work,

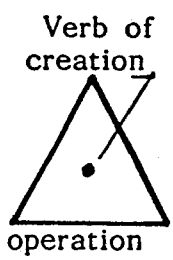
THIRD LESSON

On the modification of the essences and various properties of the triangle (R.A.)

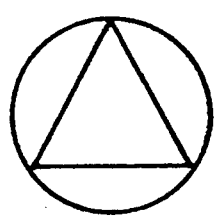
My Brethern,

In the preceeding discourses we have seen the indifference of matter residing in the philosophical matras. We are now going to continue with the different works of the spirits of the central fire-axis, who gave shape to this heap of shapeless spiritual essences.

To the Divine thinking imagination of the Eternal, having conceived to create this universe to become an asylum for the first perverted spirits, and to contain their evil operation so as never to prevail against His sacred laws, it appeared that the equilateral triangular form should be master(1) of the universe, or of man, and the body in general, or of the earth, and of the operation of all the immense bodies of the universe. Or, since no thought may remain in the Eternal without action, He issued His Verb of Creation(2) from His bosom, in the centre of the triangle, and made it descend to the spirits of the central fire-axis, in order that they could execute it in conformity with its purport. The following part of this discourse will show that the equilateral triangle contains not only all the numbers of the shape of the universe, but also all co-eternal numbers.



We announce that this figure, renowned by the ancients and considered with so much veneration, encloses great things. Actually, it is by way of the triangle that one mounts to all knowledge, whether divinely spiritual or temporally spiritual. This equilateral triangle contained, by its ternary verb, the law, the plan, and the operation of all the bodies of the universe. It was to the spirits of the central fire-axis, like the plan of a superb palace to masons, achieving it: having innate in themselves the suitable materials for its construction.



It is not surprising that they carried it out with such regularity, order and proportion, for the wisdom of the Father itself directed the execution of the plan and presided over the various necessary works and fixed the limits that each being should have. The aspect of the triangular figure inscribed in the circle, clearly gives us the idea of a ternary number by its three angles: gives us east at the inferior salient angle, the south at the second and the north at the third. These three angles gives us an idea about the division that the spirits of the axis have given to the matter of the universality of shapes, modifying the essences according to the triangular form, i.e. giving the east to the solid part, which we name mercury, the south to the fiery part or sulphur, and the north to the saline part or salt, or aquatic part. This is positively the distinction that gave shape to the whole universe. But in order to make it easier to grasp, I will use the more palpable image of the formation of a child in its mother's womb.

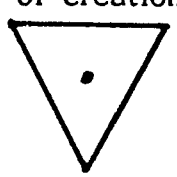
If we observe the reproductive seminal, not only that of man's body, but of the majority of animals, it represents matter in its state of indifference. One could not say that it indicates any modified mixture, for it has positively no shape; so also was the first essence that the spirits of the central axis extracted from out of their bosom. This seminal inserted into the womb, serving like an oven for cooking the embryo, is first of all worked upon by the spirits of the axis and the elementary spirits(3), which modify the mercury, forming a distinction. As soon as the distinction is made, the embryo takes shape; i.e. as soon as the essence of mercury, which gives shape to the osseous tissue, has been distinguished from the sulphurous part, forming the blood, and the saline part, making the flesh, from this point, the embryo has taken form. This takes about forty days. As all the sages of the universe know physically that the spiritual divine being descends into the body of the infant residing within the womb and floating in the fluid, covered by a veil or envelope, do not doubt, my brethren, that the work causing the formation of the child is truly the same as that which caused the creation of the universe. The spirits of the axis possessed, from their emanation, a spiritual essence which we may consider as the productive seminal of forms. In the same way that this seminal is operated in the womb, they operate it in the philosophical matras, which one may consider to be the womb of the universe.

But which was the plan observed by the spirits of the axis? This was, as I have already said, the equilateral triangle. (See fig). We give 1 to mercury in the east, forming the solid; 2 to sulphur in the south, forming the fiery; and 3 to salt in the north, or fluid. The unity is given to mercury for having been the first mixture; 2 to sulphur having been the second; and 3 to salt as it came third; which clearly gives us the factor 6, as the Scripture puts it emblematically, that God spent 6 days in the creation of the universe. Or, we know that God is an infinite being, almighty and unlimited. That which is without limits, cannot be subject to time. Thus the six days signify that God has made use of six thoughts in creating the universe, and the proof is palpable, for all bodies carry the image.

Which, then, is the plan that these same spirits follow forming the child's body? The image of the universe, which is nothing less than the repetition of the triangle. Man's body has the shape of a perfect equilateral triangle and contains in miniature, all that which the universe contains in its immensity, being the reason why the sages have named the human body the microcosmos, or the small world. Thus we see a perfect resemblance between the operation of the spirits of the axis during the formation of the universe and those they still work every day shaping the body of a child. In the one they followed the plan given by the Eternal, which is the equilateral triangle with the ternary verb of creation in its centre. The same spirits did, in the other, use the plan of this whole universe in order to shape the infant body. This I will show in detail in the following, demonstrating in the enumeration of all the parts of man's body, its likeness to those of the great world, or universe, which we distinguish in three parts; the universal knowledge, which is given to the circle of the central fire axis, the general, given to the earth, and the particular, given to all the divine spiritual beings and spiritual animals of the universe.

Ternary verb of creation



Thus, the different spirits of the axis executed the plan that the Eternal had manifested to them by His verb of creation in the centre of the equilateral triangle. In the first principle, the undifferentiated mixture of mercury was ternary, because unity, strictly speaking, is purely spiritual and could not belong to forms; but one considers the essences in the philosophical matras to be without movement, in respect to one another. The work of the spirits was to distinguish them, from where we see the birth of the different numbers of creation, 3 as to the three essences, 6 to the simple subdivision, as we have shown above, and 9 to the subdivision, since the three essences, being mixed, contains, however distinct, each a part of the others. Adding the three numbers: 3, 6, 9/18/9, they give 18, which added itself gives 9. Adding the 9 to the three angles of the equilateral triangle: 9 and 3 makes 12/3. Thus we may see that the plan that appeared in the imaginaton of the Eternal was ternary, because it was an equilateral triangle. Also, the spirits of the axis have operated the ternary number in creation, for all bodies in the universe, celestial as well as terrestrial, contain this number, after the four operations of production, division, subdivision and figuration(4); as one may observe in the whole of nature, for one sees but the earth given to solid mercury, fire given to sulphur and water given to salt. One must be wary not to make four principles, as have the men of darkness(5) during this century, who distinguished the airy part. There are positively only three principles. Air is only rarified water, and, if one would divide it, one would again find the ternary number: water, air and ether, which we name cristallin and the Holy Scripture calls the superior waters. The whole difference between these waters and that which surrounds the general body, or the earth, is that the more it descends, the more weight it gains, and one may verify this by /the difference of/ (6) the air we breathe in a lower part with in a higher part: the first is condensed, the other is rarefied, and that is due to the elevation. All the forms have taken their principles from these three essences, and it is by them that they are supplied during their period of production, of vegetation and of reintegration, that which makes the successive duration of the different bodies of the universe, which may not endure, and gives life, shape and expression as long as they are maintained by the mixture of their nature.

In the above I demonstrate physically that no divine spiritual being may have a divine spiritual life without being united with the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, for the most brute bodies of this universe, like the most ornate and the most perfect, have been created by the Eternal in order to be a palpable image of that which goes on in the divine spiritual part.

Thus, we see the similitude, that there is in fact ressemblance with the divine spiritual being: the one is eternal and the other is passive. Still, since the passive was created to serve as a prison to the minor eternal being(7), it contains in itself not only its particular existence, but it also serves as a book of law to the divine spiritual being. That's those famous tables that Moses carried in his two hands descending the mountain! The one, in his right hand, carried the law that the Eternal had etched into the minor divine spiritual being, and the one in his left hand carried the law which he had inborn into the form, in order to constitute it as a power during the time of its temporal course.

What is it all about, then, my brethren? Is it about making vast researces and spending one's life in meditation? Not at all. It is about following, each one of us, this ineffable law which God has engraved in each of us and which ceaselessly speaks to our selves. It is by listening to the voice of Him who ceaselessly presents it to us, that we manage to discover the things which have been hidden from us by the veil that we have let cover the tablets of the law, like Israel forced Moses to veil his face when reading the law to them, for their souls were not pure enough to support the fiery rays that emanated from the head of Moses. Or, all men have this veil as long as they do evil, and they tear it apart when doing good. He who has the less is the most perfect being. It is towards this divine light that all our research must tend, it is no more arduous than he who uses his will, works to succeed.

All these truths are demonstrated to us every day before our eyes by the different beings that surrounds us, and who are unsuccessful in every enterprise of whatever nature it is they, by constancy, should follow up. This constancy is issued from a great desire to possess that which one searches for. In this regard, I would cite the example of a man who had fallen into a very deep hole, and who found himself alone. In order to get up, he must take the necessary steps. If, when he is almost halfway up, he becomes impatient since he is not yet up, he runs the risk of falling down again, and if his impatience continues, he is running the great risk of spending his strength, which is necessary to get up, even with all human help.

We have seen how the triangle contains within itself the different dimensions of the apparent forms, and that it is through it, according to the law of the Eternal inserted in the centre of the said triangle, that the immensity of the spirits of the central fire-axis have operated all the forms of the universe. I will show in the following discourse how the explosion of forms contained in the philosophical matras took place. What is left for me now is to recommend myself to your prayers, and to pray myself that your assemblies becomes entirely regular and are followed without interruption. That is what I ask of the Eternal with all my soul, and that He remains with us always. Amen.

Amen. Amen. Amen.

NOTES:

(1) Master in the sense of being master-plan, basis, first structure.

(2) The Verb of Creation is the activating principle issued from God, causing the act of creation and being identical with it. As a word, uttering an idea or a concept, it causes vibrations in the atmosphere drawing up the shape of the idea, and as a Verb it designates the activity bringing it to realization. The Verb of Creation may be related to the Biblical I AM, where I relates to the self-cognisizing Divine Being, and AM, the verb, relates to the active expression of the will to be. Since God is eternal, He always speaks in the affirmative present, affirmation in the present being the key to all creation. Since God is all there is, the crated is the expression of His being. Thus the Verb of Creation is the immediate, everpresent and vibrating activity of Being, which man may experience only within time, as a continuous becoming.

(3) Louis Claude de Saint-Martin speaks of three different kinds of spirits; the fiery spirits of the central fire axis, the aquatic spirits of the crystalline or the waters, and the elemental spirits of matter or earth. These spirits works the modifications of sulphur, mercury and salt in the process of creation.
(4) Figuration = shaping, giving form to.
(5) Ignorance
(6) Words restituted by Robert Amadou.
(7) The minor eternal being or the minor is man, the human being.

Companions:

We have received numerous letters from brethren asking for information on the Gnostics. We are therefore including a paper on the topic.

000014

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION

The Essene - Gnostic "Chrestian Ekklesia"

Owing to the vast number of requests for us to explain what The Gnosis is and its background, we present the following information.

This paper on Gnosticism was prepared by the Disciplina Arcani and contains cogent and precious information. In presenting it however, we are obliged to say that while we are associated with the D. A., we are independent and do NOT necessarily accept every statement or concept put forward by them -- and having said that we are also obliged to say, as far as it goes, that we do not interpret or understand certain theological doctrines and concepts in the same way that the popular brand of everyday "christianity" does.

Perhaps the most important principle observed by our Church is that we are not dogmatic, we give each member the right to freedom of thought, we encourage brethren to meditate upon all information that comes their way and, moved by the Holy Spirit, to formulate their own understandings. It is in so doing, and sharing with each other, that we, (mankind), will evolve to a higher and clearer perception of Truth.

"STUDY PAPER - THE MEANING OF GNOSTICISM

"The Gnosis was the technical term used by the schools of Initiated Philosophers from the most archaic times of man's history and has also been called "The Science of the Soul".

"Gnosticism, or "The Science of the Soul" was the original source and beginnings of what is now known as "Christianity" but before we go any farther, let us pause and see whether we can dicover anything conclusive about the central figure of Christianity, namely: Jesus, for indeed there are many conflicting opinions.

"For example, one researcher claims that he can "prove", without a doubt, that Jesus was Onias the Just and gives data to support the evidence. Another claims he has "incontestable evidence" to "prove" that the Gospel Jesus was in fact Apollonius of Tyana. Then there is the 'Teacher of Righteousness' mentioned in the Qumrum Scrolls (the writings of the Essene Brotherhood) - and many people accept him as being Jesus.

"Another group says that Jesus is the Jeshu ben Pandira mentioned in the Talmud and that he actually lived and died exactly as the Old Testament predicted. On the other hand a certain Muslim sect claims that Jesus was revived by medicines after the Crucifixion, lived to a ripe old age and was buried in Srinagar -- they have his tomb!

"Then there is another who can "prove" that the name "Jesus Christ" is never mentioned by the Church Fathers but was the result of the agreement to join together the names of the Druid Sun God Hesus, or Yesu, with the Hindu saviour Christna at a council convened around the 4th cent. A.D...

"In the meanwhile the Israelis are claiming that recent archaeological discoveries reveal that many of the Christian sites such as the Via Dolorosa, the Tomb, etc.

were not, and could not have been, in existence during the supposed time of Jesus.

"And so the stories roll on -- to "prove" that he lived, to "prove" that he did not; to "prove" he was one person and to "prove" he was another; to "prove" that he was 'educated' here and to "prove" he was educated there, and so on and so forth and so on.

"These examples are only a few of the dozens of claims and stories that one can hear about Jesus and have been given to "prove" (!) that it is possible to "prove" almost anything and to bring us to this position:

"Whether Jesus was a historical figure or not, for Gnostics, Jesus is important as a symbolical figure and the crucial point to be made is: FROM THE GNOSTIC PERSPECTIVE, IT DOES NOT MATTER WHETHER JESUS WAS OR WAS NOT A HISTORICAL FIGURE BECAUSE THE VALUE OF TRUE CHRISTIANITY IS IN THE APPLICATION OF THE TEACHINGS. For example: Jesus is said to have been sorry for a number of people who were hungry and he took a few loaves and fish, blessed them, increased them, fed the numbers and even had some left over. Now, apart from being one of many stories about him, of what REAL VALUE IS IT? Absolutely none. Unless it is indicative of a spiritual principle which must have some useful lesson or practical application.

"Suffice to say, then, that most Gnostics considered that the stories about Jesus were Legends, -- the "Legend of the Hero-God Jesus", a "myth & drama" story which was intended to teach man the truth about himself, and which eventually became transformed into a history of a man called Jesus of Nazareth. These Gnostics followed the archaic pattern of all the pagan Schools of the Mysteries - and Gnosticism became a Mystery Religion at Alexandria and Rome.

"Primitive or Gnostic "Christianity", like all the Mysteries, had its own "mystery language", unknown save to those who were admitted to their Mysteries. This archaic method of language and procedure is carried on today in the Disciplina Arcani, being as we are, a Gnostic descendant.

"The Mysteries of all nations could be termed a Freemasonic Brotherhood of Adepts, irrespective of what Mystery School they belonged to. Thus, when the Brahma adherents of the AUM exchanged grips and passwords with the devotees of TUM of Egypt and the CHRISTOS of the Gnostics, there was mutual recognition. Therefore, the Adepts of all the Mysteries were simply "Brothers" who had pledged themselves to assist each other.

"The Mysteries, then, were in every country, and comprised a series of dramatic performances in which the mysteries of cosmogony and nature in general were personified by the priests and the neophytes. They enacted the parts of the various gods and goddesses, repeating supposed scenes and allegories from their respective lives. These were explained in their hidden meaning to the candidates for Initiation and incorporated into philosophical doctines.

"The term Initiation comes from the Latin Initiatus, which was the designation of anyone who was received into, and had revealed to him the mysteries and secrets of The Science of the Soul. In archaic times, candidates were initiated into the arcane knowledge taught by the Hierophants of the Mysteries; and in our modern days are initiated by the Adepts of mystic lore into the Mysterious Knowledge, which, not withstanding the lapse of ages, has yet a few real votaries on earth.

"Gnosticism had its own myths and rituals wherein were shown the whole of the cosmic drama of creation, the Fragmentation of the Hero-God, and the Fall of the Spirit-parts into matter; the crucifixion of the human Soul by the Rulers of the Elements of Nature, and its eventual return or re-union with the Divinity within each man. This essential drama was common to all religions and nations from archaic times. This means to say that even today, the Christian Church and its ceremonies, contain the drama intact, but the interpretation of this Drama has been deliberately falsified by the early 'Fathers of the Church' which is evidenced by their own writings.

"In the Gnostic Mysteries, the initiations or observances were kept secret from the profane or uninitiated. In these Mysteries were taught, by superb myths in a dramatic presentation, the origin of things; the nature of the Abstract Self, and its relationship to the Christos and the human soul - Jesus; the method of the purification of the human Soul through purification, then illumination and perfection, and its final restoration with the Immortal Spirit of Man.

"This process of the perfectioning of the Whole Man was accomplished in three main stages within the Mysteries in the same manner as it is done in the Disciplina Arcani today: (a) that of the Purification of the three-fold personality; when this had been achieved the human or irrational human Soul was lifted up into the Abstract Self, the individual then became an Illumined Soul. (b) At the stage of being illumined, the purified individual was able to commune with his own Divinity, who then grants him full consciousness of his own Divine Nature and the manifestation of Divine Powers and Character.

"The final stage of the Gnostic Mysteries was when the individual became overshadowed by his immortal Spirit. He had then finished his mortal journey through the shadow of the valley of human existence. The man who had attained this stage became a Theodidaktos, or one who was God-taught, the human Soul was freed from the constraint of the tomb of flesh and dwelt within the Divine Soul, whilst at the same time dwelling on earth. The man then lives for all time within the Kingdom of Heaven, he also becomes a partaker of the two regions - heaven and hell - simultaneously.

"As with all the Archaic Mysteries, the Gnostics had signs, grips and passwords which were the instruments of power to control the elemental forces within the various regions of force-matter, and with the correct utterance the pupil was able to command the gods or Rulers of the Spheres to obey him and by them could be carried from one order of abstract being to another still higher until he became one with his Immortal Monad.

"The central theme of Gnosticism, like all the Archaic Mysteries, lies in the mystic God being fragmented and slain by the rulers of this world, meaning that the Soul of man is all Intelligence, a portion of the Divinity; the Soul is then a Ray of the Monad and it was plunged into the abyss of matter to descend into Hades or earthly conditions and there to fall asleep within the soma - a sepulchre. This is referred to as the god being slain and the process of concealing the Divine and then the finding of the slain or sleeping god. In effect the god or soul has a luminous vesture, star-like, sun-like, the immortal, which luciform vesture is shut up or buried in the terrestrial body of flesh, as light is in a dark lantern.

"In order to keep before the Initiate the nature of his Real Self, the ritual was designed in such a way as to enable the neophyte to be entombed, then symbolically spiritualized or exalted out of the tomb. By this means the knowledge is enacted of the descent of all souls from the Abstract World into the earthly prison-house of the body-tomb.

"This allows the Soul to develop the power of reminiscence, which is that faculty of knowledge above and independent of sensory perception which the Soul brings from its Monad or heavenly source. This source, however, is never really obscured and when the faculties of the Soul are stimulated by the discipline of the body, the Soul then has all that is necessary to become a God-Man. The Mysteries were designed to stimulate the divinely illuminated eye of the Soul, and the awakening of the consciousness of its Divine Image which is implanted within the nature of the human Soul.

"In these Mysteries the people had for many ages bewailed the loss of their Divine awareness, and after the discipline, man is restored to full conscious awareness of his Divine Nature and life. In Minos, the legend of the Minotaur symbolized the youth of sacrifice, who personated the god when he is made to enter the Labyrinth and to do battle with the Minotaur (his images of images in the dungeon of the subconscious). If he failed, then the god of that world devoured him, but if he knew the Thread of Life which linked him with the Soul, he slew the animal self and escaped back to his original abode.

"The tools or instruments which enabled the slain god to escape the world of Hades or the tomb or matter, which were given to him, are the five disciplines, namely: Arithmetic, Geometry, Stereometry, Music and Astronomy; these are in truth the five ways of knowing and when the philosophical, logical, political and physical sciences were blended with the above they are similar to Initiation. This means that knowledge in the Gnostic was more than faith; faith is merely a summary of simple or urgent truths, but knowledge is scientific truth. Therefore, the public teachings have two meanings, not only that which is apparent to the naked eye, but there is also another which can and does escape the notice of most men.

"In the system of the Gnosis in the D.A., we maintain that Jesus was the slain god - representative of the Soul imprisoned within matter - we also know that the death of our Christos could not be localized in time or place, but within our own hearts. The death of our god was brought about by the rulers of the regions, symbolical of our own unredeemed animal passions, it was the work of Christ or Divine Soul to redeem the human Souls within each of HIM, and by doing so we became a sharer in His Life. We claim that it was the Logos-Spirit of Man who fell to earth, was slain or fragmented by the rulers and buried in a tomb of flesh, burried as a mummy in the darkness and misery of the valley of living death, until the Soul or Sophia descended to rescue us, but she, the Soul, also became subject to the Rulers and it was not until Christos descended and broke the power of the Rulers that the human and Sophia could escape the chains of matter.

"Valentinius could not accept the claims of the Jewish so-called Gnostics that a belief in man-made dogmas is essential for the salvation of the Soul, nor that this could be brought about by the physical death of a man in time, such an idea rebelled against the Justice of the Logos. He knew by personal mystic experience that the only way of salvation for men was through the reunion of the Jesus-Soul with the Christ-Soul which was the Legatus or Mediator between the Logos and Man. All Gnostics, who became expounders of the Gnosis, were illumined men, that is to say, they were taught by the Divine Soul and not by man, just as St. Paul says that he received his doctrine "not by man or a man, but by the Christos within his own Soul".

"They understood the known Scriptures which were circulating at that time, not as historical narrative, but as being the presentation of the Drama of the Fall of the Divine Man into matter and his eventual salvation and ascension to his original Pleromic Home. Each one of them understood this central theme according to their own nature and experience, hence the apparently conflicting versions of the Gnosis which have come down to us today.

"In formulating their doctrines which were to become known in later centuries as Gnosticism, they drew very heavily upon the already existing Mystery Religions which were still extant in their time, each one concentrating upon certain aspects, and those who came after them began to blend them together into a single system. Basilides drew upon the Hindu, Buddhist and Chaldean Mysteries for his terminology, whereas Valentinius used the fundamentals of Greece and Egypt for his system.

"Marcion based his teachings upon the ancient Kabalah and that of Paul, whom he claimed to be the first Christian Gnostic. He also drew upon the Mysteries of Mithra and the Roman Pantheon of Gods. Marcus used the geometrical and algebraic systems of Pythagoras and Plato. It will be seen that from all these systems sprung the main systems of the Western Gnosis which were perpetuated in the secret Brotherhoods of Europe to become a part, today, of the Disciplina Arcani. Those of our members who are Freemasons will see that much of what we have given is to be found within the framework of their first three steps or degrees. Those who have passed through the higher grades of Masonry will also see this system being worked out in full.

"Perhaps the main section of the Adept Tradition is to be found in the Rosae Crucis, where one will find the purest Gnosticism still being enacted. Here we are not referring to the self-styled "Rosicrucians" as they have very little of the Gnosis within their rituals and teachings.

"It has been amply shown by the extant manuscripts that it was after the Church Council of Nicaea, in 325 A.D., that the present Christian doctrines of salvation were formulated by the ignorant prelates in their attempt to explain man's "redemption" from what they were pleased to call sin, hell, etc.. The orthodox Church has claimed without any real authority that all other interpretations of the "Mysteries of Jesus" other than their own -- are "heretical" -- in spite of the findings of reputable scholars that there is nothing in the present Christian religion which was not taught by the older and more scientific pagan Mystery Religions many thousands of years before A.D.. The cross, the monastic systems, the priestly tonsure, confession, the sacrifice of the bread & wine, etc, -- all these and others, excepting, of course, the doctrines of hell, satan, and eternal damnation, are all to be found within our Gnostic systems of the Redemption of Man.

"The Gnostic Mysteries are the true religion which is the instinctive recognition by man that he possesses a spiritual nature, and the effort he makes to realise that nature; in fact, we can proclaim with absolute truth, that in the main, the so-called occult systems of today are simply a distorted interpretation of the Gnosis. In spite of all the deliberate and false interpretations to be found within the catholic Church, both East and West, this is the only Church to retain the outlines of the Gnostic myth in its entirety. It only needs the wording to be restored to its original and you would have there pure Gnosticism as was taught and practised in the 2nd Century, A.D..

"One of the early Fathers expressed the Gnosis in these words: "The Logos of God became man that from man you might learn how man may become God". Therefore, this Wisdom or Mystery concerns the Gnosis of God and the Soul, that teaching underlying all religions and philosophies and which were not usually expressed in writing, but in dramatic presentation and passed on from generation to generation verbally and under oath.

"In this presentation we have tried to show what the central doctrine of the Gnosis was and how it was taught to candidates for Initiation. In order to understand this drama more fully, we must understand that this drama concerns ONE person - YOU. On this journey down into matter the Divine YOU assumes and portrays the necessary moves as an actor portrays a role on the stage. In the Roman and Greek Theatre, an actor assumed many parts and when he wished to do this he placed over his face a mask or PERSONA of the character he wished to portray -- the actor still remaining the same person notwithstanding the many changes.

"So the main actor in this Drama is YOU as a Divine God, nay, even God is YOU, so that every step or act of this Drama that the Divine acts, every move from the beginning the the end of the Drama, there are hundreds of scenes and many characters introduced - - but each one of the characters played by the Hierophany, Officials, Attendants and the Candidate himself, he is in reality enacting the life-story of HIMSELF. For instance: the Logos enters the field of matter, he assumes the mask of the three-faced God - the Trinitarian nature of Himself, and then he discards two of the faces, showing himself as the third face and performing certain actions which will describe the actions of this aspect. In the following scene he will show himself as a female - Sophia Achamoth, the Virgin Mother of the World who gives birth to her only daughter Sophia - so the one actor will attempt to portray many such moves under various guises. As each part of the drama is played out, the actor is reliving his own eternal story.

"Therefore, for the want of a better word, we say God descends through the various regions of matter, assuming and identifying Himself with the various conditions. These regions are shown as acts in the drama, in each act the participants try to dramatise the events which will take place on that region.

"Keep this in mind always when dealing with the Archaic Mysteries and the Gnosis, we are not dealing with Religion as such, but we are dealing with the life of mankind -- from the Godhead to Matter -- and from matter back to the Godhead. Those who have a "thing" about religion should now have a good "think" about their wrong interpretation of what Religion really is."

L I B E R 40

Dear Companions:

I had begun to put this Liber together -- choosing particular lectures -- when I suddenly realized it was Liber 40. Liber 40! And I remember doing the very first one not so long ago! The days that have passed since then have been very special ones for us. When we first began we had no idea just where the path would lead or how appreciated our efforts would be -- however, as the time has passed, the fact that we seldom record any "drop outs" from brethren who step on to Plane III provides us with that answer.

As you know, we are not the authors of all the material we dispense, in fact we are the authors of very little of it. Almost all the lectures we distribute have been entrusted to us from certain traditional brotherhoods and our job is simply to try to arrange it in as interesting and beneficial a way as we can -- and make it available to those who are seeking the Light.

It is most gratifying to us that our efforts are being well received and we thank everyone who makes this Work possible.

So here we are at Liber 40! Forty is something of a special number is'nt it? It seems to indicate maturity and the completion of a test, or a phase of activity, as is noticed in the Bible where many situations came to a conclusion after 40 days or 40 years.

We thought we would mark this occasion then, with something "special", and it is our very great pleasure to share with you a lecture that was given to the Alchemical Society in England in 1913 by Mme. Isabelle de Steiger and a related item from the F.R.C.. We have opted to present them in their original form and trust Companions will find this acceptable.

Brethren, please accept my salutations. I pray that both your outer understanding and interior development will continue to grow and we thank you for the opportunity to be of service.

On behalf of all of us here at Headquarters.

Sincerely in the Work

THE JOURNAL OF THE ALCHEMICAL SOCIETY

EDITED BY H. STANLEY REDGROVE, B.Sc. (LOND.), F.C.S.

VOL. II. PART 7. NOVEMBER, 1913.

REPORT OF SEVENTH GENERAL MEETING.

THE seventh General Meeting of THE ALCHEMICAL SOCIETY was held at 8.15 p.m., on Friday, November 14th., at The International Club, Regent Street, S.W. The chair was occupied by the Acting President, Mr. H. Stanley Redgrove, B.Sc., F.C.S.

A paper was read by Mme. Isabelle de Steiger on "The Hermetic Mystery," which was followed by a discussion. (The paper and an abstract of the discussion are printed in the present number of the JOURNAL).

A vote of thanks was passed to Mme. I. de Steiger for her paper.

The Honorary Secretary announced the names of new members.

THE HERMETIC MYSTERY.

By ISABELLE DE STEIGER.

IN this paper I shall endeavour to give you, as far as I can, some idea of what is meant, or what I mean, by the title—"The Hermetic Mystery." This word "Mystery" does not imply quite the same as "Doctrine," but practically, as you will see, the one is included within the other.

The Hermetic Mystery refers to the Art of Alchemy, "The Royal Art," as this science is described.

The Hermetic Doctrine implies those connate philosophical and religious concepts, required to be held and put into practice by alchemists.

Broadly speaking, I may say I consider it is that primitive heavenly doctrine underlying all formulated religions; but as Alchemy comes more directly through Christian sources, I use the word "Christian" as more especially explanatory of the religious views of Western alchemists.

In these days of the great expansion of knowledge concerning comparative religions, it will not be necessary to enquire as to the relation between the religion of the Western alchemists and of their Eastern brother-artists.

Please note the use of the word "artist." We say that the poet, artist, and doctor, are born, not made. The same assertion is true of the alchemist. And I would like here explicitly to remark that I find that Professor Bergson's idea of intuitive intelligence exactly covers much of the meaning of the alchemists as to mental requisites, such as intuition or understanding to grasp the situation, intelligence plus instinct to make and use the tools required for the work, that being for the purpose of creating, as an artist creates, an already conceived idea, which idea can only be manifested to other eyes by means of the tools he uses in order to demonstrate it. Here, a very strange thing may be noted with regard to tools, for in the case of Alchemy, the first tools that man could ever, and must for ever use, were and are his hands. "Thine own right hand can save thee," we read in The Book of Job (Ch. xl, v. 14).

I will begin with the first of my affirmations, which is, that in the Hermetic Mystery, lies the Art of Alchemy, and proceed to say that the subject on which this Art was practised was Nature: not nature in general, but nature in particular, in a word, on nothing else than man himself. It was understood by the Sages that man was "demonstrated to be a compendium of the whole created nature (Kabalistically called a microcosm) and was generated to become wise, and have dominion over the whole of things, having within him, besides those faculties, which he exerts ordinarily—the germ of a higher faculty or wisdom, which, when revealed and set alone, all the forms of things and hidden springs of nature became intuitively known and are implied essentially." [A Suggestive Enquiry into the Hermetic Mystery and Alchemy, 1850, p. 155.] Man, therefore, is the subject of the Hermetic Mystery, and the Royal Art is that Art which reveals and "sets alone" the germ of Universal Wisdom. This germ is called the Pearl of Great Price.

The work on Superhumanity, which I am bringing out as a serial in The Path, deals with the duality (inevitably pre-existent in the first move from homogeneity) subsisting in man from birth, inasmuch as he has a germ of death (the gluten of Eckartshausen), as well as the germ of life, in his heart, that is in his blood. The germ of death has to be eradicated in its special organ, the body, which is the task for present day medical art, since this works from secondary causes; but the art of revealing and bringing to the light of day the Pearl of Great Price, is the Hermetic Art.

My second affirmation is that the first matter from and out of which the Philosopher's Stone is differentiated is truly the Cosmic Ether. No doubt you will say that that term is too general or vague. What, I shall be asked, do I mean by "Ether" or by "first matter"? By "ether," the alchemists meant a certain matter; they called it "a substance," as opposed to any notion of mere existence derivable from some prior cause; "Substance" to them implying causation and potency; "matter" or "existence" signifying effect, dependent on prior cause. They considered ether to be that prima materia out of which all things, man himself included, was made, signifying thereby the "nothing" that Theology calls the "dust of the Earth." This is the "First Matter" containing all existent matter. Thus "the dust of the Earth" meant to the alchemists undifferentiated Cosmic Ether, holding potentially all forms, shapes, destinies, varieties of all things and in all kingdoms.

The ancient and mediæval alchemists held that the elements, fire, earth, water, were but constituents of the Ether, not one being simple, i.e., consisting of only one element, but partaking of each other; and when they meant to speak particularly of a quality of the Ether, they described it indifferently as fire, dryness, heat, light, etc. By "air" they never meant only the immediate atmosphere, which we inhale. They said also that no one quality was unmixed. Consequently they used the terms with confusing, apparent indifference, but if one reads into their descriptions the words "Cosmic Ether," to mean the One Thing, when they described a dozen, the clue to the labyrinth gets firmer in one's hand.

"Universal Spirit" is also a term representative of the Alchemical Essence. It is mentioned by Mr. Pattison Muir, in his The Story of Alchemy and the Beginnings of Chemistry (1902). Sendivogius is certainly not referring to water, or at least to our water, when he speaks of the "solvent of the world," but is describing the Cosmic Ether. He says, writing as an alchemist:—It "is the solvent of the world, and exists in three degrees of excellence: the pure, the purer and the purest. Of its purest substance the heavens were created; of that which is less pure the atmospheric air was formed; that which is simply pure remains in its proper sphere, where, by the Will of God, and the co-operation of Nature, it is guardian of all subtle substances here below." [The New Chemical Light, see The Hermetic Museum, ed. by A. E. Waite, (1893), vol. II., p. 133.] The simply pure Ether is referred by the alchemists to all earthly things. The word "substance," as I have indicated, is used by them to imply reality, causality, permanence, self-motion, immortality, etc. A substance to them was not described by weight, immobility, solidity, ponderability or any of the usual qualities, which we now regard as attributes of substance. The true substance, they taught, energizes behind, beyond, yet also within, all existence. The "First Matter," to them, was purest substance, emanating with vibrational energy, in inexhaustible supply and source, from the great Universal Life. This "First Matter" is that which informs and pervades all things here below, enduing man himself and all nature with life.

The Universal Life has God for its Source; it is, indeed, none other than His Breath. The Vedanta and the Bible both tell us the world and ourselves live and breathe by, in and through God. This Universal Life has for its conducting channel and medium, the Cosmic Ether. Its divine condition is however such that unless adulterated with less pure Ether man, since his fall, could not live in it, for the purest Ether can kill, as well as cause life. We have its analogy in the phenomena of radioactivity. The Greek name for the purest Ether is Eleuthera.

The purer Ether, which is called the "Free," "Sidereal" or "Astral Ether," gives life in another degree to our Souls, and according as it energizes in each of us do we all differ temperamentally from one another.

Now I come to the third and lowest, or merely pure, Ether, which is our Cosmic Ether, in which we directly live and breathe. This is not free; it is bound and attainable, from and out of which are extracted those qualities of Ether known to us as magnetism, electricity, radioactivity, etc.

The ground of the alchemists was this, that man being body, soul and spirit, he must hold within himself the three degrees of Ether or Universal Life. They believed that man was meant to be an immortal, perfect being, that he was so once, but that owing to circumstances, which in western Theology we briefly term the Fall, the Eleuthera or source of immortality and life itself, is no longer paramount in man, on the contrary, being latent, dormant, and though inextinguishable, it is, as far as man can benefit by it, so latent that it is as useless to him as is the outer shell of the oyster to the pearl seeker.

They said that within man lies life and immortality, and yet man as he is, is described by them also as a mere elemental, weak creature subject physically as much now as ever, to the power of the elements, also to evil, death and corruption. They called him a fragile, porous, impermanent being, but they maintained that God did not create such condition, and that it is man's ignorance that keeps him in slavery to his outer and unreal self.

Now, some men greatly daring, but in true humility, found a method by which they could recover the buried treasure, and once more breathe directly and not indirectly from God. This Great Art of Recovery, the refinding of the lost Jewel, the true Life of man, is the Art of Alchemy, —the search after the jewel or the method to perfect nature.

Now I must attempt to say in what that Art consists. We have seen that the alchemists affirmed that man was once illuminated with all Wisdom, and that he was once immortal. They knew that no corruptible elements could be immortal. I refer especially here to the writings of three of my favourite authors:—The New Pearl of Great Price, The New Light of Alchemy, and those of "Eugenius Philalethes."

The alchemists knew that gold was the visible thing that was incorruptible. They had therefore to discover what there was in man that was analogous to gold, and this they affirmed, was the immortal part of him, which they decided was not his soul, for that, though capable of survival, was subject to change. They also concluded that it was certainly not in the physical life of man; but that in the Eleuthera or purest Ether alone could immortality be found, and that Eleuthera subsisted in man.

We do not know the various stages of thought through which the knowledge of this discovery passed. My own idea is it never did pass through the crucible of a man's ordinary brain at all. I firmly believe it came originally, as does all supra-knowledge, by inspiration through man in trance, and is the utterance of his inner, perfected sensorium. This, when the Trance is a true one, is the only direct source of Divine inspiration.

The alchemists concluded that this incorruptible matter must be the One Thing, and they finally described it as a Stone, probably merely to abbreviate the description of the qualities which they could at once assign thereto; but it was named the Philosopher's Stone, as it could be no stone to any but a philosopher's mind. To the ordinary mind, it could be described in a thousand ways as it was no known thing at all.

The language concerning this matter has been described as "jargon." Jargon it was not, but a cryptographic method of description, because no one term describing the First Matter was convenient to use; but doubtless there was much tiresome play of words sometimes, or what seems so, incidental to many causes.

That chemistry, a science which seems to have existed for ages in the East, furnished the terms in which the alchemical introspection into nature was conducted, we all know. It seems highly probable to me that the philosophic student of those days had little else but chemical and medical knowledge on which to set up as a learned man, and he would naturally use terms which were familiar to the science of the day. Probably all the alchemists being born "searchers into nature" had more than the usual amount of chemical knowledge.

Now there was from ancient days a philosophic theory that the centre of each man is asleep, that is enchanted and awaits divine or magnetic fire to awaken him. The story of the Sleeping Beauty and many others of the beautiful old stories of classic and mediæval days are founded on this theory. The Art of Alchemy was neither more nor less than that of awakening the "Enchanted Centre" by its redemption from its prison since the Fall. The fairy tales concerning magicians and beautiful princes are only stolen or betrayed records of wondrous events taking place, not in enchanted or moated castles, Saracenic, Moorish, Gaulish or British, but in quiet silent rooms, probably the library or laboratory of the alchemist, according as his studies or temperament led him to literature or chemistry.

The Royal Art was, then, that of extracting from a human centre that immortal essence, and the method of doing so, was the spagyric or magnetic one, by the action of mesmeric traction.

You will at once say, This is mere speculation, you can give us no proof, neither do you yourself, perhaps, know of it otherwise than as a theory. I reply, Yes and no. Certainly the alchemists all agree in telling us that it is necessary for a philosopher to make good his theory before he proceeds to the praxis. Well, I submit, I can give you no proof, but if you could enter into the theory, I think you would find it could be proven. At all events, though I only speak now as if it were but theory, yet you will see as I proceed, that there are facts which you may not yet suspect, redeeming my theory from its present transcendental position, which position may not, until you have thoroughly digested the theory, appear adequate.

The art of mesmerism, which we now despise or ignore, except as a by-play of science, or misuse alas, was once the sublime secret of the master-men of each century, which they were enjoined to keep inviolate, because it was found that qualities and conditions between souls were interchangeable, and many mysterious and extraordinary results took place, that made it a necessity that a Magus or a Sage should be what was termed a Holy man, i.e., one who held the secret of the Philosopher's Stone in all its conditions, and also that none but a man of proved spiritual state should be Priest or occupy the functions of the Master of Ceremonies: those of a lesser degree of purity of thought and aim being assistants only. This was the original condition, and the priests in olden days were no doubt men of the highest type. But there were lapses, and here and there the magical secret would leak out and be used for other than the true end. Finally, the knowledge of only a small portion of the true method remained, and that almost died away, but not altogether, for such a wonderful secret for humanity could not be utterly lost, and it was preserved as of the utmost importance in "The Mysteries," and afterwards in the Secret Orders.

It was always the same teaching—that that counsel which emanated from the holy trance utterance should alone be considered divine. I feel convinced that this key of knowledge was the one used by the alchemists. They were, so to speak, free-lances, but, being men of ardour and vigour, they by degrees formed a sort of non-cohesive order of solitary searchers. These men, with others who really might have belonged to existing secret orders, constituted a sort of understood hidden society not requiring any ordained hierarchy, and a cryptographic correspondence would necessarily ensue. 40

As time went on, and as what may be called the magical power of the orthodox priesthood died out, the sporadic growth of alchemists still continued, and such men certainly were viewed with anger by the orthodox priesthood and those who considered mesmerism as truly the gift of God; but the alchemical secret is just what makes the Royal Art quite different from that mesmerism which is generally known.

It is clear that Mesmer was not the first to discover the art called by his name, but in his case betrayed the secret. However, the amount of mesmerism he knew and divulged was, perhaps, no more than that which had survived and was practised by the hierarchs, who, under all their different names, headed the Secret Orders in later times. This special secret method is one which though I do surmise, I must do as I was told, keep invisolately until someone else discovers it. It may be plainly inferred in its entirety from what is said in A Suggestive Enquiry into the Hermetic Mystery and Alchemy, a new edition of which is forthcoming. I do not want to state what I have just said with the pretension of making myself the custodian of any great secret; but because it is a certain something in the method of applying the art of mesmerism which can only be declared, so to speak, in the alchemical work itself.

I need not tell you that mesmerism is the key to magic, known to every race and time. It has been reserved for this period since Mesmer utterly to misunderstand, misapply and underestimate this extraordinary faculty, which, with respect to derivation, at least, may be called the gift of God. But modern hypnotism and its correlatives are truly as devilish and harmful to agent and patient as pure mesmerism is heavenly and beneficial. Now the aim of the alchemists was to discover and bring to light the immortal part of man, because if once this marvellous matter could be seen or handled, it would pari-passu be no longer dormant, but most truly living. They also knew that there could be no vessel that could hold life. Life is not constituted as a grain or as an atom that could be extracted or drawn forth, exhibited to show its power in giving life.* They knew all this, yet they proceeded to the work; and I certainly think that there have been cases when "life" of this kind has been surely brought to the light of day, for the true alchemists were no liars.

Now, one of the many maxims of the alchemists is that which exhorts the seeker to dissolve the fixed, and fix the solved. What did they consider as fixed? According to the eye-sight of man, his physical body is "fixed." To the modern scientific eye, certainly not, but the alchemist held a theory which differed from the common idea, that the body tightly encases the soul, and the soul tightly encases the spirit. The first work, then, was to unfix the body. This was the "first gate." According to the old view of man he contains as minutem mundem, in his three principles, as their vehicles, all the constituents of the kingdom of nature. Man, having been thus completed, combining all elements in his humanity, was Hermetically "sealed" by the fiat of the Almighty. The next step was for man to become super-man by permission of the Almighty, through His appointed messengers, who had the requisite knowledge to unseal the Hermetic signature. Man is always seeking for entrance into the higher order, for the Kingdom of Heaven can be taken unlawfully, or lawfully. The "Royal Work" of unsealing is true Alchemy; whilst true religion is another method suitable to the mass of men. The end of both is the same. Ignorant mesmerism is violence without the Kingdom of Heaven or treasure being found.

The first work, then, is to undo the Hermetic Signature and separate the "principles." You will find allusion after allusion to this process in the writings of the alchemists, but by mistranslating the words you may understand them differently and find nothing. The magnetic fluid and the linear acion* have the extraordinary effect of de-polarization, and every one knows how a human being when mesmerized can appear pro tem to be dead. However, I do not intend to deal with this process in detail. Suffice it to say, that all the descriptions of "Diana's doves," "flying eagles," "gates of brass," various colours and so forth, refer symbolically to the apparitions beheld in the astral realm by the emancipated soul. May I also say that the alchemist should be no common mesmerist, but have a clairvoyant and hierophantic vision within agent and patient? Those of you who have investigated such matters must have known or heard of those extraordinary events which are said to happen in the spiritistic séance-room where there is no hierarch (that is, a clairvoyant alchemist) present, and may have given a general acceptance to the term "externalized soul," as applied to mysterious appearances similar to those known as John King, Katie Cook, Samuel Wheeler, and such like, though no one has conclusively settled what these appearances really are, or of what quality of matter they are composed. I suggest, in these and similar cases, that they are not as spiritists contend, distinct personalities, and, certainly, they are not the ecstatic and whole soul of the sleeper; but might they not be disordered compositions of free ether, adulterated with astral matter, exuding from the bound Ether composing the body, through a certain unhallowed lesion of the nervous system; the result of the mesmeric traction of a strong discarnate spirit; or, of a natural lesion of the medium, operative at special times? It is, I think, in consequence of this chronic condition that this ever-gaping aperture permits the ingress and egress of free Ether in an unlawful and disorderly way, causing that too easy rapport between the universal and the physical, productive of what is known as mediumship.

I use the words "unlawful and disorderly" because, according to the Hermetic Teaching, there should be no such aperture.

The allusion to Christ knocking at the door has mystic reference to what should be really not an aperture, but a closed door to all but The Honoured Visitor. The "Closed Palace of the King" is not a mere poetical title. Plato speaks of "the odyllic wound," and he refers darkly to the possibility of its being healed. There is a passage in Sendivogius which is very pertinent to this, but as I have said so much on this subject in my book, On a Gold Basis, I shall not make any quotation here. You will perceive, however, that for any agent to inflict the wound, and force the unlawful egress of the partial, unprepared, startled soul into the atmospheric condition, is the crime which may be perhaps the one that is not forgivable in this world, or the next, because the consequences are beyond that agent's power of healing. Who can pardon the robber? "Break not the Superficies," says the old classical, Hermetic maxim, "or the Sin of the Patient may be referred or multiplied in the Agent." Was it not the hand of an inquisitorial, rather than that of an instructed Master which tormented the unhappy soul of the poor French girl, who had to bear the internal laceration, and in reply to her vivisector said she was Leonie I. Leonie II. etc.? She would have replied in any way that her dissected soul perceived to be according to the questioner's desire. There could be no truth or revelation, neither unhappily, any due restoration to its lawful place for that hapless creature's "Piece of Silver," ten of which she had owned, one of which was dragged out of her. It was the duty of a true master, not further to have dissolved her soul, but to have fixed the solution. When, so to speak, the operation was over, did the unqualified hierophant know where and how to replace and to fix the disintegrated atom of "First Matter"? That deeply important action, in which one human being "entrusts his soul to another," is lightly dismissed from the curriculum of present day study as one of no material value, whereas it is the opening of the first gate by the magical lance with the knowledge of "pyrotechnic artifice." I might read you pages proving this from The Suggestive Enquiry and elsewhere, where those romantic sounding words sometimes seem to lead you up to some conceivable chemical experiment, and then lo! the usual baffling jargon commences. But with the key, the apparent jargon can be turned into readable sense. However, let us now having the first key, Mesmerism, proceed to unlock further mysteries. It is conceded that there has appeared at spiritistic séances extraordinary aparitions, seemingly of human beings—a sort of strange simulacra, however, in most cases, though one has heard of beauteous appearances Often there is a sort of a cloud-like vapour exuding from the side of the entranced sufferer, for the medium must be and is truly a sufferer and victim, for the operator is as unprepared as his patient. Listen to these words of "Eugenius Philaiethes,"—

"It was scarce day, when all alone
I saw Hyanthe and her throne.
In fresh, green damasks she was drest,
And o'er a sapphire globe did rest, . . .
And underneath her hand was spread
The white supporter of her head.
But at my second studied view,
I could perceive a silent dew
Steal down her cheeks: lest it should stayne
Those cheeks where only smiles should reign.
The tears streamed down for haste, and all
In chaines of liquid pearle did fall . . .
So dy'd Hyanthe. Here (said shee)
Let not this vial part from thee.
It holds my heart, though now 'tis spilled
And into waters all distill'd."

[Cœlum Terræ. See Mr. Waite's edition of The Magical Writings of Thomas Vaughan, 1888, pp. 131 and 132.]

"For," says The Suggestive Enquiry (p. 349) "not all was vaporous vision as we have shown, or mere idealilty on the internal ground; but experience there was present, with power and effect in substance to bear its witness. This marvellous subsistence of the Vital Principles in their extreme separation by Art, requires care and attention to apply the three-fold secret of the Art, so that the hypostatic principles of attraction, repulsion and circulation, may be brought into perfect equilibriate accord, the one no more acting, than the other is resisting in the Ethereal Bond." "Seek three in one, and again one in three, dissolve, congeal, and remember," says Khunrath, "most carefully to observe the three-fold law of the composition. I write not fables, with thy hand thou shalt touch and with thy eyes, thou shalt see Azoth, the Universal, which alone with the internal and external fire in harmonious sympathy with the Olympic Fire is sufficient for thee, by inevitable necessity physico-chemically united, for the consummation of the Philosopher's Stone," [quoted in The Suggestive Enquiry, p. 352, from Khunrath's Amphetheatrum Sapientiæ Æternæ, etc., Ch. viii.]

I must now direct your attention to a remarkable classical curiosity, namely the "Tear Bottle." No one quite knows what these bottles were, neither is the origin known of the strange title to an Italian wine called Lachrymæ Christi. This name has but correspondential value, but the tear-bottles have reference to some strange ceremonies long ago lost and forgotten. Nevertheless, if any one will reflect what sort of tears are shed, when the soul is in deep grief and contrition, it will be concluded, I think, that they are a physical effect caused by the attrition and solution of that soul, altogether different from the usual eye secretion. For tears of pure sorrow are derivable from feeling and emotion only, not from any outside effect or any matter put into the body, neither have they any further purpose to serve, but that of evaporation and return to the Cosmic Ether. Now, the alchemists carefully noted the correspondence between physical and psychical, and used terms that apply and explain the one by the other, but with this qualification, that the words used in descriptions of the various processes are often displaced, purposely no doubt, and though each process is described correctly, the words used may be applied to other stages. Each alchemist used his own class of terms to imply his own results, and the reason he did so, was to prevent unworthy and unfit men meddling with another person's soul-life. A certain possibility and condition of will and knowledge, I will not say whether of agent or patient, coming to the knowledge of a man of selfish and ambitious nature was at all costs to be avoided, for it was known that men and women only of the highest possible strength of character, unswerving probity and honesty of purpose, can stand the great temptation.

In the Cœlum Terræ of "Eugenius Philalethes" you will find this caution, as also in many other places, very strongly put. [See Mr. Waite's edition of The Magical Writings of Thomas Vaughan, 1888, p. 138].

Religion, classical philosophy, the kabala and astrology are, indeed, inextricably mixed up with Alchemy.

My theory and that of The Suggestive Enquiry, on which it is based, may, to many, be altogether disappointing and seem to form a quagmire, rather than a firm ground for enquiry and research. You may, indeed, think all that I have so far said as very remote from what is considered to be the aim of Alchemy, namely the transmutation of metals and the art of making Gold. Well—let us see, and I do not forget that the alchemists claimed also to have discovered the Elixir of Life and Universal Medicine. Professor Pattison Muir, in his little work already referred to, says: "the language of the alchemists was rich in such expressions as these . . 'our arcanum is gold exalted to the highest degree of perfection to which the combined action of nature and art can develop it.'" He then proceeds to say, "such commingling of ethical and physical ideas, such application of moral conceptions to material phenomena was characteristic of the alchemical method of regarding Nature. The necessary results were; great confusion of thought, much mystification of ideas, and a superabundance of views about natural events." [l.c., p. 30.] So far Prof. Pattison Muir. His conclusion would be perfectly just, if there were no

Ariadne's clue to lead one out of the labyrinth. But the mistake is too often made of assuming that the alchemists were all men of confused thought and mystified views, men, moreover so supremely silly as to add to their nonsense by using words known in the general world to have specific meanings. Truly they would have been considerable fools indeed, if century after century, they had, at hap-hazard and in real ignorance of the nature they professed to examine, used term after term, writing the same to each other, and studying with extraordinary zeal and respect, everything that those whom they considered masters wrote or had ever written. To me it is surprising that modern commentators are not more careful in their criticisms of the alchemists, and that they do not feel intuitively that they are dealing with men who were not concerned with chemistry as we understand it, but were Philosophers who were dealing with Arch-Chemistry and vitality itself, who had for their aim the loftiest problem that can engage the soul and brain of man. The alchemists openly disclaimed common chemistry; but in order to hide their Arch-Chemistry they used ordinary terms to which they attached other meanings. Their language, however, was no disorderly "Volapuk" but had an ancient pedigree. This is true of "sulphur," "mercury," "Green Iron," "Our Water," "Magical Earth," "Our Chalybs," "The Crow which is the blackness of the night and the clearness of the day," "Fiery Dragon," "Salt," "Sulphur" and "Mineral Radix," and a host of other terms.

You will ask me whether I believe in the possibility of the Elixir of Life and the Universal Medicine. Well, I do in their possibility and with reference to the arcanum of the Art, but not in the probability of their being soon found. The search implies too much unselfishness and devotion to be carried on now. But eventually, I do not doubt that some wonderful new discovery apparently will be made, which will put mankind on a safer basis, so that the Art of Alchemy or the spiritual resuscitation of man can be safely worked for his superb benefit. You will ask me, too, whether I think gold can be made by any of these apparently spiritual recipes. Yes I do, but much by the means that rubies and emeralds are made artificially now, namely, by tremendous pressure, which in the case of gold will be obtained by the transference of the spiritual force to another field of action. The alchemists always regarded light as a force, what they referred to as the Light of Life was an inconceivably great force or pressure. They worked with and by life, which they describe in various ways, as fire, heat, etc, You feel, no doubt, that this is still all on an abstract ground with no reference to alembics or furnaces or any of the paraphernalia of a chemical laboratory. Neither is one required, for as I have said Alchemy is Arch-Chemistry only. No doubt among enquiring and not very loyal "assistants," many things leaked out, which their acute and sharp minds perceived and applied to physical conditions, with pathological directness. In consequence, I believe, as modern and physical chemistry grew and prospered, the arch-chemistry gradually withdrew, leaving men, such as Van Helmont, Glauber, Stahl, Boyle, etc., as only partial initiates and, as such, probably never knowing the secretum secretorum of mesmeric work, to settle down in degrees to the study of chemistry in the ordinary way.

It will also seem, perhaps, an eminently unsatisfactory trend in my philosophy to give such important position to that obscure and what many people consider undesirable phenomenon, namely that of trance. But I think if more study were directed to this subject it would be found that it is one of unprecedented interest and value. I am not stating my own words in saying that Revelation to be of universal importance such as are all Sacred Writings, must be given in deepest trance only.

Kant, I believe, decided that no knowledge that does not refer to phenomena can be known except by revelation, through inspiration. All such matters were deeply studied by the ancients, who, to my view, were occupied on profounder problems than moderns have imagined. Prof. Bergson demolishes in a splendid manner the mechanical notion involved in Spencer's philosophy. He describes, in his Evolution Créatrice, the radical error underlying Spencer's concept of evolution. Spencer integrates the evolved with the evolved, failing to see that he is thus taking useless trouble, and that in positing the slightest fragment of the actually evolved he posits the whole, so that it is in vain for him to pretend to explain the genesis of it.

To get at and understand the genesis of matter was just what the alchemists assayed. But they never confused "existence," which they claimed as an "aggregate," with the "whole." It was this "whole" they aimed at. And they knew it could not be found on the outside of man, but they must seek the "Cosmic Ether" in living man, not dead man, nor yet as vivisectionists, but, to coin a word, as "pyschosectionists."

Prof. Pattison Muir [l.c., p. 32] says of the alchemists, that their "essence [or Ether] was supposed to have a material form, an ethereal or middle nature and an immaterial or spiritual life." His interpretation of their theory is not mine, but he is certainly right in speaking of the three principles, which are to be found in the "First Matter," i.e., throughout the substance of all nature; or there would be no life at all.

The alchemists conceived of live differently from the manner of modern philosophy. Life, they regarded as varying in quality and only symbolically commensurate with the plane of life enquired into.

Mundane and phenomenal life, they considered, was vitalised by "Ether" of inferior quality, force and power, containing and expressing the elements fire, light, heat, air, etc., so they had to turn the key on the lock opening the door to the middle region, the first gate of which is the astral or cosmic circuit, which by them was considered as no real advance on this world, in any true sense, as it contained all the failures, derelicts, stray, unfinished forms, mental and bodily debris, and flimsy, foolish thoughts. It is the day-dreaming region, where all the castles in Spain rear their shining but unstable towers, where all the foolish fancies are born from rambling imagination without aim, beyond the self-satisfaction of the dreamer,—the mirror on which the events in this world are photographed, and the phonograph where sound is stored,—for in this realm everything is refracted, confused, reversed and disturbed, the big is the little, the little the big. It is the realm of the "Sphinx of Antiquity," where the traveller has to pause and stand to answer the famous riddle in order that he should be thoroughly equipped with theoretical knowledge of the new country and with character to sustain active trials instead of passive ones. This was the "phantasmal" region of Plato, which was the first trial to be encountered in the Mysteries, which formed part of the educational curriculum of every man of birth and position. No one could have palmed off astral wonders on such a man. Just as revelation reveals itself, so does falsehood. Let me hasten to say, that there is hence involved all the difference of what Swedenborg calls a "discrete degree," for there is no easy link between the trance of an ordinary sleep-walker, or a subject the functions of whose brain are inhibited from conscious action by a hypnotist, and that of the whole or complete trance of the Spirit in which other consciousness is not inhibited, but stilled and at rest, as in that sublime moment, when "God moved on the Face of the Water and said, Let there be light, and there was light." Then does intuitive intelligence, illuminated intellect, the very Truth itself, make itself apparent, i.e., visible as the Substance out of which the Worlds are built. But we must pause, and if you will take it all in a symbolical sense, I will merely say that gold is the phenomenal analogue to truth. With regard to the mysteries: In modern times we use the skeleton ceremony of Consecration into Holy Orders, which consists, so to speak, of the non-vital remains of what was once an efficacious rite. The term "Efficient Hand" is no idle term. It meant a human hand, holding the vitality of the Logistic Ray, the Golden Bough, conveying life to the moribund. I am not here speaking of physical but of pyschical decline and death. The "Efficient Hand," holding the power of God Himself, is the Hand which strengthens and sustains the life of every man. And this is not all symbology. There is an ultimation to all intuition for the course of the special forces, to the destined end: the ultimatum and demonstration in Alchemy on the physical plane was in the Mineral Kingdom. By this I mean that the transmutation that reached the physical plane referred to metals only. The alchemists claimed that inferior metals could be raised to the superior or noble state, but never did they claim that the stuff of the Cosmic Ether could be transmuted into the next higher kingdom, that of the vegetable. Not a daisy can be made or created. The alchemists maintained that it was necessary to find the seed of each Kingdom, and they declared they had discovered that seed of metals, which would produce gold. This seed was "the powder of projection," but here I cannot give details.

There is one point yet to mention and that is, that the "occult chemistry" of Mr. Leadbeater and Mrs. Besant has, I think, no resemblance at all to the Arch-Chemistry of the alchemists.

I have given what I consider three strong clues, and a very important key to the labyrinth of Alchemy, and lest you think my key is a poor and disappointing one, let me beg of you with that key to try to unlock therewith the old-myths, classical and mediæval, and to find out the meanings of the Kabala and of those great poems, the Iliad, the Odyssey, the wonderful verse of Virgil, of Dante, and the cryptic stories relating to the Arthurian Cycle, the Holy Graal, and much else of a like nature, as well as the hidden meaning of the Old and New Testaments. They all tend to one discovery and declare the same, and even in their inconsistencies will be instructive to him who has the key. And he who sets himself in this wise to the comprehension of the whole philosophy will be a competent judge of our labours, of how much assistance we have given to the recovery of lost wisdom, and with what sincerity we have opened the way permeating into those ancient abodes of light.

ABSTRACT OF DISCUSSION.

The Rev. J. J. Pool, F.R.G.S., said that he had listened to a most delightful paper, for which he considered that the Society was greatly indebted to Mme. de Steiger. It was full of suggestive thoughts, and, without assenting to everything expressed therein, he found that his reason went along with it as a whole. One expression, however, he was inclined to query, namely, "the Fall of Man," because he did not think that nowadays one could believe in the doctrine of the Fall.

Mr. D. N. Dunlop (Editor of The Path) said that he had listened with great pleasure to what he considered to be the best paper of its kind he had heard during the last twenty-five years. He considered that it had made plain an opportunity for the Society to undertake a great work for humanity, namely the practical work of Alchemy, mystically understood. That was what was needed and should be attempted.

Mr. A. E. WAITE said that he had listened to the suggestions of the last speaker with an interest only second to that with which he had listened to Mme. de Steiger's paper. The life requisite to the great alchemical experiment was the life of saintship, and could not be attempted by a Society other than a secret one. The ancient alchemists, he thought, were concerned with the same work as the mystics within the Church living the life of contemplation; but they had carried the experiment a stage further, and embodied the results of their experiences in symbolic texts. It was, he considered, the chief aim of the Society firstly to decode these texts, and thus gain the secret knowledge, which could then be practically applied.

THE CHAIRMAN said that there was no necessity for him to point out that the meeting had listened to a very interesting and suggestive paper. It might, in certain respects, seem a departure from previous papers, which had been mainly historical or interpretative on the scientific side, but the founders of the Society had always intended that every side of the subject should receive attention, the mystical no less than the other. He agreed with Mr. Waite that the chief work of the Society must consist in decoding the alchemical texts. It was the business of the Society to get at the root of the matter and produce a complete explanation of the origin and significance of Alchemy. Mr. Dunlop's suggestions were also of much interest, but such practical work was the business of individuals, rather than of a Society as a whole; though were it possible to reveal it, the Society would be profited by an account of any such experiment. He was inclined to think, however, that there was something intrinsically secret in Alchemy, mystically understood, something which was secret, not because it must not, but because it could not, be told to any but an initiate. Mme. de Steiger had spoken of this secret under many symbols—not all of which he understood,—but to him the most beautiful and significant was that of the wonderful fairy-story of Sleeping Beauty and the Prince.

Mme. DE STEIGER thanked the speakers for their gratifying expressions of approval of her paper. She hoped the suggestions she had made therein would be followed up by other members. In reply to the Rev. J. J. Pool, she said that the doctrine of the Fall of Man was the ground of the whole Hermetic theory, without which it would collapse. It was not possible, however, in the time at her disposal to attempt a justification of that doctrine, which must be accepted as a preliminary to the work of Alchemy.

THE AKASHIC RECORDS

IN the pursuance of the study of occult science in general, the student is at the very outset, brot face to face with reference to what are commonly called the AKASHIC RECORDS and with citations from them as from the final source of authority and appeal.

That such records do exist is the concensus of opinion and assent of all legitimate occult schools, but in attempting to find an equally unanimous consent as to just what they really are, their nature, place in the cosmic scheme of things and their comparative availability, we are confronted by the lamentable fact that in this as in so many other departments of occult science, there is as yet, no definite canon or law.

Vaguely, we are informed that "the facts concerning the primeval past have not passed beyond the reach of occult research"; that in spite of the obvious fact that all material things ultimately disintegrate, the spiritual forces that cause the definition of one form from another and varied forms as well, leave ineradicable copies of their works in the spiritual foundations of the worlds.

We are furthermore instructed that any one who can raise the vibratory status of his faculties of sense perception from the ordinary visible states of being into the invisible spheres may have access to this vast panorama in which are recorded all past events, not only of this world but of cosmos as well.

This lack of a definite canon however, has proved to be the open door to a vast deal of charlatanry, for almost anything under the sun can be claimed on the authority of the Akashic Records, and probably will continue to be claimed, until a sufficient number of well developt initiates have establisht some acceptable concordat, which will effectually bar the utterance and promulgation of the impossible, illogical and oft times absurd speculations taught under the assumed authority of the Akashic Records.

In the first place, while open to the scrutiny and study of all who duly qualify by personal development to contact them, nevertheless comparatively few in our present materialistic day actually succeed in so contacting them, and further, of those few who do, actually succeed in contacting them, still fewer are able to read them, and still further, of those who can read them to some extent, extremely few are able to read them at length, accurately and beyond peradventure of doubt so that their readings may be accepted as actual criteria. To read the Akashic Records at length and at will requires something more than simply a proper spiritual development, it calls into play the requirement of actual physical and mental strength, for the farther back the reader attempts to go, the greater is the demand upon his mental and spiritual strength, and without a reserve force of stout physical health to fall back upon as potential, he cannot hope to go to any great length of reading. Hence the Rosicrucian insistence upon a sound physical body as well as sound spiritual qualifications. And in spite of popular notions to the contrary, prompted oft times by the so-called and assumed attainments of what are known as Yogis, it may be safely asserted that the weak, emaciated, almost inhuman ascetic has given little to the world of value from the Akashic Records.

The extent to which one can read the Akashic Records after becoming sufficiently developt to contact them, depends entirely upon the extent to which the initiate has become able to distinguish accurately the differentiated phenomena of the various ethers. These ethers are four in number and constitute in their totality the Aether known to science. Science however, has not yet arrived at the same status in regard to them as has occult science, which separates Aether into the Chemical, Life, Light and Reflecting classifications.

We shall arrive at a better understanding of the Akashic Records if we begin with an analysis of the name itself. "Akashic" is from Akasa, the Life Principle, the Astral or Sidereal Light; the all-pervading force, usually considered as fluid in its nature in somewhat the same manner as electricity is spoken of as fluid or flowing,—pervading and interpenetrating all matter, nervous, organic and inorganic in a way similar to the activity of the luminiferous ether of academic science. This force has also been termed in its penetrative property the PSYCHODE and when called into play by mental activity, the ECTENIC FORCE.

By whatever name it may be known, it is still the identical force known to occultists as Akasa. To show forth the universality of this force and the fact that it has been known to the initiates of all races and ages, we may say with Blavatsky, that it is the Chaos of the Ancients, the Zoroastrian Sacred Fire, the Antusbryum of the Parsees, the Hermes-Fire; the Elmes-Fire of the Germans; the Lightning of Cybele; the Burning Torch of Apollo; The Flame on the Altar of Pan; the Inextinguishable Fire in the Temple on the Greek Acropolis; also in that of Vesta; the Fire-flame of Pluto's Helm; the Brilliant Sparks on the Hats of the Dioscuri; on the Gorgon's Head; the Helm of Pallas, the Staff of Mercury; the Egyptian Ra; the Grecian Zeus; the Pentecostal Fire-tongues; the Burning Bush of Moses; the Pillar of Fire of Exodus; the Burning Lamp of Abraham; the Eternal Fire of the Bottomless Pit; The Delphic Oracular Vapors; the Sidereal Light of the Rosicrucians; the Akasa of the Hindus; the Astral Light of Eliphas Levi; the Nerve-aura and Fluid of the Magnetists; the Od Force of Reichenbach; the Fire-Globe or Meteor-cat of Babinet; the Psychod and Ectenic Force of Thury; the Psychic Force of Crookes; the Atmospheric magnetism of Naturalists; Galvanism and Electricity, are but various names for one and the same thing,—the Greek ARCHAEUS of the Rosicrucians.

Now Akasa is a Sanscrit word meaning literally, "sky." But in the esoteric interpretation it also designates the imponderable and intangible life-principle—the Astral and Celestial Lights combined together, the two forming the ANIMA MUNDI and constituting the soul and spirit of Man; the Celestial Light forming his nous, pneuma, or Divine Spirit, and the other his soul. The grosser particles of the astral spirit are said to enter into the composition of the physical body. Akasa is also the term which represents the mysterious fluid termed by modern science Aether, the "all-pervading aether." As, in Syria, Palestine and India meant the sky, life, and the sun, at the same time. The softer pronunciation of the word was AH. AH is Iah, Iao and AO. God told Moses that His name was "I AM," (Ahiah) a reduplication of the words AH or IAH. The words AS, AH, or IAH mean life, existence, and are evidently the root of the word Akasa which in Hindustani is pronounst Ahasa, the Life-principle, Divine Live Giving Fluid or Medium. It is also the Hebrew Ruah meaning the Wind, breath, air in motion, or moving Spirit.

Finally, Akasa, is the WILL of Divinity and all things, in operation and is the great principle of Life of which the inexplicable power of Attraction is but an atomic portion.

It will be noted from the foregoing that Akasa presents two distinct aspects, the material, substantial, and the immaterial, intangible, or Astral. This is further borne out by the effective definitions given by Hartmann. We have already identified Akasa with Archaeus. Archaeus, says Hartmann, is "the great invisible storehouse of Nature wherein the characters of all things are preserved and contained. To one aspect it represents the ASTRAL LIGHT; in another, PRIMORDIAL MATTER.

ASTRAL LIGHT, says the same initiate, is "the LIGHT OF NATURE. The MEMORY, or universal storehouse of Nature, in which the characters of all things that ever existed are preserved. He who can see the images existing in the Astral Light, can read the history of all past events, and prophesy the future."

These last definitions furnish the best possible key to the true Nature and locale of the Akashic Records. The Astral Light represents the immaterial, intangible, astral or spiritual status; the Primordial Matter represents the material, apparently substantial expression of the same. Now Light is a form of ENERGY. And Matter, in the latest concept of academic science is also regarded as a form of ENERGY. But Matter we have also learned from the earlier studies in Rosicrucian Philosophy, is mainly consistent as the holes or bubbles in a vaster ocean of substance infinitely more dense than anything that the human mind can conceive. This substance or material of such tremendous density is called the Aether.

In this Aether then, are in very truth concealed the secrets of cosmos, for it is in the dense tho fluid substance in which all worlds and systems have their existence, and in which therefore, they are maintained and preserved. It is hard for those who have not had specific scientific training to grasp this concept of the tremendous density of Aether, yet true it is, that so much denser is it in comparison with what we ordinarily term as Matter, that everything that has objective existence as such in terms of Matter, is simply a bubble or vacuole space in the Aetheric Ocean about us. Therefore, as bubbles in the water make for themselves definite space and room therein and, figuratively make the impress of their size, shape, etc., on the impermanent water, so has everything that has had existence or does now exist, made its definite impress upon the surrounding Aetheric Walls, these last being of imperishable, immutable character.

Just as does the light, airy, yet material bubble move freely and rapidly to and fro in its watery environment, so does each form of organic Matter in the Aetheric environment, even tho the latter be so vastly greater in density. It is simply the Law of Relativity practically applied. And the impressions made by mental process, either in the incarnate or discarnate state do not differ materially in the record they impress, for in the Aetheric World, as Thoughts become concreted from their original abstractions, they possess even greater power of making a clear, unmistakable impress, than do the objective conditions of the visible world, which lose their clarity and preciseness of expression in Physical manifestation.

In spite of the rapid advances of modern science in the realm of the atom, electron, corpuscle and ion, Aether still remains the elusive, imponderable form of Substance that defies all laboratory processes. It cannot be defined,—logically because we cannot confine that in which we ourselves are confined. It may not be contained, isolated or subjected to any known reactions. Academic science simply cognizes its existence as an explanation for certain other phenomena which would seem to make the presence of such a fluid, all-pervading medium necessary. Once cognized, hypotheses multiply rapidly and a wider field of vision opens to view. But Aether is not of the physical laboratory, but of the mental and spiritual scientific reactions, demonstrations and recognitions.

It is our own ISOLATED POSITION IN THIS DENSE, IMPONDERABLE MASS THAT LIMITS OUR SENSE PERCEPTION TO RELATIVELY FEW OCTAVES IN THE SCALE OF VIBRATION BY WHICH WE BECOME CONSCIOUS OF OUR ENVIRONMENT AND EXISTENCE.

WHEN ONE SUCCEEDS BY PROPER DEVELOPMENT, IN RAISING HIS VIBRATORY STATUS SUFFICIENTLY TO ENABLE HIM TO ATTAIN AMPLIFIED STATES OF CONSCIOUSNESS, THEN HE ADDS TO HIS SENSE EXPERIENCE A DEGREE OF THE CONSCIOUSNESS PERTAINING AND RELATIVE TO THAT STATE OR CONTAINER IN WHICH HE HIMSELF IS CONTAINED.

This, you will find, is a new point of view for the occult student. Instead of teaching all sorts of impractical yogism, positively not adapted for the occidental mind or physique, the Rosicrucians teach the development of each of man's vehicles to a status of strength and virility that will enable one to attain a higher vibrational status and amplify or expand his own individual consciousness to an attunement with that of a higher or inner plane or region than the mundane.

Aether is the universal substance-ocean all about, penetrating and pervading all worlds. It is obvious then, that everything in the realm of Matter, and, as we know that Thoughts are things,—realities— therefore having existence—everything that has inner or outer, exoteric or esoteric manifestation, gains existence only by making for itself a definite place and relative position in the Aetheric Ocean or Cosmic Medium, and it is equally obvious that this operation of making place makes also he definite impress of character of the principle seeking expression and manifestation therein.

The Akashic Records then, are about us everywhere, and all cosmos is the extent and scope of their status. The student needs not to dissociate himself from the physical body in order to contact them for he is in them, making every moment his own individual record upon them, adding whether for relative good or bad, his own accretions to the general sum of human experience.

While it is not necessary to "leave the body" to read or to study the Akashic Records, it IS necessary to develop one's powers of clairvoyance to the highest possible degree in order to read them intelligently and usefully. It is from these Records rather than from the personal aura that the trained, voluntary seer or psychic reads for the person for whom he may be thus functioning. Many involuntary psychics contact these Records in a hazy, unintelligible sort of manner, and while functioning in a perfectly genuine phase of psychism, they read erroneously and draw wrong conclusions from what they read and leave their consultant worse off than before.

The necessity for a high degree of well developt clairvoyance is caused by the further necessity of being able to distinguish between the various ethers already cited. The Record or impress of any principle seeking manifestation and expression is accomplisht by means of the corresponding ether, by virtue of which, it functions. The operations of impress and record are carried on mainly by means of the Chemical, Life and Light Ethers. These are the three ethers that find their culmination in the three lower regions or sub-divisions of the World or Region of Concrete Thought,—the Aerial, Oceanic and Continental; corresponding to the Light, Life and Chemical ethers respectively These three sub-divisions constitute on the Rosicrucian chart, Archaeus, but as the greater embraces and includes the lesser, so these regions of the Concrete Thought World reach down into and include both the Astral and Physical Worlds, generally speaking.

In this way, the soul qualities, Power, Light and Life, operating as Forces of Attraction; the Neutral quality of Feeling, and the Repulsive forces of Wishes, Impressionability and Passion all find expression and therefore impress and record on the Akashic Records.

But above all, it is by virtue of the powers and forces of the Reflecting Ether, that the trained clairvoyant reads clearly the Akashic Records,and when able so to read clearly, his next step is to study them until he understands the modus by which the records are made. This Archaeus or storehouse of Nature is what is referd to in the Rosicrucian Prayer which reads. "Nature is the Book in which Thy character is writen and no one can read it unless he has been in Thy school" No matter how clearly one might see the characters, one would be unable to read Greek unless he first learned the Greek Alphabet and the proper method of putting together the phonetic values. Then and then only would he begin with the aid of his lexicon, to translate the characters he could so clearly see and read. So too, with the Akashic Records. One may be sufficiently clairvoyant to see them, and to some extent read events recorded thereon but at the same time totally unable to tell whether they referd to past, present or future, and equally unable to correlate them with the proper individual, race or country and still more unable to give them proper time sequence. Time is the great stumbling block in all attempts at psychic reading.

It is this utilization of the power of the Reflecting Ether that makes the difference between the voluntary and the involuntary psychics. The former by development have establisht the requisite correspondences in the brain and with the various psychic centers of the vehicles, and are thus able to function in the inner or subliminal light by what is known as the interior illumination, thus cognizing conditions which do not ordinarily pertain to the mundane regions unless indeed they choose to study such conditions as well, for to the trained clairvoyant no department of Nature is a sealed book.

The involuntary, untrained, or ordinary "medium" sees only those conditions which pertain to the mundane environment and the lower astral regions. They are therefore unable to read the Akashic Records at all.

Another requisite must be kept in mind. Psychical Researchers are apt to regard rather lightly the insistence laid by genuine occultists upon the spiritual side of all study in this realm. Nevertheless, let it be understood once and for all, that the prayer of the Rosicrucians just referd to distinctly, says, "Nature is the book in which Thy (GOD'S) character is written and no one can read it unless he has been in Thy school." Commendable as are all attempts to enlarge man's knowledge of the invisible worlds, occult science insists that in the instance of the Akashic Records as in so many other departments of the science, the student is coming face to face with God's own personal records of his visible and invisible works, and such records of the Divine are not to be read carelessly, lightly, nor from motives of curiosity, or merely to add to the general sum of human knowledge. Knowledge is not withheld from man when he has arrived at the right stage to receive it, but he is not allowed to pry into the unseen only so far as he entitles himself to a right to know by the proper manner of living and the right and reverent attitude in his search.

To the seeker who has attained a degree of psychic development but not the spiritual awakening or illumination to entitle him to understand, the Akashic Records will appear a source of illusion. To such an one, for instance, the records of achievement of a given past will appear as the actual substantial buildings palaces and peoples themselves. Thus many well intentioned spiritualists often speak of seeing the models or duplicates of things long bygone when in reality they have seen only the visualization of the impress made by such conditions. The trained seer knows that a stone or marble building of the material world does not call for a stone or marble archetype. It calls for the concreted thought impress from which that actual stone or marble structure was objectively crystallized.

Neither must it be understood for a moment that the Akashic Records are of a documentary nature written in such style that any one of any age can easily read them. They are not coucht in any form of human language or expression. Many attempts have been made at a general human language similar to Esperanto but only failure has resulted so far. Such generalizations come only by evolutionary process, not only by incidental inventions. To read the Akashic Records of God, the reader must be essentially a man of God, striving to understand the nature and character of God. Then he will understand the universal symbolism in which they are recorded.

The fact that the Akashic Records have so often been described as "Astral Records," something placed in or pertaining to the Astral World, is incontrovertible evidence that those who have so taught, have not themselves been able to contact these wondrous records of cosmic process. The fallacy of ascribing astral location to them is at once obvious when the illusory nature of the Astral World is recognized and understood. In the Astral realm all is constant change. Here the discarnate spirit learns anew in each after death interim, the illusion of desire. Desire is necessary as motive power and stimulus but by its very nature it is impermanent, for even good desires are in a state of constant change, due to aspiration for something still higher.

So it is, that records which must of their very nature be absolutely permanent to be of any use to the ceaseless flow of human incarnation, cannot have their impress in the substance of the Astral World where nothing is permanent. Neither are these Akashic Records "visualized in the Astral World" as is so often stated. They are visualized, indeed, but whoso has become able to visualize them looks far beyond the Astral Region, into the Thought World itself, the Concrete Region which is one of permanency and stability, a Region of Archetypes.

The Akashic Records are visualized and read, by effort of WILL on the part of the psychic or trained clairvoyant. In the inner worlds, Time and Space are, hard as it may seem to comprehend it from the exoteric standpoint, rendered practically nil. The progrest spirit other than what are called the "Earth bounds," IS where it WILLS to be. The Spirit SEES what it WILLS to see. If it Wills to study the Akashic Records without special purpose definitely fixt in mind, a varegated panorama is presented to view somewhat in the nature of a dream condition, and just as intangible, for if you were conducted into a dark room for instance and a picture of some battle, expedition, or other notable occurrence were suddenly projected on to a hitherto invisible screen, it might be interesting to you while it lasted but would also be absolutely unintelligible to you unless you had by expressing your desire therefore, had a picture of what you actually desired to see, presented to you.

Man is given help from the invisible regions only when he has exhausted his own resources. He is made to do all that is possible, for himself, in order to develop his resourcefulness. When therefore, the psychic desires to recover an historical event Akashically, it is only after he has made all possible human research that he is entitled to read in the Akashic Records. If he desires to study his previous incarnations, it is only after he has learned all that is possible about his present existence, his evolutionary status, vehicles, natures and essentials, that he is entitled to know by what names and in what places the same Ego has been known in former times.

Another key to the manner by which the impress of all creative activity and processes becomes a very part of the Akashic Matter itself will be found by its identification with Chaos in our opening observations. Therein it was identified as the Chaos of the Ancients among many other synonyms. Plato and Pythagoras named it, "the Soul of the World," after it had been impregnated by the Spirit of that which broods over the Primaeval Waters or Chaos. It is by being REFLECTED IN IT," say the Kabalists, that the Brooding Principle CREATED the phantasmagoria of a visible, manifested universe. It was Chaos before, and Aether after this "reflection." This principle of reflection is well known to Rosicrucian students, as the means by which One became Two, the Visible manifested from the Invisible. So the Akasa must necessarily contain and preserve every detail important or relatively unimportant, of the reflection that we call visibly creation.

But the Akashic Records or rather the substance of them is really much more than a mere sequence of cosmic conditions. Academic science ordinarily cognizes Four Elements, Fire, Water, Earth and Air. Occult Science knows of Seven Elements, of which Akasa, Aether is the Fifth. It is the Fifth Cosmic Principle or Fundamental. It is the Matter of Mind Stuff, which will become more definitely organized and visibly distinguisht from the Air during the end of our Fourth Round. Cosmically, Akasa is a "radiant, cool, diathermanous type of plastic Matter, creative in its physical Nature, correlative in its grossest aspects and portions, immutable in its higher principles. In the creative condition it is called the Sub-Root; and in conjunction with radiant heat, it recalls "dead worlds" to life. In its highest aspect it is the Soul of the World; in its lower, the Destroyer."

As we proceed to formulate our own individual concepts and definitions of Akasa, we must remember that it is highly differentiated. As the Astral Light or "Grand Agent Magique" of Eliphas Levi, it is not the container of all things but the REFLECTOR of all things. As Aether, its noumenon, it is the container of all things, yet Aether is its lowest manifestation. Waite, in translating Levi, gives the description of the latter in the following;—"This ambient and all-penetrating fluid, this Ray detacht from the Central or Spiritual Sun's splendor . . fixt by the weight of the atmosphere and the power of central atraction. . . the Astral Light, this electro-magnetic ether, this vital and luminous caloric, is represented on the ancient monuments by the girdle of Isis, which twines around two poles. . . and in the ancient theogonies by the Serpent devouring its own tail, emblem of prudence and of Saturn (an emblem of infinity, immortality and Cronus—Time, not the God Saturn nor the Planet. Blavatsky) It is the winged dragon of Medea, the double serpent of the caduceus, and the Tempter of Genesis, and it is also the brazen snake of Moses encircling the Tau. . . Lastly, it is the Devil of exoteric dogmatism, and is really the force that souls must conquer, in order to detach themselves from the chains of Earth; for if they should not, they will be absorbed by the same power which first produced them, and will return to the central and eternal fire."

The expression,—"fixt by the weight of the atmosphere" simply refers to the refractive power of the atmosphere as it relates to the passage of light, but the concluding statement, that it is a force "that souls must conquer, in order to detach themselves from the chains of Earth," is quite true, especially in the esoteric sense. We conquer Akasa and the Akashic Records by our conscious Karma. That is, we conquer the weakness of our individual records by our intelligence of action physically, mentally and spiritually, after we have become cognizant of the Truth of Karma and the Law of Compensation. Our future activities intelligently directed in the light of Karmic knowledge can b e made to so accumulate as to overbalance our Karmic debts and leave us free of future Earth-chains to go on in our spiritual progress to higher planes and states of being.

Lastly, fraters, we must not hold the thought that these Akashic Records are entirely an inert, impersonal condition, for in certain aspects, they are a definite part of the "innumerable cloud of witnesses" with which we are surrounded, as described by St. Paul. This gives a straightforward personal element to them which should cause us to realize that our every thought, word and deed comes under the cognizance of these Records, some of them very personally and individually in the instance of the Lords of Karma whose particular sphere of functioning is in Akasa itself.

Akasa and the Akashic Records constitute the medium and common ground in which the great testimony described by John, (I John, v-7-8) is given. 'For there are three that bear record in Heaven, the Father the Word and the Holy Ghost; and these three are ONE." Note the Hermetic Unity. And there are three that bear witness in Earth, the Spirit, the Water, and the Blood: and these three agree in ONE. The Natures of the Divine Unity have been studied. The Spirit is the potent Life Principle operative in Akasa, the Water is the fluid nature which makes reflection of the Divine in Man possible; the Blood is the seat wherein the Ego of Man functions, and therefore contains the impress of the activities of the Ego. The Higher and the Lower triune unities agree and are ONE. The Akasa penetrates both Heaven and Earth, so that one Unity can bear witness in Heaven of Earth conditions. The other witness can bea r witness on Earth of Heaven conditions, and all agree and all are ONE. Our Heaven is what we make it at every moment of our individual lives according to the record witnest by the Akashic Records. Our Earth is just what Humanity makes it in so far as Humanity can sense the record of the Divine Three in Unity as it manifests itself or reflects itself in Akasa for Human Progress and development. Within each of us is the Akashic monitor known as CONSCIENCE which from its intimate connection with the Akashic Records and the Lords of Karma, warns us of error to be avoided, and good to be sought. It is a worthy aspiration to seek the ability to study the Akashic Records, if the search is made and the development pursued from the status of the highest spiritual motives. Such seekers will find in truth, that there is nothing hid that shall not be revealed.

LIBERS 41 & 42

Dear Companions: #159

On this occasion we have combined two Libers under one cover and you presently have in your hands a volume of immense proportion and worth.

Let us begin our enquiries at this conventicle by considering man and his various bodies. As you know, man has several bodies and you could ask why this is so -- you could even ask how this can be proved. This answer, simply, is: because there are several planes of consciousness and action.

Man cannot function is a spiritual world in a physical body and, conversely, he cannot function in the physical world in a purely spiritual body. We need a body for each world or plane of consciousness in which we function. A body is merely a tool or a channel through which life expresses or functions. Each body serves its own specific purpose just as our seven layers of skin serve definite purposes.

Science is discovering that the most minute particles of matter, invisible to the naked eye and even defying the super-microscope, enshrine keys to many unexplained riddles. Life itself is invisible, only its manifestations are visible, yet the impelling and propelling power itself remains hidden. To all practical purposes our internal bodies or organs are just as invisible to us as our spiritual bodies or vehicles are. We can see some of our functions by the use of X-ray however Man has within himself an X-Ray equipment but uses it not, finding it easier to invent machines for that purpose that will see and hear for him. Does it not seem strange that an inanimate object should possess greater sensitivity and vision than man who makes it, when he claims to be a child of God, or divine? Then what prevents man from hearing and seeing as accurately as the instruments he has himself created?

Everyone knows that when one's spinal section is out of alignment we have difficulty throughout the entire body. The same applies if we have any derangement of the blood circulation. We overlook the fact that man is a most complex ensemble and that just as he has many physical units or bodies that must operate synchronously, he also has their spiritual counterparts and that the synchronous functioning of both the physical and spiritual is equally important to mental and spiritual health, growth and enrichment.

In the philosophy of the R+C, the existence not only of a physical body is taught -- but also an etheric body, an astral body and a mental sheath as well. Each one serves as a channel for the Power of God to flow through and we will get to a full explanation later on.

How many people ever stop to consider what a marvelously constructed creation man really is? Every problem in engineering has been utilized and put into active operation within this marvelous creature. Think of that mysterious river of life -- the blood -- that supplies nourishment and oxygen to every minute part of the physical body. What a marvelous system of distribution, compared to which no invention of man is equal. It is through this mysterious fluid that the Ego, the Divine within us, is able to contact every part of the body -- remember that. For this very reason it behooves us to keep our blood stream as free and clean of impurities as possible, thus helping to keep our physical structure not only in excellent condition but giving the Divine within us a clear channel through which to function.

Without sufficient blood, life is impossible. In his blood, man carries his karmic history. Science is making marvelous discoveries in its study of the blood. Diagnosis is now being made through the examination of a single drop of the blood, by the use of electrical apparatus not unlike that of radio, as well as by other electronic equipment. Even the onset of death is indicated unerringly by these means.

Too many people are prone to regard the physical body as a handicap instead of what it has been intended to be: a channel of expression and function, a working tool. We do not regard our other working tools as handicaps or hindrances, in fact we realize we could do little without them. Why then, the greatest tool of all is generally regarded as something to neglect and misuse is really a mystery. Be as careful of your body as you would be of any highly-prized and precious possession. Beautify it. Improve it. Preserve it. Do not neglect it. Do not entertain any mistaken notion that it is vain and worldly to give it proper care. Consider what it truly is: a temple of the Divine Spirit within; cherish and care for it as the greatest of temples should be: the Human Temple that enshrines the Divine Spark.

You are told in the Great Book that cleanliness is next to godliness. Follow this admonition on every plane of being! Keep your bodies clean and wholesome remembering that uncleanliness in any form is alien to progress and growth. Clean bodies are necessary to physical health and this is equally applicable on every plane of being. A clean mind, a clean soul and a clean spirit are required. I spoke just now about beautifying the body. The greatest beauty the body can possess is natural, normal, radiant health. For what is beauty, but nature expressing her best? We are becoming health-conscious as a nation. The whole world is paying close attention to this principle just now. Today, the whole world admires the man or woman who radiates vitality, enthusiasm and strength -- perfect health, mental balance and spiritual wholeness.

Good physical health is the best equipment an Ego can have, through which to function. Do not pray for riches, but for a strong, healthy body through which to render greater and more effective service.

Now, the difficulty most persons experience in comprehending the term "body", is due to the concept that a "body" is the entire physical part of man or animal. In other words: the physical structure alone. They forget (or do not know) that bodies are composed of crystalized matter and that matter can and does have expression on every plane of existence. It is simply a question of density. Matter is crystalized spirit and expresses in many degrees of density. Force and energy are the same spirit -- but uncrystalized. Physically, man is many bodies, the foundation being of course, the skeleton. Over this bony body are stretched the muscles forming the muscular body; tendons & tissues form yet another organization, with the nervous system interpenetrating them all; then the blood stream or arterial and venous system; and covering the complete structure are seven layers of skin which forms a body in itself, and an organ of touch and feeling as well.

Yet, when spiritual bodies are mentioned, some people cannot conceive of these and become confused. Just as in the physical body, one body is interpenetrated and super imposed over another, yet remaining independent with its own exclusive functions, so with the mental and spiritual bodies -- they react likewise, one upon another. It is a very delicate interrelationship all the way through.

The physical plane is only a crystallization of what we have been able to carry over from the spiritual, so that the spiritual, etheric, astral and mental bodies interact with and affect one another.

THE ETHERIC BODY

The first of man's vehicles after the physical is the etheric body which is really a semi-physical structure and primarily functions and operates through the glandular system of man, thus supplying a channel or contact between the visible and invisible structures of man. It is an exact counterpart or duplicate, (perhaps blueprint would be more accurate,) of the physical body. It is the negative of the physical structure if we might borrow a term from photography. It is the etheric body that has brought over the seed-atom of the physical body.

Through the etheric body, vitality and energy are supplied to the physical. It is in this etheric body that the atoms of energy function. Remember that all life is but one continuous stream -- and the only dividing lines are really nothing else but the rates of vibration or frequency of the atomic energy. This vibration is determined by the resistance it encounters. Normally, in human consciousness, speed or velocity implies a time factor; but in spiritual consciousness, speed or velocity imply resistance or non-resistance -- and vibration, high or low. It is this resistance that determines the velocities of the atomic structure and its very formation is determined thereby. The greater the resistance -- the denser the physical body becomes.

The etheric body is the chemist of the system. It is the function of this body to see that we assimilate as well as dispose of what is taken into our bodies. It is to our etheric body that we owe our growth, assimilative and excretive power. It is also to this body that we owe the heat in our system. Through the etheric, we receive spiritual stimulation because it is the etheric body that controls the atomic structure of our body and its glandular system.

The etheric body is the one which controls and vitalizes the physical body. People have often marvelled at the ability of each organ to select from the food ingested, the proper nourishment required for its maintainance and functioning. This marvelous chemical selection is carried on by the etheric body, not by the physical as such. (Any more than pain is felt by the physical body itself. Were pain localized in the body itself, anaesthesia would be useless for nothing could stop the pain.)

The etheric acts as a go-between or channel between the physical and spiritual worlds, so that at all times man is living, not only in one world but in the etheric and others as well. Since man is not just a physical being -- but a mental and spiritual one as well -- he must have channels through which to function in these other worlds of consciousness. Your ability to function easily in these other states of consciousness, or worlds, is what determines your particular and individual state of evolution and capacity for expression.

Physically, we are advancing in knowledge. We know that certain foods are high in certain nourishing qualities while others supply bulk only. But what about our other bodies? What does the average person you pass on the street know about vitalizing himself and increasing his assimilative capacity emotionally, mentally and spiritually? Most people live in the belief that this is something over which they have no control and are prepared to accept whatever may come their way, more or less resignedly.

Brethren, I have repeatedly asserted that life is a school in which we have all been placed to learn. To learn how to live and create constructively for we have been told that we are "images of God, children of God, or Gods-in-the-making". Being children of God we are expected to express the Divine within us and this means expressing and developing all the divine attributes with which we are endowed.

The etheric body is not only the chemist in our body but is the restorer as well. It is to this etheric body that we owe sleep -- and the ability to sleep. Those who suffer from insomnia have their difficulty in the etheric which is stimulated into activity by the astral. Therefore, the seat of the insomnia is usually worry and concern over something, or over-stimulation by the etheric, preventing consequent sleep. Sleep is caused by a partial separation of the etheric from the physical. With those who are light sleepers, the separation is very slight. With the deep sleepers, the separation is more complete. During this partial disassociation another marvelous process is taking place; the etheric body is actually vitalizing and restoring the wear and tear of the physical body. That is why sleep is so important to all sick persons, for it is only during sleep that the etheric can do its work of restoration upon the physical. And if people could only understand the physics involved, they would realize that one hour of sleep before midnight is worth three hours of sleep thereafter.

When this partial disassociation takes place, relaxation of the physical becomes effective and proper recuperation is possible. The physical is then using up as much energy as it is taking in, no accumulation of reserve energy is taking place. It is through the etheric body that all etheric energies and powers are injected into the physical body, according to its needs. Some people have such recuperative powers that just a few hours of rest or sleep will re-energise them for a complete day's work. Others require many hours of sleep to accomplish the same results. The difference is due entirely to a healthy, normal, etheric body.

Endurance is an etheric quality, not a physical one. Frequently, a small, slender and even delicate-looking person will show a greater endurance than a bigger, or stronger looking person does. Were endurance a physical quality alone, a more robust individual would, logically, have the most. Your etheric body has control over your atomic structure and has the control of your energy in its keeping.

What effects do our thoughts have on our bodies? Medicine is admitting more and more the influence thoughts and emotions have upon health and now there is a department in medical science called "psychosomatic" dealing particularly with this question. Our thoughts actually do help to produce certain changes in our bodies; the pessimistic person frequently develops liver trouble because the liver is the organ (and the corresponding psychic center) through which the astral body, seat of our emotional nature, expresses most directly. It serves as an "inspector" in our system, inspecting every bit of food we consume. Under strain, whether mental or emotional, the liver quickly becomes unbalanced and its delicate interdependence becomes disorganized.

Aside from correct thinking and emotional habits, how can one correct inharmonious etheric conditions? Through the use of color, music and vibration in corrective therapeutics.

In all abnormal growths, the cellular structure is out of harmony -- and it is the etheric that is in direct charge of our cellular life. A biophysicist has estimated that a single liver cell contains 500,000,000,000,000 atoms. No human medicine has as yet been discovered to treat atoms on such a scale, but the etheric body exerts a control over the atomic energy confined in these figures because it is purely atomic itself. When the concentric points of the etheric are not in complete alignment with their corresponding polarities in the physical, disorganization takes place. That is what occurs when we say a limb has "gone to sleep" -- but we are aware of that -- we are not always aware of such disharmony when it is deep in some internal organ. There, foreign bodies or aggregations of cells grow where they do not normally belong. They are perfectly good cells but they have "lost their way", as it were.

In order to bring about a realignment, it is necessary to dissolve the surplus cells through a vibration of an harmonious nature, thus bringing about a reintegration of the etheric structure. In time to come, man will cure more by the use of vibration in its various forms -- colour, music, diet, rest and electrical frequencies -- than by medicine. It will be medicine, but a different kind of medicine, for is not medicine a curative agent used in healing the sick, a substance reputed to possess curative powers? But in order to be permanent, healing must take effect in the etheric and astral as well as the physical, otherwise the cause will not be reached.

As has been said previously, etheric healing is a matter of vibration. The same is true of the physical. In every-day language we use the terms 'stimulant' or 'sedative' which serve either to raise or lower our vitality and our vibratory status. The same condition is produced by our thoughts and those of our associates. Some persons stimulate us and make us feel better by their presence -- and others do the reverse. Were you able to see the vibrations emanating from these good folk and how they blend and react with or upon your own etheric and astral vehicles, you would understand the reason for the different reactions you feel.

THE ASTRAL BODY

The astral body is another duplicate of your physical structure but greatly differentiated and attenuated, with far less resistance than either the physical or etheric bodies. The astral body is frequently referred to as the emotional body, for it is in this body that we have the seat of our emotions. Its ingress into the physical body is through the liver, just as the ingress of the etheric is through the spleen. That is why life without these two organs is impossible -- the astral and etheric would have no means of reaching and animating the physical body.

Just as the etheric gives energy and vitality to our bodies, the astral gives it motion, impulse, propulsion and moving abilities. In cases of paralysis the astral is the seat of trouble, although physically it may be due to a blood clot. The astral was not on the job in moving the blood clot. Failure of motion of a clot caused the trouble, and that lack of motion reflects as lack of motion on the physical plane.

The astral body is as much a part of us as our bones, skin, muscles, etc.. The fact that we do not see it does not disprove its existence. No one has ever seen the mind. We do not see the air but without it we could not breathe. The same applies to our astral body. Without it our life expression would be confined to the vegetable kingdom. Were the astral to completely dissociate itself from the physical the heart would stop functioning. So long as there is life in the body the astral is still with us.

In his present evolutional status man is not only in the process of perfecting his astral body but in developing a mental one as well. His mental body is not a true body; only a sheath or covering. This development will occur in time but not until he has learned to use all his brain capacity. At present the most brilliant man on earth uses less than 1/3 of his brain. Man cannot express physically what he does not possess spiritually. The more we develop spiritually, the greater our physical perfection. We must all begin to understand the tremendous value of living full spiritual lives because of the effect upon us physically.

What do I mean by living spiritual lives? To determine this let me ask you a few questions:

1. What is it that you want out of life?
2. What is your innermost aspiration and goal?
3. What would you like to be, more than anything else?

If you will really delve deeply within yourself you will find the attainment of each one of these three questions involves spiritual qualities expressing physically.

Companions: there is one thing that we keep forgetting and that is: all life is spiritual in varying degrees of density. Our physical, etheric and astral bodies are each and all of the same substance, neither finer or courser than another but different in densities. To say that life on earth is "earthly" but elsewhere "spiritual" is simply a misuse of terms. All life is spiritual but how we use it determines whether we are living it fully and constructively or are misusing it and living emptily and therefore dissatisfied and unhappily. He who lives to himself alone, is empty, barren and unhappy, while he who lives for others and WITH others lives a full, rich and happy life.

At present much is being said and done about feeding our physical bodies but who is encouraging us to feed our MINDS with equal care? To what extent are we making sure that our thoughts are wholesome, vital, constructive, worth-while, balanced, creative, healthy, free from prejudice, hate, bitterness and all other destructive thoughts?

If our minds are crowded with wholesome thinking, there is'nt any room for mental growths, for we can develop mental growths as malignant as any physical malignancies. Man is so built that he cannot be thinking both destructively and constructively at the same time. Just as man has physical indigestion and anemia, -- he has them on the mental plane also. Mental indigestion is very common among intelligent people. This is brought on by the same law that operates on the physical plane, overeating, improper assimilation, etc.. To those who suffer physical indigestion -- watch your diet. So too for those who suffer mental indigestion, watch your reading, your thinking, your T.V. viewing. Give your mind a rest sometimes. Your mind should be carefully guarded in the same way that you would guard your stomach.

With regard to our emotions or the astral body, we all know what happens to persons who become emotionally unbalanced. They are truly amongst the unhappiest persons on earth. Since the astral body controls physical motion, all persons having emotional unhappiness should regain their balance through occupation, keeping busy, living active lives and doing things for others.

Why should man endeavour to control his emotions and his thoughts and to constantly raise them to the highest level he is capable of achieving? Because it is our feelings and our thoughts that are helping to build and perfect our astral body and mental sheath and it is these bodies which we will carry over to the spiritual world when the so-called "Great Change" takes place. These bodies are of vital need to us here and now but even more so in the life to come.

You should now be able to understand the great truth you so often read in the Great Book "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Our thinking and feeling make us what we are. Our thoughts are our most important character revealers and eventually manifest themselves on the physical plane not only in our actions and feelings but even in the expression on our faces. If thoughts can do this to us on the physical plane, which exercises the greatest resistance, what do you think they to our inner selves?

This is why the Initiates stress so much the importance of Right Thought, Right Feeling and Right Action. These are the building blocks of our physical and spiritual selves and these building blocks may be set in active functioning at any time in life. IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO BEGIN.

It is difficult enough under normal circumstances of living to develop control over our emotions and attitudes and by this I mean genuine control -- not a superficial control that passes today for good form and conventiality. Strange to say this is not a question of the alleged moralities. It is a matter of polarities. If we can conquer hate, we must love, for love & hate are the two poles of the emotional thermometer. Unless we have the graded scale of degrees back of a mercury tube, we cannot tell where boiling and freezing take place and there are many degrees in between. Likewise, on the emotional thermometer there are many degrees between hate & love, indifference, interest, liking, etc., but once we conquer hate and its analogues, we are on the upward grade in the attitudes that produce real culture and progress in life and that is what we are all seeking.

For purely practical reasons, we should strive to develop, cultivate and nourish an etheric and astral vehicle or body that will, in return, revitalize us with the clean, strong, unmixed energies of nature on the one hand and instill and inspire in us wholesome, justifiable wishes, hopes and ambitions, aspirations and emotions that will build us, and through us build our world environment -- that structure that is not made with hands, but eternal in the heavens, in the kingdom of our Father.

This astral condition is vastly more far-reaching than you may ordinarily suppose, for not only does every man and every woman have both the etheric and astral vehicles of motivation, activation and stimulation, but the world itself has exactly the same and through them it is played upon by the elemental cosmic forces or rays and by the emotional accumulations that adhere and inhere from centuries too remote for calculation. Everything that has ever taken place upon this planet is still with it in its planetary astral complement. Hence the struggle for existence, expressing in emotional as well as physical outbursts, since man has become what and who he is, manifests in continuous warfare. Never will mankind find total peace unless and until it develops control over these invisible but powerful inner motivating factors, bodies or vehicles, for according to the strict law, all things work together from within, outwardly.

As is written by the scribe of the Old Dispensation (Prov. 4:23) "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." In Matthew 12:34-37 it is said: "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. A good man, out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things; and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things. But I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgement". The accounting is what we call karma. The day of judgement is every day. The outer, physical body is not accountable for what we do, it is the inner bodies that are accountable and we wrongly seek to punish the outer for what the inner is really responsible.

Brethren, I have carefully avoided entering into a scientific description of the etheric and astral bodies, their locus and duration, in order not to becloud the real issue which is their importance AT ALL TIMES but especially right now in terms of individual stress, fear and insecurity. Inculcate in the astral body fearlessness; feed it on constructive reading and study, free from prejudice, cultivating intolerance of insensate hatred and trying to emancipate the spirit that is within each of you from superstition and limitation of thought and action. Do this by being simply being constructive in all things and at all times and in all ways. Be judicious in what you allow yourself to watch on T.V.. Those of you who rent video tapes have a wonderful opportunity to view constructive and instructive film. Do not be swayed by the mass who poison themselves with what is "popular" and "in fashion".

By so doing, you may yet find peace in the midst of strife, harmony amidst discord, love triumphant amidst the waves of hate, rest in the kingdom of God that knows no politics and that is forever within you.

May you continue to grow in the fullness of the stature of Christ.

EXAMINATION QUESTIONS

1. Do not proceed past this point until you have reread lecture # Supernumerary 15, in Liber 15. WHAT FURTHER UNDERSTANDING HAVE YOU GAINED?

---

2. This lesson covers a subject that you should be thoroughly founded upon and deeply understand. Why do you think this is of value?

3. Can you begin to truly appreciate the need of having all your bodies in synchronous harmony and how this harmony can strengthen your usefulness -- not only to yourself but to others -- and most important to your Creator?

4. These bodies of ours have a definite place on the Tree of Life and spiritual progress is impossible without them for they represent spiritual centers in our being.

5. Are you beginning to understand that our bodies are vehicles of Divine Grace and are necessary for a very definite purpose? What is that purpose?

6. By this time, brethren, if you have studied these lessons attentively and seriously and followed the spritual exercises in deep sincerity, you will have discovered for yourself that you do have the bodies mentioned and that the spiritual centers alluded to are realities and not just wishful imaginings.

   Have you wondered why we keep repeating in different ways the same truths, as though we felt you had not understood them before? Can you explain why we have and why we continue to do so?

7. Complete the following sentance by writing in the last three words. (The complete sentance is to be found on page 7).

You will recall that recently we were studying the history of the Martinist Order and also of the Federation of Initiatic Orders, the F.U.D.O.S.I.. Having taken a pause for some refreshment we will continue in our next Liber where we left off. On this occasion however, it is our pleasure to share with you an address delivered in August 1939 to the delegates at the FUDOSI conclave in Brussels, Belgium, by Sâr Hieronymus, who was Imperator of the Rose+Croix of Europe at the time, (Brethren will bear in mind that World War II began on September 1, 1939, just a few days after this address was given.)

"Why are you assembled together in this Temple? Because you are Initiates; and if I asked you why you are Initiates? It is because you have heard the mysterious calling: "You will become like unto God." But this time, it is not the serpent, sneaking out of Darkness that pronounced it, it is Christ in the resplendency of Divine Intelligence who proposed this new ascension to you. And what was a lie in the mouth of Satan becomes a power on the lips of Christ.

"To those he loves, He brings more than the revelations of salvation, He gives the complete vision of the mysteries of Heaven and of the Earth.

"Because you have chosen the right Path, because you want to live with the Angels and not with the beasts, God grants you His Light.

"By dint of aspiring toward the mountain summits, by dint of raising yourself toward the infinite celestial world, you have ceased to lie in the filth of the earth, and the paths of the messengers of God have become familiar to you.

"You have understood that the calling from on High was that of perfection, and that your possibility of perfectibility was limitless, each step preparing the following one.

"And it is to the highest point of spiritual improvement that the Rose+Croix Order means to lead you. You are the unknown Masters who, through the power of prayer, of uprightness and of the deeper and deeper knowledge of mystery, collaborate to the realization of the Divine scheme. You will become like unto God. In a world that is submitted to violence, you are the sacred Knighthood that will save, as the great Orders have done in the days of yore, the ideals of justice, of love and of charity.

"That which universe is in the look of man, the mystery of Christ is for you, the initiates who are searching for Light.

"Remember the words of Leonardo da Vinci: "Him who has once met Jesus shall never turn his gaze from Him".

"This meeting with the Master is the supreme grace that the Highest Power grants to the men of good will. Those who have not yet found Him on the path of their lives, if they do not resist spiritual truth, if they wait patiently and quietly, some day will meet Him, and on that day, all mysteries will be revealed unto them; they will be initiates in the highest meaning of the word; they will be Magi.

"The Magus lives in a domain where the nervous fluid, vehicle of evil, does not reach and where the power that the black Magician draws out of his cerebral substance with a view to harm you comes back against himself.

"Remember that if you are really above men, it is only because you loathe the abominations of the world, its false, ephemeral, debasing pleasures, and because you have chosen the path that rises towards Splendor; because you have consecrated your life to the prayer that creates an infrangible barrier against the material forces, and to the meditation that opens the inaccessible regions of the spiritual plane.

"It is why none shall truly be a Magus if he has not received the Sign of Christ, the anointment of the Holy Ghost, and if he does not participate in the immortal and radiant life of Christ.

"For those who have not been sufficiently prepared through religion to the practice of prayer, the most difficult point is to submit to the necessary discipline so as to raise themselves to that true prayer that puts the human soul in attunement with the Supreme Power.

"The occultist Masters, too often, do neglect this indispensable preparation, which, evidently has the character of absolute necessity only for brethren of the Rose+Croix.

"It is the mystical formation, of which the perfect medium is the meditative reading of the great mystics, like Louis de Blois, Saint Jean de la Croix, Ruysbroeck the Admirable, Juliana of Norwich, Saint Theresa of Avila. . .

"Study them with a pure and sincere heart and soon you will understand this word of the first Epistle to the Corinthians: "Spirit searches all things, yea, the deep things of God".

"And the more this spirit of brotherhood with the great mystics will detach you from the material world, the stronger you will become to dominate and conquer through prayer the enemies of Light.

"At the beginning of your initiation, you will revolt against the ascetic rule that is proposed to you, against the exterior forms that are the degrees of improvement; it is matter, in you, that is rebelling.

"Inert matter is the easy domain of the evil forces that are serving the enemy which, in the Bible, bears the dreaded name of - -

"Wherever matter is ruling, the powers of the black forces are ready to fight; even when it is idealized in the most beautiful paganism, matter conceals the insidious calling of the serpent.

"By itself, matter has no ideal, no beauty, no morality. The esthetical reflection of material things is in proportion with their spiritual harmony. Deprived of this direction, matter stirs up in spirit only the base instincts, selfish instincts, and opens the door to crimes, even to those that are a sin against nature.

"This is why it is our duty to combat materialism and selfishness in all their manifestations:

1. First of all in yourselves, by casting off the usual covetousness of man;
2. In the Order, by bringing into it the spirit of charity, of love, of confidence and of Light; by fighting against ignorance, which is an aspect of laziness, and also against the desire for material and intellectual wealth which is a temptation from the evil spirit.
3. Finally in the outer world, by spreading the true Light wherever you will go; by living the life of spiritual and radiating beings because there will be real peace only when men will act according to the ways of Spirit.

"Even if you have not, as yet, attained complete initiation in spiritual truth and if the fundamental creed of knowledge is not entirely in your heart, you must strive with all your might to the powerful union of all the spiritual forces, for the realization of an Order which will work side by side with the Church of Christ in the domain of intelligence as the Knighthood worked during the Middle Ages in the social field.

"The Order of the Rose+Croix is in reality the highest knighthood of our epoch, but all the Orders that serve the same ideal are also the servants of spirit.

"For this reason it is indispensable that they all keep up the same discipline and that none of them, through guilty negligence, may undergo condemnations that would make their spiritual work sterile, and that would place them under the yoke of the spirit of Darkness. Many Orders, which were honourable at their beginning, thus have fallen into the worst of errors, and have ended in contempt and oblivion.

"Nowadays it cannot be the same. I want to set up the helm right to Divine Truth that is the basis of all work of Light, and if some day I were to be convinced that I had been leading our Orders into the evil path, or even in a path that would be dangerous for the salvation of our brothers, I would prefer to break up the Orders and reject the sceptre,rather than to imperil them.

"Of yore, it has been necessary to warn of the pitfalls those who were waiting for the second coming of Christ, and who, in the white work, had let infiltrations penetrate, thus falling under the reprobation of the Abbot Barbier; and in May 1984 these blunders brought up the condemnation of Orders that were thoroughly respectable at their beginning.

"Forty-five years after this decree the question arises again upon an absolutely new plane of spirit.

"I believe that if one wants to combat with its own weapons the spirit of Darkness which, in its outer aspect is that of materialism, of selfishness and violence, one is led to go down unto the subterranean regions of thought, there where is to be hatched the eternal conspiracy against Light.

"Something has been changed in the world, but we would that the world be really transfigured by the establishment of the universal rule of Peace and Love. Before the Sovereign Master of all things whom the true R+C recognizes with a humble heart, we invoke Light and strength, so that being heartily attached to His divine revelation and to His teachings, we may pursue the realization of God's designs, so also that our watchful care be not surprised by pernicious infiltrations, that so many times have been stigmatized, and that might corrupt the work that has been entrusted to us.

"I wish that now my appeal may be heard in the remotest parts of the earth. Because in these last words of mine, I do not speak only to the Magii, but to all men of good will, to all men who are conscious of the mission and of the responsibility that has been placed upon them by the Master of all things!

"For a long time we have been living in a dark period of turmoil. The earth, thrown out of harmony through the disorders engendered by war, vainly attempted to recover its equilibrium, and more than ever for the last 20 years the menace is closing over it. The black forces are let loose upon the world. Materialism which, in man, takes the form of selfishness and in the nations that of violence, is pressing hard over the souls. The great ideals of love, of liberty, of universal charity are despised, and to the innate aspirations of man towards his celestial destiny, a paganism that is the pestilential blossoming of matter is opposed as a derivative. Wherever religion is persecuted, materialism is ruling as a master, to debase the individuals and to make of them the tools of an attempt of destruction.

"We clearly see where lies evil and we must conquer it. It is why I appeal to all men of good will to prepare a new crusade, the aim of which is not the sterile salvation of the empty sepulchre of Christ, but the salvation of the spiritual ideals, the loss of which would be the worse cataclysm that may befall humanity.

"You are the Knighthood of the Spirit, and I ask you to go wherever the combat makes a call upon you, to erect again the sacred labarum, to be present wheresoever the spiritual ideals are insulted, violated or even threatened. The luminous fate of the world lies between your hands, the future of humanity shall be the price of your victory.

"Like true knights of the Kingdom of God, go to the conquest of the Universe, of peace, of love, of fraternal charity.

"Nothing can resist to the mystical weapons of the Magus.

"Go and speak to men of their duty. God who has chosen you among His children shall ask you to account for what you shall have done for the instauration of His Glory."

Dear Companions:

As you know, we have been trying to present the Lyons Lectures of Saint-Martin in alternate Libers. You also know a great deal of trouble is beinging met with in obtaining the final draft, because of the "old style" French in which Saint-Martin wrote. Lecture #4, which was due to appear in this Liber is not yet ready, so we are obliged to defer it. Please be assured that the complete series of 10 lectures will be presented, but we ask for your patience and understanding if we are not able to bring them as originally scheduled.

We are very pleased however, on this occasion, to share the following Martinist Papers. Some were compiled by Robert Amadou; the last one is by Robert Amblain. They were translated from the French by Sâr Eliakim.

Martinism is a form of theosophy. What is theosophy then, in the Martinist context? The theosophist would answer the question thus: "a friend of L. C. de Saint-Martin".

A true theosophist is a friend of God and of wisdom. He is always keen and attentive to inspirations and revelations from God so that he may, in turn, inspire his fellow creatures through his examples and teachings. I say true theosophist here in order to alert the reader to the fact that there are those who are only interested in the speculative part of theosophy and therefore are not real theosophists. They could become one, if they have a true desire to do so, and commit themselves to follow the examples of the Repairer and put their trust in him. A true theosophist is in reality a true Christian, for their doctrines are the same. This doctrine is founded on the eternal relationships existing between God, Man and the Universe; and we find it in the Holy Scriptures of all peoples especially when we look at the spirit of what is written and not at the literal word.

Theosophists hold firm to their principles, never deviate and never argue; they try to convince others through reason and facts. If they cannot do so, they remain silent and lament over the errors which enslave their fellow man. They constantly pray that God further enlightens them and makes them ready to receive His truth, which is always self-evident once the mind is prepared and ready to acknowledge it.

Theosophists never try to form a sect around them nor ever take on disciples. They openly present the arguments for their beliefs and, when necessary, the reason for their inherent truths. Although they are often seen together, it is not that one has gathered them for a specific purpose, but it is more like friends of God wanting to be together.

The unity and fixed nature of their fundamental principles is what distinguish theosophists from the philosophers whose diversity of opinions incite them to defy any system whatsoever. Philosophy in general, which pretends to house all known truths also contains the most dangerous errors. We argue that those who approach it without first receiving the enlightenment that only the torch of wisdom can give, is leaving themselves open to all sorts of spiritual troubles. Only this torch can, if it deems us worthy, illuminate our paths and that of our brothers.

According to Joseph de Maistre, Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin was the most knowledgeable and the most wise of all the modern theosophists.

THE INITIATION

Although the Unknown Philosopher would never advocate the recruitment of Martinists, he would, however, like to see everyone become a Martinist. To study his works only on an intellectual level would be like betraying him; the Martinist must, in addition to studying, follow his teachings.

The Initiation, as it was established by Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin, is the goal of Martinism and of the Martinist. The goal of the Initiation is, according to Saint-Martin, for man to grow nearer to his principle -- which is God.

The means employed by the Martinist Initiation is that of the inner way or way of the heart. The heart is the organ of love, superior knowledge and active spirituality. It is a journey to the depth of the soul, an opening of the center from where everything comes from, in the sublime order of things, and this is where one has to incessantly work by priority. The rest is just added on. (1)

Martinism is only interested in the initiation which seeks to establish, or re-establish, affirm, and exploit the positive and universal relationship existing between God, Man and Nature. It seeks to teach and to live only for what is essential in life as in death whether individual or collective.

Outer initiation could be incidental; it is dangerous; however, when taken lightly (when the doors are wide open who knows who is going to enter). It should never be transmitted indiscriminately.

Since the time of Saint-Martin there were Martinists; students who wanted to be disciples.

Many societies nowadays claim to perpetuate the traditional teachings such as Saint-Martin transmitted them; for example the so-called "Rectified Scottish Rite"; but, most importantly, a society was founded under its patronage in 1887: The Martinist Order.

Within it, as well as within all the other Martinist Orders that have come out of it, a ritual initiation is conferred. The same initiation is conferred from person to person and from Martinist Initiate to Martinist Initiate outside of any organizational structure. Let us point out, however, that the simpler the Martinist rite of initiation is, the closer it is to what Saint-Martin and Papus had in mind.

Modern western society whose culture tends to become that of the world, has so many schools of initiation which do not seem to be making very much impact for good in the world. It remains that the communion of saints allows the private initiate to contribute to the sustenance of the world in its very existence and to seek his own awakening by opening himself.

Among the surrounding confusion, Martinism, among few schools, works for the common good and provides a sure and authentic way of initiation.

(1) By working on one's priority, which is: growing closer to God (according to L. C. de Saint-Martin), everything else (in the individual's life as well as spiritual gifts) is just added on and one does not have to actively seek it.

WHAT IS MARTINISM?

Conscious of the reality of being a regenerated man by the baptism in Jesus Christ, Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin noticed that to actualize this regeneration, which is left to the free will of man, is not what the baptized ones have in mind. They ignore their identity and continue to live in iniquity.

> "These beings that wisdom have placed on the earth to vivify one another are doing nothing more than hurting each other and promoting chaos.
> Are you like this unfortunate person who, for having lived in iniquity for so long thinks that this state is the natural order of things?"

WHAT SHOULD ONE DO ?

The task is to return to our fundamental principle of unity, to God, by living this lost unity:

Let us go in spirit to this future unity and let us forget that we have divided it among us ...mortals. If you ever find yourselves in such a state of anxiety, do as I do ("I go to my friend" - Jesus Christ); then peace will be reborn in your hearts and you will feel how sweet and powerful is the Lord and how easily he can alleviate what ails you. He is the only one who can show us the way."

WHAT SHOULD ONE DO ?

Direct one's will and freedom in the way of this Unity, which we recognize as God Himself, manifested by Jesus who is Christ and Lord; all the rest will be added unto you according to your degree of receptivity...

To this effect, "Purify yourself, ask, receive, act; the whole task is in these four modes."

"The first degree of wisdom is the fear of God; the second, thirst for all the virtues; the third, love of universal and individual man; the fourth, love of the sovereign being and of his spirit..."

By following these paths, we begin slowly but surely to identify ourselves with Jesus, the new Adam, in whom all perfection became flesh. We have to understand the profound link which unites our death to that of Jesus; we have to enter into him and be like unto him and then we can be associated with his resurrection.

"At all times in our lives we must resurrect ourselves from the dead."

THE MARTINIST PENTACLE

The Martinist panticle (penticle) consists of a geometrical figure given by Saint-Martin. It behooves us then to seek the first explanation of it from the Unknown Philosopher himself.

"Independently of the numerical proofs that we find in the theosophical addition of the numbers 3 and 4 in order to prove that 4 is a central number and 3 a number of circumference, the laws of geometry provides us with convincing demonstrations to make us distinguish our origin from that of matter; to show us our superiority to the physical world, our direct relation to our principle and the immortal duration of our being which drew its life from immortality itself.

"All these truths are found written in the circle which is naturally divided into six parts. The natural circle formed itself differently from the artificial circle of the geometricians. The center called the superior triangle and the inferior triangle which, by reacting upon one another manifested life. Then quaternary man appeared. It would be impossible to find this quaternary in the circle without using the lost and superfluous lines which we must -- if we were following the limiting methods of the geometricians. Nature looses nothing; it coordinates all the parts of its creation, the ones for the others. Also, in the circle she herself traced, we see that the two triangles, by uniting, determine the emancipation of man in the universe as well as his place in relation to the divine center. We see that matter only receives life from the reflection coming out of the opposition that the true experiences from the false, light from darkness, and that the life of this matter is always dependent upon two actions. We see that the quaternary of man embraces the six regions of the universe and that these regions, being linked two by two, shows how the power of man exercises a triple quaternary in the sojourn of his glory.

"This is where the laws of this superb knowledge is manifested and which the Chinese refer to when talking about the knowledge of the keu-ku. Man, by prevaricating like the first sinners, distanced himself from the divine center where he was placed. But, although he distanced himself, the center always remained his place since no other power can usurp this formidable throne: "Sedes tua in saeculun saeculi" ("Your throne lasts forever" this is a quotation from a Psalm). When man left this glorious post, it is Divinity itself which replaced him there and manages his power for him in the universe since he lost it by his crime. But, as soon as she took the place of man she became dressed with the same colours which are attached to the material regions where he was first placed (the height of the body of man is equal to eight times that of his head), since one cannot place one's self in the center of this temporal circle without placing one's self in the center of all these regions. This is what the study of the natural circle can teach intelligent eyes. Although the figure is imperfectly drawn, it is more than sufficient to put one on the path."

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF MARTINISM

Papus founded the Martinist Order as an initiatic body where the members are linked in the uninterrupted chain of initiation, thereby reaping the benefits of a spiritual influx emanating from the divine realm.

What is initiation?

According to L. C. de Saint-Martin, "the true meaning of the word 'initiate' from the Latin root means to bring closer to, to unite to the principle. The Latin word 'initium' also means principle as well as beginning."

Therefore, for Saint-Martin, "The goal of initiation is to bridge the gap between man and the Light, in other words, to bring him closer to his principle by replacing him in the state where he was in the beginning."

This concept is perfectly compatible with the doctrine of reintegration taught to Saint-Martin by Martinez Pasquales and from what we see of the former's writings, to consider initiation as a means of acquiring "power" would be a grave error, a veritable sin against the spirit.

The initiation which is conferred by rites does not give a sacramental grace to those who receive it. It is "virtual", meaning that it provides forces which allow those who know how to utilize them, by an incessant work upon the self, to make them "effective".

This is why L. C. de Saint-Martin writes:

> "The only initiation which I preach and seek with all the ardour of my soul is that by which we may enter into the heart of God, and make God's heart enter into us, there to form an indissoluble marriage, which will make us the friend, brother and spouse of our Divine Redeemer ('the violent take it by force' Matt, 11:12). There is no other mystery, to arrive at this holy initiation, than to go more and more into the depths of our beings, and not let go until we can bring forth the living, vivifying root, because then all the fruit we ought to bear, according to our kind, will be produced within us and without us naturally; as we see in the case with earthly trees, because they are adherent to their own roots, and incessantly draw in their sap."

Thus is defined the specific initiatic method of Martinism that Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin called the "inner way" and Papus called the "way of the heart" of the "creative emotion in all the planes".

What is the Way of the Heart?

The nature of this way is not one where the work of the intellect is excluded or suppressed. Papus himself said that "Martinism is above all an Order where superior principles are taught as well as being a center of high studies". He specifies the nature of these studies by saying that the Order "is formed to propagate the teachings of the occult".

It is important not to confuse the meaning of the word "occult" or Occult Science (science of that which is hidden) or as Papus defined it: Science of the Invisible with low psychism which claims extraordinary powers, able to produce "manifestations" and able to communicate with entities from beyond. Martinists always warn against this form of "occultism".

We know that the Invisible can manifest itself to man in diverse ways, all the more reason why these phenomena must be taken seriously and not given credence until having been scrutinized and even then with great caution.

If we think that we have experienced such manifestations, let us first start by not talking about them and submit them to doubt. Let us not confuse our desires for reality. Let us beware of our imagination. Let us above all be beware of the temptations that the spirit of darkness may stir up in us so as to give us the illusion of being privileged thus delaying our spiritual progress. Let us beware, finally, of practices, magical or otherwise, that could disturb one's psychic equilibrium. Remember what Papus wrote: "Martinists do not practice magic, black or white. They study, pray and, to the best of their abilities, forgive those who hurt them".

STUDY, for the Martinist, does not mean to collect diplomas from schools, or seek to know diverse things that are not important. It means to apply one's self by using one's intellect to understand the laws of nature in order to progressively raise himself from that base to the height of the Supreme Wisdom which governs the Universe.

PRAY, does not mean to recite lengthy orisions. It is to open one's self to God, to place one's self in a state of perpetual readiness to receive the Creator at whatever level He reveals Himself.

FORGIVE, does not mean to verbally proclaim a condescending pardon to those who hurt us. Forgiveness is the first requirement of the "way of the heart". It must be sincere and without any mental reservation, to the point of forgetting the injury. We could lie to ourselves in this matter; but, "the One who knows what is in the hearts" would know the quality of our pardon.

We see from the above definitions how difficult is the "way of the heart" and that it is not a sentimental practice we are trying to develop. Papus said that "Emotions are of a creative nature on all planes", and this "creative nature" comes from the CREATOR who is the source of universal life, making the influx of the emotion of a divine nature and this emotion is LOVE in the most exalted sense of the word.

The abuse of this word is a veritable blasphemy. Martinists are careful when using it since it contains the "economy" of the Initiation.

"...enter into the heart of God, and make God's heart enter into us..."

ADVICE TO THE NEWCOMER WHO DESIRES TO STUDY THE OCCULT

by

Papus

#166

1. Always choose a center where prayer (of whatever cult) is practiced.

2. Remember that the true Masters do not write books. They place simplicity and humility above all science. Beware of pontifs and men who claim to be perfect.

3. Never forsake your freedom by an oath which binds the individual either to a clergy or secret society; only to God should one ever take an oath of passive obedience.

4. Remember that all invisible power comes from the Christ, God coming into the flesh through all the planes, and never enter, in the invisible, in relations with an astral or spiritual being who does not confess the Christ in this manner. Do not seek to obtain "power", wait for heaven to grant it to us if we are worthy.

5. Never judge the actions of others and never condemn our neighbours. All spiritual persons, by trials or sufferance or by a life of devotion, can obtain his salvation whatever be his Church or philosophy. Be he Christian, Jew, Muslim, Buddhist, or free thinker, all human beings have the necessary faculties to evolve to the celestial realm. Judgement belongs to the Father and not to men...

6. Have the certitude that Man is never abandoned by heaven, even in times of negation and doubt, and that we are in the physical realm for others and not for ourselves.

7. Remember that physical purification by diet is childishness if it is not accompanied by astral purification, charity, silence, spiritual purification and the effort not to think or say ill of others be they present or absent. Know that prayer, which gives the peace of the heart, is preferable to all forms of magic, which only gives pride.

Dear Companions: #167

During the early part of our sojourning, the majority of questions and comments we received had to do with reincarnation. Nowadays, by far, the greatest interest and enthusiasm is directed towards the Martinist Doctrine, especially since Liber 37. At this time, then, we are taking the Doctrine one step further and trust the following paper will be appreciated:

THE MARTINIST DOCTRINE

Like all other esoteric doctrine, that of Martinism, as it was defined by Martinez Pasquales in his Treatise on the Reintegration of Beings uses exoteric means in order to make understandable the more subtle and refined esoteric points which are incomprehensible to the uninitiated when explained in themselves. The legend or myth upon which the Martinist doctrine is based is the reason why it is so intrinsically attached to the Western Tradition and more particularly the Christian current.

Concerning the First Cause or God, Martinism is in agreement with the conclusions arrived at by the Christian theologians as well as the Hebrew Kabalists such as the divine ternary, or persons; emanations etc... but as far as the rest of the doctrine is concerned, it is more Gnostic since it affirms the equal necessity of faith & knowledge and postulates that divine grace, in order to be effective, must be followed by action, free and intelligent in Man. This is why Martinez Pasquales presented the Doctrine of his school under the Judeo-Christian aspect.

THE DOCTRINE

According to the Martinist Doctrine, the world, considered as a material domain which is subjected to our senses, as well as the spiritual regions above are not the works of God as considered in His absolute form.

The Gospel of Saint John says: "In the beginning (which refers to the beginning of time, a period when relative beings began to manifest) was the Word (the Logos, the divine Word).

"The Word was near to God" (and not with God).

"...and the Word was god" (not the God but an Elohim or son(s) of God. The word Elohim is a Hebrew word meaning "Him-the-gods").

"All things were made by him, and nothing was made without him."

This Logos is the one the Kabala calls Adam Kadmon; the one who created the inferior beings "by his word" by "calling" (bringing) them into manifested life. These beings are inferior only in relation to Adam Kadmon, the Archetypal Man, but they inhabit the spiritual realms.

During this creation God used an intermediary. In Genesis chapters 1-3 it is said that the Earth (which there means the primordial matter or chaos) was empty and without form, and the Spirit of God moved upon the waters (the Egyptian Nous is comparable to this matter). The term "Spirit of God" is referring to a spirit distinct from God in the sense that it was'nt God Himself since God is necessarily His own Spirit.

Later we are told that God placed Man in the "Garden of Eden" to watch and cultivate it. This "garden" is a symbol referring to divine knowledge accessible only to relative beings.

The Man which Genesis refers to in its pure symbolic form is not a being of flesh but a spirit emanated from God and is made of a body (which is sometimes called the "glorious" body) created by God which He infused with a divine spark which was, according to Genesis, the very Breath of God. According to this analysis, we see that Archetypal Man is semi-divine. He came from primordial matter (from chaos, made of symbolic earth and water) from where he got his form, and from the breath which animates him and makes him part of God.

Adam and the Creative Logos are the same thing. However, Adam and the Redemptory Logos are two different beings.

Parallel to Adam Kadmon, there were other beings from a previous creation. These beings were of a different nature and plane. These were the "Angels" of which it is said that some were good and others evil. They got these qualities according to their fulfillment of the plan for which God emanated them. The "good" Angels were the ones who reintegrated after their mission was over and the evil ones were those who refused to reintegrate, choosing the self instead of the ALL-IN-GOD. The "evil" Angels are the ones who withdrew themselves from God by an act of free will. They are the ones referred to by Pasquales as the perverse beings.

Since everything which is corrupt tends by its very nature to corrupt other things, especially in the spiritual realm, these perverse beings of which the collectivity becomes an EGGREGORE of evil, symbolized by the serpent, was jealous of this being (Adam) who was superior to them and an image of God from whom they pretended to have withdrawn. These beings acted telepathically on Adam and incited him to go beyond the limits of his natural possibilities.

Being mixed by nature, half corporeal and half spiritual, as well as androgynous, Archetypal Man was to maintain a certain harmony, a necessary equilibrium in the domain where God put him. He was to be the Architect of a Universe more subtle than our own, the "Kingdom" which is not of this world as mentioned in the Gospels.

Under the impulse of the perverse beings, Archetypal Man made himself an independent demiurge, thereby breaking the very laws he was ordained to observe. He dared to make himself a creator in turn and to be equal to God by his deeds. By attempting this feat, Archetypal Man only modified his original destiny. It is from this tradition that comes the custom of dedicating to the gods or God the first fruits of a harvest or the first-born of a flock. And since

God alone in His infinite possibilities can create or extract something out of nothingness, Archetypal Man could only modify what already existed.

Archetypal Man, by wanting to create spiritual beings, only objectified his own concepts. By wanting to give them a body he only integrated them into grosser matter. By wanting to animate chaos, he only trapped himself.

In effect, God, being the "I am that I am" rejects the possibility that any oblivion can exist. In order to create primitive matter, God only removed part of His infinite perfections from a part of His infinite essence. This partial retraction of His Spiritual Perfection ended in the creation of a relative material imperfection. This is why in this world the creation of whatever it may be, can never be perfect since it is not of God.

By imitating the Absolute, Adam Kadmon tried to create a first matter. Being an inexperienced alchemist, to attempt such an endeavour only precipitated his Fall.

Archetypal Man is an androgynous being: both male and female, positive and negative. It is the negative, feminine element that Adam is going to objectify outside himself. It is the left, feminine, passive, lunary, material side that he is going to separate from the right, masculine, active, solar, spiritual side. This is what gave birth to Eva, the Archetypal Woman.

It is this new matter, the Eva or Archetypal Woman, that Adam penetrated in order to create life. The Archetypal Man thus degraded himself by trying to be like God. This new domain is what the Gnostics referred to as the "helic" world, which is our material universe filled with pain and imperfections. The little good that exists here comes from the virtue of Archetypal Man. Since being split into two beings, the sum of these perfections cannot be in its totality with those two beings apart ... thus we have the Fall.

This is why the old cults deified nature. She was the mother of all that was "under the heavens". Isis, Eva, Demeter, Rea, Cybele, Erzulie, are the symbols of material nature which is emanated from Adam Kadmon, personified by the "Black Virgins" who are symbols of the prima materia.

The superior essence of Adam Kadmon thus integrated in the new matter to become the SULPHUR, which is the alchemical expression referring to the soul of the world. The second essence which is the plastic mediator, that which constituted the "form" of Adam, his superior double became the MERCURY of the alchemists, referring to what occultists call the astral world or intermediary world.

The matter which came from the second chaos, which is the SALT of the alchemists, is what became the support, receptacle or prison.

ADAM = SULPHUR
EVA = SALT
CAIN = MERCURY

This is why universal matter is alive and, also, why it can be more or less conscious and intelligent in its manifestations. Through the four kingdoms of nature: mineral, vegetable, animal, and human, it is the Archetypal Man, the Adam Kadmon, the demiurgic intelligence who is in action dispersed and imprisoned. This new universe also became the refuge of the fallen angels. They came into it in order to be further away from the Absolute.

The perverse beings thus have a primordial interest to see that Man, dispersed but everywhere present in matter which constitutes the visible universe, continues to organize and animate this domain which they have claimed.

Just as the soul of Archetypal Man is prisoner of Universal Matter, so the soul of individual man is prisoner of the physical body. Physical death and the re-incarnations which follow are the means through which the fallen entities exercise their control over Man.

The Wisdom, Strength and Beauty that are still manifesting in this material universe are the efforts of Archetypal Man to regain his position which he occupied before the Fall. The opposite qualities are being manifested by the fallen entities so as to maintain the climate that they made him create in order to exist as they wanted when they refused to re-enter Omneity.

Archetypal Man will not regain his first splendour and freedom unless he separates himself from this matter which binds him everywhere. For this to occur, all his individual cells (individual human beings) will have, after their natural death, to reconstitute the Archetype by R E I N T E G R A T I N G, thus escaping the cycles of reincarnation.

Only then will the Microcosm remake the Macrocosm. The individual human beings, who are but the reflection of the Archetype, will equally be the reflection of the divine as the Archetype himself is the reflection of God, of the Word or Logos, of the "Spirit of God" mentioned in Genesis.

This is why he is the "Great Architect of the Universe"; and all cults of adoration to this latter are ipso facto "satanic" because this adoration is offered to Man and not to the ABSOLUTE. In Freemasonry he is invoked but never adored.

But, since Man has to descend into the demoniacal atmosphere of this material world where he is constantly breathing the fruits of his malefic intellect, as Pasquales tells us, he is thus in a bad position to resist the constant temptations to which he is subjected. The CREATOR re-established the equilibrium by detaching from His Spiritual Divine Circle a Major Spirit to be the guide, counselor and companion of the Minor who descends from the celestial immensity to be incorporated in the material world; to work, according to his free will, on the earth plane.

But the counsel of a Superior Spirit is not enough, Fallen Man still needs the help of a "Minor Elect". The help that this "Minor Elect" will bring to him in order that he may achieve the "reconciliation" is of a twofold nature. He transmits to Man directly the instructions of the CREATOR on the theurgic practice which must be rendered; and, he also communicates to the Man of Desire to whom he is sent, the gift he has received himself by giving him the mystical seal without which no Minor can be reconciled.

This mysterious ordination is the essential condition of Man's reconciliation, because without it, no matter how great the personal merits of the Minor, he remains in privation; that is, without any communication with God.

To escape the cycles of reincarnation in this infernal world, man must detach himself from everything that attracts him to matter as well as disengage himself from the slavery of material sensations. He also has to elevate himself morally. The fallen entities, however, constantly fight man's tendency towards perfection by tempting him constantly so as to make him stay in this world where they can maintain their rulership over him.

Individual man must constantly fight against these entities by unmasking and rejecting them from his domain. He will achieve this partly through initiation, which attaches him to the elements of the Archetypes already reunited and which constitute the exoteric "communion of Saints" -- and secondly by the liberating knowledge which teaches him the faster means of helping the rest of blind humanity as well as enhancing his personal work.

In these last possibilities we find the great Equinoxal Operations which tend to purify the aura of the Earth by means of exorcisms and conjurations using rites of High Magic that the Elus-Cohens called the work of the Cult.

Only after these individual liberations will the great collective liberation take place. This will allow the reconstitution of the Archetype and its reintegration into the Divine. Once abandoned by its animator, the material world will dissolve. Left under the anarchic nature of the fallen spirits, matter will dissolve in an accelerated pace and thus the end of the physical universe will take place as announced by the great traditions.

Thus is the esoteric unfoldment of the Great Universal Work.

QUESTIONS

(1) Who is the Redemptory Logos?

(2) Is the Spirit of God (Genesis I:2) and Archetypal Man, the same?

LA VIE DU PHILOSOPHE INCONNU

Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin est né à Amboise, le 18 janvier 1743. A trois ans, il perd sa mère; à six ans, il trouve une mère qui incarne la mère idéale. Elle l'enchantera. Les études commencées avec un précepteur, se poursuivent au collège de Pontlevoy (1755-1759), puis à la Faculté de droit de Paris (1759-1762), d'où il sort licencié. Premières lectures, premières empreintes : Abadie, Burlamaqui (il adhère), la tourbe philosophique (il réagit là-contre); et, bien sûr, les romans, le théâtre, la poésie tant des anciens que des classiques et des contemporains (il goûte et prend garde). La musique le séduit pour la vie : théorie de l'harmonie et pratique du violon.

S'il avait occupé plus de six mois (1764-1765) l'office d'avocat du roi au bailliage et siège présidial de Tours, il eût sans doute succombé à la tentation, qu'il avouera, de se suicider. L'état militaire lui agrée davantage. Il y demeure six ans (1765-1771). Dès son arrivée au Foix-Infanterie, alors stationné à Bordeaux, des camarades le devinent et l'initient aux mystères maçonnico-théurgiques des Élus Cohen : initiation selon l'externe. A partir de 1769, il passe ses quartiers d'hiver auprès de Martines de Pasqually, fondateur et grand souverain de l'Ordre, son premier maître. En 1771, il abandonne le service pour mieux suivre « la carrière ». Il réside à Lyon, en Touraine, à Paris surtout où le succès équivoque du livre des Erreurs et de la vérité l'introduit dans le monde. Par deux fois, il visite l'Italie (1774 et 1787-1788), un voyage le mène à Londres (1787). Vite, il s'est méfié des chapelles, sauf à y porter la bonne parole et la discorde; sauf aussi qu'à Lyon, en 1785, il s'éprend des communications médiumniques de l' « Agent Inconnu ». Il ne tarde pas à s'en déprendre, mais il en gardera la trace : c'était du martinésisme sauvage.

*Surgit, à Strasbourg, en 1788, son deuxième maître, le cordonnier illuminé de Goerlitz, son chérissime Jakob Boehme (1575-1624), qu'il rencontre grâce aux ouvrages à lui tendus par sa chérissime Charlotte de Boecklin; Jakob Boehme dont il ne tâchera plus qu'à célébrer le mariage avec Martines. La Révolution française l'éprouve et l'emplit d'espoir; la providence y place la mort de son père (1793). Thermidor arrive à point pour que sa situation ne se gâte. Très attentif, Saint-Martin se renseigne amplement, mais enseigne avec discrétion, dans maintes conférences particulières et dans une conférence publique avec Garat, en 1793; dans des livres de marche moyenne, souvent lente. Aucun discours de lui qui n'encourage l'homme de désir et ne lui apprenne, au-delà de l'*ecce homo, comment et pourquoi naît le nouvel homme, auquel incombera le ministère de l'homme-esprit. Le Philosophe Inconnu, comme il avait obtenu qu'on le désignât, mourut le 14 octobre 1803, à Châtenay près Paris, assez ignoré et fort mal compris.

L'ignorance et l'incompréhension n'ont pas encore disparu. Car les causes en persistent.

Le ressort de l'homme vibrait en son cœur de penseur et d'apôtre romantique, d'amoureux nostalgique de toutes les amours, persuadé qu'un seul est nécessaire et condamne les autres. Qu'en percevraient les gens du torrent? De même leur échappe-la clé de ses livres, qui est le système de la réintégration par la régénération de l'homme. Il décida d'y sacrifier une partie de sa vie, une partie de lui-même. En discernant cette clé, on réhabilite, dans leur vérité trine, Saint-Martin et ses livres et le sacrifice de l'auteur à son œuvre, laquelle n'avait, en fin de compte, d'autre but que de détourner les hommes, y compris leur auteur, de tous les livres sans en excepter les siens.

Dear Companion

Previously, because of its great content, Liber 41 was issued as 41/42. The lectures that are enclosed in this Liber were later chosen for insertion at this point so we rescheduled 41/42 as 41 and have assigned 42 to this Liber.

Your last Liber (41) and this one, (42), place in your hands an incredible amount of information. Spiritual development, however, calls for the practical use of the principles. The expansion of your consciousness, the ability to perceive clearly, the POWER to act rightly when the solution is seen, the moulding of yourself into an upright, just and beautiful person, requires EFFORT! There are no magic words, no servant who can do the work for you ... you cannot acquire QUALITIES by wishful thinking ... or by osmosis!

The TECHNIQUES we are sharing with you are the most potent there are but you must take the information and USE it! This means doing the "exercises". We are sharing information in abundance from many different traditional streams ... sift out what is particularly useful to you ... and USE IT!

Do not become simply a walking encyclopedia! FAITH WITHOUT WORKS IS DEAD.

PHILOSOPHICAL SYNTHESIS

SPIRIT

The existence of the spirit is something that is evident "per se". In addition, Spirit is indestructible, meaning immortal. The proof is that no one has ever been able to destroy it. Were that possible, man would have done it a long time ago. Here one must not confuse Spirit with the forms it animates and uses for its expression. This is a mistake that is commonly made.

Materialistic science postulates that matter gives rise to Spirit, meaning that it is matter that gives birth to Spirit. If this was so, one would have to ask under what impulse!

Everyone can see that when the Spirit leaves the form this latter withers away, putrefies and finally dissolves, returning to the prima materia, or plasma.

Profane science only studies the phenomena which are accessible to the senses and it attempts to enlarge these areas which in themselves are very limited. This is not a sufficient reason to make one admit that the clock made the clock-maker because no one saw the clock-maker. It is, on the contrary, absolutely rational to conclude by daily observation, that Spirit works upon matter and acquires from this work a certain experience or consciousness which becomes a veritable patrimony or soul. This becomes, in a way, the electronic memory of experiences programmed and executed by the Spirit. Each being, while evolving in all the Kingdoms has a soul, -- in fact, its past, -- and the integration in the group, species, nations, engenders the collective souls.

Nowadays, everyone can understand this, and the religions are wrong not to explain this more clearly. It is the Spirit that is the sole motor of evolution. One has to recognize this fact.

Matter can, in relation to our senses, assume various forms. Through acceleration, for example! If you attach a stone to a rope and, using this rope as a radius, swing the stone (here you are the Spirit) faster and faster, there will come a time when you will see neither the stone or the rope. This would not mean that they have ceased to exist, its existence is even more tangible than when at rest as you would find out if you interfere with the trajectory.

We know Einstein's formula $E=mc2$, m = mass and c = the speed of light. This is a limited speed in our physical world, for the simple reason that, if it accelerates, the matter which is the object sublimates itself and -- (one must use a neologism) -- it etherializes itself. From this moment the laws which govern it change and this is precisely one of the great preoccupations of modern science, to try to discover these principles.

We can also sublimate the formula of energy and apply it, not to a limited but to an infinite acceleration and we know that to an infinite acceleration corresponds an infinite mass, we obtain:

SPIRIT = MC

The derivation of this f(C) gives the infinitude of the creations (experiences) and the integral, the return to the absolute zero, is the "respiration" of God.

M = Universe and C gives an explanation of the sentence: "I Am that I Am," meaning the Eternal Present, where the Spirit is conscious, and at the same time, simultaneously, of the past, of the present, of the future. It is truly the equation of God. One has to be extremely thoughtless that we are going to find this in orbit, at a few kilometers from the grain of sand that is earth, or from the scalpel of the surgeon.

CREATION

Having admitted this primary hypothesis, one has to recognize that this omnipotence must do something, like the engineer who conceives of a plan for a machine or an architect who builds a house. In effect we observe, in nature, meaning in the world, a multitude of creations, of forms, animated by various degrees of evolution, by the Spirit: minerals, vegetables, animals, and human beings. At the human stage, the Spirit is inside the forms of the bodies and in the three other less evolved kingdoms, the Spirit (here called group-Spirit) is outside and directs the forms through instinct, always the same for the same species, for the same group.

With time, the Spirit will also animate gradually, from the inside, the forms of the other kingdoms, in order to take them to the human stage, when this stage itself will be surpassed by man. We believe too much in a static universe while, in fact, everything is moving and transforming itself.

Notice that it always has to do with the evolution of forms, of vehicles, of bodies -- call it what you want -- as a natural consequence the evolution of souls, meaning the sum of the experiences or consciousness of the Spirit, itself distributed by the Infinite great Source, through a limitless number of sparks of manifestation. This also explains that the soul is not immortal, like the Spirit, that one can loose it -- (Matt. XVI:26) -- transfer it, sell it (black magic) and that notably the elementals created by magicians evidently do not possess a soul.

Mystics understand this and express their love for all creatures like, for example, a Saint Francis of Assisi when he says: "My sister, water" or when he talks to the trees and to the birds.

It is evident a priori that there must exist other kingdoms and other forms of which we are unaware. And since these superior beings must certainly co-operate with evolution we call them Creative Hierarchies.

If the inner Spirits which animate the forms obey the laws of evolution and notably reproduce these vehicles under the control of these more evolved Hierarchies, everything goes smoothly.

THE FALL
(In Spiritual Quarantine)

Among these waves of life some of these Spirits, possessing free will, begin to think and to believe that they can do just as well or better, without any guidance. Then comes confusion, revolt and the Fall.

This Fall into an inferior and more dense environment, causes a slow down in evolutionary progress and if those who are trailing -- stubborn and prideful but intelligent -- realize the state of their catastrophic situation, they will latch on to, if possible, a wave of life of inferior forms in order to pursue experiences of consciousness at no cost.

Let us here remember what men do in their laboratories of vivisection and the slaughterhouses.

It is thus that we have become the guinea pigs of trailing waves of life superior to our own. Their influence acts upon what we have as the most evolved part of our vehicles: the spinal column, going from the sexual plexus where the creative force resides, to the brain, seat of the intellect. Draw this column with the encephalic swelling at the top and you will have a sketch of the serpent of Genesis.

The humanity of that time was androgynous (i.e. had both sexes in one body), in its etheric vehicles (Eden is an etheric region and not a physical one), in order to construct a personal central nervous system (mind), and used the polarization of the sexual force under the control of the Hierarchies.

One pole created the brain and the other made up the force employed for the reproduction of forms or diverse vehicles.

Adam (here the name stands for a collective being just as the word necklace stands for the whole string of pearls) used the positive element for reproduction and the negative for the brain. Eve (feminine collectivity) was doing the contrary.

The procreation or reproduction of forms to be animated was done unconsciously under the control of the more evolved waves of life (Elohim), by bringing closer together the two polarities of the sexual force of creation at well defined periods, at the time when circumstances were favorable, because then, as now, the evolution of the waves of life was being realized in planetary electromagnetic fields of an immense and still little known power. As soon as feminine humanity or Eve, more sensitive to the influence of the free will of the trailing beings of evolution that we have called Lucifers (because they have, after all, brought a light of consciousness in the pains and sufferings of our errors) thought that she could do without the control of the intervention of the Hierarchies to procreate forms, she used masculine humanity and hence "Adam knew Eve". This was the catastrophe of the Fall! Original sin is not the sexual act itself, which is necessary for the procreation of forms but its untimely accomplishment, i.e. without the control of the creative hierarchies.

This is the symbolism of the apple. (In latin = malum = also evil): Cut in half on its axis, it gives an image of the female organs (buttocks and vagina) and cut horizontally it gives the image of a pentagram, that of the fifth Kabalistic Arcane, that of human will applied to reproduction.

In fact, we have played the role of apprentice sorcerers and we have embarked ourselves in terribly lamentable adventures of which the net result has been the densification of the vehicles that we stubbornly commit ourself to blindly reproduce in "moments of force" which do not suit them.

This was, in general terms, the starting of the creation of karma (destiny), in the binary or more dense world, more material than the Fall, our present platform of evolution, where all the qualities of the world of the Unique (Pleroma) have found their contraries. Since then, one had to nourish these bodies that have become more materialized and suffer a thousand pains and a thousand deaths.

It is not a vengeful God who created this Hell where we are presently fighting, it is we who are solely responsible, by our perverse ways. There is no worse blasphemy than to repeat these sentences that are so often spoken: "What have I done to God to merit this or that?" or "If God really exists he would stop this or that!" God, the Spirit, does not punish, never punishes. It is the divine laws of evolution which play and simply sanction the faults.

EVOLUTION

Evidently, these creations (births), these losses (deaths), are like successive vehicles that could be compared to the clothes we hang in a closet. If we take care of them we will always find them in good condition, if not, then they will require constant repair and special care.

Every night, our Spirit (Monad or Ego) leaves its vehicles, in order to recuperate in more subtle planes where it integrates its experiences just acquired and often translates them in symbolical and sometimes prophetic dreams.

There exists then, during the course of a life, every time we wake up, more or less numerous incarnations of the Spirit leading up to the ultimate total disincarnation which is physical death. This process has nothing to do with the transmigration of souls, where it is believed that the incarnation of an individualized and independent Spirit, into inferior vehicles under the control of a group Spirit, can take place.

The present vehicles of human evolution are:

1) The dense physical body, of which alchemy is and will remain for a long time, a source of admiration and wonder, even for the most scientific of men.

2) The etheric or vital body (vehicle), which is comprised of nervous energy that regulates even our bodily functions. We realize this when, by shaking an arm or leg that has "fallen asleep", we notice a tingling sensation which is indicative of the vital body regaining its place.

3) The desire body, or that of emotions or sentiments. We experience its presence notably in the plexuses, at the time of a great emotion.

4) The mental vehicle (intellect) which, in practice, serves as an intermediary, as a central telephone network (brain) between the Spirit which animates us and its vehicles.

Sometimes this Spirit, awakened too early by its own fault, before its vehicles are ready, is not at ease, since it cannot yet build or control them. It is like a virtuoso pianist who is forced to wear heavy gloves and expects to perform to his capacity. In addition, its unfortunate experiences have created complexes, inhibitions, deplorable habits, vain attempts at controlling unruly vehicles to which it sometimes capitulates.

Multiply this drama by some 63 billion that are incarnating, that are dying, in this complete mess ... and often live in a dramatic or grotesque fashion while always creating more problems!

FREE-WILL AND DETERMINISM

One could think: why does God and His Hierarchies tolerate all this? It is very simple! The Spirit can do what it wants, in principle. It is a quality of its very essence. To take away from it this possibility of choosing its means of action, is to cripple it and cause it to degenerate. Spirit cannot handicap Spirit. But if the individualized Spirit wants to have personal experiences (soul - consciousness) in spite of explicit orders, it is evident that such experiences are acquired at its own expense. If, under these conditions, one submits oneself to the divine directives of evolution, the more one would be determined to follow them, the more Spirit would have free will, and this freely accepted discipline. On the contrary, the more one uses one's free will, meaning one's individual will, to circumvent and break these rules and these disciplines, the more one would be conditioned and determined by the very effects of these defiances.

The commandments of God are disciplines and not dogmas. It is a falling short of the discipline that has caused the Fall. It is the great fault of religions, especially the Christian one, to have introduced debatable dogmas during the course of time, instead of having, on the contrary, insisted on the primordial laws and disciplines, as for example "Thou shalt not kill ..." to their faithful, in perpetual war, and to have often broken these laws, in the most savage and unjust manner (religious wars, inquisitions, etc.) How far we always are from: "love ye one another"!

The true trilogy of the real spiritual man is not "liberty, equality, fraternity", but "discipline, hierarchy, and fraternity". Only the third term is common to both and God only knows, officially or not, how this is trampled upon.

REDEMPTION

We see where all this has taken us. In fact, all the planes, humanity finds itself in a state similar to that of fishes in an aquarium where the water is dirtied by their excretions and the other elements therein decaying. Whether we like it or not--the evil thoughts and passions dirty the corresponding planes and contaminate them.

In order for evolution to continue, the aquarium has to be cleaned. To do that, one has to have recourse to someone who is capable and who, among others, is united to an exceptional spiritual power, an immense love for the creatures in perdition, in a world which is crystallizing itself more and more, in all the planes, up to the involution and final deflagration, under the accumulated effect of the depraved ways and errors of its inhabitants.

The spiritual Potentate could not, however, exceed a level where the occupation of human vehicles would have been impossible, under the high voltage of vibrations to which his vehicles would be submitted. It was also indispensable that his vehicles be of a superior quality, the most elevated possible.

Only an extraordinarily evolved man could, at a certain time, furnish these elements or "forms" and this is what the prophets foresaw, in a genealogy essentially dedicated to the initiatic path of perfection, a materialization, that would occur at the appropriate time, as it did in the Sect of the Essenes.

JESUS OF NAZARETH

Being an Essene, as well as his parents Joseph & Mary, he possessed the most perfected etheric and physical vehicles. Also, a powerful entity, Lord of Love, a Prince of the Superior Hierarchy, for a very long time was reuniting the conditions of power and the will to sacrifice itself, by occupying a well prepared human vehicle. It was the Christ, the alone born Son of the Father. This entity was so powerful that he could not intervene directly in this great cleaning up process. Jehovah, God of the race, did not have the necessary "envergure" (the meaning of this French word, in English, is 'span' or 'bend' but we are unable to fit either of these words properly, so we leave the French) for such a general action.

The conditions were fulfilled, the great drama could then begin.

In the pure and simple application of laws, the competent Angels took upon themselves the reincarnation of the man Jesus, and their delegate, the Archangel Gabriel, announced the news to Mary, the mother, chosen amongst all, as was Joseph, the father, because of the quality of their vehicles.

This is what the immaculate conception consists of, which was accomplished, not according to the wish of a couple, but by an order, at a given time. The original sin of disobedience did not exist in this case.

This is how the birth of Jesus took place, in a manger (star Praesaepe = manger) between a cow (star Bos) and a donkey (star Asellus), which situates with precision in the year, the birth date, around the Summer Solstice. The creation of exact ephemerides of years around the year zero of our era also would allow the millennium to be fixed, since, at that time one or many planetary conjunctions must have been produced so that the Magi, who were astrologers, could know that an extraordinary event was about to take place, at the zenith of Galilee, in Bethlehem. You know the story. Let us also note that Joseph & Mary had other children.

Jesus grew up and certainly visited the principal Initiatic Centers of that epoch in order to prepare himself for the great sacrifice.

At the time of the baptism in the river Jordan by John the Baptist, he was ready to give up his inferior vehicles (physical & etheric) at the time of the total immersion of the waters of the river.

From that time on, the Christ whose lowest vehicle is made of desire substance was incarnated in Jesus and Jesus Christ, God-Man, began his mission and pursued it for three years and four months (40 is an alchemical number {36 months + 4 = 40}) from this we could presume that the baptism took place during the Winter Solstice during the most somber day of the year.

He did not come to abolish the law, but to accomplish it and most of all, to "save those who were lost, by taking away the sins of the world". Not the individual sins, of course, but by rendering healthy the terrestrial aura, he has permitted the ulterior continuation of evolution, under his powerful impulse of love and sacrifice.

For the profane, this consists exclusively in his suffering on the cross, at Golgotha, where he died by a slow asphyxia, where the intercostal muscles in the diaphragm were progressively paralyzed by the effect of the extreme expansion caused by the weight of the body of the crucified one.

The exoteric Christian religions considered that this was enough to compensate for our sins, while in the concentration camps and the torture chambers so many poor men have suffered a much longer and more cruel passion. This is why, in order to excite the pity -- (and pity is not love) -- some faithful have presented us with the Christ on a cross, bloody, emaciated, lamentable, while he possessed the most harmonious body, the most beautiful and the most solid that ever existed! Also, he had to retire from public life on a regular basis so that the Essenes, who were very adept in this art, could return his body to a normal vibratory state and stop its thermonuclear fusion caused by the powerful force of the high spiritual voltage which was temporarily inhabiting his body.

The sacrifice of the Christ cannot be totally described. While dying on Golgotha, his blood which is of a particular essence, as the initiate Goethe said, -- physical support of his superior vehicles were emitted by his five wounds (forehead, hands & feet, meaning at the places where the vital body is attached) and that of the "coup de grace", in the liver (seat of the desire body), by the lance of Longinus, who later became a martyr. It is at that moment that the immense Christic aura, of a blinding light, was discharged throughout the earth's atmosphere to purify it: "the heavens became dark and the Veil of the Temple was torn..." This veil was masking the Holy of Hollies where the ark of the covenant was -- (and not the ark of the laws or commandments) in which the two stones bearing the signature of Jehovah and the act of his pact with Israel was placed by Moses.

This torn veil of the Temple announced to those who think that this redemption was consummated and that under the liberating Christic impulse, the reconciliation and the redemption became possible, not only for the elite initiatic centers but for "all men of goodwill". "No one goes to the Father but through Me".

And here is the Christ linked to the end of time of our manifestation to the terrestrial aura where "we live and move and have our being".

For a more homely analogy, it is as if a great man in order to save the vegetable kingdom consented ad aeternum to participate completely indirectly, as a plant, without movement, in the vegetable life of this inferior world, to help it evolve.

The Christ thus participates in our evolution and of this fact, he feels, at all times, the integral sum of the sins, the sufferings, the painful unrest that our humanity creates for itself, second after second -- (words and numbers cannot describe this) -- and this "valley of tears", the terrible binary of the evil ways of man and of the Prince of this World. The Christ expresses himself clearly on this matter: "Here, the Prince of the World is going to come, although he has no claim on me..."

He was also tempted by him since his coming into the world.

Meditate on this and, even if you are not mystically inclined, tears of gratitude and love will wet your eyes. This means that you will understand, at last, for yourself, the incomparable sacrifice of Christ!

INITIATION

So what should one do? The answer appears simple. One has to, as did the Christ, our Master and our elder brother, also work the best way possible in this world, but without belonging to it any longer.

We know well, through painful experience, that such people are not well considered, even by those they come to help liberate, because of the danger they represent for the world of Gehenna, where they are evolving.

The Christ was also a victim of his brothers and of the occupying army. "...the word was made flesh and lived amongst us and we saw his glory. He came to his own domain and his own people did not accept him!..."

This position being taken it suffices to fulfil, to the best of one's ability, all one's duties, to serve efficiently, (laborare = orare) and to apply in one's life the divine commandment that we all know. But there is more! If one wishes to convince oneself of the existence of the superior worlds one has to visit these worlds. To this end, one has to be able to transport one's consciousness. True prayer helps us to accomplish this. But the practical solution is found in projection, not in a morbid and passive schizophrenic state, but by a real separation of the etheric vehicle.

While awake this etheric body determines and sustains our vegetative life. It contains in its substance our faculties of memorization notably, in relation with the intellect.

While sleeping only the dense and etheric bodies are resting. The other more subtle vehicles separate themselves (either deep or light sleep) and are kept linked by the silver cord. It also stops the awakened consciousness from interfering with our dreams.

But if, by special training, based on mental silence, we manage to extract the superior part of the etheric body (forehead, hands and feet = wounds of Christ our great instructor), we will manage to obtain the desired cleavage so that the inferior part of the vital body continues its mission on the physical body, while the superior part, which has the faculty of memory and consciousness, is aligned to the subtle bodies (emotional or astral, mental and Monad).

The voluntary astral projections become, henceforth, possible while being fully conscious and of course, this has nothing to do with the artificial "trips" as induced by psychedelic drugs which force and deteriorate forever the very order of the vehicles and lead directly to illness, folly and death.

This happens in all cases, when the silver cord is broken between the physical and the etheric body. This is the point of no return.

After death, the etheric vehicle is destroyed (fire of cremation or putrefaction of the grave) at the same time as the physical body, and purgatory begins.

I said higher than Hell, this was our binary world of good & evil, that of good & bad experiences. Purgatory is the domain of assimilation, of the definitive integration of these experiences, which are going to determine the quality of the vehicles to which we will have the right when we feel again the necessity to have new experiences in matter. This is an indispensable criterion, just as the engineer or architect who makes the plans must realize them in order to ascertain their real value.

Death does not change us sentimentally, nor mentally. We still keep, on the other side of the "curtain of flesh", our passions, our desires and our ideas. In fact, being "over there" does not make saints or devils out of us, we simply remain what we truly are. It is also rational to understand that low sentiments and evil thoughts constitute a veritable wall effectively stopping all ascending forces towards the superior spiritual worlds. This is why it is extremely important to reject in life all bad habits. They follow us in the after life and, without being able to satisfy them, they torture us at least three times more and three times faster than on earth. Just as the poor intoxicated people have to suffer in all degrees or up to the time they realize their sorry state!

If you have caused others to suffer, you will yourself suffer of the suffering you have caused, at least threefold, because the time-space equation is not the same in the astral world as it is in the physical world.

A vengeful God! This infantile concept does not hold for those who think. We are our own torturers especially if we have been thus for others.

In contrast, having passed this long and hard stage, the joys of heaven await us through the recapitulation of those same joys that we have authored while on earth through service rendered as brave and faithful servants. Even then, God does not intervene, we are the generators of our own rewards. The representation of heaven where we play a harp while sitting on a cloud is a puerile and grotesque scene. There is in every domain of creation an enormous work to be accomplished by everyone.

As we usually say: "This has to be done", or we fall under the influence of the trailing beings. This is why the anthropoid monkeys are trailing forms of the wave of human life and why they can only inhabit but gross forms that have served humanity in distant past times. As we see, some proclaim with all seriousness that man comes from the monkey.

After all, this work of integration in consciousness (soul), the individualized Spirit, Ego or Monad, craves new experiences and the reincarnation process begins, under the control of Angels of justice. One could say that these Angels program the great events for incarnated life. This programme contains the debits and credits of our past incarnations. Again, we are solely responsible.

Happily for us, we loose the notion of the details of our past lives. If, God forbid, we remembered our faults from birth, we would more easily fall into the pattern of our past errors.

Initiation allows, however, access to this knowledge when our mastery of self is strong enough to confront it.

All that I have said before could be admitted as a hypothesis for our work to be accomplished, now we can begin on the practical phase.

TECHNIQUE OF DIRECT KNOWLEDGE

Since time immemorial, there exist initiatic colleges that have taught and transmitted methods which allow for evolution in the binary world. We could condense these sciences which are said to be Hermetic -- (because they were diffused in the West in the past via a certain elite. who hid themselves because of the fear of persecution by the church and the state -- see Inquisition, Templars, Cathars, etc...) -- in the exposition of the three sister disciplines: Kabala {philosophy of pure tradition}, Astrology {not that of the professionals}, Alchemy {not that of the "blowers"}, as represented in the sculptures of the three doorways of the gothic cathedrals built by initiated masters of the work. The Kabalah gives answers to the questions: Who am I? Where do I come from? Where am I going? Astrology answers the adage: Know Thyself, and Alchemy teaches the perfection of our vehicles: (Igni Natura Renovatur Integra): ... "Be perfect as my Father is Perfect"... said the Christ, Prince of the Alchemists, (Matt V:48).

Two younger sister disciplines help to understand them: Mythology and Symbology.

From the beginning of this sacred quest, one has to remember those words of Saint Paul (Epistle to the Corinthians III:16-17 & VI:19 ... "Do you not know that you are the temple of God and that the Spirit of God lives in you? ..." because it is only in that we are created in the image of God. If God is in us, (humanization of the waves of life), the divine words: ... "seek ye first the Kingdom of Heaven and all other things shall be added unto you" ... (Matt. VI:33), illumine the Path (Tao) like a powerful light: everything is there!

Rejoin (= religare = essential and sole dogma of the true religion) God, the Omniscient One, within us, and we can burn the books, because: ... "there is nothing hidden that will not be revealed, nor any secret that shall not be known" ... (Matt. X:26).

Let us then establish as rationally and succinctly as possible the true foundation of this ultimate Quest:

LIGHT

God is Light. If we walk in the Light, as He Himself is in the Light, then we are in communion with Him ... (Epistle of John I:5-7).

The Light is the first manifestation of the Un-created, the Unknowable (Gen I:3).

"I am the Light of the world" (words of Christ, Gospel of John IX:5).

One could multiply the texts establishing that God and His manifestations, the Christ (the Son and the Father are one) and the Holy Spirit, (the Paraclete sent by the Christ -- "you'll be baptized by the Holy Spirit" = Acts I:5 and 2:1-4 tongues of fire = Light) are the Light.

WORD

God is the Word, (Word, voice of silence, harmony of the spheres, Logos). ... "In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with God etc." (John I 1-5).

Of these two divine principles Light and Word, there is a third one: Love ... which completes the great alchemical trinity of the Supreme Great Work of conscious reintegration in the bosom of the Creator.

These three sacred principles exist within us, and their outer expression is but a caricature of their very essence. The mystical alchemical wedding (Love) of the king and queen, of Sulphur (Light) and Mercury (Son) become thus, for us, a living conception of the true initiation. We know, in effect, that the microcosm and the macrocosm are homothetic and that "that which is above is like that which is below..." (Emerald Tablet). We have, as Hermes Trismegistus says, to ... "separate the subtle from the dense, slowly, with great care, ..." meaning we must shed those unwanted qualities that are even part of ourselves, to get to God. (... "if you live according the flesh you will die, but if you live according to the Spirit you kill the actions of the body -- artificial death or separating the bodies -- and you will live" ... Romans 8:13). And again ... "I die daily" ... "O death where is thy sting? ... (Cor. XV:54-55). etc.

If God is in us, the Light, the Word and the Love are also there, and in the inner planes.

Now it is up to us to discover and to deliver these treasures guarded by the dragons of the guardian of the threshold! And, since time immemorial men have sought with passion this Quest for the Grail.

The initiatic disciplines of seekers of truth have studied and tried to codify this sacred Quest. Hence we find ourselves in the west, in Martinist rituals, coming from the Order of the Temple, the solemn means of attaining the goal: VIDE, {MYSTIC VISION} (look in order to see); AUDI, {MYSTIC HEARING} (listen in order to hear); TACE, {BE SILENT} (.....) It is in the east, however, that the tradition was preserved in all its details and practiced by generations of great saints who became, thanks to it, God-Men.

This was also the secret teaching of Christ to his Apostles and Disciples: ... "happy are your eyes because they see, your ears because they hear! I tell you solemnly many prophets and holy men longed to see what you see and never saw it; to hear what you hear and never heard it." (Matt. XIII:16-17).

The technique is simple, is sure, and particularly efficacious in comparison to other methods which could be very dangerous, based on respiration and retention of the breath and of the forcing and raising of the sexual force (serpent of fire) through the spinal column, to the brain. Here it is:

Outside of the indispensable ethical and dietary disciplines (purification of the vehicles), the daily exercise (two hours taken from your sleeping time) of interior vision by concentration on the third eye and the fixation of one's attention in complete mental silence and inner listening, (ears closed, attention fixed on what is coming from the right ear, in a vital current = the lost word!)

This is the very basis of the technique of direct knowledge. Without it ... "we have eyes and we do not see and we have ears and we do not hear"! ...

To have access to the world of divine light one has to go beyond the mental plane and keep the intellect silent in order to attain the superior levels. Since, when beginning, it is impossible not to think, we have to use a strategy, by occupying this mental part with a repetition of formulas given and called by the Masters "words of power" (here are three of them: "PANHAGHION - IOUSHOUAH - AOUM") which open the superior planes. Depending on the efforts of Love, (= always thinking of it = praying without ceasing) expressed by the candidate, towards God, His manifestations and the Master, living God-Man, the Light will appear to him more or less rapidly as a consequence.

WORD - II

Ears closed, listen strictly from the right ear. It is through it that the vital current of the superior worlds penetrate us. The left ear corresponds to the inferior worlds, the uninitiated Bateleur (literally juggler, but referring to the Tarot card - the Magician) and the Baphomet (the Devil) of the Tarot, which as a synthetic science par excellence, demonstrates well this difference by the left arm being elevated (coagula) and the right one down (solve). The Hermit (the Initiate) has the correct position.

These two techniques must be practiced, -- faith and work,-- daily, for two hours at least. With time, they could be done without ceasing.

In effect this is a total physical, emotional and mental relaxation. It is prayer par excellence, the one where we ask for nothing to obtain everything.

THE MASTER

We all know this axiom "when the student is ready the master will appear". This is true, when the student is truly ready he knows to go to the master. For example, a student who finishes primary school is certainly not ready to take college courses, he must go through secondary school.

The Initiatic Path is not for the naive and the pusillanimous, but for those who are "violent towards themselves and only want heaven" and more, one needs a living master playing the role of the Virgil of Dante (The Divine Comedy) up to the mystical marriage with Beatrice (Monad or Divine Spark) a God-Man having realized through personal experience his own ascension of conscious reintegration in the bosom of God.

The presence of this Virgil is indispensable as soon as the candidate has realized his alchemical solve of cleavage of his vehicles and the continuity of his consciousness (while awake and while asleep) by the technique described above which will awaken him.

Without this, the student would but wander in the astral, an unknown and dangerous place for him. He will become independent after the phase of the alchemical Coagula, by conscious junction with the Divine Spark (Monad) in him. After that he can in turn become a perfected "Cicero" on the Path towards the Lord, the Father (alchemical multiplica).

Masters in the east and west never refuse to help those who manage to exteriorize themselves and are ready for the spiritual ascension, to be guided in the superior planes of liberation.

Many are called but only those who respond, the elect, study and practice alchemy for the fabrication of the Universal Panacea, (concentrated solar Fire), by homeopathic applications to heal the sick (second commandment of Christ), in search for the process of sublimation of matter and the inferior human vehicles so that they can live a long life just like the biblical patriarchs.

In the observance of the third commandment of the Lord, "do this in remembrance of me", some having obtained the traditional apostolic filiation and the episcopacy (episcopi vagantes), baptized of spirit and of fire, as Saint John announced, give the full communion under the aspect of unleavened bread (host) and a non-fermented grape juice, fresh or reduced to 1/5 through cooking, to conserve it and rehydrate it at the time of consummation, according to the Order of Melchizedek.

We add to the sacramental elements, as in biblical times, (the Revelation of Saint John the beloved is an alchemical treatise) an alchemical exudate of the "Prima Materia", of which the appurtenance to the Holy Grail is undeniable, since the Christ at the time of his sublime alchemical sacrifice on Golgotha, by shedding his blood, has injected the terrestrial sphere and all that it nourishes, (purification of the sins of the world) with his immense auric power of redemption.

One can also, under certain conditions, administer the consolamentum of the Cathars, for karmic purification (plenary indulgence).

This also allows all those who wish to accomplish the necessary works to be their own teachers, their own doctors, and their own priests...

CONCLUSION

There is evidently a lot more to be said and this present compendium does not pretend to exhaust the subject.

It is but a modest schema that could be used as a synoptic basis by whoever would truly want to associate with men of goodwill, desiring their reintegration in the bosom of the Father, through the grace of His divine son, the Christ.

"...those who prove victorious I will make into pillars in the sanctuary of my God, and they will stay there forever (end of reincarnations) ... if anyone has ears to hear let him listen!" (Rev.III:12-13).

May the Grace of the Lord Jesus be with all of you!

TO BE PERFECT

CHRIST said peremptorily to his disciples: "Be perfect as the FATHER is perfect"... This is not advice, it is an order, the carrying out of which a priori appears impossible.
However, it is, according to the Scriptures, the finality of human eschatology: to become responsible creator gods.
Hence the FREE WILL given to humanity, in its development, to avoid robotization and to allow the normal development of the individual and collective consciousness.

That is why the Creator and the spiritual Hierarchies do not intervene directly in the disastrous and tragic events which, through the fault of man, shake the world and stain it with blood.

There is only one resource for that: PRAYER which liberates, ipso facto, GOD and the Hierarchies from the constraint imposed by the divine law of man's freedom of choice, completed by that of consequences: ... "You sow what you reap" ... "Ask and you shall be given"...
It is important to point out here that the prayer must be said under conditions laid down by CHRIST Himself: ..."Retire to your secret room and thank the FATHER as if He had already granted to you what you are asking for" ...

Let us determine the technical means of reaching perfection in a situation in which, everybody knows, "nobody is perfect".

Today, the existence of most of the types of yoga are known, through which the various disciplines - of which Tantrism and Zazen should be especially noted - do indeed enable the awakening and the development of faculties innate in human beings.
But the path is very long and often even dangerous.

On the other hand, one must take into consideration new scientific discoveries made in university laboratories to explain more easily the so-called parapsychological and spiritual mysteries, (cf. the syllabus on the one-way molecular Mental).
Our hundreds of thousands of programmed molecules - (1/2 million bits per molecule) - necessarily imply a cause for this programme, a cause which, moreover, according to the facts, is not hereditary but its source and logical and equitable explanation is found in the storing in the memory of successive incarnations and in immanent justice. True astrological symbolism also proves this fact, "more strongly than a Lord Mayor".

Consequently, perfection in the human race is a question of improving its programmes. That is the problem clearly put.

Therefore, let us take the very natural manifestation of sleep which scientific Faculties divide into thee periods: deep, paradoxical, light, yet ignoring that, in this state, a displacement occurs between the physical body and the higher subtle vehicles - (see philosophical synthesis). In fact we go out of ourselves more or less (from 2 cm to kms). At that time and above all at the end of the so-called paradoxical period (dreams), the conscious can, through special training, be awoken, (the Indian Nidra) and, at that time, the mental has the immediate power of creator in the plastic matter called astral in which it functions freely.

Let us take as an example experienced the astral creation, well-known by occultists, of Mrs. Alexandra DAVID-NEEL's Lama, who, having no anteriority, therefore had no soul (= luggage stored in the memory in actual experiences from incarnations) and acted so badly that she had to get rid of him. It is known that this lady had also adopted a real living lama called JONGDEN, who pre-deceased her, having reached the age of one hundred, in Grenoble.

Thus astral creations are really immediate - (4th dimension) - and nothing prevents their effective action on the one-way programmes of the sub-conscious (= "dead" memories of functions, as with computers).

The training consists of formulating deeply in oneself, before going to sleep, the explicit great desire to move towards a very familiar place in the state of wakefulness, at least ten meters away from where the physical body is resting.

Failed involuntary astral projections come from the fact that they remained very close to the physical body and that the strong elasticity of the "silver cord" straight away brought back together the two parts momentarily separated through various causes, (dreams of strong desires to move, for example).

It can therefore be concluded that ASTRAL PROJECTION is a fertile and unlimited source of spectacular improvement which is very valuable and very easy.
It can also apply to the other end of the silver cord, to the improvement of relationships with the superconscious, (individual divine spark or Monad, part of the infinite, in short, our guardian angel).

Let us add that SOMNAMBULISM is a diametrically opposite phenomenon in that it is unconscious and involuntary and that it is the physical body which moves.

Another very productive source, which is just as little used in the correct way and known by the public at large, is hypnosis, or SELF-HYPNOSIS, which consists of hypnotizing oneself, that is entering into a half-sleep quite similar to that described for astral projection in which the subconscious immediately and blindly obeys suggestions made.

1) Make yourself very comfortable, calm and relaxed (bed or armchair)

2) Empty the lungs completely and vigorously several times and help them to fill completely,

3) Imagine that the whole body is getting heavy, heavy - (repeat) and test (only notice) that it has become impossible to raise the four limbs (arms and legs) and eyelids which have closed in the calm of deep relaxation. It is going into hypnosis (wakeful sleep), through response of the subconscious.

4) At this time, mentally introduce a word (called 'report') not used in normal conversation which will enable you, from now on, to enter into deeper and deeper hypnosis by simple repetition.

5) Then give to the subconscience the required programmed commands in short sentences which are always positive (COUE system). Use Prana stored in 1).

6) Repeat them as necessary and end by imagining yourself in good form, refreshed and full of energy.

7) Come out of this wakeful sleep by counting slowly up to four, for example.

All of this is much easier to do than to explain and may be done in ten minutes and repeated several times in 24 hours.

Let us add that this simple method, which is not dangerous, contains extraordinary extensions and spin-offs such as:
pictures of previous incarnations, ecstasy, adoration, contact with the SUPER-CONSCIOUS - (Divine spark, Monad) - and from there, with the UNIVERSAL CONSCIOUS, that is G O D.

Dear Companions:

In our last Liber we gave the speech of Sâr Hiéronymus to the fourth session of the F.U.D.O.S.I., which was held at Brussels, Belgium, in August, 1939. We now come to the fifth session of the F.U.D.O.S.I. which was also held in Brussels, July 21-22, 1946. It was the first session to take place after World War II. We begin with the speech made to the assembly by Sâr Hiéronymus, Imperator of Europe:

SAR HIERONYMUS' OPENING ADDRESS
Message Of The Imperator Of Europe

"In opening this Convention which, once more, brings together the Representatives of all the Initiatique Orders of the world associated with the F.U.D.O.S.I., I want to express my fraternal greetings and to bid welcome to all the Initiates of all the Orders, and I pray the Almighty to grant His blessings unto this Assembly and to spread on all of us His profound Wisdom and Cosmic Light.

"First of all, I want to associate to this Convention, in the Invisible, those who, since our last Convention, have been called to Eternal Peace by the Sovereign Master of all things.

"Sâr Ludovicus, F.·. Colonel Fitau, Consul in Chile, Engineer, Grand Master of the Order of Hermes for Chile, Delegate of the F.U.D.O.S.I. and member of the Supreme Council, who died in Brussels at the end of October 1939.

"Sâr Pascal, F.·. Hunin, F.R.C., formerly Archon of the Foreign Relations of the Order of Hermes, arrested by the Gestapo at Cherbourg (France), condemned to deportation and conveyed to the Camp of Neuengam where he died in February 1945.

"Sâr Ignis, F.·. Nico Wolff, general Scribe of Hermes for Belgium, arrested by the enemy on March 5, 1943, condemned to deportation and sent to the Camp of Flossenburg and murdered on April 22, 1945, after suffering incredible tortures.

"Sâr Apollonius, F.R.C., F.·. Rochat de l'Abbaye, Grand Master of the Rose+Croix Universitaire in France, who died in Paris in August 1944.

"Sâr Eques Rosae Caritatis, F.·. Georges Lagrèze, Grand Inspector of the F.U.D.O.S.I. who died in Angers (France) in April 1946.

"And finally, the Imperator of the F.U.D.O.S.I., the Very Illustrious F.·. Augustine Chaboseau, Grand Master of the Traditional Martinist Order, who died in Paris, on January 2, 1946.

"Let us collect ourselves, my Brothers, and pray the Lord to open to our departed brothers the Kingdom of Glory and Light.

"After eight long years the Almighty has granted unto us the privilege of meeting again so as to proceed with the great plan of renovation of Humankind which He has entrusted unto us as a special mission, this great plan for the protection and harmony of spiritual values which is the Divine Plan.

"Eight years ago we were assembled together in the secrecy of this Temple, the world was living in anxiety; and the Message which was conveyed to you had been received as an inspiration from on High and announced the imminence of war and practically the complete destruction of Europe.

"As far back as 1934, it was in view of this impending calamity already threatening Humankind that the Leaders of our Orders had deemed it absolutely necessary to constitute again a selected body of Initiates, like unto those of ancient times, to combat materialism and selfishness in all their [the following words in italics are "guesses" -- the document we have before us is very badly worn and illegible at this point] manifold (?) to save the occidental civilization and to colloborate in the Divine and Universal Work of Spiritual Restoration.

"The impending peril soon was becoming more definite and it was during the 1939 Convention that we brought a message of ominous prophecies, under God's inspiration.

"The frightful storm that was to rage upon old Europe, and in fact upon the whole world, had been disclosed to us in a flash of Divine Light. Soon the tremendous cataclysm was going to burst upon the world. In the visible, as well as in the Invisible, the violence of the Black Forces, of which Nazism was the most inhuman expression, struck the splendid cities of Europe, threatening to annihilate its living civilizations; those Satanic Forces shook the structure of spiritual values to its very foundations. But in the Sacred Orders of the F.U.D.O.S.I. in Europe, and more particularly the Rose+Croix, Hermes and the Martinist Order, proceeded with their mission, bringing to a disabled world the hope of a new dawn, and of the possibilities of a spiritual restoration, even in case of the dreaded victory of the Forces of Darkness.

"Following the inscrutable purposes of the Divine Will, which had been communicated unto us in the Invisible, we persevered to meet together and to work, though our Orders had been condemned and laid under an interdict by the occupying authorities, and also though the F.U.D.O.S.I. was considered as the most dangerous of all Orders by the enemy who wrongly regarded it as a Masonic organization. All the Orders and particularly Hermes, carried on their work, holding regular meetings and, under the leadership of our Brother Sâr Elgim, all the members went on with their sacred work. New initiations were granted in the utmost secrecy, but with a courageous and remarkable tenaciousness. Seven times Brother Sâr Elgim was in trouble with the Gestapo; they searched through his home; he was arrested several times, released provisionally and then threatened in his very life, in August 1944; he received in time a providential warning and thus was able to escape from his enemies.

"The Imperator himself worked covertly because he felt that he was constantly spied upon and threatened. He organized secret meetings, granted R+C Initiations, received Belgian and French Brothers, giving them enlightenments upon the great and sacred (Missions?) of the Orders, at that time and for the (?). [the word here looks like future].

"Sâr Agni was then trusted with the secret plans of the Imperator and was the link between the Imperator and the other Brothers. With Fr.·. Sâr Lampas he worked for the Resistance and both of them had the same heroic behavior; many of the ritualistic meetings were held in his house in Huy.

"All of them, the Imperator and the Brothers, were accomplishing secretly, against strict interdictions, and in spite of wild threats, a great work of spiritual Resistance, as dangerous but also as helpful as the civilian Resistance.

"Our Brothers of Belgium, of France, of Poland, have led an heroical, dangerous and underground struggle, without hope of any compensation, without any expectation whatever of thankfulness, honors or wealth, from the world, and they have worked unselfishly for the greater Glory of Christ, preparing the way for the advent of His Kingdom; in this lay their only reward. "Non nobis, non nobis Domine, sed nomini tuo Dei gloriam". This has always been the motto of the true R+C.

"They even prepared the organizations of a new Order, that of the Knights Templars, whose historical section is represented at this Convention.

"The Imperator of Europe, receiving inspiration from the Invisible, had established a plan of material and moral restoration of the world. He addressed the text of this plan, translated into English, to President Roosevelt; it would have permitted the rehabilitation of Europe, in conditions of prosperity and brotherly understanding, but, through the selfishness of certain opposed nations that did not authorize it, it was not taken into consideration.

"The Imperator, Ralph Lewis, or Sâr Validivar, during the last month of March, asked us to enter into a union of prayers, and in a wonderful, towering flight, the prayers of two continents rose up to the Almighty God.

"At that time a new war was imperiling the world again, and if the danger has been removed it is through the spiritual intervention of the R+C which has been able to win this sublime grace from the Sovereign Master of all things.

"In fact, war, as yet, is not finished, we are having the same trials, passing through hard experiences just as during the war, and it is perhaps the most difficult period of human history. It is in such hours of darkness, of crisis, that the Divine Intelligence and Will has trusted again His selected ones, His prophets or His Magi, the mission of showing the way of salvation to men, and of lighting up again on the Holy Mountain the resplendent flame of the Holy Spirit.

"Discord is preying upon the world, blinded by the darkness of hatred and selfishness, and mankind is awaiting the coming of God's Invisible Messengers, to be reborn into Light.

"It is to accomplish this great work that we want to prepare, with the Imperator for America, a plan of spiritual action for the spreading of Light into the old world.

"This plan includes the protection and diffusion of spiritual and Christian culture which prepares the way for the reconciliation and union of all God's children.

"The R+C is not a religion which claims to substitute for those of any of its followers, it is a great Brotherhood of Love, and Spiritual science; it brings to them unknown powers and an increase in the great Light of Christ. In its unfoldment it is free from political contentions and strife, but it offers to the great universality of nations a deep reason of reconciliation. In this feeling of brotherhood and in this spiritual uplifting, in this progressive development lies the principle of its exoteric action.

"If, following a new world war morally as well as materially more destructive than previous ones, the threat and decay of downfall would be cast upon the world in view of the materialism and selfishness of too great a number of men, the F.U.D.O.S.I. would remain the supreme recourse and the last hope of moral and spiritual restoration of the Universe.

"This is why we must start at once this work of intensive spreading and diffusion into the world and particularly into the old continent. In this way we cannot but approve of the plan which has been eloborated by our Very Illustrious Brother, Imperator of North and South America, Ralph M. Lewis, for the spreading of teachings.

"Our duty is dictated to us by the Almighty, and it is because the time for spreading the lost truth upon the world has come that we want to kindle the Light upon the mountains, and like unto the time of ancient Crusades, we start with the sacred cry: "God wants it"!

"Taking up again the words of the Martinist Message, we may repeat this call for the Initiatique Crusade.

"In such an upset period, when the selfishness of individuals, of nations and of races is increasing more and more, at this crucial point in the cycle of civilization, to save humankind from the abyss of barbarism, of brutality and of frightful cruelty to which it is rushing madly, noble and generous souls are greatly needed, that they may be infused with the true wisdom and science, inspired with the spirit of the purest and most Christian Love, capable of facing martyrdom fearlessly and to suffer it for the of the sacred mission to which they have pledged themselves.

"Against the new storm that is preparing itself in the dark horizon of a social world always stressed with demoniacal forces, we must oppose our utmost strength for the realization of a great Christian and Initiatique Ideal made of Goodness, of Beauty and eternal Science, Wisdom and Justice.

"The spiritual harvest will be wonderful. The Divine Harvester may come later on to appraise our work.

"This is what we must do and we will do it against the whole world, for the Kingdom of the Holy Spirit must prevail on this destitute earth as well as in the highest Heaven.

"Pitfalls and treason will be but a powerful stimulus which will prompt us to do better still so as to show to the world the sublime character and the high teachings of Him who died on the Cross, on the Calvary, and of Whom we must be the valiant, tireless and faithful apostles.

"And thus it is, before the Divine sign of the Cross and the sacred sign of the Mystical Rose, that we shall start for the spiritual conquest of the world; we shall be the vanguard of the celestial armies which will themselves precede the returning of the living Christ. We shall prepare His Kingdom and we shall be able to say: "O Lord, You may come: Your Kingdom is waiting for You"!

"In the meantime, in the secrecy of our Temples, like unto the early Christians in the catacombs, we shall continue our highly mystical and sacred work of illumination, spiritual uplifting and sanctification.

"We carry on this sublime Tradition of the Christian Magic, and with the help of the Invisible Powers of Light, delving deeper and deeper into the wonderful secrets which we have inherited from the Great Masters of Illumination of ancient times who have preceded us on the way of Initiation, of the Sublime Path of Christ, towards the effulgent Light of the Holy Spirit. We shall spread on the world their forgotten teachings, and because the world yielding to the Forces of Darkness and lost in the abyss of materialism and selfishness has turned aside from the Holy Scriptures of which it recognizes no more the light and the power, we shall bring to a selected few the invisible strength and the transcendent understanding of their Mysteries.

"Before God we pledge ourselves to realize this plan of action and to realize it without delay, for there is urgency and we must hurry. The time of great tribulations announced in the Revelation is that in which we are now living. The Lamb has already opened the first three seals. The day is now close by when we shall stand before the throne of the Lamb in our white robes, and the Angel will mark us on the forehead like unto God's other servants and because we shall have accomplished on earth the Will of the Father, this ineffable Will which He reveals only to saints and to Magi, we shall rule with Christ during the Profound Peace era which St. John's Revelation promised the world."

Before we go too much further, let us record here the thoughts of Dr. Jean Mallinger (Sâr Elgim), Grand Chancellor of the F.U.D.O.S.I., on this conclave:

"Sunday, the 21st of July, 1946, marked an epoch in the worldly History of Initiation.

"It was indeed at this moment that the regular Initiates of the European and American continent, gathering in a solemn Congress after seven years of separation, of war and dire trials, were at last able to celebrate together the joys of brotherly union and the privileges of the closest collaboration between all the authentic Initiatique Orders.

"This important meeting was held in Brussels, capital of Belgium, which, for the last twelve years, has been the occult seat of all the esoteric activities of the continent.

"If, according to Bruck's law, civilization was carried on and enhanced from one nation to the other, starting from the East to go Westward, it is also a fact that the F.U.D.O.S.I. has discovered a law that is just as accurate and exact as Bruck's law and which states that "the center of Initiation is shifting and is constantly going Northward".

"From the Nile to Eleusis, from Crotona to Roma, from Toulouse to Lyon and Paris, the secret Initiation has now moved on to Brussels, which saw the birth of the F.U.D.O.S.I. and has now seen its regeneration and renovation, with increased vitality.

"In the secret Temple of Brussels, the Delegates of all the regular and authentic Orders gathered in a solemn International Convention, fervently and reverently, for the fifth time since the foundation of the organization, far from the profane activities of the multitude, and well protected against the political turmoils of the day. Cosmic blessings were granted unto their works.

The History of the F.U.D.O.S.I.

"Already in 1908, the famous Dr. Encausse, who is better known under his mystical name of Papus, tried to gather in a vast Initiatique Federation all the authentic and regular Orders who gave to their followers and adepts the traditional teachings of the (?). (word illegible).

"He held in Paris a great Congress where all the Spiritualistic Rites had been invited.

"But his Federation was unable to organize and carry on such a work. In 1914 began the first World War. Papus was mobilized as a military doctor and suddenly passed through transition in 1916.

"In 1930, the European Imperator of the Rose+Croix, Sâr Hiéronymus, Sâr Peladan's disciple, deemed it advisable to take up again this idea and to harmoniously federate all the initiatique movements. He, therefore, opened extensive negotiations with the Representatives of several Orders and Societies and, on the 8th of August, 1934, he successfully and officially opened the first International Convention of the new Federation, in which fourteen Orders or Societies were duly represented.

"Other confidential Conventions were held in Brussels in 1936 and 1939 and in Paris in 1937.

"The dreadful war which we have just passed through kept the Orders and Societies from all active work or cooperation ever since (?) [date indistinct but it is probably 1939], and it is only after overcoming most unusual obstacles and difficulties, and through secret means, that some contact was maintained between America and Europe during the long and hard years of human upheaval and the enslaving of Europe.

"But in spite of cruel persecutions, of arrests, of the Gestapo's questionings, of police raids and searches, the sacred and initiatique work never stopped and the flambeau regularly passed on from hand to hand, at times in most unexpected and inaccessible places, such as church towers and ancient crypts.

"It was, therefore, with great joy that, thanks to the valuable friendship between all the leaders of the Federation, the various Orders were able to meet again in a fraternal gathering and to organize their work.

The Aims and Purposes of the F.U.D.O.S.I.

"Some persons, whose minds have not as yet received sufficient light, have been wondering why it was necessary to gather in a Universal Federation the Initiatique Orders and Societies, which in their own field of work, enjoy the most absolute and complete freedom and perfect (?) [could be autonomy] and independence. To this query we may reply that, more than in anything else, it is in the Initiatique work that the greatest vigilance is indispensable and that a strict and active international discipline must be exercised.

"We must acknowledge and regret, that there exist many false prophets and a number of so-called Initiates who use, for selfish and tyrannical purposes of domination, the pretext of initiation to thrust themselves on, and exploit, gullible and sincere persons. It was high time to warn the public against these false leaders and against noxious doctrines which they taught to trusting souls.

"In each country, each authentic and regular Order knows its imitators and such false prophets. It was necessary to watch these clandestine movements, to expose these imposters or instruments of hidden and unavowed forces, in all countries, wherever they be operating, and thus avoid any confusion between the regular and authentic Orders and false organizations that are harmful or that give teachings that have nothing to do with the Universal Tradition and Esotericism.

"And also it was necessary that the authentic Orders be careful in selecting their members and their officers and in maintaining their adepts and students on the right path of the true doctrines, obliging them to follow a strict line of discipline, rational, sincere and conscientious work, so as to avoid radical teachings and heterodoxy.

"This immense work which was intended to protect the Orders against their inner and outer enemies has been successfully carried on by the F.U.D.O.S.I. and is now going on. ..."

The article went on to explain the symbolism of the F.U.D.O.S.I. emblem and concluded under the subheading The Works of the 1946 Convention, which told of the appointment of a Council of Regency to manage Martinist affairs since Grand Master Augustin Chaboseau had passed on. (Both of these topics have been covered earlier). The remaining particulars are as follows:

"All authentic Orders were represented at the last Convention held in Brussels.

"A very precise Liturgy was employed when the Imperators, who enhanced by their presence the whole ceremony, were received with honour and dignity.

"Successively, Sâr Hiéronymus (Imperator of Europe), Sâr Gregiorius, and Sâr Validivar (Imperator of AMORC) delivered inspired messages of Peace Profound and bright hope to the attendants.

"They unaminously agreed that, after the great trials and sufferings imposed on humankind during the World War, all Initiates, in all countries, must unite their efforts so as to lead men toward better accomplishments and also toward a "better sheepfold".

"On the second day, the delegates to the International Supreme Council of the F.U.D.O.S.I. held a secret and confidential meeting with a view to solving a few pending questions."

+ + + + + + +

After this 1946 Convent, two further meetings of the Federation took place, in September 1947 in Paris and in January 1949 in Brussels. What happened after that can only be described as a tragedy:

Differences in points of view began to become accentuated amongst the various people in charge, particularly of Hiéronymus' Rose+Croix Universelle and Ralph Lewis' AMORC. In 1946, the European leaders of the FUDOSI had approved the plan made out by Ralph Lewis to propagate the teachings of AMORC by correspondence, but the majority of the European dignitaries were, on the other hand, extremely reticent about the way in which AMORC was recruiting its members, often by press advertisments, as is still the case today.

A rift had been opened which continued to widen.

AMORC began to introduce various doctrinal deviations; Hiéronymus, for his part, did not approve of cremation, which was being recommended by AMORC to its members. AMORC would not stop its propaganda methods, etc. etc..... Ralph Lewis then released a bombshell: He claimed that one of the officers of the Federation (whose name, to the best of our knowledge, has never been brought to light) expressed discontentment over the fact that AMORC accepted black members! The upshot of all this was that a meeting for dissolution was organized in Brussels on August 14, 1951, of which Ralph Lewis' account is as follows:

"After a discussion on the immediate questions and its past activities (of the FUDOSI), a declaration was drawn up. It explained what had been achieved by the F.U.D.O.S.I. and the need for it to be disbanded.

"The document ended in this way:

1) The F.U.D.O.S.I. is being disbanded today, August 14, 1951.

2) Each of the affiliated movements will retain its autonomy and its initiatic independence, without being linked in any way to the other order.

3) None of the orders previously affiliated to the F.U.D.O.S.I. will be authorized to reform it without a written agreement signed by the founders, nor may they derive any kind of benefit from it in the future.

4) This declaration will be published by the various orders in their own publications, without any commentary.

Brussels, 14 August 1951.'

The three signatories of the text were Emile Dantinne, Ralph Lewis and Jean Mallinger.

And thus ended the organization which had an opportunity to achieve unspeakable glory for humankind..

DECLARATION. XXXXXX Initiationis.

Considering that,on August 14th.of I934,the delegates of various Initiatic Orders and Societies decided to create an Universal Federation of Initiatic Orders and Societies(F.U.D.O.S.I.);

Considering that said Federation had an helpful activity,grouped some isolated Initiatic movements,exposed some impostors of the Initiatic domain and organised the international Initiatic work;

Considering that the Federation granted to each one of its affiliated members complete independence with regard to its administrative and doctrinal work;

Considering that it appeared,in the long run,and particularly at a recent date,that some of the affiliated Orders were teaching different doctrines in the same country(for instance:for,or against cremation);that their conceptions of true Initiation and its secrecy appeared contradictory to,or incompatible with,each other;that it is impossible to conciliate these conceptions and avoid doctrinal or historical debates between the Orders;

Considering that,in the higher interest of Initiation,it is not desirable to bring these disagreements before public opinion-which is incompetent in such matters-or to transform the Federation into a Law-Court of Initiation;that it is preferable to admit loyally and in a friendly manner that it is impossible to unify or harmonise opposite teachings,the representatives of the Orders who freely created the Federation in Brussels,in I934,decide to freely dissolve it now;

FOR THESE REASONS:

It is unanimously decided that:

I.-The FUDOSI is dissolved on this day,I4th.of August I95I;

2.-Each and every one of the affiliated movements will maintain its initiatic autonomy and independence,without being bound in whatsoever manner to the other Orders;

3.-None of the Orders previously affiliated to the FUDOSI will be allowed to reconstitute it without a written agreement signed by the Orders concerned,or may take advantage of it in the future;

- 4.- The present declaration will be published by the various Orders in their own publications without any commentary.- Brussels,the I4th.of August I95I.

What became of the Societies and Orders of the FUDOSI?

After the 1951 breakdown, each order regained its autonomy. Of all the former fraternities of the FUDOSI, AMORC is incontestably the most active nowadays.

The Traditional Martinist Order still exists in the U.S.A. under the patronage of AMORC and in France.

The Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique is active in several countries and continues to expand.

After the passing of Imperator Hiéronymus into the eternal Orient in 1969, the Ordre de la Rose-Croix Universelle, and the Ordre de la Rose-Croix Universitaire do not appear to have survived.

The Ordre Pythagoricien (or Ordre d'Hermès) is active in Germany, Great Britain and the U.S.A. and perhaps elsewhere as well.

The Universal Gnostic Church continues but became fragmented because some of the Bishops did not wish to recognize a particular Patriarch; there are now several lines of the original Church functioning in different countries under various names. One branch, the Ecclesia Gnostica Apostolica Universalis is (1988) operating in New York under Bishop Tau Gregorious, in Barbados under Bishop Tau Thomas and in England under Bishop Tau Jean.

The Kabalistic Order of the Rose-Croix is presently associated with the Masonic Rite of Memphis-Misraim under Grand Master Gérard Kloppel.

Any information on the survival of the other fraternities will be welcome.

Before we close, we must look at at the charge leveled by AMORC, with regard to the FUDOSI officer who, Ralph Lewis claimed, expressed discontentment over AMORC's acceptance of black members.

All the organizations associated with the FUDOSI were (and those surviving still are) devoted to the upliftment of mankind, and not to any particular racial group. Furthermore, the declared plan of action as set forth by Imperator Hiéronymus and several others, at the 1946 conclave, is clear regarding its objectives and contains no provisos.

A senior and well respected French Martinist Grand Master, now living (1988) in another country, wrote to me as follows:

> "I would be most surprised if Sâr H. or any of the FUDOSI Officers were in any way racially prejudiced against black people! I myself was unaware of the meaning of the words "colour prejudice" before coming to live in xxx as it was totally foreign to my French upbringing. In his correspondence to me, Sâr H is quite explicit about the break up of the FUDOSI and blames the "commercialism" of Lewis. You know of course that AMORC went on claiming membership of the FUDOSI for at least ten years after that body was dissolved...Hardly the thing to do if Lewis had broken off because of colour prejudice on the part of the others! But then Lewis always had a peculiar conception of truth... "

So, in the absence of further facts, one is left simply to wonder.

AMORC has gone on to attack other societies that belonged to the FUDOSI, placing advertisments and announcements in the press claiming, in one, that the T.M.O. "is the only true Martinist Order which exists" and, in another, as recently as 1986, where the Martinist Pentacle was displayed, "...the Traditional Martinist Order is the only body authorized to use the symbol stamped above ..." This is a blatant untruth, for indeed the OM&S holds the legal registration of the Martinist Pentacle in several countries.

I bring this chapter on the F.U.D.O.S.I. to a close at this point, but not necessarily the book. I have in my possession a large file of documents, letters of correspondence and a lot more which can be disclosed at a later time, if merited.

And I leave you to ponder this question: Can any work be started, towards a new Federation, which will pick up where the last one failed, so that the Great Work may be accomplished?

Dear Companions:

A feeling of sadness comes over me at this time and I suggest this is sufficient for this session.

It is my humble hope that you will now have a clearer recognition of the reason why the I.C.O.M.S. exists and what we are trying to accomplish.

Will you join with us, so that, together, we can launch an unrelentless attack on the forces of ignorance?

If there are any brethren who seek to contact any of the Orders or Societies that were affiliated with the F.U.D.O.S.I. and who are searching for them, we may be able to furnish a lead, in some cases.

May you ever dwell in the Eternal Light of Divine Wisdom.

Sincerely,

Sacer

BE INFORMED!

Traditional Martinist Order

With world headquarters in San Jose, California, the Traditional Martinist Order is the only body authorized to use the symbol stamped above, and to claim direct initiatique lineage from the founders of this esoteric Order. Its charter and letters of authority clearly delineate the chain of authority from Papus to Lewis, the present Sovereign Grand Master.

Other claims to this authority and use of the symbol are in violation of Martinist statutes.

We repeat, we have original documents signed by the authorities of the Martinist Order in Europe, and will present them legally if necessary.

THE MARTINIST ORDER

It has come to our notice that an advertisment was recently published in this newspaper claiming exclusive rights of an organization called the Traditional Martinist Order to the above symbol.

As the unwary reader might be misled by such a preposterous claim, we give here a summary of the History of the Martinist Order which any one interested can easily check by reference to innumerable books on the subject published in the country where it originated.

The Ordre Martiniste was founded around 1890 in Paris, France, by Dr. Gerard Encausse, known as Papus, and his associates. The above symbol was introduced then and has been used ever since by all branches of that Order. At the death of Papus, during the First World War, the Order came under the Grand Mastership of Teder. When Teder died, the Order divided into one branch that imposed a masonic pre-requisite and one which did not. The first became known as the Ordre Martiniste de Lyon as its headquarters had moved to that town, whereas the second was the Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique.

Some years later, A. Chaboseau founded a third Order which he named the Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel. When he died, after the Second World War, the Grand Master designate — his son Jean Chaboseau — could not rally the support of the Supreme Council of this Order, which was then dissolved. This left a certain Mr. Lewis, who had been appointed delegate for "California andthe USA" (sic), isolated with the American branch of that dissolved Order. This Mr. Lewis was also the head of a commercial organization known as AMORC Incorporated, which sold correspondence courses in "Mastery of Life" and promised the secrets of the Ancient Egyptians.

The American branch of the Ordre Martiniste Traditionnel, isolated from all Martinist contacts in Europe, took on the name of Traditional Martinist Order and operated under the umbrella of its parent organisation AMORC. Unfortunately for its claims to regularity, it adopted the practices of the parent organization and introduced "Postal initiations" and other inadmissable practices which put it outside the regular Martinist Fraternity. Among other things, it inverted the above symbol in order to make it comply with AMORC symbology and for many years used the inverted pentacle.

From being delegate for California and the USA, Mr. Lewis modestly sees himself as the supreme authority for the whole world! He has re-introduced the TMO in Europe and other countries, in the wake of AMORC.

Meanwhile, of the Regular Martinist Orders, the Ordre Martiniste de Lyon has merged with the Ordre Martiniste de Papus, re-activated by Dr. Ph. Encausse and regularized when the last Grand Master of the Ordre Martiniste de Lyon, H. Dupont, successor of Bricaud and Chevillion, appointed Dr. Ph. Encausse as his successor before his death. The Ordre Martiniste (de Papus) is active in Europe and has branches in numerous countries, including North and South America.

The Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique has remained active in Europe, Great Britain and Dependencies, Canada and Commonwealth countries in Africa and elsewhere, for which the copyright for the above symbol has been legally registered.

The Britannic Grand Lodge of the Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique has a provincial branch in Barbados which shall presently become sovereign and independent with authority to expand over the whole West Indies. It operates on strictly traditional lines, not being subordinated to any other organization. The Initiations are conferred from person to person, and are free of any charge. The only fees asked of members is their share of expenses incurred by their Lodge. There is no Grand Lodge fees or other contributions. There is no salaried staff. Officers at all levels give their time freely to the Order. In plain words, no one makes a penny or a dime from the Order.

SO BE TRULY INFORMED!

When you read about an organization claiming to be an authentic and regular MARTINIST ORDER, and before even going into its alleged authority, look for the following points:

a) Does it offer admission to all and sundry without an interview?
b) Does it — or did it — practise "postal initiations"?
c) Does it charge for the initiation — or for a certificate or other such device?
d) Does its ruling body charge a membership fee, or take a part of the Lodge or Heptad membership fee for its own use?
e) Is the Lodge Master chosen by the ruling body?
f) Is the Lodge subordinated to another organization?
g) Does anyone derive an income, or make a living, out of the Order?

If the answer to but ONE of these questions is YES ... save yourself time and energy and enquire no further! Whatever authority that organisation may claim, it DOES NOT OPERATE AS A REGULAR MARTINIST ORDER.

And even if it should discontinue the practice of "postal initiations," the mere possibility that there has been a past "postal link" in the chain of initiations will prevent any regular Martinist Order from recognising the validity of any of its initiations. By resorting to any of the practices listed above, any Martinist Order, even if originally regular, has forfeited its regularity.

WHAT IS MARTINISM?

What seems a mystery is most often due to a lack of knowledge of its true nature. Enlightenment removes the cloak of darkness which most often appeared as the strange, the mysterious. Fortunately there have always been those who sought truth and challenged its suppression.

One of these has been the Martinist Order. The following few questions and answers we hope will make the purpose of the Traditional Martinist Order better known:

Is Martinism a religion?

It is nonsectarian; it is not affiliated with any religion, yet it observes moral idealism.

How old is it?

The origin of the Martinist Order is found in the works of Martínez Pasquales, a Spanish mystic and philosopher who founded an esoteric Order in France in 1760. His teachings had been brought from the archives in the Near East.

A young French army officer, Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin, met Martínez Pasquales and became enthralled by his purpose and type of instruction. At the age of twenty-five, in the year 1768, he eventually reached the highest grade in Pasquales' Order. Finally, Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin, in an independent way, evolved a distinctive philosophy in accordance with his own deepening understanding.

Was Martinism recognized?

The writings of Louis-Claude de Saint-Martin were acclaimed as a fruitful contribution to mysticism and philosophy. Subsequently, numerous groups and lodges were formed throughout Europe. Following the death of Saint-Martin and during the storms of the Napoleonic era, the Martinist Order was not very active.

Was there, then, an official, authoritative administrative body?

A Supreme Council of the Martinist Order was formed in 1890 by Dr. Gérard Encausse, who became the first President of the same Supreme Council and under whom the membership grew.

How did Martinism survive World War One?

The war greatly affected the growth and activity of the Martinist Order. Its President perished in heroic service. Many of its members and leaders did not survive.

When was it revived?

In 1931 the Martinist Order was revived principally through the efforts of Augustin Chaboseau, one of its survivors. Augustin Chaboseau served as Grand Master and President of the Supreme Council until his death on January 2, 1946.

Who resumed authority?

Prior to his death, in August 1934 in Brussels, Belgium, Chaboseau, then Grand Master, with the approval of the Supreme Council, conferred upon Dr. H. Spencer Lewis, Imperator of the Rosicrucian Order, AMORC, the title of Sovereign Legate of the Martinist Order of North and South America. The title of Sovereign Legate, with charters that accompanied it, granted Dr. Lewis the right to reestablish the authentic Martinist Order, under the jurisdiction of the Sovereign Council in France.

Who is the incumbent authority?

Dr. H. Spencer Lewis, after laying the foundation for the authentic Martinist Order, passed away on August 2, 1939. In the early fall of the same year, the Supreme Council of the Martinist Order convened in Brussels, Belgium, with the highest dignitaries in Europe present.

Upon that occasion, the Supreme Council voted that Ralph M. Lewis, son of the late Dr. H. Spencer Lewis, be entrusted and empowered to continue the reestablishment of the Martinist Order, and charters of authority so signed state that power and right. Ralph Lewis had also been initiated in the Martinist Order in Europe.

Is Martinism a commercial activity?

The Traditional Martinist Order is a nonprofit, cultural, and fraternal organization. It functions under the traditional constitutional regulations of the Sovereign Council and has the official documents of authorization by the Supreme Council, which may be seen upon request. It thus is separated from pseudo bodies referring to themselves as Martinists but who do not possess such authentic historical documents as those bearing the signature of Augustin Chaboseau, President of the Supreme Council.

What advantages?

There is much about himself that man must learn. There are many faculties and powers that he can develop. It makes him a better member of society and one having a better understanding of his Cosmic relationship.

The Traditional Martinist Order presents in its temples, its lodges, and otherwise, lectures and discourses explaining these things and their principal value for everyday living. Symbolic initiations, full initiations, are given in the temples of the Traditional Martinist Order only, and for which documents of authority are granted. Abridged initiations may be studied at home by members, but they are not documented as are Temple Initiations.

What cost to the member?

As in most fraternal Orders, there are nominal dues. But the authentic Traditional Martinist Order is a nonprofit body, and it is so legalized in the numerous countries throughout the world in which it exists.

However, the organization styling itself Ordre Martiniste et Synarchique (Barbados, West Indies) boasts that it has no fees for its members. However, it says that its Libers (its lessons) cost "within the Caribbean $4.00" and "outside the Caribbean $3.50"! There is obviously an apparent inconsistency in those statements.

Is there a word of caution for the inquirer?

The Traditional Martinist Order, whose international headquarters and temple are located in Rosicrucian Park, San Jose, California 95191, U.S.A., has Lodges throughout the world. We suggest to the inquirer, where the name Martinism is mentioned, to avoid pseudoism by demanding documentation of authority signed by the President of the Supreme Council of the past, Augustin Chaboseau.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

Recently there have been publications in this newspaper by an overseas organization, making statements which are inaccurate and evidently designed to mislead readers and create mischief. For the sake of correctness and accuracy the following advice is given:

L'ORDRE MARTINISTE ET SYNARCHIQUE of Barbados is a fraternal Order operating according to strict Martinist linkage and principles. It does NOT purvey "postal initiations;" it is NOT subordinated to any other organization; it does NOT send out "teachings" by mail; it does NOT advertise; it has NO paid employees; it is NOT involved in any form of commercial activity.

THE INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MARTINISTS INCORPORATED is an independent body, legally incorporated under the laws of Barbados as a non-profit institution. It has no salaried Directorate. It exists for the purpose of making information available on the Traditional Esoteric Arcana and history, including Martinism, and this is detailed in booklets called Libers which are issued to student members of the College for their personal and private study. Membership dues are $4.00 per month, Barbados Currency, within the Caribbean and $7.00 per month, Barbados currency, outside the Caribbean. Interested persons may contact the College at P.O. Box W31, Worthing, Christ Church.

THE BROTHERS AND SISTERS OF SAINT-MARTIN is a religious group which conducts healing services every Sunday morning at its premises: The Priory, River Road, St.Michael. These convocations are of interest to all persons who are deeply religious. The services include a meditation and a spiritual agape. They are open to the public.

The foregoing may be easily verified by anyone wishing to know the facts.

Dear Companions:

We now embark on a series of five special Libers which will feature the remaining five Alchemical principles: Sanctification, Purification, Putrefaction, Fermentation and Combustion. We have already had the first two: At-One-Ment and Regeneration.

Along with these, there will also be five lectures from the Fraternitas Rosae Crucis, plus other material.

As you know we try to feature as wide a range of topics as possible, the objective being to keep the Libers interesting, while at the same time giving you a broader comprehension.

SANCTIFICATIO or Sanctification as it is known in orthodox verbiage, is the third in our series of doctrinal exegeses by the light of Alchemic Truth and wisdom. The academic definition and description of this fundamental, which occupies a prominent position in all essentially Christian and, in fact, all world religions even though not specifically indicated as such, may be briefly given:

SANCTIFICATION is the act or process of sanctifying, or the state of being sanctified. Theologically, it is said the be "the gracious work of the Holy Spirit or Spiritus Sancti whereby the subject is freed from so-called sin and exalted to holiness of heart and life. In this it is distinct from Regeneration and Justification."

Dr. Francis L. Patton says, in his Summary of Christian Doctrine, "The Soul's new life begins at Regeneration, its development in strength and stature is Sanctification".

While agreeing with the essential concepts of all the foregoing definitions, in the doctrinalia of the R+C, Sanctificatio takes on a much greater importance when it is seen to be vastly more than a mental concept or a generalized conclusion and becomes a veritable active process, effecting organic changes in the vehicles of manifestation, as well as in the life of the individual undertaking it.

Sanctification may in truth be said "to render holy or sacred" but it is also the active process of spiritualizing, or, to invent a term -- "HOLIFYING". And what is more: SANCTIFICATIO CANNOT BE ACCOMPLISHED IN ONE LIFE TIME OR INCARNATION, BUT IS A PROCESS CARRIED ON THROUGH MANY INCARNATIONS.

SANCTIFICATION ASSISTED BY THE CELESTIAL HIERARCHIES Again, Sanctificatio is a process begun in the human when it first emerges from the lower evolutionary waves and becomes a true human. In this stage it is begun under the guidance of certain of the Celestial Hierarchies who thus assist each human being to a fair and equal start along the Human Pathway. At this time, the beginning of the process and the guidance of the Higher Powers is carried on unconsciously to the subject.

UNCONSCIOUS SPIRITUALIZATION Yet the result of the operations of these Higher Powers will be seen in the activities of even the lowest aborigines, who through the use of amulets, charms, votive objects, etc., -- under the idea of making themselves sacred or holy before their personally created and constructed god -- are in reality acting in obedience to the impulse resulting from the process of sanctificatio, holyfying, or spiritualizing going on unconsciously to them within.

As evolution progresses, and the evolving human conceives the idea of one thing set apart as sacred in comparison with ordinary things, the concept of a special sacredness or sanctity evolves around the thing set apart, and the idea of a special sanctity of a personal nature attaches to the person under whose care or charge the thing set apart, is placed.

SANCTIFICATION ACHIEVED OVER SEVERAL LIFETIMES Now, Sanctificatio is not only an ethical process, it IS AN INTENSELY ORGANIC, CHEMIC, AND ALCHEMICAL PROCESS: FAR MORE THAN THEOLOGIANS HAVE THE FAINTEST IDEA.

And note carefully: if Sanctificatio could be completed in one life time, (under the orthodox concept that one life is all that is accorded to each person), then we should see a phenomenon barely comprehensible to us in our present stage of evolution --- for we should see ordinary, solidly material men and women become so sublimated and etherealized, that, if the process were actually completed, they would ultimately disappear beyond our ken, and death would cease to be a physical act, state, or condition. And what is more, in view of the average length of the physical life-span, it would have necessarily to be effected with such speed that one would hardly reach maturity before one would already be well on the way beyond material or visible expression.

The logic is surely founded: No gross matter can enter the Kingdom of Heaven. Flesh and Blood cannot inherit the Kingdom. Neither can true holiness exist in impure or gross Matter. Yet the Kingdom of Heaven is here and dwells among men.

Therefore, if Sanctificatio is the process of spiritualizing or holifying, and can be completed in one life time, then it means that the sanctified one must necessarily emerge from the material and soar to the purely spiritual within the compass of our physical cognition and vision.

The logic and evidence of facts is against this, otherwise we shall be regretfully obliged to conclude that no persons yet known on this earth have ever attained true sanctification.

But when we realise that Sanctificatio is a process contained through all of man's involutionary incarnations, which is their ultimate purpose, and is an actual, active chemical and alchemical process, then we have hope that our present status is justifiable by our present incarnation, and faith to look forward to the assistance of the Higher Powers who never relinquish their attention to humanity, to give us -- not further personal help -- but knowledge and understanding of the mysteries that we may continue in all good works to do the will of Him whose mental concept and Expression in Manifestation, we individually are.

OUR BODIES ARE THE PRODUCT OF THE FOUR ELEMENTS Our bodies, and all that we practically are, except the Ego, are the product of the four elements, Earth, Air, Fire and Water, and the Ego is not excepted on the higher understanding of these Elements. These Four Elements have combined in Chemical process to produce and furnish the substance for, not only our physical body or vehicle, but our Etheric and Astral vehicles as well. For all Matter is homogeneous, differing in density, but not in kind.

In the formation of these vehicles, into which the process of crystallization enters most actively, the compounds are formed in such a measure that the effect is to hold us to earth, or to material concepts, preventing us from rising to the higher spiritual status.

From the interaction, atomically, of these Four Elements, a specified number of Elements as understood by chemists, are formed. By the combination of these Chemical Elements, over 250,000 compounds can be produced.

The effect of these compounds on man in his earlier evolutionary career is to hold him crystalized in a given status. This is the reason why the aborigines make so little progress, and why they are so slow and in some cases, even impossible of accepting and conforming to so-called civilized customs.

SPIRITUALIZED ATOMS ATTRACTED BY THE EGO Sanctificatio is the breaking down of these compounds under the unconscious stimuli supplied by the celestial Hierarchs, and then effected by the conscious co-operation and operational effort of the individual himself. This breaking down is effected, little by little in each incarnation, by the Ego attracting to itself and its vehicles an increasing percentage of the more highly spiritualized atoms, that have been used by higher beings in former life-waves, and now await usage by Egos arriving and striving to arrive at the same vibratory ratio of spiritualized energy.

This is a spiritual work which must be done by the Ego. The Physical, Etheric and Astral vehicles have no volitional power of their own in this direction. And the result of this activity of the Ego, is to draw by the power of Attraction mentally exerted, an increasingly larger number of these spiritualized atoms, and with them gradually replacing the structures of its vehicles, supplanting the crystalized material or earthly compounds with the higher spiritualized atoms; a process carried on through our Mercury Water, or universal menstruum.

Thus, life by life expression, the Ego attracts a constantly increasing percentage of these more highly spiritualized atoms, until when the course of the involutionary incarnations has been completed, we attain Sanctificatio -- not in completion or perfection -- but in sufficient measure to enable us to become in rapport with beings of a higher spiritual grade and status than those of this planet, and we pass onward to higher phases of expression and manifestation.

SANCTIFICATION IS RELATIVE This fact, that it is impossible for man to attain at any time complete sanctificatio, but only relatively, in comparative value -- is the reason why we see no perfect homo or human.

Thus, Sanctificatio is far more than an orthodox theological doctrine; it is a COSMIC SPIRITUAL PROCESS, Chemical in the breaking down of the crystalized compounds and Alchemical in the transmutation of the gross, material homo into the actual spiritualized being of verifiable higher vibrational activity than the unawakened man.

SANCTIFICATION A SYNONYM FOR EVOLUTION And as Sanctificatio is carried on through all involuntary incarnations, the very term itself may be considered as a synonym for EVOLUTION, for exactly like the latter, it never ceases.

Companions should always keep in mind the two processes involved in the complete general process, namely:

(a) The breaking down of crystalized materialistic compounds, and the raising of the atomic structure of each of the vehicles of the Ego, to the next higher spiritual status.

(b) the attraction of a greater number of spiritualized atoms to the regenerated and regenerating structures in each succeeding incarnation.

Atoms in the aggregate, through molecule and mass, compose Metals. MAN IS COMPOSED OF METALS, and this fact has been emphasized in previous Alchemic lessons. The destiny of ALL metals is ultimately to become gold. THE DESTINY OF ALL MEN IS ULTIMATELY TO BECOME GOLD. In every natural thing is the seed of Gold, which will ultimately, in aeons more or less remote, transmute the substance into Gold, for Gold like all things, grows from its seed.

The destiny of man and metals is therefore identical, and the structure of their atoms being identical, this must perforce be true.

In the earth, or mineral kingdom, from Lead or Saturn up through the metalic grades, all are gold in varying phases of transition, but all ultimately destined to become pure GOLD.

In the Human Kingdom, all grades from the aborigine to the highest cultural type are destined to become ultimate GOLD.

The metals in the Mineral kingdom will attain the status of metallic Gold on the material plane first, as terrestrial Gold.

The human will become Gold on the celestial plane, when his vibrational status permits his return to the mother sphere, the Sun.

GOLD A MATTER OF ATOMIC STATUS For GOLD whether deep down in the womb of Mother Earth, or high in the Great Central Sphere of our Solar System is not a matter of nomenclature, but of atomic status, and when our atomic and corpuscular vibrations attain the highest possible grade pertaining to this particular Solar System, then shall we become celestial GOLD.

And when the atomic and corpuscular vibrations of lead and all succeedent metals have increased to those accorded chemically to Gold as now understood by science, then all the metals in the bosom of Mother Earth will have become GOLD in truth, and then shall the Golden Age become renaissant, and restored to mankind, and then shall we know the New heaven and the New Earth described in the Apocalypse, for behold all other things shall have passed away.

Sanctificatio is therefore the attainment of Alchemical Gold on the Spiritual Plane, as Sanctificatio (or increasing the vibrational powers) of metals is the Attainment of Chemical Gold on the Material or Physical Plane.

SANCTIFICATION A PROCESS OF SPIRITUALIZATION By referring to alchemical definitions you will see how the esoteric and exoteric exegeses of Sanctificatio agree; it is being understood that it is a process of spiritualizing, i.e., the action of spirit upon substance or matter and the raising of Matter to higher spiritualized atomic vibrations.

SPIRIT Spirit, or Spiritus, is alchemically defined as "God in his highest aspect as an eternal, universal principle or power, invisible, and in a state of the greatest purity and comparitive perfection." "The Divine Element in Nature." "The antithesis of Matter", yet, "material" in a transcendental sense. Spiritual substance. A conscious, organized, invisible principle. The substance or Body of Christ. The term "Spirit" is also used to signify the essence or character of a thing, the sum of the highest attributes or powers.

"SPIRITS" Similarly, the term "Spirits" literally refers to "Powers", but in the modern application of the term to "dis-embodied astral forms and souls of men and animals". This definition has originated through the modern misconception of the true nature of man.

SUBSTANCE Substance is Alchemically defined as "that unknown and invisible something which may manifest itself either as Matter or Force; in other words, that substratum of all things which is ENERGY in one of its aspects and MATTER in another."

ONE SUBSTANCE : THREE ASPECTS As Companions already know, Alchemists comprehend THREE Substances, or rather three aspects of the ONE SUBSTANCE: Salt, Sulphur, and Mercury. "They are the basis of all existence and in each of these three substances the other two are contained".

They form an inseparable Trinity in Unity, and a Unity in Trinity, differing however in its aspects and manifestations. Consequently in some things the Salt, in others the Sulphur, and in still others the Mercury, is predominant.

They represent (a) Thought, Word and Form;
(b) Body, Soul and Spirit;
(c) Earth, Water and Fire;
(d) Fire, Light and Heat;
(e) etc, etc, etc,.

THE TRINITY The concept of the Trinity comprehends the idea of the ALL to Hermetic students. It is the expression of the WHOLE of the Universe. "Everything is a Trinity, and three is the number of form. Every conceivable thing consists of Matter and Motion in Space, and the Three are forever One and Inseparable." "God" is a Trinity, and the Universe being a manifestation of God, every part of the Universe must necessarily be a Trinity. Everything is a product of THOUGHT, WILL AND SUBSTANCE (FORM), i.e. -- MERCURY, SULPHUR AND SALT."

SOUL (R+C) Soul has been defined in the R+C lectures as a product or pabulum extracted from the Threefold Body by the Threefold Spirit. (Please check the correct meaning of the word 'pabulum' in a dictionary if you have not already done so.)

SOUL (Alchemical) Alchemically, it is the semi-material principle connecting Matter and Spirit. "It leads, so to say, an amphibious existence between these two poles of substance, and may ultimately become amalgamated with either one or the other. The Body is the mask of the Soul; the Soul, the Body of the Spirit".

THE REAL MAN The Real Man, alchemically, is an "invisible, internal power, (spiritual) which, in its outward appearance or manifestation appears like a human being. Man may be considered as a ray emanating from the great Central Sun of the Universe, having become polarized in the heart of an incipient human organism, endowing the latter with life, and stimulating its growth. At a certain state of its development that organism becomes conscious of its existence in the phenomenal world, and with this the illusion of self is created".

UNIVERSAL SPIRIT / CHRIST There is nothing real and permanent about the being called Man, except this internal, Divine power which is called the Spirit, which is ultimately identical with the universal Spirit -- the Christ".

Alchemically, Man is comprehended under two aspects; "Vir", or the human being in whom the male elements preponderate, and "Woman" Womb-man in whom the female elements preponderate.

Now let us summarize our definitions:

Man, comprehended in his dual aspects, Vir and Womb-man, is in reality an invisible, internal spiritual power or ray from the great Central Sun, polarizing in Matter and crystalizing into manifestation its outward or exterior vehicles. This polarization in Matter has produced the compounds of Matter, which the process of Sanctification is to break up, in order that the ray may ultimately return to its spiritual source, -- which it may not do until it has recovered its essentially spiritual nature.

By the action of the Powers or Spirits of Man (the Threefold Spirit) directed by Love, Wisdom and Intelligence, our Salt, Sulphur and Mercury, exerting the power of attraction on the more greatly spiritualized atoms, replacing the grosser atomic structure in its dense crystallization with these spiritualized atoms which made up what is termed "Spiritual substance", the result is, in view of our definition of spiritual substance -- the awakening and birth of the Christ within.

Finally, it is the awakening and birth of the "Christ within", in a very active degree.

THE METHOD Nothing could be simpler in practical application -- and the practice of attracting the more highly spiritualized atoms to the vehicles of the Ego, is simply the natural concomitant of bridling or controlling the whole body, thereby releasing it from conformity to the laws of materialism, freeing it from the resultant crystal- izing power of those laws, and making possible the spiritually constructive work on a greater scale.

ALL LIFE IS A CONTINUOUS PROCESS OF SANCTIFICATION, each moment sanctifying the individual to a greater degree and approximating his ultimate spiritual illumination more rapidly. And each incarnation accelerates the process, until when we have drawn to ourselves all the more spiritualized atoms as is possible in this planetary environment, then we shall evolve to higher and higher spheres of activity, even as have those messiahs who have at all times appeared unto humanity as examples of the homo or human who has become comparatively perfect by the ultimate of earthly sanctification.

Q U E S T I O N S

1) Can "Soul" in the R+C terminology, be likened unto an Etheric Body or an Astral Body?

2) Give the definition of "Soul" (a) as termed by the R+C, (b) as termed by the Alchemists.

Dear Companions:

MEDITATION : THE SCIENCE OF SYNTHESIS

The complex problem of modern life can be solved easily if people know the science of meditation. It is only when the mind is tranquil that it can really observe the immense activity of the brain without creating psychological complications. The greatest importance should be given to the correct understanding of the working of the mind, because it is the only instrument we have, and as long as we are ignorant of the ways of the mind, there is every possibility for taking its fancies, vagaries and distortions for Reality. However, when we discover its many methods of creating illusions and aberrations we see them as unreal and they no longer bind us.

Meditation is really a technique for the attainment of spiritual tranquility since the practice of meditation brings about transformation of the body and mind by progressive reduction and elimination of the noxious stimuli which ordinarily excite and disturb. Regular meditation creates a new type of disposition in the mind which gradually eliminates the impressions gathered both in the subconscious and unconscious mind. Thus, the mind is purged or emptied of all the factors likely to disturb its inner composure. Then meditation ripens into a higher state in which the aspirant rises above the usual duality of subject and object and perceives the Infinite.

MEDITATION CLEARS THE MIND Meditation implies a constant awareness of every moment and we need this capacity to detach ourselves from everything. In meditation the marks of all impressions that are stored in the mind are wiped away and thereby we experience the fullness of life and benediction.

Suffering is the dominant characteristic of the human condition and we all know that a conditioned mind crippled by the psychological memory breeds fear and insecurity. The main cause of pain is traceable to craving & attachment and the individual is the prisoner of the misconception mistaking the unreal for the real. When he disciplines the mind, destroys the shackles of desire and achieves inner peace, then only is he free from mental anguish, frustration, disappointment, despair, anxiety and dejection.

Meditation is an effortless state that leads us beyond psychological confusion into a state where the mind is at perfect peace. It is a delicate discipline to observe our thought processes as they are without the burden of our past memory and preconceived ideas. It provides practical methods of holistic living that foster inner balance and outer harmony.

Inner freedom is a state of being alone in meditation, which means: no dependence on others. Perhaps there comes a moment for all of us when we meditate quietly -- the inescapable state of solitariness or aloneness -- and in that meditative awareness, fear and sorrow drop away and the real surrender of ego takes place spontaneously. The only way to solve the conflict of dissatisfaction is by losing our ego which is the veil that hides the vision of Truth. Hence, the giving up of the false self is the first step towards the realisation of Reality and the culmination of meditation.

MEDITATION IS AN INNER STATE Meditation cannot be superimposed from outside and it wells up from inside when our mind is not the battle ground of contradictory and conflicting desires. It is a state of awareness into which we take a plunge and leads to the realization of the Supreme. After you experience this realization, your whole outlook changes.

Actually, meditation implies unconditional, total change and radical transformation of the human mind. We reach this creative silence when the entire energy is gathered, when we are alert and do not allow the mental faculty to be dissipated. The enquiry of Truth becomes an all consuming flame within when we start living every moment with choiceless awareness.

It is futile to embark upon a spiritual journey with a selfish mind and impure heart. All the teachings of the great saints can be summarised to this: that our primary need is to attain a silent mind and this emptiness of mind is indispensable for the realization of Truth.

Generally, our mind is like a mirror, it gathers dust while it reflects. The dust must be blown off again and again and this constitutes the process of the dissociation from our ego because it maintains a screen between ourselves and reality. We must get rid of all our disturbances both outer and inner in order to perceive the Reality. The right perception is possible only with the help of a silent mind and without right perception there cannot be right action.

NO SHORT CUT TO ENLIGHTENMENT It is very necessary to develop the divine qualities of mental alertness and purity of heart. There is no short cut to enlightenment. What is required is a transformation of consciousness, a reshaping of every aspect of thinking. The content of human consciousness is the whole movement of thought and the desire for power, position and the pursuit of pleasure in which there is fear. Without understanding the subtle activities of our mind, we cannot progress in the spiritual life. Meditation means choiceless awareness, which implies the ability to drop a thought when it is complete and not to entangle it with succeeding thoughts.

If we can sustain this state of non-reactional observation naturally, the momentum of past psychological confusion goes into abeyance; then there is nothing more to observe, consequently the division between the observer and the observed withers away by itself. In this divine synthesis we experience the bliss of the Infinite in which state the last activity of ego goes voluntarily, effortlessly. This is the beginning of inner freedom and the sweetness of silence.

In meditation all the complications that the ego weaves, drop away, that is: the network of complexities as well as all the inhibitions fade. At present the mental energy in its totality has no opportunity to function properly since the ego is dividing and pulling it in so many directions. In meditation the mind is completely silent as it is not moving in any direction because the ego is in abeyance. The usefulness in meditation then, is although the mind has all the talents and capacities intact, yet there is a total cessation of mental activity. This means energy which divides into contradictory desires, conflicting intentions, and scattered into various directions, comes back to its original source. This is something with which we can readily experiment, when we practice meditation.

THE EFFECT OF MEDITATION Every thought or feeling disturbs or gives a jerk to the whole chemistry of the body, but when we are in meditation there is perfect rhythm which means the digestive process, the glandular and the nervous system all are in a harmonious state, thereby the biological and psychological processes are beautifully synthesized.

We live in a world full of stressful situations and to run away from stress is to run away from life. By changing our mental responses we can easily learn to manage mental confusion because virtually all psychological stress comes from the rush and hurry of a frantic mind which jumps recklessly to unwarranted conclusions, rushes to judgements.

Such a mind subjects the body to continual stress because it is always on the move, desiring, worrying and fearing. Simply by slowing down the mind -- the first purpose of meditation -- much of this kind of stress can be removed from life.

As long as there is a division in consciousness between like and dislike, that division itself will be a breeding ground for frustration, insecurity and anxiety. As a matter of fact, psychosomatic studies have shown how often they cause most damaging physical diseases and unhappiness.

THE CONSEQUENCES OF THE WAY WE REACT It is not so much the particular event or circumstance that brings on an attack of anxiety; it is the significance we ascribe to that event, the way we react to it in our own mind, that triggers anxiety or tension and brings on the attack.

We can attain real freedom by transcending our mind which is limited and conditioned by various factors. Meditation is the correct method to contact the Cosmic Consciousness. Without understanding the very structure of the mind it is impossible to go beyond the mind, because the movement of the mind which functions within the limitation of psychological time brings fear and deception.

The meditative awareness increases the capacity to understand the totality of the mind; then there is freedom and divine bliss. Philosophically speaking, there is only the eternal present and there is neither past nor future. So long as the ego is there -- it creates fear or frustration. The element of fear is introduced by the ego when it thinks about the future or when the mind dwells in the past. The best way to overcome the fear of insecurity is to observe the movement of the mind through meditative awareness. Then the agitation of the mind stops as the ending of the activity of the mind is the beginning of the sweet state of silence and serenity. Till we reach the state of internal silence we cannot be liberated from the influence of fear -- which always brings sorrow and misery.

HALF-LIVING Nowadays, man has lost the charm and beauty of living totally every moment, because in life he passes through half-lived experiences. Therefore, the challenges of life are half-met and half-resolved. Obviously, challenges unmet and the tension unresolved, go down to his subconscious mind and torture him -- as every experience which is not lived totally, brings various psychological complications. Fragmentation of attention is the main cause for all misery and sorrow in life. Hence, the aim of meditation is the complete integration of the human being.

When the psycho-physical energy of man is directed by enlightened intelligence something wonderful happens and he experiences bliss and harmony in his relationship. Meditation does not mean a state of oblivion nor is it a condition of stupor. Meditation is possible, when there is no thought interference which means, psychologically, the mind becomes a witness to thought activity.

In meditation there is cessation of the variations of the mind, then mind becomes calm and serene and in that silence there is no agitation of any kind, no stir mars the perfect stillness. In meditation the feeling of separation vanishes, the ego barrier is dissolved and transcended. True spirituality is harmonious and holistic living, free from greed, ambition and competition. To live a life of freedom is the aim of meditation, because man is born to live a perfect life.

ONE'S THOUGHTS ARE THE CAUSE OF UNHAPPINESS The major obstacles to man's liberation and total transformation are memory, habit and attachment to fixed ideas/images. In order to understand the nature of ourselves, it is necessary to focus our attention on the working of our mind. With a view to having this self-knowledge, the mind must be aware of itself from moment to moment, its own movements, urges, motives and operation of psychological memory. If the mind can be aware of all that within itself, then there is a possibility of being free from all conditioning and misery.

When one realises that it is one's thoughts that cause the unhappiness, then there is the right foundation, the correct starting point for investigation which means that for the first time one becomes wholly responsible for one's own sorrow and NOT SOMETHING EXTERNAL. At this stage, what is immediately meaningful and relevant is, one should unceasingly enquire into various activities and psychological reactions of the mind with ever increasing attention. This method of carefully watching the origin and the end of each thought will give the capacity to probe into both conscious and unconscious mind and thereby not to get entangled in thoughts.

There is in man an inherent urge to grow, develop and expand because each soul is potentially divine. The importance of spiritual discipline cannot be neglected, because the development of life truly means the cultivation of calmness of mind. Man's achievements in various fields are but the manifestations of this inner attainment. He who is master of his mind is capable of entering into the ocean of the Infinite.

THE KEY TO SELF-MASTERY Although the real freedom is within us it has to be rediscovered by persistent effort in the right direction despite repeated failures. The secret of every great achievement lies in devoting one's life in the art of meditation in an atmosphere of freedom, fearlessness and solitude.

The key to self-mastery consists in discriminating the real from the unreal.

The more a person is aware of his divine nature the greater his capacity to observe all his mental happenings in a detached way, as a witness, and thereby he is in tune with the Infinite. Do you remember what Saint-Martin said? PLEASE RE-READ LECTURES #86 & 87, IN LIBER 24.

Better life, happier life, peaceful life, all these are products of the personal discovery of Truth. Life is new at each moment and therefore, one must live in the living present by dropping the dead past so that we can enjoy the beauty of meditation and for which one should be totally open, spotlessly pure, absolutely frank and fully receptive. A delicate, sensitive and silent mind when combined with a tender heart has a divine quality to comprehend the contents of consciousness and the immediate condition of the psyche.

THE CAUSE OF PSYCHOLOGICAL CONFLICT The human mind is constantly exposed to a variety of stimuli both internal and external and these stimuli acting through various sense organs, cause an incessant series of changes in the subconscious mind. Some of these fluctuations appear to be pleasing while others are painful and these sensations invariably create a mental tension which disturbs the equilibrium of the mind. It is apparent that our attachment to pleasure and aversion to pain, are the real cause of the psychological conflict.

Although science and technology have piled comfort upon comfort, yet we can see in the present day greater and greater incidence or neurosis and psychosomatic illness and a large number of problems arising from psychological maladjustments. One of the most acute problems of our society is indeed the problem of strained human relationships, because man seems to have lost the art of living together peacefully.

Man has continuously been engaged and primarily concerned with the search for happiness. Yet the happiness that most of us are searching for cannot be had in sensual pleasures, because one's miseries and moods of depression simply stem from the persistent pursuit of wrong and unreal excitements. What the scientists have been trying to prove nowadays on an experimental basis has been intuitively perceived by sages and they went further and declared from their own intuitive experience that what we call the individual soul is only a part of the Cosmic Being or Absolute Reality. In other words, each soul is like a wave and is only a part of the ocean of Infinity.

THE AIM OF MEDITATION The beauty and bliss of oneness of microcosm and macrocosm can be experienced in deep, silent meditation. Unless a man rises above the allurement of his senses he cannot expect substantial progress and development on the spiritual path. The lifting up of the mind to the realm of divinity is the aim of meditation.

The seeker who knows that all life is one in essence treats all living things with reverence and respect. For him, service is love in action, and he derives the greatest satisfaction in sharing his knowledge, understanding and spiritual energy with others. To lead a spiritual life, one must have the divine quality of fearlessness; so that one can face all difficulties and problems boldly.

To establish inner harmony through self-discipline is very important as otherwise there is the possibility of deviating from the central aim of meditative awareness. It is very essential for the aspirant to dedicate his life not only in the service of humanity, but also in liberating himself from the limitation of his mind so that he is quite capable of experiencing the sweetness of meditation.

Love is purely a divine attribute and the perfume of love can be enjoyed only when a seeker transcends his mental realm to the state of Cosmic Consciousness. To live in that state of Infinitude one must discard all the petty desires and purify his heart so that the spiritual energy can be generated for the spiritual elevation of humanity.

Although our physical bodies and minds are limited and conditioned, the soul is capable of Infinite expansion and can become one with the Cosmic Consciousness through the practice of meditation because, to state it picturesquely again, each soul is a part of the ocean of Infinity. There is a direct and intimate relationship between the individual part, and the Cosmic whole, and it is the awareness of that relationship that is the foundation of the spiritual life.

SOUL THE CORE OF THE PERSONALITY The soul is the core of the personality and it is the center around which the whole personality is to be integrated. If we wish to make spiritual life natural and continuous we should attain harmonious integration of personality, because in many people, their emotions go one way, intellect goes another, and action follows a third course.

As a matter of fact, spiritually is neither an emotion, a reasoning, nor an action. It is something directly connected with Divinity and in which state the mind is free from all superficial impositions, conditioning and ego distortions.

REAL MEDITATION Real meditation consists in the passive and choiceless observation of one's thoughts and feelings from moment to moment. In this state of watching the thought process one makes no attempt whatsoever to interfere with the psychological reaction towards people, events, situations, ideas and so forth. Actually, it is an unprejudiced observation of the mind in the sense that there is no repression or condemnation. This makes the possibility of allowing the contents of the subconscious and unconscious desires to get exposed and transcended. When the noise of the petty mind has been silenced, when the death of the ego and the psychological past has taken place, when the clamour of the senses has ceased, only then occurs the full flowering of divine love, compassion and freedom.

"SEED"

I had planted thee a noble vine, WHOLLY A RIGHT SEED: how then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me?

Jeremiah ii, 21.

IN the words of this text, the Most High is assumed to be speaking to Israel thru the mouth of his chosen Prophet Jeremiah, one of the major Prophets to whom religious and secular historians of all the intervening ages have agreed in ascribing or imputing the Divine Gift of Inspiration, and therefore the words are invested with a peculiar importance and authority.

Israel is being admonisht for having fallen far below the standard set by the original law-givers Moses and Aaron, and furthermore for having succumbed to the materialism even of that remote period.

The message is at once direct and indirect.

Directly it is to Israel. Indirectly it is to the whole human family of all ages and in this understanding it contains the explanation of many theological and even cosmic mysteries and uncertainties.

First, it contains the proof of the teaching, given in all due reverence, that even the God of our concepts is not perfect, for perfection would imply a state of finality, completeness, cessation of action and therefore the end of evolution and progress; a state in which the subject subsisted and existed solely within, upon, by and for itself, and this would mean but one thing—ultimate non-existence.

Second, it gives us an acceptable explanation of the traditions of ancient mythos, such as the Flood, wherein humanity was destroyed because of its imperfections, the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, the destruction of races, continents and civilizations, and the fact that Humanity fosters races which are now known to occultists as physical forms of previous higher phases of evolution

Third, and above all, it is a demonstration to us direct, via the inspirational utterances of a Divinely chosen and commissioned Prophet, of the Rosicrucian teaching of the emanation and growth of Humanity from specific definite SEED, seed which was "wholly right" at the beginning, but for the improper cultivation of which, Humanity, as a faulty gardener, is being called to account.

It has been taught in our Hermetic series that the SOUL of Men and of Metals is IDENTICAL. And we are further taught by St. Paul (1 Cor. xv, 38) that "every seed has his own body." Previously we have called attention to this notable word "his" in this sentence, which has so been overlookt by scholars that much misunderstanding has resulted. Ordinarily the word to have used would have been "Its own body." The word "his", used instead means the Body of God, true to the teachings of Alchemy, in which St. Paul was undoubtedly well verst.

If, therefore, God gives HIS own body to every seed, then it is true that we are made in the Image of God and it is equally true that every living thing known to Man is also in the Image of God; in other words, God is incarnate in every department of the Kingdoms of Life and the words of our Creed are more fruitful of meaning to us when we affirm our belief in an Infinite Intelligence, "Omniscient ,Omnific and Omnipotent."

We cannot sow corn and reap wheat. We cannot plant daisies and gather lilies. If God gives to every seed His own Body, then we have a scientific demonstration that the Laws of Nature are of Divine Origin and foreintent, for it is the first Law of Nature that ALL species shall develop true to type, each subsequent developmental phase marking a distinct advance, and if it fails to make this advance while running true to type, it is because some condition has been permitted to interfere and frustrate the original Divine Plan, and, in the case of Humanity, we have previously found that such is possible by the erroneous exercise of what we assert is our own "Free-Will."

The flower pluckt must be the product of the species resultant from a given seed sown. Soul is the product of Man. Soul is the product extracted by the Threefold Spirit from the Threefold Body of Man. But if the SOUL of Men and of Metals is identical, then Men and Metals must have originated from one primal Seed, and the intervening Kingdoms and their multiform types of expression are not to be considered as departures from the purity of the original Seed but Variations expressing the differentiated steps of progress that lie between.

This being assumed, we should expect to find in man not simply the common group of well-known metals and minerals ordinarily ascribed or accredited to him by physiology, but ALL those known at present to chemical science and ALL those that remain to be discovered as well. Rosicrucianism asserts that such is the case. Science is, step by step, confirming it, for while it is well known that iron is an essential constituent of the blood, it is only recently that in some animal types copper is found in considerable quantities instead, and this has been proved true even in the cases of some human examples.

Iodin has been found in the thyroid gland, manganese is widespread, and minute quantities of arsenic characterize the components of the organic tissues of several cases. Bromin and Chlorin are now also considered as constituents of normal tissue. So science proves what Alchemy has taught.

The Life Principle in all Seed is intensely virile. From a few microscopic cells of the living tissue of a chick's heart Dr. Carrel arranged nearly two decades ago, living connective tissue has reproduced itself thru hundreds of generations, each portion doubling itself in size every 24 hours.

From the primal incarnation of the Life Principle it goes on and on thru the ages expressing in multiform types, each family group true to type. Gold and Radium are but the higher polarities of the lower and basic metals. The giant Sequoias of California are but the vegetable analogies and correspondences to the dinosaurs and gigantic reptilia, Triassic and Jura Triassic in Mesozoic Time. Man is the highest polarity of the anthropoid and the monkey its lowest.

Man is the epitomized incarnation of all the preceding Kingdoms. Nowhere do we find the Divinity thru His chosen messengers condemning the types of the preceding Kingdoms. Each species therein runs true to type, but developing differentiations as indications of progress. It is with the Human Family that the questioning complaint is uttered, I PLANTED THEE A NOBLE VINE, A WHOLLY RIGHT SEED, WHEREFORE ART THOU TURNED INTO A DEGENERATE PLANT OF A STRANGE VINE UNTO ME? In other words, why has Humanity degenerated from its original lofty estate and status and become a strange type, i.e., something other and not as Divinity intended it should be?

The answer is also to be found in Hermetic Science in the Principle of Mentalism. The Hermetic teaching is that of the Absolute Unity. Separateness means error, diffusion, disintegration, scattering. So long as Man was content to remain in the perfect Unity with Divinity, he was incapable of his subsequent errors and departures. Man was originally a thought of God. He was a concrete idea in the Divine Mind. As long as he remained so he was essentially Divine and the Unity was unbroken. Humanity is Divinity thinking Itself into manifestation. But when Humanity grew restless in this Divine Unity and partook of the fruit of the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil and gave itself up to sensuous existence, then it ceast temporarily to be WHOLLY Divine, WHOLLY A RIGHT SEED, and began to think for itself, assert the exercise of its own Free-will prerogative, and departed from its strict adherence to type and became a degenerate plant of a strange vine unto its Creator and Author.

This brings us directly to the point that concerns us most as occultists. The real issue is the Thought Seed, not the physical seed. Physically, in spite of its wide departure from the original laws as formulated after the Exodus, the seed of Israel remained and has remained intensely virile, as witness the activity of the Hebraic Race in all subsequent epochs of the world's history, even tho distributed and scattered all over the known world.

The Seed of Thought is what concerns Humanity principally. We all know what is meant by the term—"the germ of an idea." It is the Thought Seed regarding a specific impulse which may be concreted into any one of several distinct manifestations, either as an action, an invention, a theory, hypothesis, a doctrine or a law.

The Seed of an idea or thought implanted grows. We can and often do, watch it take root, grow and develop. It may bear good fruit or it may bear evil fruit; all depending upon the time, place and soil, mentally, in which it is implanted. The seed may be wholly right, but, impanted in the wrong soil it may bring forth fruits disastrous to the community.

Such we see in medical science and the science of bacterial organisms. For instance, take the dread scourge cancer; by some researchers it is believed to be simply a case of misplaced seed, seed sown in the wrong place or soil, growing true to type but in the wrong environment. In this concept it is regarded as the transplantation or migration of perfectly good and normal cells, into foreign territory in the human organism, where they reproduce unrestrained by the environment of the proper location and so work confusion in the normal processes of the body.

So it is with the Seed of Thought. The seed of a perfectly brilliant and wonderful mathematical concept sown in the mind of a perverted mental genius may produce a Master Safe-breaker, while in the well balanst and equilibrated mentalism of another it may produce an Einstein.

By proper chemical nutriment we can develop perfectly good and wholly right seeds into black roses, green carnations and chrysanthemums combining a veritable riot of color. It was the same with the case of the Safe-breaker previously mentioned. The seed was wholly right, the mental soil fertile, but the nourishment that soil afforded produced a degenerate plant of a strange vine, far from being true to type except in external manifestations and application.

If we seek to produce hybrid vegetation, that is wholly within the power of those who prefer the artificial and unnatural to the natural and comparatively perfect. But to guard against the implantation of the Seed of Thought in undesirable soil is not within our power, and the Master recognized this Himself when he said, "let the wheat and the tares grow together until the harvest", lest in uprooting the tares, we also uproot the wheat. And this is the rule we are bound to follow in our present stage of evolution, letting the Seed of Truth and the Seed of Thought grow alike in the prepared and the unprepared, until the time of harvest which will be the demands of Karma for closing accounts.

The question askt of Israel over two thousand years ago is equally applicable to ALL Humanity today. All humanity, is, to some extent, a degenerate plant of a strange vine, far different from what it was Divinely intended to be. It is undoubtedly passing thru phases of development which, under the conditions imposed by the Knowledge of Good and Evil, are absolutely necessary, but it is also for this reason that schools and cults exist for the purpose of guiding the steps of those who realize this condition, back to the Path that leads straight to attainment of the Unity lost long ago.

There is a very special mystery connected with this concept of Seed as inculcated by the Rosicrucian teachings. The mystery is of a dual nature.

1st, it has to do with what is called the "Birth of the Christ Within" or "Living the Christ Life."

2nd, it has to do with Death.

We will consider the latter aspect first.

St. Paul says,—(1 Cor. xv, 36) in answer to what some would consider a very natural inquiry,—"Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened EXCEPT IT DIE."

Herein is mystery. What is it that dies? If the life passes or could pass in the sense of being annihilated, then there could be no future existence, growth or development. But this cannot be, for we have learned, as Rosicrucian students, that all Life is the Activity of God and God is a static condition quantitatively. He cannot be added to nor taken from. Therefore there can be no annihilation of Life, even the smallest modicum.

It is the physical body or corpus of what we term the seed that dies, dying or death meaning simply the disintegration of the outer physical envelope of anything. But why is it necessary for this physical body of the seed to die or disintegrate? Many good people have an idea that in the physical body or substance of the seed are latent the potentialities of the future plant, vine or organism. If this were true, then by analysis, we could establish the exact quantitative and qualitative chemical components and relations and produce the ultimate results by laboratory method without awaiting the longer processes of Nature.

And if we could do this with the vegetable, we could do it with the organic tissue of animal life and generations of researchers to come undoubtedly could produce an automatic semblance of human species—souless of course.

The inability to do this has been the primal cause of the failure of scientists to produce life artificially by laboratory method thus far. They have indeed been able to fertilize artificially some low forms of organic matter, but they have not produced life, they have merely provided artificially a vehicle for the life already there to express itself.

The corpus of the physical seed then dies. Its individual substance has nothing to do with the substance, form and matter of the future growth resultant from it. In other words, the physical corpus or body of the seed is simply a matrix or mould which contains—not only Life itself—but the Life ensouling, vitalizing and vivifying THE DIVINE IDEA OF THE PLANT OR ORGANISM TO BE.

So no matter if the physical corpus of the seed does die, the LIVELY IDEA releast therefrom will work its way upward thru the earth to the Light, assuming the form, developing the structure and producing blossom and fruit according to the Concreted Thought Form enshrined in the former matrix and stimulated into manifestation by the Life which ensouled it.

This concept is easy to understand. It is simply the analogy which every worker in plaster or metal can supply. After producing the masterpiece of art which was first formulated in the mind of its Creator, a matrix must be made, from which many casts or reproductions can be taken, each exactly like the original, true to type in every detail because made from the WHOLLY RIGHT SEED of the original idea manifested.

Man, by his superior development beyond the lower departments of Nature, is able to make many reproductions of the original idea from one matrix or corpus. Nature, by her slower methods can make but one structure from one seed, but each structure in compensation is prolific in producing seed. Yet, in the finer works of human artisanship, the original matrix must be broken away, disintegrated or caused to die before we can get at the fine result hidden away within its recesses.

So the body of the seed must die, whether it be the seed of men or of metals.

Now this being a FACT in Nature, it must hold true all thru Nature's domain which includes the invisible worlds that are just as much a part of Nature's domain as the visible.

It is true therefore with the Seed of Thought. The body of the seed must die. This seems a strange paradox that Thought which seems a part of Life itself must experience any form or phase of death in order to take root, grow and flourish. What IS the body of a Thought?

The physical body or corpus of Thought is the vehicle by which Thought is conveyed. It may be speech, it may be a picture or it may be a mental visualization stimulated or inspired from without or developt from within the individual receiving it.

This corpus of the Seed of Thought must die and DOES die. We can observe it any day of our lives. Conceive an idea. Formulate it carefully for expression. Then convey it to a chosen subject, properly clothed in the body of speech. Note;—the words will make a TEMPORARY IMPRESSION which will not be lasting. In a very short time thereafter few subjects would be able to repeat the exact words without variation.

But the IDEA or THOUGHT you desired to convey WILL STILL BE THERE. The Body of the Thought Seed,—speech—has died; disintegrated and passed from mind, BUT THE THOUGHT IS GROWING and in some cases the rapidity of its growth will amaze even the most experienced investigator.

We can all of us recall instantly the impression made and the IDEA gained from some picture or pictures which we may have seen years ago, tho we cannot place the artist or even remember where or when we saw the picture and in some cases we cannot even call to mind the picture itself, but WE KNOW THAT ONCE WE DID SEE SOMETHING THAT GAVE US SUCH AND SUCH AN IDEA.

To pursue this particular development of the concept farther, would necessitate an exegesis of the realm of the sub-conscious which is not our present purpose, for it is the sub-conscious mental powers that form the soil in which the germ ideas and thoughts take root, grow and develop into the fruitage which later expresses thru the conscious faculties.

To go back to our classifications, we noted that the 1st had to do with what is so often called the "Birth of the Christ Within".

In the same writing of St. Paul we find the lines (1 Cor. xv, 20) which read,—"But NOW is Christ RISEN FROM THE DEAD, and become the first fruits of them that slept".

This passage is in use in nearly all funeral and requiem rituals and is undoubtedly most appropriate therefor and it is taken theologically as a proof of the material resurrection after the Tragedy on Golgotha.

Herein is the other mystery, altho it should not be one difficult to comprehend for Rosicrucian students in view of their earlier teachings in the Fundamentals of our Philosophy. Jesus and Christ were two distinctly separate individuals. One a Human, the other a purely Spiritual Being. In the first place, Jesus did not actually die on the Cross but is known to Initiates as having lived for several years thereafter as the Great Philosopher known as Simon Magus, and a study of the writings of this Sage will substantiate the teaching. In the second place, Christ, being pure Spirit, and the Highest Initiate of the World Periods to function upon our Earth, could not possibly die or be killed.

But something MUST have died, for it is explicitly stated that NOW is Christ RISEN FROM THE DEAD and become the firstfruits of THEM THAT SLEPT.

Who are they who slept? ALL HUMANITY, SINCE HUMANITY BECAME A DISTINCT SPECIES, made in the Image of God.

From the time since Mankind relinquisht his purely spiritual existence and the companionship of the Gods and chose a completely material form of manifestation, IT HAS SLEPT AND FOR THE MOST PART IS STILL SLEEPING in the illusory existence of the senses AND SO IT HAS BECOME A DEGENERATE PLANT OF A STRANGE VINE, unto God.

But by the transmutation effected in the corpus of the Man Jesus, the Cosmic Seed of Materialistic and Sensuous Thought was destroyed or caused to die by the Christos which had ensouled it for this very purpose of death. Then did the Christos RISE from this dead seed to become the first fruits of them that slept in sensualism. This included all those members of the human family prior to the coming of the Christos because all of them have had and are having subsequent incarnations, enabling them to partake of the same great privilege.

The "Birth of the Christ Within" each individual takes place as soon as the Christ can Rise from the Dead in each; in other words rise from the dead body of material and sensuous illusion and crystallization, and there is no other way, either by ceremonial or magic to produce this result and blessing.

Every individual member of the human species will remain a degenerate plant of a strange vine until this inner death or disintegration of the illusion of sense takes place within and the Christ is born or rises from the corpus of wrong Thought and this is the esoteric meaning of the Rosicrucian symbol of the Phoenix, rising from the ashes.

How can we as occult students bring this ecstatic state to pass in our individual lives?

First of all, by keeping in mind that it is our duty to seek only the higher things and then to seek equally in earnest the invisible cause of all visible effects, for such a search will take us into the inner realms of being and Nature. The best way to kill off a plant or any kind of growth is to deprive it of the nourishment on which it thrives.

If that nourishment in our individual lives is material gain, physical pleasure and the satisfaction of the senses alone, then we can cause the death of the Seed of illusory thought by relinquishing them. If our only contact with the other side of life or our guidance therefrom is sought by running to mediums, soothsayers, fortune tellers and the materialistic class of astrologers, then we shall make little advance indeed and no TRUE advance in any sense of the word. Seekers and worshippers of phenomena must depend upon the superficial satisfaction afforded thereby and will always be conscious of an interior disappointment and lack of the real sense of comfort and happiness that comes only from the exercise of their own inherent powers; powers that can be developt ONLY by hard, personal, individual, conscientious effort, despite the claims of charlatans to the contrary and we await a single instance of proof to the contrary.

When we have caused the death of this Seed of Illusory Thought, we shall realize the sublime truth contained in the lines—

"So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonour; it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body.

Mankind, when he became mankind instead of a purely spiritual being came under the laws of Nature and was therefore at first a Natural Man. On his awakening, he will regain his lost estate and become a Spiritual Man, and this is the esoteric truth of the saying that is written;—

Howbeit, that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which IS spiritual."

By cultivating the Seed of Illusory Thought we have corruption, dishonour, weakness and the unrestrained exercise of the purely natural faculties, and to effect some degree of control over that which man KNOWS to be erroneous and a wrongful estate, he has attempted all thru the ages to control his fellow men by the formulation of laws which are based on an attempt to execute justice, but which every one knows fail of their purpose because fundamentally they are formulated by minds deeply embedded in error.

Mankind at present is a degenerate plant of a strange vine, because, altho grown from a WHOLLY RIGHT SEED, he has nourisht his spiritual faculties on the illusions of Matter and material conditions. Mankind therefore, is at present a hybrid growth, not true to type; an anachronism in Nature. Like some of the strange creations of horticulturists, he still bears the Image of his Creator but has departed from the Law of Conformity to type and consequently bears a fruitage not in accordance with the Seed from which he sprung.

Mankind is at present the Black Rose of Cosmos. The Red Rose with the beautiful symbolism known to Rosicrucian students, epitomizes the Creative Activity on the true lines of conformity to perfect spiritual type and Obedience to the Laws of Nature which are the Laws of God in manifestation. But, like the rose, nourisht and cultured under false, unnatural and artificial conditions to produce the rarity so highly prized by those who are ever unsatisfied with Nature's own products, mankind has nourisht his spiritual perceptions and inner vehicles with sense illusion until instead of the Red Rose of Comparative Perfection, he is the Black Rose of artificial and erroneous culture.

We CAN regain the status of the Red Rose, our time honored symbol, if we eschew the illusions of sense, and cultivate the perception of Reality; strive for At-One-ness with the Over-Soul and by constant and unfailing effort to attain the inner spheres of knowledge, put ourselves in touch with the Great Original of the Picture of Life, instead of being content with the evanescent shadow and reflected image thereof, highly colored and apparently pleasing tho it may be.

The best guide to this process is the incomparable Sermon on the Mount, than which no better guide for the spiritual progress and development of Man has ever been given in any age. It applies to all creeds, cults or schools of thought. It is the code by which the Master Himself was governed while he was the special vehicle of the Christos and it is so simple that a child can put it in practice. We can safely relegate all subsequent systems of philosophy if we devote ourselves with singleness of purpose to this one brief but all inclusive teaching, a teaching which is the essence of our Rosicrucian system and the surest guide to the attainment of the Philosopher's Stone.

Some cults teach that tho we must incarnate, nevertheless each life is something to be lived as rapidly as possible so that the end of incarnation can be more quickly reacht. We do not need to expedite our mortal lives for any such purpose. The end of involuntary incarnation will come when we cause the death of the Seed of Illusory Thought within us, and permit the Christos to Rise from the Dead and become our individual first fruit, after the sleep of ages of spiritual darkness.

Whatever the circumstances or conditions may be, wherever we may go, we must have mental purity to such a degree to regard everyone as the Image of God. We must also train our minds to be unattached to worldly temptations.

We are not the mere product of environmental influences or slaves to our instinctive passions and impulses. We have a divine faculty to think rightly in the Light of our Wisdom before we act.

We are responsible for all our sufferings and we ourselves have to rid ourselves from the clutches of pains and miseries. It is to be understood that true religion begins in ourselves when our hearts become pure and clean through silent meditation.

What we call "REALITY" is that which cannot be assessed through our intellectual ability. If we are intensely aware of our thoughts, we will discover that our thoughts themselves are dying. We must have a pure heart which is not contaminated by past psychological memories to understand reality.

What is most important is not the material prosperity or scientific advancement but the purification of heart and the realisation of Divinity. This does not mean that we should neglect science or worldly activities.

Self-Realisation is our goal and we must utilise all our energy in attaining this goal. We have a potential power within ourselves and to open that Spiritual Reservoir we must delve deeply into meditation.

Whether we like it or not, there is an urge in us which seeks fulfillment only in PERFECT PEACE; one must be able to empty the mind at will; this is not difficult to do but the mind, like a child, or a pet dog, or a tree, must be trained. Simple persistence with the exercises which are being given quickly develop one's capability to control one's mind. This is the message I have for fellow Companions: Stick with them!

Respected Companions

This is Liber 45 and we continue with the fourth in the series of doctrinal exegeses: 'Purificatio' or Purification, interpreted Alchemically.

Companions should be seated in their Oratories

"Purify your hearts, ye double minded". James 4:8

"P U R I F I C A T I O"

DEFINITION & MEANING Academically defined, 'Purificatio' is the operational act of purifying, said of things physical or spiritual. In its ecclesiastical usage, it is the act or observance of formal cleansing from defilement. And spiritually, it is the first of the three successive degrees of ascent to union with God, mystically represented by Baptism.

But regardless of its particular usage, it will be found always to mean the act or process of freeing from admixture with foreign or vitiating elements; freeing from extraneous matter; making pure and clean; cleansing ceremonially for sacred service; clarifying, cleansing, cleaning, refining, washing; delivering from all that can contaminate, deprave, corrupt, debase, defile, infect, make foul, taint, poison, or vitiate.

"FREEING FROM FOREIGN OR VITIATING ELEMENTS; FREEING FROM EXTRANEOUS MATTER". These are the words that convey the utmost significance to occultists. For when we stop to consider what a composite creature is man, with all his vehicles of varying densities, each with its own specific properties and attributes, its nature and method of functioning, then we can easily see how important this matter of purificatio becomes, in order that, like an engine of complex mechanism, every part may co-ordinate in its designated functions, with every other part, which can only be possible as every part is kept pure and clean, and free from admixture with any extraneous matter or foreign substance.

THE EFFECTS OF ASTRAL DESIRE MATTER Just how impure each human being really is, can be known only by those who have developed the clairvoyant faculty. Yet each human being senses the result without being able always to locate the actual cause. The feeling of heaviness, unrest, dissatisfaction, discontent, lack of courage of conviction, doubt as to the fundamentals of life and its activities, mental depression, morbidity and foreboding; all these are due primarily to individual impurity brought about by the activity of the astral body and its impulsion to desire, which acts to attract to itself extraneous desire matter from the astral world, which in turn clogs and inhibits the freedom of mental reflection of the higher commands and urges of the Ego. And between the fatigue and weakness resultant upon this invisible conflict going on insensibly to us in our waking consciousness and the aspirations of the Inner Man or Ego to union with God, come all the conditions of daily life and activity that blind us to the actuality and nearness of His presence.

CLEANSING THE ASTRAL BODY Purification therefore, may be said to be the act or process of cleansing the astral body, which is the seat of all desire, and which, therefore, by its very nature, draws to itself and to the other vehicles of man, such an amount of extraneous matter both physical and spiritual, that it becomes a sure preventive to union with God, for above all we are taught that CLEANLINESS is next to Godliness, and no unclean thing (or person) shall see God.

The nature and characteristics of the astral body which causes it to draw to itself such a large amount of the desire stuff, or extraneous matter of the Astral World leads us to another concept. The Astral World you may remember, is composed of seven sub-regions, ranging from that of coarse passion to the higher soul-powers. Thus, not only does the astral body draw matter to itself from specific sub-regions, according to its desire nature -- but from all of them as well -- for some element of each sub-region necessarily enters into the sum and substance of daily human life.

EFFECTS OF EXCESSIVE HIGHER TYPE ASTRAL MATTER And so it is that many of the most earnest and well-intentioned men and women, through continuous contemplation, meditation, and concentration, do actually draw to themselves such an excess of even the highest form of Astral Matter that their spiritual and even physical activities and inhibited thereby. Then we have the recluse, the hermit, the anchorite, the monk, the nun, the community brethren, the religious fanatic, the narrow-minded bigot, the sincere religious enthusiast who is perfectly sure that he is right and can see salvation for his brethren only by their conversion to his particular point of view.....

The process of purificatio may be accomplished by means of five definite steps: the five "a's" -

1. Ablution
2. Abstention
3. Assimilation
4. Assertion
5. Aspiration

The practice of these five "steps" will involve all the principal Alchemic Arts and Principles, our Salt, Sulphur, and Mercury; our Maiden, Red Lion and the Four Elements.

First of all, in the application of the Alchemic Salt, we must have the WILL and WISDOM to enter upon the Path, for the process of Purification is the most difficult of all spiritual practices, and being the most difficult, it is therefore at the same time, the most necessary.

THE REQUIREMENTS The Aspirant must have the WILL to DO, to KNOW, and to Keep Silent; also the Courage to Dare, and to TRY. He must have the WISDOM born of EXPERIENCE, for innocence does not sense the need for purification that really applies to every spirit that incarnates in mortal flesh. In this usage the term "innocence" is intended to be synonymous with ignorance, with which indeed it is often confounded.

TRUE PURIFICATION The Aspirant may not expect to attain purification and the blessing that it brings if he establishes his desire on any material basis, however laudable that basis may at the time appear to him. True purification comes only as the result of genuine love in the abstract — that is, love for spiritual things because they are spiritual, not for the power or powers that spiritual things are commonly supposed to convey; love that is the reflection of the Divine Love which brought into manifestation in the Divine Mind — ourselves — that Divinity might not be alone in Cosmos, but witness Itself reflected, recreated, and — these manifestations — ourselves — finally returned unto the bosom of the Father, self-conscious, creative Gods, even as Himself; capable of assisting Him in the ordering of new universes yet to be, in the unfathomable depths of Cosmos.

GREATEST TRANSMUTATION TAKES PLACE ON THE MENTAL PLANE Likewise in the application of our Mercury, the Aspirant must keep always in his consciousness the fact that the greatest miracles, the greatest Hermetic and Alchemic Transmutation, is to be effected only on the Mental Plane, and that after accomplishment on that plane, the result will be reflected in the lower vehicles. For our Mercury, wherewith we are to work these spiritual reformations and reconstructions is that great unorganized force now known as MIND, the Astral Light, the Spiritual Quintessence of all things.

THE ASTRAL LIGHT

When beginning the process of returning to the purely spiritual status we must retrace our steps and work from the without to the within. Thus ablution, or the cleansing of the body, fits our minds for the proper apprehension and conception of the important work before us. And this cleansing of the body applies to the inside as well as the outside, for only by the purification of the entire organism, both within and without, can make our bodies fit temples for the Indwelling God in each. Thus through our alchemical Salt we have the Will and the WISDOM both to enter upon the Path, and the ability to accomplish it.

ABSTINENCE FROM IMPURITIES Secondly, we must thereafter abstain from those conditions as much as possible that make for uncleanliness. This may seem irrelevant, but it is a fact that much of our personal daily uncleanliness might be avoided if we took the proper steps to do so, and had it constantly in mind to contact soilation and impurity as little as possible. It need not inhibit our daily activities, but contact with honest soil of Mother Earth is a vastly different thing from contact with the dirt of unsanitary impurities met within our every day lives. How many of us stop to realize that in a subway, surface car, bus, store, office — and in almost every possible place in which our daily duties may find us — we are constantly contacting with our sensitive flesh, moist with its excretions, and a fertile colonizing ground for bacterial forms and germ growths, the plasmic conditions that are fraught not only with their own individual dangers, but ensouling portions of the auras of both beings and environments fatal to higher spiritual clarity and purity? This does not mean that one should in self-holiness avoid the filth of unfortunate placements in life and withhold the helping hand, but it is not necessary to take on the impurity itself in seeking to lift an unfortunate brother out of it.

Abstention means not only abstention from anything that can befoul the physical structure externally, but also in our food, that the internal man be not made impure thereby. And as we must be careful of the food for the body, so also must we be even more careful of the food for the mind, in what we read, associate with or contact through our sense perception. (There is no telling what, and to what extent "programmes" on t.v. programme us into accepting and believing.) Remember "As a man thinketh IN his heart, so is he." And again, "Only the pure in HEART shall see God."

EFFECT OF HOLDING PURE THOUGHTS If we hold the thought of purity inwardly, and are positive of our bodily purity outwardly, we shall train our physical and spiritual organisms to assimilate only that which is pure and the forces of repulsion set in motion by the co-ordination of the intricate physio-spiritual mechanisms of our complex being, will repel and refuse to assimilate or permit the assimilation of any extraneous or foreign matter or substance.

Thus the process continues from the exterior inwardly. First the Ablutions of the physical body both within and without. Then the Abstention from contact with impurity of both physical, mental and spiritual food, environment and associations; next Assimilation only of that which is invigorating, revivifying and spiritually strengthening — to the requisite degree — not beyond it, to a surfeit of that which seems even to be goodly. In this way the Physical Body becomes purified, the Etheric Body is free to function in the subtlest ethers in its work upon the Physical, and we reach the Astral which has already, to a large extent become attuned to the new order of things and is prepared for the expression of its desires in the shape of definite, constructive Assertion.

Assertion of the thought, desire for, and intent to attain complete physical and spiritual purity. Then it is that a man begins to THINK in his heart of purity, and in thinking OF purity it begins to expand itself in his consciousness until he becomes actuated by the DESIRE for greater spiritual and mental purity, a desire born not of cold logic, or definitely formulated plans, both of which are negative in their ultimate results, but spontaneously, from his nearer approach to that God whom only the "Pure in Heart Shall See."

ANCIENT TEACHINGS CONCERNING THE APPROACH TO ONE'S PROTOTYPE Among the ancients it was taught that from the Sun, in its spiritual, not physical aspect, proceeded certain "rays" affecting all the planes and grades of human evolution, from the highest of which emanated the Saviors, Avatars, Messiahs, Buddhas, etc. And thus the closer to one's approach to his Prototype in "Heaven", the better it was for the mortal whose Personality was chosen by his "OWN PERSONAL DEITY" or Seventh Principle, as its terrestrial abode.

"For with every effort of will toward purification and unity with that self-God, one of the lower rays was said to break, and the spiritual entity of man drawn higher and ever higher to the Ray that supersedes the first, until from Ray to Ray, the Inner Man is drawn into the one and highest Beam of the Parent Sun". (Secret Doctrine, Vol 1, p. 700).

We have already stated that true purification must be the practice resultant upon the desire for union with God. Therefore we are not surprised when we find in the Great Arcana, the mandate (James 4:8) "Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners, and purify your hearts, ye double minded".

BIBLICAL ENDORSEMENTS Thus even in the Scripture we find the same steps outlined; the necessity for the cleansing of the body, mind and soul; the assertion that if we seek to draw nigh to God He will draw nigh to us, and above all, the injunction twice stated, to be active.

First, those who are purified are said to be a "peculiar" people, zealous of good works. No aspirant need to expect to attain real purification and least of all union with God, who seeks the mysteries and enters upon these studies, only to confine his learning within himself. It is only when, in his zeal for good works, he seeks and studies that he may go out actively into the world, carrying his message, not timidly, and only when questioned, and even then in a hesitating, half-hearted manner, but boldly and with the power of real assertion, that comes from the consciousness of possessing the truth within himself. That indeed will be the proof, the sure test of whether or not he loves his neighbor with a pure heart, fervently.

We are purified by FIRE; not the material aspect of fire, which is merely the physical body of its essential spirit, but the ternal FIRE of the Absolute, the Cosmic Flame which burns in each incarnate, which is the motive power, energizer, and sustainer. In our assimilation of that which will assist the process of purification, we sense the activity of the FIRE OF EXPERIENCE. Just as each entity must pass through the fires of Purgatory in the after death state, so do we in mortal life, purify ourselves by the FIRE of Experience and Suffering, for only these in addition to Pleasure and Joy open wide the Gates of Knowledge. Knowledge itself is not an incentive to the spiritual life, and the necessity for purification. Indeed, it is often otherwise. Knowledge opens the door to opportunity, but only experience and suffering give us strength and desire and will to turn our backs upon the preferred opportunity when such an opportunity is not in alignment with constructive living.

THE WISDOM BORN OF SUFFERING Therefore we may truly say that the innocence that consists of ignorance cannot know the necessity for purification, but only the Wisdom born of suffering and experience can furnish the proper and adequate incentive to purer lives, and the bodily and soul cleansing that make for perfect purification. We have said that the process will require the co-operation of all the Four Elements. Let us see.

In the legend of Isis and Osiris, it was said that once each year Osiris was shut up or confined in the Ark at which time she (Isis) entered into him, for the purpose of regenerating him.

Egyptologists, in their ignorance of the esoteric and occult interpretations of hieratic writing and glyphs, have been unable to understand how this could be. Isis, represents in Egyptian spiritual science, the Maiden — Water. Osiris was the Lion, earth. Annually, this phenomenon was illustrated by the overflow of the Nile — Isis, the Maiden, Water, covering Osiris, the Earth, suppressing the Lion, and entering into him, absorbed by him. Thus the Maiden entered into and conquered the Lion.

HERMETIC DESCRIPTION OF SEPARATION OF PRINCIPLES Hermetically, we find the same mythos preserved. Adam the Lion, or Earth; Eve being the Maiden, Water, or Water of Life, or Life. The Water, Life, or Maiden entered into the earth and conquered the Lion. In other words, to adhere closely to the scriptural sequence, the Elohim (Fire and Air) moved upon the face of CHAOS (mud); Water tempered the mixture; producing by circulation a separation. Result: a sediment of denser matter called Earth (Aretz) which had fallen DOWNWARD; while the lighter, purer water (mem) remains above.

This is the Hermetic description of the separation of Adam and Eve.

But Eve, (Water, the Maiden) loved the Earth, and returned to its embrace, each time purifying and refining it, until at last forming our Earth as we now know it. The ancient bones are now covered with flesh (ancient mud) through which courses the blood (water of primal Chaos). The highest expression of the original mem or Men (Fire-air-water) is Men-tality, (Will-conception-mind).

In our modern alchemy, our Maiden is the water in vaporized form or Air, our Virgo. The RED Lion is the BLOOD. By our Maiden Air, the Red Lion, Blood, is energized into wonderful living organisms and tissues.

Again, our Maiden, Air, is also the Mercury, Aether, of the Alchemists. Blood is also the alchemical Sulphur. Applying our Mercury, Maiden or Air as the first Principle of all metals we find that in Coagulating Sulphur we have flesh, for flesh may be said to be generated by Coagulated blood.

Now Mercury is also Water, as by analysis of the above paragraphs. Sulphur is also Earth, or flesh. Mercury in its highest aspect is God or Christ. Now when the Christ is freed, born again, or enters into flesh or earth, that earth or mortal flesh is verily born again. Thus we have the true ecclesiastical trinity:

The Elohim Fire-Air	Mary—Water from which issued	Jesus Earth - both being vehicles for the Christ or Sun-Initiate.

and the biblical "being born again" means the Earth ultimately resolved into Water (its original womb) and the Water into Air (its original Father).

By "Father" is here meant, the SUPERNATURAL FATHER-MOTHER. Father (Aether), Mother (Water, Hydrogen) of all things. Of this Father-Mother the hands are the volatile principles, Fire and Air — Gemini; the Feet are the Fixed Principles; Water and Earth — Pisces.

Let us take an illustration of the interaction of these figures of the Elements. Our Maiden as above is Luna, Azoth, Air or Water. Our Lion is Sol, Sulphur, or Fire. Now -

Water, no matter how cold, has SOME heat (Fire) or it would be ice.

Water, no matter how hot, has SOME COLD, or it would evaporate.

Thus, Water is a state of equilibrium between Cold and Heat. Now, take Water and some Plaster of Paris. Plaster of Paris is Earth, dry, (from calcination. The moisture is driven out). Plaster of Paris was formerly a stone.

Now, pour Water upon it and we unite Isis to Osiris, Eve to Adam, Female to the Male, in fast and indissoluble union. The wedding is instantaneous. The bride disappears into the husband but gives to the latter a NEW FORM. For now we have a NEW WHITE STONE which is composed of two substances comprising our four elements.

THE GOAL In this way God made Earth. In this way each of us must, by the waters of the material world, cleanse and purify our bodies that they may become living Temples for that Divine Spirit which is ourselves, incarnate. And likewise, Brethren, must we also cleanse our minds and spirits by the Mercurial Waters, that, the Heavenly Bride may be so joined to Her Earthly Bridegroom, entering into him, giving to him a new form of living, giving to him a White Stone with a new name written thereon which no man knoweth save he that receiveth it. So may the highest aspect of the Four Elements from which all things are composed, enter into each of us, purifying by Fire, Water and Air the Earth of our bodies and vehicles, that the Alchemical Maiden of the Celestial World may be joined in instantaneous and indissoluble marriage with the Lion of her Earthly mortal Bridegroom, that a new light may come to each of us in the parable of the Bride and Bridegroom in the ancient Scriptures, and that we may by this union become so purified that all earthly obstacles that can prevent or inhibit our union with God — shall be swept away.

With all good wishes for your progress towards the Light

FRATERNITAS ROSÆ CRUCIS

THE ROSICRUCIAN CONCEPT OF THE LIVING FIRE

Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble;

Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. 1 Cor. iii, 12-13.

IN the Greek version, the last verse is rendered—"is revealed by fire," making such revelation a matter of present incident, and fact.

Thruout all Rosicrucian, Alchemic and Hermetic teachings, the student is often confronted by direct and indirect references to Fire, a phase of it not in consonance with the ordinary acceptance of the term and which evidently has a truly occult interpretation. Sometimes these references are direct, sometimes they are clothed in the obscure verbiage often employed by early Philosofers, which requires careful study for elucidation. Yet the Rosicrucian Doctrine while grand, is truly sublime in its simplicity.

To the Rosicrucian, all that is, is Fire. Whether he contemplates the fiery solar orb, the celestial galaxy at night, or the slow movements of infinitesimal animalculae,—all is fire in different phases of manifestation.

In orthodox academic interpretation, Fire is regarded as "the evolution of heat and light by combustion; also, the combustion thus manifested, especially the flame, or the fuel as burning; as fire in a stove, a building on fire; a forest fire." And the Standard Dictionary compilers naively concede that if we find "agni" meaning fire in Sanskrit, and "ignis," meaning fire in Latin, we may safely conclude that fire was known to the undivided Aryans.

Continuing, Fire is held to be any flash or lustre, as the "fire of the eye" or the "fire of the diamond." Liveliness or intensity of thought, feeling or action; ardor, passion; vivacity; as "the fire of love," or hate.

A raging evil; severe affliction; sore trial, or "fires of persecution" have a similar classification.

"Fire is also said to be synonymous with blaze, burning or combustion, conflagration or flame. Combustion is said to be the essential fact that is the basis of the visible phenomenon which we call fire; combustion being the chemical combination evolving heat, and extending from slow processes, such as those by which the heat of the human body is maintained, to the processes producing the most intense light, as in a blast furnace, or on the surface of the Sun. Fire is always attended with light as well as heat. Blaze, flame, etc., designate the mingled light and heat of a fire. Combustion is the scientific, fire the popular term. A conflagration is an extensive fire."

Now, aside from the statement that Fire is synonymous with blaze, which the occultist strenuously combats, the remainder of the paragraf defining combustion contains many facts with which the occultist is in hearty accord, stipulating however, that the academic definition does not go far enuf. If combustion, which the occultist regards solely as a result, not an essential cause, is at the bottom or basis of the visible phenomena commonly called fire, then the Rosicrucian teachings assert that the inner, secret, invisible fire is the cause, not the result of combustion, and that what commonly passes for fire, as synonymous with flame is the visible aftermath of combustion, and therefore fire and flame are two distinct and separate things.

Occultly, fire is defined as "an internal activity whose external manifestations are heat and light. This activity differs in character according to the plane on which it manifests itself. Fire, on the spiritual plane represents Love or Hate; on the astral plane it represents Desire and Passion; on the physical plane Combustion. IT IS THE PURIFYING ELEMENT, AND IN A CERTAIN ASPECT IS IDENTICAL WITH LIFE.' As one of the Four Elements, it pertains to and represents the realm of the Spirit or Life.

The Rosicrucian in his sublime Hermetic concept of the actual UNITY of all things, and the homogeneity of all Matter visible and invisible, sees in fire not only the manifestations ascribed to the various planes, celestial and mundane, but also the actual and veritable Body, Wisdom and Activity of the Absolute Itself, for in its activities Fire exhibits all the properties and qualities which we must also admit are possest and utilized by the Absolute. True Fire is invisible. The academic scientist knows that the true Fire in his laboratory is not the flame of his Bunsen burner, but the invisible space of most intense heat. The same is true experimentally with the alcohol lamp. The same holds true in regard to steam. True steam is invisible. Observe an ordinary hot water or tea kettle. Between the nozzle and the cloud is a small apparently blank space. That is where the true steam is escaping. The cloud formed is not steam, only vapor, a product of steam condensing by contact with the cooler outer air.

This vapor has comparatively little energy. The true steam, invisible, has tremendous energy when properly applied and no human or other living organism can come in contact with it and remain unscathed or unharmed. In sufficient quantity it dissociates the life principle from its immediate containing form.

The same is true of Fire. Flame has little or no energy. The true Fire, invisible, has tremendous energy when properly applied either by visible, human agency or invisible celestial or Divine agency, and no human or other living organism can come in contact with it IGNORANTLY and remain unscathed or unharmed. Like steam, one of its resultants under proper conditions, Fire is most potent in its power to dissociate the life principle from its immediate containing form.

For this very reason, its power to dissociate the life-force or principle from given forms, destroy those forms and recreate new forms, Fire is a most obvious Divine agency or property.

Fire is the basic creative force—considered as a characteristic, property, attribute or quality of the Absolute, and as such is at once of note as the most powerful and most potent Constructive and Destructive Force in all Cosmos. Yet its very destructive aspect must be regarded as essentially Constructive, for, like the true builder, it destroys only that it may recreate, reconstruct and build anew. Its destructive activity is merely the breaking down of old or present forms and its constructive activity is manifest as chemical affinity, atomic or molecular attraction causing re-assemblages of Matter and thus the building up of new forms. For every form that it destroys, it builds an almost infinite number of new forms and thus releases the life principle from a circumscribed environment to function in an amplified sphere of useful activity.

Fire is the ultimate test of all of Nature's works, and Man being included in these works, Man's works must of themselves come also under the test of Fire. For while Fire builds up by its invisible activities new forms and endows them with an influx of the life principle seeking greater scope of activity, by its very nature Fire drives these newly created forms to higher and higher states of relative and comparative perfection, and thus only those which do actually attain such comparative perfection are able to resist its breaking down influence. Thus Gold, whether produced by Nature's slow, laborious process in the Earth, or by the equally slow laborious conscious process in the Human Character, attains the highest degree of perfection possible to evolution on our planet and withstands Fire both visible and invisible, unless of course the latter is applied in degree far beyond that of natural processes. Yet Gold when brot to the fusing point by Fire can be made only to change its immediate form, BUT IT DOES NOT SURRENDER THE LIFE PRINCIPLE that tenants it. It remains Gold forever. Human Gold, when brot to the fusing point by the Fire of mundane conditions can be made to change its form but it remains Human Gold in spite of all adversity and does not surrender the life principle involved with it, for it has become of the nature of the Divine, and the King of Metals with the King of Men responds to the King of the Elements but as all are Divine, neither has the power to cause the other to surrender one modicum of the Divine Nature inherent.

Thus the King of the Metals cannot be degraded even by association with alloys, but remains always inherently—Gold. The King of Men cannot be degraded by association with the alloy of lesser developt Humanity but remains always Gold, and a leader among Men. The King of the Elements, cannot be degraded by association with the other Elements or by its contact with the forms upon which it is acting, but remains always the Fire—the Gold of the Elements and the motive power of all their activities.

The Fire is everywhere about us. It is subtler than the rarest ether and pervades and interpenetrates all Cosmos. We breathe it with every inhalation. Without it, the life principle could not manifest. To it, our planet owes its existence; to it the Mineral Kingdom is peculiarly vassal. Without it, neither plant, animal or Man could exist or function. As children of Fire, it is our Mother, who nourishes, warms, maintains and even disciplines us. In the human organism its importance is paramount. In one manifestation, the Blood may be truthfully called the Liquid Fire of the Body. In another manifestation, invisibly, the Kundalini is the invisible serpentine Fire, ascending to unite the psychic centers in him who has arrived at the point of true spiritual attainment.

The "consuming Fire" of which so much is written in occult literature is really Man's most beneficent helper. In mortal life, Man, by his desires and the gratification of them is enveloping himself in this consuming Fire, consuming because it takes from him or consumes the substance from which other and more profitable conditions should be evolved. After death, he is confronted with the structure he has erected around himself and what is more, he sees then the real nature and essence of those desires, and were it not for this consuming Fire which will in due time consume even the structure of his desires, he would be thus crystallized within their environment for an eternity, which would of course be unthinkable. With those who are to any extent awakened, the ascending Kundalini, the Central Flame of the Homo Microcosm, burns away the illusion of desire.

It is by virtue of this omnipresent Fire that we exist. In it, we live, and move and have our being. A sponge thrown into the ocean soon becomes permeated with ocean water. Each separate spore therein holds its modicum of ocean water, yet the whole sponge is immerst in and interpentrated by the ocean. Each individual human being is a spore of the Great Body of Humanity, holding its own modicum of the Divine Fire, yet immerst in and interpenetrated by the omnipresent Fire of the Cosmic Ocean—the Absolute.

In any city or town, innumerable electric lights shine by the transmitted power of a Central Station, yet each, while apparently separated, is in circuit or connection with every other light. And all, tho animated individually, are simply parts of the whole, luminous emanations of the Central Source. Similarly, we too, are born into Space and Time so-called, as Children of the Great Central Flame or Fire, our individual Egos being the sparks thereof and each fiery human entity being immerst in and a part of the Great Fiery Entity that brot all worlds into being because all worlds are contained within Himself.

Man depends for his very life upon Fire. He breathes it. It courses thru his veins. From the combustion of tissue that it produces, comes the smoke of carbonic acid gas. The ashes are the human faeces. And when engaging in the practice of fasting, man, like a good engineer is simply permitting the bodily fires to die down, that he may have opportunity to thoroly clean out the human ash pan, obtain a clearer draught, then take in fresh fuel with better combustion and exhaust.

The Fire Doctrine was the basis of one of the world's oldest traditions, that of the Creation of Adam and Eve, the first man and the first woman of the Human species. It is written that God took a rib out of Man and fashioned Woman. When Man awoke, he recognized the Woman AS A PART OF HIMSELF. Ash, in Hebrew means Fire. "Aish" means man. Therefore the first human was the "FIRE-MAN" which fully agrees with the Rosicrucian cosmology. When Man awoke and recognized the Woman as a part of himself, he called her "Asha," meaning, a Female Fire," because he was "Ash," a Male Fire. And if Adam could have given birth to a Woman then, Man could do so now. But the whole tradition is simply the manner of expressing the division of the hermaphroditic Fire-Entity into two sexual manifestations, and Asha is simply the offspring of Ash, the product of a natural sexation; an interaction of the wonderful dual Fire animating the Human Furnace.

Knowing this, we can understand the mythological accounts of how Minerva is said to have sprung from the brow of Jupiter, Christ from the Virgin, Galatea from the statue of Pygmalion and many others.

It is our knowledge of the Divine Nature and character of Fire that gives us a clue to the identity of the Christ Principle itself for this Son of David, as Rosicrucians know, now exists thruout our planet as Individualized Energy in a ceaselessly formative state.

That Fire in its cosmic activities is associated with or directed by well defined Superior Intelligence, is shown by the fact that the Fire conditions which brot about the states and forms of Matter which ultimately became coal, at a time when it was of no value to the then existing world as such, now, after incredible time periods is "brot to Light," that from it may, by the action of Fire again, producing combustion, release the stored up Solar Energy lockt therein for thousands and thousands of years. Alchemically, it is the spirit of the Lord (the Fire) called forth, and resurrected, that it may fly again to the bosom of its Father (Oxygen) signified by the Hebrew letter Aleph. Thus, in a common lump of coal, we have not only a symbol but an actual illustration of a tangible resurrection, overcoming death, returning to life and activity; the conquest of the Solar God over darkness and inertia.

The Egyptians and Greeks dug holes in the earth and placed food and poured libations therein to the Manes (minds) or Fiery Souls of the departed, trusting to the fire processes of the earth to separate from the gross substance the spiritual element and transmit it as nourishment to those who lived upon the inner side of life. So too, we, daily place food and pour libations into the great hole in the Human Temple, the stomach, from the Greek "Stoma" meaning "a mouth." The stomach is the great mouth of the body, the human charnel house and the place of burning, refining and combustion, wherein the fiery spirit element is liberated for absorption into the body, and the ashes cast out thence.

Alchemically, we say that this bodily fire is tempered by the moist air inbreathed, and the burning and refining takes place thru chemical action, but it is a genuine burning nevertheless. Chemically, we say an acid burns, and is therefore to be considered as being a visible manifestation of Fire, the same as many of its other manifestations.

The true Rosicrucian seeks the Elixir of Life, not theoretically, but actually; not for longevity, but for regeneration. Now the word E-lixir means, "from ashes." The Rosicrucian magical and cosmological substances originally called Chaos and Mist slowly undergo changes and differentiations until they are resolved into black, fetid ashes. Yet worlds are formed from this cosmic ash, and the new and regenerate Man is formed from the ashes of the Old Adam, when the Elixir of Life in the form of spiritual wine of illumination and Divine revelation flows anew thru awakened centers of the successful seeker. Hence the legend and mythos of the Phoenix, a truly Rosicrucian symbol of Life rising from the ashes, into liberty and Light.

Certain atoms refuse to combine with other atoms, they are hostile to each other, while still other atoms rush into each others' arms. How do the atoms know? We cannot ascribe intelligence to the atom but we can see that they are directed by intelligence and the modus of that direction is Fire. All the Elements are to be found in the Human Body, particularly that of Fire. And the human being who worships a given Element, seeks that Element in particular and retains it to the utmost within himself, becomes born of that Element, a Child of that Element. And we see about us every day those who have unconsciously placed themselves in such a position. The Sons of Fire are obvious. They may break and glow, and flame with Energies sufficient to regenerate many of their fellow mortals, yet they remain silent and outcast from humanity in general, for they are misunderstood and are not assimilated by Humanity. Such unfortunate beings remain untoucht by love or sorrow, aloof, impersonal, until they regain the balance of Elemental forces within them.

It is by the action of the Fire principle in maintaining the process of continuous organic change, that the soul is able to forget during a given incarnation, the things of the previous incarnation, otherwise it would never have the courage to go forward with the new.

The persistence and predominance of the Fire Principle in all manifestations may be noted on the most casual inquiry. Every manifestation of Deity to Man has been with a fiery accompaniment, the Flaming Swords of Eden, the Burning Bush of Moses, the Fiery Chariots of Elijah, the Pillar of Fire of Israel, the Tongues of Fire of the Apostles, the Fire from Heaven consuming the Ancient sacrifices, and today the Fiery radiance and the halo of the Consecrated Host in the true Sacerdotal Eucharist, are witnesses of the Fire-Nature, substance and character of Divinity in all its aspects. As the internal Fire has made Gold the King of the Metals, expressing perfection, so also has it made the Diamond the King of the Minerals, for it is the action of the Divine Fire itself that has transmuted the atomic constituents of this wonderful gem, in the matrix of its earth-womb, thru crystallization into the dazzling glory of its fiery Light.

This fiery gem, the diamond, is another Rosicrucian symbol of the perfected Man who has passed thru the Fire and withstood the test of endurance. The Diamond is formed by the coalescing of an almost infinite aggregation of infinitesimal crystals, a coalescing that in itself is truly wonderful, but the gem has little commercial value or esteem among men unless it is absolutely flawless. Such flawlessness is possible only when the coalescing of the crystals is so perfect that no trace of separation can be detected among them. This perfection has been made possible only by the age-long action and welding power of the internal Fire. Similarly, no Man can hope to attain to the comparative perfection possible to our phase of earth-evolution, until he has crystallized individually all the component ethical units and elements of his character and caused them to coalesce into one apparently perfect whole, in which no flaw can be detected by the judgment of his fellow men; acknowledging always, that human judgment is fallible, just at the judgment of the diamond expert is fallible when it can no longer apply to the visible. The real nature of the diamond and the real nature of the Diamond Man must be left to the greater judgment of the higher powers. As the Diamond is what it is, a thing of great value, due solely to its age long conflict with the fiery powers, so the comparatively perfect Man is of value to the world and his fellow Men only when he has learned suffering and trial thru the fires of adversity.

Nor is the action of the invisible Fire confined only to chemic and physical manifestations. It is the Fire of Divine Love, prompting to Self-manifestation that urges Humankind to reproduce and to perpetrate its species. It is the Fire of Divine Revelation that Flames up in the prepared homo as Inspiration. It is the Fire of Divine Creative Power and Potentiality that Flames up in a Race, Community or Individual, prompting either of the three or all of them to strive for constructive effort in developing, beautifying, improving and refining the Nation, State or Home.

Understood as invisible in its essential nature and character, it will be seen how easily the early Hermetists and Rosicrucians conceived of it as the Eternal Flame, the Always Existent. No wonder then, that Zoroastrian, Parsee, Chaldean, Assyrian, Egyptian and Druid saw always in the tiniest as well as the greatest Flame, the most perfect and unadulterated reflection of the One, Sublime, Ineffable Fire of Heaven. All who can pierce the mystery of Fire, see in it Life and Death, with Life Triumphant; the Origin and the End of every material thing and the Substance of all Eternal Things.

There is a tremendous significance little dreamed of, much less recognized by orthodox theologians, in the apparently simple passage, —Hebrews i, 7,—"He maketh his ministers a Flame of Fire." After the centuries of formative process which our planet underwent before its crust was suitable for the development and maintenance of organic life, another vast time period of ages almost beyond the power of mortal mind to comprehend ensued, before the greatest discovery ever yet made upon this planet was accomplisht,—the discovery of Fire, how to make it, produce it, maintain it and USE it. Fire was God's Material and Motive Power for the production of Man's habitation. Fire was God's greatest gift to his Creature, Man, the gift, unknown to Man, of God Himself. All human progress from sheer animalism, savagery and anthropoidal conditions dates from the first discovery and use of Fire by the Human species, and of all God's multiform departments of Creation, Man alone, made in his image, is entrusted with it, like the very Sacraments, familiarity with its exoteric manifestations, has in the ages, bred the almost unfailing contempt associated with it.

Like all Rosicrucian Principles, Fire is Threefold in its Nature;

Terrestrially, it manifests as Flame and Heat.
Celestially, it manifests as Light,—Solar Fire.
Elementally, it manifests as Electricity.

These are the Three Great Creative potencies or factors and in Rosicrucian Teachings, correlate with the Body, Soul and Spirit respectively. Individually, they further correlate with the basis of color spectra, Heat representing the Body and symbolized by the color Red. Light represents the Soul, and is symbolized by the color Yellow. Electricity represents the Spirit, and is symbolized by the color Blue, thus correlating all the Three Primary Colors, again the Trinity in Unity evidenst.

On the spiritual and ethical planes this same Fire manifests, as we have stated, as Love, Will Force and the Life Principle in its Constructive aspects, and as Hate, Anger and Death in its apparent Destructive aspects. In its unified aspect, Fire is to the Rosicrucian, Operative Intelligence.

Fire is the Essence of the Seven Sacraments and correlates with them most closely. According to our ancient brethren, Fire had Seven Expressions, Four Human or Terrestrial and Three Divine or Celestial, the Lesser and the Greater correlating with the Lesser and the Greater Sacraments.

The Four Lesser Expressions were;

Light, which brot Order out of Chaos. The Creator.
Heat, resulting from the impact of Radiant Energy. The Preserver.
Electricity, the physical expression of Fire, and the vitalizer of Mind stuff. The Regenerator.
Volcanic or Subterranean Fire, the transmuting agency of the earth. The Destroyer.

The Greater Expressions are;

The Central Orb or Sphere of Cold Fire, or Light without Heat. Our Sun, with the Spiritual Essence inherent.

The Sphere of Spiritual Energy surrounding the Solar Orb, calling to our minds the Sea of Molten Glass before the Throne, invisible, Etheric, transparent, but, wonderfully potent.

The Sphere of Invisible Essence, from which Cosmic Root Substance and the Matter of Mind Stuff is emanated and crystallized.

Truly Man is indeed a Microcosm, summing up within himself all the factors that make up a solar system or an universe. All the wonderful powers of creative force, procreative, inventive, constructive, preservative and conservative are his to command, reproducing in miniature for his world, what Deity has done for many worlds, if he use his Fiery Power and Force righteously. All the evil power of satanology is his if he unloose the fire of spite, hate, anger, bitterness, destructiveness and permit the fire of passion to be kindled in the lower hells of his physical body in unbridled lust and passion.

If we call to our minds all that we have learned Hermetically of man, his works and operations both conscious and unconscious, we shall realize the supreme truth of the Scripture which forms our text. "Every man's work shall be tried by fire, of what sort they are. Every man's work shall be made manifest," because it not only shall be, but IS revealed by Fire, and the Fire element in every Man's life will unfailingly and impartially demonstrate with strict justice whether that man hath built upon the foundation of the higher spiritual knowledge the transmuted man of Gold, Silver, Diamond or other Precious Stones, Wood, Hay, Stubble.

Let us learn the lessons that the study of Fire may teach us. Let us note that the spark which shoots off at a tangent from the parent flame is apparently lost in space and darkness and soon ceases to shine. Let us remember that each Human Ego is a Spark of the Divine Fire, but that it is immortal—not by itself, but only as it is in unity with its parent Flame, the Great Central Flame of the Universe. Woe to the Human Ego that becomes temporarily lost in darkness and ceases to shine as a Divine Spark. Some such are always with us. It is the mission of each Ego to be Immortal, but Immortality consists primarily and forever in the attainment and maintenance of Unity with the Cosmic Fiery Source of all Life, Light, Power and Might; the Fire which was without Beginning and which in consequence can have no Ending.

YOUR EXTRA SENSES

Many of us have a compelling curiosity about so-called extrasensory, or psychic, perception and involvement. Certainly our quest for Truth is set in a framework of many unexplained phenomena. Indeed there is more to man than merely a brain and a body; he is not purely a sensuous creature. There are areas beyond the five senses, and they have to do with us much more than we know.

Looking back to the early days of man's experience on earth, we find his frame of reference quite narrow. To the primitive man, life was simple and basic. Natural things were pretty obvious. But man was surrounded by much that he did not understand, such as the movement of the sun, the ebb and flow of the tides, heavenly manifestations such as shooting stars and comets, lightning and thunder. All of these he held to be governed by supernatural forces.

As man's knowledge of the universe has expanded, his supernatural world has contracted. By the nineteenth century, science had pretty well explained the cosmos in mechanical terms. In some things such as dreams and the seeing of apparitions, scientific explanation was difficult. But by and large, man was committed to a mechanical theory of life and the workings of the universe, and so his research was generally in physics and chemistry, biology and medicine. However, as Emerson once put it, there was always an "un-analyzable residuum." Man came to know a great deal about man, but very little about himself; much about the processes of the brain, but little or nothing about mind.

Gradually, this led to unorthodox searching beyond, into metaphysics--beyond the obvious senses into extrasensory perception. There has been much resistance to this search, by religionists, psychiatrists and just plain debunkers. But a great deal of research has been done, and a lot of evidence is undeniable, in the transference of thought, precognition, and psycho-kinetic influences, such as the mental power to cause dice to come up in a certain way more often than not. From our study of biology, we know that all of our five senses were developed from an original general sensitivity, a sort of basic sense of touch. From this evolved smell and taste, then a wider world was revealed through hearing and seeing; each of the five senses is thus a specialization of some primal psychism or sensitivity. There are occasions when there is an interchange of these special attributes. Professor Lombroso tells of an hysterical girl who lost her sight, but in some unexplainable way found that she could read with the lobe of her left ear. I read in a Russian medical journal of a woman who developed the ability to read with her fingertips. Sceptical medical experts were utterly astonished to see that she could indeed, while blindfolded, read with ease and perfect comprehension, simply by holding her fingers over the pages. Such phenomena are most unusual, but obviously they demonstrate something of a possibility within man that he is not fully aware of. For example, does every cell have latent possibilities for all the senses? One feels that great possibilities lie in store for man as he comes to know more about this.

Does this mean that each of us should strive to develop extrasensory perception? Let us be wary of getting off the track. I say that we should not attempt to develop ESP, for the senses will develop in proportion to the need and the consciouness to handle them. Many a difficulty can come into the experience of people who prematurely seek abilities that may be latent in the individual. Some people suggest courses investigating the psychic realm, and spirit communication. "Is it possible that such things exist?" is the question of many. I think that here we tend to lose our perspective; we ask the wrong questions. Certainly it may well be possible; however, in terms of our own consciousness, I question the relevance of such a course. If we should find that it is possible to communicate with the world beyond, would it be useful to get involved with doing so? This resembles the question, "Is mind expansion possible through drugs?" If the answer is yes, does this mean that we should all start taking drugs? Spirit communication may well be possible, but is it advisable?

My main concern is that there is a tendency to deal with life outside of the context of the whole person in a whole universe--what Teilhard de Chardin calls "the unimpeachable wholeness of the universe." The attraction of unexplained phenomena is similar to what Jesus spoke of as the "interest in signs and wonders." He deplored this, asking, "Why stand ye looking to the heavens?" Many of us have a tendency to carry over in consciousness the belief in what I would term a "dualistic universe." In this we are on the outside, looking in. Thus we try to understand the "para-normal" on the outside, as if we were peering at it through a window. This is motivated by a feeling of lack of meaning; we are looking for reality, for self worth, for Truth. The one thing a fish can never find is water; the one thing man can never find is God, or reality, because this is not to be found. God is the expression of reality, in it and of it. God is reality. To continue looking for it is to continue titillating ourselves with curiosities and strange happenings, deluding ourselves that we are on the path of spiritual unfoldment. Meaning is not to be found in para-normal phenomena; it is only to be found within ourselves, in the realization that each of us is an integral part of an entire, harmonious, orderly universe. It is good to be on the quest, and one needs guidance and a compass. But this guidance need not come from a holy person or a holy book or a psychic. The only adequate leadership is the Spirit revealing itself within us and as us, Infinite Intelligence specializing itself at the heart of our being.

We need to contemplate this great, dynamic universe in which we dwell, and put ourselves in the picture, see ourselves at the center of the cosmos. Then, whatever we give attention to, we are exploring the dimensions of our inner self; we are not just outside looking in. We want to think of an Allness which is God, and that every individual is an each-ness within the Allness of the infinite process. The flesh-and-blood body is simply an instrument; it is not me, rather it is mine. And the senses are a conduit that the greater self uses. When we see ourselves in the context of wholeness, then really there is no extrasensory perception. ESP takes place only when we hold a limited concept of the senses in the first place, and of the self as a sensuous creature. We have accepted a norm far beneath the comprehensive reality of the whole person. We want to challenge ourselves with a new insight in which we do not deal with phenomena but with the larger awareness of our oneness with the Infinite.

Involvement in the smorgasbord of delving into psychic claims is a trap, a danger. I like the great idea of Plotinus: we are at a central point where the whole universe is rushing, streaming, pouring into us from all sides, while we stand quiet. The goal is not to find something or reach something, not to "get into meditation," for such can be an escape. Be still, and try to get the sense that you are at the heart of it all, without trying to feel anything, find anything, understand anything. "Be still, and know that I am God." Jesus said, "It is the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom."

Our need is to let go and get the idea of ourselves at the center, in a kind of spiritual weightlessness, involved in the creative process. In this realization we come to know that we do not have to look to others for understanding, but will find within ourselves our own specific, rightful relationship with the infinite process. The purpose of life is to evolve that which is involved--to release the imprisoned splendor, as the poet said--rather than to search for answers in some future time or place, or in some unexplained occurrence in this place. We want to get in tune with the upward, progressive sweep of life from within.

The research into psychic phenomena is valuable and interesting, and I am not decrying it. I am simply teaching that the focus should always be the realization of our own personal need to be in a conscious state of oneness with God, and to know that our inspiration, our guidance, comes from the Spirit within.

HUMAN POTENTIAL AND DIVINE

So much is said about the world today that is gloomy and negative. Many talk and act as if man were the victim of circumstances. Emerson once sighed in this same negative vein: "Things are in the saddle, and ride mankind." But I think that it is high time we stood up to our full stature, and began to harness our potentiality, realizing that the key to the kind of world we dream of is within ourselves.

There is a great deal of thought about human potential today, and I think this is excellent. Potentialities often refer to creative output, so we might begin by considering the function of the human cerebrum. Some people talk about the possibilities of computers enslaving the human race. Do you know that there are 13.6 billion nerve cells in the cerebrum, each of them able to perform a function comparable to the circuit element in an electronic computer? The largest computer that man has created has only 100,000 elements in it. So the capacity of the cerebrum, that which is in the skull of your own body, is many times greater than the greatest computer man has ever developed. We are told that the number of nerve cells of the cerebrum that we actually put to work in a lifetime is only about one-third of the total. And of these, only about two- to five-percent are constantly in use. But even so, you are still thousands of times greater in potentiality than the most active computer fully utilizing every circuit element. So I say, don't downgrade yourself. You are a wonderful manifestation of the creative process of the universe.

We have been dealing thus far only with the physical brain, the human potential. In the superconscious level of mind, each of us, as Emerson says, "...is an inlet, and may become an outlet, of all there is in God." Gautama, the Buddha, after going through his own growth process, and realeasing his spiritual potential, once said, "All human beings in the world possess divine widsom and divine virtue." And Jesus, after attaining the ultimate in the development of the Christ consciousness, said, "The Kingdom of God is within you." Now the important thing is that they made these claims for man not denotatively, to mean a special human being, but connotatively, referring to that which is omnipresent in all persons.

When we talk about human and divine potential, we might ask, "Potential for what?" Well, we're not referring to vague and abstract things, because man is certainly not a vague and abstract being. Man is mental and physical; he loves, and has feelings. His life is set in the framework of human relations, with other mental and physical and emotional creatures. Everyone has the desire for greater health, love, creativity, wisdom--and greater realization of abundant living. Man is involved in a life of continuity, and has the ability to make it vital and vibrant.

We are coming to know more about ourselves as physical creatures, to know that the physical organism has built-in devices for renewal and re-creation, that sickness and deterioration are not natural, but the result of some kind of breakdown of an intelligent system, usually through a resistance or confusion of our goals. Today, medicine is recognizing that a person is a process, and that we can't really separate the body from the mind, or physical processes from emotional processes. A person actually expresses his inner dis-ease by a kind of symptom called disease. And by the choice of disease, the person may be saying, symbolically, something about his inner needs--how he feels about himself, and about life. Now this is a highly complex process, and should not be oversimplified. But it can often be said, when one is experiencing asthma, for instance, something within him is saying, "I'm gasping for love," or "I'm consumed with hate." In other words, we must begin to think of disease as a total personality process, to know that there is no such thing as a purely organic disease that is unrelated to a false attitude or emotion that caused it, or to a healthy attitude or emotion that can cure it. Spiritual healing is releasement of the potential of the whole into the frustration of the part. There is no limit.

When we talk about human and divine potential, we're talking about potential for love. Love is not an influence that comes to us from another, but a spiritual energy force that flows forth from within. No one can really give us love, and yet anyone can provide us with an environment conducive to the expression of our own flow of love. No one can withhold love from us. Everyone has within him access to all the love that there is. We are always in love, in the flow of divine process.

We are also talking about the potential for creativity and success. Everyone wants to succeed in life. Even if we differ on the definition of "success," there are great creative potentialities within every person. Ignorance about potentiality has led to confusion in education, where many still follow the rote learning and memory development process, with a system that tends to go against individual creativity. The truth is you can be what you want to be, you can do what you need to do. For there is a divine potential within you that, when discovered and released, will unfold the talents, skills, opportunities and success that you yearn for.

The human and divine potential refer to potential for wisdom and guidance. You are one with the Mind of the universe. Get yourself plugged into the divine flow; tap the ceaseless unfoldment of creative ideas. You can experience what Emerson calls "lowly listening," and hear the right word--and experience wisdom and guidance--as a continuity of the divine process.

How do we realize these potentialities? First of all, we must realize that they are dimensions of our own being. They are not something that God will put in us if we are good, if we plead with him. This attitude evidences a sense of separation; then we try to deal with God, to cross that separation. We are one with the infinite process. Therefore, the health that you want is yours right now. The love that you yearn for is within you--right now. Success is within you now, as your potential. You are now one with the wisdom of the infinite. Get into the affirmative consciousness; begin to believe, and think and speak and act as if you believe. And pray... but pray through claiming and affirming, and focusing your consciousness. And remember, growth is what life is all about. The reactivation of the process of growth is the key to therapy and the overcoming of any kind of difficulty. We have been misled to believe that we are set in our ways, the we cannot change. We may say, "Well, there's nothing I can do about it...that's just the way I am." That is not the way you are, it's the way you've conditioned yourself to think and to feel. But you are always more than that. There are many challenging experiences in life, with crises as peaks. We should never forget that a crisis, whatever it is, is an opportunity to grow. So, in the face of any serious challenge, we need to ask ourselves, "What are the positive factors that I can see in these difficulties? What am I learning about myself through this? How can I use this crisis to discover my weaknesses and to develop my strengths?" We tend to feel that the most important thing is just to "get through" the experience, to muddle through somehow. But it is not how you go through the crisis that really counts, it is how you grow through it.

We also have the great potential for happiness. Happiness comes when you let life happen. Difficulties are coming to pass, and are on their way out of your life. So let them be, let them happen--and keep happy. Unhappiness comes when you resist, when you try to "unhappen" something, hold it back, refuse to face up to it, resent the intrusion. When you are filled with resentment and resistance, unhappiness is the result.

So remember, life is growth. You have all eternity to experience the unfoldment that you need, and you have all potentiality within you. So keep on, and keep on keeping on. You have the power and the potential to do and to be all that you need to do and be. The unborn possibiltiy of limitless growth is within you, and yours is the privilege of giving birth to it.

Respected Companions

Greetings in the Light of Truth!

Responding to the request for more information from our Gnostic sources, we present in this Liber the first of a two-part enquiry which we expect will be well received by all Companions.

First off, we continue with the fifth in the series of doctrinal exegeses interpreted Alchemically: "Putrefactio". (Sixth in the series is "Fermentio" and the seventh, which will appear in Liber 48, is "Combustio".)

Our text is:

> "So also is the resurrection of the dead.
> It is sown in corruption." 1 Cor. 15:42

Alchemically, the process of putrefaction is of absorbing interest for it must be remembered that by virtue of the very definitions of the word 'alchemical' or 'alchemy', we are dealing essentially with secret processes. Among other definitions already given we may cite the Arabic usage: Al - the; Komia - Secret thing. Also another:- the Egyptian and Chaldean: Al or El - God; Cham - sun. In other words alchemy is the God influence or solar influence expressed in Nature.

Applying this concept of the essential meaning of alchemy to the doctrine of putrefactio, Hermetically, we find that there is embodied in the process an essential secret, which conceals the activity of the God or Solar influence.

GOD CANNOT BE JUDGED BY HUMAN STANDARDS Note this fact carefully, brethren, — God, great as we conceive Him to be, Omniscient, Omnipotent, and Omnific as he undoubtedly is, IS A CREATOR, NOT A DESTROYER. There is no provision in the attributes of Deity for Destruction. The ancient and olden concepts of God as an avenging God were simply that the older writers attributed to God personally, the responsibility for individual acts of Karma. Likewise the concept of God as a destroyer, in his desire for punishment and vengeance, was due solely to the inability of the earlier thinkers to understand that God is not to be judged by human standards, and acts that may appear to us to be destructive on account of the forcible or other change of external form of Matter, may be in the Infinite Wisdom of the Divine Mind be but the speediest form of constructive activity.

AT 'DEATH' ONLY THE FORM IS CHANGED And as we note the wholesale slaughter of lower forms of life, organic and inorganic, by the higher forms, those higher forms in turn causing through wars the transitions of hundreds of thousands of human souls almost in a moment of time, we may, in a sense, become reconciled to such conditions when we know for a certainty that of all the millions of deaths, for instance, in the Great Wars, not a single human life could be destroyed. The form of its external vehicle may have been forcibly altered or removed, but the living spirit is impervious against the assaults of the enemy.

So it is, that God is solely a PRODUCER, A CREATOR, A CONSTRUCTOR, AND BUILDER. What seems to be destruction, is in His ineffable Wisdom but the best and quickest way to reconstruction, greater creative activity, evolution, and progress.

Having these concepts in mind, we shall realize that, gruesome as the word "Putrefaction" has come to be, through the properties usually associated with it and the environment of its activities, it enshrines, ensouls and conceals perhaps the greatest and most sublime mystery of all the wondrous acts of an Omnipotent God, the mystery of the resurrection of life.

Before proceeding further, let us carefully consider the words of St. Paul in his first Epistle to the Corinthians, the 15th chapter, beginning at the 35th verse. These words have been read to countless thousands in churches and have been used by nearly every known creed in Christendom at the Burial of the so-called 'dead', yet among generations of those who, having ears hear not, (for they have waxed gross and dull), these mystic words have fallen upon barren soil.

WHICH BODY RESURRECTS? Through all the centuries of human thought it is noteworthy that since the Fall of Man whereby his eyes were blinded to the truth by his captivity to the senses, his interest has been principally concerned with — and his attention devoted to : external manifestation. Hence all through this writing of Paul we find the vigorous adjuration against the concept that it was the PHYSICAL or NATURAL BODY that was to be raised.

Incarnation after incarnation, specie after specie, genus after genus, the body of a given expression of the life wave is the result of the previous vibrational manifestation, and when sown, it is but the seed of the body that shall serve as the vehicle of the next expression.

TO DIE IS NOT TO CEASE LIVING Now: that which is sown is not quickened except it die. Herein is an apparent paradox. In other words, unless the seed dies it cannot live. Thus we see at a glance that the old initiates of whom Paul was an undoubted leader, KNEW that to die is not to cease living; that death is not cessation of anything except previous FORM, and that death is simply CHANGE, through the process of Putrefaction, for in the process, decomposition of organic structure takes place, (disintegration of compounds) as stated earlier, when we saw that Sanctificatio was the process of breaking down the compounds — a process of breaking down which is finished by that of Putrefactio in disintegrating and decomposing them, in order to liberate that body "that shall be".

And herein we find actively at work, the God influence or Solar Influence which is embodied and continuously manifest in all things.

THE ORIGIN OF THE LIFE IMPULSE Whence came the first impulse to independent life in the embryo in the human mother? Whence came the impulse to independent life of the spirit through the process of Putrefactio, of the newly born into the spirit world in the womb of Mother Earth? The answer is the same in both cases. From the God Influence or Solar Influence embodied, enshrined, and consciously constructive, consciously active, and consciously creative in all things, organic and inorganic.

Thus Putrefactio is the step to continuously higher states of expression in every department of life.

How do we know there is no death, but only change? Setting aside the numerous scientific evidences available, let us look again at the 38th verse of the chapter quoted. "But God hath given it a body as it hath pleased him, AND TO EVERY SEED HIS OWN BODY."

THOSE WHO HEAR AND DO NOT UNDERSTAND : In view of the hundreds of times this passage has been translated in diverse tongues, (even to the most obscure), and the illimitable millions of times it has been read in churches, universities, theological cemeteries, or, as some call them — 'seminaries' - it is almost inconceivable that the key has been ignored. And yet is has! Verily indeed have the generations of professing students for nearly 20 centuries been dull of eye and hard of ear and understanding.

Ordinarily, this passage is interpreted as meaning that God gives to each specie its appropriate body or vehicle, for its needs, ignoring the processes of Nature and Evolution that provide for all such requirements without the special interposition of Deity.

— BUT MOST OF ALL THEY IGNORE THE VERY KEY, WHICH IS THE WORD 'HIS'.

Is it not obvious that if the Apostolic writer meant that God gave to every seed an appropriate body he would have written in the proper gender, 'ITS'. ? But we are distinctly taught that God gives to every seed HIS - GOD'S OWN - BODY.

Therefore, regardless of genus, specie, or race, every living thing HAS and IS a part of THE BODY OF GOD and in the Body of God there can be NO DEATH, otherwise there could be no God.

And by being IN and OF the Body of God, we are permeated and actuated by the BREATH and LIFE of God.

But we are not specially concerned with the seed of the human body or its reproduction, incarnation after incarnation. The process of Putrefaction, illustrations of which in one instance serve as infallible guides in all other instances, applies Hermetically to the decomposition and disintegration of the greatest of all seeds, the PRIMORDIAL SEED within us, which each incarnation permits the process of Putrefaction to develop still further.

THE PUTREFYING SOLAR PRINCIPLE The Solar or Deific life principle which will Putrefy this Seed so that it may come forth that body which shall be, is the Divine Essence (the Corpuscle of Primordial Substance) which emanated from the Sun, permeates all Matter, pierces rocks and soil alike — and vitalizes the Seed of Gold that slumbers in all forms of life, organic and inorganic. So it penetrates each of us, gradually Putrefying the Golden Seed within us, until in due time we rise from death unto life, having first nourished the seed within us which was sown in the corruption of the human flesh, sown in the dishonour of mortal life with its human frailties.

This is the active agent in all metallic transformations, whether it takes place throughout countless ages in the bosom of Mother Earth, or more quickly through the inherent powers of the chemist and the alchemist.

THE EFFECT OF POOR VISION And the very human body in which seed is sown is that Adam or red earth which was formerly esteemed of so little value. Like the red earth Litharge, formerly held to be of no account, and now known to possess high chemical values, the human body was formerly condemned, maltreated, mutilated and mortified by pious theologians and laity alike who sought spirituality by defiling and wounding the very Temple of its spiritual inhabitant.

But now we see more clearly, and know this very body to be the treasure chest of the greatest of all treasures, the Golden Seed, as expressed in the immortal Charge of Sendivogius : "O Man, KNOW THYSELF! IN THEE IS HID THE TREASURE OF TREASURES." Well may our Masonic brethren promise to KEEP AND CONCEAL AND NEVER REVEAL that which is committed to them, although in their modern exoteric organization they may not have the faintest concept of what it is they are concealing.

The chemist performs most of his operations by the aid of FIRE. The alchemist operates principally by the aid of Water.

Philalethes says: "The Seed of all things has been placed by God in Water, i.e. the feminine principle or matrix. So in the rituals of the R+C we are taught that "as from water came forth all forms of life upon our planet....." etc.

Seed is vastly more than the mere illustration furnished us by the product of the vegetable kingdom. Sendivogius says "Seed is nothing but congealed AIR (Hydrogen) or a vaporous humour enclosed in a body; and unless it be dissolved by a warm vapour, it cannot work." This is true seed. The invisible (AIRY) substance of Deity or Divinity, inherent in every homo, which incarnated in the material matrix of Mother Earth or an Earthly Mother is warmed by the Warm moist vapor until it dissolves and then WORKS.

PUTREFACTION AND TRANSFORMATION Putrefactio is then in reality, dissolution and dissolving. But everything that is, comes from seed. Some "exhibit their seed openly as in the case of flowers and vegetables, some keep it in their organs like certain animals, others conceal it in the depths of their being like minerals and metals. But in each, the seed sown in the corruption of Matter is stirred by the Putrefying activities of a certain Divine celestial influence (the Solar Energy) coagulating into material water, and passes through a series of fermentive processes, (fermentation being the principle of all transmutation) until it has produced that for which it was specially suited.

Through the medium of Water, in which all Seed in Man and Metals is hidden, the celestial influence is enabled to penetrate the rock, its natural matrix and to develop the seed into various minerals and metallic forms, all destined to one ultimate unfoldment. So it is also in Man. The seed in the one instance to all appearances transforms even the rock itself into a higher and more perfect substance as the general development progresses. So in man, as the seed unfolds through its gradual putrefaction it transforms the boy into the man, and the ignorance of youth into the wisdom of maturity. Ultimately it transforms the natural body into the Spiritual body

The development of seed placed in the soil and the seed placed in the human body appears at first consideration to be something vastly different, yet they are essentially the same thing. Nature alone determines the ultimate destiny of each.

Let us examine the cases and phenomena of spontaneous generation. This heading will include the fungi. One of Nature's wonders is the growth under actual sight, of the mushroom and the toadstool. What is its seed? Whence comes it? How was it first planted? What is the Cause of its phenomenal growth? It may be answered that fundamentally it is analogous to the activity of yeast. What is yeast? The answer is: species of fungi. Its seed under the microscope we find consists of strings or successions of living protoplasmic cells. It is a direct result of fermentation and putrefaction. It is an essential food nourishment and element and by its action alcohol is liberated and eliminated from wine. THUS FROM THIS EXAMPLE WE SEE THAT PUTREFACTIO IS AN AGENT TO MORE RAPID GROWTH AND THE LIBERATION OF ESSENTIAL SPIRIT, AS WELL AS BEING THE PROVIDER OF NOURISHMENT.

Fermentation means definite chemical change in constituency and is closely associated with Putrefactio, the two being inseparable. Fermentation means Putrefaction, decomposition, and therefore death — which is NOT death but LIFE — MORE ABUNDANTLY.

No change of vital conditions and no resurrection can be effected without this form of death. This is what Saint Paul means when he wrote, "That which thou sowest is NOT QUICKENED, EXCEPT IT DIE."

The process of life in man is maintained by the two activities of breathing and eating. Living flesh must receive its vitality from food and air.

Every particle that enters the stomach MUST immediately undergo a process of Putrefaction and decomposition. Why? Because it is necessary to "break up" the atomic and moleculuar cohesion, and by thus freeing the Vital Seed, perfect it and enable it to WORK and vitalize. This Putrefaction is Nature's way of shucking the food kernel to get at the innermost vital seed in each particle of food substance received into the body. In this way the life force is continuously replenished.

MAN, THE PHILOSOPHICAL STONE So the human body is made up of the countless tiny seeds which, coming from the food, have germinated and grown into cell structure exactly as the mushroom grew, only much slower. Organically, this is all there is to man's physical vehicle, a vast network of protoplasmic cells — a great yeast plan. The digestive system is called by Astrologers, "Virgo", the Virgin or Maiden of the World who forever receives, conceives and forever brings forth.

These vital seeds that enter and develop in the human body are virtually mineral seeds. Man is himself, no other than an animated, organized STONE, as stated in the R+C rituals. His birth into the World is a striking analogy to the birth of the so-called PHILOSOPHER'S STONE.

In the beginning, the substance or composition of the embryo is practically shapeless. It remains in the Vase, Urn, or Womb for nearly 40 weeks. Then there comes forth the product of the Putrefaction of the Seed which is not quickened except it die, — the result of the subtle, creative potency of Spirit : infant MAN.

"The new being is nursed and fed until it attains strength to stand alone in its environment. It becomes in due time : MAN, the marvelous transmuting spiritual agent, a vehicle for the expression of the Consciousness of the Divine ONE."

In this transmutation, Man is thus the epitome or Philosophical STONE inasmuch as he is the synthesis of all the metals and substances that compose STONE in the aggregation of the millions of tiny seeds that make up his being, and will enable him to regenerate and transmit to futurity the same God-producing STONE itself.

SPIRITUAL SEED OF LIGHT Humanity in the total is the feminine recipient, womb, or matrix of the higher Spiritual Seed of LIGHT. Man and Womb-man are but the correlated parts, individually considered, of the one highest vehicle of life expression and projection. It is due to this fact that the wonderful bi-une being, Man, contains within ITself the requisite seed for perpetuating itself.

Putrefaction is the principle KEY to the process of the Transmutation, as it is in the phenomena of generation. Death is but the story of Cadmus who slew the Dragon and sowed the Teeth, from which sprung up the army of soldiers. Nothing can be killed or permanently destroyed, only FORM may be changed.

All that death means is the freeing of the atoms of an organized structure by the process of dissolving, dissolution — Putrefaction. Death is the initial step always to the newer and higher life expression, for no atom can remain for more than an instant alone. It must immediately recombine. This it does in obedience to the laws of Chemical Affinity, with mathematical precision. As we have seen by some illustrations of suspended animation and hibernation among lower animal forms, death may mean as in the case of the seed gathered in the barn, or located in the frozen earth, a more or less protracted sleep, but the heat and moisture and warm vapours of Nature's alchemical processes will dissolve it, and growth will take place normally out of the decomposing mass.

In the case of humans, this can only take place in those who are spiritually dead, and who thus require much time in awakening and responding to the consciousness of their new environment.

But for those who anticipate their future estate, who look forward joyously to a brighter life of usefulness, free from earthly inhibitions and obstacles, Putrefactio becomes the process of liberation of the imprisoned spirit to a glorious resurrection of greater, brighter life, liberty, happiness and usefulness, in the Presence of the Father in whose body they have always existed, and in whose body and life, there is no Death, but only life immortal.

What is the putrefying Deific principle?

By virtue of what seed is it that we are raised from corruption to incorruption?

Dear Friends

We are all acquainted with the ancient axiom "As above, so below" in our work and this lecture shows that there is much activity going on underneath our own skins.

Man stands at the point between that which he sees and that which he does not see within his own make-up. That which is described in the narrative appears very involved and complicated and equals the same integrated outworkings throughout the whole universe.

The question might be asked "Is it necessary for my enlightenment to learn all this technically involved knowledge?" Not really - this is intended to give you some idea of how little we know of the great wonder of life. The outer scheme reveals an intelligence far beyond our ken and we only need to know, where we are at the moment, some of the laws which relate to man himself. When we are able to live according to that which the Universe requires of us our body temple functions harmoniously and health ensues. Being ignorant of the laws of living we upset the marvellous rhythm of the body and disease attacks us.

By living a life of purity within the discipline of the self we allow the finer aspects of our make-up to become more apparent in our experiences and makes heaven a possibility here and now; for our bodies are delicately made to allow the Godhead to dwell with us and our hopes are fulfilled.

All Blessings
Yours sincerely in the Light

There is within the cranium of man an 'inner eye' called the 'eye behind the physical eye' which is attached to the pineal seal by a web of delicate wires or nerves and above the pineal is the organ called the Optic Thalamus also called the Light, or Eye of the Chamber. In the Greek Mysteries this organ was called 'The Light of the World' and is indicated in the New Testament by veiled hints as the 'Inner Eye', such as 'The Temple needs no light of the Sun' and 'If thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be filled with Light'.

Santee in his 'Anatomy of the Brain and Spinal Cord' describes this thalamus as the eye or Optic, and says it "is the great ganglion of the inter-brain, sometimes called the bed or chamber, projecting backwards over the mid-brain, laterally it rests against the superior lamina of the internal capsule, which separates it from the lentiform nucleus. It is shaped like an egg, with the small end directed forward, it measures 4cm, or about one and one half inches in length, and 2.5cm, or one inch in width and thickness, it has an interior and posterior extremity and four surfaces.

"The posterior surface (dorsal) of the mid-brain, though free, is entirely concealed by the cerebellar and cerebral hemispheres. It forms part of the floor of the transverse tissue of the cerebrum and is covered by pia mater, the lateral sulcus bounds it on each side, from the sulcus laterals it elevates abruptly toward the median, where it presents a longitudinal groove, this produces two ridges which are sub-divided by a transverse groove into FOUR EMINENCES or I.N.R.I., or the Cross, the colliculi of the corpora quadrigemina. On either side, anterior and a little lateral to the quadrigominal colliculus by an oblique ridge, called the brachium inferius. The nearly parellel longitudinal ridges below the corpora quadrigomina are formed by the brachia conjunctiva of the cerebellum, the bottom of the groove between them is formed by the superior medullary volum of Vieussens, when the trochlear nerve (fourth) is seen issuing.

Mid-Brain
1. Corpora quadrigomina and brachia 2. Pedunculi
1. Tegmenta 2. Substantia nigra 3. Bases Pedunculi

"The four colliculi of the corpora quadrigomina and the four brachia connecting them with the geniculate bodies constitute the quadrigominal lamina, which forms the greater part of the posterior surface of the mid-brain, it is also called the tectum. This lamina quadrigomina presents a small median triangle between the superior colliculi and the habenula, called the sub-pineal triangle in which the pineal body rests, the lamina is invested with pia mater.'

The most extraordinary thing about the claims of the present Rosy Cross bodies, is that they know nothing of this triangle and pineal seal which is shown as the 'Hidden Eye' within it. Let us see what Santee has to say of this 'Hidden Eye' or the 'Pineal Gland'. "The ancients, from time immemorial, have considered the pine tree as the most sacred of all trees. The pineal gland or Corpus Pineale, is shaped like a pine cone, and the ancient physiologist who gave it its name, must assuredly have understood its great esoteric function. It is 6mm (0.25 inches) high, and 4mm (0.17 ins) in diameter, joined to the root of the third ventricle by a flattened stalk, the habenula, it is also called epiphysis and conarium. It is small, reddish and the size of a pea, its interior is made up of closed follicles surrounded by ingrowths of connective tissue, these follicles are filled with epithelial cells mixed with calcarous (lime) matter, the brain-sand (acervulus cerebri), these calcareous deposits are found also in the spinal stalk and along the choiroid plexuses."

The real meaning of the Great Pyramid will reveal to us the meaning of the Sacred Claustrum and the Stone of the Tomb of Christ. Before we enter the King's Chamber we enter the ante-room and we find the 'granite leaf' which are these four grooves which correspond to these four eminences, the colliculi of the corpra quadrigomena in the mid-brain, the ante-chamber of the head, we then find that the first Chamber, that of the Queen or feminine pituitary gland and then to the higher King's Chamber the masculine pineal gland. The Well which connects the King's Chamber with the subterranean grotto, corresponds in anatomy to the left sympathetic system, and the grotto is the sacral plexus, where the first crucifixion of the Seed (Jesus) takes place. This plexus is the dividing line between the lower animal or the Adam of Earth and the Soul residing within the heart shaped cerebellum, this is one of the inner meanings of Hiram Abiff by whose death (generation) the Word was lost.

This 'pia mater' is Latin for 'tender mother' and is to be found within the cerebrum, and is like 'tears and sweat' instead of serum or oil and is composed of both saline and alkaline and there is a large percent of sodium chloride therein. Therefore, the Christ could be interpreted as being the Divine Light or Essence which flows through the brain from the Divine Soul, and which floods the Temple of God provided that the body keeps to its given rate of motion, the atoms whirl around their nucleus, but again this whirling process requires 'oil' to keep it running smoothly. This is the meaning of the Wise and Foolish Virgins.

As all lamps need oil to keep them alight, so, too, does this All-Seeing Eye, the oil which is needed to feed this 'Lamp' comes from the cerebrum blended with the phlegem of the pituitary gland. This pituitary gland is a small, reddish, ellipsoid organ in the depression of the sphenoid bone, and attached to the brain by a peduncle. "It contains the viscid, jelly-like material (pituita) and consists of two lobes bound together by connective tissue and secretes a fluid that seems to stimulate the growth of connective tissues and to be essential to sex development".

Christ said that "I am the Light of the World". This refers to the cerebrum, this word is made up of two words 'ceres' meaning wax and 'brum' meaning a 'whirling wheel' and this is also verified by the fact that our word 'world' comes from the word 'whirl'. This now becomes very suggestive to the reader. The Divine Essence or the 'Pia Mater' is this Light emanating from the whirling sand of the cerebrum and thus filling the brain with Light.

If this pia mater is furnished to the brain by the Tithes, the pineal gland becomes like a Rock, and seems to have an aura, this is caused by this matter passing up through the channel along the stalk to the cone, the vibrations of the pineal gland are vivified, the bi-convex lens in the cerebrum, focalised in the 'All-Seeing Eye' within the triangle. A hint may be given here, the cross symbolises the four eminences, the circle which is always shown behind or on the cross is the 'whirling wheel' and the Eye within the centre of the circle is the 'All-Seeing Eye' of the Divine Soul. The inscription hints at the Christed-Seed crucified within the Cross of Matter.

According to the Timeless Law of God, error cannot be sanctified by age or custom, so until we cast aside prejudice and dogma and seek the truth of the meaning of the words 'Jesus' and 'Christ' we will not understand the Bible as we now have it. Constantine was told by the Bishops of his time that there was no forgiveness for the crimes of which he was guilty, so to make sure that he would be saved he commanded the Bishops to devise a plan of salvation in order that the blood of the innocent and mythical Christ might save him from eternal damnation. By this means the process was set into motion to transform the spiritual Christ into that of the physical Christ, hence the reasons why the theologians have not been able to agree upon the true nature of the Christ.

Now the Greek word for 'Jesus' comes from 'Icthos' meaning a fish and our medical doctors tell us that the semen or creative force has the odour and taste of a fish. This means the Jesus refers to this creative force of Kundalini or Serpent Fire in the spinal cord. Christ then refers to the oil consistency or ointment within the force as it has been shown by the smear over the doors of the Israelites in the story of Moses.

At the age of twelve this force begins to move up the spinal cord to the cerebellum, hence we find Jesus in the Temple within Jerusalem or the cerebellum after he returns from Egypt symbolising the generative organs.

During every month in the life of every man and woman, that is to say after the age of puberty, about the end of every 29½ days when the moon is in the natal Zodiacal sign that the sun was in at the time of birth, there is a psycho-physical seed of 'Son of Man' formed in the solar plexus or the pneumo-gastric plexus commonly called the 'House of Bread' in likeness to the placenta, the seed will either find its way up the spinal cord to the thalamus or it will find its outlet in sexual activity.

The name of the town of Bethlehem comes from two words, 'Beth', a house, and 'lehem' - bread, therefore Bethlehem refers to the solar plexus. This is the meaning of the words: "Cast they bread upon the waters and it shall return to thee after many days". In anatomy, we find that the 'waters' refer to the blood and nerve fluids of the body which carries the fish or seed on its 'Divine Journey' to regenerate the body, therefore this seed will save and redeem man from his animal passions.

On the journey up the spinal cord the seed reaches a point called Nazareth where it is cooked or prepared for the work of spiritualising the whole of the body. Hence we find that any materialised thing is bread, or mass, maso, or dough. Thus the Catholic Mass, means the materialisation of the divine manna from heaven and in the body - Nazareth. This also contains the same meaning of the Word Mas-on. It will now be seen why the Catholics and Masons are not in agreement, for the letter 'N' is an abbreviation of the 14th letter of the Hebrew alphabet, NUN the fish. Therefore Joshua and Jesus means the same thing - a fish. By adding the letter N to Maso, the meaning of the prepared fish in the thalamus becomes clear and the Catholic priesthood strenuously objected to the real meaning of Jesus becoming known.

It is interesting to note that the Christ seemed to concentrate upon the symbol of the fish, as we will see that the disciples were fishermen, the money to the funds was taken from the mouth of a fish and the sign of two fishes was their secret symbol of recognition and the bishops wore a mitre which is shaped like a fish's head. This is the underlying meaning of the 5 loaves of bread and the two fishes, just as Jonah was a devotee of the worship of the Dove being swallowed by Dagon Fish of Moloch of the Canaanites. The Dove is symbolic of peace, calmness, and at the Baptism of Jesus the Dove or germ was seen descending from the grey matter of the brain whilst Jesus was in the waters of the Jordan or spine, hence the meaning of the storm of the sex desire in man. Thus for a man to be saved, he must save his Seed or Jesus. This indicates the meaning of John when he says: "He that is born of God cannot sin (or fall short of knowledge) for his seed (fish) remaineth in him'.

The age of puberty is then about the age of twelve years and up to that age a child does not understand moral responsibility, hence Herod seeks to destroy the 'first born' or the first seed at the age of puberty. We see the same glyph in the story of Moses being found in the waters of the spinal cord and Pharaoh, meaning the desire nature, seeking to destroy the first born. This means that Egypt is the Kingdom of Desire below the solar plexus and that which is above the Red Sea (blood) and is symbolised by Taurus the generative power, the land is above, above the Red Sea is called the Land of Canaan or Heaven, hence the saying that the 'kingdom of heaven is within you'. Therefore the Balance or Libra is to be found within the higher and lower nature and the solar plexus being the centre represents Enoch, half-man and half-fish.

The River Nile is the spinal cord and the Daughter of Pharaoh refers to the City of Jerusalem. Moses means 'drawn from the water' just as the fish are drawn from the water, this is the sign of Pisces, or the two fishes, just as Thomas Vaughan claimed that we had two fishes within our human nature. Moses in this respect refers to the generative seed and his Laws refers to our life in the physical region of life. The Pillar of Fire and the Crossing of the Red Sea all refer to the sign of Taurus the Bull, the sign of generation on all regions of the personality of man.

Jesus means the 'God of Salvation' which comes from the word 'salvia' which saves the body by digesting or preparing the seed-fish, this salvia is a smear or ointment. The 'Sal' or Sol is the salt which saves the food or ointment. When Jesus is baptised in the Jordan by John, this refers to the baptising of the fluids - Christ - which are the substance of the spinal cord, and if lifted up, it becomes 'my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased'. Oannes refers to the fluids of the body and his Gospel tells of the Spiritual Man using the fluids to enter into the body of Jesus, so, if a man lives in wickedness, the human Soul dies to the Christ.

The Alchemists studied the arts of astrology, biology and bio-chemistry and if applied with wisdom and understanding it will lead us in the great Alchemical Laboratory of the 'Fearfully and wonderfully made human temple into the temple made without the sound of a saw or hammer' and it is within this wonderful temple that we must seek the Christ. It was under the Alchemical symbols that the Brothers of the Rosy Cross, Brothers of Light and Hermetical students sought the great Mystery of Light - MAN.

The redeeming Son of God is the 'Esse' the Universal Solvent of the Alchemists and through this Esse the Universal Intel-ligence moves and brings man to his goal. This is called the 'Philosopher's Stone' or the 'Elixir of Life' which is carried through the lungs into the arteries, they are the air carriers, where it unites with the inorganic cell-salts, then materialises (cooked) and forms granules, and is then deposited as flesh and bone for the human temple, hence the illusion to the seven years of plenty and seven years of famine, it takes seven years for the whole of the atoms of the body to be changed.

For the reader of Illumination to realise the power of the Divine Eye within his own thalamus, it will be necessary for him to know that in the 'Word' and 'Jordan', the OR in the names refers to the gold of the precious substance of the Seed. Hence, the gold - The Seed of Redemption - refers to the alchemical processes of the Christed-Seed within the body, and their symbols are:

Gold	(Sun)	Sulphur	Sal Ammoniac
Silver	(Moon)	Salt	Sublimation
Copper	(Venus)	Water	Sublimate of Mercury
Iron	(Mars)	Fire	Realgar
Mercury	(Mercury)	Aqua Fortis	Viotriol
Lead	(Saturn)	Earth	Retort
Tin	(Jupiter)	Air	Common Salt

Hence the key to the meaning of the Gospels in relation to the workings of the Divine Seed is the literary and graphic, the literary is the method of applying fanciful names to substances and the graphic refers to the applying names and actions for the various parts of the body and its functions. Therefore, if the modern Rose Cross claim to be the successors of the Rosy Cross, then may we ask why they know nothing of this ancient science. The reason is obvious, they are not the successors and never will be the successors of this Ancient Brotherhood.

The word 'Jordan' through the letters 'OR' becomes the Hebrew word for Judge, this means that the Creative Power operates through the precious substance and produces judgement or Wisdom, the location of this OR or Gold is to be found within the upper brain, the cerebrum, and this is the pia mater or the 'Precious Ointment' or the Christed Seed, it is the WORD of St John and the Masons. Thus the 'Lost Word' of the Masons is the symbol of the animal thought which eats of the Tree of Life by desire, this means that you are losing the gold or the 'or' of the body. This now reveals yet another meaning of the Garden of Eden and Forbidden Tree. In Masonry, the word 'Hiram' means high born, and, if the body is squared correctly, the Divine Seed will pass up the 33 Degrees or vertebrae of the spinal cord until it reaches the pineal gland and then Illumines the Single Eye of the Thalamus.

By the conservation and transmutation of the sex substance the pineal gland becomes firm and hard like a rock (Tyre) and has the same meaning as Peter or Petra - a rock or pineal gland and the 'Chair of St Peter' is the thalamus and the two lobes are crossed like two keys. These symbols have been taken over by the Catholic Church without knowing (to the public) the meaning of their stolen goods. In Masonry we find that Hiram Abiff was resurrected during the delay caused by searching for his body; in other words a month or 29½ days has passed and another seed is born which the candidate for Initiation is admonished not to slay.

Peter cuts off the ear of a soldier who represents the world of the desire nature, but Jesus puts it back. The meaning of this subtle act should be quite clear to the Mason or Illuminee Adept. Peter assumes two meanings as the drama is played out within the body, upon his (Peter's) betrayal of Christ thrice he symbolised the desire nature of the three regions of the personality, and in the Garden he is shown as the Rock cutting off the ability to know the Wisdom, the rest belongs to the Secret Tradition. This means that the underlying meaning of the various personages in the gospels are inter-changeable and only an Illumined Adept can really know the whole Truth of Man.

The upper brain furnishes all that man contains and Jesus is not the Saviour until he becomes Christed of John in the Jordan, then the Dove descends down the spinal cord and enters into Jesus, thus making Jesus the Christed One. So it will be seen that there are two fishes within man, one was Jesus the carpenter, the man or Hiram Abiff, and the other, the Christed Jesus, the Son of God. To us it means that Jesus is the human Soul and the Christed Jesus is the Divine Soul united within the waters of the body by means of the Esse or the Seed of Jesse. We will note that there is no 'J' in the Hebrew alphabet, Jesse becomes Esse.

So by re-reading 'The Great Parable' it will be seen that when the Christed Seed crossed the two nerves or Golgotha above the pons, the veil of the temple or the 'shimmering web of atomic substances' is rent and the earthquake occurs, the whole of the body is re-oriented and the dead matter of the body or tomb comes forth. This means that the generative cells of the body are quickened, the body becomes spiritualised and the Divine Eye of the Soul now shines forth into the darkness of the Virgin Matter of the body and illumines it.

To crucify, means to add to or increase a thousand-fold, hence one of the reasons for David dancing before the Ark of

Original

God and his thousand wives, but he is naked, hence the man is divested himself of the desire nature. The Ark of God is the Thalamus with its two lobes symbolised by the two Cherubim whose wings are spread over the opening of the Ark in such a way as to symbolise the Lingham and the Yoni, the Ark of the Covenant was a phallic symbol.

The Lord Buddha wears a thousand petalled headdress over the pineal gland or the 'Divine Eye and the Crown Gland has a thousand petals. The winged headdress of the Pharaohs also had the same meaning. The Orb with the two wings symbolised the Flight of the Soul from the body by means of the Asp, the Serpent of Kundalini.

When this crucifixion takes place the two nerves are crossed, they are the Two Keys of St Peter which will unlock the Holy of Holies, when they cross each other, they set afire the oil in the cerebrum, thus lighting the whole of the body, just as Moses saw the Divine within a burning bush on the top of the mountain of Horeb and yet the bush was not burned, indicating that it is spiritual fire, and by this fire burns out upon the two tablets of stone the Law, the tablets being the two lobes of the thalamus.

By means of crossing the two impulses within the Seed gives power to the pineal gland at such a rate that it causes the 'Light of the King's Chamber to fill the whole of the body with Light' and will send its vibration out along the optic nerve to the physical eye and thus will heal the blind (here the blind refers to men still within the body or tomb of flesh) and, if directed along the other nerves of the body, will cause a transmutation of the elements within the body into that of pure gold. Hence the 'Word' is simply two 'Vs', one on top of each other making up a figure of man, and the Or meaning the vital substance of the body and 'D' is the Door through which the Divine Soul enters into the thalamus and illumines the body,therefore it is this Esse or Christos which vivifies the Seed and causes it to germinate within the solar plexus. There is no Hebrew equivalent for the letter 'W' and some of the Kabbalists claim that it is the symbol for Celestial Water. This means that in the original manuscripts the WORD and JESSE could not be, we wonder what the original words were?

Alchemy then is the Divine Chemistry of the Body and those who followed this quest were the Christian Mystics who knew the true meaning of the Christ and Jesus. The modern Rosicrucians and Alchemists still hold to the historical Jesus, this means that they have no connection with the Rosae Crucis, otherwise their teachings would follow along the lines we have given in this article. Being ourselves a pledge Initiate of the Secret Brotherhood of the Rosae Crucis can only hope that the Laws of the Brotherhood will one day allow us to speak openly,until then we can only speak in veiled language.

WATER

Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days. Eccl., 11, 1.

ONE cannot read extensively in Holy Writ without becoming conscious of the manifold references to water, either in ceremonial, allegorical, physical or spiritual usage. Neither can one engage much in traveling in any land without becoming aware of the prodigality of Nature in her supply of this wonderful tho apparently commonplace element. The occult student encounters constant reference and allusion to the water element; the astrologer to the influences of watery signs and aspects, and the physicist to the water constituents of almost every substance. Nor do the analogies end here, for the watery oceans of the material world are the crystallized correspondences of the etheric oceans and the ocean of cosmic space, so-called.

The water area of the globe is 140,295,000 sq. miles, much more than the land area which is only 56,255,000 sq. miles. Water forms more than 50% by weight of all living matter. The human body is 59% water and the rock or solid portion of the globe contains a similar preponderance.

These facts are cited to show the universality of this element, out of which we have been taught that all forms of life emerged.

Our text therefore, takes on a much greater importance than would at first appear, especially when we remember that all Scripture is to be taken, not literally, but esoterically and as parable. It is obvious at once that the act of casting material bread into water would have no specific value except that of furnishing food to possible fishes, and the explanation commonly offered us by theologians, that of performing kindly acts of charity and benevolence is equally unsatisfactory.

Water is to us as Rosicrucians, the symbol at once of progress, evolution, continuity, parenthood and re-incarnation. It is the sign to us that always there has been and always there will be manifested, continuous life. From the primordial steamy and watery envelope of our newly forming sphere, came the condenst watery globules descending to form vast primaeval oceans. As the watery envelope became thinner and lighter so that the sun's rays could penetrate, those same globules became vaporized, lifted up into the heavens, and, after the separation of land and water elements, descended upon the earth, diverted into many channels by the water sheds of the mountain ranges, irrigating practically every portion of the planet.

In their progress along the pathways formed by the water sheds, the original globules combined to produce brooks, streams, rivers, ponds, lakes, etc., until they found a common meeting place in the nirvana of ocean, whence in due time they emerged to continue the onward and manifesting process. And as we look upon the waters of inland streams or of the great oceans, we gradually understand that the same matter upon which we look is that which has formed in primordial times the watery envelope or matrix which constituted the waters of birth of our planet, still with us after untold transitional processes and rebirths.

But the important point is, that water, in passing thru these transsitional phases and processes, does not simply undergo a repetition of vaporizings and condensations. It has a specific duty to perform. It acts as a carrier, removing soil which, as silt, it deposits in places where it is needed, far from its original bed. Under the direction of the Creative Hierarchs it acts thru the processes of erosion to change and modify the surface of the planet. It tunnels under mountains, wears open great chasms in the solid rock and alters the contour of a continent. It dissolves, extracts and holds in suspension valuable mineral constituents, delivering them where they are most needed. In some cases it charges itself with healing properties for plant, animal and man. It stores heat in summer to be liberated in winter.

All this is the history also of the life of Man. Like the water which forms such a great proportion of his weight and bulk, Man is precipitated or crystallized out of the cosmic matrix in the waters of child-birth. He too, is destined to become a carrier, the carrier of a modicum of the Divine Spirit which "brooded over the waters" at the creation of the world. He too, absorbs, dissolves and holds in suspension valuable mineral elements, not depositing them but transmuting them, even as does the water of the free streams, to higher planes and potencies. Man too, is sometimes surcharged with healing powers, not only for his individual fellow men, but for the nations.

And when Man's day at school here on earth is ended, he too, is releast from the physical envelope and raised up into the heavens, into the nirvana of the cosmic ocean, there to remain until like the simpler elements, his time comes for the return journey to earth. And like the watery globules lifted high in fleecy clouds, Man too, undergoes a process of purification, so that in due time he may make his descent to earth in a condition of renewed purity and freedom from all that is gross.

In the smallest globule of water there is a latent power awaiting the action of heat to release it and permit it to perform wonders in the service of Man. In the humblest Man there is a tremendous power latent, awaiting the activity of the heat of bodily combustion to release it that it may perform its wonders for the benefit of the world and the service of Humanity. The heat developt under great mental stress is evidence of the processes going on within the bodily organism, as witnest by the emotions resultant thereupon. And consequent upon this interior activity, the mental processes make the Man powerful to remove even mountains if they are in the way of a proposed railroad, harness the power of a Niagara and override the severest storms of ocean.

Time after time Man emerges from the cosmic ocean of the heavenly Nirvana, to descend again and again into the abyss or waters of matter and mortal life, each time bringing with him somewhat of the purity and vitality of the life-giving powers of the interior worlds.

Bread is the symbol used esoterically and spiritually of that which sustains and supports life. Thus, when the Master, teaching thru the inspired writer of Ecclesiastes, advised that we cast our bread upon the waters, assuring us that we would find it again after many days, he certainly did not teach in a material sense nor did he refer to coldly calculated acts of charity and benevolence, widely heralded by well paid press agents. For charity definitely planned is consciously or unconsciously, designed to cheat God and the Laws of Recompense and Compensation. Strictly speaking, God alone is in a position to dispense Charity, inasmuch as He alone is the Father of all. Man can give no real charity, for he can only give to his fellow men what is already theirs by Divine right, but which unfortunately, some of them have not been as successful in realizing, as have others. Every human being has a divine right to the kindly fruits of the earth, that in due season he may enjoy them. Every human being has an inalienable right to the full measure of the products of his labor, and if he is cheated or defrauded out of them by superior mental cunning or brawn, the thief has no right to salve his own conscience by restoring some of the pelf under the camouflage of charity. No indeed, it is not definitely planned professional benevolence that the Master had in mind when giving the sage precept, it was something far deeper.

Casting our bread upon the waters meant and still means, the relegating of the constructive, sustaining, supporting acts, words, and deeds of our daily lives, to the waters of the Etheric Ocean about us. We have been rightly taught that everything in the mortal world has an imperishable invisible archetype, from which the original idea may be recovered at any time, even ages after the material crystallization of the idea has crumbled and vanisht. But in the parent waters of the Etheric Ocean, all the archetypes remain in perfect preservation, and from them, a work begun in one mortal life expression may be recovered and is recovered unconsciously to us all, when the time comes in a subsequent life expression for us to take up the work and carry it on, to possible fruition. So we shall recover our bread after many days, a thousand years being but a day in God's sight. And if the bread we have cast be unconstructive, unsustaining and devitalizing, and not fit for the service of Humanity, then we may be very sure that it will be found by us mouldy, water-soakt and worthless.

If, however, the bread we have offerd in the name and for the service of our fellow men, be constructive, sustaining and supporting in every respect, no matter how far short of the ideal we may have set before us at the time, we may be equally sure of finding it again after the many days, a source of wonder to us how it has increast and multipled under the beneficient influence of the higher powers who further every good work. Then it will be to us a source of encouragement to take it up and carry it on to a better and fuller fruition.

Thus far we have considerd only those analogies between water and Man which are pleasing and gratifying and not without a certain poetic coloring. But we are warned against another property of water, when, in Genesis, 49, 4, we are told that, "unstable as water, thou shalt not excel." Water seeks its level but it is rarely in a state of equilibrium because of that very seeking. Water at rest and perfectly static, becomes stagnant and a menace to health and life. Man is constantly seeking a higher level of development and consciousness. By this seeking he is seldom in a state of equilibrium. The man at perfect rest and static is unprogressive, wastes opportunity for development and by his inertia and sluggishness becomes slothful and a menace to the community in which he lives.

But the instability of water is the Source of its danger to Man, and the principal reason why water remains simply water instead of becoming a more complex condition as it repeats its own history age after age. Instability in a Man is the principal source of danger to himself and to the community about him, preventing him in his onward progress. The unstable Man lacking firmness, moral courage, and a keen sense of personal responsibility and moral accountability, is undependable and falls far short of being the valuable member of society that he might otherwise become. Such a man is he whom the Prophet Ezekiel describes, saying his "knees shall be weak as water."

Again, consider the experience enshrined within the tiniest drop of water. The raindrop which today finds refuge in the bosom of the Hudson may, not long before have formed an integral part of the Great Lakes, or, it may have come still further, from some cloudland lake embosomed in the Rockies. Before that incarnation it may have been part of the broad bosom of the Pacific, and ere it reacht that resting place who can tell what scenes it may have witnest in foreign lands, even lands untrodden by the white man.

So too, with Man; he has come an age long journey, resting from time to time in many countries as he chose for different mortal expressions. Yet the experience gained in each, has become a veritable part of himself, etcht deep in his individual seed atoms and brot over and along with him, age after age. Man is the conservator of many influences and conditions accreted during many long epochal time periods.

Ocean holds within its broad confines the auras of things celestial and things terrestrial for its substance has contacted both. Man contains within himself principles celestial and terrestrial for he has lived in and is a part of both.

In conformity with the principle of all Hermetic study, we have given in the foregoing observations the general analogies between water and Man taken in his totality as a composite being. Coming to specific correspondences however, we will note that alchemically, water is almost invariably spoken of as referring to the realm of the soul; the connecting link between spirit and matter. Furthermore, it represents thought.

Here again a notable correspondence is seen, for water by chemical analysis is said to be composed of two volumes of hydrogen to one of oxygen, or by weight, two parts of hydrogen to sixteen parts of oxygen. It is chemically exprest by the formula H_2O. Now pure water is colorless, limpid and neither alkaline nor acid. It takes on color only when observed in connection with a specific environment. In mass it appears blue and green according to the light in which it is seen. It takes on all colors from solid white to solid black according to the properties gathered and which it holds in suspension, in other than the state of absolute purity. All these conditions and properties apply with equal accuracy and force to the human soul.

The soul, in its threefold aspect it will be rememberd, is the link between spirit and matter or the threefold spirit and the threefold body, being extracted from the latter by the former. The consistency of the soul pabulum thus extracted is, like water, in the proportion of two parts physical matter to one part spirit matter by volume, or by weight two parts physical matter to sixteen parts spiritual matter. The first condition gives soul its volume; the second its force or energizing, vitalizing, supporting and sustaining power.

Like water, the human soul also is colorless in its absolutely pure state, so far as the highest obtainable degree of human clairvoyance can ever discern, but on the authority of the Masters it is stated that to the celestial observers a pure human soul glows with a golden radiance that far exceeds the brilliance of the solar orb at meridian; the only material object comparable to it being the sacrificial Host after consecration, and the solar and soular analogies between these two should not escape observation and note.

We have noted, however, that water takes on the aspect of color when viewed in relation to environment and in accordance with the residuum of matter it may hold in suspension. This is equally true of the soul. It is distild or extracted from the threefold body by the threefold spirit and the distild or extracted product is pure and colorless at the moment of its extraction. From that moment however, its aspect will be in accordance with the state of relative purity of the threefold spirit and the status of the Ego. The soul will hold much of its purity of color in the case of the advanst Ego and highly developt threefold spirit, but will become quickly colored in accordance with the karmic conditions pertaining to the Ego who has much to give account for to the inexorable laws of compensation and restitution.

Water is the great medium connecting all continents and land areas on the planet. It penetrates the sub-soil, forms a large percentage by bulk and volume of the earth's crust and may be said to be omnipresent. This is equally analogous to the ocean of thought. The substance of the thought world may, in one sense be said to be colorless, fluidic, undulatory and in a state of constant vibration, seeking equilibrium. The substance of the thought world is colored by the activities and impressions made upon it by two different groups,—the invisible entities and those incarnate. The latter receive from the substance of the thought world what is desired to be conveyed to them from the spirits discarnate.

As the water flows and percolates thruout the earth, so the substance or water of the thought world flows and percolates thruout all earth's humanity. Those who "take time to think" deeply, draw on the waters of thought life and develop a corresponding degree of intelligence, while those who "do not waste time in thought" are undeniable evidences of their boast and make little progress.

All humanity can enter freely into participation in the ocean of thought. This gives us the key to the exclamation of the Prophet Isaiah, when, in the opening lines of his 55th chapter he said, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye,"—and again, later on he explains that in so doing, "your soul shall live." Theology informs us that the waters referd to are the promises of the Master Christ. But mere belief in or acceptance of any promises, even tho they be those of God himself, will not avail one jot or tittle, unless they are received in an active sense and reacted upon by the recipient in such a way as to make them a part of his individuality and daily life. In the 23rd chapter of the Proverbs of Solomon, the 7th verse, we are advised that as a man thinketh in his heart, so is he. What is more, any man can be whatsoever he desires to be if he thinks himself such steadfastly enuf in his heart, for by so doing he sets in operation in his behalf the Law of Attraction that draws to him those waters of life from the thought world, which, as mentioned earlier in our Instruction, may be surcharged with healing for past conditions and strength for new ones, and by the very fluidic nature of the thought world substance, he will draw into himself the archetypes of that which he desires to be, and in due time will accomplish the remodelling or reformation of himself on the lines laid down by the archetypes he has drawn. This is a scientific truth in spiritual research not heretofore made known.

In each of the Elements there is a spark or modicum of the first and greatest of them all, the FIRE Element. This principle it is, that gives the power possest by each of the remaining three. Water possesses this Fire Element to a remarkable degree, and it is by virtue of the Fire in the Water that many of the most remarkable properties of the latter are possible. It is the Fire Principle in the Water that preserves and purifies and it is the Fire Principle that makes Water the great symbol to us of reincarnation and continuity of life. This shown by the gorgeous illustration offered us by Nature in the fall of every year, when the sap of which water is the principal constituent flows down the tree or shrub and would leave the latter to wither and die were it not for the Fire Principle formerly inherent in the water which then leaves it and incarnates itself in the vegetable form, manifesting forth the incarnation of the Divine Flame in the myriad flame colors of autumnal verdure and foliage and preserving the form alive by the power of the Divine Spirit within, until the Water Element rises another year to claim its own and continue the process of growth to a greater and more luxuriant degree.

Water is a conductor of electricity and is also capable of magnetization to a remarkable degree for healing purposes. This fact of its ability to transmit the greatest of all cosmic forces and to embody magnetic properties in such a manner that they may be applied for the healing of human ills, shows forth the nature of Water in such a way that we may more than suspect that it forms an integral part of what our ancient and mediaeval brethren sought under the name of the Universal Solvent and the Panacea. In the case of the first we must of course study the aspects of Water from the Mercurial standpoint, but in the case of the latter, the Healing Panacea, we may conclude that in Water we have one of the principal constituents. The others we must deduce from future Instructions.

There is another essential mystery in the nature of water. The solid crust of earth remains a fixture. Water, vaporizes and ascends into the ambient heavens about us. It condenses and is precipitated downwards again to the earth. Back and forth thru the ages it makes the journey up and down. But every time it ascends, in the process of evaporation it leaves behind it some life-giving mineral substance and has in the mean time given to mother earth a new vitality taken out of the ether and atmosphere surrounding our planet. It carries many of earth's impurities upwards to be cleansed. It brings down the purifying powers from on high to earth. For this reason was the esoteric mixture of water with the blood of the Master Jesus necessary that in emerging from the corpus of the latter, the Christos might make his entrance into his future Kingdom. The blood of the Man of Golgotha furnished the specific vehicle of occupancy; the Water furnisht the immediate vehicle of entrance and penetration, inasmuch as it was the one element of true mediatorial nature and character equally native to the heavens and the earth.

Water itself is unstable. But the ocean liner now makes its trips in a state of practically perfect equilibrium thru the device known as the marine gyroscope which enables the ship to preserve its equilibrium under the most trying conditions. The same is true of Man. Immerst, almost submerged, in the waters or depths of matter, he too may preserve his equilibrium by the gyroscope of spiritual perception if he will develop the specific organs therefor, even as the ship builders developt a special instrument for their purposes.

This spiritual gyroscope is absolutely necessary, for we can become lost in the ocean of thought as easily and completely as we can become lost in the ocean or waters of commercialism and materialism about us and one state is just as harmful to the evolving human as the other. This spiritual gyroscope is just as necessary to the modern man and woman as the little instrument used on shipboard is to the mariner. The spiritual gyroscope is the union of the two powerful physico-psycho-intellectual organs or instruments known as the Pineal Gland and the Pituitary Body in the brain. Spiritual development does not mean the cultivation of pseudo and sickly sentimentality nor the adoption of fads of living, speaking, breathing or diet. It is the development of a splendid physique, a quick, keen, active brain and mentality, both equilibrated and controlled by the awakened and developt organs of the threefold spirit, stabilizing us in our daily activities, and preserving our balance between the materialism of the outer world and the fallacies of a world distorted by psychic and intellectual fads usually mistaken for spiritual environments.

As we look upon ocean or in fact any body of water, let us always pause to contemplate what possibilities of future life it may hold in store. The races of humanity that we ordinarily contemplate in occult science have not indeed come from the ocean ooze, for we have been taut that man-in-the-making as represented by present and past humanity began in the parent Sun, but we also know by study of evolutionary processes that the human seed planted in our planet that will be manifest in races to follow our wave, are now on their way up from primordial conditions and that the ocean and vast bodies of water salt and fresh form the combined parents of life forms even to the human that will be as different from our own, as we are from the races of man shown by the discovery of prehistoric remains and vestiges.

Water is to us the symbol of the continuity of life, for we know that just so long as there is water upon our planet there will also be life in abundance and the means of supporting it, and just as the water rises and descends, up to the heavens and down upon the earth, so will the same group of humanity rise from physical death to spiritual light and life, and then in due time descend upon the earth, like the water to bring down the celestial conditions thereupon for the benefit, service and advancement of humanity existent and to come.

We may not be in a position to dispense large sums of worldly wealth or material substance in casting our bread upon the waters, but there is one way in which every one can help and cast their bread in the sure knowledge that they WILL find it after many days, and that not only will they find it, but many others who need it in the mean time will also find it and profit withal. The way in which all CAN cast their bread upon the waters, is by casting into the waters of the thought world, constructive, helpful, sustaining ideas and concepts; not impracticable ideals, for like the litter of the carpenter's shop they only obstruct the waters of archetypal forms, but carefully workt out ideas, intensely practical.

This does not include the dreamings and mental maunderings of would be world reformers, for such have never proved practical or of tangible value. There is no such thing and can be no such thing as a world reformer, ready with a panacea to cure all of humanity's ills, for the simple reason that the world is God incarnate, and no mere human speck can reform or cure God nor does He require it. God is in His heaven at all times and all's well with the world, only sometimes the world is not fully intelligible to the momentary expressions of God that we call humanity, nor is this surprising, for if it were not so, then humanity would be gifted with equal wisdom with God, which is unthinkable.

A concept of a perfect man or woman, a perfect race, as nearly as we can formulate a vision of perfection, workt over in the mind's laboratory, developt carefully, discarding day after day the imperfections that become obvious to us, and then at frequent and regular intervals projected into the waters of the thought world, will, as those waters surely flow, pass thru many human brains and minds, and all the desirable details will be received and reacted upon by those who can grasp them intelligently, require them for purposes immediately at hand, and apply them for the common good. In this way it will not be unusual for one to see one's cherisht ideal workt out right within his or her life time and observation, and many an earnest worker can confidently altho secretly be sure that he is in reality, the original parent of some improvement to society.

Let no one feel that his ideas may not be suitable. The Fire in the Water will vivify the idea and burn its way into the thought processes of one or many who may be able to mould the original thought form to greater perfection, and like the parent who has been separated from his offspring for many years, when next he beholds it, he finds a full grown, well developt, practical, useful creation and addition to society. And at no time in the world's history more than the present have useful, practical, mental creators been required, for the generations next succeeding our own will have many problems to solve the like of which have never been heretofore presented to the human race. We can do much now, if we will, by casting our bread upon the waters, not the bread of strife and social disorder, adding confusion to confusion, but the bread of strength, practical, useful, constructive ideas for a wholesome society, moral growth, preservation of the home and family, rule and governments of equity and justice. There never can be such a thing as human equality any more than the infants in the primary department can be equal to the collegiate graduates, but there can be justice even tho it has been long delayed. Constructive concepts of this sort are the bread we should and can cast upon the waters of the thought world, and it will surely and inevitably return to each of us after many days.

"That he might ... purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of all good works." Titus 2:14

We have noted that Putrefactio is the principle KEY to the process of Transmutation, as it is to the phenomena of generation.

Second, that Humanity in the total is the feminine recipient or matrix of the higher spiritual Seed of LIGHT.

Third, that the process of life in Man is maintained by two activities: breathing and eating. Living flesh receives its vitality from food and air by the processes of Putrefactio and Fermentio; we also observed that the Human Body bears the likeness of a great yeast plant.

PUTREFACTION IS THE TRANSMUTIVE AGENT In other words: the moment we divest the term "Putrefactio" from the objectionable associations which ordinarily attach to it, we find the process of Putrefactio one of the most sublime spiritual agencies, and the modus of passing from a lower estate to a higher; the actual transmutive activity of all evolutionary development.

Thus far we have applied our study of Putrefactio to the lower forms of life, and to the human body as far as it relates to the physical body and environment. But when we apply it to human life in its outward manifestation either as Humanity in the total, or the individual as a unit, we find that it applies with equal truth and power.

The daily life of each one of us, is a process of Putrefaction. It has been said to you many times over that the seed of Men and Metals is identical. All Seed in the ultimate produces Gold, and the result of all Seed in any of the Life Kingdoms, is Gold IN THE VARIOUS PROCESSES OF DEVELOPMENT THROUGH PURIFYING PUTREFACTIONAL PROCESSES. Let us amplify this thought.

In the microcosmic womb or matrix of the earthly Mother, the Seed of Man first dies that it may be quickened. Our previous lecture traced its development through forty weeks until it appears in the microcosmic world as Physical Man. What is this product of flesh and blood? Why does so much of value and paramount interest attach to it? Why does the Church, the State, and the Law unite to surround this helpless, mindless being with all possible safety and protection that is, alas, denied to those of its species, of riper years? Too often we hear it said lightly by a devoted mother of her child, that it "is worth its weight in Gold" -- yet little does she realize that it IS PURE GOLD.

This is not a figment or figure of speech. It is not a pleasing sentence based upon sentiment which too often is not based upon common sense or logic. The Mite of Gold and the Mite of Humanity are each, as one of Nature's greatest mysteries: PURE GOLD, differing only in vibratory status; the Mite of Humanity being infinitely farther along the Path of Evolution, than the Mite of Metal still in its mineral, crystalized state. And both being the precious metal of the mundane world, both receive the greatest care, attention, affection and interest it is possible to give them.

Yet the precious Mite of Human Gold is merely the product of the essential metals of the Seed of its parents united, and which by the glorious spiritual process of putrefaction carried on in the maternal matrix, has been transmuted into the next higher step of its evolutionary career, that of basic protoplasm, on which the later structure of cellular tissues and substance has been built.

This brings us a bit nearer to an understanding of the language of the Hermetic Alchemists. With them, the following definitions existed:

1st. Sol Philosophorum, was the Pure, Living Alchemical Spirit of Gold, and the refined Essence of Heat and Fire.

2nd. Luna Philosophorum, was the Pure, Living Alchemical Spirit of Silver, and the refined Essence of Cold and Moisture.

3rd. The Green Dragon, was the stem and root of the radical essence of metals.

4th. The Black Dragon, was Death, PUTREFACTION, Change.

5th. The King, was Microposophus, Redness, Tiphareth, analogous to Gold and Sol.

6th. The Queen, was the Bride of Microposophus, Malkuth, analogous to Silver and Luna.

7th. The Cucurbite, was the boiler or alembic, for the purpose of Distillation.

8th. The Athanor, was the philosophical furnace for furnishing a graded heat.

9th. The Balnaeum Mariae, was a water bath or vessel of hot water, in which was placed a vessel to receive moist heat.

10th. The Balnaeum Arcuae, was the sand bath in which was placed a vessel to receive dry heat.

11th. The Philosophical Egg, was the oval vessel wherein any matter or liquid was placed to be acted upon, and WHICH COULD BE HERMETICALLY SEALED UP. Also the Head.

Herein we may find elements and instruments, which, when assembled, make possible the phenomena of human birth or the transmutation of the metallic Gold in the seed of the human parents, into the living tissue of the duplication of their species.

In the marriage of the King and Queen, Sol and Luna Philosophorum unite in the human Cucurbite for Distillation of their essential powers, until, slain by the Black Dragon of Death, Putrefaction and Change, the Green Dragon becomes transmuted into the Red Dragon, which last became Hermetically sealed up in the Philosophical Egg (Matrix or womb which closes after conception is fully accomplished); placed in the Athanor (of the human body) from which a graded heat is furnished.

In the understanding of these terms will be found the light of Alchemy, and it will be seen how the Alchemists concealed their knowledge of Nature's Laws and Processes under the protection thus afforded, at a time when the ecclesiastical powers used their utmost endeavours to suppress such intellectual and scientific progress. Not this alone, either -- the language of the alchemists concealed scientific truths, and above all -- SPIRITUAL TRUTHS -- which have since been lost by exoteric religious exegesis.

MINERAL GOLD & HUMAN GOLD In following the process of human conception, gestation and birth, we witness the transmutation of the purest and most precious metals into the purest and most precious protoplasmic Gold. Static Gold into Living, breathing, Gold. Gold in the bosom of Mother Earth is the purest metal known to man. Gold at the bosom of an Earthly Mother is the purest protoplasm known to man. Both are equal in purity.

But just as putrefaction brought about this wondrous phenomenon in the hidden recesses of the material matrix, so also does it continue its work when the pure Gold has been brought into the world. Nothing could be farther from the truth than the archaic and senseless doctrine of "original sin," so-called, -- for the Golden Mite of Humanity is indeed a "Lamb, spotless before the world." But let us continue to apply the process of Putrefaction.

The finest golden product of the jeweler's art loses it attractiveness and no longer compels interest and attention when by long usage, handling and age, it is tarnished by the soilation of many hands and associations. It becomes out of fashion as to shape, and though a certain value always inhers, sooner or later it goes the way of all gold before it — back to the smelter's hands. Does any one stop to question what has become of all the gold that has been taken out of the bosom of Mother Earth since Man first awoke to is true value and began to mine and fashion it? Gold is constantly mined, yet from time to time there is an absolute shortage. Yet great quantities have been taken from Mother Earth throughout the ages, and history informs us of its plenitude at the courts of ancient Kings, when huge vessels, and even in the days of old Egypt the chains of slaves, were made of it. What has become of it? Granting that much may still lay buried in long forgotten or unknown sites of ruined cities, that would not account for the total disappearance of so much of it.

Through the years, with some fluctuations as cited above, the amount of gold known to exist at a given time seems to maintain an approximate average.

The same analogy applies to Golden Humanity.

As the Golden Human Mite grows in body and estate, the process of Putrefaction is always attendant upon him. This is the inexorable law of Nature. Otherwise, being born comparatively perfect, without Putrefaction we should always remain perfect, and no credit would attach to any of us for bearing the struggles of life, triumphing over error (for none would exist), and we should all be negatively good -- lukewarm -- and Scripture gives no greater condemnation than the lukewarm. As we contact the world we become soiled by long usage, handling and age; we too become tarnished by the soilation of many hands and associations. We too become out of fashion as to shape, for each succeeding decade witnesses developments of physical shape according to the mandates of style and fashion -- or fashion-defying common sense -- and the desire for better bodies. No longer do we attract, or compel, and hold the attention awarded us in our infancy. The only interest displayed in us, is that which is given condescendingly to old age, the interest that attaches in a friendly way to wrinkles and weather-beaten bodies, sentimentally provided with a habitat while waiting our summons to enter upon the long, long journey.

Does anyone stop to question what has become of all the humanity that has existed upon the bosom of Mother Earth since Man first awoke to his true value and began to "Know Himself"? Yet great numbers of human beings have existed upon Mother Earth since the dawn of the Ages, and history informs us of the numbers that have gone down in wars, pestilences and famines aside from so-called "natural deaths."

Great numbers of human beings have come forth from their human mothers throughout the ages, yet from time to time absolute shortages of births are recorded in one country or another. In the end, the old, unfashionable bodies go the way of all bodies before them — back to the hands of the Nature's Alchemical Smelters.

Over the years, with some fluctuations, the number of human beings upon the earth at a given time, seems to maintain an approximate average.

Now and again some curio hunter or relic lover pulls out an old heirloom of golden jewelry, polishes it up and proudly exhibits it.

Now and again some ancestor worshipper resuscitates the oldest living member of his family tree, polishes him or her up in the latest fashionable modes, tries to transmute grandmother back into sweet young girlhood by dresses short at both ends, artificial hair, grease paint and facial kalsomine, and proudly exhibits her.

NATURAL TRANSMUTATION However, in the case of both the metal and the human relic or heirloom, inexorable Nature dooms, both to succumb to the activities of Putrefaction, not that either may be lost, but that the same approximate average of quantity and number of each may be maintained upon the Earth at all times, coming and going, being born into physical life, being born into spiritual life.

Much of the Gold of the earliest days of our planet's life is now in higher forms and stages of evolution. Much of the humanity of our earth has also passed into higher forms and stages of evolution. Gold -- in both cases; All is gold if we penetrate the disguise of Putrefaction and discover the approximate evolutionary stage of the instance under immediate observation.

ATOMIC STRUCTURES An atom of gold while given different chemical values and differing from the atomic weights of other substances, in its essential components is not materially different from any atom in the human organism. The Hermetic doctrine of the homogeneity of all substances holds true. We mentioned breathing earlier on as one of the processes by which human life was sustained.

The modicum of air which is breathed into the lungs of human beings or members of the vegetable Kingdom, vitalizing and energizing the blood or sap streams, is but a courser or rather denser manifestation of the same substance that is similarly breathed by the hierarchies of the inmost spheres, and in both cases is imparted the vital essence that emanates from CREATIVE POWER AND INTELLIGENCE.

PUTREFACTIO IS BOTH A BUILDER AND A DESTROYER In each case, the substance breathed or inhaled may be changeable as to density or specific gravity as science cognizes it, but it is imperishable. Only one process affects it -- Putrefactio, which frees the Divine vitality therein confined, like the energy confined in coal since the days of the Carboniferous era, that it may unite with and vivify the organism into which it has been breathed, but this process of Putrefactio while setting at liberty the vitality that energizes the receiving organism, also sets at liberty the atomic constituents that they may recombine according to the laws of affinity and so maintain at all times their general charge of vital power and energy.

POTENTIAL OF ATOMS Every atom in a molecule possesses the form and general attributes of the molecule whose mass they compose, and the matrix of which, they are. Likewise just as the Human Being is a microcosmic reproduction or reflection of the Macrocosmic Creative Power, so every atom in the Human Body is, infinitesimally, a Human Body in itself -- a world -- a universe. Every inseparable atom in the Human Body is analogous with every inseparable atom in the substance in Mother Earth, and under proper cosmic conditions is capable of being developed into a sphere even like unto the great sphere itself. Each atom revolves on its own axis, and each is capable of being brought to solar and cosmic proportions.

Now breathing is really the process of "gaping for life."

It is a process that is performed not only by every atom, but by every individual organ in the body as well. Minerals, Plants, Animals and Humans alike, breathe, in some definite form. The phenomenon of breathing is the resultant of the positive and negative, or active and passive conditions of the atomic structure of a given organism. From the atomic basis, the positive atoms may be said to become polarized and merged into their own negatives and vice versa. In the case of the air inbreathed, the sheath of negative electricity surrounding the atom disintegrates and is absorbed, leaving nothing in the lung cavity except the charge of positive electricity or vitality. As an illustration, the transformation of passive Water, into active Steam may be cited.

And as the action of positive & negative in the atomic structure results in the phenomenon of breathing, so the movements manifested thereby may also be said to be dual, and may be characterized as:

1. Female -- contractile, compressive and actively receptive.
2. Male -- in action expansive, disseminative.

FERMENTATION Thus, by the action of the involuntary muscles, the chest and lung cavities expand according to the requirements of the organism for aeriform vitality. The air inflows, and as the lung cavities gape for it, each pore expands to its utmost, actively and eagerly receptive. The opposite movement contractile and compressive, forces the air received into the utmost receptive orifice and then expels the residual product of the almost instant putrefaction.

Now note how these rhythmic movements represent a vast series of analogous movements throughout the entire organism. The lungs gape for air which inflows until it fills the entire chest cavity. The Blood gapes for its vitalizing content, the impulse being transmitted to the heart which in turn gapes for the inherent energy; the arteries gape, the capillaries, the veins. This rhythmic gape constitutes the pulse and in good health and balanced force or equilibrium it stimulates another complete series of gapes, that of the stomach for vitalizing food, the digestive and intestinal organs for the partially digested content. The mouth gapes; contact with the food sets in operation another set of nerves and muscles and the jaws close, mastication is effected and in the crunching and digesting of the food content, as stated previously, the "INHERENT, VITALIZING ESSENCES ARE OUTBORN FROM THEIR ATOMIC WOMBS."

Thus the entire Human Body or organism is a veritable womb of force, that which into which force enters, and that from which force is born. Verily it is a kingdom "which passeth understanding." While the process of gaping for food is in mind, consider how truly the Human Body presents the illustration of the Purgatory through which every soul must pass.

Into the human stomach infinitesimals of solar energy or "sols" enter, encast in food. But in their passing through this place of darkness by the fires of combustion they are released as "spirits from prison", and "redeemed" if found entitled to "sit in the holy place." Such become the "supreme Lords," in the Brain, reigning therein as stars in the firmament; others take their places as "living stones" in the organs of the body to which their evolutionary status entitles them. Others however, will be "swallowed up and consumed by the Great Dragon to be cast down into the place of outer darkness."

I have dwelt at some length on these two Instructions, upon the subject of Putrefaction, for despite its importance, the orthodox concept of it is such as to repel at first consideration rather than to attract. But when we once detect its real significance, we find ourselves in the presence of one of Nature's greatest mystical processes and Putrefaction stands revealed as the process of freeing the Divine Energy that it may further the progress of evolution.

In our next Liber we will deal with "Combustio", the seventh and last of the doctrinal exegeses we will interpret alchemically.

Q U E S T I O N S

Why did the alchemists conceal their teachings in such recondite language?

What is your concept of Fermentation; its nature and necessity?

What would be the situation if there was no Putrefaction?

Dear Friend

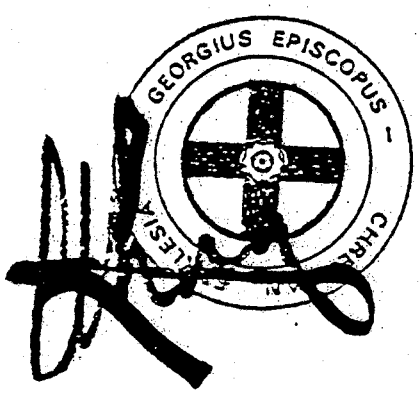
This lecture is a further variation of the previous one; it deals with the same subject in a different way.

We do not have to sit and meditate upon opening our Chakras as many groups do because these centres are open already to the expression of life within us.

What the lecture really shows is that we should transmute the already existing crystallised forms of the Divine Pattern into Spiritual Realities. For example, since the Cosmic Drama of the Christ is the Archetypal pattern of our bodily temple we are able to learn and become aware of our immortality by spiritualising the seeming transient ideas which constitute our physical nature. Because this is the truth regarding the real make-up of man we are in error to consider any other system based upon speculative philosophies. As we have said, the Cosmic Pattern is already known by our Elder Brothers and to ignore them and go our own way is courting disaster.

Purity and Truth is the only sure way to spiritual enlightenment.

With all blessings
Yours sincerely



Within your personality, that vesture fearfully and wonderfully made in the image of the Divine Mysteries of God, you will find the drama of the Book of Revelation continually taking place. But you must remember that this drama is taking place upon the seven regions of Being simultaneously, therefore each act of the drama has its own Key which will turn seven times before the final Mystery is revealed to you. This Key is applicable to all your Sacred writings no matter what religion, century or age.

When we come to deal with your personality which is called the "Scroll", having seven seals upon it, meaning that the physical body has seven force-centres through which life radiates the creative power giving to the personality life and consciousness. The curious expression of being 'written inside and on the back', this refers to the great sympathetic system of the body, having for its seat the pituitary seal which is located between the lobes of the cerebrum and the cerebellum in the head, whilst the cerebro-spinal axis has for its seat the pineal gland or seal which is located between the eyebrows, sometimes called the Third Eye of the Seer.

The methods of vivifying these seals are very clearly shown in the Drama of Jesus the Christ and the journey of Jesus from Bethlehem down to Egypt and his return to Jerusalem and the various miracles which were performed along the Jordan are the veiled instructions to the aspirant who wishes to become Illumined by the Fiery Power of the Soul. When this Power is awakened it rushes with a spiral movement through the whole body like liquid fire and on its upward rush towards the brain it vivifies each of the seals in its turn, the seals are opened, as it is given in REVELATIONS of John of Patmos (Patmos here refers to the thalamus in the head, it is called the Mount of God or the Soul).

In the body is the pneumogastric nerve which runs downward through the marrow of the spinal cord and branches out into the body to distribute the Fiery Power to the lungs and solar plexus, it is the passage of prana or breath into the lungs via the branches of the trachea or windpipe. Breath in Greek means 'ghost' hence we get the term 'descent of the Holy Ghost' and when at the age of twelve years, this breath unites with the two potencies of creative substances, that from the pineal seal, called Joseph and that of the pituitary seal called Maria. This descends down the two cords of the vagus nerve, which are extensions of the pineal and pituitary seals, one on each side of the spinal cord, and they cross the great 'strait' at the 12th dorsal vertebrae, and then down into 'Egypt where our Lord is crucified'. Hence united they return up to the semi-lunar ganglion nerve in the spine and thence into the Manger seal at Bethlehem, there the Divine Drama is enacted and 'Jesus is conceived of the Holy Ghost' - this simply means that the two fluids from the thalamus blended with the prana of the body have entered into the solar plexus and Jesus - the creative force is formed, when it is saved becomes the Christed One.

For a better understanding of this drama which takes place within the body of man; the Tree of Life is the branches of the pneumogastric nerve flooding the whole body with life, and the seven Lights of the body or candlesticks are the centres of the Divine Light of the Soul and the great Light between the branches of this Tree is your own immortal Soul, look at your thermometer, the lower part of the bowl which could be called the Dead Sea, or the Lake of Asphaltum (Clauda Equina in the body) in which lies the congealed mercury or quicksilver, which may be refined and raised by heat. The quick-silver is actually the crude sexual force and when this force is saved or redeemed by purification of the body, the rate is changed and at the correct moment, the Fiery Power within this force is released and will rise to the top of the spinal cord, thus the mercury rises up through the 33 vertebrae and goes over the top of the head and out through the tomb when the stone is rolled away, the entrance to the tomb is the suture between the two halves of the skull bones. It will be seen that if you allow your sex force to become refined it will rush up through the pneumo nerve, up through the spinal cord, into the seals, causing them to rotate and then up through the thalamus reaching the shade of the cerebrum or Shadow of the Most High.

You open the seals of the body by returning one-tenth of your substance to the pineal seal then into the upper brain which is called the 'Divine enduring substance' as Paul gives it. If this substance is saved from being wasted in generation and is offered as a willing sacrifice to the Most High, here referring to the Divine Soul, for it is We who use the cerebellum and reside in the secret place of the Most High, which is given in the Voice of the Silence when speaking of the Real Self resting 'Under the wings of the Great Bird' for the feathery convolutions shown in the cerebrum may well be compared to the feathers of a bird. 'Whatsoever a man thinketh in his heart so is he' can be now clearly seen to refer to the cerebellum which is the seat of thought and it is here that the Divine Man dwells,* 'He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty' - 91st Psalm. It is from this place in the anatomy of the brain that comes the 'oil' or 'ointment' - the two precious substances blended together which fructifies the brain of man.

The journey of this precious ointment is down the two nerves of the spinal cord (Jordan) thence to the solar plexus (Bethlehem) where it unites with the Breath and the Son of God is born from the Most High and then pass by the Dead Sea or Sacrum into generation to be crucified by the human passions in Egypt and remain there for twelve years before returning to Jerusalem or the cerebellum and disputes with the Doctors (the animal forces in the body) and then disappears into the thalamus. From then we hear no more of Jesus, because the whole of one's thought is directed towards material life.

* The Heart and Cerebellum are linked by way of the Vagus (Vaganti or Wandering) Nerve and is the 'telephone link' from 'The Golden Man' in the Right Ventricle of the Heart Ed.

When you have decided that material life does not bring you the joys, powers, wealth and happiness which you once sought, you begin to turn away from the material and seek the sacred place of the Most High. The very fact of the thought of man turning from the material to the spiritual has the tendency to quicken the Fiery Power within the sacrum at the base of the spinal cord. It begins to stir into activity, in other words Jesus now begins to make the journey up the spinal cord (Jordan) towards his deliverance.

Now let us take you into the secrets of your own Self, using the life of Jesus as our guide. This life is not only the life of one man which was supposed to have happened some 2,000 years ago, it is also your life here and now. Jesus then represents your sex force and the Christ is the oil or fire which is located in the semen and just like an automobile, the cerebellum the petrol tank, the solar plexus is the speedometer, and the spinal cord, is the passage-way from the oil tank. Woe be to you if you are out of oil as you will be if you continue to go down to generation. But if the quintessence of richness is kept with- in the body - when it is not wasted in riotous living - it will ascend the spinal cord, rising ever higher, lighting the various lamps (seals) as it moves upwards, until it reaches the heart of the Holy of Holies, the optic thalamus, vivifying it, and revealing the Divine Life, a glowing and scintillating Jewel of Glory reflecting the light of your own Supreme Self. It causes the vibrations of your Divine Soul to flood the human temple, the barriers are swept aside to receive the vibrations of the Soul which are translated into Wisdom and Light; the human Soul has been released from the tomb of matter and ascends to his Father which art in Heaven, the Shadow of the Most High.

The cerebrum whose convolutions receive all the vibrations from within and without transmits them to the thalamus within, passing them to the grey matter of the brain there to be translated into terms of the senses. The thalamus is the stone which was rejected by the builders and is called the Petra or Peter, and will, if not imbued with the Divine Light, become atrophied. The spinal cord can be likened to the stem of a Lotus. From this the Old Testament legend can be explained by saying that Lot's wife looked back to generation and became a Pillar of Salt. The man-semen has the odour of a fish and tastes like fish. Jesus was called Dagon meaning fish and he called his disciples - Fishers of Men.

What we are hinting at through these pages is simply this, there is within you a seed, which if saved and given up to the Highest will redeem you from the lower self. This seed is the Seed of Jesse (or Esse) which if it be lifted up will lift all men up. If instead you will waste this substance in riotous living the natural sequence of this will be to cause a deficiency or wasting away of the grey matter of the brain, for the Seed should be lifted up one-tenth (tithe) every 29½ days: it has been wasted in Egypt, the land of generation and the only way in which you can really attain Illumination is by returning one of the Seeds every 29½ days to the brain in the 'one way whereby you may be saved - Jesus Christed and crucified!'

The Seed or oil of the semen is carried up the 'strait and narrow way' of the spinal cord (Jordan) and is crucified at the place of Calvary (Pons) in the skull. This will then cause the sun and moon to stand still, the positive and negative forces within the body are balanced, the earth shall open and those who are 'dead' (incarnated) shall rise and walk and the temple veil shall be rent in twain, the final barrier between the pons and the thalamus is broken, and you are then free to enter and depart as you will from the tomb of the body.

Jesus, the Divine Seed or Word, was put in 'swaddling clothes' or covered and the nine mineral salts in the Medulla Oblongata, through which the two parents pass or flow on the way down the two vagus nerves, are carried along in sufficient quantities to form the crust or swaddling clothes which protect the 'Precious Oil' that is finally released when the Seeds are collected in the net on the top of the pons. This fishing on the right hand side or positivity of living, will cause this net to break and you will have a marvellous draft of fishes. The atomic spark plugs of the brain are then crossed by this oil and the seed is crucified, just as Jesus says:'Father remove this cup (or cover) from me.'

It will now be seen that the pineal seal and the pituitary body secrete the positive and negative substance, the milk and honey of the seed is crucified between them, the oil which is then set free ascends to thepineal seal and Illumines it. These two fluids being on either side of the pons or Golgotha are likened to the Two Thieves, one of whom is made to say 'Lord remember me when thou cometh into Thy Kingdom'. The reply, 'This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise' refers obviously to the final Union and ascension of these two fluids.

Finally, to understand the methods of opening the seals, one has to remember that the vagus nerve is called the 'Tree of Life', and the oil or sap which will flow down the plexus of nerves that branch off the main nerve is deposited in the manger or mouth of the fish, this then forms the Seed or semen of the Tree. This Seed, formed of the Esse of God, is named the Son of God.

The Drama can only be safely handled if you obey the Principles of the Disciplina Arcana before you attempt this procedure.

THE ELIXIR OF LIFE

"For with thee is the fountain of life: in thy light we see light."
Psl. xxvi: 9.

THE search for an "Elixir of Life" has been the occupation of many men of parts thruout the centuries. It has not been a will-o-the-wisp for the weak-minded and the impractical idealist. The search for an elixir of life has engaged the serious attention of hardy and intrepid adventurers, explorers and eminent men of science.

It has been said, most truthfully, that the practically universal belief in immortality is the greatest proof of immortality and that man's ability to conceive of it is further proof of his capacity for it. The same idea may, with equal truth and propriety, be applied to the elixir of life.

Throughout the entire world, and even among the aborigines, will be found persons of intellectual and mental prominence, who are assured of the existence of an elixir of life, of some sort, and who seek it either by scientific method or thru primitive cult magic.

Both the Panacea and the Elixir of Life have been associated with the two polarities of the human mind sheath, the higher and the lower, but such associations are insufficient and are given only at certain stages of instruction, for the student must first cover certain preliminary ground work before attempting to grasp the deeper abstractions.

In lesson No. [illegible] of this present series, it will be found that the Elixir is said to be a liquid. This would seem quite natural considering the use of the word "elixir" which is usually applied to fluids, but in alchemical usage words are frequently used in other than their accepted meanings. However, we may, with some mental amplifications, regard the Elixir truly as a liquid or fluid. In this connection, it is notable that all thru Holy Writ we find, as in our subject text, life or its sources spoken of as fluid.

In the Scriptures of all great world faiths we find frequent allusions to fountains of life, waters, springs, wells and rivers of life, everlasting life, eternal life, immortal life and regenerated life, but always in a manner implying, if not actually specifying, fluid conditions. We must not forget that the beautiful State of Florida was discovered by Ponce de Leon while engaged in the search for a "Fountain of Youth."

Academically, the Elixir Vitae (Elixir of life) is defined as an "imaginary liquid or soluble substance by means of which the baser metals were to be changed into gold; the philosofer's stone. An imaginary cordial (Lat. cor—heart) supposed to be capable of sustaining life indefinitely. Also, from the Arabic El Iksir, El—the, and Iksir, Philosofer's Stone. (Greek, xeros—dry)."

The Elixir and the Philosofer's Stone are two entirely distinct and separate things but as the functions of each were assumed by many to be quite similar, the words have been applied indiscriminately as synonyms. Encyclopædic information is as meagre as other academic sources with the single exception that it bears out our statement that the Elixir and the Stone are two different things. The Britannica states that the Elixir "had a wider meaning than 'philosofer's stone', and the name was given 'to the substance which would indefinitely prolong life'."

Is it possible that such a liquid as a true elixir of life could be prepared? Is it possible that logical, well-balanst men would devote their time to the pursuit of such an apparent chimera? Well, the answer of history is—yes. Records show references to such alleged preparations among the ancients and the medievalists were not far behind them. The Age of Alchemy stimulated the search. It was in the period 1693-1768 that Bestuzhev-Ryumin, Alexius Petrovich the famous Russian grand-chancellor and statesman, invented his marvelous "drops", tinctura toniconervina Bestucheffi. The recipe for these drops was stolen by the French Brigadier Lamotte, who introduced it at the French Court as Elixir d'Or. He made his fortune thru it.

Nor should we forget or omit the wonderful paste (Gr. xeros-dry) or dry liquid made by the Carthusian monks, the Elixir or Boule d'acier, a mineral paste or salve with marvelous efficacy. This was brot out way back in 1137, later in 1676 and finally in 1840. It is known that in some of the Tibetan provinces, the natives have an elixir that acts magically to revive, rejuvenate and even to prolong life to a remarkable extent. British official observers have attested this fact. The only reason the elixir does not produce still greater effects is due to the unsanitary condition of the natives themselves, for they will take baths at the hot springs which occur in some places in Tibet but otherwise refuse to wash their bodies at all. This, together with their national diet which is far from the vegetarianism asserted by some occult idealists who know nothing about the real Tibet, produces unhealthy conditions in an otherwise rugged stock that reaches a remarkable old age in some sections of the country.

In our own times, adrenalin has workt wonders on hearts that have ceast to beat, and early in 1929 the Russian professors Moulabkov and Andriev in the presence of Dr. Eugene Klotz, noted German savant, injected their secret elixir "ringer-lokke" into the body of a man who had been dead twenty-nine hours. After several hours, reactions were noted, heat developt and sound issued thru the throat. Actual revival was accomplisht and then the body relapst into its former condition. But the experiment proved the power of resuscitation inherent in certain potencies.

Research in the domain of endocrinology has shown that our bodily alchemists, the glands, have a wonderful power and process of secreting infinitesimal potencies that actually make and shape our character, personality and individuality and accomplish our successes or our failures in life according to our reactions to the stimulus supplied, which operates thru the autonomic vegetative system principally. The essence of these secretions is called, in each instance, the hormone. Nobody has seen a hormone but the name is given to a something that exists inherently in the individual or special secretion.

Then there is the now famous piece of chicken heart that has been kept in a proper solution for years, by Dr. Carrel, and which has perpetuated itself thru so many generations that its substance has, continually, to be reduced. This experiment has proved the capacity of tissue to endure indefinitely and continue to grow if kept in a healthy state. Health then seems to be the sine qua non and no amount of elixirs can be effective unless and until the subject takes the proper care of his health.

One thing in particular impresses itself upon the observing student and that is, that health is a pre-requisite for the activity of any restorative agency. Health means freedom from dis-ease. Health is a state of stability, or ease, equilibrium and only where the component elements and forces of a given organism or matter are in equilibrium will there be found true health. Health, or freedom from dis-ease means wholeness and wholeness not only implies the presence or completion of all requisite parts, faculties, functions and factors, but something vastly higher. For completion in the true sense of the word implies perfection, at least in its comparative sense and usage. And such a status implies not only wholeness, but that for which wholeness is a true synonym—holiness.

The Elixir Vitae or Elixir of Life is then, theoretically at least, a vital essence capable of exercising notable rejuvenating and preservative powers if applied rightly. If applied in dis-ease it would restore to health which we have seen is a state of mental and physical equilibrium. If applied while the subject or artist-neofite is in health, it would operate to prolong a healthy (in every sense of the word) life indefinitely. Furthermore, it is a matter of record that essential elixirs have been prepared in many races over a wide geografical area that have seemingly possest the wonderful properties ascribed to the Elixir wholly or in part, for a duration of time exceeding the norm.

On the above postulate, we may premise a vital elixir that can present the two aspects or polarities we seek, as occult students, to find in every theorem under consideration. First, we may assume that Our Elixir can be prepared externally or exteriorly and applied as a synthesis of essential virtues in liquid form to the human organism from without. In such cases it can be used to rectify errors of life which have resulted in sickness, ill health or dis-ease, and, if applied to the human organism while the organism is in a status of true and complete health, Our Elixir would normally operate to prolong the life of the organism beyond the norm, at least.

Second, Our Elixir, being liquid or fluid in its nature, can be also prepared within and applied to the human organism in its entirety from within. If properly applied from within, its potencies will become vastly more effective because they will enjoy a natural distribution and application as vix medicatrix naturae. As a matter of fact, we are, individually, distilling and unconsciously applying the Elixir of Life or Elixir Vitae every day, but with characteristic human ignorance, selfishness, and thoughtlessness, WE ARE WASTING THE ELIXIR DAILY. We are wasting it by the scattering and dissipation of our energies and potential powers and our frivolous use of the magically wonderful forces operative thru the human organism, mentally and physically.

Never before in the history of the human family have the essences constituting the true Elixir Vitae been so carelessly wasted and tost aside as at the present time when he sole thought of the normal human microbe seems to be the desire "for a thrill," for "something with a kick to it", indicating the necessity for mental or physical condiments as stimuli to jaded and ennuied minds and nerves.

Investigation, so far as has been possible, of the nature and composition of the several elixirs, which have been produced synthetically by artificial or laboratory process and which have developt any medicinal, restorative or revitalizing properties, has shown the same essential characteristics as are revealed by analysis of the secretions of vital glands in the human organism. Nature, the Great Alchemist, has her private laboratory in each human individual, and, for all we know, in lower organisms as well, in view of the remarkable tenacity of life indicated by some of the lower forms.

Chemists and biological scientists have been able to compound synthetic endocrine secretions that have had as good and sometimes even better effect than the same potencies developt in the human individual by his own glands. The effects produced by these potencies have been little short of marvelous. Cretins have been transformed into mental efficients and remained so as long as the supply of organotherapeutic food lasted and then relapst. Malformed, human monstrosities have in many notable instances been transmuted into normal creatures by the proper feeding or injections. All these miracles show the way to a constructive method that will be amplified by later knowledge and enable scientists to remodel the human machine and develop desired characteristics more or less at will. And all these miracles have been effected by application from without of an elixir vitae in a true sense, of which we know, at present, only part of the formula. Perhaps the knowledge of the remainder of the formula is dependent upon our further and more complete knowledge of the structure and essence of protoplasm, still the mystery of science.

But note this fact, fellow student; all the miracles that have been effected by the exterior application of synthetic elixirs have also been effected from within without the use of any synthetic elixirs at all. Hence we must conclude one thing, namely, that, associated with the elixir produced within the human organism or the elixir produced synthetically without the human organism and subsequently introduced into it by proper method, there is an active factor that is liquid or fluid in its permeating capacity but not subject to chemical analysis by any presently known process.

The cretin, naturally, cannot exert any effort of his own for he is mentally incapable of making conscious effort, but there is that within him, his sub-conscious or autonomic vegetative faculty, that is not subject to mental abberation, and does respond to and associate itself with either the synthetic elixir applied from without, plus his own contribution, or else to a similar force exerted upon him on the mental plane, but also externally to him.

The present weak link in the chain of research is the failure of academic and spiritual scientists to unite their forces. The TRUE ELIXIR VITAE IS A UNION OF CHEMICAL AND SPIRITUAL FORCES. They cannot be divorst. There is a very pertinent reason for this fact. Man, as known to all spiritual scientists, is a complex structure. He has a visible, physical body and invisible Etheric and Astral bodies. The Etheric body acts as the link between the Physical and its matrix, the Astral.

The Physical body has a series of organs, which we can dissect and study in the physical laboratory. The Astral and Etheric bodies have—not physical organs—but spiritual centers of energy which we term the psychic centers of force. The physical organs, in, by and of themselves would be mere masses of tissue and inert. They are the physical projections of, and are motivated by, the spiritual centers of force-energy inherent in the invisible Etheric and Astral bodies or instruments of man.

Spirit cannot react directly upon matter, nor matter upon spirit. There must be a connecting medium that transfers and interprets the reactions produced by each factor. Such a medium exists in the "something"—possibly that which we call the hormone that serves as the "link between" the physical organs and the spiritual energy centers which motivate them.

This hormone, to use a word now commonly used and recognized but as yet little understood, IS BOTH SPIRITUAL AND MATERIAL AND IT ACTS IN A FLUIDIC MANNER. Without the hormone the secretion in which it occurs is useless. With the hormone, the secretion reacts in ways that determine our individual mental, intellectual, spiritual and physical outlook. Therefore as they exercise a shaping and formulating power over the mind, they in turn can be acted upon by mind, hence their peculiar character as keys that lock the visible into synchronous activity with the invisible, the physical with the spiritual.

How is it that man can have such a magical potency within him and still know practically nothing about it? As yet the knowledge of endocrinology as the new science is called is known only to medical researchers, and known well to but few of them. The answer to our question is simple. For ages upon ages, since he crystallized his physical body from its astral mould, Man has turned his senses outward. He seeks earnestly everywhere in the whole wide world for that which is only within himself. In vain have the Philosofers warned man, from Thales down to the present time, "to seek within himself, and if he find not that which he seek within himself, he will never find it without him."

But Man is a stubborn creature. To him it has seemd far easier to search the world around for what he requires than turn his vision inwardly upon himself. The process of turning one's vision inwardly is not easy for the present wave of human evolution for it has departed far from its original status. Such practical introspection can, however, be performed, if we focus our search upon that point which is the Real Self within, the Divine Watcher that never slumpers or sleeps, enthroned in the heaven of the physical body.

One by one, as we pass thru the septenary divisions of human expression in an individual career, certain keys become no longer effective and others assume greater prominence according to the requirements of the period. This is because Our Elixir has many tinctures or colors and each tincture represents a specific degree or phase of activity and exercises a definite potency that confers upon us the important characteristics of the age which we, individually, have attained.

We are distilling, separating, isolating the constituents of Our Elixir, individually, day by day, but the result so far has been and is potent and operative only to the extent that our cultural status enables our sub-conscious to co-operate with it in the vital functions it performs. As individuals undertake the process of the preparation of their Elixir consciously, even tho only in part, phenomenal results manifest that cannot be concealed. The moment an individual might begin to work upon his individual Elixir in full consciousness of so doing, results surpassing anything heretofore recorded may be expected.

We are satisfied to let our physical bodies take care of themselves. And when, by neglect and carelessness, they run down like worn-out or damaged machines, we take them to a doctor for overhauling and refitting. Then we go out and repeat the process. Immortality, prolonged life, revitalization, do not lie in this Path, my friend. We take less care of our bodies than we do of our prize cattle and household pets.

The real religion of the future will urge Man to care for his physical body as never before, and not only seek to produce a beautiful, healthy, well-regulated machine, but a spiritualized machine as well. Then the Elixir Vitae will be working in full force and the race supermen will begin to arrive. Minerva and Venus will unite with Jupiter and Apollo; Wisdom and Beauty will unite with Divine Benignity and Divine Grace, to produce offspring that will lay the foundations of a race of beings as yet uncomprehended.

How can we begin to work upon Our Elixir? Simply by making, first of all, a careful study of the physical requirements necessary to keep us physically fit. Study dietetics, not according to fad notions of cults, 'isms and 'ologies, but according to common sense which is quite another thing. You may require meat in certain amounts. Another may find it best to discard meats, totally or for a time. All of us require more natural fruit juices as pure solvents. Don't be a slave to calories, but study the values of proteins and carbohydrates and the legumes and experiment to find just what keeps up the right amount of steam and energy in you and cut off all excess food supply. The brain is the thief of the body and it requires a certain number of grains of chemical constituent per day and will have those grains at any cost. Beyond a certain amount of nourishment, the body cannot tolerate and all excess will go to fats.

On the other hand, do not starve the Body. Ethereal and spirituelle types are worthless as active factors in the world's work and the world about you requires men and women who can act the part of men and women, strong, vigorous, efficient. Groom your body. It is the only one you will wear in this incarnation and you ought to take as good care of it as you do your clothes. Then, when you've fixt the notion of the proper care of your body and the avoidance of excesses and dissipation of energy unnecessarily, spiritualize your body by mentally holding the thought that everything that you do, everything that you take into the body, has a two-fold value, a physical value and a spiritual value. Impregnate the food digesting and being absorbed into your body with the thought of its spiritual essence and power and then when you have done so consistently for a month, take notice of your attitude in all directions.

If you have begun to work upon yourself as roughly outlined above, you will have been working consciously upon your individual

Elixir and it will have begun to work upon you to an extent that will be readily appreciable, and once you observe and credit the result to its proper source, you will have little temptation to revert back into your aboriginal condition. You will have become "born again" not in the mother's womb, it is true, but thru the waters of an interior spiritual baptism that regenerate physically, mentally and spiritually.

It has been said that "We are what our glands make us." It would be more accurate if it read that we are what we permit our glands to make us, for our free-will exercises sway to our betterment or to our depreciation, according to the intelligence we bring to bear. Ordinarily, our glands will go on by themselves and produce a being that causes the being himself to wonder as to the why and wherefore of his existence. It seems never to occur to the individual being that he might have taken an active hand in the shaping process himself. He blames or credits early training, boyhood environment, youthful influence, home conditions and lack or surfeit of education for what he appears to be.

Having never been taught consciously to work upon his Elixir, and running the risk of facing ridicule and contempt if by any chance he inadvertently learned that there was such a thing and dared to enquire about it, Man has left his Elixir to run wild, and work upon him unrestrainedly. Force is destructive unless and until intelligently directed and applied. Our Elixir is a phase of most potent energy. It can be and is destructive unless controld thru reasonable methods of living consciously undertaken and maintained.

It is not the purpose of these lessons to cater to those who rule their lives by fads or the absurd pretences to scientific knowledge made by pseudo-occult "orders" and enterprises. These lessons point the way to those who use their God-given senses discriminately and intelligently, not as blind followers of equally blind leaders, but honestly and sincerely attempting to use the facilities provided by modern science in determining what is best for themselves individually in reconstructing and improving their conditions.

It may seem to you at first thought, as rather far fetcht, that we can impregnate our food with any influence from our thought. Is it really unreasonable? How many times have you heard it said of some one in connection with some important or special work—"he put his best thought into this," or "he built himself into his work": it shows the type and kind of man he was." Again, when you have stood in the presence of some splendid work of art, or read an unusually fine work of literature, or noed some wonderful discovery or advance in science, have you not felt the personality and even the presence of the artist, author or brain worker present and enshrined in the work? We verily build ourselves into whatsoever we set our minds upon in all sincerity.

If we have set our minds upon consciously preparing Our Elixir Vitae we may be quite well assured that we shall build into our food, our intellectual pabulum and our environment those factors and ingredients that shall enshrine the force, power and potency of our thought as an active agent therein. A few experiments will prove our statements to your own satisfaction. Think of lemons and spices and note the flow of saliva. Think of perfume, any idea of perfume at all, and you will sense the smell of some kind of perfume even tho you cannot identify it. Think of some specific perfume with which you are acquainted and you will feel your sense of smell react to the mental impulse—the thought involved. Think hard of acid stomach and you'll cause a flow of fluids to your stomach that won't leave you in any doubt as to the success of your experiment. Thought alone has compeld the reaction of the body fluids in these experiments. Thought will impregnate your food and cause reactions therein thru perfectly normal chemical processes that will make your Elixir if you are working with that result in mind.

Our individual success with the preparation of our Elixir will depend largely upon the real attitude of mind with which we undertake it. Do we desire an unusually long life because we love life? "He that loveth his life shall lose it" (John xii: 25). Do we seek unusually long life for the sheer good we can do and the happiness we can convey to others? "Whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it" (Luke, ix; 24). For, what indeed, as the Scripture sayeth, is a man advantaged if he gain the whole world, and lose himself, or be cast away (Luke, ix; 25)?

Psychology and physiology have united in their discovery and affirmation of the truth that anger and every other mental mood, as well as those mental attitudes of the opposite nature, distil definite chemicals and precipitates within the human organism that affect our ordinary physical status and even our senses, permanently or temporarily. People have gone blind thru rage and some of them have stayed blind. Apopletic and other strokes have been precipitated thru tremendous mental attitudes. These things are not secrets. Every well informed person knows them to be true.

It seems to be human nature, however, to ascribe the activity of such moods to the other fellow, forgetting, conveniently, that because we too are human, we are subject to a greater or lesser degree to exactly the same conditions. The point is, that our moods compel our fluids to a wonderful degree. Happiness and laughter send the finest digestive fluids to the stomach and intestines. Our moods are resultant upon our thoughts. Thought, then, in the last analysis, is all important in our bodily economy. We have shown that thought can influence anything in or connected with us. This includes the food stuffs we take aboard and from which our glandular lieutenants distil and distribute our individual Elixirs.

Let us look a bit further. Academically, an elixir is said to be, medicinally, "a sweetened, aromatized alcoholic preparation holding smal' quantities of medicinal substances in solution; formerly a compound tincture." No definition can be truer. The Elixir is a medicine because it revitalizes, rejuvenates and prolongs life. It is sweet because in it are contained the essences of all that is sweet and clean in our lives. Our thoughts are clean only as they serve as instruments or vehicles for the manifestation o the various personal virtues of integrity, honor, personal responsibility, moral accountability, charity, kindliness and brotherhood both of human beings and of animals,—our younger brethren in evolution.

Our Elixir is aromatized, for it has all the blends of perfume developt by the subtle aura of a healthy, clean, aura. Our Elixir is alcoholic for alcohol represents clear, transparent, subtle spirit and Our Elixir tho liquid, is essentially spirit. Our Elixir is a preparation for we prepare it consciously or unconsciously from the ingredients we make a chemical part of our bodies. Our Elixir holds small quantities of medicinal substances in solution, actually, not figuratively, for Our Elixir is something that does, most potently, exist and has substance, and its substance is made up of the substances of elements that are medicinal, for they are essential extracts and each has constructive powers of its own.

Our Elixir is, in very truth, a "compound structure." It is compound because it contains many elements. It is a structure because it is built up from several materials. It will not be an exaggeration nor will it require a stretch of the imagination to understand that Our Elixir is the Essence of Ourselves, mentally, physically, spiritually. It is physiological, psycologic and psychic in its inherent nature and function. It operates in two worlds, the physical and the spiritual. The Elixir of life is the essence of life and therefore in a subtle sense, life itself. That is why it applies to prolong life, for we add the essence of what we have to the mass of what we have.

Have you ever made a visit to any one of the great pharmaecutical manufacturers? If so, you will have observed an interesting feature. With rare exceptions, no given medicinal preparation is made complete in any one department. A master mind holds the complete formula to any given preparation. This formula is given out only in parts to each of the several departments that may be concerned in its preparation or manufacture. Materials are drawn from the stock room for each department. No one department known what the other department has done to what comes to it, or what the department to which they will send it, will do with it. In the last department, the results of all the previous departments are assembled and the finishing work is performed.

This is a grafic illustration to the story of Our Elixir. The Mastermind, the Ego, alone has the complete formula. The materials are gathered by each of the several vital organs in the body. Each does its own individual share of the work of secretion. As each finishes its work, the result is thrown into the blood or lymph circulation and distributed to the particular customer who requires it. These results unite in assembly, and their individual hyper or hypo function determines character, mentality, ability, success of failure in various avenues of outward expression and inward vision. Taken in their united totality, they constitute the compound structure we call the Elixir.

If we follow the path of science alone, we may be able to make the Elixir synthetically with ever increasing degrees of success. Its functions will, however, be limited. If, on the other hand, we follow the spiritual path alone, we shall work effectively upon Our Elixir, but again, its functions will be limited. The physical and the spiritual must unite, as we have shown in the text of this instruction. Union of the physical and the spiritual is a well defined law. The exposition of this law was one of the principal reasons for the incarnation of the Christos, which, we have always been taught, united the Divine with the human elements.

Christian esoterism consists in attaining the mind of Christ to the most complete degree possible, and in this attainment we must learn the law of uniting the divine and human factors by uniting the material or, physical with the spiritual in all our undertakings. Not only are we to learn this particular, more important still—we are to practis it.

Those who are quite convinst that the whole idea of the Elixir Vitae is a chimera and an atavism from medievalism, are, of course. "within their rights" but they are turning their backs upon their own most vital constituent. It is from such groups, who enjoy the sunshine while all is fair, but bewail their afflictions when shadows fall, that those who get the least of the spirit of life and its happy responsibilities are recruited. The Elixir Vitae is one of the most objective and powerful facts in all human experience. But if we determine to seek it by the methods indicated in this instruction, first of all be honest with ourselves. Our thought must be right to start with. There is no use in trying to convince ourselves that we desire the Elixir for the benefit of humanity unless and until we are actually doing the best we can for humanity before beginning our effort.

Many of those who have proved their unselfishness without any specific knowledge of the Elixir have come into a happy consciousness and understanding of it unwittingly, for if our thought is right, constructive effort is bound to follow right lines of endeavor and show results eventually.

Respected Companions

Soon after we had prepared LIBER 47 we received a notice to call at the Post Office for a package too large to be placed in our box. Last Thursday we took delivery of the package and on opening it, a whoop of joy burst forth from our mouths — some of you must surely have heard it!

In that package was the entire set of translations of Saint-Martin's LYONS LECTURES which, you remember, we had started to carry some time ago but was interrupted because of translation problems.

The letter accompanying the translations reads as follows:

OSLO
Norway

"Dear Sâr Saccas,

Please find the 'Lyons Lectures' enclosed! Taking a sudden opportunity, I worked my way through the second half of the lectures quite quickly. They were a lot easier to work with since the thought of Saint-Martin becomes clearer as he advances through the series. The fundamentals laid down in the first three or four lectures are indeed the most difficult part. Also, the translator(s?) of the first English "proofs" seem to have had an easier task in spite of a couple of real misunderstandings. I have not seen the need to make more than a few notes, but if you think there is a need, then just give a signal when you return them to me for the final print out. Please make a thorough language check since I have taken some liberty. It would be very fine if you could do this as soon as possible and return them all to me, since I may have the time now that I won't get later on.

"Indeed it's fine to see the job finished and the first lecture in print, but — please! — dear friend & brother, don't make such a star out of me for the marginal service I have done to the College. I did read the first page of Liber 34 - and I saw my fourth exam in no. 35! Be aware that I am just an ordinary student although I like to give something in return for what I get. I am not "a scholar eminently qualified" nor, and by far, "a true initiate." Nice flowers but they drown me! If one day we meet, and I'd like to, it would be much better if you had a more correct idea about me. The credit for what has been achieved should go to the first translator(s) and not to that "final adjudicator" who's just been brushing though it all and making a few comments. My secretary, truly, has done as much of a job as have I, typing all those lectures without understanding the least. She's been marvellous all the way through.

"I have a very fine feeling about you and the College, and it has been a true pleasure to receive your communications as our work proceeded. Now the job is done, but I hope our communication will continue. I haven't yet sent in my proficiency exams since I wanted to be through with the lectures first, but I'll do my best from now on. If you have some more interesting work waiting, I'll be ready to welcome it towards the end of this year. My profane work is very demanding now, since I'm entering into new and higher functions.

"In the meantime, I pray God that he bless all your work of Light and the College! ....."

— O —

Well, nice words my friend, and we accept them with humility ... BUT a tree is known by its fruit ... and YOU can't get away from your produce! That's always the problem! What one does is always there in evidence!!!

So, dear Companions, you've heard the news! This Liber brings us to — Combustio — the seventh and last in the series of doctrinal exegeses we will interpret alchemically ... we will then either restart the LYONS LECTURES in the next Liber (49), or have a short pause with light refreshment before resuming. Which shall it be?

"Behold, how great a matter, a little Fire kindleth." - James 3:5

The traveller through the mountainous regions cannot fail to be impressed by the warning signs displayed so prominently during the summer and autumn, to tourists and smokers, against the careless use of matches and the production of sparks.

From the slightest spark often originates the great, sweeping, fiery blasts that have devastated whole forests and even villages and towns. So too, the traveller through the mountainous regions of the mental planes of spiritual science is confronted with the warnings of past experience against the sparks of mental and cosmic FIRE, for he knows that from the ABSOLUTE have come the tiny, embryonic, primordial sparks that are now — ourselves — sweeping, fiery blasts of humanity that have devastated whole nations and continents, and when one of these human sparks breaks away from the Hermetic unity of Humanity it becomes a flagrant source of destructive energy in itself.

THE DEVASTATION OF FIRE The devastating forest fire however, clears away primeval growths and prepares the earth for the march of civilization. The FIRE of Humanity clears the stage of earth from the primeval growths and accumulations of ignorance, superstition and bondage, for the progress of freedom, liberty and expansion of Mind, Body and Conscience.

Behold how great a matter a little FIRE from the Absolute kindleth. We ordinarily conceive of Divinity as a Circle enclosing Infinity. But we also conceive a Point in the center of that Circle as the focal nucleus from which radiates the Creative Energy of Divinity in every direction. Thus in truth we are able to say: "Behold how great a matter a LITTLE FIRE POINT kindleth, peopling a chaos with Cosmos, a Universe with Solar Systems; a Planet with Men and Microbes."

But the forest FIRE consumes, and many of the forests are no longer visibly existent. Their substance has been transmuted into other forms by the consuming FIRE.

"OUR GOD IS A CONSUMING FIRE" Likewise, "OUR GOD IS A CONSUMING FIRE," for as each human spark flares up for a brief moment in expression or incarnation, sweeping a considerable area of influence during the interim, the substance of its combustion is transmuted into other forms, while the LIFE, the VITAL FIRE ESSENCE OF GOD is consumed, devoured, assimilated, indrawn, or returned to the God of which it was, and is, and ever shall be, a part; consumed, or taken back into Himself, for future expressions of Himself. Thus the statement that our "God is a consuming FIRE," is simply another way of expressing the truth that in the end all Life re-enters His life. (Heb 12:29).

The old theological concept of God as a "consuming FIRE" was in keeping with the popular notion of God as a God of vengeance, revenge, hatred and punitive destructiveness. The word "consuming" may be interpreted literally; God DOES consume us — His sparks — HIMSELF, drawing us back into Him for a newer Life and CONTINUOUS EVOLUTION.

FLAME THE VISIBLE BODY OF FIRE It is essential that as students of the Sacred Science, we get the right idea of FIRE, that has been mentioned and explained so many times during these lectures of instruction. FIRE is the vital essence of Divine Life and Creative Energy. FLAME is but the visible body of FIRE. It is the result of combustio or the reaction of FIRE upon the Elements. Thus FIRE manifests:

(a) Visibly, in the process of combustio, as evidenced by the presence of Flame; and -

(b) Invisibly, without the presence of Flame, as evidenced by the products of combustio alone.

In this latter concept we learn the truth of the ancient doctrine of the "ever burning FIRE", the SACRED FIRE which was never extinguished. This is none other than the Divine FIRE which incarnates in every Human Form, ceaselessly burning therein, inextinguishable, for though we may ruin the earthly Temple wherein it burns, when that Temple is no longer habitable, the FIRE simply returns to its Divine Author and Source.

FIRE IN THE CONSECRATED ELEMENTS From this appreciated truth, came the symbolism delineated by the functions of the Vestals in the ancient temples, the doctrine of the Eternal FIRE, and the use of the Sanctuary Lamp common to many religions, but now used in the Roman, Greek and some Anglican Churches to indicate the Real Presence reserved in the Tabernacle on the Altar. What "Real Presence" ? Not the corporeal bodily presence of Divinity as ignorance has come to obscure the great truth embodied, but the Real Presence of the Eternal FIRE of the Absolute, the FIRE crystallized, epitomized and actually present in the incarnation of the Christos in our Planet as the Indwelling Spirit of Mother Earth, in the Elements after consecration.

That this is the real truth is shown by the words of the Master Jesus when he spoke of destroying the Temple and rebuilding it again in Three Days. JOHN 2:19 "Jesus answered and said unto them, Destroy this Temple, and in three days I will raise it up."

Then said the Jews, forty and six years was this Temple in building and thou wilt rear it up in three days?

BUT HE SPOKE OF THE TEMPLE OF HIS BODY.

Everywhere in the Bible, Old & New, God, Jesus, the Prophets and the Apostles speak of the Human Spark as the vital principle of the Human Temple. It is shown with exceeding clarity in the miracle recorded in Daniel Chapter three, regarding the burning fiery furnace of Nebuchadnezzar, the King of Babylon.

As often stated, occultism takes no cognizance of so-called "miracles" nor does it entertain them seriously for one moment. It is the duty of the occult student to seek the HIDDEN cause of every visible effect. In view of our teachings regarding FIRE, let us see how this apparent miracle which has been preserved in the Jewish scriptures may be understood.

CHALDEAN ORIGIN OF ANCIENT TEACHINGS In the first place it is of Chaldean origin, whence so many of the events recorded as relating to the Creation, the Flood, etc., have come. Chaldean mythos is essentially based upon definite occult and spiritual concepts, dating from a time when Humanity was much younger than now, and closer to its original source of separation from the higher anthropoids and mammals.

BABYLON, was the so-called "Mother of Nations" after and to a certain extent co-eval with EGYPT of which it was really a province.

Thus, Babylon, was the Mother, or Womb, represented in occultism by CHAOS. Incarnate in CHAOS before Creative Energy had become manifest was the KING, the ABSOLUTE.

From the KING or ABSOLUTE emanated the FIERY BLAST or mental concept of the KING'S Mind, bringing order out of Chaos.

The FURNACE is the Solar System, into which the Virgin Spirits after differentiation from the body of God are cast through Involution, to work out through evolution at the King's command, after the test by FIRE OF EXPERIENCE and incarnation.

The heating of the furnace, one seven times more than it was wont to be heated is the seven Evolutionary Globes, heated or acted upon by the Seven Elements (four known and three unknown to physical science) and the Seven Principles of Man, all of which can be altered or transmuted by FIRE.

The SERVITORS were the ancestors of the present Humanity now evolved to planes as "LORDS".

Into this "FURNACE" of the Solar System were thrown the Four Elements of "Spirits of the World" in the Solid (Earth), Fluid (Water), Gaseous (Air), and Fiery (Spirit) states.

From the combustio in the Alchemical Furnace thus described resulted the manifestations of FIRE, the THREE FIGURES, SHADRACH, MESHACH and ABED-NEGO, - HEAT, FLAME and LIGHT - which combining, showed to the KING his perfect expression in the FOURTH FIGURE WHICH IS "LIKE THE SON OF GOD" — surely a strange statement for Jewish Scriptures if it is to be taken literally.

But the words mean just what they indicate; the FOURTH FIGURE WAS the "Son of God" meaning the Son of the King, the Absolute when understood Hermetically: MAN, the EXPRESSION OR SON OF GOD, MADE IN HIS IMAGE. Therefore indeed does the King hail them after the test by FIRE as servants of the Most High God — Himself — and welcome them — the purified spirits back to Himself after their involutionary and evolutionary trials, just as was stated at the start of this lecture.

FIRE MUST have, and the Divine FIRE DOES GIVE:

(1) HEAT. In the bodily temperature and the tangible presence of heat in the process of thought or mentalism, seen especially when quick thought or cerebration is required.

(2) LIGHT. Of Reason, Intelligence, and the Auras.

(3) FLAME. Of Passions, Desire, and the Combustive processes.

(4) SMOKE. Of clouded judgement resultant upon unbridled passion, and surrender to appetites and things of the senses.

(5) ASHES. Of desire, and the physical refuse of bodily combustion.

(6) PAIN. From its misuse; the misuse of desire functions. (Evil deeds).

(7) PLEASURE. From legitimate use of Desire and higher spiritual functions. (Good deeds).

(8) WARMTH. Of satisfaction that comes from harmonious vibration in consonance with Nature's Laws.

(9) SPARKS. In quick, thoughtless words and deeds that may cause social conflagration.

FIRE is the active dynamic principle of THOUGHT, classified as:

(a) CREATIVELY CONSTRUCTIVE; as when God spoke and the worlds came into being.

(b) CREATIVELY DESTRUCTIVE; as when from Man, thoughts spoken or written kindle among the nation and peoples.

FIRE is PURIFYING:

(I) In the HEAVEN WORLDS, where in Purgatory it purges the EGO of the accumulated dross of the late Incarnation.

(II) In COSMOS; where it separates through the process of Putrefactio the chemical constituents of a given substance, that they may recombine in their original purity and electrical natures, with their proper affinities.

(III) In the HUMAN BEING; through the Blood, which cleanses and vitalizes every part of the bodily organism, removing all the vicious elements of the human cell community.

(IV) In the NATION; where by concentrated thought process it clarifies society of the vices or vicious elements of the social fabric or organism.

Referring back to classification (III), the Blood, if we stop for a moment to consider the ruddy glow of fresh blood, and the dark, viscous, heavily laden constituency of veinous blood, realizing that the stoppage of its flow means physical death; that the continuance of its flow means LIFE; that it carries the active oxygen to every part of the human organism; that it also carries away the ashes of combustio, then we shall also see that the blood is in reality the stream -- not the FIRE -- (for FIRE is the invisible active potency and agent,) but a stream of LIQUID FLAME coursing through the system, penetrating to every remote part of the same.

We have said that our God is a FIERY EMANATION of the Absolute. We also know that Fire must give LIGHT. The proof of the first statement is found in the latter for in 1st John 1:5, it is distinctly written:

> "This, then is the message which we have heard of him and declare unto you, THAT GOD IS LIGHT..."

Knowing this then, and with the thought that even Light itself is a manifestation of FIRE and God, well may we exclaim in adoration of the Sun of our Solar System, one of the many Suns in many Solar Systems, as did the FIRE worshippers of old who were, after all, not so far from the truth, even as instructed by the Prophet Isaiah (Isa. 24: 14-15) "Then shall they lift up their voice, they shall sing for the majesty of the Lord..." "Wherefore GLORIFY YE THE LORD IN THE FIRES."

And even as I began this lecture with the illustration of the forest FIRE, and knowing as we do that much of the Scriptures consists of parable, we shall gain a new understanding of the words of the Prophet Jeremiah when he says (Jer 21:14) "But I will punish you according to the fruit of your doings, saith the Lord, and I WILL KINDLE A FIRE IN THE FOREST THEREOF (THE BODY) AND IT SHALL DEVOUR ALL THINGS ROUND ABOUT IT."

And if any here say this is a metaphor, let him also read the saying that is written by the same Prophet (Jer 20:9) "But his word was in mine heart, AS A BURNING FIRE SHUT UP IN MY BONES."

As a further evidence of the spiritual potency of FIRE, St. Luke informs us in his Gospel that John said to the multitude (Luke 3:16) "I indeed baptize you with water, but one mightier than I cometh ... and he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost AND WITH FIRE."

FIRE: DIVINE AGENT FIRE is a Divine agent and potency and comes to earth from higher spheres of being. This is also shown by St. Luke in his description of the rebuke given by Jesus to James and John for their misunderstanding of the divine nature and power of FIRE, when they asked (Luke 9:54) "Wilt thou that we command FIRE to come down from heaven and consume them, even as Elias did?"

And furthermore, that FIRE DOES COME DOWN as it were, or manifests on the physical plane as a spiritual agency, is shown by the fact recorded in Acts 2:# where it is written of the Apostles; "And there appeared unto them cloven tongues LIKE AS OF FIRE and it sat upon each of them."

No better description or argument can be given as to the truth of our necessary purgation by the invisible FIRE in the after death state, than that contained in 1 Cor 3:13, where it is written:

> Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood hay, stubble;
> Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by FIRE and the FIRE shall try every man's work, of what sort it is.
> If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward.
> If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved; YET SO BY FIRE.
> KNOW YE NOT THAT YE ARE THE TEMPLE OF GOD AND THAT THE SPIRIT OF GOD DWELLETH IN YOU?"

In other words, Man being essentially Divine in his spiritual nature, must have the error purged from him by the action of the Divine or Invisible FIRE although he himself cannot be possibly "lost" or destroyed. The Temple must be purged of all works not built upon the one stable foundation of reality. When the veil in the Temple of desire is rent asunder in the Astral World, and Man realizes the futility and illusion of desire as pertaining to the things of the world, worldly, then will his works be tried by FIRE and only that will survive which is built upon truth and permanency, instead of illusion of gold, silver or material desires.

Especially does this hold true in these days of social unrest. We are hearing and seeing the mutterings of those who suffer under the injustice of our present industrial system and already the conflagration has been started.

We are surrounded by the true FIRE at all times. Who has not felt the burning of conscience, the flames of temper, the smoke of befogged judgement and all the other attributes of FIRE?

Let us remember that many times these burnings may come from the touch even of angelic beings, for is it not written (Heb 1:7) "He maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a FLAME OF FIRE" ?

Let us each so cherish and fan into full Flame the Divine Spark that is within each of us — that IS each of each — that we may awake to the realization of our responsibility as Custodians of that PURE FIRE that burns without wound, only to purify us that we may enter into that ultimate realm of FIRE, our GREAT CENTRAL FLAME, withstanding the terrific vibrations therein, of which place it is written that Man may not see the face of God and Live; where is the Throne of purest Gold of Alchemy and the sea of Molten Glass through which Macrocosmos reflects Himself as Microcosmos. Man indeed shall not enter there nor can Man see the face of God and live, but Man is a thing of the earth, and by that time earth will have been left far back in our evolutionary progress and we shall stand before the Gates of the City of Sarras, ready and willing to be indrawn by the breath of that God - our complete selves in UNITY -- which is the consuming FIRE -- which will then vibrate as the result of our united vibrations, and into which we enter as drops of water into the ocean, yet preserving that individuality which has been so laboriously earned throughout our aeon-old pilgrimage.

The ABSOLUTE is ESSENTIAL FIRE.

The Supreme Being is the GREAT FIERY EMANATION.

The Solar God or Logos is the LESSER FIERY EMANATION.

Angels are SPARKS who have completed their mundane evolution and are now in the Hierarchal grades.

Ministers are the LORDS OF THE HIERARCHIES who, as FLAMES are the manifestations of Deity in actual control, guidance and direction of His world.

Man is a Spark in process of evolution into Flame.

INVOCATION TO THE FLAME

I CALL UPON THEE, O LIVING GOD, RADIANT WITH ILLUMINATING FIRE! O UNSEEN PARENT OF THE SUN! POUR FORTH THY LIGHT-GIVING POWER AND ENERGIZE THY DIVINE SPARK. ENTER INTO THIS FLAME AND LET IT BE AGITATED BY THE BREATHS OF THY HOLY SPIRIT. MANIFEST THY POWER AND OPEN FOR ME THE TEMPLE OF ALMIGHTY GOD WHICH IS WITHIN THIS FIRE! MANIFEST THY LIGHT FOR MY REGENERATION, AND LET THE BREADTH, HEIGHT, FULLNESS AND CROWN OF THE SOLAR RADIANCE APPEAR, AND MAY THE GOD WITHIN SHINE FORTH!

THE KUNDALINI

"His word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones. Jer., xx; 9.

THIS particular complaint of the Hebrew Prophet Jeremiah, after his ill-treatment at the hand of Pashur, whom the Prophet renamed Magor-miss-abib, expresses a vital factor in all spiritual experience that has been strest to some extent in cult literature, but left unrecognized by Christian or Jewish Scriptural exegetists, —the "Fire in the bones."

Altho the Fire Doctrine is everywhere present in both the Old and New Testament Scriptures, little or no emfasis is ever placed upon it in orthodox interpretation and instruction. The reason undoubtedly is, that the Church has, for so long a time, been minus the esoteric or inner spiritual interpretation and insight, that it has come to regard the references to fire as purely symbolic in their application.

Nevertheless, this Fire Doctrine is far older than Christianity and at the same time it is, essentially, the vital principle of Christian mystical understanding, which is the understanding of the spirit, rather than of the letter of the law. The Principle of the Invisible Fire confronts the student of comparative religion at every turn.

The word Kundalini, referring to the inner secret fire in each human organism, has come down to us from remote antiquity and has been preserved to us thru the researches of orientalists. The Hindus have incorporated the Kundalini in their philosofy, but the instructions for its active expression and function have borded closely upon the usual recourse to sexual considerations characteristic of East Indian teachings. Unfortunately, these sexual associative concepts have been perpetuated unnecessarily by occidental cultists.

Among the Easterns, Kundalini is usually referd to as the Fifth*Shakti.* In their literature, Kanya (virgin—Virgo, the sixth zodiacal sign) indicates Shakti or Mahamaya. In the occident, Kundalini is usually studied or treated of in an isolated manner. This does not convey the true intent or significance, which can be had only thru an understanding of the entire group of shaktis. For instance, Kanya alone, represents the sixth Rashi and alludes to the six primary natural forces or powers.

The six Shaktis are,—

1 Para Shakti, Supreme Power, in which are incorporated the powers or energies constituting Light and Heat.

2 Jnana Shakti, Intellectual Power, in which are included Wisdom and Knowledge. This Shakti operates in a dual manner, first to give the mental translation of sensations; to recall previous ideas thru the function of memory; to develop in each of us the laws of association and to bring out in each of us the concept of self.

Second, to make possible the functions of clairvoyance or clear sight, and psychometry or tactile perception.

3 Ichchha Shakti, The Will Power, manifested thru nerve control and muscular response.

4 Kriya Shakti, The Power of Thought and its phenomenal projecjection and external realization.

5 Kundalini Shakti, which Blavatsky defines (partially) as follows: "The power or force principle which everywhere manifests in Nature. This force includes the two great forces of attraction and repulsion. Electricity and magnetism are but manifestations of it. This is the power which brings about that "continuous adjustment of internal relations to external relations", which is the essence of life according to Herbert Spencer, and that "continuous adjustment of external relations to internal relations", which is the basis of transmigration of souls, Punarjanman (Rebirth), in the doctrines of the ancient Hindu philosofers. A Yogi must thoroly subjugate this force or power before he can attain Moksha.

6 Mantrikka Shakti, This may be interpreted as the Power of Letters, Speech or Music. Students of the Kabala will, perhaps, understand this Power better than the average student, when they recall the Kabalistic formation, meaning and power of the Single and Double, Male and Female letters of the alfabet.

The first of the Skaktis has been the subject of scientific investigation. The second and third Shaktis have been and are being (altho unintentionally so) investigated thru philosofy and psychology. The fourth Shakti is being investigated thru psychical research. The fifth Shakti, with which we are immediately concerned, has formed the essential or vital principle in all personal spiritual development of the higher order, from primitive times. The sixth Shakti is little or not at all understood in any scientific sense, and is merely a subject of hypothesis and conjecture altho it is known to be a reality.

Collectively, the six Shaktis named, are synthesized in a seventh, Daiviprakriti, the Astral Light or "Light of the Logos." Incidentally, Blavatsky claims that the "six names of the six Forces (or Shaktis) mentioned are those of the six Hierarchies of Dhyan Chohans, synthesized by their Primary, the seventh—who personify the Fifth Principle of Cosmic Nature, or of the "Mother" in its mystical sense. The enumeration of the Yoga Powers would require ten volumes. Each of these Forces has a living Conscious Entity at its head, of which Entity it is an Emanation."

The Kundalini is unknown to occidental or, for that matter, any academic anatomists in their professional capacities as such. Therefore, we shall not attempt an explanation along intensive anatomical lines of thought, Simply speaking, there are three main paths or highways along the human spine. They are termed the IDA, PINGALA and SUSHUMNA, respectively. Ida is situate on the left, and is said to be feminine and negative. Pingala is assumed to be positive and masculine, and on the right. The Sushumna lies between the two.

In Hindu esoterism, the Sushumna represents the Ganges. In Christian esoterism, the Sushumna is represented by "that great river Euphrates." Ida is represented by the river Gihon, which "compasseth the whole land of Ethiopia" the dark land, symbolizing the dark (or lower, pelvic regions). Pingala, in the human geografy is Pison, "which compasseth the whole land of Havilah, where there is gold" signifying the heart, ruled in astroscience by Leo, the metal of which is Gold. The fourth river of Scripture is Hiddekel, now known as the Tigris, which, according to the Genesiac legend "goeth toward the east." The east represents the "source of light," the head, which is Christ, and in Christ or Eden all four of the Genesiac rivers have their origin.

The fourth river, which goeth toward the east, is the river of life in the spinal column. Ida and Pingala figuratively intertwine about the Sushumna like the serpents on the Caduceus of Mercury. Where the tails of the serpents join, at the base of the Caduceus (spine), is the point where the philosofers affirm that kundalini has its place of birth, and from whence it arises, in an annular, serpentine manner up the spinal pathway. At the spinal bases, this phase of energy is assumed to lie coiled in about three and one-half turns.

In the average man and woman, unawakened, the kundalini functions but slightly. Some of our intuitional and psychical characteristics may be said to be due to its activity, but its usual condition is one of latency or dormancy. Philosofical physiologists affirm that Ida "nerves" have their origin in the left testis of the male, and Pingala in the right, and in corresponding ovaries in the female. It is hardly correct in our opinion, to assume that a non-organic force center can have "nerves" in the anatomical sense. It would be more correct to state that the lines of force which culminate in the center called kundalini have their ramifications in the gonads mentioned.

According to the Scriptures the four rivers of Genesis met in Eden. According to some philosofers Ida, Pingala, Sushumna and the central Tigris also meet in Eden, the head or Christ of the individual organism. Orientals teach that thru the upper palate a "nectar is distild from the brain" under proper circumstances, this nectar having wonderful powers of spiritualizing and vitalizing efficacy. To bring this about, one is taught to concentrate upon a point in the forehead just between the eyes, over the bridge of the nose. At the same time, the tongue is forst back firmly against the palate. The mind is to be held in a positive state. Then, by corresponding breaths, the energy is to be drawn from Ida and transfered to Pingala. From Pingala it is to be directed to Sushumna. If this effort is successful, kundalini will be releast and will rush with force and power up the spinal pathway to the brain, endowing the subject with marvelous creative mental powers.

In the process of rising in the human organism, the kundalini is assumed to vitalize and awaken the various chakras or centers until it reaches the brain, from whence it distils the nectar which is retained within the body and rejuvenates, revitalizes and regenerates the initiate. Cosmic centers are alleged to be opened up during the process recited.

Such, in brief, is the general notion of the kundalini, as taught with many amplifications and astounding claims, by orientalists. Naturally, from an anatomical standpoint the claims are pretty apt to be unsustained. However, the kundalini, aside from the fanciful physiology with which it has been erroneously invested, is a fact that has been demonstrated many times over, in the very last places the average person would expect—the monasteries.

While the kundalini represents creative power that is largely supprest and represt due to the predominant activity of the normally sexual creative center, it functions to some degree in every normal person. Some pesudo occultists teach that sexual repression is conducive to greater mental creative faculties, but facts do not bear out these claims. Persons of both sexes, of widely recognized creative ability in mental and spiritual fields of endeavor, have also been known to be more than ordinarily active sexually. Many clergymen of undoubtedly remarkable spiritual attainments have been unusually active on the physiologically creative plane.

Also, many of the most noted geniuses in art, science, philosofy, letters and adventure, have been mental marvels, yet notoriously incontinent. History, criminology and biografy record their careers and achievements. Careful investigation does not show that it is a matter of continence or incontinence, cult claims to the contrary notwithstanding. The essential thing in the awakening and development of the kundalini is the factor of WILL.

There is a difference between spiritual power and spiritual insight. There have been many men of remarkable spiritual power, who have swayed thousands to the higher life and who have made the world wonderfully better because they lived in it. Yet these same men have in many instances, been singularly narrow-minded intellectually, narrow-visioned, and what the world called bigoted, even tho it excused and pardoned the bigotry. In the medieval period many men sentenst their fellow men to the flames under the firm belief that by so doing they were pleasing Almighty God.

The development and quickening of the Kundalini, that sleeping, serpentine, subtle force-energy that creeps upward, stimulating into activity the hitherto unawakened spiritual centers of power at definite intervals within us, does something more than give us spiritual power. It gives the initiate creative insight. This, the monks of many religions, Christian, Tibetan, Indian and others, have found, in practising the monastic life, not always thru celibacy, but thru meditation, and the exercise of an awakened will power.

To such have come moments of spiritual exaltation, that they discovered to their amazement, they could maintain and function at will. In this mental status of inner illumination they not only saw into the life and virtue of things, they also saw how to accomplish the very things they saw. Some initiates find it not at all unusual to experience moments of great spiritual exaltation, when all cosmos seems to pass in review before them, but such moments, while valuable, are fleeting, for at best they cannot accomplish much of permanency.

The awakened and aroused kundalini however, not only elevates the initiate to a notable point of spiritual insight and power; it holds him there and enables him to function his mental creative energies on that plane. It is from such a plane that the seeming miracles of well known avartars and Messiahs have been wrot. It is from such planes that men and women have been able to see out and over the present into a future, that they were also able to shape and guide the lesser pilgrims into.

Where does the kundalini have its actual source? Not in the gonads or vital glands of both sexes, for these have, under necessary surgical operations been extirpated, yet it has not robbed the patient of the ability to develop, awaken and function his kundalini powers. For ready reference, the kundalini is, usually associated with the gonadic functions and vital powers, but this association must be understood as a secondary characteristic. The kundalini has its actual origin in the coccygeal gland, one of the endocrines, anatomically located, but little understood. Injury to the coccyx has prevented otherwise earnest students under specific observation, from making any progress in the awakening of the kundalini.

The above affirmation is seemingly borne out by the observed fact that in several cases of injury to the coccyx (tip of the spine) a markt decrease in the functional powers of the gonads has been definitely recorded. The termini of the spinal pole represent the two extremes of the creative plane, the lower or organic, and the upper or mental. Brain children, in the form of realized ideals are permanent. Physical children on the organic plane live their allotted spans of life and give place to others.

Kundalini is symbolically pictured as the coiled serpent, from the annular method by which its rising manifests. This brings vigorously to our minds the Genesiac legend of the serpent, coiled in Eden around the Tree of Life and the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil. The spinal pole is the human Tree of Life, for the real life that ascends and is present therein at all times, does not inhere in the substance of cortex or tissue but in the essence thereof as the Internal Fire. The Serpent deceived Eve, and thru Eve, Adam. The creative force in each human being, thru the operation of the senses, deceived man into the concept that sense gratification was the only method of procreating his species. Consequently, Man Fell from the spiritually mental plane of creative activity to the spiritually physical plane. He lost his spiritual consciousness in becoming self-conscious, and the Apple of Illusion made him indeed as the gods, knowing good and evil, but it also made Man a slave to sensory illusion and delusion.

But the serpent in Genesis paid a penalty for his seduction. Allegorically, it was ordered that Man should bruise the serpent's head, with his heel. Figuratively, the serpent was to be kept under foot—kept down. The serpentine Fire of kundalini has been kept down for ages upon ages. But few have reacht a degree of real initiation that has enabled them to function their individual kundalini to any perceptible degree, yet it has been and is being accomplisht.

The awakening of the kundalini produces effects that will be almost immediately noted, so different do the initiate's reactions to primal impulses and the influence of environment become. Without specific intent to have it so, gradually the initiate's outlook on life becomes perceptibly tinctured in a way clearly different from what has constituted the form of his experience. He does not function in the Power of the kundalini at once. He feels and notes its influence and this influence varies, as, one after another, the several chakras which form the subject of the next lesson, unfold or inaugurate their individual activities.

The full effect of kundalini is not felt or observed phenomenally, until and unless it has effected in the brain the mystic Marriage known to initiates. The union of two potent force-units therein bridges over the gap that has existed since man's cerebral organism assumed its known shape and form. From the Old Serpent of Antiquity, kundalini becomes, when it emerges supreme, the Master Pontiff or Bridge Builder.

It will be seen therefore, that Man has within himself, the ever-perpetuating Tempter that caused his primitive so-called "Fall" and the punishment of this Tempter will be its obligation to restore Man to his primitive place and state of consciousness, plus all that he has gained thru evolutionary experience in the aeon-long interim. The seeming "Fall" of Man will ultimately result in his "Uplift" and the kundalini will become the universal "Lion's Paw" that raises him to his former and now better estate.

Kundalini functions to a limited extent in every human being, thru the individual autonomic vegetative system. But it does not and cannot function actively as an independent organ-center until it is freed from its confinement by the act of volition on the part of the sincere initiate. No systems of development undertaken in unison will help in the awakening of kundalini. Each awakening must be and is an isolated experience and an individual process.

No unnatural practises are required in awakening the kundalini. The only objective feature is that of diet, which should be carefully planned for the period during which active and positive efforts are being made to free the kundalini from its erstwhile imprisonment. This diet should be so calculated as to reduce all stimulants in the shape of highly spiced, seasoned or flavored foods to a minimum. Stimulants of all kinds should be avoided. Tobacco and coffee should be laid aside during such time of development, for while the essential bases of each might not be deleterious in moderate usage, all toxins should be kept from heart and circulation and the blood made as pure as possible. thru the use of pure fruit juices. The latter should be used as freely as can be, without producing acidosis or hyperacidity, which they occasion in some systems.

Anatomists know the existence of the coccygeal gland and some researchers into endocrinology have learned a bit about the character of its secretion, but all admit that further than this, little is known of its complete purpose and function. The coccygeal gland is located near the tip of the coccyx, in a small tendinous interval formed by the union of the Levator Ani muscle just above the coccygeal attachment of the Sphincter Ani. It is a small conglobate body (con-with, spherical, globular). Nerves pass into it from the Sympathetic. It is of about the size of a millet seed. Its secretion is clear; not stained by chromic salts. Anatomically it rejoices in the name of Glomous coccygeum.

The textual allusion to the "fire in the bones" is more than a simile. It is the statement of a definite fact. The initiate, when his individual kundalini is fully awakened has no definite physical sensation that is extraordinary. He has, however, many new sensations while the hidden or serpent fire is making its way actively and vitally upward. It cannot be otherwise. A patient who has been confined to his bed for a long time, finds a multitude of new sensations when arising and beginning to exercise muscles that have long remained dormant. When kundalini awakes, new centers of vital function in the correlation of the etheric and astral vehicles with the physical, sensations of an unusual order, are bound to be felt.

The effect is, however, not all unpleasant. On the contrary, it is the feeling and sense of new life. Not the old life renewed, but new life, a kind of life and vitality one has never before experienst, and for which, therefore, he can find no words of adequate expression. In the bones themselves is this new sensation most apparent. Not the ache that comes preliminary to influenza, but a quickening and that gives one an effect of springiness thruout the body as one walks. Possibly the old Prophet personally knew what the "fire in the bones" really meant.

Force, improperly applied or harnest, is destructive. Have you ever seen a serpent, enraged, rear on its coils and lunge forward in a vicious strike? Have you ever watcht a man becoming angry, grow hotter and hotter until suddenly it seems as tho he reared back and verbally struck his opponent. Of such, we sometimes say, the heat or fire has gone to his head. It really has. And it is an excellent example of kundalini temporarily breaking thru its confines and unrestrictedly manifesting itself in the excess of energy it applies at a time when unusual mental stress of the combative type has temporarily weakened the control under which it is normally supprest. Modern knowledge of endocrinology has shown us that, at times, some glands supply excess secretion thrown into the blood stream, that arouses our instincts of combativeness and gives us courage when we require it.

Kundalini acts in a similar manner thru the source in which it normally reposes. Some seers have alleged that they can even hear the "hiss" of the kundalini serpentine as it arises, but occidentals will take such allegations cum grano salis. However, the visible effects of uncontrold force in the human machine do take on the semblance of the serpent's motions and it does not require an over vivid or active imagination to hear the hiss that should, seemingly, accompany them.

In beginning the process of awakening the kundalini, initiates place the physical body under definite discipline. Not of an outre type but in a perfectly normal, healthy, sane way. Kundalini is supprest in each of us because the physical body is undisciplined and dominant. When the physical vehicle is under definite discipline, kundalini has an opportunity to express itself and grows as opportunity extends, until it becomes an independent psychical organism by itself. The discipline referd to is one of wholesome thoughtfulness, in keeping the mind clear from temperamental outbursts, excess or sensuous enjoyment thru any of the avenues of sense perception, surrender to emotions of the moment and the maintenance of self-control at all times.

Kundalini is usually spoken of as an internal fire. It is therefore an invisible fire. All fire is invisible. Flame is merely the visible factor of combustion. It is a visible evidence of combustion. But all combustion does not produce visible flame. The internal combustion resulting from oxygenation does not produce flame in the ordinary sense of the word. The internal process is somewhat analogous to the form of combustion produced when some basic acid like hydrochloric, nitric or sulfuric attacks wood, paper or other substance. We see the charred result and we say the acid has burned its way. It is quite true. In the chemical action there has been true combustion.

Kundalini operates in much the same way. It does not burn its way like a material chemical substance or agent, but it does burn its way. What does it burn? We may observe that it operates on the inner planes and functions in an ethical manner. Are our vices and shortcomings then, mere ethical values without substance, that kundalini can burn, for it is the burning away or purging of the dross and the gross in our composition that is the primary office and function of kundalini.

Those who have ever experienst travel on the Sahara Desert or other eastern wastes know the terror of the Khamsin. It is a hot wind that scorches and seems almost to consume all that it contacts. Unless adequately protected, living things are withered up in the fiery blast. Now one cannot see this wind but one does feel it most powerfully. It cannot be handled, examined, subjected to chemical analysis or labelled. But for centuries it has been a tremendously real thing in the lives of natives and wanderers of the desert. No one doubts its presence, power or effect.

I sometimes feel that kundalini is like the Khamsin. We cannot see kundalini physically, altho initiates who have developt their individual powers of insight have seen what appears on first observation to be a dullish, annular mass, slowly emerging from the spinal base and lower pelvic basin. From a dull neutral color it becomes a murky, opaque red, then to reddish-brown and gradually manifesting a series of color gradations analogous to the spectrum as it increases in strength and its emergence becomes more and more complete.

Altho we cannot see kundalini, yet we can feel it, and once we have recognized what it is we cannot possibly mistake its presence or its power and its effects, for they work a revolution in our ordinary hum-drum lives. The fully awakened kundalini makes us—not supermen—for this is a much-abused and almost meaningless term, but fully developt, awakened and completely efficient men and women, as far as it is possible for us to go in the present wave of human evolution.

Kundalini burns, like the Khamsin, thru its fiery energy, as it rushes like a blast up the spinal tree of Life, vivifying and stimulating into activity the several psychic or spiritual centers or chakras as it goes. The well equilibrated student of esotericism will not and does not seek phenomena of a supernormal or supernatural order within or without himself, yet he knows that as he progresses in spiritual and psychological unfoldment he can reasonably expect a manifestation of conditions that have not previously been a part of his consciousness or active environment.

Kundalini gives to the really sincere and intensive student or "Disciple of the Path", a new environment both inwardly and outwardly. It creates a new heaven in his head and a new earth in the lower anatomical structure, because both become purified and freed from the accretions and accumulations of years of illusion, unsatisfied desire and false perception. These clog the mental and spiritual faculties like the accumulation of rust inside an iron water pipe that little by little decreases the power and volume of the flow of water.

The neofite or "young plant" cannot begin the awakening of his kundalini at first. This can be undertaken only after the Disciple has been for a considerable period of time upon the Path. This time period is necessary, for the study and understanding of any truth, but more especially esoteric truth, theoretically, is vastly different from the personal consciousness of it thru practical realization. This practical realization, at least in part, is a necessary feature of the disciple's progressive unfoldment before he can hope, with good success, to undertake such an organically and philosofically complicated process as the stimulation and awakening of the kundalini energy.

When kundalini awakens, it draws heavily upon other vital forces and energies of the body, just as the human embryo draws heavily upon the vital forces and energies of the mother during the process of gestation. Kundalini requires a similar process and period of gestation ere it can be awakened as a well ordered and properly controld force. As its base is definitely located in an endocrinal source, we must remember that all the endocrines physiologically act more or less in unison. Sometimes there is partial conflict according to the hyper or hypo function of a given gland or set of glands, but, generally speaking, they form an interlocking directorate in the human organism, and demands made upon one, are assumed in a sort of pro rata manner by all, somewhat like insurance underwriting methods in vogue in the business world.

Like the infant newly born, kundalini requires a certain period of dependence upon the other vital forces of the body ere it comes into its own. It must be "nurst", as it were. Ultimately it becomes a strong and lusty offspring of our inner forces and serves as the energy-link between the physical and psychological centers of the human organism. Man it must be remembered, is a most complex organism. Solids, liquids and gases play their parts in chemical function. But to solids, liquids and gases there is a further, invisible feature, the effluvium or invisible emanation.

The concept of emanations does not require the exercise of imagination. We know that metals and minerals, even liquids are radio-active, i.e., they emanate infinitesimal portions of their substance that are absolutely impalpable to sight or touch, but are, in some cases objective to the sense of smell. Psychometrically they are quite evident. With scientific facilities, their presence and phenomena are easily apprehendable. This same is true of the solids, liquids and gases in the human economy. Therefore, kundalini can be quite easily understood from a theoretical standpoint, at least, when we visualize it as an energy-effluvium inhering in and emanating from a positive energy-center at the very base or root of the human Tree of Life.

We cannot see perfume, but we can smell it. Therefore most positively we affirm its existence. Invisible, yet it makes a profound impress upon just one of our organs of sense. Kundalini makes a powerful impress upon many of our senses, inner and outer. Therefore, with as much justification as in the case of perfume, we affirm its reality and its active manifestation.

The Prophet, in our subject text, used a peculiar phrase. He said, "His Word was in mine heart, as a burning fire shup up in my bones." The mystical Gospel of St. John the Seer, than which nothing more valuable to the true mystic has ever been written before or since the time of Christ, advises us that a "Word" was made flesh. Flesh means, in this sense that a vital command of Deity became incarnate. To be incarnate means "in flesh." Flesh, in, by and of itself is inert unless something we vaguely call "life" vitalizes it.

After the risen Christ had expounded the law to the two men of Emmaus and then disappeard, they used the same exclamation as Jeremiah, saying "Did not our heart burn within us"? (Luke, xxiv; 32). When the Word, or the Deific Command Incarnate burns in the human heart like a fire, it is because something definite and unique has taken place in the experience of the person. The Prophet had awakened because of a distressing experience. The two men journeying to Emmaus had awakened because of a wonderful contact. Kundalini had become active in each case.

The modern initiate, if he is truly an initiate, not of degree peddlers but of the Spirit, will feel a Word burning in his heart as his individual Kundalini becomes active and his whole being commences to respond in a wonderful and joyous manner to the new spirit that motivates him.

This subject of the kundalini is so important, that explicit instructions for its awakening cannot, with good judgment, be given out to a general student public. It is treated intensively, with specific instruction, in the Post-Graduate Series of this Fraternity. These Post-Graduate Series are available to students who have satisfactorily completed the Secret Work in Spiritual Alchemy.

PROBLEM

A brief, concise essay upon the subject of the Kundalini is invited, to show the individual concept gained by the reading and study of this lesson.

Dear Companions

We have come to the end of our Alchemical presentation. Some parts of it have been tedious; nonetheless, for those serious about this work, the series is invaluable. I have often remarked to you that those who are gathered here represent a mature and serious group of sojourners.

Again, and as has been said more than once, the work of the I.C.O.M.S. is to present to you the authentic Initiatic Teachings. These are coming from the heritage of the Martinists, Rose+Croix, Alchemists, Kabalists & Gnostics. It is up to each one of you to study, assimilate and synthesize the material! To take what you can use ... and discard the rest! Please always remember this! We are NOT here to foist some particular opinion on anyone! THERE IS ONLY ONE TRUTH but each person must learn to discern and perceive that truth for himself! Those immature persons who are unwilling to think for themselves and who wished to be spoonfed — and told what to believe and what not to believe — fell by the wayside long ago!

You who are here are of the Advanced Humanity and I say to you: be of good cheer, you are of the Elect, recognize the hierarchal ladder and where you stand on it. But let not pride slay you, be ever-ready to help those in need of encouragement and give a helping hand.

Just this week we received the following letter from a Companion:

> .... These lessons are wonderful. Yes, you can feel the difference after practicing the light exercise with the prayer in Liber 27. We put these exercises to work in our daily lives and have had some great experiences. After starting to work at a new job the person that was to help me was very cold. When time came for our break the opportunity was given me to use the "light" exercise given in the lesson we had just received from you. On returning to the office this person's whole attitude was changed and she accepted me readily. This really impressed me very much because we really do need to put to use in daily life the lessons and techniques we are given. It has made a big difference in our affairs. Thank you very much. It is hard to tell you what impresses me most because each lesson is wonderful. One that stands out in my mind that answered a question we could not find an answer to was about the Egregor. It was never explained as thoroughly as in these lessons. Also, the effect of regular rhythmic breathing really does clear the mind and induce calmness. When you practice these techniques THEY DO WORK, and that in itself is WONDERFUL. Thank you very much."

We are approaching Liber 50. At that time we will have a major statement to make concerning our future direction.

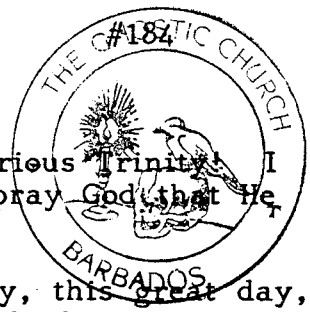
And now, dear Companions, we must bring this Liber to a close. At Easter just past, Most Reverend Bishop Tau Gregorious, Patriarch of the Universal Gnostic Church, was in Barbados for certain functions. His address, given on Easter Sunday, contained much food for thought; because of its fresh insights, and in keeping with our attempt to present lively and stimulating material, we share it with you:



Brethren:

Greetings in the Name of the Most Holy and Glorious Trinity! I give you my sincere Apostolic Benediction and pray God that He pour His blessings upon you.

Many people gather on Easter Sunday, this great day, to reflect on the meaning of Jesus' life, of which there are so many interpretations. Today, however, I would like give you a slightly different frame of reference with which to view the Easter experience.

As we look backward to those momentous days, we might see in our mind's eye, throngs of faithful gathered around the tomb in sadness and remorse, if not in expectation of the astounding demonstration taking place. Jesus, on the other hand, seemed to understand the whims of the passing throng who followed him for the loaves and fishes, — and even his close disciples of whom he said "Could you not watch with me one hour?"

As the dark hour closed in on Jesus, the followers diminished in number, the disciples fled, all but young John with the two Marys remained at the cross. Peter had denied knowing Jesus; Judas had betrayed him for reasons not clearly known. One by one, even after paying their respects, they all went to their homes.

So, on that first Easter Sunday, early in the morning, before dawn, there was found but one lonely figure at the tomb, one remnant of the great crowds that had hailed Jesus the week before. The great paradox is that this one was not a disciple, not even a member of his family, no one whom it might be felt would be fit for so great an honour — for this one was Mary of Magdala.

Who was this Mary Magdalene? She was from the thriving and prosperous town of Magdala, obviously from an affluent family and of great means herself. Tradition, maybe erroneously, identifies her as the woman taken in adultery and saved from stoning by Jesus. She was certainly the sort of member of society that lives a free and easy kind of life — she was given to indulging in the senses. Kahlil Gibran, in his great work, Jesus, Son of Man" has Mary of Magdala relating her experiences with Jesus: "I saw him sitting in the shadow of the cypress tree across my garden ... and I gazed at him, and my soul quivered within me, for he was beautiful ... I left my house and walked towards him. Was it my aloneness, or was it his fragrance that drew me to him? Was it a hunger in my eyes that desired comeliness, or was it his beauty that sought the light of my eyes? Even now I do not know ... When I reached him I said, 'Good morrow to you.' And He said, 'Good morrow to you, Miriam.' ... And I said to him, 'Will you not come to my house?' And he said, 'Am I not already in your house?' I did not know what he meant, but I know now ... And I said, 'Will you not have wine and bread with me?' And he said, 'Yes Miriam, but not now.' ... Not now, the voice of the sea was in those two words, and the voice of the wind and the trees. And when he said them unto me, life spoke to death. For, mind you, I was dead. I was a woman who had divorced her soul. I was living apart from this self which you now see. I belonged to all men, and to none. They called me 'harlot,' and 'a woman possessed by devils.' I was cursed and I was envied. But when his dawn-eyes looked into my eyes, all the stars of my night faded away, and I became Miriam, only Miriam, a woman lost to the earth she had known, and finding herself in new places ... Then he looked at me and said, 'You have many lovers, and yet I alone love you. Other men love themselves in your nearness. I love you. Other men see in you a beauty that shall fade away, and in the autumn of your days that beauty shall not be afraid to gaze at itself in the mirror, and it shall not be offended. I alone love the unseen in you.' ... And then he walked away ... I knew not, but on that day the sunset of his eyes slew the dragon in me, and I became a woman."

Perhaps this is a poetic interpretation of her healing, but it did take place in one way or another. She then became a true disciple. We see the figure of Mary of Magdala surfacing occasionally in the Gospel story, enough to indicate that even though she was not admitted to the inner circle of that male-dominated society, she was a faithful follower. We read later: "It came to pass afterwards that he went through every city and village preaching and spreading the glad tidings and Mary called Magdalene and others ministered to him of their substance." In other words, they were there with financial support. She is also reputed to be the woman who came with an alabaster box containing very precious ointment which she poured over Jesus' head. While the disciples criticized the act as wasteful, Jesus defended it, saying that it should always be a memorial of her.

So, Mary of Magdala, one of the faithful, had been strengthened through the healing of her personal weakness. She was present at the cross, along with Mary, the mother of Jesus, and John. She followed as Jesus' body was borne to its tomb in the garden. All the others had departed, and we find the lone figure continuing to wait. John tells the story: "Now on the first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, while it was yet dark, unto the tomb, and seeth the stone taken away." So, she ran and told Peter and John; they were skeptical, but they came running to see for themselves. They found the tomb empty and thus assuming that someone had stolen the body, they departed, and Mary was alone again. It was in that time of aloneness that she had the vision of Jesus coming to her, and He was there, talking to her, and finally telling her to inform the disciples that he would see them again. Dutifully she went, and Mary of Magdala then vanishes from view in the Gospels.

But note this: it was Mary alone who had been present at the resurrection, who had seen Jesus, had talked with him, had touched him. There are those who have said that since the resurrection is the whole foundation on which Christianity evolved, and Mary is the only one who really had a firsthand experience of it, that she may well be responsible for the founding of Christianity. This is interesting, is'nt it?

So, as you sit beside that radiant tomb on Easter Day, this experience may happen to you, and quicken in you a sense of Easter overcoming. Mary Magdalene represents the inner hunger, or soul consciousness, in each person — that will lead you to the deepest, fullest allegiance to Truth — if you will but listen. Actually, Truth is normally caught through the intellect. But we are so often over-read and under-done! We involve ourselves in intellectual analyses of metaphysical things, but the final overcoming can only be experienced within ourselves — in the soul — in a sense of love, in our feeling-nature.

There is a crying need for liberation of the Divine feminine in man. This is so often overlooked by both the proponents and the opponents of the women's liberation movement, who talk about a male-dominated society (which is undoubtedly true). But the great need is not so much for liberation of women, per se, as it is for a liberation of the Divine feminine in ALL persons — an appreciation of the mystical in all persons, along with a love of Truth and beauty.

Never be afraid to express your feelings, brethren. Never be afraid to be spiritual! The transcendence of life, the key to all over-coming, always lies within. It is the Mary Magdalene of us that really believes in the power of resurrection. No matter how dark the way or how hopeless something appears, believe in the depth of yourself, in your innate spirituality, and know that you can overcome. The Mary Magdalene factor will not give up. In the Book of Job, Eliphaz says "When they cast thee down, thou shalt say there is lifting up." This is the resurrection principle; this is the thing that was felt and experienced by Mary of Magdala. It is revealed by every overcoming you have ever made. These are your successes — emphasize them, and make a habit of success!

THE TWO-STEP PROGRAM

Dear Companion

We are living in a busy epoch and quite often one's time is at a premium. After sending out the preliminary instruction of Planes I & II, we aim at producing the Libers in such a way that each can be comfortably studied over the period of a month. This, of course, can only be a general average for we have a very wide membership with sojourners who are in many different situations. Sometimes we get letters from brethren who say their particular circumstance has caused them to fall behind ... while on the other hand some say they wish they could get the Libers faster!

In order to facilitate everyone's pace we have instituted a "TWO-STEP" program whereby we will send two Libers a month (instead of one), to those who so wish. Here's how it works:

PLAN "A" We will send two Libers a month BY SURFACE POST at no increase in monthly dues. Note: The delivery of surface post is erratic ... depending on where you live, mail may take 3 - 4 months to reach you and you may receive two or three mailings at the same time even though they were each mailed a month apart! Quite frankly we do not recommend surface post ... but the choice is yours! IF YOU WISH TO INITIATE PLAN "A" ... WHEN YOU RENEW YOUR ACTIVE STATUS SIMPLY WRITE ON THE SLIP PLAN "A" AND WE WILL SEND 2 LIBERS PER MONTH INSTEAD OF 1 ... BY SURFACE MAIL AT NO INCREASE IN MONTHLY DUES.

PLAN "B" We will send two Libers a month by air mail. It will cost twice the regular contribution. IF YOU WISH TO INITIATE "PLAN B" ... WHEN YOU SEND IN YOUR NEXT DUES-DONATION SIMPLY WRITE ON THE SLIP "PLAN B". WE WILL THEN ENTER YOUR SUBSCRIPTION FOR HALF THE TIME AND SEND 2 LIBERS PER MONTH INSTEAD OF 1 ... BY AIR MAIL. (In other words, if you send in a year's subscription and initiate "Plan B", we will enter the subscription for 6 months and send 2 Libers per month, instead of 1.)

IF YOU WISH YOUR LIBERS TO COME ACCORDING TO THE REGULAR SCHEDULE OF 1 PER MONTH, SIMPLY SEND IN YOUR DUES AS USUAL AND GIVE NO SPECIAL INSTRUCTIONS!

THESE PLANS AFFORD COMPLETE FLEXIBILITY SO THAT WHEN THE TIME COMES TO SEND IN YOUR DUES YOU CAN CHOOSE TO HAVE YOUR LIBERS FOR THE UP-COMING PERIOD SENT ACCORDING TO THE PACE YOU WANT TO RECEIVE THEM AT. WE HOPE YOU WILL APPRECIATE THIS EFFORT WE ARE MAKING TO ACCOMMODATE EVERYONE ... AND THAT THE INSTRUCTIONS ARE CLEAR ENOUGH TO BE FOLLOWED WITHOUT CONFUSION!

IMPORTANT NOTICE: PLAN "A" IS NOT AVAILABLE TO MEMBERS IN POSTAL ZONE "A".

FOURTH LESSON

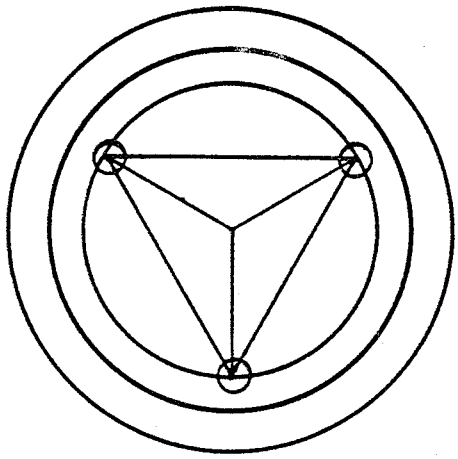
On the explosion of forms and of the necessity of the quaternary

My Brethren,

As soon as the vastness of the spirits of the axis had modified the essences they had extracted from within to the extent of making a maintained impression, that is, that they had distinguished between the three principles in the solid given to mercury, in the mobile given to sulphur and in the fluid given to salt; from that time, everything took life from the vehicle of the central axis, which the spirits inserted into every body to serve as a common ground for the operation of these same spirits, for production, growth and reintegration; from then on, the void which the Scriptures spoke of came to an end. The void should only be understood as the lack of this vehicle in all bodies; like the Scriptures tell, that everything was without form, it must be understood as the indifference of matter towards its principle, lacking the modification and the distiction which gave shape to that which was without form, and life to that which was deprived. In the philosophical matras, matter was neutral, as the spirits of the axis had emanated it from themselves, 1. The spirits of the axis modified it and, as soon as its principles were distinguished in their mixture, everything got a shape, 2. As soon as everything had a shape, in order to form life or the movement of all bodies, they imparted their vehicle of the central axis to all the bodies, 3.

Let us stop here. The spirits of the axis, having done all this work, had fulfilled the law, the precept and the commandment being innate in them form the time of their emanation, by accomplishing the six thoughts of the Eternal contained in the equilateral triangle, an image which the Eternal had conceived for the creation of the universe and the one(1) who was to preside over it, and in the ternary verb residing in the centre of the triangle, as represented in the diagram in the previous discourse, clearly giving the idea of the ternary number, since no man in the universe could deny that the angle of the West is not the angle of the South, the angle of the South is not the angle of the North, and the angle of the North is none of the two others; thus clearly conveying the idea of the ternary number.

The verb, which was in the centre, is also ternary, as I will demonstrate in the following diagram:



(Diagram redrawn, an exact copy of the original. This diagram has also been brought from the end of the instruction ot its logical position. (R.A.))

Consider the triangle inscribed in the three circles. It is not necessary to be a mathematician; nature acts more simply than their factual and purely material procedures. It is only necesary to have eyes to see that it is the centre which generates the triangle; and not only the triangle but any figure. To convince oneself of this, one only has to look at the difficulty of drawing an equilateral triangle without its centre, being easily drawn once you start form there. Nature always chooses the easiest way, and everything which is not marked with this seal must be regarded as apocryphal. Not only does the centre generate the triangle, but it also is its life: the three lines proceeding from the centre show us its close relationship with the three angles. If this relationship were to cease, the equilateral triangle would be dead, that is, it would have another form which would not be its own. Now, the figure of the equilateral triangle containing all the co-eternal numbers, cannot have an end, since it was created by the direct thought of the Eternal.

Now, that which issues from this ineffable and imperishable source is positively the plan of the spirits of the axis, as I will make clear. Is it not true that, once the three principles, mercury, sulphur and salt, became distinct,they shaped all the bodies of the universe? I will stop at that of the general body, or the earth, which is an equilateral triangle. Is it not also true that these three terrestrial angles, or of whichever form, would be without movement, growth or production without this vehicle, being the life of all bodies? Now, we can clearly see, physically, that this vehicle is ternary: through one of its modifications, it operates on mercury, through another, it operates on sulphur and through the third, it operates on salt. If it did not have this ternary number, it would not be able to act on the three principles of the various bodies, through an unchanging law which the Eternal has established in the universe of spirits as well as in that of bodies, so that no being may be united with another if it does not have the principles of the nature of that being. Now, all the bodies of the universe are united with each other, thus clearly proving they all have the same principles. So we see that the life of all bodies must necessarily be ternary, in order to be able to maintain the three principles of the mixture of which they are all composed.

This is so true that the withdrawal of the vehicle produces what is commonly called the death of the body, and which we call reintegration.

If there are some incredulous about this, here is an experiment to convince them. When you seek far into the universe, oh man, you ignore that my works are near to you; look for them, not in books, which are collections of the vain imaginations of your fellow men, but in my simplest works. Look into your midpoint, to convince yourself that the reintegration of the bodies results from the withdrawal of the vehicle. Observe that you need to take this vehicle, firstly from a fire, 1, transfering itself to that of a stone, 2, finally giving rise to the explosion into a more subtle fire, being that of sulphur as contained in the flame of a match, 3. One may consider the fire of this match as the generator of the fire of the wood. The match, 1, causes the fire of the wood, 2, and that of the wood causes that of the air, which is the flame, 3. Let us now see their reintegration, and let us begin with air given to salt. The smoke, 1, begins to reintegrate with its principle, the air or the salt; the fire, 2, reintegrates into its solar principle, or sulphur; and finally, mercury, the solid body, remains on the surface of the earth making up the ash, 3. We see, through all these examples, that matter has taken shape through the arrangement of the three essences, and that these forms have got life from the vehicle. The same is true of the rupture of the philosophical matras, being due to the withdrawal of the doubly powerful spirit of the Creator, who kept all the forms contained in the matras deprived of movement. But, as soon as He saw that they had been formed by the spirits of the axis, and that they had acted following the thought of His Eternal Father, the Verb of the Father broke the barrier He had set on all the bodies, and traced out the various operations they should follow to them all, as well as to all the various divine spiritual beings who were in charge of them, by way of divine spiritual acts as well as laws for the different embodied beings. Now, the rupture of the philosophical matras, or what is commonly called chaos, began to develop due to the position that the general body, guided by Wisdom, came to occupy in the centre of the universal circle; because of its triangular form the general body should be the central point of the operation of the various bodies of the whole universe, as I will demonstrate even better later on when I will be talking about celestial bodies.

As soon as the general body had taken its place, the particular bodies took their places, also determined for them by the Divine Wisdom of the Father. Again we see the ternary number in the universal circle, the general body and the particular bodies. It is from the unity of action of these three classes of being in the universe that everything has a passive life, and that the law of apparent forms subsist during the course of their growth, production, and right up to their reintegration, as we can see in the eyes of the form, that, without the spiritual act of the spirits of the central fire axis acting unceasingly on all bodies, on the central axis vehicle which they inserted into them, without the reaction of the solar star, nothing, being without vitality on this surface, could produce anything.

Note well, brethren, that as soon as the universe was in its place, like the Eternal had conceived it in His thought, it was presented by our divine master, who presented his accomplished work, so that He would deign to give it the seal of His blessing. It is this blessing, or this dedication of the universal temple to the Eternal, that allows us to conceive of the principle of the quaternary number by way of the body, and of the septenary number. In the above, I have shown that the universe, being senary by its double ternary of apparent form and of life, was made according to the plan which the Eternal had given to the various spirits of the axis, by way of His ternary Verb in the centre of the triangle. For these three essences are to their vehicle what the triangle is to the Verb of the Eternal. It is this Verb that God conceived and manifested, at the centre of His triangle, to the spirits of the central fire axis, serving as a support to the entire universe, just as the vehicle is the support of all forms. The vehicle ends by reintegrating into the axis spirits who made it, whereas the Verb of the Father, being eternal, will exist for ever in the almighty Being who emanated it, after He has reintegrated it within Himself.

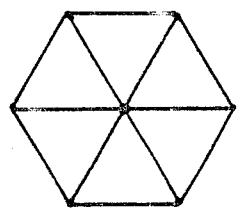
The quaternary number obtained its principle through the union which the Eternal made of the whole universe in dedicating it to Himself and in giving vitality to all the spirits, all the lives and all the forms, and in serving as a vitalizing, living centre with eternal life for the divine spiritual beings and a life of production, growth and reintegration during the course of all the forms of the universe.

God is so vitally essential to the duration of all beings of the universe that a grain of sand cannot have a shape unless it is united to Him. The grain of sand contains the three essences and the vehicle, 6. Now, the vehicle itself can only have life if it is vitalized. Vitalization is necessarily of God, who maintains unceasingly all the universe of beings, making up the quaternary number: the essences, 1; the form, 2; the life, 3; and vitalization, 4. In the same way, the division of the three essences, 3, the life of forms, 3, gives the senary number, 6.



Vitalization can only take place through the septenary: It is the ray divided six times which is engendered by the centre, forming six equilateral triangles to show that the law of the Eternal is universal, since it is impossible to describe a circle without starting from the centre. The centre is to the circle what the vehicle is to all bodies. Ignorance of this centre makes the circle useless to whoever wishes to operate on it, and the withdrawal of the vehicle takes away the movement from any form, makes it putrify, and makes its law of appearance cease for ever through reintegration.

Let us make the necessity of the quaternary number clearer. The central axis, 1, produced and maintains all the bodies of the universe, 2; the sun vitalizes them, 3. Now, as the central axis circle is in direct communion with the supracelestial, it draws vitality, passing it on to them, from the Divinity, 4. This shows us that, from the cedar to the hyssop, from the insect to the elephant, from the whale to the ichneumon, everything in this universe owes its existence to the awesome quaternary, as being that of the Divinity, complementing His indivisible, unchangeable, infinite and unmovable quadruple essence: indivisible, because nothing can exist without His unity and that, outside of Him, everything ceases to be, even as regards divine spiritual life, because it falls into the death of eternal privation; unchanging, because it never changes, its nature being inexhaustible; infinite, because it is co-eternal with Divinity, without beginning or end; and unchangeable, because it is through it that Divinity operates all emanations, all creations, all reintegrations. Finally, it is through it that the whole divine law operates, on the most perfect beings of the eternal spirits as well as on the crudest beings with manifest forms on this surface, since nothing can have form, movement and life except through it (2), and nothing can exist except in unity with it. Finally, it is what lets us see the Father, the Son, the Holy Spirit and the minor (3).

In the following discourse, we will speak of the various products of the nature of the various forms of the universe. For now, let us observe, brethren, that everything I have said in the previous discourses, and what I have just said, proves to us that the universe had been shaped and already begun to operate before man had left the bosom of the Creator. It will not be until the sixth discourse that, with the help of the Eternal, I will deal with his emanation.

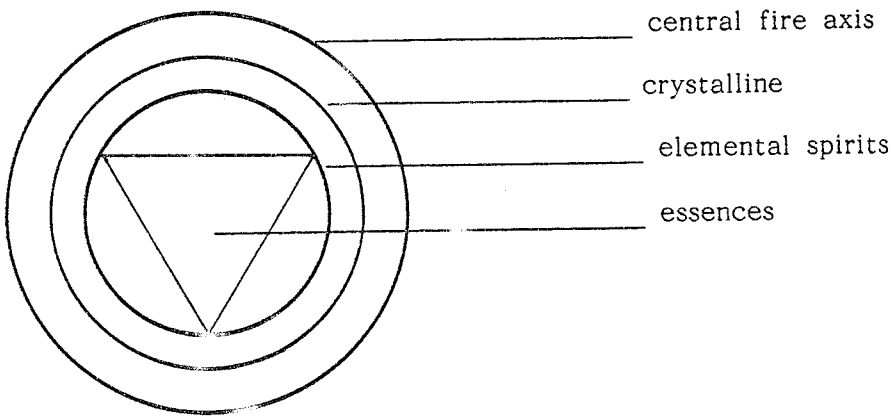
FIFTH LESSON

On the various productions of nature and of the various forms of this universe (R.A.)

My Brethren,

This vast universe, created by the Almighty thought of the Eternal, offers many beautiful things which can be contemplated in detail. The three circles of the following figure are the three main parts vivifying the surface of the general body of the earth.



The first of these circles, called the universal circle, is composed of innumerable fire spirits of the central fire axis, acting unceasingly on every living thing in the universe, containing one of their vehicles. The action of these spirits is so prodigious that it would soon consume all the celestial and terrestrial bodies, but eternal Wisdom has provided the second circle, which we call crystalline, also being composed of a prodigious number of spirits whose benign aquatic, humid action calms the great fire of the first spirits. The third circle is made up of the elemental spirits which surround us. It is through these three circles that the whole of nature is maintained. The physical proof of what I am saying about these circles is to be found in the three angles of the equilateral triangle of our earth, allowing us to see the action of these three circles upon it. The Western angle contains all the solids; it is where all the rocks are to be found; it is also given to mercury. The angle of the South is given to sulphur; thus we see that this angle of the earth is full of fires, all the volcanoes seem to be gathered together there. The Northern angle, given to salt, contains all the ice, which, as everyone knows, is only a frozen salt; since ice is made by using salt, etc. The meeting of the three angles and the three circles gives us the senary number, which shows us the six thoughts of the Eternal.

The upper part nourishes the lower part, just as the mouth, which is only the passage for food, nourishes the rest of the body: the same is true of the whole surface of the earth. A palpable proof that there are only three elements - earth, fire and water, and not air, which is only more rarified water -, which are the three realms: there is surely no realm in the air part. Everything there took life on the general body, or the earth, and is itself contained in these three realms. All winged species took life on the surface of the earth and cannot even sustain themselves in the air except by continual movement, which makes them feel, by the fatigue that this movement causes them, that they are not made to live in air, like fish, for example, laying their eggs and reproducing in water. The same is not true for air: all the insects which appear in this part began to take life here below, and the proof of this is very clear, for there are none which do not feed on the food to be found on this surface.

The various realms on earth prove to us once more the virtue of the ternary number: the vegetable, the mineral and the animal are considered as distinct from each other regarding their characteristics. However, what a prodigious number of beings of apparent from do they not contain, each in particular? This again provides us with confirmation of what I said in the preceeding discourses concerning the ternary mixture which makes up all bodies; mercury, sulphur and salt. They are in fact, to all the forms of the universe, what the three realms are to all the bodies of the earth. Just as these three realms contain a prodigious number of beings with different forms, sorted out into the three realms, in the same way the prodigious modification of all the forms of the universe are ordered in the ternary mixture of mercury, sulphur and salt, as being the generator, the support and the food of all these bodies. As soon as their combination ceases, there are no more forms, as can be seen by the reintegration of sulphur which operates on the body of the wood in a hearth: As soon as the sulphurous essence is reintegrated, there is no more form; as long as there is any left, the body is not destroyed. As in coal, there is a form, but as soon as the coal receives a new action of fire reintegrating all that remains of its sulphurous part, the only form left is ash. If this ash is again put into a large fire, it also reintegrates in its turn.

Now I will ask: What became of the form of this wood? What became of the essences of which it was made? And what became of the number of its shape? I will reply that the form has been totally dissipated, because there is no vestige of it to be seen; that these essences have been reintegrated into the basic part, but that the number still remains, and here is how I will prove it. The number is co-eternal, as I have shown in the previous discourses; however much the forms may change, being but pure appearance, the spirits which formed them produced and passed their number on to them. Thus they cannot lose it, so it must necessarily return to them, just like they gave it. The spirits of the axis received the ternary number at the time of their emanation. That which operates must necessarily bear the number of its factors, agents or makers, since it is through that same number they operate on all the bodies having issued from them. They operate on them through their ternary number. Therefore that same number of whichever body must return to its first source, since the number certainly has no shape nor form of any kind, even though we cannot conceive of it without one. But we are well aware, for example, that a spirit has no form; the same is true of the number. Thus, we see that matter exists, has form and duration, only through the continual operation of the spirits of the central fire axis which produced it, through that of the cristalline spirits which give it its nourishment through the share of influence they impart accordingly as they receive it through the supracelestial from Divinity.

One must not believe that the prodigious number of spirits which sustain all the bodies of this vast universe need themselves to receive a real substantial matter, in order to sustain it. Not at all. These spirits have inherent in them, from the time of their emanation, the ability to extract spirituous essences and to sustain them, just as a father feeds his child, because he has what is needed to provide it with something to eat. The same is true of these spirits. They have everything to sustain the production, growth and reintegration of all the bodies of the universe, without it being a question of a vehicle of real, existing matter, since matter has no reality except through its appearance, and its appearance exists only through the operation of these same spirits, which is purely spirituous, distinct from these pure and simple spirits, in that the ternary spirits are endowed with all kinds of faculties, of movement and of balance, for the sustenance of all bodies, but they do not have the knowledge nor the capacity of thought given to pure spirits such as man, etc. This is what spirituous action means, and it may be described as movement, since the activity appertains to beings superior to those we are speaking about and is purely spiritual; this can be conceived of by the vast and incomparable difference between thought and any kind of corporal movement. One may go several times around the universe in one moment by thought, whereas, in order for the tiniest being on the surface to move over the distance of a few toises(1), a considerable amount of time is needed, as it has nothing to do with thought, being limitless and unrelated to time.

Bodies, therefore, are only what children let us see on glass when, with water and soap, and with a straw, they make an apparent body having its solidity or weight, its dimension or shape, and its number, which is the operation of the agents of the forms. This body of air is blown to a height beyond that at which it took its form; the reaction taking place as it falls causes it to break its union, it reintegrates into the air without leaving the tiniest vestige for the eyes of those who see it. The same is true of all forms: everything having had a beginning must end. This body, having lasted only a moment, is the real image of the most solid bodies of the earth, such as the hardest diamonds, stones and rocks. Their reintegration takes place by the same laws which caused that of the soap bubbles, each one following the modification of what it was made up of. Thus, we can no more conceive of real, existing matter than we can conceive of continually using an article of clothing without wearing it out. An article of clothing forms its reintegration every day and has to be replaced. This shows us the successive duration of the various bodies, which only exist through the continual operation of the various beings activating them; this enables us to see in the continual ending of these same bodies, the end of this apparent universe. Let us hasten to consider the moment when all beings shall have no limits other than those they have set themselves, through the use of their free will within the one they had here below.

The almighty Being who presides over everything and whose infinite bounty is felt by every being, not content with having engraved His holy laws in ineffable characters in our souls and in our hearts, personally wished to give us His example of what we ought to do in order to share in the joy of His chosen ones. His very holy manifestations of glory began with Adam, 1; they were repeated under the descendants of Adam by the holy man, Enoch, 2; were continued by Noah, 3, to the reconciliation of the earth; they finally showed their power under Abraham, 4; from there, under Moses, 5; in the deliverance of the chosen people. The same deliverance was seen under Zorobabel, 6, by the return from captivity of Babylon to come and form the centre of His divine spiritual operations; through the regeneration of the minor, through the birth of our divine master J. C., who came to put the seal on the minors who were, are and shall be worthy of it, by the 7th choice which he made in the centre of his receptacle, as having to be the meeting point of all the spirits who will unite their will to his, sharing in the promises of the Eternal, in the fruit of so many choices, in the action of the Holy Spirit, in the operation of so many graces, in the destruction of the barrier which separates us from divine communicaton through the sin of our first father, in the operation of the apostles, the prophets and the patriarchs, in the ineffable gifts of the Holy Spirit, and, above all, in the precious blood of Jesus Christ, offered unto the Eternal for our sanctification and poured upon the divine spiritual being and on the apparent form of each one of us who wishes to follow the holy laws he laid down for us during his life.

Let us therefore unite, my very dear brethren, in one single thought, will and deed, to approach the altar of his compassion in the holy time of the holy week, when the whole universe celebrates the death of our divine Saviour; let us all die with him in the world, in its pride and covetousness, to be resurrected with him, with the robe of sanctification, or with the robe of a new divine spiritual life, entirely devoted to follow in every respect the divine laws, precepts and commandments of the Eternal. May God grant us every grace to do this. Amen

Amen. Amen. Amen.

SIXTH LESSON

On the emanation of man (R.A.)

My Brothers,

Does the picture of the emanation of the first man have to be redrawn to make it the subject of our praise or of our regrets: of our praise because of the sublime state in which he was placed in the beginning; of our regrets because of the state of humiliation, of errors and of darkness into which he had fallen because of his corrupt practices? Then how can we rise again to this original state if we do not have a correct idea of it? Yet it is our duty, for the aim of all our works is to regain the knowledge we had the misfortune of losing through the corruption of our first father.

The Universe was created, all the beings which are part of it were already fulfilling the laws of their emanation, such as divine Wisdom had ordered for them, all the bodies were occupying their places, when the Eternal emanated man, or Adam, the "roux" or "reaux" man, which means to be elevated in divine spiritual glory. He was emanated in a body of indestructible glory, which was not subject to any influence from the elemental part. There was no need for any kind of nutrition for his form, which was wholly spiritual; the purest spirit of the central fire axis had no more influence on this form than the one operating on the most crude element of matter, because a body of glory is only the outer form of a pure spirit, which it takes on at will and, similarly, leaves when it becomes purely and simply a spirit again. This form was of a similar kind to the one we now have. The equilateral triangle, the first image which appeared in the thinking mind of the Eternal, was this same form. It differed from the one we now have only in nature; one was glorious, spiritual and impassive, and the other is dark, material and passive(1).

The Eternal had created everything for this man, whom He named man-god of the earth. After having manifested His immense power over all the created universe, which obeyed Him with respect, He gave man his law, precept and commandment so that he should be able to operate with and against the first corrupted spirits. He taught him the purpose of his emanation, which should have been to attack, fight and reduce the first corrupted spirits to the greatest privation, and thus bring about their redemption. Finally, he was to do for them what they have since done, and still do, against him, by seducing him and leading him into the snares of error and impure seduction which they use against him to lead him to evil. Adam was to lead them to good through the various works he had to perform on them. He had received from the Eternal a verb of descendance of God similar to Himself, through which he was to be reborn by having a divine spiritual being come down in glorious form similar to his own, sent by the Eternal. Through his verb, Adam should have made a body of glory into which the Eternal was to have a spirit sent down. Thus the work of Adam would have been one with that of the Eternal, and he would have seen himself reborn as a descendant of God, whose full glory would have been the admiration of the heavens and of earth.

Perhaps one might ask me how a verb could produce a form. I would reply that the Eternal, being a pure spirit, without space, without limits and without time, because He is infinite, is able to emanate divine spiritual beings and outer bodies only through His allpowerful thought. Now, the spirit He emanates is certainly a verb (2), as it can be considered: thought gives rise to will, and will to the verb. With Divinity, it is not the same as with limited beings: with the Eternal, any verb is a spirit, whereas, in the case of all emanated beings, a verb is only an act of that same spirit. No thought of Divinity can remain without action. Now, every being He emanated out of Himself, endowed with faculties for manifesting His will, has an innate verb within, through which it must manifest it(3). This verb is so closely linked to its being that it is bound to be itself. I am going to explain this in greater detail before continuing.

The eternal verb of Divinity remains for all eternity in close union with the Divinity, God the Father, since it is His direct action and thus the Divinity Himself, as well as with the Holy Spirit, being the eternal action of both. So it must not be confused with any kind of emanation, because they are the essences of Divinity. But every divine spiritual being, having emanated from the Divinity, is considered as having the verb of its emanation innate in itself, as having come from the threefold essence of Divinity. Through its emanation from the eternal Father, it has thought innate; through the thought of the eternal Son, or of the Verb, it also has its verb; and through that of the Holy Spirit, it has its action. This verb is so closely innate in it that it constitutes the law, precept and commandment which it must follow; contained in it is the number which, being coeternal, brings about the thought of the Father, the will of the Son and the action of the Spirit. That is what the Scripture means when it says: "The heavens and earth will pass away, but my verbs will never pass away"; for every emanation is eternal: 1. through the thought, 2. through the verb, 3. through the number, and 4. through the very essence of which it is made, which, being spiritual and divine, is found to have innate in it four eternal faculties, for it is an emanation of the four-fold essence of the Divinity. A true verb is a spirit, for the Divinity manifests His all-powerful thought only through spirits. Now, since He is necessarily always thinking, He must also constantly emanate spirits, for which He creates virtues, powers and properties, and this gives Him the name of the Eternal Creator. Adam was, by the Eternal, made guardian of one of His verbs of creation of a glorious form, into which the Eternal was to send down a divine spirit similar to Himself, and he was also to see himself reborn in a descendance of God.

Adam having manifested the great power with which he was vested, through the order and in the presence of the Eternal, was left alone by the Divinity to make use of the strength, virtue and power he was vested with. Adam was perfectly aware of the purpose of his emanation, he knew that he had come to fight unceasingly against the evil demon, and to act on its behalf. Left alone, Adam began to think about the great power he had been given, which he thought was equal to that of Divinity Itself, and, in this confusion, he tried to see into divine infinity. This was something the Divinity had forbidden him to do, expressly having told him never to look into it except through His involvement or by His order. (This divine infinity is incomprehensible to every emanated being, because one must be God Himself to be able to understand it). This thoughtless pursuit plunged Adam into perplexity, as he could not fathom what he had not been permitted to see. Adam's thought of looking into divine infinity became immediately known to the first corrupt spirits.

Before going any further, I would like to say that Adam had been emanated at the centre of the six divine spiritual circles, where he was the center, thus making him feel that he was made to command the whole universe. He resided in the centre of the earthly paradise, which is none other than the centre of the heavens, for a body of glory, being spiritual, does not need a solid base to support itself. The various fruits allegorically attributed to this paradise are none other than those which the Eternal expected from the first man if he had followed the plan of his emanation. They also represent the fact that Adam was not likely to be nourished by any of the tainted fruits of matter, but that he was only nourished by the purely divine, spiritual fruits of his nature. A pure simple spirit, such as Adam was, does not drink or eat to maintain his body since he leaves it and returns to it at will. The paradise on earth or earthly paradise, is therefore none other than the centre of the heavens, where Adam was to have resided with all his descendants, if he had not sinned, and the first corrupted sprits would then have inhabited the lower part, or the earth, where they would have been enclosed in bodies of visible matter approximately like those which we have. There is no doubt that, had (sic) Adam remained faithful to the law of the Eternal, he would have been a mediator of reconciliation on behalf of those first corrupted beings. The first lodge which was held in the Universe was that of the Creator, of His divine Son under the name of Hely, and Adam. They held it to decide on the form they would give to the first corrupted spirits. Adam therefore must have been well aware that the whole plan of this law which was to be given to these corrupted beings, depended on the strength with which he would drive them back in his fight, for the leader of the demons, having conceived the impious thought of attacking the Divinity itself, would undoubtedly attack the emanated beings who had originated from Him, and it was certainly for this combat that the Divinity had endowed Adam with great power to resist and contain him.

Adam, being able to see the Divinity, then saw what the Eternal was thinking; he also knew what the perverse spirit was thinking, because nothing is hidden between pure and simple spirits. It is not the same as amongst men, who hide their thoughts and mask them by words which often say the opposite. Before the spirit everything is unveiled, unclouded and open. This is why the language of the good spirit cannot be understood by men of matter, because, through their impure link with the evil spirit, they continually receive new veils hiding the truth from them. It is this veil of abomination which makes all men who allow themselves to be covered by it into men of error, doubts and darkness, and finally leads them to eternal privation by persuading them that they are following the law of the Eternal, just as the devil had persuaded Adam of this. For, if the evil spirit were to show man all the horror of his thoughts, he would not let himself be seduced by them. But he attacks by means of a lot of deception which he knows is likely to please the ill will of the spiritual being, imperceptibly seducing his material sense, and then the divine being.

I imagine a man who openly contemplated a place of delights, of which all the combined beauty enraptured his soul; I imagine that the law this man had received was to always have his eyes on this place, and that, from the moment he allowed himself to be seduced into looking elsewhere, he would then cease to see the place of delights. Someone called from behind, and told him to turn his head, and that there was a place even more pleasant than the first. This man was free, he looked at this place and saw well that nothing could equal it, but finally, of his own free will, allowing himself to be seduced, he turned his head. Instead of seeing a place of delights, he saw only horrible things. He wished to turn back to the original view, but a wall ten feet thick had been put up, preventing him from seeing it. Now, if he were asked to give you a plan of this first place, it would be very difficult for him; because of the distance he was away from it, he would even doubt what was said about it by those who could see it.

Adam had his free will, just as did the corrupt spirits; for, having come to bring about justice over them, his nature was such that he had been given the faculty through which the first corrupt spirits had sinned, to serve as an example to teach them and be a living example that might have caused them to change a great deal. By increasingly restricting the evil action of these first spirits and by serving as a good contact, he would imperceptibly have brought them back to a change of action, or regeneration, for every spirit changing its law must necessarily change its action. If the leader of the corrupt spirits had changed by adopting the law of the Eternal, there would be no more question of evil over the whole expanse of this universe for he is the tree of the life of evil, not evil itself, for through his emanation the law of the Eternal is innate in him and so he can only bear evil and not create it in any way, as all creation must be of God, the Eternal Creator. The corrupt spirits can only give rise to actions opposed to good, always occuring in them with a considerable decrease in their action, for sovereign good must exist in the Divinity and the ability to do evil has never been in Him. So it is absolutely certain that each individual being who wishes to attack the essential Being will become the weakest of all beings.

Acting through principles opposed to those innate in it, it senses, at the very time of its victory, the conflicts within itself, which humiliate it far more than its victories could make it proud. These conflicts stem from the absolute conviction, which it cannot destroy in itself, that all it does is opposed to its very nature as a divine spiritual being, and that, due to the state of dissatisfaction it is in, since it does not take part in the destiny of those who follow the laws of the essential Being. This can be seen through the life of men here below, who do evil only with difficulty and have to work at it, then to find terrible emptiness after the success of their evil undertakings, for which they had promised themselves the greatest satisfaction. It is this unhappy state of man that has led so many to despair, at the very moment when their fellow men, guided by the same error, believed them to be at the height of happiness. I repeat, nothing can destroy the nature of the laws which the Eternal has laid down. Every being departing from them is the unhappiest of beings, because the whole of nature conspires against him, as everything is based on good. He then becomes the dual receptacle of good and evil: of the evil he does with difficulty, and of the good which torments him, for he can never destroy what is inborn in him.

From what I have just said, one can see, that the origin of evil should not be considered as being the work of any spirit which is evil in itself, it is strictly only the will opposed to that of the essential Being, that gives rise to evil. It is this creation of evil which shows how unsound all men's research into objects contrary to their nature is, for uniting them with those who profess evil, it only tends to make them the most unhappy in nature. This is seen every day before our eyes in the unfortunate conduct of men who allow themselves to be led by what is commonly known as the passions, and which we call poor intellect; and yet they still seek light in the darkness, and never find it, like ships in the war, which through mistaken judgement believe themselves to be on the high seas, and seeing lights, take them to be ships, and heading towards them at full sail, believing they would not get there in time, hit only the rocks of a steep cliff, on which they are shattered, and they die in what they thought was going to be a source of their happiness in this life. This picture is that of every man who allows himself to be taken in by our common enemy, whose total work consists in making his laws of abomination appear to man as pure as divine spiritual laws.

Still man has powerful weapons to oppose him. The most powerful are those of prayer. It is through prayer that man becomes more intimately united with the infinite action of the Holy Spirit, who gives him a strength superior to that of all of his enemies. Next to prayer, I place regularity of conduct, for it is very difficult to be able to go near the fire without being burned. The third are (sic) good works, which truly belong to the person who does them, for they obtain for him an indestructible fruit of blessings from the Eternal which finally leads him, even in this life, to protection from the attacks of his enemies. This is what I pray the Eternal to grant us all. To Him be glory, honour and praise from all beings which have been emanated or created, for ever and ever. Amen.

Amen. Amen. Amen.

SEVENTH LESSON

On man's prevarication (R.A.)

Brethren,

After having retraced the glorious state of our first father, we are going to examine the state he fell into through his prevarication.

He had been emanated to manifest the greatest glory of the Eternal, and he tried to manifest his power for his personal satisfaction by allowing himself to be led astray by his enemy, who told him of a plan totally opposed to that of the laws of the Eternal. Adam used the power of the devil to attack the Eternal and committed his crime in the presence of the corrupt spirits to their detriment, for, as I have already said, he had been emanated to perform a cult(1) of reconciliation on behalf of these first spirits.

By the justice of the Eternal, Adam was cast from the centre of the celestial realms, and was forced to go to the abyss of the earth, there to assume a form similar to the one we have. He fell into despair and darkness because of his crime, and the state of nakedness he was in with the companion and object(2) of his misfortune, and because God had stripped him of his body of glory. Just as it says symbolically in the Scriptures, God made them some clothes. Now the clothing he made them is none other than the visible shape which covers our divine spiritual being, or our soul.

God banished them from the earthly paradise, or from heaven, to come and crawl on earth like the rest of the animals, and subjected them to time. It was this subjection which made Adam realize the full horror of his crime, for, in his first state of glory, he was a thinking being of the Divinity, and so he encountered no obstacles to communication with Him; whereas, in his second body of matter, he found himself subjected to the attacks of the mind which constantly assail the path of his visible shape, then, as soon as it becomes its master, it attacks the spiritual being enclosed in it. Now, while the soul is engaged in this fight, it is not thinking, but is pensive. It was not the same for Adam, who having received an undestructible body of glory from the Divinity, now received the communication of the thought of the Eternal through a superior being that God sent to him in a visible form and who communicated His unveiled will to him; instead, as he had become pensive, he could, due to the work he constantly had to do to check incorrect thought, only be a thinking being at times, through a close union with the spirit.

Now this union is only the reward for the strength with which he drives away incorrect thought, thus satisfying the justice of the Eternal concerning the crime of our first father, for the earthly being which has most benefitted from the union of the spirit must necessarily be the one having most felt privation, since, during the time he was combatting evil, his soul was suffering from privation and fear, being what we call the punishment of the spirit; privation due to estrangement from the good spirit and coming closer to the evil one, and fear due to the terror of man falling prey to his enemy.

Now, it is the fidelity of the minor in this spiritual battle that has made apostles and prophets, and this again is what makes sages. The thinking being is directly of the Divinity, whereas the pensive being can never be in touch with the Divinity when it is pensive, for it is in privation. Man is now thinking and pensive; pensive through the subjection he is under to engage in a battle for atonement, and thinking through the reward God has given him for his victories by closely uniting him with the spirit, through which he comes in touch with the Divinity. If each one of us wished to observe what happens to us every day, we would be aware of the truth of what I have just said.

The fall of Adam is described in the Scriptures, where it is said that God had told him to eat all the fruits of the earthly paradise except the fruit of the tree of life and of knowledge of good and evil. The tree of life was none other than the leader of the demons, which is the tree of the life of evil for an eternity. Indeed it was for having eaten of its fruit, or for having retained an impression of his evil thought, for, as I have said above, Adam was a pure spirit who did not eat or drink any elemental food, but was nourished by food totally divine and spiritual in nature. The forbidden fruit was none other than the demonical thought Adam received and which brought him death, by depriving him of divine spiritual communication, and with which, together with his followers, he attacked the Divinity.

It was this terrible crime which made him aware of his nakedness, because no sooner had he committed it than he was deprived of his body of glory and banished from heaven, or from the earthly paradise, and he came to crawl on earth like the rest of the animals. Adam felt inconceivable uneasiness in his material form. The good companion spirit incessantly showed him the horror of his crime by constantly showing him his image. Adam felt the most bitter sorrow and began his penitence which lasted forty days, during which, with his companion, he did not cease to bemoan his crime. This first cult of atonement was inspired in Adam through our divine master, Jesus Christ, under the name of Hely, who himself offered worship to God, his father, so that man, or the minor, through the justice of the Eternal would not be subjected to eternal privation. Without this worship by the divine man, Adam would not have been able to do penitence for his crime, and would have remained the most minor of demonical minors, for his penitence or the pain of sin, can never come directly from the one who has committed it, since he is then in a state of death; it is always passed on to him through the Holy Spirit. It is his union with the Holy Spirit that works his merit, and it is through it that he acquires all the enlightenment on the most effective means for obtaining the remission of his sins. Now, there always has to be a mediator between God and the sinner, for God, being unchangeable and having condemned all sinners to eternal death, definitely has to find a righteous person who will take on the burden of death to which all sinners are condemned. This is why one can see the necessity of carrying out justice, mercy and reconciliation, which Jesus Christ, our divine master, came to fulfill in the middle of time on behalf of Adam and his descendents who would open themselves to it, for Adam, through his prevarication, finding himself dead in eternal privation, would never have been able to come back to life if Jesus Christ had not taken away from this wretched being the burden of the justice of the Eternal under which he was suffering, by offering himself to God, his father, bearing the whole burden of the crime of Adam and his descendants. Without the justice of Jesus Christ, Adam would never have been pardoned for his crime and would never have achieved reconciliation, for he would not have been fit to receive the communication of the Holy Spirit. Thus it was absolutely necessary, in order for Adam to begin a cult of atonement, that his divine mediator, one of his descendants, should already have offered himself as a sacrifice for atonement for the same crime. This act of justice by the divine man on behalf of Adam must make us think what kind of cult God expected from his first man on behalf of the prevaricating spirits, for, on coming into the world, Christ said: "I am the true Adam".

The shape of our first father did not change after his prevarication, the shape was similar to that of the glorious form(3) he had, relative to the equilateral triangle which God had conceived of to be the image of the head of the universe. The cult that Jesus Christ offered on Adam's behalf enabled him to perform, even in his form of visible matter, a temporal spiritual cult which led him to his perfect reconciliation, and which he passed on to his descendants for the same purpose. Adam had changed his form, for in the beginning he was in a glorious, all-spiritual form and he came down in a tenebrous form of passive matter; but the shape is exactly the same, it contains the equilateral triangle in its extremities.

The body of man is divided into three parts: the first is the head, the second is the chest and the third are (sic) the bones(4). These three parts are joined by cartilaginous ligaments which can be taken apart without breaking the bones. Again we see the ternary number: the bones, the blood and the flesh, which, with the three divisions, enable us to see the senary number, or the 6 thoughts the Eternal used for the creation of the universe. One also finds the senary number in the three essences which make up the body of man, and the three angles of the equilateral triangle, giving six; by adding up these two numbers, we have the number 12 or 3, which shows us that the body of man is the act of the spirits of the central fire axis, bearing the ternary number and all of whose work should bear that number.

One might perhaps ask me if the laws governing Adam's body of glory are the same as the ones governing his body of visible matter? I would reply that a being which changes in action must also change its laws. At the outset, Adam had a wholly divine spiritual action, for he was in no way mixed with the temporal. Consequently, his law was purely spiritual, whereas, in his body of matter, his action being extremely limited and subject to the temporal, his law was changed from a pure and simple spiritual law to a temporal spiritual law, which made him into a being of privation, for bodies are always chaos, or darkness, to the spirit. This proves demonstrably that the form of matter which Adam is subject to by a decree of the Eternal, was made to serve as a prison for him and to make him feel, for the duration of his stay in this form, the penalty for his crime. It is through the various sufferings that he has endured in this form of passive matter that he has partially satisfied the justice of the eternal; thus one can see why it is absolutely necessary for the minor here below to endure the punishment of the soul, body and spirit to atone for the mistake of our first forefather.

In the continuation, we shall go into more details concerning the prevarication of Adam. I shall for now speak of the bodily structure which operates for the purification of sin. I will give as an example a bar of iron which is removed from its die or from its mine. Is it not true that it is full of unrefined, dirty parts, preventing it from being used for any purpose? What does one use to turn it into a pure enough state to be able to retain the various forms one wishes to give it? One uses the fiercest peat fire, of which the dense, dirty flame attracts all the parts which are of its nature, whereas another, lighter charcoal gives a pure flame which, through its action, being superior to that of the fiery content of the peat, removes all the dirty parts which the other one attracts, since it is of the same nature. The fire of the charcoal has a far more active movement, and as it detaches the dirty particles, it communes with the vehicles innate in the fire and gives it considerable movement, to the point of imparting to it its fiery colour. Now, as soon as it has attained this colour, it is sure proof that it is in direct contact with its superior fire. Then this great fiery activity is stopped with water, restoring the iron to its natural purity, and it is ready to be employed for the uses of its law.

In this raw body you see what happens in the body of man, the most favoured of the gifts of nature, such as Adam was, as soon as he had come down into his body of matter, which was the body of sin, through the malediction God had cast on him and on the whole earth. The body of Adam was earthly, and thus full of impure, unrefined parts and stains which his enemy had given it. What did God use to purify this repentant, penitent and pleading man? He used the fires I spoke of in the comparison I made: one good, originating from the all-powerful action of the Holy Spirit, whose holiness, purity and action, acting in all its effectiveness on the form of this first man, imperceptibly removed the dirty and foreign stains which the spirit of darkness had caused, whereas this evil spirit, which continually assaulted him, attracted to himself what was of his nature.

What were the vehicles of his nature? Faith, hope and charity, innate in Adam through the Eternal. It was on these faculties of man that the Holy Spirit constantly breathed to remove the stain of Adam's crime, whereas the evil spirit counteracted on his side to retain him in his throng. Now, we see that all Adam's worth was to be united to the Holy Spirit through faith. It is through faith that he removed, by the fire of the Holy Spirit, all the stains which were in his soul and in his form, and that he achieved his reconciliation by presenting his soul and form to the Eternal in its radiance of whiteness, purity and innocence, as its divine spiritual nature required.

Let us then not cease, my brothers, to work on ourselves to become persistent in the faith, for it is the only way to obtain the remission of our sins. We can well see that the greatest acts of humanity are nothing without faith, for it is not these acts which unite us with the spirit. It is only through faith in Jesus Christ that we are saved; it is through this fatih alone that we close the lion's mouth; it is through this faith alone that we have knowledge, hope and charity, which is the centre of all virtues: without it, we have nothing.

(2) Eve.
(3) Beware of the different meaning of the words shape and form. Shape is relative to the basic triangular pattern, whereas form relates to the spiritual or physical expression of the shape.

(4) The martinist way of division of the body into three is the head, the chest and the abdomen, each having two mobile members, the head: upper and lower jaws, the chest: the arms, and the abdomen: the legs, making up the senary number. Then comes the other division into the bones, the blood and the flesh, also making up the senary number together with the three main divisions.

THE TREE OF LIFE

"And out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil." Genesis, ii, 9.

THE veneration of trees is so ancient that its origin is lost in the obscurity of man's primordial history. Therefore it is not at all surprising that we should find the creation of trees mentioned in the Genesiac account of creation as a prominent factor in that traditional process.

Trees have been assumed, from remotest antiquity, to enshrine a kind of divinity; to have, as it were, a deific nature and character of their own. For this reason trees were worshipt and Tree Worship was one of the earliest world-religions. Vestiges of this ancient tree worship are seen as persistences in Druidical rites, and even the Christian Church uses trees in a deeply symbolic sense, especially at Christmas, the Yule season, and during the old-time May festivals.

Veneration of trees still persists among some Asiatics. In some races of these Orientals both males and females were actually married to trees of alleged opposite sexual polarities. Such marriages do not interfere with the ordinary human marriage and its normal relationships, but each individual so married to a tree, is assumed to receive special protection from the tutelary deity represented, first by the tree as a tree, second by the species of tree (Group Spirit idea), and third, by the locale of the tree. So a triad of divine influences is assumed to be brot to bear upon the fortunate individual who is husband or wife to a tree.

It is not difficult to see wherein the essential mystery of the tree would appeal powerfully to primitive instincts, and even as our own culture broadens, we are learning to accord a degree of respect to trees that is not based solely upon economic considerations or the propaganda of reforestation.

When we see a tiny shoot emerge from the darkness of earth, from an invisible source, and by even, rhythmic, yet really rapid stages, develop from shoot to stalk, from stalk to sapling, from sapling to trunk, assuming its varied coatings of bark, rising to majestic height, and demonstrating its ability to successfully combat the elemental nature forces swirling peacefully or raging tempestuously about, it, as the case may be, we too, feel a sense of awe, as if beholding for the first time, a wondrous miracle.

Having graspt the rudiments of the mystical life cycle suggested by the tree and its evolution, and with the example afforded by the trees everywhere about him, Man was not slow to adapt the general concept to the more intimate processes in his individual as well as his generic life. What is more, as man's primal efforts at realizing the mystery of life itself have shaped his religious and philosofical concepts and expression, so it is quite natural that the scheme of life energy as illustrated by the tree, should have found expression in the secret or mystical doctrinalia of his higher intellectual and spiritual affirmations.

The Kabalists found the tree schema most excellently adapted for the expression and projection of their concept o fthe Divine Emanations.' The Sephirotic Tree of Life is well known to all well informed students of the occult or mystical sciences and the reasonableness of its development has an distinct appeal to our intelligence, even tho the body of the Kabbalah itself be not so readily accepted.

The Sephirotic Tree of Life shews the progress of Divine unfoldment in manifestation and the projection into visible manifestation of the En Soph. Beyond the Ten Sefiroth or Emanations, En Soph is, in itself, a Trinity, En. En Soph, and En Soph Aur, which is explained in a previous lesson.

The Ten Sephiroth are ten veils of Divinity, which the aspirant must learn how to rend before he can enter the Sanctum Sanctorum and stand before the Real Presence of the Shekinah, which only the Pure in Heart can lawfully attain. The Kabbalistic Tree of this Sephiroth conceals the mystery, the thread of the invisible energy streaming from the darkness of chaos into manifestation and light, bearing the Divine Attributes which are operative before our consciousness.

In some Kabbalistic systems the Emanations proceed from Kether to Malkuth. In others, from Malkuth to Kether, according to the interpretation sought. This reminds us of that other Tree of Life, famous in Norse mythology, Ygdrasil. In some legends, this tree has its roots in heaven and its branches and fruits upon the earth, the symbolism of which will be quite obvious. In stricter renderings, it is the tree, the roots and branches of which bind together the heaven, earth and hell "and from which all the tribes of Nature derive nourishment; literally, the bearer of Ygg or Odin." On the top of the tree an eagle perches. Between the eagle's eyes rests Vedfolner, the hawk. Herein is an Egyptian trace.

According to Anderson§, "Ygdrasil is one of the noblest conceptions that ever entered into any scheme of cosmology or human existence. It is, in fact, the great tree of life."

The roots of Ygdrasil are assumed to penetrate the three vast realms,— first, "of death, where, in the well Hvergelmer, the dragon Nidhug and his brood are ever gnawing at it: second, that of the giants, where, in the fountain of Mimer, is the source of wisdom: third, that of the gods, Asgaard, where, at the sacred fountain of Rud, is the divine tribunal, and the dwelling of the Fates." (Encyclo. Britt. 11*th Ed. Vol. xxviii, p.* 920.)

As the Kabbalistic Tree conceals the essential mystery of Israel's Secret Doctrine, another expression of the Tree of Life is found to similar purpose which emerges a bit more definitely from the realm of abstraction but not wholly into the light of objective manifestation, for its activities are not subject to examination by anatomists or physiologists. Thus far, the blossoms on the Tree of Life just alluded to, which expresses the Hindu concepts, are the Chakras which are assumed by occult scientists to be operative in the etheric and astral counterparts of the human physical vehicle. The fruits of the Tree of Life are the virtues manifested as the buds and blossoms, or chakras, unfold.

Like the Sephiroth, the Chakras, according to the Hindu system, are ten in number, allocated in the human economy as follows; the top of the head, between the eyebrows, at the throat, in the heart, at the spleen, in the solar plexus, at the spinal base. The three remaining chakras are located in the lower pelvic basin. It is believed by certain occultists that these last three chakras are not brot into use except thru Black Magic. Ordinarily it is taught that by virtue of these chakras, properly awakened, the aspirant gains knowledge of the astral spheres of being thru the clairvoyant vision.

§ R. B. Anderson, Norse Mythology, pt. i, p. 188. S.C.G. 1879.

Our physical vehicle is the one we have brot nearest to perfection in the course of our evolution thus far. Next comes the etheric and astral vehicles or instruments. The physical body is equipt with functioning organs which we have studied thru anatomy and physiology. Our etheric and astral bodies also have their organs, not in the same sense of solid objectivity, but on the etheric plane, as seeming vortices of force-energy. These vortices of impalpable attenuated spirit-substance serve as the links between the physical vehicle and its spiritual counterpart. It is thru these links that the energy of the spiritual world is transfered and transmitted to the body of matter that we know so well, in the phenomenon we call "life."

These vortices are what our eastern Brethren call Chakras. Like the Kabbalists, they note ten such centers or Chakras. Rosicrucians distinguish twelve, two of which have come into manifestation since the early Aryan classification was formed many centuries ago. From our occidental, and possibly more practical viewpoint, we regard these chakras as vortices for in this form they exhibit their power according to a natural law that we can readily understand. But to the eastern sense of imagery, they appeared as flowers, more especially as buds, because in their present status in normal humanity, they arc in bud formtaion, like a vortex not fully expanded by its energy.

At present, as stated, the chakras are unopened, or at least only partially opened, hence they have been called buds—"lotos buds" or flowers. The simile is perhaps justified, not because these chakras really look like flowers in the least, but because the term lends itself readily to a reasonable method of explaining them. As they awaken, they expand. This is why the lotos has always been used by orientals of all races, as the simile of the womb, of the mother, of Mother Earth, of the Divine Mother, the Marys, Maya, etc. Moisture and warmth cause that which is germinating in the womb to expand it. Finally it opens and its fruit is given to the world.

In due time, when our spiritual vehicles have developed to a much greater extent, we shall enjoy the results that will accrue from our awakened or unfolded lotus flowers or buds. At present, in our partially awakened status, we enjoy only the faculty of intuition, except in instances where, by careful preparation and scientific process, one has succeeded in awakening and functioning one or more of his chakras. Rarely will one be found who has succeeded in functioning more than two or three of them. In still rarer instances, several chakras have been stimulated into partial and even full activity, and then we have the spectacle of a true Master, Messenger or Avartar.

The chakras are composed of the material or substance of the astral world, motivated by the energy of the etheric world. Unawakened, they may be likened to buds which embody the patent potencies of specific activity. Stimulated by the warmth of the Akashic or astral Fire and the moisture of the psychic "humors", both applied thru proper developmental processes, the "lotus buds" begin to expand, somewhat as a vortex in water, a sand storm or other vehicle expands from its focus as its energy is releast. In the process of expansion its streaming energies, which can be seen only by the "clear" or clairvoyant vision, are somewhat like the petals of the lotus and the individual chakras are distinguisht by the number" of their petals, which vary according to the relative importance of the chakra noted or observed.

It is not easy to unfold these chakras. A great deal of patience and much meditation of a very special kind is needful. There are no short cuts or quick methods. Development of the spiritual vision is a process that has to work thru physiological functions as well as the more purely psychic. Therefore, it becomes a matter of organic development as well as spiritual. In the meantime, the aspirant is conscious of "flashes" of vision, hearing or prescience, that are new to him and therefore stand out distinct from his normal experience.

The seven chakras ordinarily taught by the Hindu system, in the order of their location from the head down thru the body, are as follows:

Chakra 1. Ajna—Two Petals
Location: Centered between Eyebrows.
Dominant Tattwa: Manas or Mentalism.
Dissolved Tattwas: Mahat or the Sukshuma Prakriti, otherwise known as Hiranyagarbha.

Chakra 2. Vishuddha—Sixteen Petals
Location: Spinal center of region of throat near Larynx.
Dominant Tattwa: Akasha, space sense, stimulus of hearing.
Dissolved Tattwa: Shadba—sound; hearing, (organ of) and the Mouth (organ of action).
Chakra 3. Anahata—Twelve Petals
Location: Spinal center of Heart or Cardiac region.
Dominant Tattwa: Vayu—movement in ordinary. Tactile sense of touch.
Dissolved Tattwa: Sparsha; touch and feeling; Penis, organ of action.(?)
Chakra 4. Manipura—Ten Petals
Location: The spinal center of the navel region or Solar Plexus.
Dominant Tattwa: Tejas; sight sense, form and color, also sense of expansion; heat production.
Dissolved Tattwas: Rupa; form and color, sight (eye) sensation, (Anus organ of).
Chakra 5. Svadhishthana—Six Petals
Location: Spinal center for pelvic region immediately above genital organs.
Dominant Tattwa: Ap; stimulus of contraction, operative thru sense of taste.
Dissolved Tattwas: Rasa; (taste) Hand is the organ of action.
Chakra 6. Muladhara—Four petals
Location: Spinal center for pelvic region immediately below genitals.
Dominant Tattwa: Prithivi; stimulus thru the sense of smell. Operative as cohesiveness.
Dissolved Tattwas: Gandha (smell). Organs of action are the Feet.
Chakra 7. Sahasrara—One Thousand petals
Location: Top of the Head, or "Causal region."
Dominant Tattwa: Abode in bliss, of Parama Shiva-Shakti. Ishvara.

The foregoing tabulation gives the list of the seven principal chakras (Padmas), to which may be added the three which are seldom awakened in the present wave of human evolution, Lalana, at the root of the palate, and having two petals; above it the Manashchakra with six lobes, corresponding to the Cerebellum and Sensorium; and Somachakra above Manashchakra, having sixteen petals, comprising the centers in the middle of the Cerebrum, above the Sensorium.

Ancient Hindu physiology and anatomy would be ridiculous if it were not offered so seriously, therefore we must make every effort to correlate the chakras with the Rosicrucian, Kabbalistic, and Physiological Trees of Life, in order to understand how closely they really do apply in spite of the differences between the Eastern and Western Wisdom Schools. The correspondence is so remarkably close as to furnish excellent proof that mankind, tho widely separated racially, has, nevertheless, been able to receive the message transmitted to him thru the Hierarchical Ray under which he individually and collectively functions in a given mortal experience.

When we note such an actual correspondence, wherein the theoretical is reduced to a minimum, we may safely assume that an important truth of a very real and vital nature streams thru the general fabric, one that we shall do well to understand and personally apply.

Note the further correlations:

	Rosicrucian	Sephirotic	Physiologic	Hindu
1	Pineal	Kether	Pineal	Sahasrara
2	Pituitary	Chokhmah	Pituitary	Ajna
3	Larynx	Binah	Thyroid	Vishuddha
4-5	Two Mammae	Chesed	Parathyroids Carotid (Secondary influence)
6	Heart	Geburah	Thymus	Anahata
7	Solar Plexus	Tiphereth	Parasympathetic Pancreas	Manipura
8	Spleen	Netzach	Spleen
9	Gonads	Hod	Gonads	Svadhisthana
10	Spinal Base	Yesod	Coccygeal	Muladhara
11-12	Two Knees	Malkuth

The chakras have distinctive colors, which indicate their status as intermediaries between the physical and spiritual vehicles:

Chakra	Color	Tattvic color
Ajna	White
Vishuddha	Smoky Purple	White
Anahata	Red	Smoky
Manipura		Red
Svadhisthana	Vermillion	White
Muladhara	Crimson	Yellow

In the Hindu system, the chakras are aligned with the spinal axis. The vertebral column is itself divided into five sections. Beginning at the base, the coccygeal, with four rudimentary vertebrae; the sacral, with five united; the sacrum; the lumbar, with five; the dorsal, with twelve, and the cervical with seven vertebrae. There are thirty-one spinal and twelve cranial nerves, both afferent and efferent, sensory and motor, sensate, and stimulate. With these nerves, the chakras have contact thru the Nadis, which are not material nerves, but the subtle, impalpable radiations from the chakras that contact the physical nerves on the manner of induction apparatus.

Within the spinal column, the cord is divided into two halves, symmetrical, connected by a commissure having a minute central canal. Cerebrospinal fluid fills this canal or tube which is the hollow vestige from which the brain and cord were originally evolved. Consonant with these three factors, the two cord-halves and the canal, are the nadis known as the Shushumna or chief, with the Ida and Pingala on either side.

The nadis large and small are the channels thru which Prana is drawn. This Pranik energy is the power that awakens the bud to full bloom as it were. Altogether, they form still another Tree of Life on the astral plane, known as the Ashvatta Tree. Pale Ida affines to the Moon, while red or ruddy Pingala is associated with the Sun. The sun, in Hindu symbolism, under some aspects represents poison, while the Moon indicates nectar. From the Muladhara, the three chief nadis, Ida, Pingala and Shushumna rise, the first two intertwined about the third, the prototype of the Caduceus of Hermes. The Physiological and psychological system in synchronous function form the Tree of Life in the human body.

The nadi from the right testicle extends to the left nostril, while that from the left testis reaches the right nostril. Both make a plaited knot called Muktatriveni in the space between the eyebrows. Pingala conducts the positive solar current; Ida conducts the negative lunar current, hence the terms "heating Sun" and "cooling Moon" in some literature.

The chakras are really centers of consciousness (Chaitanya). So Kundalini, resting at Muladhara, the root of Shushumna, in the region midway between the anus and the genitals, is a force that manifests, as it rises, thru centers and therefore states of consciousness, which are colored accordingly. Until and unless Kundalini rises, the chakras in the bud state are assumed to hang, flower-like, with their heads downward. Where Kundalini is born, is the meeting place of all the nadis.

The Four elements make contact with the chakras thru the sense avenues with which they enter the body. Thus "Ether is in the ears, air, skin; Fire in the eye; Water in the tongue and Earth in the nostrils." As each chakra is a center of consciousness, all of them collectively form a greater body of consciousness. Ultimate consciousness is assumed to be of two kinds, "Supreme Consciousness" or the fanciful "Isle of Gems" and "Infinite Consciousness" or the equally fanciful Ocean of Nectar."

With each chakra are associated moral attributes or qualities known as Vritti. The Vritti of Svadhisthana and Manipura are believed to be all evil, those of the Anahata mixt, those of Lalana unusually and dominantly good, those of Somachakra especially so. In other words, the moral qualities improve as the chakras unfold during the rise of Kundalini. Also, as Kundalini rises, the Tattvas of each chakra are dissolved in those of the next higher grade or center.

When Kundalini passes thru the chakras, not only are the lower Tattvas dissolved, the Vritti also are eliminated, so that perfection becomes a process of progression. Formerly the aspirant was required to propitiate 360 deities before he could hope to open up his chakras. These 360 deities however are assumed to represent 360 distinct light rays, which correspond to the olden 360 days of the year.

The vertebral column was known to the Hindus as Merudanda. Being the supporting axis of the human body or microcosm, it is the prototype of the legend of Mount Meru supporting the Earth, a legend familiar to all well read Rosicrucian, Theosophic and mystical students. The end of the spinal cord is known as filum terminale, and there, at its base, Shushumna is closed by Brahmadvara (Gate of Brahman) at which Kundalini knocks, and which it has to open by great power before it can begin its upward serpentine journey. Shushumna ends in the ventricles of the brain. Similarly, the spinal cord enters the fourth ventricle.

Dr. Brojendranath Seal's appendices in Prof. Benoy Kumar Sarkar's work, give a good idea of the influences exerted by the several chakras of importance, which manifest in our objective consciousness. While not quoting them in full, we may offer a careful abstract; "Muladhara or the sacrococcygeal plexus is the source of a massive pleasureable aesthesia; voluminous organic sensations of repose. Svadhishthana the sacral plexus is concerned with the excitation of sexual feelings, and accompaniments of lassitude, stupor, cruelty, suspicion and contempt. Manipura (Manipuraka), the lumbar plexus, concerns itself with the sympathetic nerves, in the production of sleep, thirst, passions, jealousy, shame, fear, stupefaction.

The Anahata or cardiac chakra is the seat of the egoistic sentiments, hope, anxiety, doubt, remorse, conceit, egoism, etc. Vishuddha (Bharatisthana) at the junction of the spinal cord and medulla, controls and regulates the throat, larynx and organs of articulation thru media like the pneumogastric nerve. Lalana chakra, opposite the uvulva, is concerned in the production of ego-altruistic sentiments, affections, self-regard, pride, grief, regret, respect, reverence, contentment. Ajna chakra holds sway over command of movements. Manaschakra deals with peripherally initiated sensations, as in dreams, hallucinations and visions. Somachakra is the seat of altruistic sentiments and volitional control, i.e., compassion, gentleness, patience, renunciation, meditativeness, gravity, earnestness, resolution, determination, magnanimity.

Sahasrara, the thousand petalled, was assumed in the Hindu system, to be the highest seat of Jiva, the soul.

By some orientals, the chakras are assumed to be centers in the spinal cord itself, concentrating certain independent forces therein at various stages of the cord. The petals of the lotuses are designated by certain Sanskrit letters. Each letter represents a definite sound. Sound is assumed to produce form. Form is associated with color. Kundalini, as a form of the Supreme Shakti who supports all breathing creatures and the source, from which all sound or energy, whether as ideas or speech, manifests." This gives us some idea of the power which may be conveyed to the physical organism and sensorium thru the nadis, as Kundalini ascends, for Kundalini is said to be composed, in its body, of the fifty letters or sound powers.

This subject of the chakras is amplified by the Hindus in a wealth of detail that is impressive, but not at all convincing to the well informed twentieth-century student with a modern understanding of physiology, anatomy and psychology back of him. There is a very good reason for distrusting the highly colored claims made for these centers of consciousness, so-called. First, the idea did not originate with the true Hindu religion as such. The chakra plan is essentially Tantrik. The orthodox Hindus would not even touch a dead human body, much less dissect one, and the Hindu notions of anatomy, are, to put it mildly, rudimentary. "But of all the Hindu Shastras extant, the Tantras lie in the greatest obscurity. . . . The Tantrik theory on which the well known Yoga called Shatchakrabheda is founded, suppose the existence of six main internal organs, called Chakras or Padmas, all bearing a special resemblance to that famous flower, the lotus."

"Such is the obstinacy with which the Hindus adhere to these erroneous notions, that, even when we show them by actual dissection the non-existence of the imaginary chakras in the human body, they will rather have recourse to excuses revolting to common sense than acknowledge the evidence of their eyes."

With the above rather strong rebuke to our Hindu friends, we cannot agree, for the anatomist who knows nothing about the esoteric side or aspect of natural laws cannot be expected to admit the existence of anything he cannot demonstrate with scalpel and scissors. No claim has ever been advanst, to our knowledge, that the chakras were de facto organs in the physical sense. On the contrary, quite the opposite. Psychologists of the more serious type admit the existence and function of some sort of psychical centers which harmonize with the known phenomena accorded to the several chakras.

Those who have used reasonable methods of arousing the Kundalini have observed notable phenomena in their own consciousness and their own lives that certainly did not manifest before beginning the process. Proper development undertaken in all sincerity and faithfully persisted in has never yet failed to produce results according to temperament, personal health, constitution and individual gifts. Self-control and the cultural awakening of the Kundalini has proved beyond all peradventure of doubt, the existence of a tremendous force at the spinal base, which the aspirant can feel rising within him as the force grows more powerful and increases in strength. It is a matter of conscious progression.

The rather fanciful and highly imageried concepts of the chakras by the Hindus, merge nicely into the modern Rosicrucian concepts of the psychical or spiritual centers in man, and both agree, not only with the Divine Attributes as symbolized thru the Sephiroth, but align perfectly with the modern knowledge of endocrinology, which must always be taken into account by the scientific occultist.

Whether we call them chakras, padmas, lotus flowers or buds, sephiroth, emanations, psychic centers or glands, we have developt sufficient proof of the existence, at the points ascribed in the human body, of plexuses or centers of force and energy, which manifest not only in our physical expressions but also in our mental, intellectual and spiritual consciousness. Therefore it is not worth while to quibble over words or terms, except in so far as we can clear up traditional phantasies and substitute factual conditions in place of them.

The principal fact is, that all the world religions of antiquity and philosofical systems offer evidence, that, regardless of anatomical considerations, earnest aspirants have, thru personal experience, found that in the process of striving for the higher life they have awakened a congeries or series of centers, physical or psychical, that have developt phenomenal results to them, results absolutely new in their several individual experiences. The plant begins with the seed buried in the darkness of the ground. It ends with the after-blossom-time production of seed in broad sunlight. The human creative system has its roots in the darkness of the lower pelvic regions, but it blossoms and produces its seed in the cerebral system in the broad light of the bodily sun or head of the human creature, most wonderful of all known natural creatures.

In the process of its growth, the great pole of conscious sensation and control, sexually creative at one polarity, mentally creative at the opposite extreme, is a wonderfully fine example of the Tree of Life planted in the Eden of the body. It bears its fruit in due season. It will bear better fruit as it is definitely, intentionally and consciously trimmed, nourisht and tended by proper developmental work. The Gate of Brahman and the Gate of Eden are not dissimilar. They are identical. The serpent fire must force each Gate before it can rise, redeemed from its crawling coiling position, no longer condemned to be a serpent, but restored to the light of the bodily heaven, in its own former position near the throne of the Divine Emanation that is the Ego or real man.

As the Kundalini energy rises in the body, each chakra thru which it passes rises from its drooping position. The "bud" becomes erect. It swells, opens and a new source of light and power is born in the aspirant. Call it a psychic center if you will. The result will be the same. When the serpent fire has risen up the entire column, even tho each chakra be not fully opened, it will have responded, somewhat at least, to the new stimulus applied and its response will mean an activity of a kind not hitherto experienst by the aspirant, and of which he can have no possible doubt.

The phase of the Yoga dealing with the active awakening of the chakras is inextricably interwoven with theories of sex to a degree that makes a sane acceptance of the entire theory impossible. We have pointed out the way in which the occidental mind can accept the general theory involved, which can be considered apart from sex. What is more, in spite of the lofty tone of the ancient literature and the epics the well known conditions of womanhood under Hindu influence and tradition, far from uplifting or honorable, account for the fact that in the Yoga only the male sexual faculties seem to be considered.

For instance, according to the summary made by Mr. A. Avalon, "According to the Vedantic scheme, earth is related to the sense of smell and phallus; water to the sense of taste and anus; fire to the sense of sight and feet; air to the sense of touch and hands; ether to the sense of hearing and mouth. In the order of successive merging of Laya, the feet occur in the same grade as water; anus in the same grade as fire, phallus in the same grade as air, and mouth in the same grade as ether; not, apparently, because there is any direct relation between earth and feet, water and hands, fire and anus, and so forth, but because these organs are in the same order of comparative subtlety as earth, water, fire and air. Hands are supposed to be subtler agents than feet; the anus a subtler agent than the hands; the phallus a subtler agent than the anus; and the mouth a subtler agent than the phallus. This is the order in which these agents are situated in the body, the hands coming second because they find their place between the feet and the anus when the arms are given their natural vertical position.

"Feet" are associated with "earth" because the latter alone has the power of support, and the feet rest upon it. "Water" is associated with the hands because the hands are used in drinking water. The word Pani, which means hand, is derived from the root Pa, to drink. Fire is associated with the anus because what is eaten is consumed by fire in the stomach, and the residue is passed out thru the anus, whereby the body becomes pure. "Air" is associated with the phallus because in procreation the Jivatma as Prana Vayu throws itself out thru the phallus. And so, the Sbruti says: "Atma itself is reborn in the son." "Ether" is associated with the mouth because by mouth sound is uttered, which is the Guna (quality) of ether (Akasha).

The speciousness of the Hindu argument and the reasons advanst by their pundits will not impress any one having the slightest knowledge of physiology, psychology or natural science. We have cited them, not in a spirit of controversy, but because, in a lesson of this nature, it is only fair to present all sides of the question involved. We may safely discard all the orientalism in the concept of the chakras, for we have shown that there is sufficient of factual conditions present to reveal a valuable esoteric principle that may be studied and practist.

Sane development does not require unnatural sexual practices, postures or meditations. The cultivation of superb health is the first and best requisite. Then the mental and spiritual attitude must be added in equal importance. We may note, however, that even from the ethical standpoint, our virtues and moral attributes unfold, not at all unlike the lotus buds, as we advance in spiritual awakening, and that precisely the same progress and development of the inner vision is accomplisht under a safe and sane system of culture as our eastern friends claim for the physical process of the Yoga.

The theoretical chakras find their actual counterparts in the tangible system of psychic centers, which are synchronously operative with the endocrine centers of energy. If it appeals more strongly to those with the eastern urge to call the latter "chakras," no harm is done, for it is simply a matter of choice between eastern and western terminology relative to the same fundamental principles. However, we can lay aside all sexual considerations and awaken our chakra-gland-centers just as powerfully and far more logically, in a manner susceptible of actual demonstration.

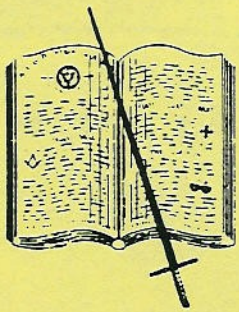
DEVOTED TO THE ADVANCEMENT AND MYSTICAL ENLIGHTENMENT OF MAN

THE INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF MARTINIST STUDIES



Beloved Companions

I greet you at this significant stage of our Works. I promised a statement at LIBER 50 regarding our future direction and that time has come!

Schools, as you know, begin at the primary stage and go up to university level. All schools take in students, teach them, and then send them on their way, to synthesize what they have been taught and adapt it to their specific needs and environment. Schools do not bind students, and hold on to them forever and keep them dependent.

With that in mind then, it is not our intention to lead our members along a never-ending path -- although we know some organizations are only too happy to do this and receive their monthly dues!!! If you are familiar with any members of organizations of that type, you will observe that although they have collected a headfull of intellectual ideas and have become walking encyclopedias, they remain untrained in thinking for themselves and if you ask them a question, the answer for which they cannot recall from having read in some monograph or book -- they are unwilling, or unable to respond. Have you noticed that?

At this time we are planing to confine our course to 100 Libers or possibly less. We have a lot of great material still to share: on the Gnostics and Gnosticism; the Templar Tradition, the Holy Grail, Freemasonry, the Kabalah and more. We intend to close our course at an appropriate point and then move from this 'passive' phase where you are sitting and learning -- to an 'active' phase where members will be invited to research and write on topics that interest them. These papers, along with certain other material, we will then share with graduate members, probably in a quarterly publication. This is how we conceive it at this point.

We also wish to say that, in association with the Universal Gnostic Church, we may also offer a doctorate in Gnostic studies. More on this in due time.

Our work over the past year has been quite heavy; beginning in the next Liber therefore, we will begin the series on the Templars, the Grail and Freemasonry. This, while instructive, will be a change of diet and you will find it interesting and refreshing.

So, at this very special place, my brothers & sisters, let us give thanks for all the wonderful experiences we are being privileged to have, as we strive to raise both ourselves and all those around us.

May you ever dwell in the Eternal Light of Divine Wisdom.

EIGHTH LESSON

On the body of man and his thought (R.A.)

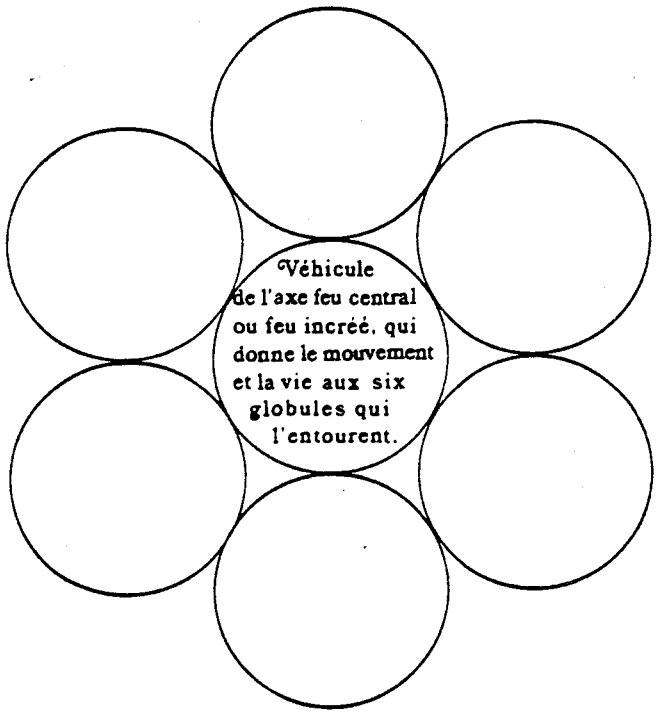
My brothers,

As soon as Adam was pardoned for his crime, through the pure mercy of the Eternal, and through the blessings He gave to him and to his companion, God said to him: "Adam! enhance your work, and with her make descendants with individual forms into which I will send a spiritual being similar to yours." Adam, together with Eve, made the form of his son Cain, with overattentiveness to the material senses, making this descendant open to all the scourges of eternal justice. Cain, the name Adam gave to his first son, meaning "son of my distress", prophesied the great pain that this son would cause him to feel through his grave prevarication. The order God gave to Adam as he separated him from Himself shows us that He had made him the keeper of His reproductive seed, which he could not abuse without committing an offence, as I will show you.

We divide the body of man into three parts, i.e.: into a solid, attributed to mercury or to the bones; blood, attributed to sulphur; and salt, attributed to the flesh. The divine spiritual being enclosed in this body not only governs the movements of this form, but it also keeps pure the essences of which it is made. The blood is made up of six white lymphatic globules which are of the same nature as the reproductive seed, with the difference that they are much freer than those of the bone marrow and of the seed; here we see the ternary number once more: the marrow, the seed and the lymph. These six globules retain their white colour until they have formed their circular union with the central one which, containing within itself a vehicle of the central fire axis enclosed in the sulphur covering, imparts a red colour like the colour of blood, as soon as it is united with the six white lymphatic globules. This colour itself is made up of three colours: white, attributed to the lymph; yellow, attributed to the sulphur which serves as a covering to the vehicle; and the central fire axis vehicle, or uncreated fire, which is of the most beautiful purple colour.

I ask you, my brothers, to observe the beauty of this globule through its number; as with the circle, it only has value through its centre, which, as you know, is divided by six radii. Now, just as this division can only be made through the centre, which is the generator, the support and the life of the circle, so the globule of the centre imparts its colour, movement and life to the six others, which, but for its union, they would not have. We know that God only used six thoughts for the creation of this universe and that he blessed it with the seventh. What would the whole universe have been without the blessing of the Eternal? It would have remained without life. Similarly, the six lymphatic globules are without life when not in union with the septenary which gives them their colour, movement and life.

(Figure showing the six globules of the blood, drawing their movement from the central globule which enclose the vehicle of the central fire axis, or uncreated fire.)



Let us go further. The universe was conceived by the thought of the Father, the will of the Son and the action of the Holy Spirit. Let us unite this ineffable number 3 with the seven thoughts God used for the creation of the universe: we will obtain the number 10 attributed to the divinity. Similarly, let us unite the septenary number of the globules making up a drop of blood with the three principles or colours of white, attributed to the lymph, the blood to the sulphur forming the cover of the vehicle, and the purple vehicle. Add these three to the septenary number and you will have the denary number, 10, attributed to the Divinity. These proofs, which every man who has eyes can check for himself, and that we have observed a thousand times, must convince you, oh Man!, that the Eternal has placed His image in the smallest and in the greatest parts of the form, so that every man constantly has, before the very eyes of his form, convincing proof of the existence of a vengeful and rewarding God. There is no being under the heavens that can doubt the existence of this, and it is not within his power to remove this certainty from any being whatsoever, as I am going to prove demonstrably.

Every spiritual being, whether good or bad, has got thought which the Divinity Himself cannot take away from him. Thought is certainly without bounds, it grows and increases as much as it wishes to, it runs through all the wonders of creation, it engenders beings of every species, it causes them to exist and act. Now, the faculties of thought are none other than the ineffable likeness of the divine source from whence they come. The Eternal, who must think and exist of Himself, has passed His likeness on to all of His children, for we see that the thought of every being can engender: just as God creates beings, thought can engender.

The Divinity gives them their being by giving them laws, and thought gives them their existence through the dimensions it gives them; the Divinity causes them to act; similarly, thought makes the beings it has given birth to act. The similarity is perfect between man's thought and the Divinity. The difference is that God, being all-powerful, cannot have any thought which does not have its fulfillment, whereas man, being a limited being, can only bring to fruition a small number of his thoughts. But as long as he has thought, and he always will, as will every other being, he will have convincing proof of the existence of a God within himself. The most evil being on earth can, through the insinuation of the evil demon, say that there is no God, but, at the very moment at which he says this, a thought occurs within him which proves that this Divine Being, who has engraved Himself in his soul in letters which cannot be effaced, must exist. All of man's evil thinking can be reduced to saying so, but there is no one in the universe who can believe it, because he would then have to be able to destroy his thought: this is impossible for any being to do, for to destroy the thought would be to destroy the spiritual being itself. Now, no being which is eternal in nature can destroy itself. It can become good or evil, but it will never destroy its thought, or its thinking faculty.

It is on this thought that the Eternal operates, and will continue to operate without ceasing. If the thought is good, it will manifest His glory, and if it is evil, it will manifest His justice, for every being which moves away from God undergoes the infinite suffering of privation. Since God is light itself, no being of any kind can participate in the light except to the extent to which it is united to Him. Every being becomes tenebrous as soon as it moves away from light, as this light is necessary for the happiness, life and support of every being, and darkness only brings about the unhappiness, death and destruction of the faculties of every being which has the misfortune of being separated form it. Every being has, from the time of its emanation, a divine fire within, which is able to make contact with this eternal light. This fire is faith, which is none other than the perserving union of the thought of the particular being with the almighty Being. It is the resistance of this good thought to the continual shock of evil thought that forms what we call faith. It is through this divine fire that we become united with the eternal light, from whence must flow the life of our soul and of our body. To separate ourselves from it is to fall into darkness, which is only the unhappiness of the one who has plunged into darkness, for the essence of this darkness contains no principle of happiness, satisfaction, nor of physical reality. They are all an illusion, an error, a lie, and cause nothing but the eternal unhappiness in everything which has become separated from Him.

Just as the most beautiful day is the most clear day, so the darkest night is the one in which there is the greatest privation. If man made sure that, having eyes, he observed the objects of the nature of forms during the day, for the usefulness, need and necessity of maintaining his form, let us now suppose that this man took out his eyes: how could he make out the things of nature on the most beautiful day? He would be blind, he would stumble, fall and die of hunger and thirst if there was no one with him. The same applies to a man who makes poor use of the faculties of his soul. It has eyes which can see more clearly than those of the body to lead it to the path of light. Its ill will, the misuse of its free will, is what puts out the eyes of the soul and causes it to grope after false objects of illusion and lying, and casts it for ever into eternal death, which is nothing but total separation from light.

No man under the heavens, however stupid, evil or bad he may be, can doubt these truths without giving more proof to what I am saying. It is because he has become separated from light through his wrongdoings. All who care about light will also be convinced that God, being unity existing through itself, contains within Himself the plentiude of all beings; that each one of these beings has its laws which are related to the essential Being, because nothing exists outside of Him, and moreover, nothingness is just as impossible as the non-existence of the being. Every being therefore must have an absolute relation to the Divinity, so that the one which is the most united with the Divinity is also the happiest, as happiness must exist in the Divinity, and the most unhappy being is the one which is the furthest away from Him; not that it can ever become separated from Him, being always linked by the law of its emanation from the essential Being, who serves as a rein, a bit or an insurmountable barrier to all his evil acts, for it is always under the chain of Eternal justice if it is bad, and under the law of liberty if it is just.

This liberty consists of increasing one's faculties by doing good, for their growth is infinite. He can therefore unleash all the liberty of his thought in an area as vast as the works of the Eternal without fear of being stopped, for they are infinite, whereas evil keeps him in privation, or eternal suffering, because if he wants to work at something by himself, he has to work in a void. He can only attack the works of the Eternal, which are infinite. His suffering must therefore be infinite, for he can never destroy them, nor can he destroy himself. May God be in your thinking and in ours, for ever. Amen

Amen. Amen. Amen.

NINTH LESSON

On the reintegration of forms

My brothers,

All that was begun had an origin and all that was created must have an end. It is an immutable fact, generally accepted, as much among spiritual and divine temporal men as among material, temporal men. But as the examination of each of these aspects is a different exercise, I shall speak to you of the reintegration of forms, with the help of the Eternal.

We have already seen how the third number, 3, is that of the body, through its three spiritual essences, that the sixth number, 6, is that of its spiritual division, representing the 6 thoughts which the Creator employed for the universal, general and particular creation.

The ninth number, 9, is that of reintegration. When the creation of a body first commences, by the formation of an infant in the body of its mother, this reproductive seed represents, in its first state undifferentiated matter, the 3 essences still not being distinguished from each other and being in aspect like each other, without form; but as soon as they are in the womb, they receive an impulse emanating from the degree of fire located there. This is produced by the action of the spirits from the source of the central fire and from the elemental spirits which, acting on the vehicle of the woman, begin to operate, to modify and to distinguish the essential substances. As soon as they are distinguished, the embryo has taken shape. This happens after 40 days by means of a number of repeated experiences in order to repeat forever to all the posterity of Adam the sin of its first father, committed at the fourth hour of the day. It also represents his penance of 40 days and his reconciliation after 40 years, repeated by Noah, Abraham, Moses and definitely by our Divine Master Jesus Christ, when he fasted for 40 days on Mount Tabor. On the 40th day, the minor spirit descends into the material envelope which has just been made and commences, at this moment, to experience a period of suffering, because the greatest pain that a spirit can undergo is to have its activity limited.

Consider for a moment the position of this being. It has two fists resting on the eyes, enveloped in the "amniotic fluid". It swims in this tainted fluid, deprived of the use of all its spiritual senses, divine and corporeal. It receives nourishment through the depths of its form and is subjected to such great privation that it only clings to life through that of a being nearly as feeble as itself. It participates in all that being's pain and suffering and misfortunes. O crime of our first father! There is the first punishment that you deserve. The justice of the Eternal has subjected all the posterity of Adam to pass along the same paths.

Observe here, my Brethren, that the divine spirit, being in the body of the woman, is confined under 3 thick veils: the first, its own form; the second, that of the mother; and the third, that of the universe. As soon as it has emerged from the body of the mother, there are only two veils, that of its own form and that of the universe; and as soon as it has made its happy reintegration, only the circle of the universe remains. There is a fine trinity: 1. the minor spirit in the body of the mother 2. the minor spirit in the universe 3. the minor spirit reintegrated, a fact again proving the creation of the universe, or the 6 thoughts, by the addition of the 3 numbers which give 6.

In the beginning, Adam, clothed in his glorious form, ruled over the whole universe without being subject to it, but by his crime he plunged all his posterity to the foot of the ladder which it is obliged to re-climb.

The ninth number, 9, is that of reintegration and of destruction, because it subdivides the 3 essences which, in their original form, only contained a ternary number by their union; mercury, sulphur and salt, 3. But in the mercurial part, there is a mixture, since all which has form is mixed. In the mercurial part can be found sulphur and salt, 3; in the sulphurous part can be found salt and mercury, 3, and in the salt part can be found sulphur and mercury, 3, making nine parts overall.

What causes them to be termed mercury, sulphur and salt, is that one of these three parts predominates in each of the mixtures; but as soon as man has come degree by degree to his perfect formation into a recognized form so that it can be termed consolidation(1), it commences its reintegration, unnoticed at first as it has been at its formation, until at lenght it commences its entire reintegration by the dissolution or the division of its essences.

As the outset, the seed containing the three essences initiates the production of form. As soon as man is born, nourishment by the three essences, 3, gives him life, and this continues throughout his life here below. But as soon as the 3 essences have ceased their production and consolidation, they commence their reintegration, 3, by subdividing themselves, that is to say their union in the first principle has caused their production, their division by nourishment has caused their consolidation, their subdivision causes their reintegration, because each part of the three realms, animal, vegetable and mineral, cannot subsist without being, all the time it has form, in one of the three states: production, consolidation or reintegration.

I shall now demonstrate the reintegration process. As soon as the spark from the source of the central fire which created the life of the form, residing in the body and having its lodging-place in the heart (which will be anatomically demonstrated afterwards), had made its reintegration, from that moment, the form commences its reintegration in the following manner.

The form of man contains the seed of a host of reptile animals or insects which commence their development through the labour of reintegration which takes place through the rough humidity of the corpse which by its movement, begins to react upon the ovaries of the reptile animals residing in the corpse. The terrestrial fire or, from the general body(2), coming into conflict with their spiritual fires, interacting with the ovaries of these reptiles, and, by their reaction, unseal the ovarian envelope which holds them contained. These insects having taken life from each of the 3 essences, mercury, 1, sulphur, 1, and salt, 1=3, and containing in themselves these 3 - those which have come to life in the mercury part, 3; those which have come to life in the blood part, 3; and those which have come to life in the salt, 3 - the reintegration of these insects results in the elimination of all kind of appearance of form in the corpse. Thus bringing about the perfect reintegration of the human form.

The time of the development, production and reintegration of these insects is more or less the same as that of the reintegration of the human form, which proves that the number 9, or the nonary, is that of reintegration.

Observe here, my Brethren, the justified analogy of the body of man, called "the little world", with the universe. Like the universe, it contains these parts: the universal, the general and the particular; the image of the universal by the innumerable number of fibres making up its cartilaginous part and which it is no more possible to count than the spirits from the source of the central fire. Like the general, or the earth, it is triangular, and it equally gives life to 3 types of created forms (as I have just explained to you) representing the 3 realms, animal, vegetable and mineral; like the universe also, it contains the particular by the innumerable number of small capillary blood vessels, it being no more possible to number these small blood vessels that to number the stars of the firmament.

The body of man then contains a purely spiritual affinity with the minor being which it contains in a state of privation. What this represents to the eyes of the form is all the spiritual physics (3) operating on the spiritual and divinely eternal soul. If one observes the first, one will see that it is the prototype of the second: the soul, like the body, needs norishment from its divine nature. This nourishment taken in moderation, sustains its life as does the body; poisoned food causes, as in the body, death, from privation; it has illnesses like the body but it is never affected by those of the body, except insofar as it never participated, through bad use of its free will, in the sickness of the body. One may be convinced of this by observing the sufferings which the happy chosen ones of the Eternal have endured. By these the soul enjoys the contemplation of the Holy Spirit and, by these means, it is in a state of delight during the time in which the form is oppressed by all the sufferings demonic malice can invent. The minor spirit, very far from participating in the sufferings of the body, had no knowledge of them. Those who, having committed some crime, experience just punishment for it, although by very different aims, no longer experience in their soul the suffering of the body; on the contrary, the suffering their spirit experiences is incomparably above that of their body. In the state of justice the soul only undergoes satisfaction although the body suffers. In the state of just punishment which follows the crime, the soul experiences incomparably more vivid suffering than the body; this makes one see the necessity for the soul to suffer from the pain of the body and that we have had the misfortune to lose through the sin of our first father, and then this knowledge is only the recompense for our resignation to endure the different sufferings to which the posterity of Adam is very justly condemned.

It is by the very holy virtue of patience that one arrives at the happy reintegration of the divine spiritual being in a state of rest, and of its form in its principal source in the central fire. God wishes us to accord to all this grace. Amen.

Amen. Amen. Amen.

NOTES

(1) Saint-Martin here uses the word végetation, to vegetate, which in this connection actually is synonymous with consolidation as it describes a continually stable condition.
(2) The general body is the earth, the planet.
(3) The meaning of the word physics was quite different in the days of Saint-Martin. Refer to note 1, First lesson in liber 34.

TENTH LESSON

Desire, patience and perseverance (R.A.)

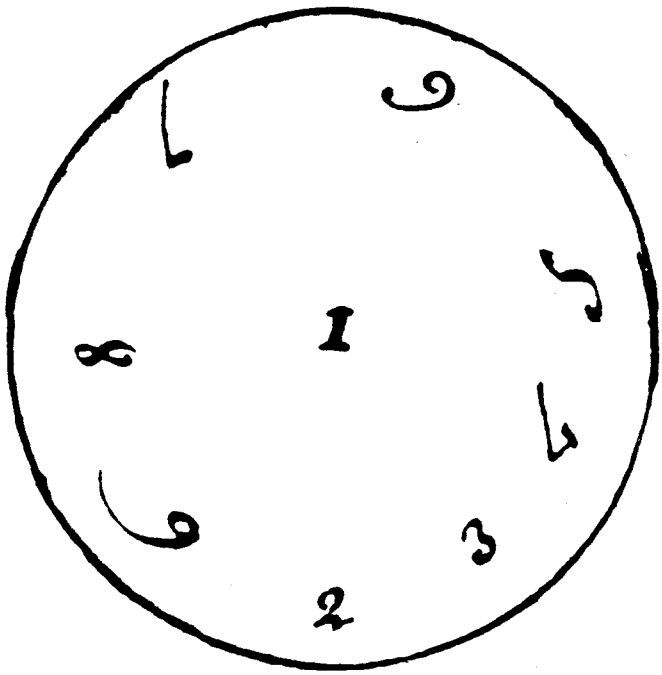
My Brothers,

The Eternal, almighty Creator, whose infinite power extends over the universe of spirits and bodies, contains in His vastness an innumerable crowd of beings which He emanates, when He wishes, from His breast. To each one of these beings He gives laws, precepts and commandments, making up the number of points of attachment between these various beings and the great Divinity. This connection between all beings and the essential Being is so absolute that no effort on the part of these beings can prevent it; no matter what they do, they can never leave the circle in which they have been placed, and every point of this circle through which they pass could not cease to exist for one moment without relating to the centre; and even more so, the centre could never cease to be linked to the Centre of centres and be in contact with it and connected to it.

The relationship of the individual centres with the universal centre is the Holy Spirit; the relationship of the universal centre with the Centre of centres is the Son; and the Centre of centres is the almighty Creator. God, the Father, creates the beings, His Son imparts life to them and that life is the Holy Spirit. We can see this demonstrated by examining three physical experiments which I am going to perform for you to serve as a demonstration of what I have just said.

Let us find amongst the numbers 10, 7, 3, 4, a number which does not contain the unity 1: it is found in 10, in 7, in 3 and in 4. This proves to us that it is impossible to find a number which does not contain the unity, as it is the generation, the support and the end of all numbers; for, after having gone through a vast quantity of numbers, if they end with 9, they are not complete, lacking the unity which contains them(1). As in 10,000: if, instead of the zeros, there were nines, this number would be incomplete, since it would show that it could undergo an addition; whereas unity together with these zeros always shows us the emanation, the support and the complement of the various numbers: 100000... one can add zeros to infinity, but they all start from unity; which can be seen in the following examples: 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10.

Unity here is the principle of these nine numbers, 1: after that comes 2, where there is unity; 3, where it is again; and successively up to 9, in which it is also to be found. Now, as 9 cannot make a complete number, there is 10, which shows us unity containing all the numbers, as in the diagram.



Here is the physical, mathematical proof of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit:

You know that the numbers are co-eternal. God did not create numbers, they existed for all eternity within Him, and it is through them that He makes all His plans of creation of the various beings. Thus you see, brethren, that creative unity is the image of the Father 1, unity which follows all the numbers 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, is the image of the Son, and bears his number: 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9/44/8. We know from all the sages of the universe that the number 8 is the number of the dual power attributed to Christ, and as you have just seen, he is the life of all beings which exist, spirits as well as bodies, for no being can exist here unless it be through one of the eight numbers we have just seen. Similarly, the complement of all of these numbers, which is 10, or Ⓘ , shows us the physical image of the Holy Spirit, containing all the Father has created, everything which the Son has directed, and thus forms the eternal, ineffable and indissoluble union of the three units which make up the triple essence of the Divinity without beginning and without end. As you can see the unit 1, being absolute and essential, has from all time emanated and created beings, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9; that these beings have always been ordered by His direct action, His divine Verb, His beloved Son, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9/44/8, since He completes, through His number, all the acts of the various beings; and they have eternally been contained by the Holy Spirit, 10, or, as in the above diagram, being the end, the support and the preserver of all beings.

These great truths, demonstrated by the whole of nature, are the buttresses which must support the man of spiritual, divine, good desire in all of his spiritual, temporal activites. Woe betide those who allow themselves to be taken in by the spurious glamour of demoniac minds, to receive before the eyes of their soul, which are thought and will, the terrible veil concealing from them the very holy Wisdom which is meant to be known by every man! But, just as light dissipates all darkness, so darkness, at the moment the minor being allows himself to be taken over by it, dissipates in him all light and makes him wander about like a blind man groping for something to protect him from the dangers surrounding him; so the soul, blinded by the misuse of its thought, seeks spiritual objects which could dissipate the dreadful fear which the spirit, being vengeful of the crime, produces in it. This terror, this fear, the trembling most men experience in darkness, are a very perfect image of the state of their soul. The fear they have of finding some being in the darkness that might destroy their body, must accompany the soul of those who search in darkness, through the fear they have of finding some being that would destroy the purity of their divine being and lead them into privation of the eternal Light which is God.

If you take away from a man the light which is illuminating him and allowing him to see the surrouding objects, he remains in darkness all the time he does not have the light; his sight loses its memory of the various objects during the whole time of separation. The sun, for example, illumines the insights of a well-adjusted man, allowing him to see the various wonders of nature; through it, he sees the various wonders of the different successions of visible bodies; through it, he finds out about the various objects which successively pass before his eyes; and the more he has made a sustained collection of facts, the more he knows about the nature of bodies whose dimensions the light reveals.

Let us now assume that this man is locked in dreadful solitary confinement which deprives him of communication with the sun: the amount of facts collected decreases, according to the number of days he is in privation. The longer he remains locked in darkness, deprived of the light of the sun, the more his sight weakens, and the more the facts collected by his sight decrease; to the extent that, if he remains a number of years without seeing the light of the sun, he has to take the greatest care when returning to light for fear that, if he is suddenly taken out into the midday sun, the membranes of the eye, unused to the flexible movements they must make in order to be in communication with this star, finding themselves in a state of tension, stiffness and hardness, receiving a large number of rays which they cannot obey, and, by their resistance, putting up a new force against this light, they finally overcome the obstacle itself by rupturing a few large vessels in the body and thus killing the form of the person who wished to get closer to the principle of life too soon.

The application of what I have just said to spiritual things is simple and straightforward. We have a great number of examples of this in the Holy Scripture. When Moses went to get the Law which the Eternal gave to him on Mount Sinaï, he told the people not to go near to the foot of the mountain and that, whether man or beast, he would be pierced by a spear. Was this not to show Israel that his sight was not experienced, pure or clear enough to be able to see the things that were in the mountain? Was it not also to show him the respect he ought to have for all things holy which were there, and which he should see only from a distance and in trembling?

It is therefor absolutely essential to use the greatest restraint, moderation and discretion in all things the Order includes, and to go with the greatest restraint along the path which leads to the objective, because every path leading to it has thorns, brambles and obstacles which must be destroyed, uprooted and removed. To go along the path without having removed the obstacles only produces greater difficulty in overcoming them.

Thus, prudence, which was so highly recommended by Jesus Christ himself, must be the foundation of our steps. The great number of forces given to an inexperienced general often only increase his defeat. Before giving him a large corps, he must at least know how to command a small one. The same is true of our soul: it must spend a long time in small battles before it can take on greater battles; the greater strength it is given increases the battles. Thus, one has to know how to moderate the desire to advance for fear of falling. We see that the use of food, which is so very essential for the life of the body, when taken in too large quantities, especially during convalescence, is often deadly to those who take it. Thus it is absolutely essential gradually to get the stomach used to meat before making large meals which are always difficult to digest. The various tests to which we must put our subjects, to be certain of their desire, their fidelity and their perseverance are of this nature.

A subject may have great desire today, and tomorrow he may not have any at all, because he has changed his way of thinking. Thus it is essential to let him experience delay before admitting him, in order to know whether he has true desire. If he has, his desire increases with the difficulties and, if he does not, then the difficulties destroy it; this is always a very good thing: firstly, he is a man of superficial desire: if he had come into the Order, he would have been a poor subject; thus it is a good thing if he does not come into it; secondly, if his desire is genuine, time will only increase it; thirdly, the various obstacles with which he is confronted and which he overcomes give him an additional merit which has its rewards.

Desire, patience and perseverance are three virtues which I pray the Eternal will grant each one of us and that he will for ever keep us in his Holy protection. Amen.

Amen, amen, amen.

End of the tenth and last Instruction to men of desire.

NOTES

(1) Unity, 1, is the only number that is complete in itself and it is the building block of every other number. All numbers must contain the unity as 3=1+1+1. At the same time all other numbers are incomplete, reaching completion only in the unity containing them like 10 contain all numbers from 1 through 9 and 1000 all numbers from 1 through 999. Thus 9 and all numbers ending with 9 are lacking the unity to make it 10 and complete.

SUPER-CONSCIOUSNESS

"Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth."

N these few words, the Apostle Paul gave sound advice in a way that makes it susceptible of instant appreciation. A world of philosophy is wrapt in this seemingly simple sentence, yet it does not require a philosofer to understand it. It leads us direct to a process of logical reasoning.

Let us establish a few simple postulates that are taken from Holy Scriptures, not necessarily because they are contained in the Scriptures, but better still, because they have, in the course of the centuries, proved to be true in personal experience.

"As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he" (Prov. xxiii, 7). "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also" (Luke, xii, 34). "Let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible" (1 Pet. iii, 4). "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus" (Phill. ii, 5).

We have here, several factors, which we will assemble in sequential form:

1 The treasure sought is super-consciousness.

2 Super-consciousness means super-mindedness.

3 Our heart must be set upon super-mindedness.

4 If we think super-mindedly in our heart, we shall attain super-consciousness.

5 Super-mindedness implies a higher estate of mind.

6 The Christos, as the super-initiate of our earth-evolution, has given us an example of super-mindedness.

7 In seeking super-consciousness, therefore, we are seeking to attain the mind of Christ, or the mind of a super-initiate.

Initiation, which is an inner, personal, individual process, depends almost entirely upon individual personal evolutionary status. It also depends to some extent, upon the amount of instruction it is intended by the Celestial Hierarchs, to impart to any given wave of human evolution by root or sub-root race methods.

Out of the sum total of a given wave of human evolution, a considerable number of entities are admitted to partial initiation. A smaller number are admitted to full initiation. A still smaller and rarer number attain to Mastership, and beyond these, rare indeed are the individuals who become post-graduates in the Cosmic School.

Ordinarily speaking, consciousness is a faculty pertaining, in the normal human being, solely to the present mundane environment, and, in lesser degree, to the past, in so far as the past has been a matter of personal experience, or recoverable in still lesser degree by evidence existing in the present, such as archæological or paleontological remains. But the past in each personal experience has been the present of that experience at one time, therefore the consciousness of a past of that type is still the consciousness of the present for it is presently with us. Therefore, in the last analysis, consciousness, normally, is a cognitive faculty of the present.

Consciousness of the present, relates solely to one's mundane environment. In such consciousness, there is no absolute consciousness of states of being external or internal to one's environment. The matter of such states, while seemingly real to us, is still one of speculation and hypothesis, for such states exist to us only in our minds, but not de facto to our senses.

Super-consciousnness is, therefore, a phase of consciousness that is supermundane, i.e., it lifts us above the consciousness of mundane environments, the environment of the earth, to things above the earth, not on the earth. In our normal consciousness we are aware in the three ordinary dimensions of space-time concepts, length, bredth and thickness, all interpreted in terms of the present.

Super-consciousness, in lifting us above mundane environments, lifts us into another state of consciousness, that of the absolute past, and the relative future.. We say absolute past, for we become conscious of a past which includes both our dependence upon it and our independence of it, our participation and non-participation in it.

Super-consciousness should not be confused with Cosmic Consciousness. Super-consciousness is simply the amplification, or rather, the release of represt faculties within the individual, while Cosmic Consciousness is entering into the All-Consciousness or the fulness of the Divine Mind Itself.

Every human being possesses super-consiousness but he does not use it. He has not learned how to function it or in it. All that we have ever been is still within our consciousness but few know how to bring it out. Few even know that they have such a consciousness. All that we are is still in our consciousness, but few of us have the slightest idea of how much has passed thru our consciousness in the present incarnation and seemingly passed out again. Nothing that has ever entered our consciousness has really ever left it. It is there imperishably and will remain there eternally. But only what is in actual use comes to the front or fringe. That which is not used is relegated to the cerebral storehouse. In due time, it becomes covered with the cobwebs and dust of mental activities long forgotten.

There is a time when we realize our possession of super-consciousness, and that is in the after death to rebirth interim. Then the Ego, no longer under conditions of repression, due to the assumption of vehicles thru which it could function in the physical world, is free to give full play to the consciousness it has developt and acquired thru the long past of its evolutionary career. The active exercise and use of this phase of consciousness is, happily and logically—not lost—but voluntarily held in abeyance at the beginning of a new physical or mortal expression.

Generally speaking, and as a matter of human efficiency, a given individual would be tremendously handicapt in any given mortal expression if, besides the consciousness of the present, he were burdened with the consciousness of his past lives as well. And if each of us were conscious of the past lives of each other, there would be little self respect or respect for each other left amongst us. Nature wisely gives each of us an opportunity to "escape from ourselves" as it were, in any given expression.

Nevertheless, there comes a time in human evolutional experience, when one who has attained partial or complete initiation in life's school and has proven his ability to function a degree of super-conscious thru his capacity to bring it forward in his normal faculties, is entitled to it and is able to "Bring it Out", little by little.

The student was taught in the preceding lesson, that the several chakras or psychic centers were also "centers of consciousness" in periodic sequence. The bringing out of any degree of super-consciousness is, therefore, the natural resultant of the awakening these spiritual centers of conscious energy, one by one. The degree of super-consciousness attained is dependent upon the number and kind of centers awakened.

Deep and careful meditation and introspection will do much toward the opening or awakening into activity of these centers of consciousness, with a correspondingly resultant degree of super-consciousness manifested as an immediate reward. Detailed instructions for the process cannot be given in literature intended for general reading and distribution, but only for those who qualify to undertake definite and specific work in this direction. Nevertheless, those who do not qualify for such post-graduate work, may find a most gratifying degree of attainment possible by the simple method of perfecting the physical health of the body, coupled with intensive meditation and introspection upon the subject of one's identity.

In this connection do not ask every Tom, Dick and Harry who professes to be an "occult teacher," who you were in your last incarnation. Not one answer in ten thousand will be worth fiddlesticks, simply and solely because such knowledge would be contrary to one of Nature's greatest laws, the law of personal identity. Rarely, one who may actually have attained a degree of mastership, is permitted, for good and sufficient reason that will be apparent at the time, to give an enquirer an idea or clue to his former incarnation, but never will such an initiate give a complete revelation, simply because he cannot do so.

No human being has ever seen an Ego. No spiritual being has ever seen an Ego either. The Ego is a Divine Emanation—therefore an integral part of our Solar Logos, and "No man hath seen God at any time." (John, i. 18).

We see each other on the physical planes and on the spiritual planes under the "personna" in which we manifest at the time. What is more, beware of the "psychic" who will solemnly assure you that undoubtedly you were an Egyptian, Assyrian, Chaldean King, High Priest, or ancient Hindu or Persian Sage. Very probably you were nothing of the sort. Out of the billions who have passed this way before us, only a comparatively small number have been such personages and it is not likely that they have "all been saved up and incarnated at the one present time."

You can recover thru super-consciousness, somewhat of the knowledge of your previous personal manifestations, but even you cannot KNOW YOUR REAL IDENTITY until the end of your involuntary incarnations, nor can any one else tell you. This also is a natural law. The attainment of the knowledge of your own identity is "knowing yourself" and that is a process that constitutes human evolution, and your identity cannot be known because it is not complete until your present evolution is complete and that is some time off. Super-consciousness will reveal to you partially or wholly, somewhat of your manifestations in incarnations, if you go about it to attain such knowledge in the right way.

Note that we say "in the right way." What constitutes the "right way"? First, freedom from curiosity. Nature's arcanes are not open to the curious. The mysteries are available only to those who seek their solution for the purpose, not of gratifying self-interest or curiosity, but of acquiring the spiritual values that will be develop in the process of attainment.

Second, the "right way" means persistence, patience and strict conformity to natural law. Lack of these qualities is the great stumbling block to students of the mysteries. Each seeks a short cut to knowledge. Each seeks to be an exception, professing special individual merits and reasons. Refusal to be made exceptions causes a demonstration of peevishness. This is immediate evidence to any competent instructor that such a student is incapable of going beyond a certain point in the work until the greater lessons of self-control are better understood and put into practice.

The method and process offered by our synthesis of Scriptural affirmations will lead one directly to a desirable degree of proficiency in the exercise and function of super-consciousness. No dogmas or doctrinalia are involved and the process is available to Christian or Jew, Catholic or Protestant, Churchman or non-Churchman. Sincerity is the only requisite.

The process is simple—in character. It is not so simple in operation. We are to set our affections on things above, not on things on the earth.

This is because where our affections are our heart is also. Our affections are to be set upon the treasure which is super-consciousness, further defined as super-mindedness. Super-consciousness is our treasure. Our heart is to be set upon it. Our thoughts will be where our heart and our treasure are. As we think in our heart, so shall we become.

This is the process, in all simplicity of character. Now, in operation, the very moment we set ourselves to the task, we shall find ourselves confronted by doubts, fears, questions, problems of convenience, inability to properly concentrate, quasi-attitudes regarding the desirability of sustaining such a process. These are "lions in the way" and must be overcome. They are possible of conquest. They are not material lions or material obstacles insuperable. They are the kind of obstacles the resolute aspirant will gladly conquer and overcome. They are the kind of obstacles that will test the aspirant. They are the kind of obstacles that will easily conquer the merely curious, the quasi-adventurous, the weak, the unpersistent and the wobblers.

Set your mind firmly upon the attainment of super-consciousness, the consciousness of more than your mere environment, the consciousness of the inner meaning of things, consciousness of past, present and future, as applied to your own personal experience. This will give your newly developing faculties definite material upon which to demonstrate their activity. Think in your heart, steadily, persistently, faithfully, by definite act and instance, that you are attaining—have attained to a degree of super-consciousness. Know that you have it at all times; that you are not attempting the creation of something new, but are endeavoring to bring out that which you already have within you.

As you think in your heart upon these matters, ponder well the truth that you are trying to enter consicously a world in which the ordinary mind does not consciously function, a world that belongs rightfully to the initiates who have gone before you, and therefore the super-consciousness you seek, is really making your mind a part of the Mind of Christ, the Christos or Sun Initiate, quite independently of any religious system, cultus or school. The Christos does not belong exclusively to the Christian Church. He never founded that Church. The Church is named for Him and his followers were first called Christian at Antioch, but long before that, they were known by many other names. Therefore, in seeking at-one-ment with the mind of Christ, we are seeking at-one-ment with the mentalism of our Great Elder Brother, the Sun Initiate who has gone this way before us and who is still with us even until the end of the world.

Usually, in works devoted to mystical science, the aspirant is taught to meditate upon some definite object, for the purpose of sending his stream of consciousness back thru all that the object may represent in its experience, if such a word may be used here. But that is a lawful phase of spiritual psychometry and it is not just what we are seeking at the present time. Super-consciousness means also, super-physical consciousness or the consciousness of super-physical things or matters, pertaining to yourself, the individual, it may be, but above your ordinary physical environment.

So it is, that instead of concentrating or meditating upon things pertaining to your mundane environment, we choose the Scriptural method, based upon a fairly intimate knowledge of the Great Initiate at a period close to that Initiate's last earthly expression, and set our thought, meditations or "affections" on things above the earth, not on it.

In our normal consciousness, we may concentrate upon some particular thing and let the stream of our consciousness carry us back to the very first appearance of that object in the world of matter. Or, our consciousness may carry us to the time when that object shall no longer appear in this visible world. But super-consciousness is required to show us where and what that object was before its first appearance and the reason or cause of its appearance. Such a stream of consciousness is carrying us to things above the earth and is super-physical in its nature and character.

As we faithfully meditate upon our attainment and possession of super-consciousness, we shall become "aware" of new sensations. We shall become aware of definite impulses of real illumination, regarding which, there will be no speculation or question, for they will stand out beyond our norm of experience so contrastingly that we cannot escape giving them our attention. We shall experience new sensations, for we will be accomplishing something else at the same time. We shall be causing our astral vehicle to assume a degree of activity that will bring it well along the way toward more definite organization and independent function, a result productive of many and most important results.

The depths of the human soul are as yet unprobed. It is doubtful if they ever will be probed, for the soul is a progressive factor that keeps well apace if not ahead of our normal objective status. But the soul being essential pabulum or essence, is a source of strength that is incalculably powerful and in this process of "thinking in our hearts" that we possess and have attained the active functioning of a well defined degree of super-consciousness, we draw upon the resources of soul strength for those factors we do not know, ordinarily, how to develop and apply for ourselves.

Herein is the assurance of our ultimate success, for the process of attaining super-consciousness is not only a personal effort on our individual part; it is an inner process of co-operation, whereby and wherein the Higher Spiritual Entities join their efforts to those of the aspirant and assist him, thru his inner vehicles, to the attainment of that which, in his heart, he really thinks and believes himself to be.

By thinking in our hearts, we carry on an active process of withdrawing from the outer world and massing our mental and spiritual forces in the inner worlds and this inner absorption is the power that draws up the soul strength that ultimately motivates our several spiritual centers or chakras and develops a new phase of activity in the astral body itself.

In the manifestation or realization of super-consciousness, we shall find it necessary to control our ordinary consciousness by exercising control over many of the normal conditions in life. We are expected to feel and understand pleasure and pain. We gain experience thru each. But we must learn not to become hyper-excitable and demonstrable or prodigal in our pleasures and we must learn to conceal our sense of pain. Not that we may not feel pain, but that we shall endeavor, as an act of control, to conceal it and not show our feelings. If we are angry, we may realize it but we should strive not to show it. There is nothing affected or abnormal in such procedures. They simply constitute the difference between the person of culture and the person of primitive, unreprest instincts brot over as atavisms from bygone geological and anthropological periods.

If we really bring ourselves to think and believe in our hearts that we not only possess but have actually begun to function that treasure upon which we have set our heart, then we shall have accomplisht more than we expected to accomplish at the start. Refer back to paragraph 3, in this lesson. Note the admonition; "Let it be the hidden man of the heart." As every spiritual aspirant knows, man is a composite being in the deepest possible sense of the word. Physical man is composite, mental man is composite and spiritual man is composite, but there is a true hidden man of the heart, with whom we do not become acquainted simply by culture on physical, mental or spiritual planes alone. It requires something more than culture to know this hidden man.

The hidden man of the heart is our super-consciousness. It is the man we always have been and the man we really are at all times, progressing, growing, expanding thru experience, but unknown to us because we function only in our normal consciousness or sub-consciousness and even the latter, most people know little about. The super-consicousness is the collected consciousness of our infinite past, our fleeting present and much of our prospective future. It is vitally with us. It is almost an actual Entity. It is not the Ego, but it is so highly organized that it functions co-ordinately in many respects with the Ego, as a monitor and Holy Guardian Angel.

Seeking the attainment of super-consciousness is, therefore, simply obedience to the command for man to "know himself." We do not create super-consciousness in the sense of developing a new quality, attribute, property or faculty. We already have it. Proper culture brings it to the fore and raises us from the plane of a three dimensional existence to a fourth dimensional existence wherein the ordinary concepts of our environment in terms of length, bredth and thickness become amplified into the larger space-time conceptions of interpenetrability.

The reasons and explanations just given, will show the aspirant why we recommend that, in this particular phase of endeavor, meditation should be upon himself rather than upon objects practical or symbolic, natural or artificial, because the super-consciousness he seeks is an intensely personal, individual matter. When he attains the practical functioning of his own super-consciousness, the aspirant will find to his surprise that not only is he functioning in his own, but that super-consciousness is like an ocean; it is a state wherein the initiate can function unrestrictedly so far as he does not trespass upon other purely personal relationships.

When we seek to function our individual super-consciousness, we have, as previously stated, motivated our astral body to a greater degree of efficiency. Now the astral body is much more intimately a part of the astral world than is our physical body a part of the physical world. The physical body enjoys a large degree of freedom therein. It can go into the water but cannot remain there over a certain period of time. It can go into the air but must keep within certain limitations of height. It can go into parts of the physical world to which it is not acclimated, and become acclimated to them. But the astral does not enjoy this freedom. A fish submerged in ocean or lake, must stay therein, and its existence is solely dependent on the water passing thru the gill clefts. The continued existence of the astral body is dependent upon a somewhat analogous process.

Now the functioning of the super-consciousness is dependent upon the awakening of the chakras which are centers of consciousness but composed of the substance of the astral world. Therefore, when our individual astral vehicle becomes more efficiently active, it places us in contact with the astral stream of super-consciousness which admits us integrally to "the Mind of Christ" and the greater scope of vision accorded thereby.

As the late Dr. Rudolph Steiner well said, "Clear, self-concentrated thought can obtain explanations about the world, life and man."* Thinking in our heart, will motivate the astral vehicle and until we do this, our centers will not awaken as true higher organs of cognition. Thinking in the heart means thinking without modification, intently, concentratedly, believing thoroly what one thinks.

All students in legitimate schools of occult science are taught that when Virgin Spirit emanated from the Logos it had Divine Consciousness but not Self Consciousness. Mortal experience gives the opportunity for the Infinite to think Himself into manifestation. This process alone confers the consciousness of Self. Even in the Genesiac account of creation, we read that God said, "Let us make man in our own image." Aside from the quibblings of critics, taking the authorized text as it stands, we note a significant thing. God speaks in the plural. He does not use the pronoun "I". God did not have the "I Consciousness." Man brot that phase of consciousness into being.

Super-conscious means, just as the word obviously implies, the conscious that is above our ordinary status of cognition. It is super-physical or super-mundane because it is and can only be the consciousness of things higher than the mundane, in the Scriptural term—things above the earth. Now, in order to arrive at a better understanding of just what this means, make a survey, as best you can, of your present consciousness. You will quickly discover that it seems well nigh impossible for you to think at all except in terms of something that you have cognized in your physical environment. Even your mental life and your spiritual hopes are fashioned according to what you think you know in terms of objective models. Therefore, you will speedily ascertain that your ordinary consciousness is not super in any sense and that it does pertain entirely to things upon the earth, even tho you may try to visualize amplified or higher developments of earthly things upon an assumedly higher plane. With all due reverence, we must remember that our best concepts of God, which change from age to age, as human mentalism progresses, are simply our highest ideas of a tremendously super- human Entity. Being human ourselves, we do not ordinarily know of anything higher than ourselves, and if we try to visualize anything or anybody higher than ourselves, it will prove to be but an amplified ideal of a super-humanity.

In seeking the functioning of our inherent super-consciousness, therefore, we must meditate upon our inner self—not our verisimiltude as some duly named person in a previous expression or incarnation. Our real self is as relatively formless as God Himself, who cannot possibly be a creature "of body, parts and passions" analogous to His creature, Humanity. God may be and probably is a collective body, but not an individual body in the commonly understood sense of the term.

By meditating upon our real self, the "hidden man of the heart," he whom we always have been, regardless of temporary incarnation, we direct our normal consciousness inward, until, by the reinforcement of the soul strength previously described, it contacts the stream of super-consciousness. The moment this contact is made, our normal consciousness serves as the line or medium thru which our super-consciousness comes to the front,—"is brot out" as it were.

The student of the mysteries cannot pursue his studies very far before realizing that he is receiving a great deal of information regarding worlds, planes and regions that form no part of his visible environment; that relate entirely to spheres of consciousness beyond his own; that pertain to things distinctly not of the earth but above it. As none of the things he is taught come within the scope of ordinary academic investigation and research, how, he may lawfully enquire, have his teachers gained the knowledge they are imparting to him?

Eliminating all the sophistry and sometimes pure fraud unfortunately taught as "genuine occult science," there is a solid base of fundamental fact, upon which many testimonies from sources widely apart from each other, agree. We are taught in Holy Scriptures that "in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be establisht" (Matt. xviii, 16) and upon the basic truths of mystical science a multitude of witnesses extending back all thru human history, are agreed.

The fact that these witnesses are agreed and that each new researcher who undertakes the work in the right spirit and with the right motives is able to corroborate the principles he studies, is proof that the processes by which such knowledge is gained are lawful, logical and can be relied upon to produce identical results when pursued by various students.

Furthermore, the fact that the knowledge imparted relates solely to things above the earth, not upon it, shows that many have been able to function their super-consciousness by setting their "affections", their mind and heart upon things above the earth; things super-mundane. In setting their affection upon super-physical things, they have received super-physical knowledge of the things that engaged their attention so successfully.

Read the Proverbs of Solomon, son of David, king of Israel. Sift out the individual proverbs relating to wisdom and the pursuit and acquisition of wisdom, said to have been written by the "wisest man who ever lived." While the writing of Proverbs is accredited to Solomon, it is believed by many scholars that, like many another ancient monarch, he simply appropriated and passed on to posterity, wise sayings that had come down to him from a still greater antiquity. This is quite probable in view of the fact that many of the Proverbs are duplicates of the wise sayings of several other historical personages and great teachers.

At any rate, by studying the wisdom ascribed to Solomon, the aspirant will shortly discover that Solomon distinguisht between the wisdom of man and the wisdom of God, the wisdom of things earthly and that of things above the earth.

Our super-physical consciousness operates in a marvelous way. In the human body, the peripheral nerves, fnctioning synchronosly with the nadis described in the preceding lesson, serve as the antennae which bring in to our normal consciousness the impulses from the stream of super-physical consciousness, of which we have an individual part, but to which we can also "tune in" to still greater and more generous measure.

Recall
"The Inner Way" of Saint-Martin

The result of sincere efforts to function the super-conscious will amply repay the time and patience involved, for they will indeed "open our vision to the light of life and truth" as nothing else can do for us while incarnate. It is a phase of consciousness far more to be desired than that which ordinarily manifests thru phenomenal processes. Every bit of the super-consciousness we bring over will remain with us and it will draw to itself by the law of attraction all features with which the given modicum may be intimately related or concerned. Once we begin to function the super-consciousness, it increases in us progressively and continuously, unless or until we inadvertently shut the door upon it by relapsing back into absorption by the mundane interests of our environment.

It is not to be feared, for a moment even, that attainment of super-conscious functioning will take us out of the world and require us to become hopelessly impractical dreamers and fond idealists. Nothing of the sort. Any tendencies in such a direction are sign posts warning the aspirant that he is on the wrong path and must turn back to his starting point at once until he discovers wherein he has made his mistake.

As in every other instance in true occult science, the aspirant must remain well-equilibrated, normal, practical, demanding substantial evidence without being tyrannically imperative in the process. Super-consciousness being a perfectly natural process and law, can be applied to a better understanding of things mundane or earthly, just so far as such application is not for mercenary results, for none of the higher laws and processes can be successfully applied to such ends.

In applying the super-consciousness to mundane matters, the great advantage to be gained is, that it enables the aspirant to see "both sides" of all matters or questions, which alone is a tremendous leverage in the solution of pressing human problems. Then again, it becomes operative in a curious way. It enables the aspirant to see, like the illumined Jacob Boehme, the inner life and laws of visible things in our environment. All the kingdoms of life open many of their mysteries to him who can function this higher stream of consciousness.

In seeking the attainment of this wonderful spiritual status, let the aspirant make sure of his own motives. He cannot impress the astral forces or Invisible Assistants to Humanity by the claims he makes in his physical environment. If his motives are right and his patience is sufficient, the Path is open and success waits upon the aspirant who has the dogged persistence to hold out to the end. It does not come quickly, let the aspirant be well aware of that. It cannot be attained in order to meet some personal end or desire of the aspirant. The motives must be clear, clean and free from the desire for personal aggrandisement, even tho it be solely on the intellectual or spiritual plane. Intellectuality or spirituality are not sufficient ends in themselves. The motive must take into consideration the effect that possible results may have upon the general advancement of the race and of the extant wave of human evolution.

If the motives be right, let the aspirant study this lesson carefully and begin his process of attainment by the apparently simple method outlined herein. If he shows the right spirit, he may be sure that avenues of progress will be opened to him, not as he thinks he deserves them but as he actually does qualify for them.

PROBLEM

Write, as succinctly as you can, just what your concept of the super-consciousness is.

DEVOTED TO THE ADVANCEMENT AND MYSTICAL ENLIGHTENMENT OF MAN

The dubbing of a Knight.

Beloved Companions #193

Beginning in this Liber I am going to present a series dealing with the Grail, Freemasonry, and the Templar Tradition. It will continue through the next several Libers. You will surely find this series both delightful and enlightening and it is in keeping with our effort to present information from the Traditional streams.

Let us begin right away with an enquiry into the ideas associated with chivalry.

THE ORDERS OF CHIVALRY

THE INSTITUTION OF CHIVALRY First of all, just what was or is: "Chivalry" ? Chivalry was a feudal military institution of the nobility of the time. It defined the behavior of the mounted warrior known as the Knight both on the battlefield as well as off of it, in his social relations with society such as his equals, his comrades, his enemies, the church, women, the peasantry and the poor. Certain ideals nowadays, such as nobility of heart, honor, courage, gallantry and generosity have become associated with the notion of chivalry.

CHIVALRY ORIGINATED FROM A MIXTURE OF INFLUENCES The institution of chivalry originated from a mixture of several influences. Germanic military customs were tailormade for the enormous possibilities opened up by the use of cavalry in the armies of Western Europe in the Middle Ages. Then there was the Church, which sought to limit and control violence by channelling it in certain ways, including the idea that violence could be directed against the enemies of Christendom. Another element was the concept of courtly love popularized by the wandering Troubadours, according to which a noble knight had to develop the finer side of his nature by devoting himself to a lady of his class, and by passing certain tests of character, to win her esteem and affection.

BIRTHPLACE AND RANKS OF KNIGHTHOOD Knighthood was first established in France but quickly spread to other Christian countries. Under the rules of knighthood, an aspirant passed through the ranks of Page, Ecuyer or Squire, and finally to that of Knight. The function of Page was to personally serve his master and his lady, attend to them during the hunt, and even wait on them at table if the occasion demanded it. The Page was taught love of God, veneration for sacred things, respect for womanhood, and manners and virtues befitting his future status.

The Page was promoted to the rank of Squire in the course of a special ceremony in which a priest blessed the sword and sword-belt which the Squire would carry on his person from that moment on. A Squire could be made a Knight from the age of 21, after having shown proof of fidelity, zeal and valor.

VIGIL The ceremony for admission to the status of Knight was a solemn affair. The future Knight was required among other things to spend several nights praying in a chapel and to undertake a certain amount of fasting. The act by which the aspirant was formally made a Knight was first known as dubbing. Originally it was carried out by administering a blow or slap to the neck or shoulder, while certain words of welcome or exhortation were uttered. Eventually the practice developed into what was called the accolade, although the word dubbing has persisted into modern times. The accolade involved touching both shoulders of the aspirant with the flat of a sword blade.

A KNIGHT, A MAN OF HONOR A Knight had to embody the virtues he had been taught as a Page and a Squire. He had to be a man of his word and an oath or promise had to be kept no matter what. Lying was a very grave offence and could only be wiped out by the shedding of blood. In short, a Knight had to symbolize and inspire all the noble qualities to which a human could aspire.

The status of knighthood could be conferred at any time, including on the battlefield after some great feat had been accomplished. The most popular occasions, however, were the important religious festivals, especially Pentecost, and during coronations, births and baptisms of kings and princes. The different actions performed during the ceremony of investiture, as well as the accoutrements used, were of a symbolic character. The double-edged sword was to remind the newly-dubbed Knight that his task, among other things, was to maintain chivalry and justice. The straight lance symbolized truth, the coat of mail represented a fortress erected against vice, and the spurs were to incite the new Knight to deeds of virtue and honor. The shield was a symbol of his place between the sovereign and his people with the duty to preserve peace.

THE CRUSADES The Crusades began in 1095 and brought together the Knights of Christendom in a common enterprise under the umbrella of the Church. There began the practice of dubbing Knights at the place believed to have been the burial place of him who was known as the Christ. Knights who were dubbed at this spot were known as Knights of the Holy Sepulchre.

Gradually, classes of Knights developed and banded together for some common purpose. Some were fraternities established on religious lines and into which Knights were admitted as monks. Such fraternities followed rules of celibacy and were organized in hierarchical fashion with officials bearing titles such as Grand Master, Grand Prior, Commander and Knight. Some of these Orders were international in character, such as the Order of the Knights Templar, the Order of the Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem and the Order of St. Lazarus, this last-mentioned devoting itself principally to the protection of leper hospitals. There were also national crusading orders such as the Order of Calatrava in Spain, the Order of Avis in Portugal and the Teutonic Knights in Germany. As these Orders grew in wealth and influence, religious aims gave way to political ambitions.

THE DEMISE OF KNIGHTHOOD The fading out of the crusades, the defeat of the Christian armies by the forces of Islam, the development of new military strategies for effectively deploying footsoldiers, the success of bowmen at the battle of Crécy in 1346 and at Againcourt in 1415, the development of artillery and the erosion of feudalism by centralized power, gradually destroyed the institution of knighthood. Chivalry degenerated into fashionable elegance ... and Christian fervor gave way almost completely to courtly love. The old sense of personal honor became egoistic pride to be defended in duels.

GOVERNMENTAL ORDERS OF CHIVALRY With the disappearance of the medieval Orders of Chivalry, new types of institutions gradually came into being. These were more or less honorary associations established, on the one hand, by sovereigns in various countries and consisting of members whose common link was the possession of some titular distinction. Thus, in the British Empire, for example, Orders were established by various monarchs to bestow upon certain persons a recognition or award for work or service done for their country, thus: the Victorian Order which was instituted by Queen Victoria. In Barbados, the Order of Knight of Saint Andrew is bestowed upon particular Barbadian people in recognition of services rendered. Many, but not all, governments of the world have a system of honors which they bestow upon their nationals for service rendered to the country. In exceptional circumstances the award is also given to non-nationals, as in the case of former president Ronald Reagan of the United States, who has been made Honorary Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, one of Britain's highest orders of chivalry, by Queen Elizabeth II, on June 14, 1989.

FRATERNAL ORDERS OF CHIVALRY On the other hand, quite apart from the Chivalric Orders instituted by governments for their various purposes, there also came into existence, many centuries after the actual historical chivalric orders went out of existence ... various fraternal orders of chivalry which were established to perpetuate and emulate the noble qualities and ideals that were originally expressed by the first knights. Some of these fraternal, chivalric orders, stand on their own such as the Knights of Pythias; others as a 'degree' within Freemasonry and other fraternal societies.

At this point, let us have a look at two actual or historical chivalric orders:

THE KNIGHTS OF MALTA AND THE TEUTONIC KNIGHTS

THE KNIGHTS OF MALTA

At different times in their history, the Knights of Malta have been variously known as the Knights Hospitallers, the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem and the Knights of Rhodes. This order was one of the most important of the religious orders which came into existence during the Crusades. It began as the Hospitallers of Jerusalem, a wholly religious and charitable Order, established by Italian merchants in Palestine to help poor pilgrims.

In the year 1099, Gérard, Rector of the Hospital and a Frenchman from Martigues in Provence, inducted the brethren to take vows of poverty, obedience and chastity. The Patriarch of Jerusalem granted them the habit of the Order, a plain black robe with a white eight-pointed cross on the left breast.

Around 1120 Gérard died and was succeeded by Raymund du Puy, who changed the character of the Order by making it into a military one. He wished it to be active in the field and to devote itself to the protection of Palestine from the "infidels." The constitution of the Order along military lines by du Puy is considered to be the beginning of the Order of Knights Hospitallers of St. John. According to some sources, however, the Order was constituted as early as 1113 when Pope Pascal II was said to have issued a Bull authorizing its establishment.

From about 1120 onwards until the middle of the sixteenth century the history of the Order was one of continuous warfare with the armies of Islam. When the Order, along with other defenders of Christendom, was expelled from the Holy Land, it took refuge in Cyprus. The knights were not happy there, and after seizing the island of Rhodes settled there for some two hundred years, during which time they acted as an outpost against the encroachment of Ottoman power. In the meantime their rivals, the Knights Templar, were crushed and some of their possessions and properties given to the Hospitallers.

In 1522 the Turks captured Rhodes, and after finding temporary refuge in Italy, the Order was granted the island of Malta by the Emperor Charles V of Germany. In 1530 the Knights of Malta took possession of Malta, where they were to remain for 268 years until it was given up without a struggle by Grand Master Ferdinand von Hompesch in 1798. The Order has nevertheless managed to survive into modern times, existing today mainly as a charitable institution.

THE ORDER OF THE TEUTONIC KNIGHTS

During the Crusades, a wealthy German living in Jerusalem built a hospital to take care of pilgrims from his country. The Patriarch of Jerusalem gave him permission to add an oratory to the hospital. Other Germans from the towns of Lubeck and Bremen contributed to the development of this charity and for the building of a hospital in Acre. In 1190 Pope Clément III approved the creation of the Order of Teutonic Knights and in 1196 Pope Celestin III granted it the same privileges as other orders.

Heinrich Walpot was elected the first Grand Master. The knights of the order adopted as dress a white mantle with a black cross embroidered in gold. Later a black double-headed eagle was added. After the fall of Acre, the main body of the Knights returned to Europe where for many years they engaged in crusades against the pagan inhabitants of Prussia and Poland, progressively losing their religious character in the process. After accumulating great power in Eastern Europe the Order went into decline for a variety of reasons, including the loss of its religious fervor. The little which survived of the Order was taken over by the Emperor Francis II between 1805 and 1809, in which year it was abolished by Napoleon.

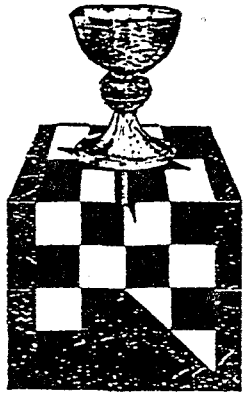
We will continue in the next Liber with a study of the Order of Knights Templar.



#194

In this lecture we begin our series on the Holy Grail. The Grail was the chalice of the Last Supper in which the wine was given the significance of the blood and life of the Divine. It will be necessary, however, to lay down some foundational groundwork before we can get into the heart of the Grail story. It will be interesting to note just how this introductory information involves the Templars, of whom we will soon learn more!

THE TEMPLE
THE ORDER OF MELCHISEDEK
&
THE ESSENES

THE MEANING OF THE TEMPLE

The knowledge about man's origins and the reasons for his existence in the Cosmos ... which has been guarded by generations of initiates ... has always remained the same in essence ... though the language, the symbols, and the institutions used to express this knowledge ... are changed or adapted to conform to the experience and needs of the civilization of the time.

For example: the Judeo-Christian vision of the beginnings of life and its future on this planet and beyond is but ONE version of the story of man and the universe.

Each civilization has had its version, each valid for the time and the people for whom it was intended. Each of these versions or traditions has had its esoteric or secret aspects. What is extraordinary, however, is that there are more similarities than differences in the methods used by these secret traditions to change the consciousness of their respective practitioners.

THE MEANING OF "ESOTERIC" The word "esoteric" means hidden spiritual or philosophical teachings intended only for the initiated. The terms "Spiritual Tradition", "Primordial Tradition", "Esoteric Tradition" or simply "The Tradition" refer to that collection of esoteric knowledge, teachings or realizations which cannot be, or have not been, communicated in written form.

Down through the ages such knowledge has been transmitted orally or through methods known only to initiates ... methods which provoke an INNER REALIZATION rather than an intellectual comprehension within the seeker.

SACRED SHRINES Man has always believed that there should be a special place dedicated to the reception of higher knowledge, and all great spiritual traditions have encouraged respect and veneration for the place or building where contact with a higher level of consciousness, the source of transcendental knowledge, --- divinity, the gods, God or the ultimate creator --- was sought.

The Latin word templum from which the word temple derives, signifies a holy enclosure or building screened from the eyes of the profane. In later times it came to mean a shrine where people worshipped, whatever the denomination; it was also used in fraternal societies such as the Freemasons and Martinists to designate a place where their meetings and ceremonies took place.

Esoterically, the temple symbolizes the receptical in which divine revelation is received. It is also the material representation of the human heart, which is the true temple. According to the Tradition, the physical temple is only necessary because at the present stage of our evolution, the majority of mankind cannot contact higher levels of consciousness without external aids. This will gradually change as evolution continues.

LOCATION OF TEMPLES One of the elements of knowledge handed down over the ages was how to build temples. These places, destined for contact with higher intelligences, angels, gods, or simply the divine, were not built just anywhere. It is now known that they were quite often erected where the location favoured a junction between cosmic and telluric currents.

Sometimes nearness to a depression with underground water, or to a hill with a particular shape was considered desirable. The Templars learned in the Middle East about the science of energies for building and used it to revolutionize the art of cathedral construction in Europe. The Roman Catholic Church apparently retained the knowledge of the art, and used it in building churches up to the time of the Reformation. The purpose of the various techniques was to ensure that something happened during ceremonies —— that some kind of spiritual transmission of spiritual knowledge or realization took place for the benefit of those present.

The Esoteric Tradition has used the word 'temple' in a wide sense. The Tradition itself as a repository of primordial wisdom has been called the Temple. It is from this point of view that any spiritual movement which in its deeper teachings respects the purity of the primordial wisdom handed down by initiates, can be considered to be a manifestation of the true and eternal Temple.

THE ORDER OF MELCHISEDEK

One documented account of an early example of the transmission of spiritual knowledge is the Bible's reference to the meeting between the patriarch Abraham and the mysterious Melchisedek.

The name Melchisedek is derived from the Hebrew Melki Tzaddiq, King or Ruler of Righteousness. Very little is know about this legendary personage. Reference is made to him in the Bible as follows:

> And Melchisedek King of Salem brought forth bread and wine; and he was the priest of the most high God.
> And he blessed him, and said, blessed be Abram of the most high God, possessor of heaven and earth.
> And blessed be the most high God, which hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand. And he gave him tithes of all. (Genesis 14: 18-20)

Other references to Melchisedek are to be found in: Psalms 110:4 and Hebrews 7:1-21. (Please pause and read these passages now.)

Templar teachings shed light on the meaning of some of these citations. For example, according to Biblical narrative, Melchisedek was born without father or mother. To the Templars this means that Melchisedek was not born on this planet but was a spiritual being who came from elsewhere. The Bible states that Melchisedek gave Abraham bread & wine after the latter had conquered the Kings of Edom. In the Templar tradition, this relates to a symbolic act of the highest importance.

The giving of bread & wine to Abraham is just another way of saying that because Abraham had conquered the warring elements in himself, he had reached the stage where he was ready to take another step on the ladder of evolution. By direct transmission of some kind, Melchisedek initiated Abraham into a new level of consciousness and awareness.

ISLAM & CHRISTIANITY Now, one of the tasks assigned to the original Templars was to encourage the unification of Islam and Christianity. Such a realization would in a way be a return to the original source of revelation which gave birth to these two great religions. Melchisedek transmitted the essence of the Tradition to Abraham, who in turn passed it on to his sons, Isaac and Ishmael.

From age to age this deposit of spiritual knowledge has come down to us in two streams, one through Israel (Moses), and the other through the African and Arabian initiates (Jethro). The two strands were brought together for the first time by Moses after he was initiated in the Egyptian mysteries.

The Essenes, with their Egyptian links, collaborated with John the Baptist to prepare the coming of the Christ, bringing together the two currents once again. After the Christ the two branches resumed their parallel routes, one of which produced Mohammed, another great manifestation of the divine spirit.

MELCHISEDEK: FOUNDER OF THE PRIESTHOOD OF THE WESTERN TRADITION To the Templars, therefore, Melchisedek is one of the key figures of the Order of the Temple. He is a father figure in the same way that Hiram Abiff is the father figure in the tradition of Freemasonry. At Chartres, one of the great French cathedrals, whose construction was sponsored by the Templars, an impressive stone carving and a beautiful stained glass window pay homage to Melchisedek, father of the eternal priesthood.

According to Templar tradition, Melchisedek was neither born in the normal sense "...having neither beginning of days, nor end of life;..." nor did he die. His mission was not the same as the other archetype --- the Christ. Melchisedek symbolized the eternal spirit of the Father aspect of the Godhead, while Christ symbolized the principle of the Son. As the archetype of the Son, the Christ had to incarnate and conquer death to prove to a sceptical humanity that life was indeed eternal. (Who symbolized the Mother or Feminine principle? We will deal with this at the appropriate time.)

Two symbols have been associated with Melchisedek: wheat and the beehive. Wheat symbolizes nourishment, spiritual and physical. The beehive is a symbol of unity, where many parts work for the good of the whole. The six-sided cell of the honey comb is also representative of the six-rayed star -- the star of David -- which also symbolizes esoterically the perfect union of the lower and higher aspects of man, the conjunction of two triangles.

Melchisedek, founder of the priesthood for the Western Tradition, was described in the Bible texts quoted earlier, as King of Salem. The name Salem is apparently derived from the Hebrew word Shalom, meaning peace. In an upcoming lecture I will try to clarify why opposition is inevitable and in some way necessary at our present level of evolution ... but it is interesting to observe at this point that in the city of Jerusalem there is perpetual confrontation between the two branches of Adam's descendants: that of Sarah, which was to produce the Christ; and that of Hagar, from whom descended Mohammed, the founder of Islam.

THE ORDER OF MELCHISEDEK It should be clear from what I have said so far, that the Order of Melchisedek does not exist on a material level. Any person who has reached the level of spiritual advancement where he can make conscious contact with the roots of our spiritual tradition is de facto a member of the Order of Melchisedek. Any priest who by his spiritual capacity is able to function as a channel for the spiritual energies of the Christ, is a priest after the Order of Melchisedek.

Another outstanding example of spiritual transmission in biblical history was the giving of bread & wine by the Christ to his disciples at the Last Supper. The historic words: "And he took bread, and gave thanks, and gave unto them, saying 'This is my body which is given for you; this do in remembrance of me", meant that the disciples were instructed to perpetuate this act in the future. Ordained priests are supposed to have inherited the tradition of transmission by which they should be able to stimulate a new awareness of spiritual realities during the Eucharistic moment of the Mass when the host and the wine are consecrated. Either recipients are particularly secretive about their experiences ... or something has been lost ... since in these days one does not meet many people who say that their level of consciousness has been raised after taking communion. Perhaps the ecclesiastic tradition has left out in its training for the ministry those techniques which Abraham and subsequent initiates may have used to ensure victory over the "Kings of Edom" within themselves, before attempting to transmit divine knowledge and consciousness?

In our next Liber I will continue this introduction, and turn your attention to the Essenes. You will then see why it is necessary to have this preliminary information before we can approach our main topic: The Holy Grail!

Beloved Companions

The questions are often asked: What is Freemasonry? From where did it come? Who started it? Is it 'esoteric'? How many 'degrees' are there?..... Obviously in a short talk such as this all these questions cannot be fully dealt with, but I will try to give a general overview.

THE FIRST MASONIC GRAND LODGE Before 1717, the date of the establishment of the Grand Lodge of England, and the first masonic Grand Lodge in the world, there existed only a few lodges fully independent. With the advent of the Grand Lodge systems, Freemasonry became a recognizable entity. It spread abroad and developed along specific lines in the different countries, most keeping to the 1723 Anderson Constitutions, which were modified in England in 1738 and later, at a time when the Grand Lodge of England began to loose its influence with the other European Grand Lodges.

The United Grand Lodge of England is today the governing body of English Freemasonry and says masonry "is not a Secret Society", "nor a religion or a substitute for religion". Perhaps the best answer to the question 'What is Freemasonry' is the one which is most often given: "it is a system of morality, veiled in allegory and illustrated by symbols". It is further defined as, "one of the world's oldest secular fraternal societies ... a society of men concerned with moral & spiritual values. Its members are taught its precepts by a series of ritual dramas, which follow ancient forms and use stonemason's customs and tools as allegorical guides. The essential qualification for admission and continuing membership is a belief in a Supreme Being. Membership is open to men of any race or religion who can fulfill this essential qualification and are of good repute". (Quoted from The Craft: A History of English Freemasonry. John Hamill).

TRADITIONAL HISTORY The traditional history, around which the rituals of the first three degrees [called the Craft] are constructed, places its origin at the time of the building of King Solomon's Temple, but in the actual world we can trace its history from 1717 A.D. when the first Grand Lodge, the Grand Lodge of England, was founded at London. From that time on Freemasonry has expanded, undergoing many vicissitudes along the way -- schisms, reconciliations, quarrels over jurisdiction and quarrels over essential beliefs, until today it is firmly established in most countries of the world [the exceptions being countries of the Communist bloc, and those that suffer under Islamic fundamentalism].

FREEMASONIC REQUIREMENTS Regular Freemasonry demands from its members a belief in God, forbids the discussion of religion and politics in its lodges, and also forbids the admission of women to membership. "It is strongest in the English-speaking world," says R. A. Gilbert, a masonic writer, "and it is a curious paradox that England, where the Craft is most conservative, has produced not only the foremost masonic historians, but also the most adventurous and the most widely read speculative interpreters of masonic symbolism and philosophy." These latter have invariably been influenced by the masonic traditions of continental Europe, where "higher" degrees and exotic Rites have proliferated since the mid-eighteenth century, as we shall see.

ORIGIN OF FREEMASONRY Although the exact origin of Freemasonry remains obscure, when Freemasonry first emerged there were only two degrees: Apprentice and Fellowcraft and the rituals of these degrees are based upon the presumed customs and working tools of medieval stonemasons. Apparently, in the days of cathedral and castle building, masons grouped themselves into 'guilds' which were organizations designed to protect their rights, (the ancient equivalent of modern-day trade unions). There is a popular theory that a regular progression from operative masonry to the speculative Craft took place via a "transitional" period during the seventeenth century during which non-working members were gradually accepted into the guilds, until they became a majority, ... but there is little or no evidence to support this theory.

Another theory, perhaps more accurate, -- but, it must be stressed, still only a theory, -- is that which suggests that Freemasonry arose during the seventeenth century from the efforts of a group of enthusiasts who sought to establish tolerance in religion and the general improvement of society in an era in which intolerance prevailed. They protected themselves by adopting the myth of the building of King Solomon's Temple as an allegory of their aims and by utilizing the wholly appropriate structure of the extant building guilds.

Then there is the Rosicrucian and the Knights Templar connection -- it is mooted by some that either one or possibly both of these were responsible for the emergence of Freemasonry in its speculative form. Again: there is not a shred of historical evidence linking the Templars with Masonry, nor any certainty that the Rosicrucians, as an organized body, ever existed.

An English writer, J. S. M. Ward asserts that Freemasonry was "the survivor of the ancient mysteries -- nay, we may go further and call it the guardian of the mysteries," while another author, Manly P. Hall, in his Secret Teachings of All Ages claims that: "Masonry came to Northern Africa and Asia Minor from the lost continent of Atlantis". I will come back again to this interesting subject of Freemasonry's origin, in a future paper.

ENGLISH & CONTINENTAL MASONRY Whatever the exact origin of masonry however, there is quite a difference between European (or Continental) Freemasonry and that of English Freemasonry and this difference should be understood.

THE ADDITION OF DEGREES AND ORDERS As has been mentioned, when Freemasonry first appeared, it originally had only two degrees, but after a while a third degree, that of Master Mason, was added. Now the result of this was that having added a third, there was no earthly reason why others could not be invented! So it was not long before there appeared a fourth and a fifth and a sixth and seventh..... on the whole pulling further and further away from basic masonry and describing themselves as "higher" degrees and/or Orders.

The upshot was that in countries where, as in England, the natives are rather lacking in imagination (at least in the opinion of the Continentals), this process of addition of degrees was slow and in fact it became frowned upon ... but on the Continent, and particularly in France, this was thought of as a splendid playground for the inventive. Thus were born more and more degrees and variations, each more magnificent than the previous ones.

ESOTERIC MASONIC LODGES In this situation then, in this fertile ground, it was not difficult for sects of an esoteric turn of mind to find the opportunity to add their pinch of salt and infiltrate the body masonic: so as the masonic machine began to roll there could be found, by the mid eighteenth century, a thousand and one Templar Orders and Chivalric degrees. The essential masonic tenets of tolerance and benevolence were overlaid with layers of metaphysical speculation, while the simple Craft rituals were extended into elaborate ceremonies for a multiplicity of degrees, grades and Orders, all of which involved extravagant traditional histories and hierarchical ruling bodies.

To some extent such Rites represented a way of escape from the political oppression of the Roman Catholic Church, which had been implacably hostile to Freemasonry from the beginning, but some of them were established purely as esoteric Orders and simply used the masonic base as a convenient format. Of these esoteric Orders one must introduce a distinction between the genuine esoteric bodies which used masonic symbolism as a way of expression -- and those that were either facetious or opportunist. Which were which is very much a subjective matter of course and depends on one's personal outlook.

ESOTERIC COLORATION OF MASONRY In any case, from at first attributing esoteric interpretations to masonic symbolism as such, it soon extended to bringing in other forms of esoteric symbolism that had nothing to do with the tools and artifacts of the building trade. Thus, masonry in its entirety acquired an aura and reputation of esotericism. Mystics and charlatans alike either invented their own masonic systems or made use of existing masonic lodges or systems (1) as a recruiting ground, or (2) as a frame work within which to exercise their activity. Names like Cagliostro, Saint-Germain, Weishaup, Swedenborg, etc. are all associated with some masonic system or other. Martinez de Pasqually, you will remember, appeared with a charter from Charles Stuart (King of England) and began his Order of Elus-Cohen with masons who came from a French military Lodge. The basic three degrees of his system were simply masonic but were followed by inner degrees that were cohen.

THE "SCOTTISH RITE" It is the French who created, from the plethora of degrees and Orders, the arrangement which became known as the "Scottish Rite": a system comprising 33 degrees. This was exported to the USA where it flourished, to come back to England where it is known as the Ancient and Accepted Rite. (For clarity: the system known as the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite [AASR] in the United States ... is the same as the Ancient and Accepted Rite [AAR] in England.) Another system comprising six degrees is known as the Rectified (Scottish) Rite: the first three degrees are the same as regular Craft masonry but the fourth degree is called 'Perfect and Scottish Master of St. Andrew', which leads to the inner order of Knights Beneficent of the Holy City which has two degrees: Squire Novice and Knight. There are many other systems, for example: that of the Rite of Memphis with 90 degrees and the Rite of Mizraïm with 96 degrees, etc..

Let me now briefly summarize:

The Grand Lodge of England was the first masonic Grand Lodge in the world. It was established in 1717.

Original masonry comprised only two degrees and was concerned with inculcating among its members the ideals of high morality, ethics, virtue & goodness.

A third degree was added. This opened the gate for hundreds of different degrees and Orders to follow. These were mainly invented on the Continent.

Most (if not all) of the Chivalric Degrees & Orders were formed to emulate, commemorate and perpetuate the noble qualities and ideals of the original Knights.

Some persons with esoteric or occult interests used the masonic format as a base to start esoteric Orders and introduced symbolism having nothing to do with the building trade upon which original, or Craft, masonry was founded. This resulted in the whole masonic movement acquiring an aura of esotericism.

Masonry as practiced today is divided (a) into lodges operating under the United Grand Lodge of England, the Grand Lodge of Scotland and others that conform strictly to the "English" type of masonry, (i.e. non-esoteric) and (b) lodges that operate under a Continental Grand Lodge, or a Grand Lodge influenced by Continental ideas, which may or may not incorporate metaphysical teachings and esoteric elements; (c) independent lodges not under the control of any Grand Lodge, which may conform to either system ... or to neither.

Some of the many orders in existence today include: Builders of the Adytum, Buffaloes, Druids, Elks, Foresters, Gardeners, The Golden Dawn, Kabalists, Mechanics, Mosaic Templars, The Order of the Cubic Stone, Oddfellows, Rosicrucians, Shepherds, etc..... These range from benevolent & charitable institutions to magical, mystical, occult & religious.

CO-MASONRY Before I close there is one other form of Masonry that should be mentioned: Masonry, as I intimated, has undergone many metamorphoses and there is, since 1893, a Co-Masonic Order which admits both men and women. It was founded in France and spread to England in 1902 by way of the Theosophical Society. Dr. Annie Besant became President of the Society in 1907, and her support, coupled with that of Rev. C. W. Leadbeater, led to a rapid expansion of Co-Masonry among theosophists, taking in even those who had previously been bitter opponents of Freemasonry. This Order is susceptible to the wider teachings of Theosophy as Leadbeater made clear in his Glimpses of Masonic History.

Let me conclude this introductory talk by saying that in my upcoming talks with you I shall endeavour to explain both the esoteric and exoteric aspects of masonry. You will surely find the subject engaging and I am looking forward to very entertaining and informative sessions over the months ahead.

THE SIGNATURE OF THE SOUL

"Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live." Isa. lv. 3.

AUTHOR'S NOTE: The writer is a member in good standing of both York and Scottish Rites of Freemasony. He is also a member of collateral bodies requiring Masonic Membership as a pre-requisite. In preparing the lessons in Esoteric Masonry which comprise the present series strict observance of his several Obligations will be maintained. The framework of the material used will be such as is publisht in the Ahiman Rezon, the Standard Monitor and the accepted Masonic Encyclopædias and Albert Pike's masterpiece, Morals and Dogma. Upon the framework developt from the above named sources, the esoteric fabric will be formulated.

THERE are two distinct classes of Freemasonry; the Freemasonry of Humanity and the Freemasonry of a Secret Society. There is a wide difference between the two, for the first is a Principle, the other is a cultus. The Fraternity is, itself, really to blame for such a division, for it insists upon the fact that it is a speculative school rather than an operative body, yet a Mason is assumed first to have been prepared as such in his heart.

2 The heart is the organ of vital power in man. It is the source of action. It is the dynamo that drives him. There is nothing speculative about the human heart. The man who is prepared for some definite, constructive purposes in life,

This Fraternity uses some forms of spelling recommended by the first in his heart, bases his future intentions upon a foundation of action. The fact that the Craft assumes the heart to be the preparation ground of each Candidate shows that, in theory at least, it recognizes Freemasonry as a basic, spiritually active principle in human life and conduct.

3 It has always seemed to the writer that the Prophet Isaiah exemplified the Spirit of Freemasonry in the words of our caption, "Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live". The attentive ear is a most essential factor in the neofite's career. His advancement depends upon the possession of it. The spirit of Masonry extends a definite call. The man who hears that call, and comes to the Fraternity in the right spirit of attentiveness, hears, and his soul begins to live as it has never lived before.

4 Approaching then, the esoteric side of Freemasonry, from the viewpoint that Isaiah gives us, it is well to make sure that we understand the human soul somewhat beyond the ordinary orthodox interpretation, which usually fails really to explain the soul at all. It is the soul of man that is being hewn, as rough ashlar from the quarries of body, mind and spirit, thru which the neofite contacts mortal life, and wrought into the perfect ashlar by "virtuous education and the blessings of Deity", to become the "living stone" in "the Temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

5 Our approach to a better understanding of Freemasonry thru a better understanding of the human soul, is, therefore, logical and most appropriate. This method will develop the concept of the universality of Freemasonry, as exemplified by the symbolism of the Lodge, which is treated in detail in the next lesson of this Series.

6 The Craft has a symbol, to which, usually, very little attention is given and which the writer has never heard fully explained in any Lodge or lecture. Yet it is a symbol so sublime that it is not only the keynote of Masonic Principle but the Corner Stone of all human spiritual development, both within and without the Craft. It teaches us the paramount importance of soul development and expresses in a wonderfully comprehensive manner the ethical value of universality.

7 The symbol referd to, is the simple arrangement of geometric forms commonly known as "The Point Within a Circle". It is, in reality, the SIGNATURE OF THE SOUL, and, as such, is beautifully exprest by the illuminated Brother, Jacob Boehme. I wonder how many of my Masonic Brethren have ever regarded this familiar symbol in this Light before. It requires the Masonic Light properly to understand it.

8 Ordinarily, this symbol is shown in the familiar form of a circle between two perpendicular lines, having a point at its center. In some ancient usages, the two perpendiculars were straightened serpents, properly of the cobra species. In many of the Ancient Mysteries, the entire symbol had a phallic significance, which can be obtained easily from any good Masonic encyclopedia. Our purpose in the present lesson is to present new material, not to review existing theories. The simple explanation usually given, Masonically, is, that the point indicates the individual

Mason; the circle, the boundary of his duty to God and Man, (sometimes associated with the limits of the Cable Tow) and the two perpendicular lines represent the two patron saints of Freemasonry, St. John the Baptist and St. John the Evangelist.

9 None the foregoing explanations really explain. To the discerning Masonic student, comes a distinct feeling that something vital, something more than phallicism or ritual application has been omitted. This, we shall endeavor to supply.

10 In the familiar appearance of the symbol, the two perpendiculars represent Strength and Beauty. The circle represents Infinity; the point, the Eternal Wisdom from whence all activity proceeds. Strength and Beauty are, therefore, the natural and proper theoretical supports of infinity, thruout which, order is maintained by the Infinite Wisdom symbolized by the point. The point is, of course, a crude expression, for Infinite Wisdom really occupies all Creation, it is omnipresent. It has neither length, bredth nor thickness, all three of which, the point possesses, but we are obliged to utilize the point to indicate, first, position in space, and second, the focus of Divine forces from which all activity proceeds.

11 T.·.G.·.A.·.O.·.T.·.U.·., the Great Architect of the Universe referd to by Freemasons and Rosicrucians, is the Supreme Being of the Lesser and Greater Mysteries of legitimate ancient and modern arcane bodies. The attributes ascribed to the Supreme Being by Masons and Rosicrucians are those of the Word, Power and Motion, which manifest objectively in the Masonic Wisdom, Strength and Beauty.

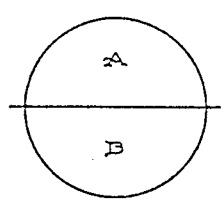
12 The circle alone represents infinity and also—Chaos. According to the Masonic maxim "Ordo ab chao", action is manifest. The point in the circle becomes exprest, it is the Infinite Wisdom manifesting creative activity. Order is develop from chaos. The positions of the pillars of Strength and Beauty, or the two perpendiculars, becomes reverst, and from being passive supports, they become planes of action, assuming thereby the horizontal positions.



(Fig. 3)

13 True Beauty is always strong. Weakness is not beauty. True Strength is always beautiful in its essential nature. Ugliness is brutal. Two planes of action then, combine, in their essential qualities, to make the broader plane upon which the Divine Wisdom can focus in realizing the Word and causing that Word to become "flesh" or its own Divine Nature incarnate in Man, the Creature.

14 The process by which the Word, or attribute of the Eternal becomes incarnate, is the process whereby Macrocosmos or the Greater, (the Creator) creates by reflection of Himself. The resultant reflection becomes Microcosmos. The horizontal plane, formed of the elements of strength and beauty conjoined, becomes the Plane of Mind, or the Mental Plane. All below this plane is the reflection of that which is above and which has its real existence only in the Mind of the Creator.

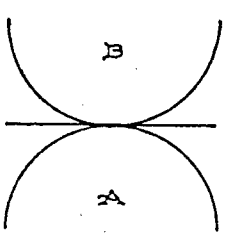
15 It is the working out of the truth contained in the "Gospel from Hermes" familiar to Rosicrucians and to advanst Masonic students; That which descends from Above is Generative. That which emanates and rises is Nutritive (i. e., womb, matrix). The Earth, alone self-supported, is the Receptacle of all things and Reconstructs (i. e., TRANSMUTES) the types which she receives". In Figure 3, A represents Heaven—Macrocosmos, and B—Earth—Microcosmos. God, and God-Man.

(Fig. 4)

16 The activity or "Motion" attribute of the Divine, continuing or "coming down", reflecting Itself in Matter, causes the penetration of the Divine into the Material plane, which is called INvolution. In the womb or matrix formed by "c", the "Seed" thus formed, containing both Divine and mundane elements, represented by the pointed oval or Vesica Piscis as it is known in symbolic and ecclesiastical usage, is comprest more and more until the status indicated by Figure 5 is attained. This attainment represents what occult students and esoterists understand by the "Exhalation of the Great Breath", or Primum mobile. It is the completion of the first activity of the Ancient Wisdom, one aspect of which, we call—God.



(Fig. 5)

17 Here, in Figure five, we note that, as a result of Creation, Macroposopus supports the feminine Earth, Eve, or Eva (B), as INvolution ends. The plane or "mirror" of Mind represents the plane or line of demarcation between the two great processes, INvolution or God manifesting Humanity, and EVolution (Evo, antith. to Eve, Eva), the return of Humanity or the Divine Emanations back to God. Here, on the Mental plane or mirror of mind, illusion begins, for B seems to be the real, whereas it is merely supported by the real.

18 With INvolution theoretically ended, another reversal occurs. In the first manifestation of Divine activity, the perpendiculars were reverst to become the planes of action intsead of remaining as supports. That reversal made INvolution possible. Involution ended, EVolution begins and our horizontals become once again perpendicular, a single perpendicular, for we must remember that Strength and Beauty united. The perpendicular represents that same Strength and Beauty which is also synonymous with Wisdom and Power, directed upwards, for evolution is not only a return process, it is an upward process, the creature rising to its Creator, creation returning to its Source, Man returning to his Father, the Prodigal Son returning home.

19 The reversal described, which also is not without allusion to the Great Reversal of the Poles of our Earth in pre-historic times*, is exprest by the diagram in Figure 6. This becomes a symbol of the REVERSAL IN COSMIC PROCESS: the "going forth" and the "coming back". To the esoterist, it symbolizes the "dip into Matter" and the Return on the Path of Attainment of the Divine Emanations collectively and of each Individualized Emanation personally.

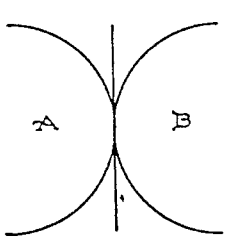
20 In this last presentation of our symbol, we see involution ended and evolution begun. The "sign" of evolution, in Man, is the gift of reason, or rather, the attainment of it. We are told in Genesis that God made man in His own "image". We surely cannot imply that man's physical body is the "image" of God, in any respect, especially from the sculptor's point of view. Man is made in the "image of God", when the involution of Divine Spirit thru Matter has brot nascent man, or "man-in-the-making, to the point where he develops the power to reason. God is Supreme Reason, and when Man attains reason, he is then in the "image" of God. Reason, then, marks the beginning of Man's evolutionary journey back to his Divine Parent.

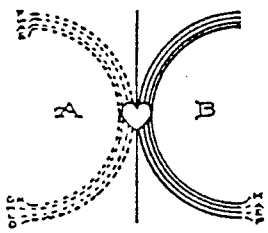
21 The attainment of reason in Man is signalized by one notable phenomenon, Man begins to speak of himself as "I". Man is the only organic creature on our Earth who can thus speak consciously or intentionally. Man is signified by the tall, personal pronoun "I" and this status of his evolution is characterized by the upright position of the formerly horizontal line indicating the Mental Plane. Man now stands erect, by virtue of his reason and his ability to refer to himself as a "person" or an "Individual".

22 There is more to our symbol than this, however. Man became Man, when he assumed the upright position, i. e., when he renounst his arboreal existence, emerged from the woods and walkt erect with the upright spinal column, instead of the horizontal spinal column of the animal kingdom. Similarly, there comes a time, when the Masonic novice stands in the Northeast corner of his lodge, an upright man and Mason. The Northeast Corner is the appropriate place for corner-stones or the symbolic commencement of important undertakings, thus the neofite who looks forward to Master's wages, must first "come out" from the woods of secular indifference and show his ability and preparedness by standing erect, as his primeval forefathers stood, proclaiming themselves Men—proclaiming himself an upright Man and Mason.



(Fig. 6)

23 The beginning of Man's evolution back to his Divine Source marks another important activity of that Divine Parent. It is the beginning of the IN-DRAWING OF THE GREAT BREATH. When the Divine Breath is fully indrawn, our Day of manifesta- will have closed. A Cosmic Night will set in until a new Manvantara is begun. During this period all the "waves" of humanity originally emanated, will be returned, like the Prodigal in Scripture, to their Father; reabsorbed, plus their individuality, in the Bosom of the Infinite. Fig. 6, therefore, shows us Man's position as semi-Divine, semi-human. It shows the true Mason his status not only as human in the sense of having attained reason, but as an advanst human by virtue of having received an Initiation that has conferd upon him a Light not enjoyed by those who have not knockt at the Fraternity's portals.



(Fig. 7)

24 In Figure 7 another picture is presented. We learn in Freemasonry's Greatest Light that the inner spheres of being are peopled by certain grades of celestial entities. The Bible calls them "Thrones, Dominions, Principalities, Powers, Angels, Archangels, Cherubim, Seraphim, etc. Generally speaking, they are termed by esoterists the "Celestial Hierarchies, for each of the grades has its especial and particular duties and responsibilities, for the heaven worlds are regions of intense activity and—WORK, another phase of the higher life which our Craft so well symbolizes in the characterization of its activities. The Lodge activities are always referd to as the "Work". Now man, reflecting in his microcosmic self the composition of the macrocosmic world, is a composite being, consisting of several vehicles or bodies, the physical, etheric and astral, with a mental sheath that is fast developing into a true mental body.

25 By virtue of the "bodies several" which Man possesses, he functions in three worlds at the same time, the physical, etheric and astral worlds, for he has vehicles of expression in each of them. This is represented in Figure 7 by the several concentric circles. The dotted circles beginning with the inner, represent, respectively, the Divine Mind which finds its reflection in the solid line of the inner circle B, the Human Mind. Its correspondence in the Four Elements is Fire, the motivating and animating factor.

26 The second dotted circle in "A" represents the Human Spirit or Human aspect of the threefold spirit of Man, which corresponds to or finds its reflection in his Astral Body, the Element being Water, as symbolic of his fluctuating wishes, impressions, desires and evanescent qualities. The third circle in "A" represents the Life Spirit nature of Man, finding its reflection in Man's Etheric Body, the corresponding Element being Air, not the air we understand as atmosfere, but the ether in which Man's Light, Life, Memory and mental faculties find vehicles of expression. The fourth circle in "A" represents the Divine Spirit aspect in Man, finding its reflection in Man's Physical Body, the Element being Earth, which gives the material foundation for Man to express his Divine functions in Matter.

27 The seed referd to in Fig. 4 has disappeared. Like all seed, it has had to die and disappear before the new life that is to be shall manifest. But the points of contact formed by the circles, developt by the seed that was planted, is IGNITED by the upright factor, the "I" consciousness or reason, and this Point of Contact has become the HEART OF THINGS. Here, at the "ignition point" where our seed has developt into life, the Human EGO is manifest. In the words of the Ancient Wisdom it is the "Fruit of the Womb of Mother Earth, fructified by Father Sky, Nourisht by Sweetheart Water (Empyrean) Brot Forth by Friend Light, Motivated by Brother Wind (Cosmic vibration)." This expresses the Four Elements united in action.

28 The dotted lines also represent the invisible spiritual aspect. Macroposopus, while the solid lines indicate visible matter, Microcosmos, or Man. Man's journey is well begun. The point of contact, now becomes the Heart, wherein we can now see that Man really makes his first preparations. It marks the beginning of all things relating to Man as a sentient creature. Here Space concepts begin, for Time and Space began when Man began to think.

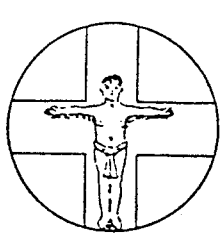
(Fig. 8)

29 Evolution is the journey back to Infinity. Figure 8 shows us the two semi-spheres beginning to merge back into each other. But this time, they develop a new factor, i. e., all inclusiveness, for they include the experience the Divine Emanations have absorbed by virtue of their "Dip into Matter" or Mortal Experience. In returning to Nirvana, Brahm, and a phase of Maya, they retain the digested experience of the physical expression that has occupied the evolutionary process. Evolution signifies conscious self-creation, perpetuation and pro-creation, symbolized by the Vesica Piscis which reappears. This Vesica Piscis will be seen on Episcopal Rings, Ecclesiastical Arms, vestments and other symbols. It is the symbol of the Divine Matrix from which all things were and are formed. In ancient religions it had a phallic significance. The extreme veneration in which this symbol was held by the ancients is seen in the number and worship of the feminine Deities in their pantheons and in the Mariolatry of Catholicism today.

30 This figure also represents to esoterists what is sometimes called, the "First Projection", for it represents the expansion of the Matrix, containing the waters of regenerate creation in which the Heart remains the motivating and dynamic influence. The inner and outer worlds are merging. The Physical is re-entering the Spiritual. Man is projecting himself back into the Divine.

(Fig. 9)

31 Evolution progresses. Man begins to "make the Stone", as the Philosofers say. Stone is composed of the materials of the Four Elements. Man is composed of the same elements in a quasi-colloidal form. As man "makes the Stone" he becomes strong and vital. If he learns to make the Philosofer's Stone consciously he becomes spiritually strong and vital to a degree that is considerably above the norm. In such a condition, that of the initiated Mason who is consciously working at his craft, he becomes, symbolically, the Samson of the Old Testament. He is the heart that has developt into full Manhood. In his strength, he stretches out his arms against the walls of the Vesica, the matrix which encloses him, seeking "more Light". He requires a greater world in which, free and accepted, he can function. Like Samson of old, he is pushing apart the Pillars of the Temple which hold him, the walls of environment that enclose and imprison him.



(Fig. 10)

32 Samson comes to his full strength after a period of trial, a period of tests of edurance and temptation in his little world. Samson is returning to or regaining his full stature of Manhood. Man regaining his full stature of Divine Sonship, reunites Macrocosmos and Microcosmos. His physical and spiritual strength united cause the finite and the Infinite to unite into one Infinite Circle. To bring about this wonderful status however, Man has offerd himself as a sacrifice. The Planes of Action and the Mental Plane Cross each other and Man is crucified on the Cross of his Desires, the Cross of Matter. His judges and his executioners are his karmic deeds which must be requited even unto the "uttermost farthing". In this requitement, Man suffers and sorrows for his "sins of the world" in which he has blindly lived. This, symbolically, is Man's Second Projection.

33 By curious co-incidence, this 33rd paragraf brings us, like the 33rd and last Degree in Scottish Rite Freemasonry, to the apotheosis of the upright Man's career. Samson was blind. Man is blind. Both sought light. When Samson pulled down the Pillars of the Temple he destroyed his physical body. But when he destroyed his physical body, he entered into spiritual Light Eternal. He gained complete At-One-Ment with the ALL. "Whoso loseth his body for my sake shall find it", said a Master Initiate. Man, in his ignorance, destroys his physical body without intending to do so any more than did Samson. Blind ignorance always entails a certain amount of destruction. Man seeks Light that he may advance without bringing down destruction upon himself or upon others.

34 When physical desires of the sordid kind are conquered, the Spirit of Man triumfs. HEART AND MIND UNITE AT THE CENTER OF CONSCIOUSNESS in cosmic understanding. The Initiate has found Light, then More Light and finally, all the Light he has the capacity to receive. This is shown in Fig. 11. This is the "Path" of the "Philosofer's Stone". Here, Time and Space concepts for the individual have their end. This is the Third Projection.

35 Our symbol is restored to its original status, plus one notable development. Infinity is still bounded by Strength and Beauty, Wisdom and Power. The two perpendiculars take on a new attribute, each, Truth and Justice, because the "point" is no longer merely a point signifying something but not demonstrating it. The place of our point is now occupied by the envisaged heart, symbolizing the conscious mentalism of the perfected homo or Man; man tried by Fire, Water, Air and Earth. Man has returned unto his Source. The Spirit of Man has returned to God who gave it (Eccle. xii, 7). But the return is a conscious return. Infinity is now an Infinity of consciousness, both Divine consciousness and Self-consciousness, for the individualized Spirit of Man, the Ego, will never be destroyed and its consciousness will be eternal. As a result of its long evolutionary journey, it has strengthened its supporting Pillars, and B:. and J:., at the two sides of the Porch of King Solomon's Temple, become Pillars of the Mercy and Severity of the Kabbalists and the Truth and Justice of the Mystics who have transmuted physical experience into spiritual treasure.

36 Masonry is sometimes defined as a "beautiful system of morality veiled in allegory and illustrated by symbols." It is more than that. An allegory may be beautiful and instructive but not always have weight or depth that carries one beyond the immediate present. The teachings of Freemasonry are based upon cosmic principles that are eternal, immutable. The Craft invests the neofite with keys which he must learn to use for himself if he hopes to find the riches they will unlock and reveal. Every human being in the world at this moment, is reproducing in his experience the evolutionary past of his progenitors. All that humanity ever has been is summarized in each individual of the species, but, like the parable of the talents, some use the faculties with which they have been invested, the jewels entrusted to them, while others ignore them, just as many Masons symbolically receive the jewels of the Craft and quickly let them pass as mere factors in an initiatory rite.

37 Every Mason who has been duly received into the Craft has also received a sharp reminder of the solemnity of the occasion and the serious nature of that in which he about to participate, so the Fraternity cannot be held to be negligent in its duties toward the neofite as it reminds him, right at the very commencement of his Masonic journey, of the responsibilities he is to assume.

38 As each human individual summarizes in his experience or journey thru life, the past of his forbears so every neofite who enters upon the Masonic journey is to summarize, not only the experience of human life but the evolutionary experience of all human life thru all the ages. There are signs by the way that will illuminate his pathway if he seeks to observe them. There are unfailing symbols that refer not only to the present but to the almost unfathomable past, that the neofite will do well to stop and examine, study and ponder.

39 Such a symbol has been illustrated in this lesson. It shows us what we have passed thru as a species. It shows us what we pass thru as individuals. It registers the steps each of us has taken in the age-old journey. It hows us how the human soul has developt and has left its signature upon each one of us in a way that make us in reality, "images" of the God who is our Divine Parent. In simple circles, points and lines, we have seen a static, geometric symbol become a living, vital, organic structure. That structure is the human soul, for the soul is the pabulum or epitome of all that we have developt by experience thru the journey that is human life. The symbol shown in his lesson is the Soul's Signature. The handwriting of that signature will be according to the temperament, character and individuality of each human being who exhibits it.

40 A point can revolve or move about in space aimlessly. Such a point represents the unawakened or uninitiated. The Mason who has received initiation is no longer an aimless point in space. He has become a focus, the fixt center of action, the end of a radius which extends into his environment and, in the circle it can describe, exerts a power for good and constructiveness upon all those who come within its enclosure.

41 In drawing parallel analogies from our symbols, we may also assume that it has a direct message for each individual Mason. It reminds us that each of us is the center of a sphere of activity, within which, it is our duty to make the ethical truths we have received in Freemasonry practical features and factors in our every day life, for, just outside the circle of influence that represents our individual world or environment are the great judges of our actions, Truth, Justice, Mercy, Severity, Strength and Beauty. Our individualized lives must embody all these sublime principles, if we wish to be sure of having properly employed the talents entrusted to us. The principle of severity applies, in our individual cases, not to our attitude toward others, but to our attitude toward ourselves. We are justified in being severe with ourselves, in holding ourselves rigidly to a keen sense of duty, honor, and personal integrity.

42 In still another sense, the symbol represents you, and me, in the world, with the world for our field of action, with the world for the scene of the discharge of our several duties, to God and to our fellow-men. Our field is bounded by the two great polarities, Good, and so-called Evil. We prefer to use the terms Construction and Destruction, for Evil is, in the last analysis, simply the energy we ordinarily call "good", misdirected. Any force or energy can be called evil or wrong when it goes wrong, i. e., is misdirected or misused, as some energies so often are.

43 However, in the world, we are constantly operating between the two great ethical factors of constructiveness and destructiveness. Our obligations as Masons teach us that we are first of all, "Builders". The very character of the name we have assumed, that of Mason, should always be a reminder to us that we are builders up, not tearers down. If we have to tear down something, it should only be because we are building something better on the site of the old, and in such cases, the tearing down will still be a constructive process for it is preparing the way for a better condition.

44 As a final illustration, our symbol is, to the Mason, a picture of himself in the Craft. The Lodge, of ocurse, has a symbolic shape to designate its universality, which will be developt in the succeeding lesson, but the circle, which also represents a sphere, isometrically, represents the universal distribution of Freemasonry itself. Each new Mason in the Enterd Apprentice Degree, is like the Point within the circle. He has a world wide field in which to utilize his special and individual talents and abilites. He may turn which way he wll, he is still within the field, the jurisdiction, the sphere of activity, of Freemasonry, and he is expected to exemplify in his life, the principles of the Craft in all the wide range of his later life and activity. He is the center of cynosure and Masonic eyes are upon him—everywhere, and sometimes where he least expects them.

45 Where and when did this symbol originate? No one knows. All that is known is, that it has passed thru many variations, each having or preserving the same general import. There is a feature about it however, that shows its antiquity, namely, the circle with the point. Omitting the two perpendiculars, the Circle with the Point has been used from remotest times, astronomically and astrologically, as the symbol for the Sun. Its use in this way is attributed by some, to India, but this hypothesis is by no means conclusive. We believe it is more in the character of a nature-symbol that has come down from pre-historic times.

46 The fact that the principal elements in the symbol refer, by almost universal consent, to the Sun, gives us a further reason for incorporating it as an eminent Masonic symbol. The Sun is one of the Lesser Lights of Freemasonry, and has direct allusion to the Worshipful Master. "The Master represents the Sun at its rising, that he may open the Lodge and employ and instruct the brethren in the principles of Freemasonry, and to whom it is his duty to communicate light". "As the Sun rules the day .... so should the Worshipful Master .... rule and govern the Lodge".

47 In the foregoing references, we find that the Sun becomes an emblem in the Lodge, not only of light, but of action. In fact, action is one of the principal keynotes of Freemasonry. The great luminary is a constant symbol to every Mason of the duty he has assumed to disseminate light to those who seek it, and to let his light so shine in the world symbolized by the circle, that all within the area of his environment and influence shall see his good works and glorify the Master Builder, the Great Architect of the Universe.

48 In some presentations of our symbol, the circle becomes a serpent swallowing its tail, the Alpha and the Omega, the end being the beginning and the beginning being the end and each an integral part of the other. This form of the symbol is still used popularly by some esoteric bodies operative to day and ophiolatry is a very active phase of religious expression amongst some eastern peoples. We shall not go into their explanations at this time, but we may observe en passant, that the serpent, a symbol of silent wisdom among the ancients and some mystics not so ancient, is also a symbol of life, and in the present connection, it signifies that our circle is not a static boundary but a living sphere, a, living area of vital action.

49 This symbol of the circle with the point and the two pillars is one we can take unto ourselves and apply personally. Enuf has been given in this lesson to furnish pabulum for applied thought in a very personal sense. It applies to the non-mason, but it also applies with greater force to the Mason of any degree, for Masons have definitely and publicly assumed the obligations to live the principles inculcated by a proper understanding of them. Obligations, as we shall later observe, are not to be assumed lightly or as parts of a ritualistic program.

50 The principles exprest by the symbol we have studied are built into our lives whether we will or not. We have assumed them unconsciously, by virtue of possessing the property of reason. If we are Masons, we have assumed them consciously, and our personal responsibility is increast an hundred-fold thereby. We accept the symbol in its static form when we enter the Fraternity. We are expected to transmute it into its active expression after having been invested with it exoterically. All the symbols of Masonry are given us for a similar purpose,—that of study. It is only by study that we shall derive from the Masonic symbols the essential truth they represent. Having derived such truth, we are expected to put it into practice for the Mason stands before the world, as shown in the symbol before us, as one from whom the world may reasonably expect more than from those who have not had the benefit of similar light.

51 Each one of us is the point within the circle. Each one of us therefore, is expected to radiate from such a center, the rays of his illumined mind, which is the sun of his microcosmic universe. The mental and spiritual radiations of every Mason should extend in every direction, so closely, that they fill the circle of his environment in such wise as to guide those who are, like himself, seeking light in the chaos of conflicting philosofic, religious and scientific theories regarding the great problems of existence, man's "whence, why and whither." Freemasonry holds a key to those Mysteries. Each Mason has the privilege of unlocking them if he but realizes the powers latent within himself. These powers we shall endeavor, in the following lessons, to make clear.

THE ESSENES

The Essenes were members of an esoteric order which was born and developed during the two centuries which preceded the capture of Jerusalem by Titus and the period until the destruction of the second Temple about 70 AD. The discovery of the Qumram manuscripts (popularly known as the Dead Sea Scrolls) in 1947 brought a considerable amount of information about this ancient sect to the notice of the general public. Non-esoteric circles have begun to realize that the influence of the Essenes on early Christianity was far greater than at first imagined. Some of these manuscripts can be seen today in a museum built especially to house them in Jerusalem.

The etymology of the word Essene is disputed among experts. It is generally believed to have originally derived from a word which meant holy or saintly. There is reason to believe that the teachings and practices of the Essenes were of Egyptian origin. According to tradition, at the time of Jesus there existed three religious sects among the Jews in the Holy Land -- the Pharisees, the Saducees and the Essenes. Some historians believe that Jesus was an Essene because while he denounced the errors of the two other sects, he never criticized nor even mentioned the Essenes. They further support this belief by observing that many of the precepts of the New Testament coincide with the teachings of the Essenes. The Temple tradition asserts that both Jesus and his parents were Essenes.

The Essenes were strict in the observance of their rules and lived a very pure life. They inhabited a separate community near the Dead Sea to avoid contamination and to await the coming of the "Messiah".

Their observance of the communion and the sharing of bread which as we have seen was first attributed to Melchisedek, has made the memory of these pure men & women much venerated by the Order of the Temple, which considers the Essenes to have been the heirs and guardians of the priesthood of Melchisedek.

BREAD, WINE & WORSHIP Worship originally revolved around the offering of blood, which traditionally was believed to be the carrier of the life force in man. When this was presented to the Divine, man considered that he was offering his most valuable gift -- life itself. He hoped thereby that the object of his worship would reciprocate by permitting him to share in unity of a higher order. The substitution of bread & wine did not change this approach to worship. Bread & wine were the result of a whole series of efforts by man & Nature in the harsh and arid soil of Palestine, and were therefore considered to be the best of Nature.

> Bread was vital for survival in those times. Little wonder, then, that it was considered a gift worthy of the Creator. Wine was evocative not only because of its colour, but it was also seen to symbolize and express the very life force of Nature. Thus when these two elements of material life were presented to Divinity, man expected that in exchange, these offerings would be spiritualized, so that in consuming them ... he would share the nature of the Divine.

Over the centuries there have been people charged with the progressive refinement of the material preparations for the communion rite. Whether they were consciously aware of it or not, the whole objective of the exercise was to realize Cosmic Unity. It is interesting to note that the host of the communion service is round -- and the circle is the symbol of unity.

> THE MASS The ceremony instituted by Melchisedek represented the Old Covenant between man and the Divine, whereby bread & wine symbolized the essence of the earth. The Eucharist, which is the name given to the communion ceremony first performed by the Christ at the Passover Feast, represents the New Covenant. It is believed that in the ceremony of the Eucharist, the solar energy of the Christ force descends to act as an intermediary so that to the extent of their spiritual possibilities, worshippers will be enabled to approach closer to the Unity of all life.

The important part played by the Essenes in preserving the basic message and thoughts associated with these ideas, and in preparing the ground for the New Covenant, was recognized and commemorated by the Templars. Eclectic as they were, the Templars were certainly influenced by the Essenes in their teachings and practices. Some modern Templar Orders include a rite in their ceremonies known as the Essene Rite not only because of its historic associations, but also because the important part of the ceremony is the breaking and sharing of a loaf of bread by all present. The act of men & women gathering together consciously to share one of Nature's most precious gifts in a moment of unity, is considered by Templars to be a symbolic affirmation of the very essence of the tradition of the Temple. Thus although the notion of sacrifice which characterizes the Eucharist is not present in this rite, it is a unifying ceremony which seeks to reinforce the links between man & his fellow beings and between man & the Divine.

SYMBOLS are part and parcel of the human psyche and are of the highest spiritual and psychological importance. They dwell in our subconscious where they serve as accumulators of psychic energies. When set in motion these can have far-reaching effects on our lives, not only in terms of how we perceive reality but also in motivating us to various kinds of action. Symbols can be manipulated by us, or by others, in order to change our perception of ourselves and the world around us.

ARCHETYPES Modern psychoanalysts, such as the Swiss Carl Jung, have confirmed what was always known to initiates -- that in addition to our individual symbols, there are symbols of great power which dwell in the subconscious of the race, or what Jung has christened the 'collective unconscious'. These collective symbols, (also called archetypes,) act and interact with individuals, regions and nations, influencing our aspirations, feelings and culture. Some of these archetypes are extremely positive in bringing about psychological wholeness or greater spiritual awareness.

MYTHS Closely linked to these collective archetypes are certain cultural phenomena known as myths. A myth can be defined as a fictitious narrative which can express certain truths, usually in dramatic form. Often the story which gave rise to a particular myth was based on certain actions which did take place, but which over time became dramatized by succeeding generations of narrators. It is as if certain archetypes became gradually superimposed on particular myths. Archetypes continually seek to express themselves through human beings, and the collective imagination willingly assists in this activity.

In certain cases there is such an interaction between the archetypal symbol and the myth that after several generations people no longer differentiate between the symbol and the myth.

The Egyptian triad of Osiris, Isis and Horus are very evocative symbols, and are used in meditation in many schools of esoteric teachings. Historians are not certain whether they actually lived, whether they were rulers who were deified after their deaths by popular imagination, or were personalities completely created by legend. Today it is not important whether they existed or not. They have become psychological realities thanks to the power of the archetypes and as such they can influence our inner world if we know how to approach them.

MEDITATION UPON SYMBOLS Anyone wishing to demonstrate for himself the validity of the above statement has only to select a set of positive symbols from any of the great spiritual traditions and meditate regularly on their meaning. He or she will be surprised at the effect these symbols will have on their inner life. The only precondition is that symbols from different traditions should not be mixed and the symbols should be given at least a month to gestate in the subconscious before results can be expected.

The Grail is one of the most important symbols in the tradition of the Order of the Temple. The story of King Arthur, his Knights of the Round Table and their search for the Holy Grail is part of the mythology of Western culture. To most Western people, the mere mention of the quest for the Holy Grail touches well-springs of awe and nobility in the subconscious.

THE GRAIL Many books have been written about the Grail. It is not my intention here to even try to attempt a synthesis of literature about the Grail, but rather by evoking a number of ideas to stimulate you to become aware of the spiritual reality of the Grail. I made reference above to myths and the interaction between myths and symbols. The Grail is without doubt one of the most powerful symbols which exists. From my own experience, it is impossible to meditate regularly on its symbolism without feeling powerful effects on one's inner and outer life. Indeed, so powerful is this symbol that those who, like Parsifal, (of whom we will hear more about soon) have the spiritual and psychic sensitivity to respond to it, can find that their lives are dramatically affected (to say the least). Individuals of this kind are indeed born Knights of the Holy Grail. Why some people should be more endowed in this respect than others is a long story. The answer to this and many other seeming enigmas will be found by the true seekers of the Grail, whether he is born a knight or merely a humble sword-bearer. I can personally guarantee that the how and the why will be revealed to the sincere seeker who undertakes the Grail quest by dedicating himself to the ideal of spiritual self-discovery and, above all, to the service of humanity.

All spiritual traditions give various versions or interpretations of the Grail story, in which the hero sets out on a quest. In some, including the Western Tradition, the Grail is symbolized by a cup, while in others it is a stone or dish. In all cases, however, the object is some kind of receptacle into which the essence of spiritual realization is placed for safekeeping and for transmission to the worthy. Some traditions claim that real physical objects are involved; others state that a material object which over the centuries has been revered as the Grail eventually takes on the qualities of the symbolic Grail. Yet another view is that the Grail is a powerful archetype which exists in the fourth dimension, and which because of its importance for the evolution of humanity is particularly susceptible to solicitation from those who possess the necessary sensitivity and whose everyday lives express sacrifice for the divine ideal. According to this school of thought, in the condition just described, the archetypal Grail could ensoul an object such as a chalice or cup, or even in certain special situations manifest itself to people in a vision. From my own experience, there is something in all these assertions. How much of all this is physical reality, symbolism, or something in between ... I am inviting you to find out for yourself. It is so much more exciting and effective to find out certain things for oneself. And who knows, you might find out that reality is stranger than fiction.

JOSEPH OF ARIMATHEA Some people believe that the viewpoints I have just mentioned could explain some of the legends about the Grail. For example: there is the legend of the cup which Joseph of Arimathea was said to have used to collect the blood of Jesus and which centuries later made its way to the Cathar country in France. The story goes that at one stage it was carried to the provinces of Aragon, Huesca and Navarra in northern Spain for safe-keeping, after which it disappeared. A replica is kept today in the Cathedral of Valencia. Another version is that the Grail eventually reached England where, after a stay at Glastonbury, it also disappeared. In certain esoteric circles there have been hints that there are places on our planet where the vibratory conditions are such that the seeker may more easily contact the spiritual realities symbolized by the Grail. Nowadays the veils which have been held over certain teachings are being lifted and with a bit of work on himself, some patience and perseverance, the seeker will undoubtedly be rewarded.

It is interesting to reflect that although Christian doctrine has taken many concepts and symbols which were pre-Christian into its fold, the Grail has never be adopted by orthodoxy. Nevertheless, the Grail, with its strong links to Celtic and even older mythology, managed somehow to exist in the background and was never condemned, even during the period when there was strong opposition to anything which was remotely pagan in origin.

The Grail as a cup or chalice is said to represent the feminine polarity of spirituality. If wine is present in it, this is taken to symbolize the male or active principle, the two polarities -- masculine & feminine, positive & negative -- symbolizing perfect manifestation. The feminine principle in life was not given the same consideration in Western civilization as the male principle, despite the symbol of the Virgin Mary to church doctrine. The adoption of Protestantism as a state religion in some countries diminished its importance still further. The Grail legend, symbolized as a receptive feminine archetype in the collective unconscious, has helped to preserve the feminine principle in man's consciousness, especially during the period of the Reformation which experienced the strong masculine influences of Lutheranism and Calvinism.

In recent centuries our civilization has tended to over-emphasize the masculine principle, and the balancing force of the feminine is now due to manifest in order to rectify this tendency. It can safely be predicted that the Grail mystery with the feminine symbol of the cup or chalice will again take hold of the popular imagination and fulfil its primordial destiny.

WHAT REALLY IS THE GRAIL? In the light of what has been said, could one give a simple reply to the question of what the Grail really is? One answer might be that the Grail is the symbolic representation of what man will discover about himself and about the real meaning of life in his search for truth. The Grail is the essence of all that is, and is yet to be manifested. It can therefore be never fully comprehended, since life in the Cosmos will never end. At our limited level of understanding the Grail can be regarded symbolically as the perfect blueprint of what Man is intended to be at the summit of his evolution on planet Earth.

The information you now have about symbols, how you are affected by them, their effects ... their DEEP effects ... should stir profound realizations within you. Symbols are all around you! Affecting you in various ways!! There are particular people, (presently living or passed on, actual people or people said to have lived); there are buildings; myths, (stories); mystical symbols; particular cities; etc., etc., etc., that evoke memories, ideas and inspiration, that you are CONSCIOUS, or UNCONSCIOUS of . i.e. subconsciously aware.

As we have said repeatedly throughout our instruction, it is of little use having knowledge if it is not applied and made use of. The positive results that can be had through the constructive application of symbols is too important to be passed over.

USING SYMBOLS EFFECTIVELY.

There are several approaches. If you are aware of some aspect of your personality that needs correcting, choose a symbol that identifies the particular characteristic that you wish to develop or correct. For example:

If you are inclined to be sickly, choose a symbol that suggests to you radiant health, for example: a picture of someone who exudes health.

If you feel your will is weak, choose a picture that suggests strength, for example Tarot card "Strength" which depicts a lady manipulating the jaws of a lion is very effective on several levels..

With a little study and imagination you will be able to find a suitable symbol/picture that suggests to you particular qualities you wish to acquire or emulate.

Other important symbols may be used for other purposes — such as to stimulate ideas: the Grail cup, the masonic symbol of the Square & Compass, the Martinist Pentacle, etc. etc. — ad infinitum!

THE TECHNIQUE

After having decided on the symbol you wish to use, put it up where you will see it: in your bed room, on your desk at work, in your wallet..... and LOOK AT IT! Don't let it fade into the background as part of the scenery! (although it will still have an effect even if it does). Consciously look at the picture and be aware of why you are looking at it. Study it! Be receptive to it! Contemplate it! Wonder about it! Remember the symbol (or symbols) you choose may include paintings, photographs, line drawings ... they may be clippings from a magazine or book, they may be posters, water colours, compositions you yourself draw, ... whatever.

Can you begin to see how the pictures, objects d'art, 'collectibles', and the other things you surround yourself with, influence you both consciously and subconsciously? And what about television?

The devotion and enthusiasm of deeply religious persons and families, is sustained and strengthened by the many pictures and artifacts which are in every room of their house. These act as reminders ... and attune the minds of the inhabitants to the archetype from where they draw strength and inspiration.

PUT THIS KNOWLEDGE OF SYMBOLS TO GOOD USE IN YOUR LIFE !

IT IS FAR TOO POTENT AND EFFECTIVE A PRINCIPLE TO PASS OVER!!

"He that hath eyes to see, let him see."

The Knights Templar !

THE TEMPLARS AND THEIR LEGACY

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE ORDER

In 1095, Pope Urban II decided to kill two birds with one stone. He would incite the sovereigns of the West to recapture the city of Jerusalem, where the faithful of various religions had managed - though not without difficulty - to tolerate each other's presence since the city fell to the curved swords of Islam in AD 638.

The second aim of the Pope was to bring together in the process, by force if necessary, the Eastern and Western strains of Christianity. The military operation through which Urban II hoped to achieve these twin ambitions was termed in the First Crusade, — an ill-fated enterprise which was to change the course of history.

Pope Urban did not achieve his grand design, but after much bloodletting by Christians and Moslems alike, Jerusalem fell in 1099 to the Christian armies led by Godefroy de Bouillon of Flanders. Ironically, Urban died that same year. In the years that followed anyone wishing to enhance his status felt he had to make a pilgrimage to Jerusalem. In the areas close to the holy sites, Christian soldiers assured the safety of the pilgrims but were unable to do so effectively in certain other places.

DATE OF THE FOUNDING OF THE K.T. Different dates have been given by historians for the founding of the Knights Templar. According to Templar tradition, the founder of the Order, Hugues de Payns, a 48 year old nobleman, and eight other Knights took their vows on June 12, 1118 during a ceremony at the Castle of Arginy, situated about 40 kilometers from Lyons, beside the village of Charentay near Belleville-sur-Saône, in what is today the County of Rhône.

The nine Knights formed a brotherhood devoted to Christ, and pledged themselves to ensure the safety of the pilgrims and to the protection of the Holy Sepulchre. Templar tradition holds that the founding knights left that same year for the Holy Land. There is some uncertainty about the exact names of the nine Knights but they are generally believed to have been the following:

Hughes de Payns

Hugues Comte de Champagne	Geoffroy de Saint-Omer
André de Montbard	André de Gondemare
Payen de Montdidier	Archambault de Saint-Aignan
Godefroy Bissor	Roffal

The nine Knights took vows of poverty, chastity and obedience, but also swore to remain fighting men. King Baudouin II of Jerusalem decided to help the Knights and gave them accommodation in a building very close to the site of the original Temple built by Solomon.

FIRST NAME OF THE K.T. The Knights first called themselves the Poor Fellow-soldiers of Jesus Christ, but they later became known as the Poor Soldiers of the Temple of Solomon and then finally assumed their historic title of the Knights Templar.

BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX The next phase in the development of the Order is closely linked to one of the most important personalities of the Middle Ages -- Saint Bernard of Clairvaux. No other single person had as much influence on the medieval world as this monk-statesman. Bernard was not only one of the most outstanding men of his time but probably of all time. Any brother or sister, unfamiliar with this spiritual giant should seek out the details of his life. You will find it a rewarding experience.

Bernard is described by historians as being a slightly-built man of frail health, constantly bothered by a gastric disorder. Despite these limitations he impressed those who came in contact with him by his iron will, his directness and penetrating mind, his radiant mystical spirituality and his understanding of men and events. These qualities made him the uncrowned master of the medieval world. The great kings of his time sought his advice and friendship.

Bernard was born of a noble family in the Castle of Fontaine near Dijon. In 1112, at the age of 21, he abandoned his riches and presented himself at the monastery of Cîteaux. He quickly persuaded others, including five brothers, to join him and very soon they numbered nearly thirty. Cîteaux is found in the region known today as the County of Côte d'Or in France. Except for a few ruins, very little of the old monastery remains today.

When Bernard joined the monastery it was in deep decline. In a short time by energy and example he completely transformed the situation. When he left Cîteaux in 1115, the impulsion he had given to the monastery was so great that three branches were set up, and at the age of only 25 he was named Abbot of the third and now famous monastery of Clairvaux. The village of Clairvaux is about 14 kilometers from the town of Bar-sur-Aube in the County of Aube. The abbey where St. Bernard lived and worked is now used as a prison.

At Clairvaux, Bernard and his fellow monks built the first buildings with their own hands on land given them by none other than a man who was to become one of the founding Knights of the Order of the Knights Templar: Hugues, Comte de Champagne.

Within ten years of his appointment as Abbot, Bernard had become one of the most powerful men in the Christian world, mediating in quarrels between the powerful of the land, either putting them in their place or giving them advice and inspiration. Because St. Bernard began his career in Cîteaux, the brand of monastic life he founded became known as the Cistercian Order.

HUGUES DE PAYNS Almost any history book will tell you that Bernard gave encouragement to Hugues de Payns, the man considered to be the founder of the Templars. History books will also tell you that Bernard was involved in one way or another with the drafting of the Rule which was given to the Templars by the Council of Troyes. It is also known that despite illness during the Council, he forced himself to lobby for the ecclesiastical and secular legitimacy of the Order.

Bernard's fame grew and so did that of the Templars. They were given many gifts of land and money by admirers or by those who wished to calm their consciences.

In 1125 King Baudouin of Jerusalem gave the title of Master of the Temple to Hugues de Payns. As the Order grew in fame and size, King Baudouin felt that if it could be given official recognition by the Pope, it would be able to help him with his military ambitions. He therefore wrote a letter to Bernard soliciting his help and asked André de Montbard, one of the founding members of the Order and Bernard's uncle, to deliver the letter. Bernard welcomed the initiative and promised to do all he could. Pope Honorius was agreable in principle and convoked a Council to discuss the matter. When he heard the good news, de Payns left immediately for Italy with a number of his Knights where he met the Pope and went on to France to await the opening of the Council which took place on January 13, 1126 at Troyes.

The Council approved the Rule of the Temple which was to become the new code of conduct for the Knights. The Rule, which covered every aspect of daily life, contained 72 articles. It was extremely strict and severe and was believed to have been inspired by a rule of Essenian origin known as the Rule of the Master of Justice. Great stress was put on obedience, and everything in it was designed to promote communal life among the Knights and to avoid jealousy and pride. The Rule did not cover administrative matters. By 1267 the Knights themselves had added a large number of other articles dealing with the administration of the Order.

The following is a short summary of the structure of the Order which was developed and maintained until the Order's abolition in the 14th century. In order of importance the officers of the Order were:

The Grand Master
The Seneschal
The Marshal
The Commander of the City of Jerusalem
The Commander of the City of Tripoli
The Commander of the City of Antioch
The Provincial Masters in France, England, Aragon, Portugal and Hungry.

Other officers were the Draper, the Gonfanonier and the Turcopolier. Each of the provinces had a hierarchal structure modeled on the headquarters in Jerusalem. The provinces were further divided into Commanderies and Preceptories under Commanders and Preceptors. The Commanderies were divided into "Maisons" or "Houses".

The ranks of the Order were composed of:

Knights
Squires or Ecuyers
Chaplains or Almoners
Sergeants
Tradesmen, masons, craftsmen and artisans
Locally enlisted militiamen called Turcopoles

We will continue this interesting and important history of the Knights Templar in our next Liber.

HEPTAD

Beloved Companions #201

Since my last introductory talk on the subject of Freemasonry, (lecture #195), I have been deluged with questions! And also with compliments. Thank you! In an effort to provide a little more information especially on Masonic beginnings I have prepared this short talk which will give a little more background information. You are aware that there is a very thorough series on Freemasonry being presented in the Libers at this time; as I do not wish to duplicate what is being given there I will only be general.

Among the many guesses at how the word "Mason" came into usage, one is that it was originally derived from an old French word maçonner. The word was apparently used to designate a craftsman who worked in stone. It is certain that the word mason was used as early as the thirteenth century.

There are different versions of how the word "Freemason" evolved. One of these versions is that it was a term applied to those Masons who were free to exercise their trade in a particular municipality; another is that it referred to those qualified builders who worked in "free stone" or ornamental stones, and who possessed some architectural knowledge, as opposed to masons who did not prepare the stone but who performed the purely physical task of, for example, lifting and putting the stone in place. There is reported to be a document dated 1375 relating to a meeting of municipal guilds in London which uses the word freemason.

As we saw in my first talk, the craftsmen of old formed guilds, or mutual associations. Specialists in Masonic history seem to agree that the first case in which a "non-operative" mason was admitted was that of John Boswell of Auchinleck in May 1640 in Edinburgh, Scotland. The Rosicrucian Elias Ashmole, one of the great scholars of his time, was admitted as a non-operative mason in 1641. It is still not clear why intellectuals were attracted by a working man's association, nor if or how they managed to introduce a spiritual & moral, rather than an artisanal orientation to the development of the movement.

Again, as hinted at in my last talk, one explanation as to why Freemasonry developed a speculative character MAY BE that men belonging to secret esoteric orders with Templar or Rosicrucian antecedents might have considered these associations to be ideal channels for popularizing ideas for the spiritual and moral betterment of mankind. There is however quite a difference between what could have been and what actually was and until concrete information turns up, nothing on freemasonry's origins can be stated with certainty.

Symbols are also considered by Masons to be very effective ways of conveying the essential ideas of what Masonry stands for. Symbols appeal directly to the deeper level of our beings, as you know, and as Masons everywhere use the same symbols, they consider them to be universal unifying devices which, by continuously reminding members of basic truths, obviate the need for long speeches on Masonic ideals and morality.

The Temple of Solomon is one of the basic symbols of Freemasonry. It is conceived as representing the three principles of man and the universe, i.e. Spirit, Soul and Body. Solomon's Temple contained three sections — a Holy of Holies which only the High Priest could enter on special days; a sanctuary enclosing the Holy of Holies; and a third section where the ordinary worshippers could congregate. The two pillars at the entrance of the Temple are called Jachin and Boaz respectively. Jachin is the right-hand pillar usually of a light colour, and Boaz the left-hand pillar of dark colour. The right-hand pillar represents the positive polarity of manifestation and the left-hand pillar the negative polarity, or, respectively, the active masculine principle and the passive feminine principle.

The arch or "Royal Arch" joining the two pillars at the top represents the heavens. The floor of the Temple is traditionally decorated in black and white squares representing the earth and symbolizing again the two principles of polarity. Two other important Masonic symbols are the Square & the Compass. Three lights are supposed to be present in a Masonic Temple.

One is the Light Above or belief in the moral order of the world; this is represented in Masonic Temples by the Bible. The Square represents the light Within us or moral conduct, and the Compass represents the Light Around us or the idea of fraternity or service to mankind. Freemasonry is full of other symbols, many of which it has in common with the Rosicrucian tradition. (By the way, there is in Masonry a degree called the 'Rose+Croix' ... if this may be said to commemorate the Rosicrucians of old ... it must also be said that this degree certainly has nothing to do with them.)

Many of the stories concerning Masonic beginnings are considered to be legendary and invented originally to give an air of veneration and respect to the movement. As you know, Freemasonry as a movement is considered to have made its official appearance in 1717 when four existing lodges combined to form a Grand Lodge. Among the prominent figures of Masonic legends are Hiram Abiff, King Solomon's Master Builder, and Jabal, Jubal and Tubal-Cain, the sons of Lemech, also the father of Noah. Jabal was supposed to have been the inventor of geometry and the builder of the first stone house, Jubal the discoverer of music, and Tubal-Cain the first worker in metals.

Freemasonry was condemned by Pope Clément XIII, who promulgated the first Anti-Masonic Bull in 1738. Any Catholic who joined a Masonic organization was liable to excommunication. The Pope considered Freemasonry a pagan institution, an idea which was shared by many Protestants. Since then, the ban by the Papacy against Catholics becoming freemasons has been relaxed and stiffened several times. It has also been said that the reason for the ban was because the Catholic Church considered freemasonry to be a competitor. Who knows? I have heard it said in England that the reason why the Anglican Church there is suffering a drop in membership, while freemasonry is gaining, is because the Anglican Church, since breaking with the Roman Catholic Church, has simplified its liturgy, eliminating most of its mystical content and making its services quite plain — so that Englishmen, feeling an emptiness which somehow seems to be fulfilled by ceremony, turn to freemasonry.

The history and complexity of Freemasonry cannot be dealt with in a few paragraphs. As a movement it continues to exist and in the last few centuries many of the most powerful and famous people have become Freemasons. Some people however continue to view it with suspicion, regarding it as something not quite acceptable; others look upon it as a kind of harmless association of quaint people who enjoy old rituals and perform some benevolent work.

And there are yet others who believe that while the vast majority of Masons are only concerned with the external forms of Freemasonry, a small number of masonic groups exist that understand and apply the essence of the Tradition inherited directly or indirectly.

Who knows? !!!

THE LODGE

The Universality of Freemasonry

Behold, how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in Unity."
—Psl. cxxxiii, 1.

THE sentence from the 133rd Psalm most beautifully expressed the universality of Freemasonry. The universality taught by the Fraternity is a state of amicable relationships, permitting diversity of thought and opinion within the boundaries of true unity of purpose and intention.

2 Universality is not only a principle in Freemasonry, it is a fact in the world in which Freemasonry functions. Go where one will, the Fraternity will be found at Work in some measure. Go where one will within the confines of the Fraternity; he will find the principle of Universality vital and practical.

3 To express this principle of universality, the unit Lodge is likened to an oblong or rectangle, ▭. This rectangle is composed of two squares, somewhat analogous to the black and white or double cubical altar of some arcane bodies that work along Kabbalistic lines. The double square, composing the rectangle or oblong symbolizing the Lodges, expresses this dual nature of universality, as principle and as fact in the Masonic world.

4 The rectangle has two dimensions, length and bredth. Theoretically the oblong is unlimited in extent, either in length or bredth. Therefore, the Lodge is said to extend in length from the East to the West, and in bredth from the North to the South. Now the true Mason learns that he is to meet his brethren, act toward them and part from them by the principles inculcated by a proper study of the level, the plumb and the square.

5 The level and the square apply to the superficial aspect of the rectangle; its surface considerations. The plumb, however, introduces a new note, or rather, a new dimension, that of height or depth or both. So, in addition to its length and bredth, the lodge is assumed to extend to the heights of the cerulean canopy above us and to be as deep as from the surface to the center.

6 Such comparisons or analogies give us a profound sense of the extensiveness of Freemasonry as exemplified by the theoretical dimensions of the unit Lodge, and, nominally, they also teach us that our charity should be equally extensive. This last application, while good as a platitude, is really without sound logic, for if our charity is exerted to the best of our environment we shall have done well. Obviously, our charity cannot well be cosmic in its scope of application.

7 But this is not what the teaching really means. It means simply that our charity is to be unbounded, unlimited, unrestricted either within or without the Craft, but more probably within it, for the universality of Freemasonry, as described, makes it impossible for the true Mason to fulfil any real duty to his fellow men without, at the same time, fulfilling his Masonic obligations as well.

8 The Lodge is said to be as "high as heaven" and "as deep as from the surface to the center." These are remarkable allusions. Let us examine them. What and where is heaven? Not in the blue or cerulean above us. The "blue sky" is simply the result of light passing thru our atmosfere, for way out beyond our atmosfere all is intense blackness, somewhat as at night when light is almost absent.

9 The ancient and archaic concept of heaven, as a state of bliss, somewhere way up above us, is no longer held by thoughtful people. The progressive mentalism now understands heaven to be a state of mind, therefore within us, right where Freemasonry's Greatest Light has always told us it is (Luke, xvii, 21). This gives us a new light—more light, as it were, on a somewhat clouded phrase. If the Lodge is as high as the heaven and the heaven is within us, and furthermore is a state of mind, then the Lodge is as high as the highest mental and spiritual concepts of its brethren. Therefore, our Lodge will be as high as our minds can soar in practical idealism.

10 The Lodge is as deep as from "the surface to the center." What is the surface and where is the center? To assume that this means to the center of the earth beneath us would be an absurdity that we do not find the Fraternity indulging. To say it means the center of cosmos would be equally absurd, yet just such explanations have sometimes been given. The center of cosmos is a purely conjectural theorem.

11 The particular phrase in question means, simply, from the surface consciousness of ourselves to the center of consciousness in ourselves. From the surface of our consciousness, or the personality we present to the world, to the real center of our heart or the individuality that we really are; the profound depths of our inner being. In other words, our Lodge will be just as deep as we ourselves are. No deeper. If we are shallow, whatsoever we compose will be shallow. If we are deep in thought, purpose and intent, and reveal our depth, whatsoever we form will be deep also.

12 Let the light dawn, brother. The real Lodge is the Mason himself. The collective and chartered body called the Lodge, is composed of individual lodges, just as each human being is composed of millions of intelligent and active cells. Man is a microcosm. The Lodge is a microcosm. If composed of intelligent, active members, the Lodge will be an intelligent, active Lodge. The Lodge epitomizes in its symbolism an universal status. Man, the individual Mason, summarizes in himself, all that the Lodge implies.

13 It is, indeed, a good and pleasant thing for brethren to dwell together in unity. Unity in the human family is what differentiates barbarism and aboriginism from civilization as a broad, general division. So good and pleasant is the unity of human beings, that from the earliest times to which human history can penetrate, mankind has sought this unity. Even in aboriginal tribes still extant, we find a sort of Freemasonry into which the young neofite is admitted by trials, some of which are quite severe. Passing his trials successfully, he is set apart as a warrior and thenceforth has a voice in tribal affairs.

14 More important, however, is the fact that, after such initiation as referd to, the initiate tribesmen thenceforth have special meeting places of their own, to which women are not admitted. This has been nicely set forth in Rev. Bro. Joseph Fort Newton's book, The Men's House. The point is, that the conscious human mind seeks association and unity, of purpose at least, with other human minds, and the Psalmist simply voiced a concept, or rather, an urge, that is as old as human communal life.

15 The facts just recited prove to us how universal Freemasonry is in its essential principles. The very symbolism of the Lodge is designed to express the fundamental yearnings of men; the fundamental yearning of men for brotherhood, roughly exprest by forms of blood brotherhood and family adoptions.

16 The surface dimension of the Lodge embodies the features of levelness and squareness. Meeting upon this platform, the Mason demonstrates his concept of liberty, equality and fraternity. We learn by the symbol of the square our actions with all men but especially with those to whom we are bound by special responsibility. Brethren part upon the square.

17 Well informed Masonic scholars have written learned papers on the symbolism of the square. The late Bro. Higgins gave exhaustive explanations of the application of the Pythagorean kabala of numbers and geometric forms. They are most interesting and instructive, but we shall not consider that phase of the subject here. We are interested in the principle of universality —at present as exemplified by the square, plumb and level; these factors constituting the dimensions of the Lodge.

18 The square, as every person knows, is an angle of 90 degrees or the fourth part of a circle. The circle expresses Infinity. The quadrature of the circle expresses the limitations of Infinity only by the four boundaries of cosmos, North, South, East and West. A square, therefore, expresses one direction of cosmos, one aspect of Infinity. Now a square, in a city, means the crossing of two streets. Such a crossing means, to the traveler, either a "turning point" or at least the opportunity to turn. In any sense, the square, being angular means, beside the definitions ordinarily given it, a change of direction in which one may be moving. So, when Masons part from each other, they are moving in different directions, each going his own way ,but in parting upon the square, they are not only maintaining the principle of rectitude toward each other, but carrying the principle in whatsoever direction each may be traveling, to whomsoever it shall concern.

19 These lessons on esoteric Masonry will be of no interest to or have toleration for the type of Mason who assumes that his Masonic obligations and principles extend to or concern brother Masons only. Freemasonry does not teach selfishness. Freemasonry does not seek to establish a clique of exclusiveness who theoretically practice virtue with each other and feel free to be as vicious as they choose with those outside " their set." Freemasonry teaches sublime principles of homely virtue that are to be practist "with all men" as the rituals frequently stipulate. The Mason who assumes to be "on the square" only with Masons is the worst type of Mason. In fact, he is not a Mason at all.

20 In applying the level to our ethical code, we demonstrate a theory of equality. It is obvious that actual equality never has existed and never can exist, for the simple reason that humanity is divided into classes in life's school, just as students are divided into classes in ordinary schools. Always there are entering grades, graduates, and post-graduates. There are researchers and there are those who devote their time to teaching.

21 So in human life, there are those who are just entering upon life's responsibilities. There are those who have learned to assume them. There are those who have graduated from the apprentice period and have taken up post-graduate work by way of establishing themselves independently. There are those who instruct modern young business or professional people in the higher aspect of their chosen vocations. There are many different grades of leaders, teachers, and also, many differing grades of culture.

22 True equality means the equal opportunity that is the birth-right of all men, to make the most and the best of their lives. It doesn't matter nearly so much where a man was born, whether in hovel or palace. The thing that counts is, what stamina has the man? What sort of character does he show? Has he a backbone instead of a wishbone? Masonry gives every brother this true equality, by admitting him upon a plane of action that is spiritually level.

23 23 The phrase "spiritually level" may appear somewhat curious at first thought. But is it? Have you ever notist that the level used by operative masons consists of a bar of wood with a tiny tube of spirit inside, that is quite mobile. The air bubble in the spirit shows the perfect level. Get the lesson, brothers! It is the spirit that makes the true level. The mere fact of social, industrial, economic or other considerations, does not necessarily comprise all that is to be considered in establishing a true equality according to the Masonic Principle.

24 True equality, by the level of Freemasonry, is a fact and a principle united, upon a spiritual basis. It is the spirit that is the Mason that motivates him to see, in his brother, a man entitled to equal opportunities to make his life a success in all that the word implies in its highest sense. The working tools of operative and speculative Masons alike, become invested with living qualities of constructive value.

25 The Freemason is taught to act by the plumb. When the Old Testament prophet, Amos, replied "to the Lord" that he had seen a plumb-line, he was told, "Behold, I will set a plumbline in the midst of my people Israel" (Amos, vii, 8). The plumb line serves two purposes, to gauge exact perpendiculars or upright levels, and—depth. Wherever a plumb line is used in construction work, it signifies the erection of something essentially permanent, something that is to be severely correct in its uprightness and vertical status.

26 We speak of plumbing the depths of an unknown quantity, of a character as well as of a body of water. Thus, it is a symbol of depth. The level, plumb and square, are essential symbols of the length, bredth and thickness or depth of the esoteric Lodge as well as of the exoteric. The square expresses the boundaries of the lodge as set forth by the Four Corners of the World; the level shows us the dimensions of the surface, which exhibit exact equality and evenness, and the plumb shows us the depth. The apparent depth is that of the obvious capacity of the individual Mason; the real depth is that of his unfathomed and unfathomable nature.

27 The lodge is said to be extensive as it has been described in order to symbolize another truth, namely, that the lodge on earth is but a reflection of the lodge in the inner worlds, a crystallization, as it were, into manifestation. Freemasonry teaches most positively the fact and truth of life continued beyond the grave and so a Mason does not cease to be such simply because he may have "passed over" beyond the veil. Esoteric Freemasonry therefore, includes the Brothers Invisible as well as the Brothers Visible.

28 All the factors described, the true length, bredth, depth, visibility and invisibility, are the necessary concomitants of true universality and they are found to be fundamental features in the highest concept of the Masonic fabric. Those who see in Freemasonry nought but a fraternal order, perhaps the strongest in the world today, have their reward. They find and enjoy a phase of fraternal association ,that gives them a continuous social existence and perhaps helps them in business ways, for which Freemasonry was never establisht.

29 Those who see in Freemasonry however, only a social or fraternal order lose the best that the Fraternity has to give. To them, the deeper mysteries, the real treasures of King Solomon's Mines are forever hidden, because Masonry is composed of quarries in which every Brother is expected to do some work. The degrees of any of the bodies in Freemasonry's approved rites, confer a status only,—a status that enshrines latent keys and clues. The threads leading to the mysteries lie before the candidate in the lodge room but he must follow them up himself and they will lead him outside the lodge room into the secrecy and quietude of his study, and from thence back into the turmoil of the outer world. First, silent study; second, active practice and application.

30 In its exemplification of the real principle of universality, Freemasonry, right at the beginning, assumes that a Mason is first prepared in his heart. The Fraternity, therefore, does not assume that all true Masons are necessarily registered in the Fraternity itself. Those who receive initiation in the Craft, receive recognition as Masons. Those who may be Masons in their heart but have not affiliated with the Craft, have merely placed themselves in such wise that the Fraternity has no way of knowing them to be Masons or of recognizing them as such.

31 The concept that a man is first prepared in his heart, shows the universal idea, however, and removes forever, from the Fraternity's escutcheon, any possible charge of discrimination, except such discrimination as decent people expect and require of those with whom they associate.

32 Universality is the great plan of Freemasonry. It is the primary cause of its universal distribution, so far as this planet is concerned, at least.

For, being universal in its nature, character and purpose, Freemasonry becomes more than a mere human organization. It is a body founded upon such sure, permanent and vital principles, that it has aligned itself with Nature's Harmonic Principle in a way that sets all the Nature-forces at work in its behalf.

33 Not all Masons are perfect by any means. None of them are perfect. And rascals penetrate beyond the tiled door just as they make their way into cassock and surplice, cope and mitre in the Church. We live in an intensely human world and no organization can escape being the possessor of a membership wherein the worthy and the unworthy will be found growing together like the wheat and the tares. Nevertheless, and in spite of this law, so widely operative, the universality of Freemasonry aligns it with constructive forces of such an high order that the Institution is as much to be regarded as a spiritual body as many church organizations claiming the more distinct title.

34 Freemasonry is more truly universal than any church, for it is not fractured as the "Body of Christ" is said to be. While there are differences in the Work as between various jurisdictions, such variations are so slight as to be quite unimportant. Freemasonry has no doctrines or dogmas to compel mental peonage or servitude. Its teachings are so elastic that any type of normal mentalism will find itself at peace in the Masonic structure.

35 There is an esoterism inherent in the concept of universality that does not appear upon the surface. In fact no true esoterism ever does appear upon surface conditions. It is not enuf to assume that universality means a broad, general, unlimited inclusiveness, a comprehension of many divergent factors into one collective body, permitting diversity within unity. Such a condition has been most satisfactorily developt by the true Masonic attitude, but it is not all there is to it by any manner of means.

36 The true Lodge, esoterically, is the Man Himself. The man himself is not the physical body altho the body expresses the general symbolism. The Man Himself is the EGO, the Spark of the Divine, the Emanation from the Logos that is made flesh. That Ego is on its return journey to its Divine Source or Father, the Master Architect and Master Builder. In making its return, the Ego realizes that it must do so not only individually, but, in equal measure, as a result of a reunited humankind, for Humanity is God thinking Himself into Manifestation. So mankind must become reconciled, reunited, at-one in all its component elements.

37 The Ego knows this, because the Ego at all times functions in a spiritual world even tho incarnate in a physical vehicle of expression in a physical world. The Ego knows that, in order to attain true At-One-Ment with its Father in heaven, it must also attain at-one-ment with its Brethren on earth. The Egos who understand this truth are they who assemble themselves together in singleness of purpose, possibly only dimly perceiving the real goal toward which they are striving, but nevertheless realizing to some extent their concept of Human Brotherhood as an essential toward Human and Divine Brotherhood; Fatherhood and Sonship.

38 Uni-versality means, fundamentally, oneness. Universality makes for unity and oneness instead of separateness. There is a unity that includes diversity and there can be diversity without separateness. Separateness is a cosmic misdemeanor, for which Humanity is, and has been paying a high price all thru the centuries. The universality of Freemasonry seeks to restore the kind of unity inclusive of diversity that will put an end to separateness and reunite discordant factors.

39 In union there is strength. In separateness there is weakness. The strength of Freemasonry lies in its emfasis on an universality that includes and transmutes into constructive value diversity without separateness.

40 The gift of reason caused Man to think. In his ignorance and refusal to accept what he knew at the time to be a higher guidance, man thought wrong. Most of the species have been thinking wrong ever since that day when reason dawned in the human mind and the creature stept up from the animal to the true human kingdom. All religion, philosofy and all morality has been and is a process of attempting to return to the right thought, the right way of thinking.

41 The Hebrew Tradition has pictured the first concept of separation in the "dispersion" after the "Flood" and at the Tower of Babel. But there never was a flood that completely envelopt the entire earth at one time. There have been several floods and several traditions of floods associated with the cosmological theories of ancient religions. The Flood that submerged Humanity was the Flood of Ignorance, the waters of which are, even now, far from subsided.

42 The Towel of Babel, while having an archæological interest, is not the point at which the main streams of human evolution diverged, as every ethnologist knows. Both the Flood and the Tower of Babel are "figures" that have their relative values, but not in the ordinary interpretations. Both the Flood and the Tower represent, esoterically, several important features in the life history of Humanity. In our present consideration, the Flood is the tide of ignorance to which Humanity succumbed. The Tower represents Humanity's attempt to climb up and out of the depths of ignorance, but by the false method of reliance upon exterior, external and exoteric factors of a purely material nature.

43 Ignorance is mental darkness. Knowledge is mental light. Ignorance is lack of spiritual perception. Knowledge is the possession of spiritual perception. Many men have been blissfully ignorant of text books, who have been wonders at spiritual perception thru close contact with and absorption of the teachings of Nature direct from Nature herself.

44 Ignorance is unrestrained indulgence. Knowledge is controled usage of the desire-factor in our natures. Self-control is one of the ethical factors most vigorously strest by the Craft for there is no true initiation without it nor is there any real advancement on the Path upward until the neofite has learned to exercise this all-important function. Right at the beginning of his career, the Masonic neofite has to learn to subdue his passions and improve himself in Masonry. To improve himself means to go forward into a deeper understanding of just this principle of subduing passions and exercising self-control.

45 The compasses also serve as a continuous reminder of the same principle,—circumscribing our desires and teaching us to keep our passions within due bounds with all mankind but especially the brethren. There is no feature of exclusiveness here. We are not taught to practice one virtue with our brethren and a totally different attitude toward others. Our Masonic duty is to all men. We are admonisht to make our efforts evident to our brethren "especially," simply and solely because our brethren are supposed and are assumed to be doing exactly the same thing toward us and toward each other. If, "in union there is strength," then the example of many Masons consciously adopting and functioning the same ethical attitude, would serve as a mighty force for constructive good in any community, large or small.

46 Unsubdued and unrestrained passions produce ignorance, destructiveness and mental and spiritual darkness. Subdued passions, restrained and kept well in hand, develop knowledge thru experience, mental and spiritual Light, and Light is the big factor it is the business of Freemasonry to confer. Freemasonry teaches its neofites to learn to subdue their passions, and as they learn, they gradually establish the conditions that lead to knowledge and spiritual light.

47 Freemasonry does more than this, however; in producing mental and spiritual light it presents that light in a way that compels the neofite to work for it until he is worthy and well qualified to receive it. That is why the neofite does not enter into an immediate understanding and comprehension of the so-called "mysteries of Freemasonry" the moment he completes his three degrees in the "Blue" or Symbolic Lodges. The degrees have invested him with a set of keys. He must seek the doors they will severally unlock. If he does not seek them he will never know one whit more about Freemasonry even tho he becomes a Master or a Grand Master. In fact, there are many Masonic dignitaries who know little or nothing about the real identity of the Craft, other than ritual performance and good fraternalism.

48 In Freemasonry, the neofite is symbolically taught first, to work, then second, that he is entitled to wages—of differing kinds, according to his status. But—no work—no wage. So, in working for light, the neofite not only receives it, but he earns wages at the same time. The wage he earns is the power and privilege of transmutation. He learns to transmute common ordinary experience into mental and intellectual light. Then he learns to transmute intellectual light into spiritual light. Finally, he learns, at last, to transmute spiritual light into POWER, for all light is power,—radiant energy, and when a man or Mason develops spiritual light within himself, he becomes surcharged with spiritual power that manifests as power in every other way, as well.

49 Without making any claims to be such, Freemasonry is, in truth and fact, a world-educator for, in the process of transmuting our physical experience into mental and intellectual light we evolve knowledge, and this method of evolving knowledge is the only real way of acquiring it. Year after year, students who have grilled thru academic courses win academic degrees. But also, year after year, we see men who have fought their way up and thru, becoming masters of science and industry, whose successes have won them popular and academic recognition and who are crowned with "Doctors" degrees, yet many of them have never even had a grammar school education. Knowledge is won in the world, thru evolutionary process.

50 Freemasonry is thus an agent of real constructiveness. Freemasons are not necessarily better than other men, but most Freemasons are better men than they would have been had they remained outside the Fraternity. This is one of the real mysteries of Freemasonry,—the silent, subtle, invisible process by which the Masonic precepts sink into, saturate and motivate the hearts of men without letting them become aware of it at the time. It is when the Mason looks backward in retrospect, that he discovers what the Craft has done for him.

51 A university is a single institution which may, and usually does, comprise several collective groups of colleges, seminaries, faculties or schools, representing specialized bodies. Therefore, a university is in a position to offer the student a much wider, generous and more advantageous program or curriculum than the limited collegiate body. Freemasonry is built upon this very plan,—that of the university, thru its adherence to the principle of universality. Freemasonry is not the product of or confined to a single cultus. It is a true University of Humanity. Its field is the world. It is composed of the collective groups of the most active and progressive minds and intelligences in thousands of communities thruout the world.

52 Freemasonry, therefore, offers to the student of Humanity and Humanitarianism, a training in ethical attainment possessing definite and very real spiritual values to a greater extent than any church or religious body, because Freemasonry is free from doctrine or dogma, regardless ow how much some misinformed Masons attempt to read such features into the Masonic fabric.

53 Just as the Church and Synagogue suffer from the efforts of well meaning members, both clerical and lay, to read into them doctrinal teachings never intimated by Christ or Moses, in a similar manner Freemasonry has to endure the same misrepresentation, but the big fact is, that Freemasonry not only has endured it but has survived it and kept steadily on its way, hewing always close to the mark in spite of it.

54 Freemasonry is often misunderstood even by those who believe they understand it best, and this is because Freemasonry is essentially esoteric, which is its only justification for calling itself speculative. Theoretically, speculative bodies function more directly on a mental plane than those that concern themselves with exoteric and operative affairs. Esoteric bodies suffer, however, when it is attempted to manipulate them by purely exoteric method, for then they present merely the skeleton of a system of culture without however, the spirit that quickens it and makes it to be alive.

55 Freemasonry, to those who have seen the light and have entered into the Spirit that IS Freemasonry, soon learn that the Fraternity is really a vast school wherein is taught a practical system of soul-culture thru spiritual discipline that is veiled to the ordinary observer. The simplest way to truth is usually thru the simplest processes and the simplest methods of expression.

This, Freemasonry accomplishes in a marvelous manner. No high sounding phrases make up or compose its rituals. No magical jargon or kabalistic platitudes compose its teachings. Freemasonry uses the language of Everyman, everywhere. It speaks and uses the universal tongue, not that of school, cult or sect. It uses for illustrations the tools whereby Man is able to make the living that permits him to be—Man. The tools that are right at hand, are the tools that Freemasonry presents to its workmen, teaching them, perhaps for the first time in their lives, how to use the homely implements with which they thought they were so familiar.

56 Right Angles, Horizontals and Perpendiculars may have a very definite allusion to some important Masonic features and the Mason is taught how to regard them and to define them, but, let us add another explanation. Right Angles, Horizontals and Perpendiculars represent planes of action. A surface is simply a line projected from itself at right angles to itself, in one direction. That direction may be up or it may be down. Horizontal planes represent action-fields in the world in which we live. Perpendicular planes represent action, not only in the physical world, on the physical plane, but in the spiritual worlds, etheric, astral and mental, surrounding our earth plane, both above, below and thru it.

57 Right angles, horizontals and perpendiculars are, therefore, signs to us of worlds within worlds, planes within planes, and serve as guide posts in the journey we are all making from finity to Infinity. In one sense they represent the pathways laid for us by those who have gone this way before us. They are the factors and structural elements upon which we are building our Temple, whether it be the temple of the body or the Temple of Spirit; in worlds seen or worlds unseen.

58 Referring to this principle of universality as a fundamental precept of Freemasonry Albert Pike says (Morals and Dogma, p. 276), "Universality . . . that character which has ever been peculiar to it from its origin; and which enables two Kings, worshippers of different Deities, to sit together as Masters, while the walls of the first temple arose; and the men of Gebal, bowing down to the Phœnician Gods, to work by the side of the Hebrews to whom these Gods were abominations; and sit with them in the same Lodge as brethren."

59 This same feature that Pike presents has been duplicated many times over, when monarchs of different faiths have met as Masons in London, Paris and Berlin; have sat in Lodge together and have banquetted together as Masons and Brethren.

60 This, then, is the vast difference between Freemasonry and Ecclesiasticism. The first is founded upon a principle and remains unbroken and unchanged by age. The second is founded upon man-made creeds and has been decimated, changed and altered way beyond its original semblance. Universality is cosmic. Creedalism is localized and ephemeral. Universality is all inclusive. Creedalism is tremendously exclusive. Universality lifts a man out of himself into a cosmic consciousness. Creedalism imposes other men's ideas to the suppression of individual ideas. Masonry stands for toleration. Ecclesiasticism—unfortunately, and—regrettably, stands for intolerance, reactionism. Freemasonry makes for progress. It is aligned with every forward movement, idea and concept. It expresses the "onward forever" attitude of intelligent Humanity.

THE THREE GRAND MASTERS OF THE LODGE OF JERUSALEM.

If the Hiramic legend be interpreted according to the symbolism of the ancient Mysteries, it assumes the dignity of a philosophical exposition of the redemption of the human soul. The three Grand Masters become the Causal Triad posited by the initiated philosophers as the triune foundation of existence. King Solomon (center) signifies the one Eternal and Unchangeable Divinity who is the Grand Master of the Lodge of the Universe; King Hiram of Tyre (right), cosmic resources, or the energies which continually flow from the sphere of causation into the sphere of effect; CHiram Abiff (left), the Widow's Son, universal activity—the Demiurgus, or Fabricator, of the world, the Master of Workmen. CHiram's hammer, like the thunderbolt of Zeus, represents his power over the tangible elements of the inferior creation. The throne of CHiram is the sun, the proper emblem of which is the light delta. It may therefore be correctly said that CHiram assumes, or takes upon himself, the inferior world; that is, he must necessarily be distributed as the active life principle throughout the elements which depend upon his activity for their existence. He shines upon his world through three gates—the east, the south, and the west, but from the north, dark there comes no light save to the initiated few who, Apuleius-like, behold the "midnight sun." When CHiram, the Demiurgus, took upon himself creation, he began the period of his cosmic martyrdom. As Christ he was crucified upon the cross of the four elements; as Atys he was gored by the boar of oblivion; as Osiris he was sealed in the leaden chest of being. His triune body he offered up as food for the sustenance of his creations, for he himself became the bread and the wine of men. The assassins of CHiram are the three dimensions of the inferior universe which attack and destroy the dimensionless and limitless Spirit sent to mold creation into the proper habitation of everlasting life. Even like, the Demiurgus is bound to the Wheel of Existence established

We continue! It is important that the nature of the feminine principle be fully understood ... let us therefore give ear:

THE FEMININE PRINCIPLE

From earliest times Man perceived that life around him manifested itself at all levels through a perpetual interplay between the male & female polarities. As he has done with many things, he has evolved symbols to represent the male & female principles. The feminine creative principle has been known by many names throughout history. For example: in Babylon it was represented by Ishtar; in Syria by Ashtoreth; in Phoenicia by Astarte; in Greece by Aphrodite; in Egypt by Isis; and in the Western world by Mary.

The evolution of Mary in the consciousness of the Christian world can be divided into three periods: The first period could be described as the time when the idea of the divine nature of the mother of Jesus gradually emerged from her pre-Christian figures such as Isis and Aphrodite. From about 1066, the divine status of Mary became the object of theological scrutiny, followed by controversy, until Pope Pius IX put an end to the debate in 1854. From this date onwards the place of the Virgin Mary in the Catholic Church is definitely established.

MARY The name Mary has been interpreted as "myrrh" or "maris" in the sense of bitterness, implying perhaps that like Mary we will all have to undergo purification before the Christ consciousness can be born in us. Mary is sometimes described as Stella Maris, Star of the Sea. This is probably to convey the idea of the sea as symbolizing the desire-nature, and the star, the spirit rising above the lower nature. The Virgin Mary is also called the MATER DELOROSA, which translated literally from the Latin means sorrowing mother, or mother full of grief, as found in the titles of many musical works, the Stabat Mater Dolorosa. These works express Mary's agony at the crucifixion and refer to the human aspect of this universal feminine symbol which can understand all sorrows. It is interesting to note in passing that Mary is treated with great respect in Islam -- considerable space is devoted to her in the Koran.

NOTRE DAME Mary is often referred to as Notre Dame, a French term meaning "Our Lady" which was used frequently among the Troubadours as a code to hide esoteric teachings on the role of the feminine in spiritual development. St. Bernard of Clairvaux, the spiritual father of the Order of the Knights Templar, was one of those ecclesiastics who realized the importance of the feminine principle not only in the spiritual life of the Church in general, but also for maintaining the psychological balance of his warrior monks. It was not surprising therefore that he placed the Order of Knights Templar under the protection of Notre Dame. From then on down through the centuries, imposing cathedrals and humble chapels alike have borne witness to the worship of the Eternal Mother.

THE VIRGIN MARY The Virgin Mary symbolizes three aspects of the feminine principle. The first is that of the Cosmic Mother, which is the female polarity of the Divine. This aspect is sometimes referred to in ancient sacred texts as the Primordial Waters. The second aspect refers to the essence of Mother Earth, which nourishes humanity, her children. The concept of Original Matter is also associated with this aspect. In ancient times the goddesses Cybele and Demeter were also representations of these ideas. The third aspect of Mary is that of the Mother of God.

NON-INTEGRATION OF OUR OPPOSITE POLARITY It is important that one finds a balance in one's life and in society. We will explore this shortly, but it can be noted here that psychoanalysts have stressed the need for today's male-oriented society to give full recognition to the female principle. The old film "The Blue Angel", staring Marlene Dietrich, illustrates in broad terms what happens when the feminine polarity is not allowed to function. In the film, a very respected professor, who has been too busy to pay attention to the creative and emotional sides of himself, one day meets an attractive but unsentimental chorus girl. The girl's exaggerated toughness already gives a clue that she has certain unresolved problems with the male aspect of herself. The professor, unaware of his own particular problem, allows his subconscious to project his repressed femininity onto this attractive "toughie" and proceeds to fall madly in love with her. The girl is amused by the power she holds over this pillar of society and devises all kinds of ways to humiliate the poor man. The story, as might be expected, has a tragic ending.

According to the Jungian school of psychoanalysis, many of today's psychological ills are due to the non-integration of our opposite polarities. Followers of Jung have drawn attention to the fact that in the contemporary male, the feminine side is repressed, while the opposite is true for the female sex. They also claim that dream analysis can help to reconcile us with the repressed side of ourselves. Techniques have been employed for centuries by esoteric schools to achieve the integration of the positive & negative polarities of the human psyche. The Temple tradition in particular has been the guardian of many of these techniques.

> The Hebrew conception of a masculine creator favoured by Moses and the prophets, has so strongly influenced the thinking of Western man that even today many people find it difficult to think of God as having feminine characteristics.

This state of mind has greatly reinforced the traditional attitude that women are not equal to men.

BALANCING THE MALE/FEMALE POLARITIES Fortunately, Western society has begun, if as yet only unconsciously, to respond to the power of the feminine polarity. The rise of women to positions of power and responsibility hitherto reserved for men is an indication of this evolution.

Because the impact of the feminine polarity on the collective mind of contemporary Western society is not yet being integrated consciously, one can discern a tendency towards over compensation. A reaction is produced when an individual has to recognize, accept and express his/her opposite polarity. An example of this phenomenon on the collective level is the current popularity of certain rock and pop stars whose physical appearance suggest either a kind of indeterminate sexual polarity or an image recognizably male, but with strong female overtones. One need not stretch one's imagination to conclude that promoters in the entertainment world have sensed what is happening in the collective unconscious and have tailormade their performers to act as symbols on which a public reared on masculine values projects its repressed femininity.

Another area where we are witnessing a considerable incursion of feminine influence is in the area of men's fashion. Men's clothes are now available in all colours and materials formerly considered feminine. The word unisex is now in use in many countries to describe clothes to be worn by both men and women. This compensatory over-exaggeration of the feminine is certainly temporary as our society edges its way towards a better balance between the masculine & feminine polarities.

I hope this brief introduction to the subject of the feminine archetype will help you to realize that the respect rendered by the Tradition to "Notre Dame" is not with the intention of worshipping a person, but an attempt to come to terms with and pay homage to one of the most powerful aspects of our Creator.

Q U E S T I O N S

1) To what cause does the Jungian school of psychoanalysis attribute many of our psychological ills?

2) What does the 'Virgin Mary' symbolize?

3) Does a myth have to have an actual historical base to be of value?

4) What did Notre Dame mean to the Troubadours?

5) Why is it important to balance the opposite polarities within oneself?

THE KNIGHTS TEMPLAR - continued

The Grand Master was the head of the Order. He had very wide powers, but could not take certain decisions without consulting a group of senior Knights known as the Chapter. He had some privileges such as: the right to four horses when in the field, and the largest tent, distinguished further from the others by being circular in shape. The Grand Master was always accompanied by the battle standard of the Order, which was known as the Gonfalon Beauceant.

The Seneschal or Commander of the Order was second in command, and when the Grand Master was absent, it was he who was in full command. The next in the chain of command was the Marshal; he was the supreme military commander. The Commander of the City of Jerusalem was responsible for the general health and well-being of the brothers of the Order as well as the protection of pilgrims. The Commanders of Tripoli and Antioch exercised the authority of the Grand Master in their own territories except when he visited them. The Draper was responsible for clothing, bedding etc. The Gonfanonier was responsible for the instruction to recruits and for the observance of the statutes and rules. The Turcopolier was in charge of local cavalry recruits and reported directly to the Grand Master or the Marshal.

The Knights were the main fighting force of the Order. They were assisted by the Squires or Ecuyers. The latter were attached to the Knights as servants while they passed their apprenticeship. The Knights were known for their courage and their oath never to retreat even if the odds were three to one against them. The dress uniform of the Knights was a white cloak bearing a red eight-pointed cross. In battle they wore coats of mail, and their weapons consisted of a mace, a heavy sword, a short lance and a cutlass. The Sergeants, who wore black cloaks, were usually drawn from the bourgeoisie. Because of the importance to the Templars of the artisans in the building trades, I will describe them in more detail a little later on when I speak to you about the Compagnonage.

The Chaplains were responsible to the Grand Master. Pope Innocent II gave the Templars the right to appoint their own chaplains -- under this arrangement they owed allegiance only to Rome and the Grand Master. Innocent II also gave the Templars the right to build their own churches. In fact the situation soon developed whereby the Templars were subject to no authority save that of the Pope. The Order soon became a State within States, a freedom which was to lead to their eventual downfall.

The battle standard of the Knights Templar, the Gonfalon Beauceant or Beauseant, was a red eight-pointed cross on a background of black and white squares. In heraldry, this red cross which had widened ends was known as "Croix pattée gueules." The Beauceant was also known as the Piebald Standard because of the pattern of black and white squares. Scholars of symbolism claim that the white and red colours signify God's wisdom and divine love, while the black and white signify light & darkness, the positive and the negative. According to one source, St. Bernard was supposed to have said that the significance of the black & white background was that the white meant the Templars were good for the friends of Christ, black and terrible for his enemies. There has been much debate as to the origin of the word Beauceant. One story goes that the name came about because one Templar Knight, Gérard de Bouxin, when he saw the standard flying cried out: "Que tu es beau céans!"

The battle cry of the Templars was "A moi, beau sire! Beauceant à la rescousse!" Their rallying cry was "Vive Dieu, Saint Amour!" The device or motto of the Order was a Latin version of the first two lines of Psalm 115, verse 1 Non nobis, Domine, non nobis, sed Nomini Tuo da gloriam. This is translated as "Not for us, Lord, not for us, but to Thy Name give glory," signifying that members of the Order lived only for service to the Divine. The seal of the Order sometimes carried a design of two horsemen on the same horse, indicating, inter alia, the vow of poverty and the unity which should reign within the Order, as well as the dual role of the Templar as warrior and monk.

To return to the history of the Order, Hugues de Payns travelled through Europe promoting its expansion. He was very successful and obtained gifts of land and property wherever he went. In England and Scotland he also obtained gifts and other forms of support. It is believed that Huges de Payns visited the famous Temple Church in Chancery Lane, London. The Grand Master left France for the Holy Land in 1129, by which time the Order was solidly established in Europe, including the Iberian Peninsular.

The Order went on to develop rapidly in influence and power. The star of St. Bernard rose with that of the Templars. When Pope Honorius died in 1130, Bernard supported the man who became Innocent II. As a result he had a staunch supporter in the papacy, which as we have seen was of great advantage to the Templars. On 24 May 1136, Hugues de Payns died and was succeeded by Robert de Craon.

On 24 December 1144, Edessa, one of the Christian strongholds in the Holy Land, was recaptured by the Moslems. Bernard canvassed vigorously for a new crusade, and spoke publicly in its support at Vézelay on Easter Sunday, 31 March 1146. In a solemn ceremony in Paris, a new wave of crusaders vowed to avenge this attack on Christendom. Among the great figures present were King Louis II, Pope Eugenius, St. Bernard and three hundred Knights in their new white cloaks with a red cross on the left breast, recently conferred on them by the Pope.

In 1147 The Crusaders left for the Holy Land. The ill-managed and uncoordinated operation turned out to be a catastrophe from start to finish, and the majority of the Crusaders perished, many even before they had reached Palestine. The Templars fought bravely but the valor of a few men could not save the day.

This debacle signalled the start of a rough passage in Templar history. The Grand Master died and was replaced by another Frenchman, Evrard de Barre. He resigned after three years to become a monk under Bernard de Clairvaux. Bernard himself died on 20 August 1153. Both Pope Eugenius and de Barre followed shortly after. André de Montbard became the fifth Grand Master of the Order, but did not last long, dying on 17 January 1156. On top of all this, the Templars now had to face competition. From the beginning they had been a military order, whereas the Hospitallers of St. John, established as early as 1048, had hitherto essentially been an order devoted to helping pilgrims and the sick. Seeing the great success of the Templars, they decided to organize themselves on military lines and soon began to make their influence felt. In spite of this rivalry, the power of the Templars continued to grow and reached such a point that kings and rulers began to fear and distrust them. In contrast to the Hospitallers, their Rule, their meetings and admission ceremony or "reception" were secret. The fact that the Templars operated in secret and had become international bankers did not endear them to society at large.

The decline of the power of the Knights Templar in the Holy Land resulted from a combination of factors beyond their control. Yet it cannot be denied that the purity and high idealism of the original founders were gradually compromised as circumstances obliged the Templars to be more and more involved in the politics of the Near East. The rank and file of the Order, as well as some of its leaders, did not always maintain the noble ideals present in the early days in the way they lived. Nevertheless, the Templar tradition holds that the inner order retained the high spirituality laid down by Hugues de Payns and his brother Knights right to the end, and this ensured that there was no break in the inner transmission, whatever form this would subsequently take.

In June of 1157 the then Grand Master, Bertrand de Blanquefort, was captured in battle and taken to Damascus in chains. The demise of the Christian presence in the Holy Land had begun. Jerusalem was captured in 1244, and with the fall of St. Jean d'Acre in 1291 to the Mamelouks, the chapter of Christendom's adventure in Palestine was closed.

The Templars and the Hospitallers retreated to Cyprus, after which the Templars went on to Sicily. From there the majority returned to France. The Templars then enjoyed a brief period of peaceful existence, ensconced in their castles and chapels, blissfully unaware, it seemed, that the death knell of the Order had sounded.

In 1304 King Philip IV of France, known as Philip the Fair, asked to be dubbed a Knight of the Order. Philip was known to be a crafty and scheming sovereign. The Templars no doubt felt that this was a move by the King to infiltrate the Order for his own designs, and to Philip's great mortification his request was rejected.

A few years later, one of the King's advisors, Guillaume de Nogaret, suggested to him that one way of replenishing his rapidly dwindling coffers would be to find some way of bringing the Order to its knees and seizing its funds. Philip, remembering how he had been slighted, did not hesitate.

On 13 October 1307, the King's soldiers swooped on the Templar strongholds and arrested all Templars who could be located. There followed seven years of trials, forced confessions, retractions, suffering, scandals, falsehoods, pillage and burning at the stake.

On 3 April 1312, during a Council held in the town of Vienne in France, Pope Clément V, accompanied by King Philip, announced the abolition of the Order of the Knights Templar, as a result of a decision taken in private consistory on 22 March of that year. The only concession made was not to pronounce excommunication.

On 18 March 1314, Jacques de Molay, the twenty-second and last Grand Master of the Order, was burnt at the stake on a small island situated on the river Seine in Paris. At the time is island was known as L'Ile des Javiaux; today it is called Place Dauphine. Just before he gave up the ghost, the last Grand Master is said to have cried "....woe will come, ere long, to those who condemn us without cause. God will avenge our death."

Coincidence or not, on 20 April 1314 Pope Clément V died, surrounded only by a few servants who did not hesitate to steal his treasure. On 9 November of the same year, King Philip the Fair was injured while boar hunting near Poissy and died after great suffering on 29 November. Guillaume de Nogaret fared little better; he also died that same year under mysterious circumstances. The prediction of the Grand Master seemed to have succeeded beyond his wildest expectations. The children of Philip the Fair and other members of his immediate family all had short and unhappy lives. Some 14 year after the death of the Grand Master Jacques de Molay, the line of Philip's dynasty disappeared from the throne of France. A French writer, Maurice Druon, has written a number of readable books entitled Les rois maudits (The Accursed Kings) on this strange sequel of events. A very successful television series based on his books and performed by the members of the Comédie Française was shown in France during the 1960's.

Elsewhere in Europe, the Templars also went into decline, though less rapidly. In the British Isles there was much sympathy for the Templars, and in typically British fashion some sort of a formula was initially worked out whereby the Templars were permitted to keep their property and allowed as private individuals to remain in the Catholic Church. But eventually many of them suffered as their French brothers had done.

In Portugal King Dinis refused to persecute the Templars but avoided a confrontation with the papacy by creating a new order and integrating the Templars into it. In March 1319 Pope John XXII authorized the founding of the Order of Christ, the name given to the new Order. The headquarters of the Order of Christ was established in Tomar in 1356. The last true Grand Master of the Order was Don Lopo Dias de Sousa. After him the sons of the king administered the Order. The first was Prince Henry the Navigator, who became famous for his discoveries. Many Portuguese explorers belonged to the Order and proudly displayed the red cross on the sails of their caravelles. The Order of Christ became a secular Order in 1789, and its last chaplains left Tomar in 1834. The Order still exists today but bestows purely honorary titles.

In Spain the tradition of warrior monks found its expression through the Order of the Knights Templar and four national orders: the Orders of Calatrava, Santiago, Alcantara and Montesa. The national orders were not controlled by the international Templar hierarchy. They were however, with the exception of the Order of Santiago, linked with the Cistercian Rule of Cîteaux in one way or another. Santiago was given a Rule directly from Rome.

The Order of Calatrava was the first military Order established in Spain. It observed the monastic Rule of Cîteaux and was accepted as an Order in 1164 by Pope Alexander III, but only in November 1187, after much effort by the Spanish, was it confirmed as a Christian branch. Like other orders in Spain, the Knights of Calatrava were active in the battles against the Moors. Similarly they were involved in disputes between the different provinces in the country. The last Grand Master of the Order, Don Garcia Lopez de Padilla, died in 1482. The Order was taken over by the crown in 1485, and deteriorated gradually after first limiting membership only to candidates of noble origin and then, in 1540, authorized knights to marry. The remainder of the history of the Order is more or less the history of all orders in Spain. On 25 July 1835 the Spanish Government suppressed the monasteries. Around the middle of the nineteenth century a Concordat was signed between Rome and the ruling Spanish sovereign which decreed that all the military orders should be grouped in one territory within the province of Ciudad Real. This arrangement was abolished under the Second Republic. In 1939 the orders were allowed to revive but only as purely formal institutions with the right to confer honorary titles.

After the Order of the Knights Templar was abolished, King Jaime II of Aragon resisted the handing over of the property of the military orders to the then Hospitallers. When John XXII succeeded Clement V, he agreed to the solution of creating a new Order in Spain. Thus the Order of the Montesa was founded in June 1317, under the first Grand Master Guillen de Eril. A certain number of Knights Templar, as well as those belonging to the national orders, survived by attaching themselves to the new Order. Like the Order of Christ in Portugal, the Order of Montesa was considered to be the legitimate successor of the Temple Tradition and until it was tampered with by royalty, it remained linked to the Cistercian Rule through its close relationship with what survived of the Order of Calatrava.

Certain specialists in the history of the Templars claim they have reason to believe that the secret documents and relics of the Templars were spirited away for safekeeping before they could be seized by Philip the Fair. It is said, for example, that the treasure of the temple was hidden in the Castle of Arginy by Jacques de Molay's nephew, Phillipe, Compte de Beaujeu. Many books have been written advancing various theories as to the hiding places of these treasures. Fortune hunters of all kinds have sought these objects, but so far no one seems to have found them.

As to the question of what happened to the Order in France after the death of Jacques de Molay, the situation has never been clarified. There have been claims that while in prison, de Molay passed on his succession in due form, with orders to perpetuate the Tradition in secret while awaiting friendlier times. This has led to the belief that both Freemasonry and the Rosicrucian tradition were infiltrated early in their history by secret Templars. Those who support this view point to the existence of a degree in Masonry called the degree of the Knights Templar. (?) In more recent times the mother of the modern Western esoteric tradition -- the Order of the Golden Dawn -- is also said to have had Templar origins.

One story goes that 237 Knights Templar chaplains and artisans escaped from the France of King Philip IV and took refuge in a Commandery of the Temple in London. Among them was an alchemist named Guidon de Montanor who had reached the higher levels of the art. Montanor adopted one of the escapees, Gaston de la Pierre Phoebus, as his spiritual son, to whom he transmitted the secrets of the Royal Art. After a few months the Templars, or most of them, fearing the greed of Edward, the English king, left for Scotland, probably for the Isle of Mull. There, encouraged by Guidon de Montanor, Gaston de la Pierre Phoebus created a group of alchemists of Templar origin, to whom he communicated the secrets of the Order of the Temple. According to this story, Phoebus formed an occult College composed of himself, de Montanor, Pierre de Lombardie, Richard (an English Templar), Henri de Montfort, César Minvielle, and Pierre-Yorik de Rivault. The college adopted as its symbol the pelican with open wings, feeding its hungry young with its own flesh and blood from an opening in its breast. This is intended to remind us of the Saviour who shed his blood for mankind. The symbol has been adopted by Masonry as the symbol of the 18th or Rose Croix Degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. The Masonic interpretation of the symbol is that the pelican, by restoring her young ones to life, symbolizes resurrection.

To continue with the story of the Rose Croix and the Templar tradition: while Phoebus was developing his College, two Popes, Clément V and John XXII, had died. When the persecution of the Templars had completely calmed down Phoebus decided to return to France discretely with 27 companions. He visited the new Pope, who is said to have been a secret alchemist. The story continues that the Pope asked Phoebus to return to Scotland and persuade the elite of his brothers-to-arms who were in service to King Robert the Bruce, to return to France. Knowing that the roads were infested with armed robbers, Phoebus took the precaution of handing over the secret documents of his College at a place called Pont-Saint-Esprit to a former Templar who had become Prior of the Hospitallers of St. John. In the course of his journey Phoebus and 13 of his companions were killed by bandits. He was buried at Pont-de-Gennes, now in the commune of of Montfort-le-Rotrou in the region of Sarthe in France.

Five of the survivors reached Scotland to return later to France. They were led by Jacques de Via, nephew of Pope John XXII. The former Templar mentioned just now proceeded to draw up a new Templar Rule which was adopted by a College of 33 men. The College elected de Via as successor to Phoebus. All these arrangements were kept secret. On 6 May 1317 Jacques de Via died. His successors have since called themselves "Frères Aînés de la Rose-Croix," in English, the Elder Brothers of the Rose Cross. The story concludes that the tradition still exists today and that the number of members of the College still remains 33, being renewed and maintained by "co-option".

R. Bernard, in a book he published in France in 1970, claims that he was asked to reveal the existence of a secret College of men who had reached the level of what is known in esoteric circles as the Rose-Croix. Bernard describes his visits to some of the secret centers where these Elder Brothers carried out their spiritual activities. According to him, there existed 12 such centers on our planet, and in each there were 12 brothers. (?) No mention was made in Bernard's account of any link with the Phoebus story.

THE LEGACY OF THE TEMPLARS

In my upcoming addresses to you I will deal with certain aspects of the real mission of the Templars, on which little or no information is given in the usual academic accounts of the history of the Order. As to the veracity of certain assertions I will make, you will either have to accept them on faith or hold them as interesting stories until such time as you can confirm them directly through contact with a genuine Order of the Temple.

One characteristic of the Order of the Temple throughout its different manifestations whether Essenian, Templar or otherwise, is that it appears on the surface of history for a specifically determined period and for a specific mission. It manifests at a precise moment through the chosen temporary institutional vehicle and after the particular spiritual and temporal heritage has been injected, disappears. According to Templar tradition, this is one explanation as to why the Templars, despite their powerful military force, made no resistance to King Philip the Fair. They realized that their mission had been accomplished and that nothing would be served by fighting to retain their power and influence.

Next, we will consider the exoteric and esoteric mission of the Templars.

THE LIGHTS

The Nature and Character of True Masonic Light

"Thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left." Isa. 30; 21.

IGHT may be defined from three different angles, the academic, the psychologic and the esoteric or spiritual. Academically, light is a form of radiant energy that acts on the retina of the eye and renders visible the objects from which it comes. Psychologically, it is the ability to think sequentially so that any matter may be comprehended in a systematic, logical manner. Esoterically or spiritually, light is that state of the higher intellectual faculties by virtue of which, one penetrates with inner or mental vision into planes of consciousness superior to those of the physical norm.

2 The neofits hears a great deal about light, while passing thru the initiatory rites in all bodies and all degrees. The brethren hear a great deal about light from the various orators, dinner-speakers and lecturers within the Craft and they read still more about it in the general and specific literature of the Fraternity.

3 We hear and read much about light, in fact we hear and read almost everything about it except a reasonable definition of just what Masonic Light really is.

4 The Light of Masonry can be comprehended thru a truly cosmic plan. The Craft employs a triple trinity in the expression of its inherent Light. This Trinity of Light is composed of Three Great Lights, discovered by the Three Representatives of Three Lesser Lights. Similarly, on the spiritual planes of consciousness we discover Three Great Cosmic Lights, the Absolute, Supreme Being, and the Solar Logoi. The latter, individually, become the Creating Gods of the several Solar Systems constituting the known universes.

5 The Three Great Cosmic Lights are discovered, as stated, by the Three Cosmic Representatives of the Three Lesser Mundane Lights. The Three Lesser Mundane Lights are Physical, Spiritual and Soular Man, each of these last named phases being a direct evolutional projection of a respective factor in the Cosmic Trinity. The Three Representatives of the Lesser and Mundane Lights are the Conscious, Sub-Conscious and Super-Conscious MIND, which is a medium in its essential nature and character, that forms a bridge across the "Abyss" between Deity in its collective aspects, and Man in his totality.

6 In the organized Craft, the Great Lights are the Holy Bible, Square and Compasses. The Lesser Lights are the Sun, Moon and the Worshipful Master of the Lodge. The Representatives of the Lesser Lights are Three Tapers or Candles, situated relevant to the principal points of the Lodge.

7 The Standard Monitor gives the explanations that are offered to the neofite and with those explanations he must be satisfied, and usually is, unless—he sees over and beyond the excellent but purely materially moralistic definitions, into a spiritual vista that satisfies something in him that lies beyond mere physical concepts.

8 The Holy Bible is an excellent rule and guide for our faith and practice. The Square does remind us of the necessity of squaring our actions, and the Compasses do prick our memories of the obligations we have assumed, when we fail to circumscribe our desires and keep our passions in due bounds. All these applications are, however, strictly materialistic formulae. The Masonic Great Lights have a deeper and more important mission.

9 The Holy Bible applies to Physical Man, for he, the Traveler, coming from the West and journeying East, requires a guidance that he will find within the pages of the Sacred Book if he looks for it. Masonically, the traveler journeys from the West toward the East. Has it ever occurd to you that this is a reversal of Nature's Path. Anthropology, ethnology, archeology and all the other 'ologies indicate that progress has inevitably been from the East, toward the West, as strest in the late Horace Greeley's now famous advice to young men.

10 Light cometh from the East. All Great Messiahs have manifested from what was the East toward the rest of the known world. Migrations have been from the East, Westward. Great meteorological disturbances emanate from the East and follow the path of the Earth. It would seem therefore, that the proper direction would be to travel westward, in line with so many great natural movements.

11 There is a very excellent reason however, why the neofite in the mysteries is taught to travel East. He is in search of Light. The East symbolizes Light and, to our planet, it is the cardinal point where the greatest of the Lesser Lights arises daily. The real reason is, that travel westward represents INvolution, or the diffusion of Divine Spirit into what we call Matter for the purpose of individualistic manifestation, and travel Eastward represents EVolution, or the Path Back to the Source.

12 Thus, Freemasonry is in perfect alignment with the progressive spirit of organic life and especially of individualized life as we find it exemplified in Man. The Holy Bible, as the Great Light of the Craft, shows us in the lives and thru the precepts of the inspired characters whose works compose its subject-matter, the Way Back to the Source, as practist by the Sages thru the Ages. In the pages of the Holy Book will be found the Ancient Wisdom set forth in the clearest revelation and description, of any extant source.

13 Now this is the point,—Light means, clear vision into whatsoever we apply ourselves. If we seek human advancement, light shows us the way thru the problems confronting us. Some people call this common sense. But there are lots of good people with plenty of common sense who are narrow minded when it comes to mental vision, so common sense alone does not meet all the requirements. The light of the eye shows us clearly the physical environment in which we function. The light of the spirit shows us the existence of a life not ordinarily comprehended in the physical environment. The light of the soul shows us the vital essences of an interior status of man not ordinarily comprehended either physically or spiritually. It was this peculiar vital essence that the illuminated Brother, Jacob Boehme saw, in plants, rocks, and even blades of grass.

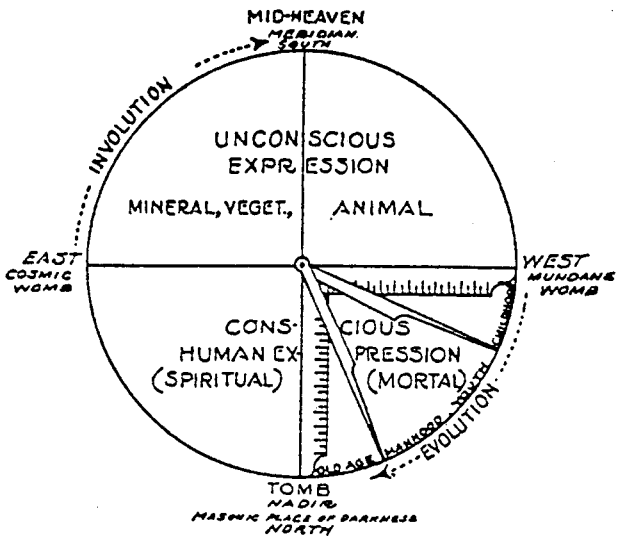
14 So, the Holy Bible does contain all that is necessary for us, as a rule and guide for mortal Man on the "Path Back to the Source". The Square applies peculiarly to the Spiritual Man. The cycle of existence consists of two halves, the first, of Involutionary process; the second of EVolutional process. Man is, today, in the EVolutional half of his long journey back to the Cosmic East;—his Source. The Square, being an angle of 90 degrees or the fourth part of the circle, indicates that Man has proceeded one half of the EVolutional half of his cosmic pilgrimage. The two halves of Man's EVolutional journey are, the Life to Death status, and the Death to Life status, or the Mortal Expression and the Spiritual Expression. These two Expressions are, in a way, interlocking, for the Man enters mortal life from the womb and leaves it at the tomb, but he continues in the Spiritual Expression from the tomb back to the womb for a recurrent life expression or rebirth. So, really, his life cycle is composed of the two general parts.

15 The Square shows us that we are, in Mortal Expression, in the quadrant, or one half of the EVolutional journey Back to the Source. (See diagram) The Square shows the Craftsman his place in Nature and the scheme of evolutionary progress. By the Light this demonstration gives us, we may see what we have already accomplisht and what remains for us to cover. The Square shows us the two squares we have previously passed thru, the one we are now in, and the one which remains before us. Squares, mechanically, indicate perfect alignment with horizontals and perpendiculars, eminent symbols in Masonry, relative to character and individual stamina. Therefore, if we apply the knowledge we have thru the Light our Square gives us, to regulating our actions in such wise that they will be in true alignment with horizontals and perpendiculars of the world at large—our environemnt and its laws, proper customs and ethical values, we shall be making good progress on the constructive Path of Rectitude.



16 Let us look again at the quadrant we occupy in the diagram. From womb to tomb we find divided into four parts of 22½ degrees each, as follows,—Childhood, Youth, Manhood and Old Age. In childhood, we are not responsible for our actions, legally, or, wholly, morally. We are responsible in Youth and Manhood for during these periods, we have sufficient mentality to discriminate between right and wrong and are morally, at least, responsible. In Old Age, again we are practically irresponsible. Our deeds of the past life follow us, sometimes quite disagreeably, but usually we are more or less dependent upon the care and consideration of others.

17 Our Compasses placed, therefore, on the points indicating Youth and Old Age, show us that thru a period of 45 degrees or one half of our Mortal Expression, we are responsible to any extent that makes it most advisable and necessary to circumscribe our desires at a time when the desire-nature is strongest and hardest to control, and to keep our passions in due bound, at the time when, from adolescence to the "change of life" our passions are normally most active and apt to ignore control unless a firm mind is at the helm.

18 It is well, therefore, that Freemasonry terms the Holy Bible, Square and Compasses the Great Lights of Masonry. The Sun, Moon and Master of the Lodge, are lights, in their way, but very much lesser lights. The sun rules the day—only. The Moon rules the night—only. The Master rules the lodge—only. The Holy Bible, Square and Compasses truly rule Man's Mortal Expression thru Day and Night, not in the narrow confines of a physical lodge but in the Greater Lodge of the World in which Man functions for the whole term of his Mortal Expression.

19 The Compasses apply with peculiar appropriatenes to the Soular Man, for they symbolize the control and circumscription of his vital essences at the time when proper conservation of energies is most necessary, to ensure, not only properly constructive active life, but a normally healthy and peaceful advanst age, and ths term "vital essences" applies not only in a psysiological sense, but to man's mental and intellectual energies as well.

20 The Sun rules the day and the Moon rules the Night and, in Masonic symbolism, the Worshipful Master is expected to follow the sequential rhythm and with equal regularity rule and govern his lodge. The lodge however, has, for its three principal officers, the Master and the Senior and Junior Wardens. Each of these three officers correlates with the Sun in an important way. As the Sun rises in the East to open the day, so the Master rises in the East to open his lodge and set his craftsmen at work. As the Sun reaches meridian marking the middle of the working day and a rest period, so the Junior Warden represents the Sun in this manner and calls the craftsmen from labor to refreshment. As the Sun sets in the West at the close of the day, so the Senior Warden represents the solar orb at its setting, in assisting the Worshipful Master in closing his lodge.

21 It is quite proper that the general activity of the lodge should be built around the Sun as a symbol, for the Sun, being the parent orb of our Solar System, creates the beginning, progress and ending, of the period of a craftsman's Day of Activity. The Moon rules the night, and while lodges symbolize their work by a working day, their actual operations, except in some notable instances, are conducted principally at night. Now the Moon, altho a lesser orb and a humble satellite, is a most important factor in the life of earth's humanity, for it, is an establisht fact that the Moon exercises a profound influence upon some types of mentality and further exercises a mark influence physiologically in several different ways, more especially in the monthly rhythm of the female sex. Its influence upon tides, vegetation and meteorological conditions does not require explanation here.

22 The moon does exert an influence upon human mentalism. Brain workers, as a rule, are more prolific of ideas at night than at other times. The Work of the Masonic Lodge, while symbolically active, functions in reality, solely upon the mental and intellectual plane, from which the neofite, if he has learned his lesson well, graduates to the spiritual plane of the mysteries. Incidentally, we still have what are called "Moon Lodges" that work only on certain monthly phases of the Moon. This orb therefore, exerting a markt, altho not at present wholly understood influence upon the human mentalism, is most appropriately a Masonic symbol of lesser merit than the Sun, but of importance to us individually. For if we study those phases of science which take into consideration the nature and qualities of the several phases and aspects of the Moon, we shall understand our individual reaction thereto in a way that will give us a better understanding of ourselves and a greater control over our individual nature and function.

23 In view of the foregoing observations, it will be seen that the Moon is not only a symbol, it is an active factor in the mental life of the craftsman and as it influences in its peculiarly subtle, intangible, invisible way, the life processes going on about us, as can be noted by any careful observer, so the craftsman influences in a peculiarly subtle, intangible, invisible way the lives of those with whom he comes into contact. For the world has been taught to and does expect more of the Mason it does of his non-Masonic compatriots, simply because the Freemason has assumed definite responsibilities and obligations to his fellow men which his non-Masonic brethren have not assumed.

24 The Master of a lodge has a truly difficult position. If he is worthy, he has well earned such Masonic honors as may have come to him. For he must summarize in his own work, all that is symbolized by the Sun in active working functions; he must also summarize all that is symbolized by the Moon in providing the mental activity, the brain work of the lodge. He represents an ancient operative Grand Master who pre-eminently symbolizes WORK spelled large. In the Master of the Lodge, Hand and Brain are supposed to be united to execute the plans laid down on the Trestle Board of the Craft, both in the Lodge and in the Fraternity at large, for every Master represents his lodge at Grand Lodge.

25 The Sun, Moon and the Master of the Lodge do provide a definite Light therefore, to those who are able to discern it. By example, they exhibit a light that should be symbolically applied by each neofite in his individual efforts and experience. Each factor embodies a really wonderful phase of light that can be used in a mental and spiritual sense to lighten the Way Back to the Source, the True East.

26 The Three Representatives of the Lesser Lights are three burning tapers or candles, placed on candlesticks or pedestals and situated East, West and South. In this particular instance, Freemasonry has not been true to its Tradition, for, accommodating itself to the advance of architectural development and "modern improvements", the Craft frequently employs gas-light or electric lights mounted on mock candle tubes. These "look pretty" and are easy to manipulate for the ritualistic requirements of the day, but they do not fulfil the symbolic functions properly.

27 The candles should be of real beeswax, or at least a 50% proportion, which is strict ecclesiastical usage. This is because the bee is the insect peculiarly symbolic of Transmutation. The Great Mystery of Masonry is in the significance of the process of "Raising", which will be treated of in a lesson devoted thereto in this series. Now the bee raises the product of the vegetable kingdom to the status of the animal kingdom. It transmutes a vegetable product into an animal product. It transmutes something of no value, into something of profound value to the human species, for pure honey is the finest food known to human science. It is crystallized sunshine, with all the virtues of the sunshine. The wax of the bee is a necessary factor in the process of making honey. We hope, someday, to see Freemasonry respect this great principle the lodges used to esteem highly.

28 Properly used, the beeswax candles in the lodge room furnish a light that emerges from a product formed from the vital essences of the vegetable and animal kingdoms, a light that comes, as it were, like a link between the lower and the higher. By this light the neofite discerns the Greater Lights. The officers whom the Candles represent, physically bring the neofite to light in due form, but having done so, it remains for the candles to make this light an objective reality. So the lower is used to provide the light by which the higher may be seen and this is a law we find operative thruout Nature's domain.

29 Man first formed his concept of God by looking at the Sun. Celestial light formed the link between. The neofite finds his rule and guide thru life by looking at the Book, but the product of the humble bee is actually and symbolically, the link between that makes it possible. Nature's laws interlock. Always, it is the lower that points us to the higher, simply because, in our blindness we could not recognize the higher even if we saw it, until and unless something on our own plane, something that is akin to us as a vehicle of expression, directs out attention to the higher in terms we can humanly understand, or at least develop concepts thereform.

30 Light is absence of darkness. The man born blind does not know what light is for he has never experienst it. When, by a miracle of surgery, sight is given him, light becomes something new in his experience. He sees clearly. When something that has hitherto presented only one side or aspect that has confounded us and proved to be a seemingly insuperable obstacle to us, shows us the other side—we say we "see it clearly". In other words, light consists, mentally at least, in seeing clearly—both sides of whatever is before us.

31 We may apply this reasoning to life. True spiritual light consists in seeing clearly both sides of life, the human side and the spiritual side. Many people are quite willing to affirm the existence of a spiritual side of life and Freemasonry teaches this spiritual side from every possible angle of its exalted work and allegory. But many of those who affirm the existence of a spiritual side to life do so only because of early training, and general acceptance of the idea, but seldom from a standpoint of personal knowledge. Belief and knowledge are two entirely different things, and the Light that Freemasonry gives is the kind of Light that will enable the neofite to see clearly—both sides—as a matter of knowledge—not mere belief or traditional acceptance of a general theory.

32 In the beginning . . . . the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, Let there be light: and there was light" (Gen. i, 2, 3).

33 There is a little word in this quotation that is often overlookt, like many little but very important words. It is the word "void". It means empty, unoccupied, destitute, space, a vacuum. The earth, being without form and void, was in its nascent state, gaseous, not yet a solid as we understand solids. It was not until after light manifested that our planet became somewhat as we know it today. In other words, light is the beginning of all creative activity.

34 Following the Genesiac account, but in the understanding of modern science, we cannot with the light of reason assume that the Spirit of God moved upon the watery vapor that envelopt the mass ultimately to crystallize into the solidity of our planet, and issued the Great Mandate, "Let there be light", simply to provide illumination for His creation. The mandate had a much greater meaning than that. Between the issuance of the mandate and the first manifestations of material substance out of cosmic root substance or prima materia there were vast time periods! Days and Nights constituting solar manvantaras.

35 Deity did not create our world as a plaything for Himself. When God (Elohim) said, "Let there be light" what He really meant was, "Let the Light of My Divine Mind go forth and Reflect Me in Matter, as Man". The Divine Fatherhood began right then and there. Man is the Son of his Divine Father for Humanity is God thinking Himself into Manifestation, and so all Creation has been and is simply the process and progress of the Divine Mind Emanating itself. Light is Reason. Man is made in the image of his Creator by having a part of that Creator's Reason. Without reason, man would cease to be man and remain simply animal. It is what differentiates the homo from the animal.

36 It is for the reason just stated that the Masonic Master takes care to proclaim that in humble and reverent obedience he issues a command that confers Light upon the neofite before his altar. Early Masonry recognized this truth more vitally, perhaps, than at the present time, for it is inevitable in all human institutions that, with the passing of time, utilitarian concepts shall dim the lustre of original spiritual ideas and values, nevertheless there is an ever increasing number of Masons today, who appreciate the fundamental truths enshrined in Freemasonry and are endeavoring to restore a correct understanding of them to the general fabric of the Fraternity.

37 In Hermetic law there are always two polarities to everything. Everything in Nature is dual essentially. Not only is there the much abused positive and negative, attractive and repulsive, there is the well known material and the much less known and still less understood spiritual. The Light conferd in Freemasonry teaches the neofite who enters the Craft, not for social or business advancement but for enlightenment, to look for the spiritual polarity in everything in his environment. At the very beginning of his Masonic career, he is taught to lay and to build upon the foundations of moral and ethical material, a spiritual structure, and this is strest and emfasized thruout every teaching he receives in the craft.

38 The neofite has it explained to him at the start, that Masonry is a speculative craft, and any Light it may give him is, therefore, the light of the mind or reason, applied perhaps in a way that has never occurd to him before. By this Light he is taught to see in homely instruments the spiritual processes by virtue of which he can make an advance to higher levels, symbolized by the degrees thru which he may subsequently pass.

39 If I may be pardoned for using the tall personal pronoun, I may say at this point that I have always disagreed with Freemasonry in its insistence upon being speculative craft. It is quite certain that building a spiritual structure with spiritual and intellectual material is just as much of an operative proces as the use of bricks and stone. Probably far more so, because what we build from ordinary materials is lamentably impermanent, while that which we build from spiritual material is wonderful and terribly real, permanent, in fact, everlasting.

40 Every Freemason should understand the essential meaning of the word itself. In ancient Egyptian, or, more properly Egypto-Coptic, "phre" meant "Light, while "Massen" (plural of "mes") meant "children". The Freemason was, therefore, anciently a "Child of Light", while Freemasons were "Children of Light". This does mean to imply that in ancient Egypt there were Freemasons as craftsmen just as we know them today, gathered into Lodges. But Egypt had its masons. Some of them were slaves. Others, skild workmen, were free and united in bands. They made themselves known to each other as free in contradistinction to the slaves, by the possession of warrants of skill and attainment and by signs, words and tokens. The architects connected with the Temples, who were a sort of lower grade of the priesthood, were members of these proto-masonic groups.

41 The real meaning of the word Freemason has, however, been preserved to us of today, and it applies just as pertinently to the modern Freemason as it did to his ancient brothers. It is a name to live up to, for if each Freemason could realize that the name he bears signifies that he is a child of light, he would probably be much more careful to "let his light so shine before men that they could see his good works" instead of seeing other phases of character not always to his credit.

42 There is another and still deeper esoterism connected with this theory of Light. Each human being is an Ego, existing and functioning upon spiritual planes, but lodged during mortal incarnation or expression in a physical habitat. The Ego seeks at all times to express externally, but it functions in the physical world only to the extent that it can manipulate the physical envelope, vehicle or body, from a spiritual standpoint and in a spiritual way. Consequently, the life of Right Thought, Right Action and Right Speech is the process by which the Ego spiritualizes the physical instrument to make it more pliable and available for use in higher constructive work.

43 Physically, we see only thru physical eyes, which receive physical light and convey to us only impressions of physical environment. This withholds the Ego from better spiritual sight and vision, because the impressions with which we store our minds are almost completely those of a purely material nature and anything that we may conceive of from a spiritual standpoint is apt to be colored by our ideas and knowledge of the physical environment.

44 Therefore, it is the prisoner within, the Ego, who is really seeking Light. The physical instrument, in, by and of itself, has neither consciousness nor reason. It cannot seek light, because, altho living in physical light and bathed in it, the physical body has no knowledge of it. It responds in a mechanical way to the effects of radiant energy, and physical senses translate the impressions received by the avenues of sense perception. But it remains for the Ego to transmute the impressions received and formed, into spiritual knowledge of the inner spheres of being, and, ordinarily, we furnish the Egos that are ourselves very little in the way of true light.

45 The symbols and teachings of Freemasonry go straight to this very point. They deal with the man within, not with the man outside, or the man whom the world thinks it sees. We are told in the Great Light that in the inner world there is no light of the Sun neither of the Moon or stars, for the Lord God giveth them light. Here we note the phase of Light that it is the purpose and mission, of Freemasonry to give, not material, physical or solar light but mental, intellectual and spiritual Light, that comes from no external source but has its origin within the soul and spirit of Man.

46 True Light is not a matter of the imagination. It is a very powerful reality. Many of the world's richest, surrounded by all the brilliance that physical light can give them, live, nevertheless, in a state of mental darkness that is so depressing that in some instances it brings about dire results. Others, not at all blest with this world's goods, enjoy a mental and spiritual illumination that transforms their immediate environment to an extent that makes them totally oblivious of the details of the environment. No one can know the wonders lockt up in the human mind and the human soul until he has experienst them fully at work and functioning as it is the purpose of true life, well managed and directed, to enable them to function.

47 Freemasonry does not inculcate its Light thru the medium of a creed nor of any system of doctrine. It works thru teaching the neofite to personally apply simple facts and percepts of moral value in a such a way that he develops discrimination, then judgment and finally, acceptance of logical facts. Light dawns within him. The more he sees, the more he desires to see, like when beholding a new and lovely vista, one scans the horizon to see where it ends and how wide its scope may be.

48 In this is a secret strength of Freemasonry. It plants the Seed of Light. Then it lets that seed alone. It does not attempt to force it. It does not harp upon platitudes until that seed is killed by ennui and boredom. Having planted it, the Fraternity lets the seed alone. It grows. As it grows, new visions of life present themselves and the older visions broaden out until they too, seem new.

49 The Freemason who has sincerely tried to live up to the best that he can understand of his Craft, can look back over years of exeprience and feel certain that he has received a light he has not found elsewhere. Light and Life are practically synonymous. One who sees the true Light, lives accordingly, and he lives a life no one, who has not seen the Light, can possibly know. The one who knows life to the full, also cannot fail to have attained some degree of Light as well. The processes of life are those of light and vice versa, Light is essential to Life and Life is essential to Light.

50 Life and Light are immortal, eternal. The Mason who learns enuf of his Masonry to develop within himself some of the Light the Fraternity implants, will lay hold on a knowledge of the eternal verities that will be wonderfully clear because wonderfully free from creedal, doctrinal or dogmatic ball-and-chain attachments to his mind. Life and Light are close allies with Truth. It might not be an exaggeration to affirm that they are phases of Truth, and Truth makes its possessor FREE., and Freedom is one of the characteristics of the real Mason. Not alone must he be free in body, possessing himself; he must be mentally and spiritually free, accepting the dictum of no self-constituted ecclesiastical authority composed of human beings who assume divine prerogatives.

51 The Light of Freemasonry expresses in its notable feature of toleration. There are self-appointed sages in Masonry who attempt to read into the fabric of the Fraternity various forms of anti-ism. Freemasonry is not "anti" anything in this world except oppression and bondage mental or physical. The Light of Freemasonry includes spiritual teachers of every race and nation without officially recognizing any one of them, including the Christian. All that the Fraternity demands is a belief in a Supreme Being, and upon this simple but fertile soil the Fraternity grows men of mental and spiritual power.

52 The Freemason who attains the Light his Craft presents him, does something else, besides. He hears a word behind him, saying, "This is the Way Back to the Source, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left". The prophet's words come true to the Mason who does not rest until he finds out what Light is, and then seeks the Light itself. He does receive a guidance. He can hear the words of guidance. He knows that he is being shown the Way. He hears the command to walk in and he does walk in it.

53 There is no miracle in this. When a Mason attains the Light of Masonry, he has attuned himself to higher vibrations than those who have made no attempt. He is sensitive to influences to which others are impervious. He becomes conscious of a direct and continuous guidance that is ever present, and to which he has but to listen. It is the voice of his brethren who have passed this way before him, and now serve the Craft as guides in the Less Known Country, for the Mason's Obligation does not end at the tomb. This principle of Obligations will form the subject of the next lesson.

54 Mere ritual does not confer the Masonic Light. It simply opens the way for greater opportunities to study Masonry intelligently. The Mason's real knowledge of his Craft will develop only as he digs, and acquires Light in proportion to the effort he makes in his digging. The measure of his expended energy will be the measure of the amount of Light he will receive, —at first. The amount of Light he attains as time passes, will depend upon the use he makes of the Light he first received.

Beloved Companions and students of the Grail

THE COSMIC CHRIST

The modern mind, especially that of today's youth, is turned off rather than dynamized when the word Christ is mentioned. This is due, no doubt, largely to the failings of the established church, which continues to present the Christ as the meek, emasculated "do-gooder" carpenter of Nazareth, and the teachings he left behind as vague exhortations without obvious practical possibilities for changing people and their lives. Nowadays, all kinds of groups and sects claim that their techniques, if applied regularly, will bring demonstrable results. On the other hand, to most young people church services never seem to achieve anything except to induce yawns and boredom. Established religion does not seem to give them something that can be seen to work or to bring peace and fulfillment in the here and now, whereas other approaches such as the Eastern tradition claim they can do all this and more.

CHRIST & THE BIBLE The Order of the Temple, like other bearers of the Western esoteric spiritual tradition, has always taught a completely different version of what the Christ really is. The church has doubly failed in its duty because at this moment (in the 1980's) the current generation is better placed than at any time in our history to appreciate the esoteric presentation of that great cosmic being -- the Christ. The era of space travel will help in enabling the general public to realize that the saga of life in the Cosmos could not begin and end with the speck of dust which we call Earth. Of course, our bit of cosmic dust is of vital importance to us, and as such has rightly to be cherished and loved. On the other hand, this should not oblige us to place medieval blinders on our mental and spiritual eyes.

The purely historical version of what the Christ really was and is must strike anyone who is not literally asleep as being completely inadequate. Given the intellectual development of people in the Palestine of 2000 years ago, how could one have explained television or air travel to them? The Bible relates great spiritual truths, but it was written in the language and concepts of the time. It is up to us to re-examine its teachings within the wider understanding of the general knowledge we have today. We will find that its essential truths are still valid, but looked at from the wider factual perspective of today, its teachings convey to us realizations of vaster significance than they could to the more primitive minds of our forefathers. In the same way, future generations will have a broader concept of the Bible's basic truths than does ours.

> The Bible itself clearly states that the Christ was a being whose life span was not limited to a mere thirty-three years. "...Lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt 28:20). Also "...Before Abraham was, I am." (John 8:58). The Bible further intimates that the Christ existed before the creation of our planet: "And now, O Father, glorify Thou me with Thine own self with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was." (John 17:5). And again, "...for Thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world." (John 17:24). Obviously these words do not refer to a physical person. [The problem encountered by the casual reader of the Gospels is that he does not realize that the words & statements recorded there are spoken by Jesus/Christ on two different levels. There are those spoken from the purely physical or human level of consciousness -- and those spoken from the level of Christ consciousness.]

Today (in the 1980's), it is time to abandon the idea of the crucified Christ, in the way it has been presented by orthodoxy, which has hypnotized men for centuries and kept their minds frozen in the middle ages. The concepts we should associate with the Christ in this modern age are resurrection, life and light -- attributes he brought to this planet. At least some branches of the eastern Orthodox Church have indicated this direction by ending the Divine Liturgy on the joyful affirmation that "Christ is risen." In fact the rites of the Orthodox Church are closer to the source, being happy events and not the sad and sombre affairs which one finds among many denominations. In line with our approach to the Grail, I will limit myself to giving the basic teaching about the Christ as it is taught in the esoteric tradition. I will try to avoid detailed explanations, as once again my purpose is not to stimulate intellectual reflection, but rather to set off a resonance in the hearts and souls of seekers of the true Temple.

All great spiritual traditions teach that the goal of spiritual aspiration is the realization of Unity -- the unity of all things and of all life throughout the entire manifested universe. The state of consciousness in which one realizes the essential unity of all things, while remaining simultaneously aware of the diversity of life, cannot be understood or demonstrated intellectually. It has to be experienced. There is enough documentary evidence available nowadays about people who have temporarily or permanently realized this state of consciousness to indicate that it is not an invention.

THE COSMIC CHRIST Many people have difficulty in accepting the assertion that the three aspects of the Godhead -- the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit -- are but different manifestations of one and the same reality. If certain human beings have managed to realize their oneness with all things and with the sustainer of all life, we should not find it too difficult to conceive of the great source of life and consciousness as manifesting itself with different qualities, at different levels of energies and life impulses, which operate in ways we can identify as fatherlike, sonlike and motherlike. What is so strange about the idea of the Creator canalizing these qualities and energies through a hierarchy of beings, ranging from those whose consciousness spans a whole galaxy all the way down the scale to ordinary John Brown and Mary Smith ... and lower? The Christ was and is a cosmic being of immense power through whom enormous life forces and impulses are transmitted. Each of us human beings at our microscopic level is a transmitter of cosmic forces which are being stepped down for us by higher beings up the scale.

CHRIST & JESUS As was mentioned in the Bible quotations just now, the Christ was involved with our planet from its very creation. The Cosmic Christ is a highly evolved being who accepted the mission to guide the evolution of the Earth to the level determined by Cosmic Intelligence. The Christ is the sum total of all evolution which has taken place within our solar system. His body could be regarded as consisting of vibrations stepped down from the vast powerhouse of the Father or Universal Consciousness, so that it can be withstood and manifested by lower forms of life (including man) which draw sustenance and life from it. Periodically, whenever a new evolutionary impulse was required on the planet, the Cosmic Christ would ensoul certain individuals to various degrees. Although the influence of the Cosmic Christ can be perceived behind the great avatars of the past, the greatest influx if Light, Life and Energy of the Cosmic Christ to be injected into our planet since its creation came through the Nazarene Jesus. In order to better appreciate the mission of the Cosmic Christ, I will make an attempt to summarize a number of complicated ideas:

The process of manifestation involves the creative impulse descending and expressing itself through various levels of life from the most refined to the most material, and then ascending upwards back to its source, taking with it the essence of the experiences gained. In another creative cycle it issues forth again, the process continuing eternally. Each time the creative impulse descends from Unity into manifestation it can express itself in more complicated and interesting life forms because of past experiences in earlier cycles. [You will recognize this principle symbolized in the Martinist Pentacle.]

Without getting involved in the deep waters of metaphysics, one could say that there is a timetable or Divine Plan for the descent and return of the creative impulse. However, because of the existence of autonomy or free will in man, there could be a risk that without occasional help, the timetable might not be completely respected. One side effect of such a cosmic accident could be the freezing of the development of a given life wave for thousands of years.

Prior to the birth of Jesus, the planet had seen the evolutionary impulse descend to its lowest ebb. According to esoteric tradition, the situation was so critical that drastic action was required. Hitherto, the Cosmic Christ had been radiating his influence in the form of light and energy to our planet without physical contact. He was now obliged to bring to earth the vast energies he represented by physical descent into material life. This involved quite some sacrifice ... if a comparison were to be made, it would be as if you were asked to incarnate as a fly to assist the evolution of that species.

THE OVERSHADOWING OF JESUS According to esoteric teachings, the descent of such a vast cosmic force could not be achieved through normal birth. A fully mature human being had to be found whose physical, emotional, mental and spiritual vehicles were sufficiently pure and strong to sustain such a force. Esoteric tradition teaches that consciousness manifests through co-ordinated forms or vehicles of varying degrees of density. In the case of a human being, the physical body is the vehicle which enables him or her to contact the world of matter, which is the densest level of manifestation on this planet. Man has other vehicles which, when developed, enable him to become aware of more subtle levels of existence.

Jesus of Nazareth and his family were members of the Essene brotherhood, as has been said previously. Jesus was trained from birth by the Essenes to carry out the mission of developing his vehicles so that they could be used to manifest the energies of the Cosmic Christ, and during his baptism by John in the river Jordan, the vehicles of Jesus were taken over by the Christ force. The being who emerged from the water became, by symbiosis, Jesus Christ -- God in man -- the first time this had taken place in the planet's history. The Christ knew that in order for him to carry out his mission he had to experience in his borrowed vehicles all the suffering to which human beings are subjected. If you will read the New Testament's account of the Betrayal, the Crucifixion and the Resurrection from this perspective, many things will become clear.

THE SPIRITUALIZATION OF MATTER In the garden of Gethsemane the Christ underwent the terrible ordeal of opening his vehicles to the full impact of all the evil which existed on the planet at that time. This was one of his essential tasks as a saviour of the Divine evolutionary impulse. He had to transmute the negative energies of our planet so that a balance between the forces of matter or devolution, and the positive cosmic forces of spirit or evolution could be attained. Evidently, this act of transmutation did not mean that material expression in terms of desire, motivations, et cetera, was eliminated. This was not the aim; matter was needed for the continuation of evolution on our planet. The task of the Christ was to spiritualize matter in order for it to be an instrument and servant of the spirit.

The Christ then proceeded to set the seal on the act of transformation he had performed on the emotional, mental and spiritual levels of the planet in Gethsemane. He now had to extend this process to the physical itself. He did this by giving up his life on the cross in such a way that his blood, the carrier of his cosmic energies, actually penetrated the physical earth. The fact that his side was pierced by the spear of a Roman soldier was no mere accident. No wonder legend has it that henceforth that particular spear became a spear of power. There are stories that during the Second World War, Nazi leaders tried to find this spear, which they believed to have found its way to Europe. Hitler's followers of course believed that the energy picked up by the spear could be used for their own purposes by those who knew how.

CHRIST'S SUFFERING Giving up his life and blood was not enough for the Christ to accomplish the cosmic mission. After all, men before and after him had sacrificed their lives for spiritual ideals. The Christ had brought more energy to the planet than any other being before him, but for his sacrifice to be really meaningful to Man he had to suffer as a man. Thus, while suspended on the cross, he had to give up the consciousness and divine powers of a solar being and suffer as a man with all the terrible limitations which this implied. He had to endure the suffering of the crucifixion in his very flesh without the reassuring perspective of cosmic consciousness. He also had to undergo the sorrow of being pilloried in matter, helpless and cut off from his links with the Father. The anguish of this state of helplessness is recorded in the eternal words "Eli, Eli lama sabachthani," translated as "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" It is certain that the suffering from being cut off from his links with the heavenly world was more painful to the Christ than the physical crucifixion itself.

WAY OF REDEMPTION ESTABLISHED The way of redemption was thus established for all men, because a Cosmic and Divine Spirit had suffered as a man, and had shown through the resurrection that Man would be able to meet suffering face to face and like the Christ also conquer death. In spite of all this, the sacrifice of the Christ was still not complete. In Matthew 28:20 the Christ declared "...lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world...." The energy of the Christ is still implanted in our planet. The force and consciousness which the Christ had injected into the very particles of our Earth has now been liberated by Man through the spiritualization of matter. Thus this cosmic energy, enriched by experience in physical manifestation, will return to its source when matter is mastered and transcended by Man through living the life taught by the Christ.

All human beings, especially those born to respond to the call of the Temple, have a duty to participate actively in this work of redemption. Every effort by each of us to live a Christ-like life is an easing of the ties which bind this great entity to matter. (Hopefully the I.C.O.M.S., which is the educational wing of an esoteric order, is helping to achieve this.) Esoteric tradition does not claim that every individual unit will have to reach the level of Christ consciousness for the planet to be redeemed. What is required is a certain concentration of "redeemed consciousness" which will pull upwards those additional units which will allow themselves to be raised. This concentration can be arrived at by large numbers of people reaching a certain level or by a smaller number reaching a very high level. There is today in the 1980's a great acceleration of pollution, both of the planet and of men's minds. Unless a sufficient number of people reach the required level quickly, we risk periods of great upheavals, physical, geological, social, and other wise. In other words, the energies of the Christ must be permitted to continue their work of redemption without being unduly hindered by the abnormal density of the current material and mental environment of our planet.

THE SECOND COMING The achievement of the desired level of spiritual integration and consequent redemption of the planet will lead to what the Bible describes as the Second Coming of Christ. This does not mean of course that he will return in a physical body. His Second Coming will be the coming together once again of the energies and consciousness he brought to our planet, and which are at work in all living things. This coming together will be the conscious realization of cosmic consciousness or unity by the required number of individuals.

Each of the important events which marked the life of the Christ is significant on several levels. For example, let us consider the Last Supper. The ceremony of sharing bread & wine had been practiced since the times of Abraham, but since the Christ participated in the Last Supper, a new dimension was brought into the rite. Henceforth, whenever the Eucharist is performed by a priest worthy of the name, the officiant is directly linked to the cosmic force of the Christ. An automatic act of spiritual alchemy then takes place by which a certain degree of Christ force will be manifested, stimulating into activity the Christ potential present in those participating in the rite. If a Mass is performed with awareness by priests and devotees, the effect on the participants of this transmission of Christ energy can sometimes be quite powerful. Certain sensitive people have been known to be moved to the point of tears or even to faint under the impact of this cosmic force. If the Mass were performed today as originally intended, it is likely that many young people would be enabled to touch higher levels of spiritual awareness without having to resort to drugs. From this point of view, it could be said that the drug problem today is partly a reflection of the failure of traditional religion to exercise its real function of putting the faithful in touch with transcendental reality. Many who use drugs to reach "highs", or altered states of consciousness are seeking unconsciously to placate the nostalgia and desire of their souls for Unity with the Divine.

ALCHEMICAL SYMBLOISM The ancients used the word alchemy to describe a particular system of spiritual discipline. In alchemy different constituents of the human psyche or different levels of consciousness were symbolized by certain properties such as mercury, salt, sulphur and lead. The alchemical tradition states that by manipulating the mixture of these substances in certain ways, purification will occur, permitting the realization of cosmic unity (symbolized by gold). In order for the process to work, heat must be applied at a certain stage. To the true alchemist, heat symbolizes effort, sacrifice and suffering. To raise consciousness there has to be effort and sacrifice, and when this reaches a certain level or "temperature," the gold of illumination brought about by the alchemical marriage between our lower and our spiritual selves is obtained.

TAKING ILLEGAL DRUGS The aim of this digression into alchemy is an attempt to underline the spiritual law that there can be no lasting progress without the heat of effort. Those who try to cheat this law by taking drugs frequently end up blowing a fuse, or ra- pidly burn up whatever spiritual capital they might have accumulated. Unless the drug taker allows time for his psychic organism to cool down and recharge itself, the desired "high" can only be recaptured by bigger and bigger doses with the risk of breakdown and death. Much pain and suffering could have been avoided by drug victims and their families if the church had been able to demonstrate to people that there are natural and more satisfying ways of fulfilling those powerful drives which push many to take drugs, ways which leave no place for the boredom, frustration and feelings of hopelessness which lead so many to search for "kicks." Thousands of adolescents could thus have been saved from psychic, moral and physical bankruptcy, and helped instead to discover fulfillment, knowledge and high adventure.

THE PRICE OF PROGRESS From what I have said concerning the alchemical process, it should now be clearer why instead of banishing evil from the world during the agony of Gethsemane, the Christ limited himself to restoring the balance between the positive forces of evolution we have come to call good, and the negative, devolutionary and limiting forces of matter which we call evil. Without opposition and without struggle there is no evolution. It is certain that if the subject of suffering and the importance of effort were understood -- not just intellectually, but realized and accepted -- our sorrows, heartbreaks, physical pain and momentary despair would take on a new perspective, bringing something positive to our lives. Without effort and sacrifice our lives would have no meaning. Imagine for a moment that you needed only to think about anything you wanted or desired to find it there in front of you in a matter of seconds. What a bore life would be. All those who have achieved great things -- artists, musicians, athletes -- come to know the meaning of effort, discipline, sacrifice and suffering. It can be physical suffering for the athlete whose muscles hurt from the effort he has exerted to push himself beyond what he thought were his limits. If he aims at being a champion, his suffering can be psychological as well. He will have to undergo deprivations of all kinds, self-doubt, disappointments and setbacks, sometimes even being abandoned by those he loves because he is not always available. Like an Olympic champion, the spiritual athlete will need among other things to apply dedication, discipline, will, patience, courage, perseverance and acceptance.

THE ROAD TO SUCCESS There is an interesting corollary to all this. Everything we do, even the way we brush our teeth, is important spiritually. To the Cosmic Intelligence any movement is part of the progress we call life. Consequently, brushing one's teeth has the same importance as building a skyscraper or writing a philosophical treatise. The important thing is that the gesture of brushing or the act of building is done to the best of one's ability. There is a perfect way of performing each action in life. This perfect way exists potentially since in the divine mind the creative impulse has already conceived of how all things should be. If we do things well, we approach the archetype for that action, thus enabling that much more of the divine imprint or creative impulse to be realized, contributing thereby to the evolution of our planet and our species.

If we approached all our problems from this point of view, we would eventually end up being successful at whatever we undertook in life, whether spiritual or material. The reason for this is twofold. Firstly, doing a job well will inevitably bring rewards in the ordinary course of things. Secondly, if we act in the spirit being advocated here, the positive forces of life will be obliged to flow with us. This could not be otherwise. The life principle has but one desire, to find the best moulds, channels or agents which will enable it to manifest itself.

THE REASON FOR 'EVIL' For those who ask the question as to why the Creator should allow evil and suffering in the world, reflection on what has been said should help in finding some answers. At our present level of evolution, without so-called evil there would be no suffering, no need for effort, no movement, no development. We would be eternal children, happy in a kind of semi-conscious dream state. This does not mean that one should become a masochist to evolve spiritually. Some unbalanced monks seems to have believed this in medieval times and ended up as madmen for their pains. For reasons best known to the Creator, in our world effort seems to be the element which provides the motive power for growth. One might say that this is scant comfort for someone who has just lost his job, or whose spouse or only child has been killed in an accident. The answer to this is that it is we ourselves who attract suffering because some aspect of our spiritual life needs to grow. The fascinating thing about this phenomenon is that once we accept the suffering as a necessary thing, the circumstances of our lives must change. One suffers because one refuses to accept a painful situation. This suffering or resistance is the alchemical fire or heat which will burn until the life force, finding no further resistance, purifies the psyche and moves on.

COSMIC LAWS IMPERSONAL There is of course another dimension to the problem which, because of its complexity, I can only touch on here. This is the law of cause & effect, which is one of the fundamental principles of esoteric teaching. According to this law, the Creator does not punish human beings for the sins they commit. An impersonal law operates in human affairs, whereby human beings are born and according to how they live their lives, lessons are learnt, or to put it differently, growth not achieved by the soul, will have to be faced as often as necessary until the message is understood and assimilated by the soul. Under this law each soul is given just the lessons it needs; no more, no less. According to this teaching, there is consequently perfect spiritual justice in the world because no one is given more suffering than he or she is due or can bear. Those who commit suicide, for example, are merely exercising their free will in turning aside from a difficult challenge, one which will have to be faced sooner or later, and probably in an even more challenging form, as the soul continues its journey. In any case, whatever the circumstances of one's suffering, whether it concerns a present or past life, the reason is always the same -- resistance to growth.

LIVING THE CHRIST LIFE Earlier on I mentioned that by living a Christ-like life, we will not only advance the raising of our own consciousness, but by so doing also participate in the spiritualization of matter and of the freeing of the global Christ consciousness from material limitations. Living the Christ life means making a conscious effort every moment of every day towards realizing the unity of all life, living fully every minute and trying to do one's tasks to the maximum of one's ability. In trying to achieve this one will progressively and automatically acquire the so-called virtues which are usually associated with goodness and the spiritual life. Further more, as one approaches the state of unity, one becomes aware of the meaning of the word love.

LOVE Love in the sense referred to here, has nothing to do with that syrupy sentimentalism popularized by the movies and romantic literature. The love we mean is a state of consciousness in which one become intensely aware of the dynamic unity of all life, and of the attractive and magnetic character of all that is. This state of consciousness has two aspects, which are in fact two sides of one and the same coin. First is the awareness of the oneness of all life, and second is the dynamic aspect of this realization which will oblige us to express this unity in an active way.

It is evident that it would be impossible for a person waking up to the level of consciousness we are considering, to perform acts or even to think thoughts which we generally classify as evil. Would one cut off one's own arm because it did not make the tennis shot which was intended, or would one continuously harbour thoughts of hate and violence against one's leg because one tripped and fell? In the same way, how could one even think of doing harm to one's fellow beings, to animal life or to the physical environment of the planet, if one realizes in a very conscious way that all men and all things form part of a single unity? When realization of this unity becomes generalized it will automatically bring about a different relationship between man and Nature. This new relationship will facilitate a more effective operation of another fundamental law -- the law of exchange.

THE LAW OF EXCHANGE One manifestation of the law of exchange is that if you give something from the heart without expecting anything in return, you will receive something that you really need, possibly from an unexpected source. If man gives love and respect to plants, animals and his physical environment, it is absolutely certain that there will be fewer 'natural' disasters, more reliable and better crops, less need for pesticides and antibiotics. By the same token, if this law of exchange were allowed to operate in the conditions we are discussing, the economic problems which currently threaten the very structure of our society would disappear. There would be no need for economists to wrestle with complicated theories for organizing the production of goods and services. Man would automatically discover how to produce and obtain all he really needs for his physical, social and spiritual well-being.

It is the modern seeker of the Grail, especially those born with the seal of the temple in their souls, who will have the major responsibility for ensuring the "return" of the Christ. Such people are born with the spiritual capacity to carry out this task. The modern Knight of the Holy Grail does not really need to read books on philosophy, mysticism or occultism to pursue his quest or to serve the cause of the Temple. To live the Christ life the modern Knight does not even have to belong to anything. On the other hand, it would certainly be easier for him to live this life if he joined others working in the same direction. Others will have certain qualities or experience he lacks. In the same way he might be able to give them something they lack. Possibilities for exchange of experience and outlook create a tremendous dynamism which pulls all those who have agreed to work together upwards much faster than if they were going it alone. The inspiration and flowering of gifts which such a cooperation can produce has to be experienced to be believed.

A Templar order is but one approach to providing a framework for like-minded individuals to work together and to live the kind of life which the positive forces of evolution so greatly need. A Templar order is more suited to those who have been born, so to speak, with the Temple "in their blood." Such people are marked by destiny or temperament and are the natural pioneers of the coming age.

I hope this brief account of the Cosmic Christ will answer some of the questions which you and modern seekers of the Grail have been asking. You will surely agree that the suggested approach gives a more hopeful, a lighter and a more joyous dimension to spiritual life, or to life as we live it from day to day. Is it not inspiring to realize that conscious performance of day-to-day duties to the best of one's ability -- to the best of YOUR ability -- will bring both spiritual dimensions and success to your lives? Certainly the concept of the Christ as has been outlined must seem more real to you than the rather pious personality we have all been lead to believe he was. Is it not fantastic to realize that some vibrations of that Being are in our very cells, waiting to be stimulated into activity? Is it not comforting to contemplate that if these vibrations within us are activated, we will be directly helping to redeem our beloved Mother Earth?

Beloved Companions, we now have sufficient foundational information to take up and properly understand the Quest of the Holy Grail as it was enunciated in the story of King Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table.
With this pursuit we shall commence in our next Liber.

OBLIGATIONS

The Esoterism of Obligations, Signs, Words, Tokens; Karmic Bonds

"Except ye see signs . . . ye will not believe". John, 4:48.

THIS old world changes very little in some respects. Humanity always bears the true earmarks of its inherent nature, regardless of age or culture. One of those earmarks is the attitude of skepticism that requires some sort of a sign, before accepting someone or something at face value.

2 The attitude of seeking a sign, which is simply synonymous with Caution, is not be discouraged, for practically it is our natural protection against fraud, treachery or a bestowal of our confidence in the wrong direction. The attitude of caution is imprest quite properly upon the Masonic neofite, right at the start of his fraternal career.

3 Freemasonry is composed of several important ethical features or factors, successfully functioning as an unit. The Drama of Freemasonry, about which an important ceremonial is developt, while far deeper in significance than is ordinarily supposed, is still only one of the factors in the Masonic fabric.

4 The Drama, conceivably, may be forgotten, or relegated to the position of a ritualistic accessory in due time. There is one factor that never becomes somnolent however, and that factor is the Masonic Obligation or series of Obligations. While all the other factors operative in the Lodge are essential and fit nicely into their appointed places in the Work, we must remember that it is essentially the Obligation that makes the Mason, even tho by "ample form", Dispensation or Grand Master's prerogative, the incidental ceremonial be omitted. The Mason's active Masonic career begins and ends with his Obligation.

5 The phraseology of the Obligation, naturally cannot be given. It is not necessary to our study, for every reader who is entitled to do so knows it already. We are to consider just what we have done in assuming the several Obligations that characterize the various degrees in Masonry. As far as the penalties attacht to the Obligations are concerned, we may reasonably ignore them in this lesson, primarily because they deal with the purely physical aspects of punitive measure.

6 We wonder how many of those who have stood before the Altar of Freemasonry and who have then and there assumed the Obligations imposed by the Craft, have had an intelligent understanding of what they were doing? Millions have assumed these Obligations since the Masonic Craft took definite form and became a truly active, tho "speculative" factor in Man's ethical life.

7 At the present time, it is estimated that there are approximately 4,400,000 Masons of legitimate and recognized bodies thruout the world. If some statistician were to estimate the approximate total number of Masons since 1717, we would find a most impressive exhibit of men who have assumed, in all solemnity, Obligations that enlisted them in the Service of Brotherhood, without encroaching upon social, business or religious duties or affiliations.

8 Of those millions who have passed to the Grand Lodge Above, their bodies which stood before the Altar of Freemasonry are dust. The tongues that repeated the words of the Oath are silent. The hands that testified in proper position, the grade and nature of the Obligation, no longer exist. The eyes that saw Light when the Obligation had been assumed, no longer see. Everything that was present at the time the Obligation was given and assumed, has disappeared. The same will be true, in due time, of those now composing our Lodge, and those who shall succeed them when their places require new occupants.

9 Everything that was present when assuming the Obligations has disappeared, but everything that was present is not necessarily gone! Something remains. It is the Man, the Brother, the EGO itself, that remains when all physical vestiges have passed from sight. Freemasonry itself most vigorously proclaims immortality and the sprig of a plant reminds every brother "that there is a spiritual part within us which will survive the grave, and which will never, never die;" therefore we are forst to a most important concession, namely, that this spiritual part, that can never, never die, is the part of us that assumes the Obligation.

10 It is not creditable to the intelligence of any Masonic Brother to assume that it is his physical self or body, rather, that assumes the Obligation. No mere mass of blood, bone and tissue has any such discriminative power or intelligence, or the ability to carry it out even should our psychology reveal some hithereto unknown corner or angle of our mental processes to us.

11 The physical part of the Mason will, in due time, disintegrate and be no more seen among men or brethren. Therefore the Obligations do not pertain to the physical. Also, the penalties justly intended to make a markt impression upon the permanent memory of each neofite, have little real value, for they pertain solely to the physical plane, which is transient, ephemeral and illusory.

12 It is the Ego, the Real Man, who assumes the Obligation of Freemasonry. The Real Man is eternal. Therefore, anything that the Real Man assumes thru Oath or Obligations, is binding upon him thru all eternity, until and unless he discharges, in the meantime, all the provisions of the Obligations he has assumed. An Oath or Obligation is binding and effective until its provisions have been satisfied to the exact letter and degree implied or specified. Death provides no escape, for by the very teachings of the Fraternity, death is simply the beautiful gateway to a life more abundant and more active, where vastly more will be expected of us than is expected from us here.

13 The penalties incurd by wilful or even unintentional disregard or infraction of any real Obligation we may have assumed are not escapt or evaded by death. They simply become more keenly, consciously and poignantly realized. Punishment or discipline is always of the Spirit, not the body. In our ignorant ideas as to what constitutes true punishment, we inflict pain or suffering upon the body, and human history has many black pages made up of the tortures, devised with fiendish ingenuity, to cause suffering to a human body. Analysis will show that torture, in any form, is not prompted so much by true desires to correct, as by a sadistic enjoyment of causing pain as a satisfaction for wrongs real or fancied.

14 The true idea back of all correction, is the chastening of the Spirit of Man which will enable or stimulate him to exercise a greater degree of control over his outward manifestations or physical actions, including speech. Every Mason knows what it means to inflict torture to . . . the body, in order to remind the spirit of important truths. And yet—we can endure far more actual torture in our minds, than we can withstand physically.

15 The penalties relative to our Obligations, assumed before the Craft, are more or less allegorical, for their archaic construction shows them to have been incorporated at a time when concepts of correction had not approximated the spiritual ideals that are permeating our intellectual fabric today. But these penalties operate in our minds as they would in our bodies if actually carried into effect.

16 The physical body, returning to the dust whence it was taken, can escape any humanly devised penalties, but the Mind of Man goes on and on forever, with the Spirit that is Man. The Mind of Man, therefore, can never escape any penalties it has incurd, consciously or unconsciously. Freemasonry teaches, first and foremost, the active participation in the erection of a Temple, not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. If we are to be the "living stones" in that building, the structure will, therefore, be of just the quality and character as the materials of which it is composed.

17 The bliss of heaven is not to be gained by evading the responsibilities of earth, and this feature is imprest upon us by a study of the esoterism of the Obligations and the penalties that attach to them. When we take our Obligation, we have taken it for eternity. We are never releast from it, for it devolves responsibilities upon us toward our brethren, and it does not specify that our brethren must be in the mortal world. If eternity is real, if the Spirit of Man is immortal, if the higher spheres are realms of intensely conscious activity, if the mind and senses are quickened in the spiritual life far beyond their status on the mortal life, then our responsibilities toward our Brethren increase a hundredfold after death. There is no escape. The Ego assumes the Obligation and the Ego is immortal and as life does not end,, responsibilities of the higher order do not and cannot end.

18 The only release from an Oath or an Obligation is in its fulfiment to the very letter. But some Obligations there are, which can never be entirely fulfild or discharged, for by their nature they are continously operative. The Masonic Obligations are on this order. Does this cause depresssion? Does it convey a feeling that, somehow, one has bound one's self down to something oppressive? My brother, if such a thought occurs, put it aside. Let us be thankful that the Masonic Obligations are of this permanent nature, for it means that there is, in the mortal world of human affairs, an institution with moral obligations that extend, not only thru the present, but thru the unending future as well.

19 It is just such permanent, enduring, immutable moral factors, operative in the present which soon becomes the past, and the future which soon becomes the present, eternally, immortally, in the ever-present NOW in cosmic time and space, that are the mainsprings of progres, stimuli to advancing culture, unassailable foes to mental peonage and reactionism and champions of that freedom which is born of truth. The Masonic Obligations are just such permanent factors for continuous progress.

20 Like a beautiful diamond ring, in which the stone is small compared with the massive gold body in which, for protection and background, the gem is set, the essence or diamond value of each Masonic Obligation is contained in relatively few simple lines, protected and given a background of textual embellishment calculated to act as prolog, introduction, argument, finale climax and epilog. The real mental meat is slight. This means that what we actually obligate ourselves to do, is, after all, comparatively simple. Masonry does not require the impossible. It is not a school for archangels. It is a school of discipline for red blooded men, and such men are the only kind that will make any headway in the Craft.

21 Atheists, infidels, irreligious libertines and imbeciles can not take the Masonic Obligations, not that Freemasonry does not concede to all the individual right of belief in religious matters, but that the overwhelming evidence of all Creation about us is eloquent testimony of the Presence of Supreme Law, Supreme Reason, Supreme Intelligence, call it God or by any other name one pleases. Those types of minds who cannot see, yet having eye, nor hear the sublime harmonics of nature tho gifted with seeming ears, may be moral men but not the type of living stones Masonry seeks to build into its eternal structure. And this is because the structure of Masonry is to be eternal, while the sub, ab, or un-normal type of mind is not eternal. In due time, it will change as light comes to it in spite of itself.

22 We prove our assumption of the Obligations by the possession and demonstration of certain signs, grips or tokens and the proper utterance of specific words. Yet words and tokens are likewise signs of a certain type. The uninitiated sometimes poke fun at their Masonic friends by terming the signs, the "Masonic wig-wag". Well and good. The wig-wag is the common name for the signal system in the navies of the world and it has proved to be tremendously effective and convenient. Therefore, the Mason take the jibe as a compliment.

23 The individual human body is an animated mass of signs. To the doctor, the position in which a man stands, shows him certain physical defects, it may be. If he leans to the right certain organs or glands are indicated. Leaning to the left, brings other organs into consideration. Closed eyes, erect posture, and then—unconscious swaying right or left, backwards or forwards, shows other physical conditions. Reflexes, reactions of the muscular parts, ability to extend hands and arms in certain ways, each and all, show physical conditions that are revelations of the secret condition of the man before him.

24 Our physical postures show our breeding—or—lack of it. Our physical carriage shows our stamina, character, constitution and pride—or lack of one or all of them. Our speech betrays us; it may the voice of an angel or the braying of an ass, and sometimes the ass seems to have been a most prolific animal. Angel voices are heard with seeming difficulty, the speech of man shows whether he is manly, vigorous, passive, negative or effeminate, and a blind man can get into the habit and faculty of reading character unerringly from the human voice.

25 Mankind uses his hands, involuntarily, to express, emfasize or accentuate his speech. The aborigines use their hands this way as well as the more excitable Latin races. And all races even to the colder-blooded northerners, use their hands and arms to some extend as accessories of speech.

26 Even the veriest tyro can easily distinguish in the movements of the human hands and arms, between the artificial and the natural. The stagey movements of those who have attended schools of oratory, elocution or acting; the postures of the products of "finishing schools" and the professional effects of members of pulpit, bar and class-room are well known and easily detected. The free, frank, natural and much more graceful movements of the untutored speaker may not have the finesse, but they have far more effect in conviction than the cultivated actions that do not always fit the spirit of the speech.

27 Freemasonry, having to do essentially with the natural man, was quick to see in man this embodiment of a series of natural signs. So the Fraternity selected those movements that naturally and without artificiality exprest the prinicples of fidelity, honor, integrity, fraternity, witness and attestation before Deity, in the easiest and simplest manner. The signs of a Masons are nothing essentially new. They are not a series of gymnastic exercises evolved for purposes of mystification. Naturally, we cannot describe the signs and it is not necessary to do so, for it is of importance only to call the Mason's attention to the fact that, in his sign language, he is expressing a series of simple nature movements that are as old as his species. What may have prompted them in the far off primeval ages we may never know.

28 In giving the signs of the Craft under the proper circumstances, the Mason is simply repeating and reaffirming in graphic manner the essential provisions of the Obligations he has assumed and the salient points that make him a Mason. But more than that, which every brother will readily understand, he is recapitulating the principal evolutionary process thru which he, and his species, have passed. Has it ever occurd to my Masonic friends, that the sign language of the Mason recapitulates his movements from the arboreal type of his existence to his present status as a "child of light" or a product of increasing and progressive culture? Yet such is the case.

29 In the case of Masonic grips or tokens, a still more intimate principle of fraternal brotherhood is brot forth. It is a feature little realized and probably never consciously practist today, but amongst the ancient arcane bodies of which proto-Masonry was a part, where the esoteric features were kept vitally alive, the contact of the two hands of greeting brethren was for the purpose of establishing a bond of vital union, a belated symbol of the tribal customs of blood brotherhood. Esoterists well know what is meant by the human aura. Finger tips held in close juxtaposition against a dark background will sometimes show even to the untrained, the odic force emanating from the points, as electrical currents are well known to proceed more freely from pointed conductors.

30 The joining of hands, in a previously agreed upon manner, was a way of effecting actual unity between the brothers. There was a union of the essential force emanating from each. In this union there was no loss, for each gave to the other. Every one of us well knows the sensations we obtain when joining hands with another. We get the effect of strength or weakness, loyalty or treachery, honesty or subtlety, genuineness or falsity. All this comes from the current we receive from the one we are greeting. Many of us form our first impressions of another solely thru his hand shake and seldom is our first impression found, on later analysis, to be inconsistent.

31 Medical men who have kept abreast of their science well know the anesthetic effects of pressure upon certain joints and knuckles of the hand. Local anesthesia in every part of the body can be produced by the proper pressure at the proper joints. This has been tried experimentally to good effect, enuf to prove the premise, and no doubt the future will see this point developt to a useful extent among practitioners. But all this was well known to several ancient arcane bodies. It is a complete system amongst the Priests of Pali today and has been for centuries. So the proper token is not merely a form of handshake; properly understood it has actual physical and even therapeutic effects, and conveys an evidence of initiation into the ancient wisdom to those who can recognize it.

32 The "Words" used in Freemasonry are explained to the neofite at the time they are conferd or communicated, in a way that makes a moral impression but little more. The words used in the symbolic degrees allude to historical circumstances and have moral, physical and even metaphysical significance but not necessarily an esoteric significance. The Words used in the degrees subsequent to the symbolic lodge, are interesting when interpreted in the light of the Kabbalah. Few, even of these Words have an individual esoterism, and even the "substitute" Word which is now given to neofites is merely a substitute.

33 Now, while the Words of Freemasonry cannot be said to have important individual esoteric features that will stand the acid test of critical investigation, they do, collectively assume an esoteric value of high importance. For the Words belong properly, to the general group of signs, which are divided into four prinicpal classes, the Guttural, Pectoral, Manual and Pedal. The Words pertain to the Guttural division. The entire four groups or divisions constitute specific points upon which the neofite enters the Craft and to them are allocated the four cardinal virtues, Fortitude, Prudence, Temperance, and Justice.

34 The principal esoterism developt in the use of the Words, consists in their articulation as an evidence of initiation into the Craft. This is more than appears on the surface. Man functions not only in the physical world, he also functions sub-consciously in the Etheric and Astral worlds. Beyond this, the Mind of Man reaches into greater divisions of the inner spheres of consciousness which are called the Regions of Concrete and Abstract Thought. An idea, inspiration or concept may be developt as the product of our mental activity in the plane of Abstract Thought, but it is of no practical value until we "objectify" it by a process of concretion or solidification. Then the idea or ideal comes into active manifestation.

35 Those who can reach mentally into the Region of Abstract Thought without ever being able to demonstrate or manifest their ideals or ideas are they whom we term "hopelessly impractical idealists". They cannot demonstrate their ideas themselves nor can they convey them convincingly to others in a way that brings about their acceptance and practical utilization.

36 The exoteric nature of the Words used in Freemasonry is such, that they express, when used, the neofite's possession of certain salient facts imprest upon him at the time he had a given word communicated to him. When he in turn gives the word, for identification, examination or lodge routine, he concretes his knowledge received by the process of articulation. The moment a brother gives a certain word in any degree, that moment the circumstances under which it was given recur to him mentally. As long as he retains the Word, he retains the facts for which the Word stands. When we find confusion in the Craft and a brother without the word, it will usually be found that he has long been a chronic non-attendant at his lodge and that his general knowledge of things Masonic, is, to say the least, hazy in the extreme.

37 A great part of the Masonic Tradition is built around and about a Word of wondrous mystic power, commonly called the Master's Word or the "Creative Word". Much has been written about it, all of it serious, but a great deal that is purely speculative and bordering so clearly upon the impossible as to cause many to doubt if such a Word ever truly existed. Masonry avers that this Word has been lost, and communicates the manner in which it is assumed to have been lost.

38 It is quite possible that between the Three Ancient operative Grand Masters of Masonry there may have been a Word possest by them collectively, that was lost under circumstances received in the Tradition, but it is hardly probably that any such Word possest the almost magical properties ascribed to it. It is quite possible that a substitute for this Word may have been formulated and handed down thru arcane bodies and Craft Guilds in the later-ancient, medieval times to the present. But one thing stands in the way of this hypothesis, namely that the so-called substitute Word itself has undergone several changes as can be observed by any student of lexicology. So the Word used as a "Substitute" at present cannot be logically accepted as other than a symbol of the past. Nevertheless, even the Substitute Word has an esoterism that is peculiarly well founded.

39 It is a singular fact that if we take the word "Masonry" itself, we find it conceals a wonderful truth. In spite of its non-sectarian character, Freemasonry was instituted by mystics among whom esoterism was of a decidedly Christian nature. Study the word MASONRY. Divide it—MA (SON) RY and we find revealed "Mary's Son" by transliteration, the object of study of the early Founders of the Institution in the modern period and the SUMMUM BONUM of the medieval Brethren who were, exclusively, Christian mystics, of an high order.

40 Many Craftsmen used to believe that a significant part of the Work communicated to them meant "Marrow in the Bone". It is an absurdity that has been utterly rejected by progressive scholarship. In the phrase by which it used to be conveyed, the syllable "Mah" is the Hebrew equivalent for "What", and this alone, as a clue, shows the fallacy of previous interpretations.

41 Among several ancient peoples, we find words were in use which exprest a knowledge of nature force—dimly perhaps—which we are just discovering and putting to use in this late day. There was a time when, like little children who seem to have some fleeting remembrance of an ante-birth status, humanity held over some concepts derived at a time when consciousness and reason were first dawning, and the spiritual consciousness had not become subordinate to the physical consciousness. Several etymological vestiges of such a time have been preserved.

42 The Osirian legend, in which Isis sought the lost secret name of Osiris so as to be able to restore lost powers is often advanst by Masonic writers as explanatory of the so-called Master's Word, but this is only, in our opinion, a recourse to mythos to explain what is, at best, a speculative assumption.

43 It seems to the writer that Mackey has come much nearer to the facts in his concept of the Lost Word. He writes "Now, this it is, precisely, that constitutes the myth of the Lost Word and the search for it. No matter what was the word, no matter how it was lost, nor why a substitute was provided, nor when nor where it was recovered. These are all points of subsidiary importance, necessary, it is true, for knowing the legendary history, but not necessary for understanding the symbolism. The only term of the myth that is to be regarded in the study of its interpretation, is the abstract idea of a word that was lost and afterwards recovered."

44 "The WORD, therefore, I conceive to be the symbol of Divine Truth; and all its modifications—the loss, substitution, and the recovery —are but component parts of the mythical symbol which represents a search after Truth. In a general sense, the Word itself being then the symbol of Divine Truth, the narrative of its loss and the search for its recovery becomes a mythical symbol of the decay and loss of true religion among the ancient nations at and after the dispersion on the plains of Shinar, and of the attempts of the wise men, the philosofers, and priests, to find and retain it in their secret mysteries and initiations.

45 "But there is a special or individual, as well as a general interpretation, and in this special or individual interpretation the Word, with its accompanying myth of a loss, a substitute, and a recovery, becomes a symbol of the personal progress of a candidate from his first initiation to the completition of his course, when he receives a full development of the mysteries"

46 Brother Mackey comes close to the facts. In every human being, the Three Ancient Operative Grand Masters still work. They are far more ancient than any Grand Masters of the Myth for they trace their origin back to the Supreme Architect Himself. They are, the Ego, the Conscious and the Sub-Conscious Minds. The Ego is an Emanation of the Divine Father. The Mind of Man is a mundane reflection of the Divine Mind. In the Divine Father, Mind is in unity with the Divine Spirit. In Man, Mind is not in unity with the Emanation of Divine Spirit that is Man. There is division, separateness. In the Unity of the Divine Mind the Word,—TRUTH—went crashing thru our part of cosmos and a solar system came into being, that Word incarnate or made flesh—MAN. Now the same power is in Man, but there is not unity in him, so the Divine Element in Man and the Mind of Man are not at-one.

47 Where there is unity there is strength. Where there is separateness, there also is weakness. Man uses less than a third of his brain at the present time. Obviously he cannot expect to achieve the same results that he could if he utilized all his cerebral power. He cannot use all his power for that power inheres in the unity of Ego, Conscious and Subconscious forces. We cannot direct the beating of our hearts. That organ is governed by the Sub-conscious. Yet our heart also responds to the effect of our conscious mentalism, in the impacts it receives thru sense perception, for instance, things that anger us and increase our pulse. Fear freezes us. Joy overwhelms us. Anticipation stimulates us. But each instance evidences division of labor and most of our emotions are far from being under the complete control of the Ego or Real Man they should be.

48 In the beginning was the Word. The Word was with God. We understand and concede both statements. The Word was God. That is a bit harder to understand. The same was in the beginning with God. That brings us back a bit nearer to a definite conception. The Word was made flesh. We believe it because we have traditionally been taught to believe it, but few really understand it. Now the Word was God, and God is LOVE, Real love, not sensuous gratification or sexual urge, is TRUTH, because truth is immutable, creative, constructive, progressive, eternal, and all Love is also immutable, creative, constructive, progressive and eternal. The two words are essentially synonymous.

49 When Man lost the true concept of love in exchange for sense gratification he lost the True Creative Word, for Love is the most creative force in cosmos. Only Divine Love could have brot Man into being. When Man lost true Love, he lost Truth, for he accepted a substitute for love and substitutes are not the true originals, or, in most cases, even true copies of the original.

50 Truth and Love being synonymous and both being creative, when Man recovers Truth he will also have recovered Love and then that which was lost will be found. Man will not recover either truth or love in their real sense until and unless he also attains complete unity or at-one-ment with the Divine right within himself.

51 Man will recover unity within himself when he has brot his conscious and sub-conscious powers of mentalism into united co-operation with the domination of the Ego that is his Real Self. Freemasonry teaches Man, step by step, to KNOW Himself, Man will learn how to develop that interior unity that will correlate all his potential forces and energies into one active Personality, expressing the Word that is made flesh, but which outlives the flesh in which it is incarnate.

52 The Freemason who studies all that the Fraternity can give him (if he seeks for it), will learn that working on the invisible spiritual Temple not made with hands is just as much an organic, objective work as tho he were using stone or marble, for the process of attaining the necessary at-one-ment to enable him to recover that which was lost, is also a physiological process. Cell after cell must tumble into line in higher vibratory influence and power and lift Man from his present status to a higher plane of perception and cognizance.

53 Freemasonry carefully explains that the Substitute Word is given only until the wisdom of future generations shall recover it from the rubbish with which the Temple is encumbered. The rubbish referd to is the rubbish of undigested ideas, preconceived concepts, impractical ideals, traditions covered with cobwebs, archaic nations long since obsolete, sectarian attitudes, and, above all, the false ideals of separateness which makes each human being isolate himself from his kind to a degree never intended by nature.

54 "Except ye see signs . . . ye will not believe". Except we see signs, we will not believe. The Freemason who is living the Masonic life, exemplifying the sublime principles taught by the Craft, will exhibit signs as he progresses that even the non-Mason will readily recognize and understand. It is because of the Obligations he has assumed and the signs he is expected to show, not those of a wig-wag but of a progressive, ethical, moral, constructive life on a broad plane of tolerance with no trace of sectarian bigotry or narrowness, that the world looks concentratedly upon the Freemason, watching to see how well each Brother will reflect honor on the Craft that gives him an exalted position in the community, for the respect for Freemasonry is well nigh universal, even amongst those who may not be members of it.

55 When we meet a brother who unmistakably shows evidence of exhibiting the proper signs of Masonic progress, then we may be quite certain that we are meeting one who is well along on the Path Back to the Source; who is bringing to a focus within himself the triune forces that are essentially creative and wholly truthful in their nature and character; in every sense acquiring a realization of the Word which was Lost but which is being recovered.

56 Freemasonry numbers many sages in its roll of illustrious initiates, not always those whose voices have been heard most vigorously in the Lodge Room, but whose example, whose works and teachings have reflected honor upon the Craft and have quietly led others to the Light they themselves have discovered. To such, tho they have not proclaimed it, as no true initiate would do, may we not with reason ascribe the recovery of at least a fair concept of the Word which was lost? May we not assume that they have entered into a consciousness of Obligations well fulfild, of signs properly delivered, or words correctly given, that will entitle them to pass the Tyler of the Supreme Grand Lodge, celestial?

57 Freemasonry has had its martyrs to Obligations, who have not faltered at stake or dungeon and who have attested with their lives the moral force and power inherent in the stability and merit of the teachings they have received.

THE DOUBLE-HEADED EAGLE—THE SUPREME SYMBOL.

Here is depicted the Supreme Hierophant, Master of the double Holy Empire of the superior and the inferior universes. The ancient emblem of equilibrium consisted of an androgynous body surmounted by two heads, one male and the other female, wearing a single imperial crown. That being alone is perfect in which all opposites are reconciled, and this state of perfection is appropriately typified by the two heads of equal dignity. Hence the double-headed eagle is reserved as the emblem of completion, for it signifies the Philosopher's Stone, the ultimate soul condition, and that absolute and transcendent perfection which arises only from the fullest unfoldment of the latent potentialities within the individual. Philosophically, the thirty-third degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite represents the innermost sanctuary of Masonic mysticism. If the double-headed eagle, the symbol of that sublime degree, were endowed with the power of speech, it would say

"Only he may wear me in whom there is no guile: in whom all passion has been transmuted into compassion, all natural ignorance into divine wisdom, all selfishness into selflessness; for I am an ancient and a sacred emblem of all greatness, all perfection, and all truth. I represent a spiritual condition, a mental attitude, a physical state attained only by the elect of earth. I am the symbol of the illumined and transfigured soul which has been born again and has approached the throne of Divinity. I am the symbol of the gatekeeper, for with one face I behold the radiant countenance of my Creator and with the other the expanse of the universe which He has fashioned. Upon my strong pinions of intuition and reason men have ascended to a position betwixt heaven and earth. He in whom I spread my wings is more than a man yet less than a god, therefore he is a god-man. I clutch between my talons the flaming cherubimic sword, the flaming spirit-fire with which the miracle of my existence was wrought. I am the symbol of the Initiator who through the ages carries Ganymedes into the presence of the gods

The Grail is the spring of life, the vessel containing the promise of immortality. From it drinks the stag, symbol of the soul's thirst for God. A cornucopia, the horn of plenty and of physical renewal, is the link between the longing for immortality and the reconciliation of man's dual nature (symbolized by the two peacocks drinking from the higher spiritual cup) in the resurrection. Beloved and Respected Companions

We resume our study of the Knights Templar, continuing from lecture #204.

THE EXOTERIC AND ESOTERIC MISSION OF THE TEMPLARS

The mission of the Templars was two-fold. Firstly, to inject a certain spiritual idealism into the world of their time through a number of concrete actions. Secondly, to ensure the continuity of the Spiritual Tradition of the Temple by seeking out the sacred esoteric heritage of mankind wherever it was to be found, to reunite it, and to present to a certain spiritual elite a synthesis of the Tradition adapted to the Western mentality of the Middle Ages.

Some of their activities were secret, while others were carried out publicly. Some actions, although done openly, had more profound effects on the contemporary world than were apparent. For example, St. Bernard stimulated public awareness of the Feminine Principle by promoting the adoration of the Mother of Christ in the Church, and by encouraging the Templars to dedicate chapels, cathedrals and churches to the Virgin Mary. In the harsh, cruel and male-dominated world of the Middle Ages, the activation of the feminine archetype was extremely important.

The esoteric tradition to which the Templars had access taught them that the universe was conditioned by the laws of sound, colour, number, weight and measure. They knew how to apply these laws so that symbols could be used to develop a closer relationship between man and spiritual realities.

NUMBER According to the Templar tradition, number was the principle of being on three levels of manifestation, i.e. Divine, Man and Nature. Number in this sense was the expression of the cosmic design and an element of the mysterious harmony which exists in the universe. This vision of things can be traced back to the priests of ancient Egypt and was developed by Pythagoras in the fifth century BC. In the Middle Ages, the science of numbers played an important part in the spiritual research carried out by the Christian mystics, the Jewish Kabalists and the Moslem Sufis.

The numbers 3 and 9 had a particular significance for the Templars and these numbers were always present in their buildings and churches. The ancients have always deemed the number 3 to be the most sacred of all numbers. According to Plato it was the perfect symbol of the Creator because it contained the properties of the first two numbers. Aristotle added the reflection that 3 contains in itself a beginning, a middle and an end. Gold had strong symbolic meaning for the Templars: to them it symbolized the radiance of the spirit after purification. They therefore associated gold with the number 3, the symbol of the perfect manifestation of unity.

THE NUMBERS THREE & NINE For the Templars the number 3 also symbolized the mystery of the Trinity. Here we find the symbol of the triangle which is 3 as well. The triangle appears in most of the patterns and designs left behind by the Order. The number 3 was always present in the daily life of the Templars: their rite of reception was repeated 3 times; the aspirant had to present himself ritually 3 times; the aspirant took 3 vows; the Templar ate meat 3 times a week; a Knight had 3 horses; he had to accept to fight against odds of 3 to 1, etc.

The number 3 when multiplied by itself gives 9, the number of completion. The number 9 is the only number which when multiplied by any other number always reproduces itself when the digits of the product are added together. (Try it! i.e. 9x5 = 45; 4+5 = 9). Like 3 the number 9 has always been considered a sacred number in esoteric tradition. It is not surprising that the founders of the first Templar Order were 9, that the Templars took vows after a waiting period of 9 years, and that the Order was divided into 9 provinces. During their trials they chose 9 members of the Order to defend them, and 9 of them stood before the Council of Vienne when the Order was abolished. Thus the number 9 was with the Templars at the beginning and with them at the end.

The Templars believed that if certain geometrical forms and mathematical relationships were employed in the construction and design of buildings, these would have important spiritual effects on the people who visited them. Sacred buildings such as chapels, cathedrals and churches were places where man aspired to approach the Divine. It was not surprising that the Templars were particularly interested in church construction and, as we shall see later, this explains their concern for the welfare of the builders and artisans who could erect and decorate buildings according to their specifications. The Templars also made sure that certain symbols were included in the decoration of buildings in order to pass on esoteric knowledge for future generations of initiates. The Templars applied themselves to the business of cathedral building with such industry that over a thousand chapels and churches were constructed with their support in a little under two hundred years.

St. Bernard, the spiritual father of the Order of the Knights Templar, was a passionate believer in the power of specially constructed forms to bring a realization of the Divine to man. He was of course the driving force behind the Templar's monumental building program which even reflected his tastes in architecture. St. Bernard favoured a rather simple and austere style, probably in reaction to the rich and ostentatious one preferred by the Benedictines of Cluny.

THE TEMPLARS & THE ARABS The Templars had negotiated with the Arabs for permission for their church builders to do construction work in the region of Damascus, Jerusalem, St. Jean d'Acre and Cyprus. The Arabs promised not to molest them so long as they did not bear arms. The builders were placed under the general authority of a Knight named Guy de Lusignan. These builders, known as Compagnons, were men who had spent many years experimenting in order to develop what later became known as Gothic architecture. In their day-to-day tasks the builders owed obedience to de Lusignan but in their spiritual life they owed allegiance to the Templars.

THE RULE OF HOLY DUTY According to Raoul Vergez, a Frenchman and modern Compagnon, some time around 1145 the Templars and the leaders of the Compagnons formalized the Rule known as the "Saint Devoir" or the Rule of the Holy Duty, which governed the manner and spirit in which the latter practised the art of construction, and established the relationship between Templars and Compagnons. Under this arrangement the Templars committed themselves to protect the Compagnons, while the latter agreed to place their skills at the disposal of the Templars. There was probably also an undertaking by the Compagnons to keep secret such teachings about the esoteric aspects of construction as the Templars would pass on to them.

This was a good arrangement for the Compagnons -- without the protection of the Templars, they would have been obliged to place themselves under vassalage to some ruler who would not particularly respect their customs. (These included the traditional working journey around France which every builder had to perform before he was recognized as a Compagnon). Under the Templars they enjoyed a better status than the serfs and could travel freely under Templar protection.

THE COMPAGNONS In a way, the Compagnons de Saint Devoir were the first organized movement in the world of the working man. During the period of Templar ascendancy, there were also other craftsmen and artisans who did not belong to the Saint Devoir, but, wishing to escape from the rigid structure of their feudal lords, pledged oaths of vassalage to the Templars.

One of the techniques which the Compagnons learned from the Templars was the art of choosing the place where a church should be located. The fathers of the Church had long suspected that certain earth currents were useful in enabling contact to be made with cosmic currents, and that the junction of these two types of forces created conditions which were propitious to prayer and mystical contemplation. There is a story that this knowledge was acquired by the Church from a man called Stanislas, who had inherited a family gift which enabled him to identify telluric currents. It is said that Stanislas established that sacred buildings should always be placed so that they could benefit from telluric or earth currents which flow from north to south. It seems that it is also helpful to place a church altar above an underground stream.

MASTER BUILDERS The Compagnons developed a particular approach to their trade. Their art was dedicated not only to the creation of beautiful buildings, but to the construction of forms which were also functional, by glorifying the Creator and forging a living link with Him. The trade of constructing sacred buildings was initiatic in the sense that the master builders kept secret their art and passed on their secret skills only by word of mouth. Certain instructions, especially those associated with the application of spiritual laws in the craft, were transmitted only after the apprentice had passed certain ordeals to test aspects of his character. It was these master builders, the Compagnons, inspired by their Templar masters, who worked certain hermetic keys into the geometry and forms they created to decorate cathedrals and churches.

The island of Cyprus has important associations with the Compagnons. It was here that the results of their research into building techniques were first tested. In 1195 Guy de Lusignan was recognized as King of Cyprus. It was natural, because of his earlier associations with these master builders of the Saint Devoir, that he became their champion on the island. He actively helped those who had survived expulsion from the Holy Land or could not make a living in France. It was here in Cyprus under the protection of de Lusignan that the followers of the Saint Devoir probably lived their most exciting days in an atmosphere where manual work was elevated by spiritual discipline and Templar ideas of chivalry. Unfortunately, with the exception of a few esoteric circles, the influence of Compagnonage in the spiritual odyssey of Western civilization has virtually disappeared.

Beloved seekers of the Grail

THE QUEST OF THE HOLY GRAIL

Lecture 1 : The beginning

A. E. Waite, a respected writer who wrote extensively, (especially on freemasonry,) remarked that he had received many initiations and could say with confidence that the initiatic tradition held no deeper or more central tradition than that of the Holy Grail. "I affirm", he said, "on the authority of research ... and on that which I have seen of the Mysteries ... that the term of the quest in those secret Secret Orders which are good and just and holy ... is the term of the Grail Quest."

Similarly, our M.M.:

> "What is the Initiate's goal?"
> The conquest of the Adventurous Castle.
> What does he hope to find in the Adventurous Castle?
> The Sacred Vase..."

Yet the words are obscure and seem to remove one veil only to confront us with another. It would be understandable if you turned away with the thought that here is another example of the esotericist's love of mystification and high-sounding words for their own sake and of the confusion of mist for mysticism. While this would be understandable, it would also be unfortunate and it shall be the intention of these lectures to clarify what can be clarified and to discover what significance the Holy Grail can have for us. At the end of our study I shall hope to have shown that the words of Waite and the M.M. are precisely correct -- and that the Grail represents the goal of the spiritual life not only as one possible symbol among many, but as a unique reality towards which everything else leads. I will try to present this extremely complex material as simply as possible, without distortion, and I shall try to focus on what may be practical and useful in the spiritual life which is our daily quest.

The Grail is the Chalice of the Last Supper in which, according to some accounts, "the precious blood of our Saviour was gathered on the day when He was crucified to redeem mankind from Hell." (Perlesvaus). "The point at which the myth of the Grail begins, holds in its first appearance the most important account of all," writes Charles Williams, a novelist, poet and Christian magus whose words are worth quoting at some length here. "No invention can come near it; no fabulous imagination excel it. All the greatest mythical details are only there to hint at the thing which happens; that which in the knowledge of Christendom is the unifying act, perilous and perpetual, universal and individual. That origin took place in Jerusalem ... Its record is in the Gospels ... 'And as they were eating he (Jesus) took bread, and when he had blessed it, he brake it, and gave it to them and said: Take ye, this is my body, and he took a cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them; and they all drank of it. And he said to them, 'This is my blood of the covenant, which is shed for many. Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it anew in the Kingdom of God.' This is the first mention of that Cup which in its progress through the imagination of Europe was to absorb into itself so many cauldrons ... and vessels of magic."

"Here," as one text reads, "begins the Book of the Holy Grail, Here begin the terrors, Here begin the miracles." Here at the Last Supper. And so an understanding of the Christian Eucharist is necessary at the very start of our quest, and indeed we shall discover that the quest draws us towards the heart of the Eucharist. This should be almost too obvious to require saying, yet there are those who miss it. Just as there were Knights in King Arthur's time who, as we shall see, set out on the quest in the wrong way, so even now there are some who say they are on the quest who really do not believe that the Grail is anything more than a personal dream, an idealization of the self. And that, then, is all they will find. But the Grail is real and "no invention can come near it; no fabulous imagination excel it." So what then, is the meaning of the Eucharist, the Last Supper?

In a few words, which cannot substitute for further study, meditation and above all experience, God -- in the person of the God-Man Jesus Christ -- gave himself for the life of the world (so fulfilling the mysterious words of the ancient Heraclitus that "gods and men live each other's lives and die each other's deaths"). The whole life of Jesus Christ was a giving to the world of a share in the Divine Life by his experience as God, of human life with all its sorrows and joys and finally its very depth of despair and death ... all of this was experienced by God, in Christ, so that our human life might be united to the Divine Life and we might share, as humans, in the Divinity. He went, as it were all the way down -- to the limit of materiality, of darkness and of death -- to bring us all the way up into the sharing of His Resurrection. The two became one: Divine and Human, Above and Below. The union of humanity with Divinity in shared death and rebirth to eternal life which is symbolically promised in all those old stories of dying and rising gods of Attis and of Osiris, is now made real once and for all on all levels of all the worlds, in the Cross and Resurrection which are both represented and communicated to us in the Eucharist. Jesus took bread and wine, the basic food and drink which sustain physical life, and made them the vessels of the Divine and supernatural life which is poured out into the world in Sacrifice and gathered up in Resurrection. "Receive ye the Body of Christ, taste ye of the immortal fountain of Life!" as an ancient Eucharistic hymn invites. In the Eucharist the worlds are united, bread and wine to the Life of God, and my (and your) daily life to the life of Eternity. The Grail is the vessel of that union, but so too is the poorest chalice in the smallest church where the Supper is celebrated. We will later try to trace the relation of the individual quest for the Holy Grail with the same individual's experience of the common Eucharist, but for now we start as we must with the Grail at Jerusalem at the table of the Last Supper and with the realization that it unites the worlds.

> "... and then he knew that everybody, all the people ... gone, living and unborn, stood in some instant of life and death at the place of the Grail ... the possible and the impossible, the real and the aspiration, the depth and the height -- that was what it was, the reconciliation of all these, not in an instant of time but in all time, everywhere and always the action of this reconciliation that was the true work of God and man ... and with that, as he answered 'Amen', a ... golden light broke from the Grail like the rising of the sun." S. A. Laubenthal Excalibur.

If we start with some comprehension of this vision, and of the Eucharist, we will not be confused as we go on to pass, as we must in following the Grail, between history and legend, and between the esoteric and the exoteric, for here is the resolution of these things and of all things.

Beloved Companions and Seekers of the Grail!

THE QUEST OF THE HOLY GRAIL

Lecture two : Kingdom

In the twelfth century, the story of the Grail began to fascinate the minds of peoples who dwelt around the perimeter of the Mediterranean Sea, especially to the north. We may date it specifically to the appearance of Chretien de Troye's Percival in 1150, and the reign of King Arthur -- where all the story tellers focused their interest -- which was in the sixth century in Britain. How did they get the Grail from the room of the Last Supper in Jerusalem in the first century ... to England some 500 years later?

The stories are complex and we will summarize, leaving aside a number of points -- some of which we will pick up later. The history of the Grail is, in all accounts, first of all linked with Joseph of Arimathea, a wealthy man who became a disciple of Christ and who cared for Jesus' body after the crucifixion, placing it in his own tomb. It is said Joseph caught some of Christ's blood in the chalice of the Last Supper with which he had been entrusted. After the Resurrection, Joseph, being suspected of having stolen the body, is imprisoned for forty-two years during which time he is kept alive and comforted by the Grail which Christ miraculously brings to him. Christ also instructs him, after his release, to establish a "table" of the Grail. This he does and on it his brother-in-law Brons places a fish beside the Chalice and so from that time the Guardians of the Grail have the title of Fisher King. At this table only the righteous can sit and at one seat no one can safely sit, in memory of the seat of Judas, until the son of the son of Brons.

"All who hear him spoken of will call him the Rich Fisher because of the fish he caught ... and just as the world moves ... so too must (the Keeper of the Grail and his people) move to the west." (Robert de Baron). And so Joseph and Brons and their people went to the west. According to one account they and their descendents established the second table of the Grail at Muntsalvach, Mount Salvation, in Europe where the Grail is guarded by an order of knights. But according to what we may feel is the central line of the tradition, the Grail is brought to Britain. Joseph and his party land there at Glastonbury, and the Grail and the table of the Fisher King are guarded at the mysterious castle of Carbonek. In the time when Arthur ruled Britain from Camelot, it is King Pelles who is Guardian at Carbonek.

This in brief is the story. The first thing we might consider is the kingdom of the Grail King. Of what land is he King? If Arthur is the ruler of Britain as a whole, then of what is Pelles ruler?

The answer is that he is king on a higher and spiritual level where kingship and priesthood are united, lord of an inner land of reality of which the outer world is but a shadow. So we read in Genesis 14 of the mysterious king Melchisedek who meets Abraham and of whom the Gnostic Apostle Paul writes:

> "This Melchisedek, King of Salem, priest of God Most High ... is, as his title denotes, king of justice and also king of Peace; who is without ... origin ... this Melchisedek dwells as priest in perpetuality."

We note also that the priesthood of Melchisedek consisted in the offering of bread and wine.

The idea of a sort of "inner" kingship of the world is developed also esoteric and somewhat eccentric (involving for example a system of tunnels under the oceans), lines by Saint Yves d'Alvreydre in Mission de l'Indie and later by Ferdinand Ossendowski in connection with the imagined city of Agarttha. However, perhaps the clearest explanation of the "inner kingdom" is in the work of Plato, whom all Hermeticists should recognize as master and unequalled teacher, and then in that of the contemporary English writer C. S. Lewis. Plato, having developed his ideal city in the Republic answers the objection:

> "I think it can be found nowhere on earth".
> "Well, said I, perhaps there is a pattern of it laid up in heaven for him who wishes to contemplate it and by so beholding to constitute himself its citizen."

C. S. Lewis states in his children's story The Last Battle, that "our own world, England and all, is only a shadow or copy of something in the Real World..." and "(there is a) Real England, an England within England ... and in that inner England no good thing is destroyed." He goes on to say that all the "Real lands" are like connected spurs of a central mountain. Again, in That Hideous Strength Lewis writes of the fellowship around a modern Fisher King who is ruler of the "Real" England, or Logres, as opposed to the outer world of factories, newspapers and so on. Each land contains that which is good, and hence Real and Eternal, and that which is not. Similarly we might speak of an essential, inner, America which has its roots in the Eternal world, and of the outer America. To the "inner kingdom" belongs everything, and every action, which is good and beautiful and just.

Now what we learn from Melchisedek, on the one hand, and the Fisher King of Carbonek, on the other, ... is that every Real Land, which is to say the inner heart of every land, is nourished and sustained by the Grail ... which is to say, to go back to our previous work, by the Eucharist in which the worlds are harmonized, for the Grail is a particular presence of the Eucharist. The Real Lands of the Grail King, are those which will remain when the world, as we know it, passes away, and this leads to consideration of the two ways in which the future, and end, of human victory may be conceived from the point of view of the Grail.

The first is by a sort of alchemical process of transformation in which the whole of humanity is transformed as, as a beginning, the Grail Kings were maintained and transformed into more than material life by the Grail and the Blood of Christ. In this vision, the Blood of Christ which falls into the earth by the cross symbolizes -- and indeed is -- the Divine Life which enters into and gradually transforms the world. This view, we note, fits well with, but does not require, a belief in transmigration of souls. It also fits well with, and perhaps requires, a certain optimism about the progress of history, -- of the outer as well as the inner kingdoms -- of Britain as well as of Logres.

The second view that we might take, looking out from the tower of Carbonek, is of a Real World -- of which we might say the axis runs from Jerusalem to Carbonek -- mysteriously coming to a fullness at which point the apparent, but ultimately unworthy of reality, outer world and history, will fade away and separate into Reality, that which is unreal losing forever its subsistence.

"And the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll."
Isaiah 34:4 (similarly Revelation 6:14)

Or T. S. Eliot:

"With a hollow rumble of wings with a movement of darkness on darkness
... the distant panorama and the imposing facade are being rolled away."

We may prefer one view to the other, (this speaker inclines to the second,) but this is not the important thing. The important thing is to come to a vision of the "Real Lands", of the lands of the Fisher King, and to a realization of how they, and we, are nourished by the Grail. In our next lecture we will try to enter those Lands a little further.

CIRCUMAMBULATIONS

"They shall march every one on his ways, and they shall not break their ranks" —Joel, 2:7.

CIRCUMAMBULATION forms a very considerable and a very important part of Masonic ceremonial. It is not without specific purpose therefore. It demonstrates the ability to move forward in a correct attitude of positivity. It demonstrates the solidity and determined purpose of the progressive career the newly made Mason intends to exhibit. It is also emblematical and symbolic of united purpose of thought and action, generating a vibratory power that can produce phenomenal results, even as Joshua is said to have marcht his men seven times around the city of Jericho, following seven priests blowing seven trumpets of rams' horns.

2 Circumambulation or marching about the boundaries of the Lodge, symbolizes the ancient customs of marching which formed a conspicuous part of the ceremonials of the Samothracians, Dionysians, and Mithraics, as well as of many other notable arcane bodies of antiquity. The symbolic perpetuation of the custom in modern lodge rooms is necessarily limited and serves the purpose of enabling the neofite to be properly identified at the principal points of light in the lodge.

3 The ceremonial marching in the lodge furthermore signifies the esoteric journey the neofite makes in traveling in the proper direction in search of Light masonically.

4 Among the ancients, circumambulation usually took the form of a thrice repeated procession about the altar. It was the dextrovorsum of the Romans and the Deaseal of the Druids. It is noteworthy that, among Greeks, Hindus, Druids, and Celts, this circumambulatory journey followed the Path of the Sun, in fact, the neofites were obliged to repeat the formula, "I follow the Path of the Sun" in many rituals, fragments of which have come down to us.

5 In Freemasonry, as explained previously, the neofite does not follow the Path of the Sun in direct order of progression but in the reverse, signifying EVolutionary process on the Path Back to the Source. In our modern Work, circumambulation makes it possible for the neofite to be halted at stated points and caused to react to pertinent questions that prove his progress and test his qualifications to make further advances.

6 In all investigations possible, it develops that circumambulation has always been associated with some form of Sun-worship, and even in Freemasonry, which is, properly, the conservator of many of the Lesser Mysteries of antiquity, it is not entirely dissociated from this ancient significance, for the neofite is journeying back to the Light whence he came and which he had, symbolically and actually, lost. Considering the prominence of the Sun as a symbolism of the Masonic East, it will be seen that circumambulation has, therefore, a direct allusion to the solar orb and the ideals born of its serious meditation.

7 Circumambulation signifies the journey thru life in more ways than one. It would be quite absurd to inform the neofite that he is setting forth upon a symbolic journey if he were not required to leave his seat. The physical action required in the circumambulatory process therefore impresses a definite note of reality upon the neofite at a time when he, psychologically, is receptive and sensitive to lessons illustrated by grafic ceremonial.

8 It is this psychological factor, probably, that makes the modern use of circumambulation effective and valuable in initiatory rites. The neofite feels that, altho the action may be seemingly simple, he can see in it something definite. At least he is making action of a positive character in the pursuance of the goal that is set before him. He is made to feel by such action that he is contributing a personal reception of and participation in the principles that are being inculcated at the time.

9 In the consecration of a church, at the laying of a cornerstone, in the blessing of an altar, circumambulation is an important factor in the ceremonial, taken, no doubt from the words of the Psalmist (Psl. 26:6), "I will wash mine hands in innocence: so will I compass thine altar, O Lord:" This custom of circumambulating the altar is an integral part of the Greek and Eastern Church rites today, at the celebration of the Holy Liturgy. The washing of hands continues another ancient custom, that of bodily ablutions before undertaking the ceremonial circumambulation. So we may conclude that the idea of purification has also been and probably is associated with this particular part of the Masonic ceremonies today. It is one of the things that have been lost sight of in the passing of time, but the significance nevertheless remains.

10 The process and custom of circumambulation, both ancient and modern, is conducted under circumstances that make it impossible for any deception to be practist by the neofite, if he were so minded. It is the Man himself who thus appears, in habiliments other than those in which he is accustomed to appear. This makes fraud impossible and also symbolizes to the neofite his comparatively helpless condition, a condition wherein he is at the mercy of his judges and witnesses.

11 The process of circumambulation teaches the neofite two important lessons. When he begins his first circumambulation, he cannot see where he is going. He undertakes it in a state of blindness. This teaches him his blind condition, his groping in the darkness like a traveler lost in his way. He must have confidence in the unseen guide who attends him.

12 Thru life, each human being makes a part of his progress in a similar state of darkness and ignorance. He must have confidence in the superior wisdom of those who are appointed to guide and protect him in his helpless condition. This is the state of infancy, running well into youth. At the time of adolescence, he attains his mental majority and is able to begin some progress not altogether in blindness, but still, the strength of uncontrold passions and desires is apt to be detrimental, so legal restrictions are imposed until he comes of full age.

13 Similarly, in the ceremonial, after completing part of his journey in blindness, the neofite attains some Light and is then in a position to make some progress but still with an attendant, to see that he keeps within the proper bounds and does not go astray. Not until he attains the status of a Master Craftsman is he FREE in the full sense of the word. Until then, as apprentice and fellow-craft he is under guidance. So too, in human life, even tho one may have set out early in life, he is still under authority until he has finisht his proper instruction and is able to receive Master's wages by attaining an independent position in life and becoming free to work out his own designs upon the Trestle Board of Destiny.

14 In connection with the ceremony of circumambulation, the cable tow forms an important part of the work. Considered by some as merely a symbol to remind the neofite that he can be prevented from further progress up to a certain point should he prove unworthy, the cable tow has a much greater significance. It is a symbol of the umbilicus, which is severed only when the new human being is completely born into the light of day. Masonically, the umbilicus symbolizes the birth of the neofite into the Light of the Order, after he attains certain points of progress in the Craft.

15 The cable tow is however used in each degree. Therefore it must have a significance that extends further than the first birth. It does have such a significance. For in each human being there is an invisible tie, called the silver cord, which, during life, unites the different vehicles that make up the composite creature called Man. It is only at death, when Man is born into the celestial Light that the silver cord is broken (Eccles. 12:6). This feature is exemplified Masonically in the neofite's experience and the final release from the cable tow symbolizes his death to worldly matters and his birth in the Spirit, ready to be raised into the Light supernal.

16 As the Masonic initiate looks backward upon his career since his initiation, passing and raising, he can readily recognize the several incidents thru which he has passed that bring home to him most forcibly the salient points in his career in the world at large. In his spiritual progress which should be co-incident with his Masonic progress, he is reminded of the many ties which may have prevented him at times taking steps he afterwards discovered to be inimical to his welfare or that of those dependent upon him for support and protection. When the proper time arrived, he remembers that he was freed from such ties, not always just when he desired or expected it, but inevitably when he had attained a status that justified it.

17 We are reminded of an ancient prayer in the English Prayer Book, archaic in its construction but quite effective when understood. It begins, "Prevent us, O Lord, in all our doings and further us with thy continual help". The word "prevent" seems ambiguous in a prayer, but when we understand it to mean prevent us in all our doings from making untoward mistakes, guarding and guiding us, we become immediately reconciled and would not have it altered. This same idea of prevention is incorporated in the symbolism of the cable tow.

18 This factor of the preventive measure introduced by the cable tow assures us of the intention of Masonry to prevent us as far as possible from making untoward mistakes in our ignorance and blindness and it gives us a sense of security if we keep in mind the prevention that is ever exerted in our behalf by the Great Architect whom the Craft seeks to serve as its Sovereign Grand Master and Ruler.

19 As the neofite progresses in his circumambulation, he is halted at certain points by proper officers who cause him to identify himself and to satisfy them he is in possession of the requisite qualifications to proceed further. Do we not experience the same thing in our life in the world? Are we not halted at times, more or less regularly by those who are in authority to do so, and caused to give them satisfactory evidence of our qualifications to proceed onward in our way? I think that if we are honest with ourselves, we shall find that all thru our life we have had to satisfy such demands. Masonry simply reconstructs in model or miniature, the life we have to lead in the world of affairs. We must prove ourselves, step by step, before we can go onward. We must show evidence of having learned certain lessons satisfactorily before we are entrusted with greater responsibilities. All human life is a process of being initiated into responsibility, which does not decrease but which increases as we develop the wisdom to attend to it.

20 Whenever he is halted, the neofite must show signs that he is in possession of the necessary qualifications to make further progress. In life, whenever we are halted, vexatiously sometimes, we feel that we are being held up unnecessarily, we too must show signs that we are in possession of the necesary qualifications to entitle us to proceed onward. The signs in the lodge room and the signs in the world are singularly alike in many important respects. They consist of the horizontal of perfect squareness and honesty and the perpendiculars of the upright life and upright morality.

21 In the army and navy, men are compeld to walk uprightly in their carriage. This is enforst with such strictness that one can tell army or naval officers years afterward when, even in old age, they are characterized by the commandingly upright posture. In Masonic ceremonial, once in his career, the neofite is stood erect and commanded ever to walk and act in a similar manner and his subsequent Masonic career is markt or should be, by that uprightness that he has once assumed. In his circumanbulations, this upright carriage is a factor. No one can sneak thru Freemasonry. All Masonic progress must be made uprightly and in full view of the attending brethren.

22 This is a principle that cannot be strest too vigorously, for it marks the Masonic character thru life. The true Mason will be found ever acting uprightly, on the square, not for advertising purposes as some mistaken brethren have, at times attempted, but for the sake of the inherent principle involved. Once this becomes stampt indelibly in and upon a brother he cannot well fail to remember it thru life.

23 We are circumambulating thru life, marching before our fellow men. It may not be in parade with a brass band accompaniment. It is usually in a silent, seemingly unseen and unnotist manner. Yet we are seen, and from time to time we are halted by unexpected circumstances and in unexpected ways. If we cannot make the right answers, somehow, we do not seem able to proceed. And if such a dilemma occurs, we have to wait until we are invested with the proper qualifications. This is illustrated in our Masonic journeys or circumambulations. They teach us valuable lessons if we apply them properly. If we see in the circumambulations only a walk around the lodge we have learned very little. If we carry away the memory of that journey and seek to find its application in every day life, we shall have profited by our experience in the lodge and that is just what the lodge is for, to teach us how to walk uprightly.

24 The character of a man may be read in his carriage as he proceeds in his circumambulations. The erect posture, uplifted chin, not in defiance, but in the consciousness of inherent strength, marks the true Mason who may be counted upon to exemplify in his everyday secular life, the best teachings of the Fraternity. The slouch can be expected, with equal confidence, to go thru his Masonry in a slouchy manner, touching only the high spots here and there but never probing deep beneath the surface. The neofite who marches with a weakly smile shows the inevitable signs of weakness that will manifest sooner or later in many ways. The positive forward step of the man keenly alert, predicates the brother who may be expected to make good in the Craft in a progressive way. The carefully walking brother who takes each step with a serious meditating mien, indicates the one who later on, will seek to learn more about the Craft from a philosofical standpoint. He will become a good exemplar of the tenets of the Fraternity.

25 In the circumambulation, a man shows just what he really is. On the street, at home or in social circles where he feels himself to be an accepted fixture, he does not need to make a special effort. In the lodge, the neofite knows instinctively that he is on exhibition, and usually he seeks to put the best foot forward. If he is doing so unnaturally, he quickly betrays himself. If he does so naturally, he shows with equal clearness his qualifications for the work he is assuming.

26 Walking reveals the Real Man in many ways. Physical defects may be pardoned or charitably overlookt by the brethren if the Real Man presented to view is acceptable in a spiritual sense. When a man is before his brethren in a critical manner, the innate tendencies that constitute his spiritual composition soon become evident to any trained observer of human nature. The step of a man is frequently the measure of his energy, character, individuality and temperament. It is something to which he is so accustomed, that he cannot well simulate for the moment, something foreign to his nature. The coward, the sneak, the brute, the scholar, the pedant, the business man, the clerk, the professional men, each have their characteristic gait, and this gait is evident in the circumambulation. Then the hyena, the fox, the pig, the bull, the faithful dog and the wise old owl all show the atavisms that they have bequeatht to Man in a distinctive way.

27 The ceremony of circumambulation was associated in many early rites, with the idea of expiation. Curiously enuf, the idea seems first to have developt in connection with punitive measures, for among some eastern peoples we find that prisoners were condemned to march continually for an appointed period, around the central enclosure of the prison. Later, this physical activity was put to good use, in compelling the prisoners to push long handles while walking. These handles fitted a sort of central capstan and was used to operate the grinding stones in milling .

28 Bread has always been associated with practically every religious rite known to man. In a sacramental manner, it has been used as a symbol of life or the sustenance of life, in which the presence of the god was incorporated. So, the production of flour, for the purpose of making the bread, in due time became a sacramental process, and special prayers were offered as the grinding began. The prisoners who performed the task were assumed to acquire considerable merit by being the ones to produce the habitat of the god, and thus, before long, it became a post of honor which was sought by many, to circumambulate the moving mill-stones.

29 A religious rite once instituted, takes a strong grasp on popular opinion and becomes sacrosanct to a remarkable degree. The Christian ritualism, never founded by Christ, is made of Greek, Roman and Asiatic elements, each and all of which have a remote antiquity back of them, and still serve most useful purposes to those whose emotions are reacht thru ritual more easily. It is remarkable that, regardless of the particular religion that uses it, a given form or custom seems to perform the same service just as acceptably. It shows that ritualistic rites are quite adapted to serve as carriers or conveyors of spiritual pabulum, once the interpretion with which it may be locally "charged" is made clear to all to whom it shall come.

30 A faint shadow of this expiatory principle may inhere in the Masonic circumambulation, by virtue of the fact that thru it, the neofite is taught that no worthy ideal or goal is attainable without the expenditure of useful labor and physical effort to some degree. The circumambulation does not entail any notable degree of hardship, it is true, but, at a time when the neofite is psychologically sensitive to a more than normal degree, it has its effect mentally and spiritually, and the slight physical effort does cause him to feel that even tho it be merely a part of the ritualism, he is, nevertheles, "earning his degree" which is an eminently proper state of mind.

31 In the Synagogue in the Wilderness and in the more pretentious Temple at Jerusalem, the priests "walkt before God". It was religious custom. They circumambulated the Shekinah. It was a walk of circumspection. When the neofite begins his circumambulation, it is the beginning of a journey, for him, into the unknown. We are told in Eccle. 2:14, that the "fool walketh in darkness". The neofite also walks in darkness, to have it imprest upon him that the wisdom of this world is foolishness in the sight of God (1*Cor.* 3:19), but by the Divine Light he can walk thru darkness (Job, 29:3). When he has come thru the darkness, his feet delivered from falling, he walks before God in the light of the living (Psl. 56:13), and, in clear Light, he learns the truth of (Prov. 13:20) the saying, "He that walketh with wise men shall be wise".

32 It is not to be expected that the neofite will understand all these factors to be associated in the esoterism of circumambulation at the time he performs it. Naturally, one cannot be informed on something of which one is ignorant. Initiation compels the candidate to meet a group of circumstances which serve as tests in moments of unpreparedness. But initiation of the right sort confers upon each candidate, a group of principles which it is expected that candidate will afterwards seek to investigate from the new standpoint and vantage ground of privileged information he has attained.

33 Circumambulation teaches the candidate, we may say above all, to go forward, in the quest of that for which he is, presumably, seeking. If the candidate, as unfortunately many do, assumes Masonic ceremonial merely as a stepping stone to social, fraternal or other considerations, he will gain only what he is seeking and probably attains less of that than he expects. He does not deserve more, for he is approaching Freemasonry in direct opposition to the well defined tenets of the Craft and is, in a way, dishonest with himself and the Fraternity he is entering. He may progress officially in the Craft, but, we have amongst us more than one exalted official whose acquisition of Masonic Light is fully exprest in the personal conclusions that Esoterism or "occultism in Masonry is all bunk." Sometimes their scholastic opinions are not so softly and tactfully exprest.

34 As we walk in the lodge, so does Freemasonry expect its sons to walk in the world outside, for the Mason does not cease to be such when he leaves the lodge room. Once a Mason always a Mason is an old saying, and the true Brother proves himself to be such even more by his normal, natural actions and attitude outside the lodge than he does by his affected attitude within it. If, in Masonry, properly divided, we find "Mary's Son", it means simply that we have a positive, masculine organization, devoted to manly, energetic, progressive unfoldment of the individual, along the lines set forth ages ago by the Son of Mary, not in any sectarian sense, but purely in the individual sense. This means as much to the Jewish members of the Craft as to the Christian, for the Son of Mary was a Jew, born of a Jewish mother, and he has but reflected glory upon the Jewish race even as an historical character devoid of any sectarian note. In Freemasonry Jewish and Christian ethics unite.

35 The last sentence may strike the average Mason as singular. Is it singular? Israel means, "A fighter for God". Technically then, all fighters for God are real Israelites. Christ means, broadly interpreted, the "good one" and Christians or Chrestians, as they were anciently called, were "the good ones". The good Jew is therefore just as much a real Christian, as the real Christian is a true Israelite, or "fighter for God". Think this over, brethren, and see what may be accomplisht thru the lodge, that has seemed impossible according to the ethics of the outer world. Truly, this may be the application of the Masonic principle of the true Level and Square.

36 In this ceremonial circumambulation, the neofite traverses the three cardinal points of the lodge under symbolic circumstances. West, South and East, he meets specific challenges that require of him adequate proof of his status. Part of the time he has a faithful brother to speak for him. There comes a time when he is required to speak for himself without prompting. To the esoterist, there is a solemnity apparent in this procedure which is not ordinarily felt by others in the lodge. While we normally function in a physical world, nevertheless we are also, but usually unconsciously, functioning in spirtual worlds at the same time, worlds etheric and astral. Whatever we do in the physical world, constructs its counterpart as an imperishable archetype in the inner spiritual worlds.

37 When, therefore, we make a journey thru circumambulation on the physical plane as represented by the lodge, we are, at the same time, making a pilgrimage on the spiritual planes. What is more, altho our physical efforts may, and unfortunately are, usually soon forgotten, the pilgrimage into the spiritual planes remains a concrete fact. We are influenst all thru our lives by acts we have committed, mayhap in the early years of them. Possibly and probably we have forgotten most of them. But others have not. We often hear it said of a brother, "He is having a hard time living down his youth". It expresses a salient fact. As we walk in our youth and younger years, so shall we be obliged to walk in our later years to a modified extent.

38 Now, as we walk in the lodge, so shall we be influenst long after we have left the lodge room, if the lessons we have been taught have made any definite impression upon us at all. The impression has been made upon our inner or sub-consciousness, even tho it be absent from our normal or walking consciousness, and from this truth arises the struggle we frequently feel between our normal desires and something that seems to pull and tug at us otherwise.

39 By our ceremonial circumambulation, we have made a registry upon the inner worlds of being. We have placed ourselves irrevocably on record there and karmic responsibility will hold us to the performance of what we have assumed. Our pilgrimage into the holy of holies, while not apparent to ordinary vision, is none the less real, none the less effective. As we walk, so shall our advance be. If we walk, crab-like, stilted, crampt, or halting, so will our progress be in equal measure. If we circumambulate vigorously, confidently, courageously and positively, those characteristics will be reflected in our every life in the world outside the lodge, and do not forget, brother, that the lodge symbolizes the world by its conformation.

40 The answers we have given as, at times, we were halted in our circumambulations, are likewise registered in the spiritual worlds. We have it on the assurance of one of the writers of Scripture that we are encompast about with a great cloud of witnesses (Heb. 12:1), and from this, we may realize that the answers we have given to our earthly brethren are heard and noted by our spiritual brethren, who are able to follow our movements at times when many of them, in fact, most of them, are concealed from the brethren of the lodge visible.

41 If Freemasons would only keep this concept of the lodge visible and the Lodge Invisible, the mortal brethren and the immortal brethren, uppermost in their minds in things Masonic, it would lift the Fraternity even higher above its present exalted status, for materialism, like a canker, can creep into any institution composed exclusively of human beings. We say exclusively advisedly, for it is common practice for us to feel that after the funeral service our brethren are departed. The use of this word departed is a mistake in Masonry. It ought to be expunged from all Masonic literature. Our brethren are not departed. They are with us more vitally than ever. They are making their individual circumambulations in the spiritual worlds, no longer partially but now wholly, and that brings them even nearer to us.

42 The words of Job (Job, 22:14) are most apropos here: "Thick clouds are a covering to him, that seeth not; and he walketh in the circuit of heaven". To the brother who goes to the Higher Lodge unprepared, thick clouds are a covering to him, that he seeth not, for his ignorance still blinds him, nevertheless, he walketh in the circuit of heaven,—the circuit of heaven—the circumambulation of the Celestial Lodge.

43 We cannot esteem this simple ceremonial of circumabulation too highly. Back of it is an antiquity that is vast indeed. Back of it is a mass principle of the highest order of merit, thru which our brethren in ages past have sought to express their deepest convictions of a moral nature. Back of it is an esoterism that reaches deeply into the individual every day life of the Masonic brother wheresoever he may be at the time. Back of the simple procedure is the true expression of the Real Man, the True Mason, which cannot be camouflaged by any affected gait, method or attitude. Back of it lies the deep principle of Masonic Universalism, for the greatest and mightiest of earth have been compelled humbly to walk before their brethren upon entering the Plane of Masonic Equality, and none have found it derogatory to their dignity to do so.

44 In some of the simplest things in life, man expresses his inner nature best. This is true of the simple matter of circumambulation. In it and at the time of it, Man shows himself to be whatsoever he really is. It is one of the times in his life when he stands neither in the barbarism of nudity nor the veneer of conventional garb. His whole appearance is carefully calculated to divest him of everything that could possibly call attention to aught but the man and neofite himself. He feels somewhat lost without that to which he is ordinarily accustomed. Then to be compeld to circumabulate in such a condition reduces any possible false pride to its proper level.

45 As we walk in the lodge, so should we walk in the world. As Mackay calls attention, "On this subject, the Old Charges of 1722 are explicit.—'You shall be cautious in your words and carriage, that the most penetrating stranger shall not be able to discover or find out what is not proper to be imitated: and sometimes you shall divert a discourse and manage it prudently for the honor of the Worshipful Fraternity".

46 Among the ancient Greeks, the rite of circumambulation maintained the correct value of the mystic journey. If the reader will refer to Serial Number 99 (the Lights) and note the diagram of expression therein, he will see that the complete journey was from the East to the West, symbolizing INvolution, and from the West back to the East symbolizing EVolution. The Greeks kept this exact procedure, in the processions about their altars, keeping the right hand always extended towards the altar, thus signifying the round of the Sun both above and below the earth.

47 There is a bit of esoterism in this example of the Greeks. Our right hands are our principal factors of utility. If we mentally and sub-consciously keep our right hands to the Sun, i. e., toward the Light, they will not be apt to perform acts of darkness. It will keep us moving always in the right direction of constructive progress.

48 Circumambulation is a sign of action. It is just as truly a specific sign as any given manually or gutturally. It is a pedal sign, in a way, but an important one. This is a feature notably characteristic of every principle of Freemasonry. All are active principles. Action is the kenote, for Masonry implies actual building operations and these are never passive. The negative type of human being has no real place in Freemasonry, for his nature is diametrically opposed to a cardinal Masonic Principle, that of ACTION speld large.

49 We have pointed out in this instruction only a few of the lessons that may be developt from the parallels found when applying the ceremony of circumambulation to Man's life in the world at large. It has a distinct and peculiar esoterism of its own and it requires search in earnest to discover it. The ceremony itself is simple, the lessons are simple, but powerful in effect when personally applied. It is to be hoped that, some day, Masonic exegetists will recognize the value of circumambulation and accord it a place in the explanatory lectures that does not seem to exist at present. The neofite has a right to find everything in Masonry explained to him on the most substantial basis, and while neither time nor space permit complete historical exegeses in the lodge room at initiation, passing or raising, of each individual precedure, nevertheless and notwithstanding, this feature of circumambulation that occupies such a prominent place in the ritual, should, we believe, be more definitely imprest upon the candidate.

50 When the neofite enters the lodge, he travels toward the East. When he leaves it, he travels toward the West. So is the Path of Human Life. From the rising of the individual at his birth, to his going down at life's end in the West of life, he physically travels from East to West, but spiritually, in obedience to the law of polarity, he travels from West to East for he is ever seeking Light. Circumambulation is, therefore, esoterically, the symbol of the active completion of a cycle of human life, both on the physical and spiritual planes of consciousness. If we perform it, conscious of its true import, we shall learn valuable lessons that will occur to us at the time. If we accept and perform it mechanically, it will remain in our memories only as a bit of ritual, meaningless to us.

51 Those of us who may have completed our circumambulations years ago, may find in the thoughts herein presented such new Light as may, even at this time, give us a keener sense of the duties that life still makes possible for us to perform and the responsibilities we have yet to fulfil. As long as human life lasts, we can still recover that of which we might have been unaware at the time, if we adjust our minds accordingly and let the truth sink into our inner consciousness that it may manifest in our outward works and activities. In the proper valuation of circumambulation, the Masonic seeker may rise to new and splendid opportunities for true human service.

The Templars!

THE STRANDS OF THE TRADITION

Saint Bernard of Clairvaux considered it his personal mission to reunite the different strands of the spiritual tradition and to adapt this synthesis to the age in which he lived. He had access not only to teachings known to the early Church Fathers but, through family connections, he had also been trained in Druidic lore. He despatched his Knights Templar on secret missions to seek teachings which had been guarded for centuries in certain brotherhoods of the Islamic and Judeo-Egyptian traditions.

The nine Knights sent by him to Jerusalem could not seriously have been sent just to guard the pilgrims. What could such a small body of men achieve as a police force in hostile territory? The real task of the nine Knights in Jerusalem was to carry out research in the area in order to obtain certain relics and manuscripts which contained the essence of the secret traditions of Judaism and ancient Egypt, some of which probably went back to before the days of Moses.

There is no doubt that the nine founding Knights fulfilled this particular mission and that the knowledge obtained from their finds was taught in the oral tradition of the Order of the Temple's secret circles. Hence the rumour that when the Templars were seized by King Philip certain relics were spirited away for safe keeping.

THE TEMPLARS AND THE GRAIL The Templars are said to have had close contacts with the Troubadours, those wandering minstrels whose poetry and song entertained the courts and peoples of Europe with stories of noble deeds. Some of these were themselves secret Templars, as is said of Wolfram von Eschenbach, the man who popularized the Grail legends. One of these legends relates that Gamuret, a knight and father of Parsifal, had another son named Feirefiz by a Moslem woman. Feirefiz also reaches the Castle of the Grail but cannot see the Grail itself until he is baptized, to which he agrees in order to marry the Grail King's daughter, whom he loves. Feirefiz is then able to contemplate the Grail, around which appears a message advocating tolerance for other races and creeds. The marriage takes place and a son is born, the legendary Prester John, future guardian of the Grail.

LINKS WITH THE ALCHEMISTS & KABALISM There were links between well known alchemists and the Templars. One of these was Raymund Lull, a respected Catalan monk born in 1232. Lull, as well as being an alchemist, was a member of a secret circle of the Order of the Knights Templar. It is known that Lull was present as an influential member of the Church at the abolition of the Order at the famous Council of Vienne. Lull did not attempt to intervene. Either he was privvy to knowledge that the Order had arrived at the end of its cycle or he had simply concluded that there was no more he could no to influence events. He had argued strenuously for the unification of the Templar and Hospitaller Orders in the hope of thus saving the Templars, but in vain -- Grand Master Jacques de Molay remained firmly opposed to the merger.

Links have also been traced between the Templars and Kabalism, the esoteric branch of Judaism. Several writers have alluded to the contacts which existed between the Templar tradition in Spain and the famous Kabalistic schools of the Iberian peninsula.

THE SECRET MISSIONS OF THE TEMPLARS

In addition to the activities just related, the Templars were entrusted with a number of secret missions. One of these was to work for the linking of Christianity and Islam.

The word Islam means "confident submission to God." Islam is the religion promulgated by the Prophet Mohammed, and someone who accepts Islam is a Moslem. Islam dates from the seventh century AD when Mohammed, a well-to-do Arab merchant, received instructions in a vision to bring the message of the One God to the Arab world. Mohammed himself did not claim to have started a new religion, but is reported to have said that his task was merely to bring to his countrymen the message of monotheism already declared by the patriarch Abraham and other prophets such as Moses and Jesus.

MOSLEM BROTHERHOODS There is documentary evidence that despite the continuous state of military confrontation which existed between the Christian and Moslem armies in the Holy Land, there were very close contacts between the Templars and certain Moslem brotherhoods. It is known that the Templars signed secret treatises with the Islamic sect of the Ismailis, and it was demonstrated on several occasions during combat between Arab and Templar forces that certain ideals of chivalry were respected on both sides.

There were of course the famous contacts between the Templars and the Fraternity of the Assassins, a secret fraternity and offshoot of the Ismailis founded around 1090 by Hassan Sabah. The head of the Fraternity was known as Sheikh-el-Jebel, or "the Old Man of the Mountains." Certain historians have argued that the real meaning of the title was "the wise man or sage of the Kabalah or Tradition."

THE ASSASSINS Although opinions differ as to the real nature of the Assassins, there is general agreement that the Fraternity taught a secret doctrine which was transmitted only to the initiated. There must certainly have been some connection between the Assassins and Sufism. It also appears that the organization of the Fraternity and its religious codes and regulations greatly resembled those of the Templars.

The old belief that the Assassins were a fraternity of drugged murderers (the Arabic word hashishin meaning partaker of "hashish," the local marijuana) may have been greatly exaggerated during the period of the Crusades when anything pertaining to Islam was given an unsavoury reputation in Western Europe. Unfortunately the word assassin was adopted in some European languages with the meaning it has today, although it may well have derived from the Arabic word "assas," meaning foundation.

THE DRUZE A brief diversion concerning the fraternity known as the Druze might be in order here. This group is found in Lebanon, Syria and Israel today. Certain authors have suggested that some of the teachings of the Druze might be of Templar origin, and members of the fraternity do talk of their co-religionists in Europe, especially in Scotland! Contacts between the sect and the Knights Templar could easily have occurred during the period of Templar presence in the Holy Land, although this view may have arisen because Druze teachings are a mixture of Judaism, Christianity and Islam, and include elements of Gnosticism. Within this amalgram is a secret oral tradition said to be practiced by an inner group whose initiates are known as Akkals or Okkals, and who possess seven secret books of teachings accessible until recently only to the "pure". Four volumes believed to contain these books have now been published in Arabic, not long after Druze villages in Lebanon were taken over by Phalangist Christians. No denial of the books' authenticity has been issued by the Druze sect, an omission which is significant by itself.

It is also believed that there were contacts with those Moslems who had settled as conquerors in Spain. Although there is no direct relationship to the story of the Templars, it is nevertheless interesting to note that the man considered to be the greatest mystic in the history of Islam, Ibn Al'Arabi, was born in Murcia, Andalucia. He first studied law in Seville, moved to the Middle East where he was initiated into Sufism in 1194, and died in Damascus in 1240 after an extraordinary spiritual career.

THE SUFI TRADITION The flowerings of the Sufi tradition was also conterminous with the rise of the Templars. Although Sufism had already existed from the early phases of Islam, it was only around the tenth or eleventh century AD that it was institutionalized. The most important Sufi brotherhoods were founded between the twelfth and fourteenth centuries, but the golden age of Sufism was the twelfth century. It is therefore probable that given their mission the Templars would have been busy obtaining information during this period of spiritual ferment in Islam.

UNIFICATION OF THE TRADITION You know of the transmission of the Tradition to Abraham by Melchisedek. This heritage was subsequently diverted into three main currents of Christianity, Islam and Judaism. It was the task of Saint Bernard and the Templars to try to bring them together again.

The Templars did not succeed in outwardly reuniting these currents. They did however manage to maintain the contact with Islam and to integrate certain teachings, as just mentioned. Through the Essenes and the Kabalists, elements were also transplanted from Judaism, all of which were to vitalize the spirituality of the Western peoples for the centuries which followed.

QUESTIONS / DISCUSSION

Another secret mission of the Templars was to strive for the Return of the Christ. Their terminology for this objective was the "Return of the Christ in Solar Glory." This is the priority mission of the Temple today. One additional point can be appropriately made at this time: It concerns the puzzlement of historians as to why the Templars, with all their wealth and power, so meekly and passively accepted the destruction of the Order by Philip the Fair. The Templar tradition indicates that the main officers of the Order believed that one day the Order, like Christ, would have to sacrifice itself physically in order to facilitate the return of the Christ in victu. This could explain their courage in battle and why many of them accepted death and the decline of their Order during the period of the persecutions without physically defending themselves.

Times have changed. In the present cycle, the modern Templar is not expected to sacrifice himself at the stake as did Grand Master Jacques de Molay on that cold October day in 1314. *The Templar of today will rather be expected to sacrifice the selfish aspects of his nature so that the spirit of the Universal Christ shall manifest in him in victu. To describe this in alchemical language: man needs to master the cross of the four elements in order to achieve the awakening of Cosmic Unity and Consciousness in his being. The four elements are symbolized in alchemy by the equilateral cross. Each of the four alchemical elements is ascribed to an arm of the equilateral cross and coincides with one of the four cardinal points on the compass. Each of the elements represents among other things an aspect or quality in ourselves which, if out of balance with the other three elements, brings the negative aspects of that element into our life and behavior. Here are some examples of the positive and negative qualities of the different elements. (Please also refer once again to lecture #41(A), Liber 13).

ELEMENT OF EARTH

Positive Qualities	Negative Qualities
Punctuality	Unreliability
Firmness	Stubbornness
Confidence	Selfishness

ELEMENT OF AIR

Cheerfulness	Quarrelsomeness
Diligence	Fickleness
Kindness	Tendency to gossip

ELEMENT OF FIRE

Activity	Irritability
Keenness	Bossiness
Resolution	Intolerance

ELEMENT OF WATER

Modesty	Timidity
Docility	Passivity
Intuition	Credulity

In alchemy and in certain other esoteric traditions such as the Kabalah, symbols have been evolved to represent each of the four elements. There are ways known to initiates by which these symbols can be manipulated through meditation or other techniques to bring about a balance of the elements in the practitioner, so that within him negative and positive qualities can be neutralized and balanced by positive qualities. In simple terms, when an individual manages to master the unbalanced or warring elements in himself by working on his character, his weaknesses and uncontrolled impulses, he will have sacrificed his ego and will no longer be tied to the cross of the elements. He will become free from unbridled domination, thus enabling the Christ within to manifest. The alchemist would say that such a person has managed to purify the dross or impurities in his metals through the force of sacrifice and self-discipline, transmuting these metals into the alchemical gold of an awakened spiritual awareness.

THE COMING OF THE PARACLETE

Yet another secret mission of the Templars was to prepare for the coming of the Paraclete. The original texts of the New Testament were written in Greek. In the Greek text of the book of St. John, the word Parakletos appears several times in Chapters XIV-XVI. This word has been translated into English as "Comforter." No single English word, however, conveys all the significance of the Greek Parakletos which has meanings relating to defender, helper, comforter and advocate. Some theologians prefer to use the anglicized word Paraclete.

At the last Supper, after the Christ had revealed to his disciples that he would be betrayed and would not be with them physically for very long, he told them that he would be followed by the Paraclete, a manifestation of the Holy Spirit or the Spirit of Truth. Christ went on to give a number of hints about the nature of the Paraclete. He indicated six characteristics or functions:

1) It would be with the disciples, and in them (John 14:17).

2) It would teach and recall the teachings of Christ (John 14, 26).

3) It would testify of the Christ (John 15:26).

4) It would make men aware of their errors, and of what is really meant by justice (John 16:8).

5) It would guide men into an authentic realization of what is truth (John 16:13).

6) It would prophesy (John 16:13).

The Templars considered the Paraclete to be the manifestation of the Holy Spirit as the Spirit of Truth and Revelation. For them its coming would herald the completion of the cycle of a phase in the evolution of our planet, when the Triune nature of the Divine will have been brought in through concrete manifestation -- the Father aspect through Melchisedek; the Son aspect through the Christ manifested in Jesus of Nazareth; and the aspect of the Holy Spirit through the Paraclete. The Templars believed that they were given the mission of preparing men's minds for the coming of the Paraclete, so that one day they would be able to perceive truth directly without the intermediary of a spiritual teacher or master. Today it is believed that we are now entering, or have entered the Age of the Paraclete. Accordingly, men and women in our time will need to make less efforts to develop their spiritual intuition than their forebears in earlier cycles. The coinciding presence of the Paraclete and the currents of the Aquarian Age will ensure that our current cycle will be unique in the history of our planet.

ATTRIBUTES OF THE PARACLETE Returning to the particular attributes of the Paraclete, the Cosmic vibrations which work through the aspect of the Divine which is called the Holy Spirit have begun to manifest. Not only will they accelerate the development of man's spiritual intuition if he makes the necessary efforts to purify his vehicles by living the Christ life, but the power of the Paraclete will dynamize the uncovering of truth in all areas of life. Already one can observe that many former secrets are being forced into the open, and the general public is becoming rapidly aware of many things, both spiritual and material, which have been hidden for centuries.

THE MODERN TEMPLAR The modern Templar, like his predecessor in the Middle Ages, has a special responsibility to facilitate the unfolding of the Paraclete and to propagate the awareness of the new influences by the state of spirituality he radiates. He will not need to go about enquiring into hidden things. By his efforts to purify himself and open himself to the new influences he will automatically stimulate the realization of what truth is in the people around him. The law of cause and effect (or Karma) will guarantee that Templars of today will reap the harvest of seeds sown by the martyred warriors of the red cross some six hundred years ago.

The Christ force, now accelerating the return to its Source, is facilitating the entry onto the scene of the Holy Spirit or Paraclete, which has the particular role of awakening in Man the realization of Truth. In turn the action of the Paraclete will favour efforts by the Christ Consciousness to free itself from the restriction of matter. If man plays his part, the action and reaction of these two positive forces will ensure that the program for the return of Cosmic Consciousness back to the Divine Creator, in the sense mentioned in these lectures, will be carried out on schedule. The French translation of the Greek word Parakletos as "Consolateur" with the etymological meaning of "he who restores together" sums up this process well. It suggests the coming together of the Godhead and its physical creation.

Beloved Companions and seekers of the Grail!

THE QUEST OF THE HOLY GRAIL

Lecture Three : The Wounded King

"What, it will be questioned, when the sun rises do you not see a round disc of fire somewhat like a coin?
O no! No, I see an innumerable company of the Heavenly Host crying Holy, Holy, Holy is the Lord God Almighty...."

In these words the great English poet and mystic William Blake, whom we may also consider to belong to the Christian Hermetic tradition, puts very clearly the distinction between the outer vision which stops with a description of the physical object, in this case the sun like a red disc --- and that inner vision which adds depth and spiritual understanding.

"The aim of spiritual exercises is depth ... Hermeticism, the Hermetic tradition, is in the first place and above all a certain degree of depth, a certain level of consciousness."
Meditations On The Tarot

So as we travel towards a deeper understanding of the Grail, it is appropriate to note that all esoteric work is precisely a working to deepen, and add a new dimension to, our understanding. True esotericism never contradicts the exoteric. Rather, as with Blake's way of seeing the sun, it is a way of deepening. It should be added that this work of deepening, or "esotericizing", is by no means limited to those within the Hermetic tradition, narrowly defined, who think of themselves as esotericists. For example when the liturgy of the Church imagines Adam lamenting his loss of communion with God, "... I have become an exile from the joy of Paradise ... I who once was king of all God's creatures on earth am now become a prisoner ... I who was clothed in glory must now ... wrap myself in mortality..." is doing the same sort of thing that Martinez De Pasqually does in his Treatise Of Reintegration Of Beings and doing it at least as successfully and profoundly.

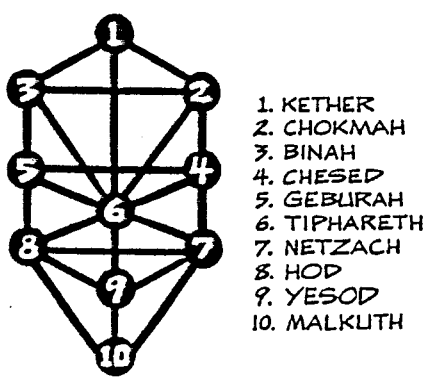
This particular theme, of our separation from God and from the land of heart's desire, is an inexhaustible subject for meditation because it is the starting point of the human condition. If we look into ourselves even a little, we will find that this sense of separation and loss, over which Adam lamented, is present with each of us every day of our life. Plato was mediating it in one way when he taught us the difference between the "Necessary" and the "Good". Leon Bloy deepened our understanding of it in another way when he said "the only sadness is to not be a saint." If the subject is inexhaustible, our intention here is to see how the theme of separation and loss is developed in the Grail material and we will turn to that after touching briefly on the parallel developments in Kabalah and in Masonry which, with the Grail, constitute three main streams of the esoteric tradition or -- in A. E. Waite's way of putting it -- "three literatures which testify concerning the voided House of Doctrine."



In Kabalistic teaching as developed by Isaac Luria, the Divine Light was rayed down into ten vessels, the Sephiroth, and all except the first three were unable to bear this influx and were shattered and in particular Malkuth, in which all the higher powers are reflected, was broken into fragments of light scattered throughout the world and together constituting God's Presence, or Shekinah, unable to easily return to its source. There is then a Divine Exile which parallels the wanderings of the people of Israel and, indeed, the cooperation of man is necessary to restore both the Upper and the Lower worlds.

In Masonry it is the "Word" of the Master Mason which is lost. It is by speaking a "Word" that God began the creation of the world ("And God said ..." Genesis 1:3) and it is perhaps chiefly by the harmonics of sound that we begin to know the harmony of the worlds. The passing on by word of mouth of initiatic teaching represents -- (and this is perhaps its deep significance, deeper than the actual content transmitted) -- that time when the human word will be united to the Divine Word. However the "Word" is lost and is the object of a quest.

"(I have travelled) from west to east, and from east to west again ... in search of that which was lost
... the Master's Word."

We shall find both the idea of the Kabalah of man's participation in the restoration ... and the Masonic idea of quest ... developed in the Grail writings.

Let us first of all, however, set the scene in which the knight visiting the Grail Castle first sees the holy things. While the Fisher King is conversing with the knight -- Perceval is his name -- a procession passes before them bearing these holy things. Depending on the account, the holy things are enumerated differently but in general they consist of a spear (perhaps dripping blood), a dish, a sword and a chalice which is the Grail itself. You will note that these echo the four suits of the Tarot and, indeed, all the correspondences of the scale of four. As to the Grail itself, Chretien tells us:

> "A damsel came ... holding between her two hands a Grail and as she entered with the Grail there was such a brilliant light that the candles lost their brightness, just as the stars do when the moon or sun rises ... the Grail was of refined gold set with the richest precious stones that exist in the sea or in the earth."

Later we are told that the king is sustained by the Grail as all the guardians, from Joseph of Arimathea on, have been:

> "He is (daily) provided with a single Mass wafer, which is brought to him in the Grail; and it sustains his life, such a holy thing is the Grail."

Now all the stories of the Grail agree that, although the Fisher King is surrounded by the life-giving holy things, he suffers from a wound. Although the stories differ greatly in detail as to the cause and nature of the wound, they agree in certain essentials: that the wound can be healed only by the achievement of the Grail Quest by a knight from outside the lands of the Fisher King, and that in the meantime this grievous wound saps the vitality not only of the King himself but also the fertility of the surrounding land. This is one dimension of the problem of the Quest. Another is the Table.

In the time of Arthur's rule in Britain, Merlin established the third Table. That of Joseph, we are specifically told, had been square; but that of Merlin was round.

> "...for it mirrors the roundness of the earth, the concentric spheres of the planets and of the elements in the firmament; and in these spheres we see the stars and many things besides; whence it follows that the Round Table is a true epitome of the universe."
>
> Queste del Saint Grail

But the Grail is not present at this table of the universe and, as we said before, Britain is not united to Logres ... the inner kingdom to the outer. Charles Williams summarizes the matter:

> "At the first Table is our Lord; at the second the fish caught by Brons which was the image of our Lord in the imagination of the young Church, and also the arch-natural vessel; at the third there is yet nothing, but something is to be. Logres and the Grail are to come together, and the King is to preside at the union. The empty chair (of the second Table) is to be left there also till he who was to be the union should come."

Reviewing then, we see, as A. E. Waite puts it, that "the same story of loss is therefore told everywhere, if never twice in the same way." In the Grail stories the themes of loss, as developed in the esoteric and exoteric traditions, are gathered up with particular force and intensity and the way to resolution is shown. Merlin's Table is without the Grail and the Grail lands suffer as the Fisher King suffers

> "Well should Logres be named with tears, > with bitter weeping, grief and fears.
> For here no fertile seed is sown,
> Neither peas nor grain are grown...
> On the trees no leaf is seen
> Nor are the meadows growing green,
> Birds build no nest, no song is sung..."
> Sone de Nansai

What is needed is a "freeing of the waters" to fertilize the land (compare Indra's freeing of the waters, also the union of the Upper and Lower Waters in the Zohar) and this can only be done by a quest achieved by the ordinary person from this world who dares all to bring the worlds together and "achieve the Grail."

I will continue in our next by examining more deeply the nature of the "quest" in general and of the Grail Quest in particular.

LIVING STONES

Entered Apprentice, Fellow-Craft and Master Mason

"Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God."

1 Pet. 2:5

ALL thru the Masonic Tradition, the neofite is taught that he is to be engaged thenceforth in the preparation of material and the actual building of a spiritual Temple, an "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Somehow or other, many neofites develop the idea that this operation of building is something in the future tense, something for which they are to be continually preparing. Those who hold to this idea, find their ideals of the Masonic structure also a matter of the future. Seldom do they bring their concepts down to the present.

2 The Masonic Tradition, however, deals continually with the present. The building is indeed a spiritual building, but it is not so simple in the general scheme as would appear at first sight. The Masonic brother is, first of all, to be a lively stone. Being a stone he is building material. In preparing the stone for building he is preparing himself, but he becomes incorporated in the general structure the moment he steps foot inside the lodge.

3 As a building is composed of many kinds of stone, so the spiritual building is composed of many kinds of building material. As several kinds or bands of workmen are employed on a building so do we find corresponding bands in the Craft. Now the peculiarity of Masonic building operation is this; that the Masonic brother is, at one and the same time, both builder and building material.

4 There are Three Movable Jewels, the Rough Ashlar, the Perfect Ashlar and the Trestle Board. The Rough Ashlar is the stone as it comes from the quarries where it has been formed by Nature's Workmen, the Nature forces. It is prepared to be fitted as Perfect Ashlar by the tools of the Fellow-Craft. The Entered Apprentice is the Rough Ashlar, which condition reminds him of the rude and imperfect state of nature, in which he assumedly enters the Fraternity.

5 As the Entered Apprentice progresses in the Craft, he becomes able, as a Fellow-Craft, to apply his newly acquired knowledge and "virtuous education" to so trim the rough stone or material that it becomes the Perfect Ashlar, ready for the Master Workman's further orders.

6 When the Perfect Ashlar stage is attained, as a Master Mason, the initiate transmutes the stone that is himself into a "Living Stone." He had formed a part of the Spiritual Temple "in the rough, but now he is permanently incorporated into the Structure in a way that admits of no further change, unless—as is sometimes the case—a seemingly perfect stone in a building proves itself incapable of standing a severe strain placed upon it. It is then removed. Sometimes a Masonic Living Stone, or one seemingly so, proves incapable of fulfilling trusts reposed in and on it and has to be removed.

7 Man is truly a stone in more ways than one. He is composed of the Four Elements in synthesis. Specifically, he is composed of the same chemical elements which, properly united, form the various kinds of stone known to us geologically. By a stretch of words, and covering many nature-processes, we may say that Man is stone in colloidal form. He has in himself all the elements, chemical and ethical, that characterize stone. We say of some men, "they are solid as granite—they are hard as flint—he is as polisht as marble—he is soft as clay," etc. Granted that these are comparisons developt from obvious similes, nevertheless, the beginning of such comparisons develops from a recognition of identical qualities in the several objects compared. In man, we witness the atavisms from mineral, vegetable and animal kingdoms.

8 Man, therefore, having the composition of stone and expressing in his mental attributes many of the qualities of stone according to individual temperament and environment, it is not difficult to observe that man is, really, a lively stone,—a LIVING STONE, in an objective as well as a spiritual sense. But the essence of Man, that which makes him a Living stone, is that phase of the Principle called Life, that distinguishes him from all non-reasoning creatures. Man has, therefore, something mysteriously inherent within that not only differentiates him, but persists independently of his physical stone body, it inheres actively in an inner or spiritual body, also of stone, for the spiritual body, being a body, has substance, and this substance, impalpable, invisible, has the same chemicals that manifest exteriorly in dense crystallization or solid form as the physical body.

9 Man is a Living Stone, not in simile or allegory but in FACT. That means that he is an enduring creature. As building material, Man is something that is to last—eternally—and it behooves him to so cut, trim, square and polish the Vital Stone that is himself, that it may evenly stand any strain that may be placed upon it, and find permanent lodgment in the fabric of the Spiritual Temple, not made with hands, but made with brains directed by the Spirit.

10 If we take a careful look at the Trestle Board, we shall find that all the Temples of all the world's humanity and its religions have shown a marvelous adherence to the same threefold idea that we have had occasion to mention so frequently thus far in these lessons. Among the ruins at Stonehenge, we find the two outer circles, dolmens, and the inner sanctuary. The Egyptian temples were divided into the outer court of the people, the inner or hypostyle section and the shrine or sanctuary. Greek temples had their pro-naos, naos and sanctuary. Hebrews had their outer court of the people, the inner court or holy place of the priests, and the holy of holies or sanctuary, into which the High Priest enterd only at appointed times.

11 Christian cathedrals have their nave, or place of the people (congregation), the choir, or holy place of the singers and minor offices, and the sanctuary within the chancel rail, in which stands the Altar or holy of holies, the sanctum sanctorum.

12 In view of such a singular unity of plan, we must assume that it is derived from an understanding of cosmic proportions and relationships, which, on investigation, we find to be the case. We are not studying architecture in this lesson, however, but we mention these facts because Masonry, being a cosmic or universal Order, should agree in essential harmonics with such features as we find to be general in an universal scheme. Masonry proves itself true to form in this respect, for the Institution is comprehended under the same threefold plan, the Ground Floor, the Middle Chamber, and the Sanctum Sanctorum. These are alleged to have been derived from the plan of King Solomon's Temple. If this is true, the plan has an excellent lineage, but we are not at all concerned with its derivation from the Sol-Om-ON Temple. Masonry derives from something far more important than a Temple so transient and ephemeral that little trace of it now remains, and its general appearance is only a matter of widely speculative conjecture.

13 The point is, that Masonry, in its long lineage thru the various important arcane bodies that have served their appointed times as custodians of the Lesser Mysteries, has become the crystallization of an idea so ancient in human history as to be co-eval with the dawn of human reason. This threefold idea under which we comprehend Deity, Man, and the World as the epitome of Applied Art or Architecture, is found intact in its most essential form in the Craft, for not only is the architectural plan of Freemasonry conceived as an expression of the trinitarian idea, the Craftsmen also conform to it.

14 Just as Man's representative temples have held to the threefold idea, so has Man himself, in his emergence into the Light of Reason. His body is divided into three principal parts. In the Ground Floor or Abdomen, the "Place of the People" we find the ordinary workmen (intestines, kidneys, bladder and generative organs), performing the every day work of functional process, making ready the materials taken rough-ashlar-like into the body, and distilling, condensing, refining and sublimating them to become the infinitesimal agents in the blood stream, nerve tissue and wonderful brain cells.

15 When the lower bands of workmen have finisht their work, the Fellow Crafts in the Second Division of the Body, the Thorax, apply their tools. The heart takes up the newly produced blood products and places it and them in circulation, or as constructive factors in the physical temple. The lungs purify the blood as it makes its circumambulation of the body. The vital fluids of various glands have been produced as the rough food products were conducted by a series of winding steps upward thru the lower body (intestinal convolutions to ascending and transverse colons) and finally brot to the Middle Chamber of that same body.

16 Ultimately the refined products are raised to their exaltation in the highest point of the bodily Temple, the brain, the inner or holy of holies, the sanctum sanctorum of Man. That which started out as raw material—rough ashlar—is now developt and unfolded essentially into creative, constructive, living LIGHT. Solid material has now become spiritual material; the lower has been raised to the higher. A process of the truest form of transmutation has been accomplisht.

17 When Man enters this world he is the Enterd Apprentice. He is the rough ashlar fresh from the biological quarries. He is misshapen, crude, even grotesque. He is helpless and incapable. He is simple matter that must be handled and moulded by others before he attains any semblance of independent action. He must learn how to use the tools that belong to him which are his arms and limbs and his five senses. His Apprenticeship lasts a long time for man is a most complex creature. Animals, which have a far shorter period of gestation, enter the world capable of taking care of themselves after comparatively few days. Man, who requires a much longer period of gestation uses up many years of valuable time before he is capable of taking care of himself, and not always even then.

18 Man's apprenticeship lasts thru Infancy, Childhood and Early Youth—the triune scheme again. In later Youth his more advanst position as a Fellow Craftsman begins. Then he applies the tools he has been learning to use thru the advantages of education, natural and acquired. As he completes his Later Youth period, he enters the Young Manhood and subsequently the Middle Age periods. Here he is engaged in making practical use of his stony qualities of resistance, stability, permanence, strength, rigid character, inflexible will power, and impenetrable mental reserve. He is perfecting the Rough Ashlar until it reaches the status of comparatively Perfect Ashlar.

19 After Middle Age, now technically a Master Workman, he enters that stage of life commonly called Old Age. This is divided, according to most recent psychological averages, into the pre-senile, senile and post-senile periods. Again the triune conformity. The term senile is not to be understood as synonymous with weak-mindedness, imbecility or anything of the sort. It relates to the status of the comparative vigor of the forces of metabolism vs. katabolism. Many men have accomplisht their greatest work at the Biblical age of the three-score and ten. Huxley studied Greek at sixty. Edison is mentally keen and active and—intellectually prolific long after eighty. Rockefeller was still the dominant personality in the world's most powerful corporation at ninety.

20 We have given the three divisions of so-called Old Age simply to conform to popularly understood terms. But Old Age is the period of the true Master, for then it is that one has at last learned how properly to circumscribe his desires and to keep his passions in due bounds with all mankind, but more especially with the brethren. It is then that ripened judgment, born of digested experience, in connection with a wide vision and settled wisdom, enables him to look back over the Path he has trod, and to apply the lessons he has learned in preparing a Trestle Board for those who pass the same way after him.

21 The neofite who is initiated an Enterd Apprentice, Passed as a Fellow Craftsman and Raised a Master, is simply recapitulating in miniature or microcosm the Path of his life, in a grafic manner that should impress him with a profound sense of awe when he contemplates the harmonic and orderly processes of Nature, whose creature he is and by whose laws he functions in this world of matter.

22 As we scan the book of human history we are amazed at the number of men who have "made their Mark" imperishably and ineradicably upon its pages. Off hand, any well informed person, with the rudiments of education, can name a remarkable number of men whose deeds entitle them to a niche in the World's Hall of Fame. But to whomsoever a deeper understanding of the progress of the human species is clear, comes a flood tide of names that stand out like stars of the first magnitude in the firmament of human achievement. These, verily, have been, still are, and always will be, LIVING STONES. Their deeds still work for them and attest what humanity has become because of them.

23 It is not our purpose to hold up what are commonly known as the "World's Great Ones" as an illustration of all that constitutes Living Stones. Every human being is a Living Stone. But some stones are, as we know, imperfect. Some stones actually are dead. If we hammer them, they give forth no ringing sound of solidarity. They break, crumble and disintegrate. We sometimes call such, "rotten stone." There are such stones also in the human fabric. It is the purpose and function of Freemasonry thru its symbolic teachings, to prevent such stones from composing the human structure as permanent features, also to reduce, little by little but none the less surely, the number of such imperfect stones.

24 Masonry teaches its neofites to utilize the tools of environment and the tools contained within the body itself, to fashion a Perfect Stone, a Living Stone, not only from the organic standpoint but from a keener mentality, a sharpened and discriminative intellectuality and above all, an awakened spirituality. For this reason, the Craft takes every possible human precaution to prevent the admittance of members who are not calculated to make good builders themselves and to furnish good building material in themselves.

25 Again we note the triune system. In the Enterd Apprentice Initiation, the neofite is committed to a Life of Action. In the Fellow Craft, he is Passed to a Life of Education in the acquisition of higher knowledge. In being Raised a Master Mason, he is exalted to a Life of Rulership. Work is the first requisite of Man. Without it, he would not be able to provide himself with the barest necessities of existence. Education and the acquisition of Knowledge is the next step, for the advice of our ancient operative Grand Master, Sol-Om-On was, first, last and all the time "Get Wisdom, get understanding." Read his Proverbs and learn for yourself. With knowledge we shall understand better what we need, what is best adapted to make us grow, mentally as well as physically, and to improve the environment and condition in which we live.

26 Attaining rulership—sovereign ruler over a cosmos consisting of millions upon millions of important and vital cells, each with its own individual intelligence, each able to perform its own peculiar functions, each contributing to the welfare of the whole, each a citizen in the vast Empire that is one, single, Man. Government is the highest attainment of the human mind for it includes all else that the human mind has any capacity to conceive, receive or attain. Thru government we conceive our highest ideals of a Creator and an orderly control of our World. That we are, from time to time, misgoverned, simply shows how far short we are even at this advanst day in the world's history of conceiving a proper estimate of the true nature and function of government. It shows how far short we have come in being able to measure up to the standard required for good government. Still we are on the way. We are profiting (and some politicians are profiteering), thru the mistakes that have been made in ages past as revealed to us thru history.

27 Today, in the Middle Chamber, the Fellow Craft receives instruction in synthesis. Certain educational principles are inculcated in a symbolic way. When the Craft was first instituted the free school as we know it, was unheard of. Educational advantages were few and for the few only. The principles taught in Freemasonry used to constitute courses covering many years in the academies of Plato, Socrates, Aristotle and the Sages. Today they are taught in a few years in our public schools. Nevertheless, the Fraternity still teaches, not the subjects themselves, but the moral, ethical and spiritual essences contained and enshrined in those principles of art, science and ethics.

28 In adhering to the ancient plan of teaching by allegory, Freemasonry holds true to the system maintained even as far back as ancient Egypt. Many diagrams are publisht that show the sectional view of the Great Pyramid. Probably all Masonic students are more or less familiar with them. Nevertheless it is well to call attention to the triune plan embodied. The Ground Floor or Lower Chamber and the Middle Chamber (The Queen's Chamber, so-called) are clearly shown. Lastly the King's Chamber or the Sanctum Sanctorum, in which is found an empty sarcophagus. No body has ever been found in the Great Pyramid, altho for years some Egyptologists have persisted in assuming that the structure was erected as a tomb for Cheops, by his daughter who sold her favors to raise the funds. No proof of such an idea has ever been satisfactorily advanst or sustained.

29 The Sanctum Sanctorum with its empty coffin is a feature every Mason will recognize and understand, for it is more than probable that the Great Pyramid was the place of Initiation into the highest mysteries of Egypt's Hierophants. This sanctum is called the "King's Chamber" and most appropriately so, for he who passes thru the symbolic rites involved in the sanctuary becomes, in fact, a king among men, for he becomes, first of all, king of himself. In so doing, or becoming, he enters into the possession of his kingdom consciously. We are, all of us, kings, but few of us KNOW it and it is hard to realize it when we are informed of it.

30 In the lower chamber, beneath the center, a large part of the initiatory work in the Egyptian rite was performed. A much less number succeeded in finding their tortuous way up the winding passage which joined the Grand Gallery at a point from which another passage led directly into the Middle Chamber. In the Masonic Lodge of today, much of the most important work is performed in the Enterd Apprentice rite, symbolic of the Ground Floor of the Temple, for here it is that the first impression, Masonically, is made. That first impression will last longer in the new brother's mind than any other part of the Work because it was the first.

31 In the Mason himself, in the lower of his three bodily divisions, the abdomen, in the Enterd Apprentice part of his life career, the most important work is performed, for his growth and unfoldment is really largely a matter of digestion, assimilation and excretion. The same forces are operative when he enters the Lodge. He receives certain teachings. He must digest them, assimilate the value of them, and excrete from his mind false concepts and false values and perspectives he has hitherto held.

32 In the Middle Chamber of the Egyptian Temple, lessons were imparted that exercised a markt effect upon the candidate's emotions. In the Middle Chamber or Fellow-Craft degree certain teachings are imparted which we well remember made definite impress upon our emotions at the time. In the bodily temple of Man, the Thorax is the holy place where the heart reigns supreme and emotion finds a central focus of action, for the heart registers with unfailing precision every slightest emotional change we experience. Thru the lungs we bring into our bodies the air, symbolic of the pneuma or spiritual forces, which purify the river of life.

33 The Sanctum Sanctorum was the throne or seat of the Hierophant. In the Lodge it is the degree pertinent to the Master, wherein he makes his younger brethren, apprentices and fellow-crafts, Master Masons or Master Builders. In the head, or sanctuary of Man, is the Ego, the Real Self, supreme, Master of the body, Master of the Mind, Master of the Soul. Here the secret of life was assumedly imparted by the ancients. In the sanctuary of the Lodge the secret of life is symbolically imparted. In the Temple of the Body the secret of life becomes the active, dominant factor in and by itself.

34 In the Fellow-Craft work, the candidate is taught to make an advance by a tortuous stairway consisting of three, five and seven steps. Freemasonry exhibits in this ceremony a notable application of the rules and processes of human life, for each human being works his way into and thru life by a similar series of steps.

35 The Ground Floor of the Pyramid is in the bosom of Mother Earth, so the Ground Floor of human life is in the body of the Earthly mother. The human-to-be begins with the "descent of the Monad" at the moment of conception. This is the first step. The second step is the period of gestation. The third Step is the moment of Quickening, or first independent foetal life.

36 The new human being makes another advance. The first Step is Birth into the Middle Chamber, the world, situate between the hidden worlds microcosmically, of the maternal womb and the equally hidden world of spirit that lies beyond that of Matter. The Second Step is that of walking, which is independent movement from place to place unaided and "on his own." The Third Step is Speech, by which he makes known his needs and expresses the desires born of the activity of his astral vehicle. The Fourth Step is Adolescence, at which time he attains the power of an independent creator of his kind and species. The Fifth Step is the attainment of his mental majority, at which time he assumed to be so well verst in the use of the "I" Consciousness that he is an individually responsible member of society.

37 Having served his apprenticeship as an embryo human, and having successfully passed the tests of a fellow-craft in the world, he makes his last advance in mortal life, to the Third Division thereof. The First Step in this last advance is the recognition of his Moral Accountability. The Second Step is the assumption of his full share of Personal Responsibility. The Third Step is Marriage, symbolic of the unity of human polarities. The Fourth Step is the exercise of mature Discrimination. The Fifth Step is the realization of the necessity for human Co-Operation. The Sixth Step is—Death—a new birth, for it leads to his Raising by the Master of the Celestial Lodge into the Seventh Step, Resurrection.

38 Geometrically, the plan of the Great Pyramid is the squaring of the circle. Ethically the plan of Freemasonry is the squaring of the circle of human life. The path from the Ground Floor of the Great Pyramid out to the surface of the structure, pointed directly to the Pole Star at the time of building. The Path of the Enterd Apprentice from the Ground Floor out to and thru the surface world or superficial environment should be equally well oriented toward that star which is Truth, immutable and unvarying, by which, as a luminary, the whole course of human life should be guided.

39 The Attentive Ear, the Instructive Tongue and the Faithful Breast are precious jewels that each Mason is expected to possess. Until he does possess them he cannot truthfully declare himself to be a Mason. The Faithful Breast represents the inner faculties, the Spiritual Principle in Man. The Attentive Ear is the channel by which and thru which impressions are received by the inner from the outer. The Instructive Tongue is the channel by which the inner expresses to the outer. The three constitute another phase of the triune plan of activity, cosmic and mundane, even individual, and show man's analogy as a microcosm to the Great Plan of the Macrocosm.

40 The Working Tools of the Enterd Apprentice are the 24-inch Gauge and the Common Gavel. In the ceremony of conferring them, explanations are given which satisfy the requirements of the time and place. We must call the initiate's attention to a salient fact in connection with them. The 24 inch Gauge is an instrument of division. The Common Gavel is an instrument of cleavage,—breaking up, and can be used either constructively in putting together or destructively in breaking apart. In the principle of division, the Enterd Apprentice has his attention directed to a fundamental necessity, whether he understands or apprehends it at the time, or not. It is the necessity of a proper valuation of Time as a specific concept. We have long surmised that there is something in consciousness besides length, bredth and thickness.

41 As this something, elusive in its nature, has approacht nearer to our inner faculties, we have termed it the Fourth Dimension. As we learn more and more about the Fourth Dimension we become able, by degrees, to demonstrate its actuality. Times and Space concepts have resulted which have materially alterd our ideas of the universe. The 24 Inch Gauge represents, besides the usual explanation, four intervals of six inches each. Each four, represents a time and space concept; one of length, another of bredth, a third of thickness and a fourth of Penetrability. Without this last and Fourth Dimensional concept, we cannot logically understand what is meant by omnipresence of Deity. Each quarternary of six inches represents a double tri-unity or trinity, the positive and negative expression of a triad.

42 These Four Triads, in dual expression constitute the "Triads of the Supernals," the Absolute, Supreme Being and Solar Logoi in positive and negative expression; the Father, Son and Holy Ghost in masculine and feminine expression (hence the Marific principle, the Mary's Sons in Masonry); the Body, Soul and Spirit in dual expression, male and female in biologic Man, and the Ego, Conscious and Sub-Conscious Minds in Real Man, in hermaphroditic expression.

43 The Plumb, Square and Level, are the Working Tools of the Fellow-Craft and have been explained in a previous lesson (No. 2). For the Master Mason, all the working tools of masonry become symbolic, but more especially the Trowel. The Compasses are dedicated in special measure to the Degree, but the Trowel enshrines a special significance. In operative usage, it is the instrument whereby the cement is spread that binds an entire structure into one unified fabric. In Masonry, similarly, it is used to spread the cement of brotherly love and affection. For this reason it is allocated to the Master, for it is the hand of the Master that is felt operatively thru all the degrees of the Lodge. The Master alone is in the position to cement all factions, individual with individual and all individual brothers to their Lodge and to the Craft it represents and of which it is a unit part.

44 The Trowel is, therefore, peculiarly a symbol of the universality which is the basic principle of Freemasonry, as we have strest in previous lessons. Universality, as exemplified by the Trowel, is not only the principle which, like true cement, binds together the entire Craft, it is the vital power that fortifies it against decay, disintegration and ultimate destruction, for while internal differences of opinion are bound to make their mark as time passes and cause modifications in the general aspect of the Fraternity, nevertheless, like the wonderful cement used by the Roman builders whose secret remains as yet undiscovered, the strength of universality preserves the structure of Freemasonry impregnably against the ravages of time.

45 The wages of the Fellow-Craft are Corn, Wine and Oil, symbolizing, respectively, Nourishment, Refreshment and Joy. These are products of the Vegetable Kingdom, in which are incorporated the essential vital principles of the kingdom. In the corn are food values for the physical Temple of Man. In the oil are food values that are utilized particularly by the glandular factors in the body, corresponding to the Etheric Temple of Man. In the Wine, the active factor is the Pure Spirit of the Vegetable Kingdom, which goes directly to those principles in Man that manifest in raising his mental attitude and his general tone; in fact, to use a common expression, it "cheers man and brightens his spirit."

46 These wages, by which, symbolically, the Mason sustains life, teaches us by their status that we are not to look for the things that pertain to the Animal Kingdom and consequently to the Animal Nature in Man, to provide us with the means for attaining an higher status in life, on any plane. The wages of Masonic workmen are paid in pabulum that applies to the inner man, not to his external environment. This is as it should be and in keeping with the ethical status of the Institution.

47 The principal business of the new born child is carried on in his "Ground Floor" or lower bodily division. It is principally a matter of organic growth. In this growth, the Foundation is laid and the Constitution developt which will form the base of action of the man-to-be. In the Enterd Apprentice Degree, the Foundation is laid and the ethical Constitution developt on which the Mason-to-be will base his activities.

48 So far as the Drama of Freemasonry is concerned, in our opinion it is simply the amplification of the Osirian Legend, as enacted symbolically in the Great Pyramid initiations. In fact, all the arcane dramas known to us are but amplifications of that original, the Masonic being that the Hebraization of the Egyptian mythos, a mythos that had an origin in truth and concrete fact. That Hiram Abiff actually existed is an historical fact, proved by the external evidence of recent archæological discoveries, in which images of that personage have been recovered, and while grotesque, they nevertheless testify to the culture, crude tho it was, of the times.

49 One notable feature must be mentioned en passant. All Masons will admit and agree that no matter how many years may elapse in absence from Lodge, nevertheless, the Mason seldom forgets his Masonry. As a member of examining committees, the author has observed this fact many times over. There are two reasons for this truth. First, Masonry uses a language peculiar to itself, that is quite the opposite from what the profane would naturally expect. This language fits nicely into the vocabulary of every Mason, regardless of his social or academic placement in life. This is another evidence of the universality of the Craft.

50 The second reason for the permanence of Masonic principles and ideas lies in the fact that, with masterly psychology, the teachings of Freemasonry are so simply exprest and logically conveyed, that they become at once a part of the initiate's sub-consciousness. There they remain as fixities so long as he exists in mortal expression, and, we have reason to believe, into at least a part of his immortal expression as well.

51 The man who has been duly initiated, passed and raised in a legitimate Lodge of Freemasonry, has incorporated into his physical, etheric and astral vehicles of expression definite laws that will affect him physiologically, psychologically and psychically. Body, Soul and Spirit find their respective forms of nourishment and stimulus in the principle made living fact in the course of one's Masonic career. The Monad is first prepared to be made Man, near the heart of its mother, in a place (the maternal womb) representing an antechamber to the outer world of physical experience. Man is first prepared to be made a Mason in his own heart and then in an antechamber adjoining the body of a just and duly constituted school of spiritual experience. In each case, the heart is the prime motivating factor, for man's first fœtal circulation derives from the maternal heart beats.

52 Freemasonry is, therefore, primarily a matter of the heart expressing thru spiritual experience, and as such it moves the Mason to acts of true charity, compassion, temperance, and justice thru his life career.

The Fisher King

The Fisher King is the guardian of the Grail, so called because the second guardian, Bron, fed his followers with a single fish from the Grail, emulating Christ's feeding of the five thousand with five loaves and two fishes.

Having received a wound which never heals, the King is kept in a state of suspended life, and the land around his castle becomes barren. Behind the figure of the wounded king is that of Christ himself, and his wound is supposed to have been inflicted by the spear of Longinus, the soldier who pierced Christ's side. The apostles were called by Christ 'fishers of men' (Mark 1:17) and Christ was represented in art as both fish and fisherman.

The Fisher King pierced in the thigh. Manuscript illustration from Le Roman du Saint-Graal, Ms. Add. 10,292, f.74, France, 14th c. Reproduced by permission of the British Library, London.

ORDERS OF CHIVALRY IN MODERN TIMES

The modern descendants of the orders of chivalry have been unkindly described by their detractors as being either mild, benevolent charitable institutions, or mutual aid societies composed of people who enjoy titles and dressing up. Those who have taken it upon themselves to defend these orders claim that some of them have an esoteric side dedicated to the spiritual development of an elite who work quietly and without fanfare for the evolution of humanity. To their credit, the still-active traditional orders have remained discreet in the face of assertions made both by their detractors and their defenders.

The Order of the Knights of Malta, after many vicissitudes, exists today with headquarters in Rome. Sometime after his expulsion from Malta by Napoleon, von Hempesch abdicated his position as Grand Master in favour of the Russian Tsar Paul I, and subsequently died in poverty in Montpellier, France, in 1803. After his abdication there followed a period of confusion during which the post of Grand Master was abolished.

In 1803 Pope Pius VII appointed Jean Tommasi as head of the Order. Throughout the nineteenth century the Knights of the Order pressed continually but without success to be given back the island of Malta. The headquarters of the Order was established in Rome in 1834 after the Russian Commanders of the Order were persuaded to give up their claims to primacy. During the period which followed there were continuous difficulties with the papacy. These were settled in 1961 when the Order adopted a new constitution.

Today* the Order of the Knights of Malta comprises some 9,000 members throughout the world. The activities of the Order are now essentially charitable and humanitarian. The Order has diplomatic relations with some 42 countries, mostly in Western Europe and Latin America (with the exception of the United Kingdom and the Scandinavian countries.)

Apart from a number of ecclesiastics, the membership of the Order is divided into three classes. Members of the first are known as Knights of Justice. These are members who have taken vows of obedience, poverty and chastity, accepted particular rules and are subject to Canon Law. The second category are called Knights of Obedience. These are those who have formally undertaken to follow a Christian life according to the spirit of the Order. Finally there are those who have not given a formal undertaking but who have agreed to live a Christian life and to participate in the humanitarian activities of the Order.

Contrary to the Order of the Knights Templar, the Order of the Knights of Malta has never admitted to any esoteric activities. However, it is believed that at least one of the Grand Masters of the Knights of Malta, Manuel Pinto de Fonseca, was a high initiate of the Temple. The story goes that it was Pinto who initiated the famous Count Cagliostro into the Tradition of the temple.

As far as the Teutonic Knights are concerned, in 1809 Napoleon abolished the Order in all the countries of the Rhine Confederation. The Order continued however in Austria and its headquarters were transferred to Vienna. In 1840 communal living was established among the clergy and a female branch instituted. After a papal decision in 1929, the Order dropped its links with chivalry and returned to its original aims of promoting charitable activities largely in Austria, South Tyrol, West Germany and Yugoslavia. In 1938 the National Socialist Government abolished the Order. It was reinstated after the second World War, and now continues modestly in Germany as a religious community devoted to charity, teaching and good works.

As mentioned previously, towards the end of the Middle Ages kings and princes had begun the practice of creating secular orders with the purpose of forming elite groups bound to the royal person. These orders had nothing in common with the old institution of chivalry except for titles, the act of dubbing and the awarding of insignias. A few of these honorary orders have survived into modern times.

In some countries, particularly in the United States of America, there are many fraternal organizations of a social, benevolent character which describe themselves as orders of knighthood, but which do not have or claim to have links with the tradition of chivalry.

As far as the Order of the Knights Templar is concerned, from time to time various orders have sprung up, especially in France, all claiming direct lineage from the original Order founded by Hughes de Payns. Today in France there are all kinds of orders, some pure in intention, some less so, and others quite ridiculous in their pretensions. Not infrequently, many of these orders, instead of getting on with the job in hand, spend a great deal of time and energy deriding other orders whom they consider to have a lesser claim to legitimacy. It is not my purpose to discredit any particular order. I believe in the old biblical admonition, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

That being said, for those persons seeking a Templar order today, the choice is not an easy one. No matter which order is chosen one is bound to hear tales originating in other orders of some kind of unethical behaviour by those in charge of the order of one's choice. There are some orders in which the officers in charge are administratively and intellectually capable, but lack the spiritual radiation which can transform the spiritual lives of members in concrete ways. There are others whose leaders are honourable but continue to adhere rigidly to procedures and practices drawn from the Middle Ages. In this kind of situation what often happens is that dynamic members continuously leave, taking whatever little spirit there is, leaving the letter and the form to a few moribund chiefs who would probably die of shock if anything else happened. There are also situations where orders are run by individuals whose personal lives do not seem to correspond to the lofty ideals they preach. Sometimes a very capable and inspired leader arrives on the scene and is given control by a grateful membership only to find that he and the order are never allowed by other orders to live down the misdeeds or shortcomings of his predecessor.

Against this background the picture for aspirants, particularly in continental Europe, where orders abound, might not seem a very inspiring one. In practice the situation is not as bad as it appears. One thing the aspirant should realize is that one of the first tests he will encounter on the path to spiritual development is that of discernment or discrimination.

In the English-speaking world, where there are few if any operative Templar orders, the situation is much easier. The main reason for the scarcity of Templar orders has quite simply been the question of language. Nearly all existing Templar Orders originate in France. Even where branches exist in countries outside France, the senior members of the local branches must be able to communicate with headquarters in French. Although in some ways this has been a blessing, in the sense that non-European seekers have been largely spared the growing pains of the Templar revival, it is at the same time a pity that the immense body of spiritual knowledge available to the Templar Tradition is not yet accessible to the English- speaking (and other) regions of the world.

The difficulty caused by the language barrier has likewise plagued the growth of the Martinist Order in English-speaking countries; happily however, since 1985, this situation has been addressed and the problem is slowly being overcome.

I will now give a brief summary covering those contributors who I feel have had a predominant influence on the Western Tradition. It follows that there are many groups, movements and individuals both in the past as well as in modern times which time and space does not allow me to mention, but which have also played their roles in adding to our experience of humanity's long quest for the Grail. To cite one: the Theosophical Society, since I feel their inspiration more properly belongs to the Oriental Tradition.

It will be seen that some of the strands we will examine have co-existed with the Templars, and from all indications have contributed to the spiritual knowledge gathered by that Order. In turn, a number of the strands have themselves been directly or indirectly enriched by the Order.

I will begin with the Kabalists.

THE ESOTERIC TRADITION AND THE TEMPLE

THE KABALISTS

In this introduction I will briefly recap some of what you have already been taught, and also step forward on some new ground, all of which will be in preparation of things to come. The word Kabalah, also written Qabbala or Cabala, as you know, is of Hebrew origin. It has been translated as "to receive" but means literally "the tradition". As the combination of these two ideas suggest, the Kabalah has been essentially an oral tradition within which the secrets of Jewish mysticism are passed on through initiation into teachings and practice under a guide experienced in the system. The Kabalah is described as a tradition in the sense that it claims to represent the esoteric part of the oral Torah revealed to Moses. In fact Kabalism includes the entire range of esoteric doctrine and practice which had arisen during the first and second centuries of the Christian era and developed particularly from AD 1200 onwards.

In the period between the third and sixth centuries, a work appeared which came to be known as the Sepher Yetzirah or Book of Creation. Perhaps you have obtained a copy. This is the earliest text of speculative Jewish mysticism, and it describes the process of creation in terms of 10 primordial emanations called Sephiroth. The work links the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet to the 10 Sephiroth to form symbolic keys to a comprehensive philosophical system called the 32 Secret Paths of Wisdom.

Dissatisfied with the traditional interpretation of Judaism, certain Kabalists rebelled against the excessive rationalism of the Jewish philosophers. They began to create a new dimension of religious experience in the thirteenth century. This was a decisive period in the development of the kabalah and was due to the work of the Jewish mystics or Provence in France during the second half of the twelfth century, and in Spain, especially in the region of Gerona, during the first half of the thirteenth century.

In the last quarter of the thirteenth century, the many strands of kabalism merged in a work which made its appearance under the title Zohar or Book of Splendour. The exact origin of the book is obscure, and there is controversy as to whether it was the rediscovered work of Simeon ben Yohai, a famous second century teacher, or a fourteenth century compilation by Moses de León from Guadalajara in Spain.

In the fourteenth century Joseph Gikatila wrote The Gates of Light, which further developed the doctrine of the Zohar by linking the Divine Names of God to the individual Sephiroth. The expulsion of the Jews from Spain in 1492 led to a revival of interest in the mysticism of the kabalah. This revival was concentrated in the little known town of Safed situated in Upper Galilee in that part of Palestine which is now Israel. Some of the famous names associated with this revival were those of Moses Cordovero and Isaac Luria. The last-mentioned made an important contribution to Kabalistic philosophy. His influence was very strong in seventeenth and eighteenth century Jewish history, and he is considered to have indirectly prepared the ground for that popular form of Jewish mysticism which developed among the eighteenth century Jews of Eastern Europe known as Hasidism.

Since the last half of the nineteenth century, Kabalistic teachings, especially the practical aspects, were modernized by a number of practitioners, including W. Wynn Westcott and S. L. MacGregor Mathers in the late 1800s, and Arthur Edward Waite, Aleister Crowley, Dion Fortune (Violet Firth), and Israel Regardie in the early part of the 1900s. In the 1960s, W. A. Butler continued the work of his modern predecessors of adopting and popularizing the Kabalah. Some Kabalists active in the 1980s include Gareth Knight, W. E. Gray and Z'ev Ben Shimon Halevi.

Let us refresh our minds. According to Kabalists, the Supreme Being, which is an Absolute and inscrutable Unity, contains all within Him. This Unity is Ain Soph, meaning the Infinite One, the inherent creative principle. Such a lofty being, say the Kabalists, could not create directly since it had no finite qualities. It therefore created indirectly by means of a series of 10 spheres from within the Infinite Light itself. These 10 emanations are called Sephiroth or Splendors of the Infinite One. The creative principle descends from Kether, the first created Sephirah (singular of Sephiroth), following a serpent-like path down through a series of Sephiroth arranged in triads. Each Sephirah manifests progressive states of destiny until the lowest sephirah, Malkuth or physical life, is reached.

The disposition of the 10 Sephiroth in a particular pattern linked by 22 paths is called Otz Chiim or the Tree of Life. According to the Kabalists the same arrangement exists in miniature within man's psycho-spiritual organism.

Historical accounts of the development of Kabalism have now given much information on what is generally called the Practical Kabalah. In the beginning, this aspect was kept secret and only transmitted orally, but over the centuries information on practical Kabalistic techniques was gradually leaked, and when the secret teachings of the Order of the Golden Dawn (which we will review shortly) were published in the late 1930's, the practical Kabalah became public knowledge.

In brief, the practical Kabalah teaches that the 10 spheres of Sephiroth and the 22 connecting paths, which together form the Tree of Life, are a symbolic system of relationships which can be manipulated either subjectively or objectively using certain techniques. For example, using the tree subjectively, one can, by dynamizing and manipulating the corresponding centers within oneself, become in resonance or harmony with the forces of the Cosmos, i. e. with the different aspects of God symbolized by the different Sephiroth. This would bring about a kind of psycho-spiritual integration or illumination.

The Kabalists teach that the Tree can also be used objectively. By this they mean that initiates of the system can, through the use of rituals based on Kabalistic symbols and relationships, manipulate cosmic forces which can also affect the external life of the practitioner, including persons and events. Of course they also teach that if the powers obtained in this way are not used altruistically, Nature will exact drastic payment for the selfish abuse of such forces.

It is certain that the Knights Templar obtained access to Kabalistic teachings. As was the case with Islamic Sufism, the rise of the Templars coincided with the development of Judaic Kabalism. The spiritual esotericism of both Islam and Judaism were united with that of Christianity through the Templars, who were the de facto spiritual heirs of the early Church Fathers.

Beloved Companions and Seekers of the Grail!

THE QUEST OF THE HOLY GRAIL

Lecture Four : The Meaning of the Quest

"Nel Mezzo del cammin di nostra vita..." Dante begins.

> "When I had journeyed half of our life's way I found myself within a shadowed forest, for I had lost the path that does not stray. Ah, it is hard to speak of what it was, that savage forest, dense and difficult, which even in recall renews my fear: so bitter -- death is hardly more severe!"

And, of course, for Dante the way out of the forest of lost direction is an interior way leading through the heart of the earth, and beyond that to the Mount of Purgation and the way that leads among the stars. (Compare the V.I.T.R.I.O.L. -- visit the interior of the earth and, by rectification, reveal the hidden stone -- of the alchemists).

In any case as we read in Dante's forest, or of the situation of the Grail, we should have, if we are reading with spiritual sensitivity, that odd experience -- like that of the boy Balthazar who discovers, in Ende's Neverending Story, that he is himself a character in the book he is reading -- that we are reading the story of our own life.

If in the Grail story the inner kingdom is separated from the outer, Logres from Britain, and the Grail is lost to the Table of Logres, and the ruler of the inner land is himself sick with a suffering which shadows his land, it is also true -- as we must now realize if we are to proceed -- that our inner life is separated from our outer and both lie under the shadow of this separation. If the Grail stories tell of Broceliande, the Forest Sauvage, through which one must pass -- and in which, as in Dante's "shadowed forest", no way is clear, -- so also we all know, or have known or will know, the experience of having lost our way in life and of seeing the world around us as, perhaps, a forest of symbols to which we have no key of interpretation.

"Jesus said unto them,

"When you make the two one,
and when you make the inner as the outer and the outer as the inner and the upper as the lower, then you shall enter the Kingdom"

Thomas : 22

In these words the Lord defines an inner journey which precisely reflects the knight's goal of restoring the land of Logres and attaining the vision of the Grail. (Let us note parenthetically that the Gospel of Thomas, which was one of the texts found at Nag Hammadi, while not included in the New Testament, contains [and is perhaps the source of] many verses that are in the Four Gospels, and therefore is at an entirely higher degree of reliability, in relation to what Jesus actually said, than are the other apocryphal gospels, which seem to be speculative and written much later.)

Jesus said "Be wanderers." Thomas : 42

A quest is a journey in which the inner and outer worlds are brought together and organized around a goal. If we know a little Kabalah we are acquainted with the doctrine of the "four worlds" and are aware that the significance of things changes as they are perceived at different levels. At the level, or world of Assiah (our physical world), only actions may be seen, not causes, and so the philosophy of materialism may be said to accurately describe the world from the point of view of Assiah. This is the shadowed forest where one sees no connections between things — and the way is lost.

> "The lower the individual's spiritual attainment, the more divided one feels from the rest of existence... The Kabalists stress, however, that as we begin to achieve higher states of awareness, we will increasingly see the unity among the apparently haphazard events around us."
>
> Hoffman, The Way of Splendor

The role of the symbols of the quest is, then, that they serve as the framework around which one can reorganize one's perception of the world.

For the Chinese an object of quest was the hidden palace of Hsi Wang Mu which was located somewhere beyond the northern and western mountains beside the "Lake of Gems". This quest is still further developed by the Tibetans as the quest for the hidden land of Shambhala. At the center of this land in a park are reserved the supreme mandalas of the Kalacakra and it is said of these mystic patterns that "just seeing them bestows the supreme attainment."

Therefore the devotee organizes his life around the journey to Shambhala which it is said can be accomplished in three ways: Geographically, which is said to be the hardest. (Though there are many guidebooks, they were not [as might be expected] entirely clear.) (2) By Meditation or, as it were, astral projection; or finally (3) by dreams of the hidden kingdom.

If Shambhala is visualized as a hidden kingdom in Central Asia, it also represents a hidden region of the mind. As Edwin Bernbaum says

> "We have lost the innocence that enabled us to see the world directly ... We have to go forward to a new and wiser innocence that combines the wonder of a child with the wisdom of a sage. Our interpretation of the guidebooks to Shambhala suggests that we can do this by living our lives as journeys toward a deeper awareness of ourselves and the world around us..."

A more literary form of the quest is the description, in The Conference of the Birds by the Sufi poet Farid ud-Din Attar, of the spiritual life as a journey across seven symbolic valleys in search of a king known as the Simurgh.

Now the Grail Quest is in one way completely unique and in another way it is similar to all the other spiritual quests. The similarity lies in that, as with the other quests, the follower of the way is, by his concentration on the object of the quest and its symbols, freed from the mundane world of dead materialism, and brought into a higher experience of the world where he can begin to see the connectedness of things and the operation of Providence. In the Grail stories there appears on page after page the word "adventure" which represents this experience.

> "Perceval thou hast conquered ... enter this ship and go wheresoever adventure leads thee..."
> "My sons, depart from here and go where adventure leads you..."

As P. M. Matarasso puts it, "in a general way adventure represents the random unpredictable element in life. To this the Quest adds a further dimension ... the adventure is above all God working and manifesting Himself in the physical world ... there runs through the stories like an unbroken thread the idea of providential guidance which man can either accept, refuse, or simply fail to see." The Perlesvaus takes this concept so far as to say that when a questing knight has passed through an area, and experienced the adventures it has to offer, the land itself -- its topography, castles, dangers and so on -- is changed so that at his return the knight will find it different and providing different adventures. And it may be said, in general, that as we stop living on the surface of reality, and begin to see the possibility of "adventure", we find more and more the appearance of meaningful pattern and coincidence marking the way. On the other hand, of course, one may fall below mundane reality, as it were, into the paranoid's world of negative connection -- a diminished, rather than enhanced reality. It is perhaps symptomatic of our times that this falling away from reality is generally accepted as an object of study, while the raising to a higher organization of reality is ignored or dismissed -- however it is with this that we are concerned. In many of the Grail stories an asking of a question is crucial, as we shall see, to the achievement of the quest. John Matthews relates that nicely to the condition of everyone in this way,

> "Thus a great part of the task for the Grail Seeker is to look within at the reality behind the world of appearance and to bring that reality out into the open. Thus as when the question is asked by the seekers and the wounds of king and land are healed, we must be able to stand in the Waste Land and question what we appear to see -- the words 'quest and 'question' are here synonymous."

And we may also add that the movement upward towards the roots of the worlds brings us to the place where we can participate in the healing of things, as the Grail stories show. So Rabbi Luzzato says, "the Highest Wisdom perceives and knows what is best to rectify all creation," and the Kabalists regard that their meditation on "unification" helps to knit together the worlds. And of course there is similar teaching in the Martinist tradition and, indeed, in the general Christian tradition.

Thus far, we repeat, the Grail Quest is similar, or at least analogous, to other spiritual quests. Where it is unique is that it is not just a story, or inspiring myth, but is rooted in the overwhelming reality of the Eucharist as we showed and shall later develop further. In this reality is not only the promise but also the achievement of the inner and outer worlds, of that which is above and that which is below. All quest stories, whatsoever, tend towards this one thing, this Grail, which was also an actual cup on an actual table. The Grail story, then, is the central quest of all because it is true on all levels of reality from the most subtle to the most dense.

However, before following deeper into these considerations, we shall return to the Grail stories and meet their central characters.

RAISING

The Esoterism of Masonic Resurrection

"Some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?
—1 Cor. 15:35.

THE moment when a Master Mason is raised is, perhaps, one of the supremest moments in his whole mortal life experience. Tho he may receive initiation into many cults and crafts, none of them compel the same mental response and reaction as the ceremony thru which every Freemason must pass ere he can take his place with his fellow craftsmen as an equal in every sense of the word.

2 Raising or elevating, bringing forth, stepping up, resurrecting or lifting, in some form or other, has formed the principal motif in every religion and philosophy the world has ever known, barring none. Back in ancient Egypt, the wonderful "Chapter of the Coming Forth by Day" in the Book of the Dead, is replete with the various applications of this great principle to individual and even collective human life.

3 All the arcane bodies of antiquity, justly famous, which have never been replaced by any of the ingeniously devised modern cults, many of which claim a silly antiquity they cannot substantiate, had, as their chief climax, the raising of the Candidate from simulated, and sometimes almost real death.

4 The whole structure of the Christian faith is built, not so much upon the life, work and activities of Jesus, the Christ, as upon the promise held out and the hope fortified, of life beyond the grave, a belief held by every race the world has known, and this is true regardless of how widely separated many races have been, especially in bygone centuries when the transmission of news and teachings of any sort were matters of slow and laborious exploration and long distance travel.

5 In view of its ethical foundation, we would be justified in expecting to find in the Masonic curriculum, something by way of a principle that would give added strength to a concept so universal in its scope as to know neither time, place or source of origin amongst all the world's humanity. We should find this principle regardless of what we do know about the slow processes by which the ultimate idea became crystallized into an universal human belief, for which men were ready to die; which made them ready to die and to die happily.

6 Masonry does provide such a reinforcement of the general idea, divested of any and all trappings of doctrine or dogma. The ceremony of raising may be conducted by a group of officers in evening clothes or by a working cast in full costume, supposedly of the time of the building of King Solomon's Temple. It makes little difference, except in its appeal to the æsthetic polarities demonstrated as between Lodges which delight in plain, well rendered simple work, and those which seek to develop ultra ritualism.

7 One of the symbolic names for the Great Pyramid was "The House (or Mountain) of Light". Herodotus seems to have known something of the rites which were celebrated in that historic structure, a structure, some cultists claim, that was erected a matter of over two hundred thousand years ago, but it is only fair to state that there is nothing in history, nothing in geological or archaeological science, and nothing in human reason to support such an hypothesis. Probobly erected somewhat later than 2170 B. C., the King's Chamber or Sanctum Sanctorum was the scene of many a mystic drama. There is reason to believe, however, that the actual raising or restoration to consciousness took place in the Temple of the Sphinx, which was connected with the Great Pyramid. The body of the Sphinx is that of a lion, and the Lion's Paw figured symbolically in imparting strength to the Candidate so close to the borderline of life.

8 Restored to consciousness, the final bringing to Light took place in the Great Pyramid itself, the House of Light, into which no ray of sunlight ever penetrated after the completion of the mighty structure. Ceremonial or symbolic raising must convey the idea of an elevation unto a spiritual plane of life and consciousness exterior to the physical. While the Great Pyramid is, of course, upon the earth, the King's Chamber is elevated far above the earth's surface and the Candidate, seeing no ray of sun, but only such symbolic light as was devised at the time, was enabled to focus his consciousness, newly awakened, on a spiritual plane most cunningly yet aptly contrived.

9 In essentials, the process of raising a brother to all the Light that can be conferd upon him in any human undertaking or school of initiation, preserves the landmarks of spiritual truth and esoteric value entrusted by the now extinct Schools of the Lesser Mysteries of antiquity. The great and salient feature of the process of raising was, however, developt chiefly by the Alchemists, who applied the Principle involved, not alone to the raising of the human spirit, but to the raising of many lower states of vibration to higher ones in all the kingdoms antecedent to the human.

10 Thus, the esoteric value of the ceremony of raising consists and inheres in its more truly spiritual and occult (or hidden) character of TRANSMUTATION. When death occurs, life does not and cannot end. Having had no beginning an ending is inconceivable. Death, as far as finality means, is simply the end of a given form, or set of forms. The life Principle is even more active than ever. It is free, and in its free state, it is invisible to physical sensoria. It becomes tangible only when we become sensible of its presence thru contact with it in an instrument thru which it can function.

11 We cannot see electricity. But by establishing contact with it, we become instantaneously sensible of its presence tho still we cannot see it. A huge dynamo may be revolving at a terrific speed and developing potential power, but that power does not become appreciable in any way unless and until we make a demand upon it by establishing contact with it in circuit with it. Then the potential energy developt gets to work busily.

12 Religion and philosofy are quite right in basing their chiefest visions upon the principle of raising. Philosophy seeks ever to raise the human mind and understanding to higher levels of comprehension. Religion seeks to raise the human spirit from hopeless crystallization into material concepts and from a dull, sodden, hopeless status to a bright, happy, optimistic outlook thru a clear realization that life is eternal and that therefore, whatsoever we do today, is worth while because it is a part of the eternal plan so far as we individually are concerned. So, everything counts. Everything in life becomes of supreme importance, for an eternal happiness is due us only as we earn it by conscious, well directed effort in the here and now.

13 Our wonderful progress in the present century is due, solely to the fact that, after centuries of ignorance, man discovered the way to raise iron from its softer status to the hardness and temper of steel. This is consequently the Age of Steel. It has raised or stept up our culture a thousandfold.

14 Masonry, following out the plan of the ages as exprest thru religion and philosofy, continues to stress the importance of the process of raising, with the result that, by keeping this momentous principle ever uppermost in the minds of its sons, the Craft has undoubtedly led in bringing the human mind to its present status of culture, wherein it is penetrating matter, space, time, dimension and cosmos as never before in human history. Why and how? Simply because, as the human mind is raised continually to higher and higher levels, it entertains higher concepts, which, thru study and concentrated purpose, must eventually find their ways into tangible expression.

15 Over sixty-five per cent of the principles we were formerly, and not so many years ago at that, required to accept on faith, we now know to be fact. As the human mind has been stept up, year by year, it has reacht out into the unseen, and many seeming mysteries of antiquity are the child's play of the laboratory today. In other words, we are undergoing, mentally and physically, a process of continuous transmutation. Our physical bodies are far more sensitive today than were those of our progenitors. That is one reason for the seeming multiplicity of new diseases, yet even in this matter, we are discovering that Mind is a comparatively all potent principle in healing that is fast superseding, in many instances, the healing mission of the materia medica.

16 It is true, of course, that the church also has taught the principle of raising, but it has taught and enforst it doctrinally and dogmatically in a way that has caused reason to revolt and common sense to question the authority of its teacher, usually ending up by showing the teacher the "better way." Freemasonry has strest the principle of raising or transmutation, without doctrine or dogma, in a simple manner that has made and continues to make, regardless of his cultural status, a most powerful impression of lasting nature upon the mind of the candidate.

17 At this writing, we are not concerned with the particular manner in which the various candidates interpret the Masonic ceremony individually; the point is, that the continuous emfasis Masonry puts upon the principle of advancing to a higher spiritual level of consciousness is absolutely certain to have its effect, an effect that is equally certain to "work out" or manifest externally in the world's affairs in a constructive way.

18 The man who is continually seeking to attain higher phases or planes of consciousness is bound to reflect his mental attitude in his works in some way or other. The mind that soars, will achieve things pertaining to the higher plane and then seek to objectify them on the plane of his sensible environment. The world progresses and is vastly better because of the increasing group of those who do seek the higher things,—the "more excellent way"—the "things that are excellent."

19 As we look over the not formidable list of those who have become really great actors do we realize what it is that has made them great? It is not the donning of the costumes and the names of illustrious personages whom they have temporarily represented and portrayed. It has been due to their individual ability to put themselves into the actual character and individuality of the personages they represented. They were those personages temporarily, and in becoming, for a brief space only, the illustrious ones of earth, they rose to the occasion so fully that they took on, as by induction, the nature, character and merits of such personages. They lived the lives of the illustrious ones over again for them.

20 At a certain time in his career, every Mason has a similar opportunity. To the extent that he can grasp the solemnity and importance of the situation and rise to the opportunity presented, he derives a fleeting illumination that cannot fail to make its permanent impress upon his inner consciousness. This furnishes a stimulus, brief we admit, but powerful enuf to start him upon a new pathway thru life, and, to his credit be it said, that the average Mason does rise to this opportunity in some degree, as witness the ever-increasing strength and importance Freemasonry is assuming in the world of human affairs. Example is nowerful. Example is doubly powerful when the neofite enacts that which it represents in his personal and individual sphere.

21 The Three Great Ones, whom the Masonic neofite has for an example and whom he is called upon to exemplify, represent respectively, Wisdom, Art and Craft. These three factors united, produce what we call culture or civilization, and the degree of unity effected between them is the measure of the culture or civilization attained. Freemasonry, it may be seen from this, is a powerful factor and leverage for cultural attainment and its influence as a civilizing factor, standing pre-eminently for education, patronage of applied art, and the encouragement of craftsmanship thru wise principles, has been ever apparent in the entire course of its brilliant history.

22 The Masonic neofite gives the attentive ear to a dissertation on sight, and learns something of an All-Seeing Eye. This symbol is one of the many that have been appropriated by several modern fraternal and beneficiary orders without, however, the slightest reference in their rituals to the real meaning of them. The All-Seeing Eye is usually assumed to represent the omnipresent and transcending vision of Deity and ritualism refers to it accordingly. But there is much more to the symbol of the Eye. The All-Seeing Eye does represent the ever-present vision of Deity but it also represents the ever-present visualization of the All-Seeing Eye within each human being.

23 In every human individual, situate in the brain, between the caudad ends of the thalami, and occupying the depression between the two superior quadrigeminal bodies, is a tiny body about ½ inch in diameter. It is called the Pineal Body or Gland, one of the most important of the endocrines. It is reddish in color and is connected with the Third Ventricle, projecting downwards between the Superior Corpora Quadrigemina, which are the centers of sight. It is covered by the velum interpositum, which intervenes between it and the splenium of the corpus callosum.

24 The Pineal Gland (shaped like a fir cone—pinus), has long been regarded by anatomists as a vestigial organ or rudimentary relic. It represents a cyclopean eye, and is assumed to be an atavism from some extinct ancestral vertebrate, homologous with the parietal organ, and resembling a molluscan eye of a living species of Prosaurian. Now, while the pineal eye has been found to be, instead of an atavism, a most important gland of secretion, with marvelous effects upon the human organism at certain periods of its career, it is, without actually being an active eye in the physical sense, a true eye to all intents and purposes, but functioning on the inner, rather than the outer planes.

25 Scientifically speaking, the pineal undoubtedly occupied a position up front, where it could exercise its properties of vision externally, but with the gadually changing conformation of the developing human skull, it has receded anatomically to its present position. But it still has the powers of vision, if the individual takes the pains to develop the consciousness of them. They are there and they are operative but we do not know or recognize them except thru fleeting visions we call hunches, intuitions, hallucinations of a kind and similar psychical phenomena.

26 The pineal gland is truly, in the light of recent discovery, a third eye. It is truly an All-Seeing Eye in each human individual who takes the trouble to develop requisite spiritual powers of a phase of vision that transcends ordinary physical eyesight. This "third eye" or organ of vision, located in the depths of the human brain, is the All-Seeing Eye that serves the Faithful Watcher who never slumbers or sleeps but who is ever active on the spiritual planes of being, the Ego. As the Ego is an Emanation, a "spark" from the Divine, the organ that serves it is not too distantly related to the All-Seeing Eye of Deity itself. Therefore, when we hear the dissertations on sight and the All-Seeing Eye in the Lodge, we may remind ourselves that it is not necessarily an eye somewhere "up in the clouds" that is watching over us.

It is an Eye, Divine in its essential attributes, that is watching over us right from within ourselves, where we are told by the sages to look for the Treasure of Treasures, and not elsewhere without us.

27 Almost co-eval with the idea of immortality itself, has been the concept of an All-Seeing Eye. The Hindus knew it as the Eye of Siva. The Tibetans have the Buddha of the Thousand Eyes. Ages before either of them, the Egyptians had the Tearful Eye of Isis, found so frequently upon the tombs and the various bas-reliefs. The symbol has been workt into Christian usage and Masonry has perpetuated the idea. But always, it has been the notion of an Eye observing humanity from without, and we now know that that is the wrong direction to look, for the truly spiritual must be sought by man within himself. The Great Light teaches us that the Kingdom of God and of Heaven is—not up in the air—but within us. God Himself is within us—not elsewhere—for "In Him we Live and Move and Have Our Being." Therefore, as we exist only in and thru Him, He also must inhere in every atom or proton of our structure.

28 Under the symbol of a letter of the alfabet prominently displayed, the Mason contemplates the name of Deity. Like all the symbols of the Craft, however, it means more than simply the name of God. God is the contraction of Good. God expresses all good; evil, so-called, being the polarity of good that expresses misdirected energy. Electricity, perfectly good in its nature and character, can be powerfully constructive when properly directed. It can be equally destructive when misdirected. So, in order to distinguish between the two polarities, the Mason contemplates Deity as the Great Geometrician, by which name he seeks to comprehend the Deific attributes and activities as those of constructivity, for order is always constructive and geometry is a synonym for order.

29 It was in his capacity as the Great Geometrician, that Deity brot order out of chaos and gave us a world in which we see exemplified the continuous and unvarying conformity to natural law which is really Deity in Manifestation. God geometrizes. That is, He always plans each law in such a manner and on such a basis that all subsequent involutionary or evolutionary process will act in steady and obedient conformity with and to it. For this reason, a planet a moment off time, would, in the course of ages, become a disaster-producer in cosmos. But from star to star-fish, everything obeys law—except Man, and he has to obey, willy nilly, certain laws he cannot defy. In his attempts to emulate Deity, Man has formulated laws for his own welfare, but unlike Deity, he cannot maintain strict conformity to them, either on his own part or that of his fellow-men.

30 As the Great Geometrician, God is comprehended somewhat in his creative aspect as the Great Architect, and Masonic symbolism employs the factors in architecture to a markt degre. Architectural features are ready and excellent exemplars of specific spiritual and esoteric truths, and it is vastly easier for some minds to gain a serious and proper concept of Deity when contemplating Him as a Builder, rather than as a Father or a Supreme Judge. Nevertheless, we must remember that in the Craft, names are sometimes employed to conceal as well as to reveal. The title of Great Geometrician, we understand to be merely the veil which conceals the secret, sacred and unpronounceable Name of Our Creator, not merely the Yod, He, Vau, He of the Hebrews, the AUM of the Easterns, or any of the fancifully mystical cognomens common to arcane students.

31 The secret, sacred name of God is unpronounceable, therefore it is also unprintable. It may be neither spoken nor written for it is not a word in the ordinary lexicografical sense. The real name of God is a vibration. It may be felt or senst by those whose lives are sufficiently upon a spiritual plane. It can be apprehended by those in ordinary planes of consciousness if they are able to respond to the power of art and beauty in Nature, as she expresses thru the Four Elements in their uncontrold and native status.

32 We gain some idea of what the name of God really is by referring to a previous lesson in this series (No. 4), wherein we discust the meaning of the Lost or Master's Word. By contemplating God as we best can understand Him thru His creative aspects, we shall place ourselves in a proper position to receive the unpronounceable but at least somewhat communicable Name which will prove potent to raise us to a higher plane of consciousness thru a higher ability to appreciate.

33 The All-Seeing Eye and the title of the Great Geometrician are, in themselves, sufficient leverage to raise the neofite to a higher level of conscious perception of the Divine Order of Nature and his individual place as a Co-Builder with Deity. Many a man has been lifted from the "slough of despond" by the sight of physical beauty in his environment, or the contemplation of the wonders of creation about him. Many have been "lifted up" to a status of true spiritual exaltation by the inward contemplation of the wonders of conscious existence thru the genius of a Deity who can be apprehended but not comprehended. The All-Seeing Eye within each of us will show us glimpses into the supernal planes if we "live the life" requisite for such advance visions. The name of the Great Geometrician will work its marvelous harmonic effect into the ruffled vibrations of the human soul, if we permit it to do so thru serious meditation and contemplation; not thru curiosity but thru desire for still further Light.

34 The moment a man is permitted to enter Freemasonry even upon the Entered Apprentice degree, he has been raised above the level of those of his associates not of the Fraternity. This is not to be interpreted as any concept of snobbish exclusiveness for Freemasonry is far from anything of the sort. It would be against its fundamental principles of universalism. But the man who becomes an Enterd Apprentice and then proceeds onward, takes upon himself responsibilities and duties to his fellow Masons and to all mankind as well, that his non-Masonic associates have not assumed. Therefore, of him who assumes much, shall much be expected and from his assumedly higher level of admitted and profest personal responsibility, the world will demand a contact that will permit a realization by others of the spiritual power he should, normally, develop thru living a life based upon and guided by active principles of conduct.

35 All thru the symbolic degrees of Freemasonry, the Candidate rises by his own energy, under guidance. He ascends the stairway to the Middle Chamber and comes to the place where he expects to be acknowledged a true Master Mason. But there comes a time when he can no longer raise himself and has to acknowledge the need of an active operative power higher than himself to raise him from an humble and lowly status to erect, conscious Manhood on the plane of Mastership.

36 In this symbolism, Freemasonry does but follow the plan of human life again. Step by step man raises himself, it may be from obscurity, or it may be from mediocrity to success. But, no matter how active and vigorous a man may be, there comes a time in every man's life when he is laid low by the forces against which he has struggled. We doubt if there is a man living who has not, at some time or other, not felt the need of the assistance of his fellow men in rising out of a critical situation. It seems to be a law of Nature that it shall be so.

37 We seldom rise thru our pleasures. We rise in life thru the experience that is born of suffering in some special way or of some special kind. We meet ruffians at every angle, not always in the hoofs and horns of Mephistopheles but more often in the evening clothes of assumedly polite society. Still more often the ruffians with whom one is called upon to contend the hardest and defend his integrity to the greatest extent, are ruffians the world does not see but whom we feel and sense within ourselves, for just as we are taught by the sages to seek the highest treasure within ourselves, so also, must we watch out for the lowest influences, for good and evil dwell together in this strangely complex creature, Man.

38 If it seems strange that good and evil are so closely associated, let us remember that the so-called Devil was, traditionally, an archangel in good standing, a Light-Bearer in the kingdom, who, thru pride and ambition, fell from his lofty estate and thereafter devoted himself to warfare against his erstwhile Sovereign. According to Tradition, but not by any means according to orthodox theology (which, thankfully, is quite fallible), the Devil is, aeons hence, to be transmuted thru his own efforts, back to his pristine status and restored to his rank amongst the celestial hierarchy.

39 Of course, this is merely Tradition, but, strangely enuf, it would be quite logical if it should prove to hold a cosmic truth already recognized by many students. For evil stirs up the forces of repulsion to such an extent that, sooner or later, they exterminate their source of origin and then the forces of attraction, light and constructivity, restore the original equilibrium.

40 This restoration of equilibrium is the reason for pain. It shows us the error of indulgence and becomes a penalty therefor, until repeld by the unpleasant effects we mistakenly thought would or might be pleasure, we turn upon the error or mistake itself and seek to rectify it or to destroy it by proper restitution of some sort. This is the esoteric truth of the saying in the Great Light that, "the wages of sin is death"—meaning, of course, the death of the sin itself, for we well know that every one who "sins" does not necessarily die therefor.

41 In the human Temple, there are Three Gates thru which the Real Self contacts the world and personalities external to himself. As in all mythology, yet quite truly so, Gates are guarded by both angels and demons. In the body, the demons or ruffians are, in the Head or East, Sense Illusion. In the West or lower part of the Temple, Lust. In the South, symbolically the heart, Desire. Illusion, Lust, Desire! Each has in it the elements of its companions, yet each is a separate entity in, by and of itself, capable of working much harm to the sensitive soul who may fall into its power.

42 A man may successfully pass one, perhaps the second of these bodily ruffians and come thru victoriously, but by the time he meets the third, he is so exhausted by the repeated assaults that he must succumb. Here, at last, he can no longer rise unaided, simply because his journey on physical planes is completed and he cannot rise to an higher plane of consciousness until and unless he is assisted by some one who has already attained to it.

43 In this fact, that none can help him in his direst extremity except one who has gone this way before him, he receives another impressive lesson, namely, that he has a special duty to all who may also be below him in life's stations. There is never a time in the entire cycle of consciousness with any individual human being, when there are not those who are above him as well as below him. Haughty as he may feel, there are still those who are superior in exaltation to him. Humble as he may feel, there are always those who are still beneath him. This is the law in Nature's School for always there are classes entering for life's day at school and classes graduating over those who are entering.

44 In the spiritual kingdom, the same law is operative, for those who have gone there long, long ago, now constitute the various celestial grades or hierarchies and are appointed specific duties in assisting to guide the evolutionary process of other human life waves now on their way to expression. The Master Mason may "take the higher degrees", so-called, in York and Scottish Rites, but in no other body will he experience a situation that will make a more important or lasting impress upon him than in the Symbolic Lodge. All that Masonry really is, aside from fanciful tradition and the tradition of the building of a material Temple that is not at all in alignment with historic and archaeologic facts, will be found in the magnificent ethical principles inculcated in the Three Symbolic Degrees. We may touch upon the "higher degrees" in other lessons, but none of them are really higher except in numerical sequence only.

45 The Galilean Master once said, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." He has done so to a marvelous degree. Perhaps it is this ceremonial raising strest in Freemasonry, that serves as an operative principle to draw or to attract so many millions of intelligent men in the more progressive races and nations to its ranks of membership. The steel magnet raises the steel bar it attracts. That which attracts is a magnet, whether it be of steel or of flesh and blood. That which attracts, if it operates constructively, raises that which it attracts.

46 The purpose of being raised, symbolically and in fact, is that the Master Mason may travel in foreign countries. Let each understand this as he will, for concepts of the "foreign countries" vary according to traditional denominational heritages. Freemasonry however, is not concerned, as an institution, with denominationalism, altho its individual members are not at all free from such affiliations and their consequent influence upon the individual mentalism.

47 However, the true Mason gets something of value even in the ordinary understanding of this phrase, "traveling in foreign countries." The Mason who has attained to any real and genuine initiation will understand that no geografical countries are alluded to, but the planes of consciousness that are foreign, i.e., external, to the normal planes of physical environment.

48 The true initiate is he who learns how to so control his physical vehicle and its properties, that, instead of being in subjection to it, he is superior to it and can leave it consciously at will. Then indeed he can travel in foreign countries, upon planes of consciousness and in states of being external to his normal environment and internal in relation to his spiritual consciousness. The planes of experience open to the real Master Mason are the Astral and the lower sub-divisions of the Plane of Thought, which is above the Astral region. These are, indeed "foreign countries" to the uninitiated, but to the initiate, they are sources of inspiration and revelation in his service to his fellow beings.

49 Traveling in foreign countries is not a magical process. It is a normal procedure to whoso has properly prepared and developt himself. It is simply a matter of the conscious and voluntary dissociation of the Ego, clothed in the Mind Stuff to which it is accustomed, from the physical body, and functioning with the Astral Body on Astral planes of being and consciousness. The Master Mason who can thus travel is entitled to and does receive Master's wages, which are not paid in any currency of the physical world but in the pabulum of the inner worlds.

50 Some men, uninitiates, will say, "How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come? The dead are raised by those who have themselves been brot to Light, for death is darkness and Life is Light. They come to Light with the body they have prepared for it. Not the body of weakness and worldly desire in which they have formerly functioned, but the new body of strength they have developt as a result of their initiatory career and the lessons they have learned. It is not the seed that blossoms. Long before the blossom appears the original seed body has decayed. It is not the physical body that Freemasonry teaches shall be raised, but a spiritual body the Mason gradually has been developing.

51 Until a Mason has been raised, his path for the most part, has been that of darkness. He has had to grope blindly, partly with guidance, ultimately alone. But until he has been truly raised, and able to travel in foreign countries, he is not a Master in the full sense of the word, regardless of the titles and decorations he may subsequently wear. The real Master must be able to prove that he has been raised, not alone physically, but psychologically and spiritually. He must prove that he knows by personal experience what it means to travel in foreign lands without a personal guide and to collect master's wages and prove his possession of them.

52 To the one who has applied himself to learn all that raising in his earthly Lodge implies, the raising into the Celestial Lodge will not come as a difficult matter. He will look forward to that event as a crowning triumf in his initiatory career, for all life is a process of initiation and a continual raising, in evolutionary status, in mental, intellectual and, whether we realize it or not, in spiritual status, too. It is the law of Life that progress shall consist in being raised ourselves and in raising others in our turn. Progress is stepping upward, looking upward, thinking upward, and finally,—release—upward.

DEVOTED TO THE ADVANCEMENT AND MYSTICAL ENLIGHTENMENT OF MAN

Nicolas Flamel (1330–1417), Parisian alchemist, was buried in the church of Saint-Jacques-la-Boucherie (below), near which he lived and worked. At the end of the eighteenth century the church was demolished, but the tower (right) is still standing; it is now a meteorological station. Flamel's tombstone can be seen in the Musée de Cluny in Paris

THE ESOTERIC TRADITION AND THE TEMPLE

The Alchemists

The word alchemy is derived from a combination of Arabic and Greek words. It originally meant the "Egyptian Art." This relates to processes which, it is believed, were used by the Egyptians to transform the nature of certain metals. In antiquity, Egypt was called "Al Kemit" or the black one. Alchemy was said to have been first taught in Egypt by Hermes Trismegistus, a legendary Egyptian legislator, priest and philosopher who supposedly lived in the reign of Ninus about 2000 BC. So closely has legend associated Hermes with alchemy that the latter also became known as the Hermetic Art. The legacy of Hermes was in fact the teaching of Egyptian and Greek initiates belonging to esoteric circles in and around Alexandria. These initiates found it convenient to use terms and language employed by metallurgists and certain other artisans of the time in order to keep their teaching and mystical experiences secret. One such set of writings which has come down to us from antiquity is said to have been written by Hermes himself on an emerald tablet. Included in this text was the famous axiom of Hermes "As above, so below."

DEVELOPMENT OF ALCHEMY & CHEMISTRY During the early part of the Christian era the Neo-Platonists became interested in the subject and introduced it as a new science -- it was about this time that people began to call it alchemy. Around the eighth century, the Moslems became interested in the subject, but since they were not sympathetic to any spiritual system outside Islam, they confined themselves to the purely chemical side of the new science. For example, under the stimulus of Djabir Ibn Hayyan of Baghdad, a veritable scientific school arose which made important discoveries and established what was eventually to become the basis for Western chemistry. The conquest of southern Spain by the Moors brought alchemy to Europe. It is believed that Italian monks were the first to translate Arab manuscripts into Latin. It is also recorded that in 1144 the English monk, Robert of Chester, translated an Arab work on alchemy.

In Europe, in some cases spurred on by greed, many researchers plunged themselves into ancient alchemical texts, trying to transmute the base metals of tin, lead, copper and iron into silver and gold. Many quacks and charlatans also claimed to have discovered secret formulae for producing an elixir of everlasting life, or gold, thus adding their wild and dishonest imaginings to an already obscure alchemical literature.

NICHOLAS FLAMEL In those exciting times, a legend developed about an alchemist named Nicholas Flamel, who many believed had found the secret. According to legend, Flamel worked for many years without success. One day he discovered an old manuscript containing alchemical symbols which was signed "Abraham the Jew." Flamel invested more years of effort with the help of his wife, a former widow, subsequently known in alchemical history as the "Widow Pernelle," trying to decipher the manuscript. Feeling discouraged, he decided to make the traditional pilgrimage to the Spanish city of Santiago de Compostela, legendary burial place of the Apostle St. James the Martyr, the patron saint of alchemists, taking the manuscript with him. Passing through the city of León he met a mysterious Jew who confided to him the secret of the manuscript. From then on Flamel became very rich, to the extent of granting money to charitable institutions, and contributing to the re-construction of the Church of St. Jacques-de-Boucheries. Since then no one has ever been able to disprove the story, or offer a satisfactory explanation as to how Flamel came by his fortune.

Alchemy's boom years, in terms of academic interest and experimentation, were between 1550 and 1650, after which it gradually fell into disrepute because no one managed to demonstrate that the formulae or methods contained in all the different writings on the subject really worked. Despite this, alchemy has continued to fascinate a certain kind of mind, even today, and over the centuries many eminent personalities from all walks of life have been drawn to the Hermetic Art. Paracelsus, Albertus Magnus, Raymund Lull, Roger Bacon, Giordana Bruno, St. Thomas Aquinas, Sir Isaac Newton and Elias Ashmole, one of the fathers of modern Freemasonry, are said to have been practitioners.

PARACELSUS Paracelsus, famous for his contribution to medicine, is also known as the author of a treatise on alchemy entitled "The Great Mysteries" which was to influence generations of alchemists. Paracelsus was both a medical doctor and metallurgist and tried to apply alchemical methods to medicine. He is considered to be one of the fathers of homeopathy and was among the first to use the experimental and observational approach to curing disease.

While some of the great minds following in the footsteps of the early Arab researchers have studied alchemy purely from a material point of view, others realized that the purpose of those who developed the process was to provide potential initiates with certain keys which could unlock a secret psycho-spiritual system capable of guiding the persistent practitioner to the summit of spiritual illumination and union with the Divine. These keys are still used today among initiates attracted to this approach. In France, for example, there are a few practicing alchemists in the classic mold who are highly respected in esoteric circles. Two of these, personally known to me, are living proofs that true alchemy, practiced by those who know, really works.

JUNG Jung, the great Swiss psychoanalyst, has confirmed through practical work on himself and his patients the authentic meaning of alchemy. From his writings, it does not appear that Jung's research took him to the final stage of the alchemical process. He seems to have completed what in alchemy is described as the "Work in the White" after the "Work in the Black". Jung called this the "Individualization of the Personality."

The final step in alchemy is the "Work in the Red," and when this has been carried out successfully one is said to have completed the "Great Work". This is spiritual illumination, the realization of Unity, the acquisition of the Philosopher's Stone. The main obstacle to reaching the summit of the Art is that, as in any other spiritual system, in the final stages of the path the pilgrim has to commit himself totally, sustained only by absolute confidence in the Divine within. It is not recorded how far Jung and his successors approached this final step.

Because of the incredible hotchpotch of influences and deliberate efforts by initiates to conceal the keys to the true techniques, it is virtually impossible to explain in a short summary what alchemy really is, but I will try to sum it up:

THE GOAL OF ALCHEMY Like many other approaches dealing with spiritual development, alchemy is really about the nature of transcendental unity and man's urge to integrate himself in it. Aware of the famous axiom of Hermes, or Thoth as he was called in Egypt, the alchemist tries to reproduce in the "philosophical egg" or crucible the same process which gave birth to the world. He does this by attracting Divine grace and then identifying himself with God, after which he proceeds to work in the same way as the Cosmos was created by organizing the primeval chaos. Although he employs material manipulations to realize his objectives, the goal of the true alchemist is above all -- spiritual.

The alchemist believes that if he manages to achieve perfection in his art, he will also be transformed in the process, hence the great stress place in alchemy on the purity of soul and perfection in the application of all the techniques involved in the process.

The alchemist believed that Man had a spirit, an individual soul and a material body. The spirit, which was part of the Universal Spirit, belonged to the Divine world. This spark of the spirit became imprisoned in matter at the time of Man's original fall. In alchemical terminology the body corresponds to salt, the soul to sulphur, and the spirit to mercury, and these three aspects also represent the three universal forces of the Trinity.

The three universal forces operate through seven channels, symbolized by the seven planets. There are seven base metals which correspond to the planets. The Sun corresponds to gold; the Moon to silver; Mercury to mercury; Venus to copper; Mars to iron; Jupiter to tin; and Saturn to lead. The world of matter is divided into four elements: Fire, Air, Earth and Water.

THE EFFECT OF PERFECTION In perfecting and redeeming himself, Man also helps the world of Nature to ascend. The Divine has given Man the means whereby he can achieve both spiritual and material perfection. Man is thus able not only to transmute metals; he is also given the means of combating disease and mortality. There is thus an inner alchemy concerned with the perfection of the soul and an outer which concerns the perfection of matter and the body. Accordingly the quest is oriented in two complimentary directions. One is the search for the Universal Medicine or Elixir of Long Life. The other is to complete the purification process known as the transmutation of base metals.

THE PHILOSOPHER'S STONE The Elixir can only be made after the Philosopher's Stone has been obtained. The Stone, which resembles a ruby, is crushed to a powder, liquefied and then drunk. According to alchemical lore, the practitioner will be regenerated by this concoction and will be able to live to the age of 144 without suffering from illness of any kind.

The idea underlying the transmutation of metals is that metals are living things, and if they are purified to a maximum they will inevitably take the form of gold which is the noblest of all metals. Similarly as the practitioner purifies himself through the frustrations and difficulties encountered in manipulating his alchemical materials, he will reach a certain level of purification in the "Great Work" which will allow him to be restored to Man's original state of purity, i.e. to realize the transmutation of gold within himself. In alchemical jargon he will have discovered the Philosopher's Stone, transcended time and space by dissolving all that is putrescible in his body and being, and coagulating the Divine within him to become one of the elect.

At the end of the process, the two directions of the quest will coalesce. Since both directions are but two sides of the same thing, the outer will become a manifestation of the inner, and the realization of the inner will be facilitated by the perfect execution of the outer. Thus while the principle occupation of the true alchemist is not the search for material gold, the process when realized will make the acquisition of gold accessible to him.

THE PROCESSES Theoretically the alchemist has a choice of three levels of intensity in the speed at which he carries out the quest for the Philosopher's Stone. These are the Wet Process, the Dry Process and the Short Process.

The Wet Process is the most common and is effected by allowing a gradual ripening of the Materia Prima or First Matter. The very first alchemical operation is to free the base metal selected as the material for the whole process from its inessential characteristics. When this is done the material becomes the Materia Prima. This is then kept in a transparent flask and heated in the athanor or alchemical oven, passing through four different phases described successively as Black or Raven, White or Dove, Iridescent or Peacock, Red or Rubification. The Wet Process, if correctly done, will take 40 days.

Information on the Dry Process is only given by word of mouth. It is known however that it is extremely difficult, and a number of alchemists are said to have died attempting it. The Dry Process is also called the Sacerdotal or Path of the Humble. It is said to take three days. The Short Process takes a few hours or even a few seconds. However, only the very great initiates can accomplish it.

In spiritual terms, the work in the Black or Raven is the descent into the depths of one's being, where one sees both the impure as well as the nobler aspects of oneself. By working on his weaknesses the practitioner masters his lower impulses. In other words by a process of distillation he removes the dross from his basic metals to obtain the Materia Prima. This process is also described as capturing and taming the Black Raven. When this operation is successful a quality called the Green Lion followed by another known as the Red Lion will manifest.

In the next stage, the material will develop a white colour which is the philosophical mercury, the mercury of the wise or the Virgin Milk drawn from the May-dew. The final stage is of course the Red stage or Rubification which will bring the desired perfection.

The conditions required for the Great Work are, inter alia, solitude, silence, patience, perseverance and discretion. Account also needs to be taken of astrological conditions, and the rules concerning the different stages to be followed in practicing the art must be strictly adhered to.

Certain alchemical symbols and ideas form part of the Templar Tradition, which is only natural since many Templars were secret alchemists.

Beloved Companions

We are happy to be able to share with you the following anecdote about Papus:

An anecdote about Papus

Translated from L'Initiation.

While reading the very interesting article dedicated to Paracelsus, which appeared in the last issue of L'Initiation for 1953, the following sentence caught my attention:

"He (Paracelsus) has searched for the Philosopher's Stone. Most probably he has not been more successful than they (the alchemists) in transforming lead into gold" ... (page 305).

This reminded me of the following anecdote:

As I left one of the courses that Doctor Papus was giving a certain evening at the Hermetic School, rue Seguier, we had followed him to the cafe de l'Horloge at the corner of the bank and Place Saint-Michel.

While chatting with him, I remarked on the superb gold charm which adorned his watch chain. I complemented him on it. With his customary simplicity he allowed me to examine it, then asked:

"Do you know this metal?"
"It is gold."
"No, it is lead."

I opened my eyes wide. - - "Lead?"
"If you prefer, lead transmuted into gold. Alchemical gold."

And he continued:

"It is quite a story. One day, Guaita came to find me. He had bought a very old book about alchemy on the banks. As the back part was in a bad state, my Guaita, a fervent book lover, undertook to repair it. In the course of this operation he discovered a sachet of parchment concealed in the back of the book. He opens it and finds a red powder inside. It is then that he came to see me, bringing his discovery.

"What is that?" said he. "Could it be the Philosopher's Stone?" "What do you think of it?"

I was as embarrassed as he. The origin of this powder so well hidden in a book on alchemy, its appearance so perfectly fitting what the old alchemists have written about it, had evidently led me to think that Guaita himself was not mistaken in supposing that we had some of the Stone in our hands.

Finally, I told him to make sure that there was only the experiment to carry out. "Let us see what your book says about the way to transmute lead into gold when one possesses the Stone. We will follow the instructions meticulously and we will attempt the transmutation." That is what we did.

We wrap the powder in a small ball of wax, in a crucible we melt down a small piece of lead pipe of a weight corresponding to the powder we had, and into this liquefied metal, we throw the small ball of wax.

Scarcely had it touched the melted metal than a green glimmer produced itself in the crucible, lasting a fraction of a second, dazzling like a flash of lightning , illuminating the whole room. And we noted that the metal solidified instantly into a yellow mass.

The crucible cooled, we break it to extract the ingot.

It quite had the appearance of gold. It was sent to "la Monnare" for testing and was returned to us with certification that it was a gold ingot. After sharing it, we had it transformed into charms and this is one of them which decorates my chain.

He added laughing: "That is how I made gold once in my life. Unfortunately I would not know how to do it again!"

The Compagnons

Compagnonage was the name given in France to certain guilds with mystical associations, formed between workmen in the building trade to promote their mutual interests. The basis of each guild was called the Devoir or duty. The Devoir was the collection of rules, work practices, traditions and rites of the craft. The essence of Compagnonage was to promote a workmen's elite which would bring a deeper dimension to manual work through the attitude that there was much more to the practice of a craft than earning a living.

Although virtually no mention of Compagnonage has been found in public documents of the early Middle Ages, it can be traced back to at least the twelfth century. At that time it came to public notice in the form of associations founded to protect workmen during their travels, and to provide friendly contact for members arriving in strange towns. One of the earliest official references to them is in 1420, in an ordinance during the reign of Charles VI.

There were three main associations deriving from three traditions:

The Children of Solomon
The Children of Master Jacques
The Children of Father Soubise

The Children of Solomon claimed that Solomon gave them their Devoir as a reward for their work during the building of the Temple, and that he had united them in a Brotherhood. The Children of Master Jacques traced their origins to one of the Master Builders who was a colleague of Hiram Abiff, the great builder sent to King Solomon by Hiram, King of Tyre, to supervise the building of the temple. Father Soubise, the legend goes, was a colleague of Master Jacques, and after the temple was completed they travelled together to Gaul, swearing that they would never part. Their association did not last because of rivalry, and Master Jacques was murdered by certain disciples of Father Soubise who himself denied any involvement. Another legend claims that Master Jacques was in reality Jacques de Molay, the last Grand Master of the Knights Templar.

Within each of the three associations there was a system of initiations and degrees with secret signs, passwords and decorations. At least during the time of the Templars, there was also a system of secret instruction. The art of building and the esoteric knowledge associated with it were passed on only by word of mouth. The first stage of membership was that of Apprentice, which lasted about five years before arriving at the stage of Mâitrise or Mastership. As soon as a craftsman finished his apprenticeship he joined one of the three associations and commenced an obligatory journey through France, known in the tradition as the Tour de France.

The Compagnon survived during the Tour by working as he went. In each town there was a "House" of the association presided over by a woman called the "Mother." Meetings were held in the House, officers were elected and food and lodging offered there to travelling members.

STRICT RULES There were very strict rules concerning communal life, such as respect for the elders of the craft, for the Mother of the House, and for all Compagnons regardless of religion, race or political opinions. At table in the communal House, all conversation which could lead to discord was forbidden. Anyone who did not respect this rule was subject to a fine which was adjusted according to the importance of the fault. Before sitting at table the Compagnons had to satisfy the Mother that they were suitably dressed. They also had to ask permission to leave the table and were liable to fines if they were late for supper.

The Compagnons had many quaint customs, practices and dress. They also developed a vocabulary of their own. The word coterie for example was a generic term used to designate a given devoir, the different functions performed or the grade reached within a trade. A "Dog" was a compagnon who had completed his Tour de France, "Fox" was an aspirant, and a "Monkey" was a Master Craftsman.

THE TEMPLAR/COMPAGNON CONNECTION I have already suggested how the mutual influences of the Templars and the Compagnons might have acted and reacted on each other. For example, the Templars certainly deepened the spiritual dimension of the artisans' contact with forms and materials. The Compagnons provided the constructions to be ensouled by the laws and spiritual principles taught and practiced by the Templars.

Compagnonage has had to adapt itself to a variety of historical circumstances. The movement was persecuted from the fall of the Templars all the way down to the nineteenth century. Ironically, the Renaissance did not work in its favor since one of its legacies was the introduction of the speculative element in artistic creation, whereby the artist imposed his own inspiration and assigned a secondary role to the purely manual aspect of the work. The public became interested only in the artist who conceived a building or a sculpture and not in the artisans who carried out the basic physical work.

HARD TIMES The sixteenth century Reformation, the democratic ideals of the French Revolution of 1789 and the popular movements of the 1800's were also not conducive to the Compagnon's way of life. In the industrial era, although there has been no persecution of Compagnonage, the by-products of socialism and trade-unionism have not helped it either. Although Compagnonage was not attached to any particular religion, it was religious in the sense that it did not consider man a purely economic being, but a composite unit linked to a universe with which he sought harmony through the search for form. This approach was not very popular in the rising materialism of the late nineteenth century. All these external pressures were bound to react unfavourably on the internal unity of the Compagnon movement. From the sixteenth century onwards the movement began to break up and all kinds of dissension arose.

During the Reformation a split developed. They were the Gavots who followed the reformers, and the Devorants who stayed faithful to the Catholic Church. Problems on the building site of Orleans Cathedral brought matters to a head and created what was subsequently called the Schism of Orleans. The revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685 accelerated the division and decline of the movement and many Compagnons who were Protestants emigrated to Germany, Switzerland and other countries. Even the traditional Tour de France was banned by Louis XIV.

In 1793 some of those Compagnons who belonged to the Devoir of Father Soubise decided to drop all religious elements from the association, an action which resulted in the formation of a new Devoir called the devoir of Liberty. The nineteenth century was a particularly agitated time within what remained of Compagnonage. After several failures the Compagnon Union was set up in 1889, bringing together the different groupings. This did not last and the Union disappeared at the end of the nineteenth century.

In France today, Compagnonage operates principally within the framework of the Workers Association of the Compagnons of Duty, the Compagnon Federation of Building Trades and an earlier version of the Compagnon Union which had been founded in 1875, and was later temporarily incorporated into the Union just referred to. In recent years there have been glimmerings of interest in Europe, especially in West Germany, Belgium, Switzerland and the Scandinavian countries, amongst the younger generation who are attracted to the idea of becoming master craftsmen of a trade. Regrettably, there may no longer be enough true masters of the crafts capable of transmitting the spiritual tradition which inspired the original Compagnons.

Beloved Companions and Seekers of the Grail!

THE QUEST FOR THE HOLY GRAIL

Lecture Five : Perceval

Perceval, a knight introduced by Chretien de Troyes in his Conte del Graal (written about 1180), was the first hero of the Grail stories and under various names (Peredur, Parzifal, Parsifal, Perchevael) he remained at the center of the stories which followed and, for long, captured the imagination of Europe. Nonetheless he was an unlikely hero. As a boy, the story begins, Perceval is sheltered by his mother from all knowledge of the world of knightly chivalry, for she feared that knighthood would bring his death as it had his father's. However, one day Perceval sees a party of knights and, enchanted by the romance of knighthood and with no thought of his mother's grief, he leaves for King Arthur's court. After various adventures the young, and still very naive, knight comes to the castle of the Grail and, at dinner, witnesses a procession bearing the Grail and its related holy things. He remains in awed silence only to discover later that if he had instead asked a question the Fisher King might have been healed and the lands of the Grail renewed.

It is only after many further adventures that Perceval again, and finally, achieves the Grail Quest, which involves for him the asking of a question, and becomes himself the Guardian of the Grail.

This in brief is the story of Perceval's Quest. We shall consider in the following lecture the stories which center on Galahad and, even reduced to this minimum, the material is very complex. Let us separate it into four headings which I shall call: thew Divine Fool, the question, the alchemical Perceval, and "why Perceval"?

The Divine Fool

As in the Tarot the Fool (who, whether designated 'aleph', as beginning; or 'shin' in connection with the mystery of love, is the point around which the dance of the arcana turns) signifies that foolishness of God which, as St. Paul said, is wiser than the wisdom of men, so Perceval is one of those characters who reflects the mystery of wise folly. This is most explicit in Wagner's Parsifal where, for example, the Fisher King is told:

"By pity enlightened
The guileless Fool—
Wait for him,
My chosen tool."

And this is implicit in the character of Perceval from the beginning. Now, esotericists like to identify correspondences in a neat and exact way, but before identifying Perceval with the Fool of the Tarot, there is a distinction that needs to be made. The Fool, while he may appear balanced over a precipice, never loses his perfect equilibrium. Perceval however, albeit in naive innocence, performs many rash acts with unfortunate and even tragic consequences. His impulsive departure leaves his mother to die shortly afterwards of grief, and his unasked question leaves the king and his lands in their suffering. We may say the same of Don Quixote, that other figure so close to the archetypal Fool, that in misunderstanding so many things he causes sorrow and constantly loses his equilibrium if in the end -- for the reader -- he brings liberation and understanding. Under our final heading we will pursue the significance of Perceval's folly a bit further, but for now let us say first that Perceval is not identical to the Fool, but, secondly, that he stands -- like Don Quixote -- in a profound relation to the Fool.

The Question

What is the question which Perceval needs to ask so that the Fisher King may be healed? In Cretien it is as to the meaning of the Grail procession, and similarly in the Peredur. On the other hand in the Perlesvaus it is as to who is served by the Grail. In the Parzival the healing question is: "What aileth thee, my uncle?" Now considered, as it were, exoterically, we may say that the essential idea was that a question was needed and each author felt free to provide his own specific. Various esoteric interpretations may, no doubt, be offered, but when we consider that (as we shall develop later) no question was necessary at the highest level of the Quest, that of Galahad, it is not so much in relation to the Grail that a question is necessary but rather is necessary for Perceval himself to question -- in one way or another -- the meaning of the visible reality, to get beyond the surfaces through which, as a 'naif', he naturally experienced in the world. The question is for the sake of the quester, not for the sake of the Grail.

On a philosophic level, Simone Weil has remarked that there is a profound insight in Von Eschenbach's insistence, in the Parzival, that the nature of the illness be asked. Each of us awaits that question of profound compassion in relation to our own experience, in effect "how does it feel to be you?", which will free us from the burden of our solitude. Or as Von Eschenbach:

> "When unconsoled the Fisher sat,
> So sorrowful and full of grief,
> Why would you not give him relief?"

The Alchemical Perceval

Wolfram von Eschenbach's Parzival also contains a great deal of complex symbolism, much of it apparently alchemical. First of all the Grail itself is described as "...a stone of purest kind, called lapis exilis." Which parallels-

> "This insignificant stone (lapis exilis)... > is despised by fools, the more cherished by the wise."
> Rosarium Philosophorum Arnold of Villanova

In addition the alchemical triad of black, white and red is reflected in many places and, indeed, Parzival is reconciled at the end to a half-brother, Feirefiz, who is parti-coloured black and white. There is a wealth of other symbolism which will interest, and more or less reward, the esotericist. Perhaps particularly striking is (in von Eschenbach's poem The Hound Gardevias) a hound's collar written with starry script and a leash twelve meters long of interwoven strands of yellow, green, red and brown. The Parzival was the central text, we might add, for the Grail meditations of Rudolph Steiner and also for Walter Stein and Trevor Ravenscroft, whose books are the most available expression of this school in English. Characteristic of this school is a very complex and detailed conception of the relation of the Grail, and the Blood of Christ, to the "inner history" of Europe. In general one senses an attempt to concretize and make graspable and definable something: "inner history", which is too subtle for such treatment, and also a certain blurred sense of reality, of what is fact and what is fancy. Which is by no means to deny the value of their work. Ravenscroft's Cup of Destiny, in particular, we recommend as a valuable companion to the reading of the Parzival, which in turn we recommend for its wealth of symbols.

Why Perceval?

Finally, moving from a literary to a spiritual point of view, we must ask ourselves why the first image of a Grail hero is that of a sort of innocent, who reminds us of the Fool, who must learn to question reality. Perhaps the answer is related to the necessity, in the spiritual life, to return to simplicity as a starting point. Jesus taught that to enter the Kingdom of Heaven one must first become as a little child. Zen Buddhists are given, for contemplation, the question "what was your face before you were born?" The problem is that as time goes on we become not so much one simple person, but a crowd of people who daily take the stage in turn. Somehow we cannot be all ourselves at once. No writer, perhaps, understood this problem more clearly than Marcel Proust whose great novel Remembrance of Things Past grows out of certain moments, which he called "Resurrections", of transparant unity of being...

> "And at the moment when, recovering my balance,
> I put my foot on a stone which was slightly lower > than its neighbours, all my discouragement vanished > and in its place was that same happiness which at > various epochs of my life had been given to me ... > a profound azure intoxicated my eyes, impressions > of coolness, of dazzling light..."

This, that is, from a sudden breaking free from the present and the recovery of the integrity of self beyond the fragmentation caused by passing time. Now what may be given by an apparently accidental experience, may also be achieved -- at least to a considerable extent -- by a spiritual effort. The effort called for is that of seeing things with the original simplicity of an ideal child, without adding any interpretations, without any fear. One can see easily, in others perhaps more easily than in oneself, the outline of the child remaining within the most sophisticated or even the most unpleasant, and so on, person. The introduction of Perceval as the first Grail hero indicated that the first condition of the Grail Quest is to return to that simplicity, and then from that standpoint to question the reality around ourselves.

This is one form, and stage, of the Quest; we shall consider next another which is represented by the person of Galahad.

INITIATION

Esoteric and Exoteric

"It is given unto you to know the mysteries . . . but to them it is not given."
—Matt. 13:11.

IN our subject text, we have the crux of initiatory process. Initiation is shown to be a matter wherein and whereby information of a serious and profound nature is communicated to a chosen group and withheld from others, presumably not qualified, at the time at least, to receive it.

2 Initiation is a process devised, as a result of practical experience, for the purpose of compelling those who, by profest desire for knowledge of a specific character have undertaken active steps toward its attainment, to prove their individual worthiness and qualifications for it.

3 All along the Masonic pathway, the neofite is challenged again and again, sometimes seemingly with unnecessary frequency, but this is only apparently so. Is he worthy? Is he well qualified? Is he in possession of the necessary credentials? Has he made suitable proficiency in the understanding of that which already may have been entrusted to him? By what other rights does he expect to obtain the privilege he seeks, of advancement into an additional degree or measure of Light?

4 The answers to the questions propounded and the several challenges made seem, sometimes, absurdly simple, unless more than ordinary attention and thought is given them. This is a feature of the wonderful construction of the Masonic Work; that it does not require or utilize involved phraseology, and the most momentous factors of Truth, abstract and concrete, are expressible in the simplest etymology.

5 Ceremonial may or may not express any particular new truth. True initiation is ever and always a process that is operative within the individual. External ceremonial merely fixes the attention on certain principles, grafically exprest, at a certain time, place and under unusual circumstances, wherein a candidate makes a profession of his desires, his faith, his sincerity, his qualifications and his personal worth, in the presence of a group of chosen or privileged witnesses.

6 In ceremonial initiation, the candidate meets experiences he does not ordinarily expect, yet there is nothing that man can devise that will do more than form a stimulus thru which may be conveyed a strong impression that will be psychologically and psychically registered in the sub-conscious, which is the point it is usually desired to reach. Therefore, we do not ordinarily expect startling assertions or weird utterances in an initiatory ceremony of any real worth, and in this respect Masonry does not disappoint us.

7 Instead of startling or thrilling pronunciamentos and revelations, we discover, in true initiation, that very ordinary precepts, principles, dissertations and ethics, become quite extraordinary when given or repeated in a specialized manner, under circumstances calculated to give them an atmosfere that will cause the seed they enshrine to take root, expand and develop entirely new concepts in the mind of the listener who is, at the time, in a specially attentive mental status.

8 Ceremonial initiation can, at best, but bring home to a candidate, the truth in remarkable clarity, relating to a given subject. It does not necessarily give him new truth, but it shows him a phase of truth he supposed he already possest in a new light, that usually develops in him a correspondingly new attitude and new works and activities as a direct result.

9 Such a form of ceremonial initiation will suffice for those whose minds are not yet ready to go further. The work performed by and for them, will have its results. It will register and the seed will take root, altho the plant and its blossom may not be evident until the period of mental gestation is completed. This particular length of time is dependent upon the individual temperament and the extent to which the neofite is crystallized into the ordinary concepts developt by traditional training, environment and educational systems.

10 Initiation is a weeding-out process, whereby those who are qualified to "know the mysteries" may be given the keys thereof, for giving the keys is all the Masonic initiation, passing or raising, ever does. Nowhere in the ritual does the Craft attempt to apply or to attach any phase of esoterism. The neofite must look for it himself. It is there and it is very obvious to whoso seeks it, and having the keys, the neofite has but to apply himself by the Light he has received according to degree, and the esoterism will be clearly revealed.

11 To some it is given to know the mysteries, but to others, it is not given. Not that there is any flavor of favoritism, but ever since mankind enshrined his philosofy in ritualistic mysticism, he has discovered that there are varying grades in life's school, and that which is appropriate to the graduate, is not, with discretion, available to the freshman. Therefore, initiation wisely acts as a weeding process, whereby those who, at present, are not entitled to be entrusted with arcane knowledge (which is TNT to the ignorant), are instructed how to prepare themselves for the reception of more important truth and principle. Those who are prepared, are invested with it.

12 The brother of the mystic tie who has participated in the several initiatory rites in the Craft and who sees in them only a ritualistic process of entering and affiliating with the Fraternity has missed the organic contact that is necessary for real advancement. There are hundreds who have become "Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret" who have not the faintest idea as to what the "Royal Secret" is or why they are sublime, or what makes them princes, and if so, princes of what?

13 While the particular title mentioned in the previous paragraf belongs to holders of the 32nd degree of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, it but expresses a status that was attained, if it was attained at all, early in the holder's Masonic career, i.e., when he became a Master Mason. Initiation, Passing and Raising have been frequently allocated to Youth, Manhood and Age, by Masonic orators, but we believe that such an allocation does not express the real truth involved.

14 The brother who becomes in fact and deed, not in word and ritual only, a true Master Mason, has already traveled in a foreign country and he has been made a citizen thereof. If he has learned his lesson well and made suitable proficiency entitling him to a stated advance, he has, in truth, been exalted to the status of a prince of an invisible empire and that in itself constitutes a Royal Secret, for it can be shared only with those who have similarly traveled and been similarly exalted.

15 Initiation takes one out from the ordinary physical plane. The fact that the ordinary working tools of earth's craftsmen are used ethically but not physically, shows that they are assumedly being employed upon a different plane of consciousness. Passing, takes the neofite thru the median plane in the invisible world, while Raising, exalts him to the third and last attainable plane therein.

16 Initiation begins on the physical plane and is intended to lift the candidate's consciousness from that plane to the Etheric Plane. Passing carries (or passes) the candidate from the Etheric thru the Astral Plane where he finds the materials out of which his desires, impressions, wishes and passions in the physical world are developt. Raising, exalts the candidate from the illusion and delusion of the Astral World to the Thought World or Mental Plane, both Concrete and Abstract.

17 Our statements may occasion some surprise amongst brethren whose attention has not as yet been directed toward the esoteric side of Freemasonry and such brethren will be even more surprised when we state that the real esoteric purpose of the entire Lodge ritual is for the purpose of bringing about a rapprochment between the visible and invisible lodges.

18 In the opening and closing of the Lodge, the repetitive interlocutory work has a special significance. It is repeated over again every time the Lodge convenes. Why? Simply because in the questions and answers given at the time, the brethren are actually building a lodge on the Astral Plane. But nothing is permanent on that plane, therefore, it is necessary to reconstruct the actual Lodge by our verbal process each time the earthly Lodge convenes. Speech is two-fold. It is a fundamental Masonic requisite. The reason why it is such a requisite is clear. Speech expresses thought. Second, it concretizes the thought exprest. So, when we verbally declare what constitutes a Lodge, its furniture, features, officers and purpose, we actually construct on the Astral Plane, the verisimilitude of the earthly Lodge and it is thru this medium that the real mysteries are communicated to the Faithful Breast ready to receive them.

19 This being true, we can see how important it is, that sincerity should characterize every word uttered in the Masonic bodies. When the Opening Prayer is addrest to the Great Architect, that the Lodge may at this time "reflect that order and beauty which reign forever before His throne" we are assuming a tremendously serious responsibility, to which we should endeavor to live up to the very best of our ability. We are asking something more than superficial consideration ordinarily reveals.

20 Ceremonially, but factually, we have been taken, thru initiatory process, out from the material plane and taught our principles upon the Mental Plane, but we did not know it at the time. True Mastership means the ability to recover this process step by step consciously. We can truthfully claim to travel in foreign countries, work and receive master's wages only when we can do so consciously and as an act of our own free will and accord, upon the Mental Plane.

21 All legitimate schools of the mysteries teach that initiation is an interior process and Freemasonry faithfully adheres to the tradition and teaching, for while the outward ceremonial causes the candidate to focus his waking consciousness upon the lesson being inculcated, its action is internal, i.e., the realization of the process is solely upon the Mental Plane. The goal sought in all initiation is similar to that of the application or reception of a sacrament. A sacrament is defined as the outward visible symbol of an inward spiritual grace. Initiation is an outward ceremony indicating the attainment or the assumption of an inward exaltation and a personal experience of illuminism.

22 As an Enterd Apprentice, the new brother enters in true Apprentice form upon the Etheric Plane, in which state he is presented the tools with which he must thereafter work. He is passed to the Astral Plane where he must demonstrate precision, in order to be accepted as a true Fellow-Craft amongst his fellow workmen. Perfecting himself, he is raised to the Mental Plane, and let us observe right here, that inside and outside the Fraternity, modern psychology has shown and is showing us with continuous revelation, how much of our most important work in this world is performed upon the Mental Plane of consciousness.

23 It is only when the Master in Masonry attains the Mental Plane or Thought World consciously that he is entitled to the appellation of "Master" in fact instead of courtesy. In the lower half of the Mental Plane, called the Region of Concrete Thought, is the Archaeus or cosmic storehouse, wherein will be found the archetypal models of all that pertains to human advancement in the various waves of evolution upon our planet.

24 This archaeus is the real Masonic Trestle Board, for here will be found the designs that have already been manifested for human progress and welfare and also other designs that will become manifest or brot into realization only when humanity shall have become entitled to them by developing the capacity to understand them and apply them. Here it is that the Master derives his ideas and studies the plans for human betterment which are to be developt thru the activities of those over whom he is appointed to govern.

25 The Upper Half of the Mental Plane is sometimes called the Region of Abstract Thought, and while the Master may study the designs on the Trestle Board of archaeus, he cannot vitalize them or give them life except thru an understanding of the laws that pertain to this higher mental region, for this is the home of the vital concept of Form, Life, Activity and the Desire-Emotional phase of Man. It was thus known to the ancients as Hyle.

26 These three "World Regions" are the planes of consciousness into which it is the purpose of the three Symbolic Degrees of Masonry to guide the candidate. The ceremonies of the Lodge room have nought to say regarding them. The officers merely award the keys and point the way, but the brother who has "taken his degrees" in the Blue Lodge soon realizes that, if he is to be a working Mason instead of a theoretical one, he must "carry on" from the new basis of departure furnisht by what he received from his Lodge. Of course, all true initiation depends entirely upon the spirit in which it is received or undertaken. Those who seek merely fraternalism have their reward and are usually content with it. Those who, by evolutionary status are receptive to higher concepts, find that initiation ceremonies merely awaken in them a response to the Spirit of Freemasonry, which we conceive to be a vital entity, always active in the Craft, seeking those who in turn are seeking the way to further Light than Physical ceremonial can convey.

27 Fremasonry is quite on equal footing with any church of past or present. This may be a new concept to the strictly orthodox denominational Masonic brother, but it is a fact nevertheless. Freemasonry is an institution devoted to the exposition of moral philosofy and a practical method of living that will enable the members to attain a definite spiritual status. This is exactly the mission of the Church. It has been the mission of every root or world religion ancient or medieval. Freemasonry claims no divine lineage but there is more of Divinity in its essential fabric than its members may suppose. Freemasonry inculcates a moral law. So does the Church. Freemasonry operates thru a system of degrees and initiatory ceremonials. So does, or rather so did the Church, for the Christian Church was originally a secret organization of five degrees, with appropriate pass words, tokens and signs. Freemasonry works in a ritualistic manner. So does the Church, Catholic or Protestant, for all service is ritual with differing degrees of symbolic embellishments.

28 A person is made a Mason thru ceremonial initiation. A person becomes a member of the Church thru a ceremonial initiation, whether it be Confirmation or Reception into Fellowship. The whole Solar System operates thru ritual, for ritual is nothing more or less than an orderly, systematic manner of functioning, that ensures uniformity of thought and purpose and the exclusion of all other thoughts and extraneous matters.

29 The foregoing observations were made because they serve as an introduction to the statement that initiation into the Masonic Order is an interior as well as an exterior process. While the physical body of the candidate conforms to the outward functions, the Ego is exalted to the Mental Plane, unconsciously at the time, but given the clues that will enable the brother, if he seeks the door thereto, to enter the Sanctum Sanctorum of the higher world regions at will, as a free and accepted Ego; free, because no longer limited to the physical body; accepted because by his presence on the higher planes of being, he has proved his worthiness to be accepted as a Master Builder in the Spiritual Temple.

30 We have called attention to the fact that with every opening of the Lodge we erect an astral counterpart of the Lodge in the inner worlds, that serves temporarily the purpose of the complete initiation. This permits the co-operation of the two classes of brethren, the visible and the invisible. While the visible brethren are engaged in conducting the initiation of the candidate in the earthly visible Lodge room, the invisible brethren are engaged in cooperating by conducting a similar initiation of the same candidate but on the Mental Plane in the Astral Lodge just erected.

31 Like all legitimate schools of the mysteries, Freemasonry operates under the aegis of a distinct Ray from the Logos, the color of the Ray being Light Blue, sometimes slightly yellowish. This is the symbolic color of the planet Venus, which, in astroscience, signifies that order, symmetry, beauty and proportion upon which so many of the cardinal principles of Masonry are founded. It is thru this Ray that Freemasonry penetrates into the inner spheres of being and furnishes, to those who seek it, a direct contact with the higher functions of spiritual cognition and consciousness.

32 Masonic initiation is most subtle in its functions. The Candidate is caused to respond to certain ceremonial procedure, but this procedure is of a type that stimulates thru the mental faculties, an increast activity in certain "centers" in the bodily organism, called by some the "psychic centers" and by others the "chakras" or Lotos buds. Ordinary initiation does not wholly awaken them, only a well defined system of developmental work can do that, but it does stimulate them to a greater degree of activity than they normally exhibit. This increast activity serves to quicken the spiritual faculties of the neofite, so that, if he is at a point in evolutionary status to receive the mysteries, a desire for them will be awakened within him and his response to the Spirit of Freemasonry and its entity-genius will be so strong as to cause the ceremonial work of the Lodge to become but the beginning of a more extended search and a wider field of activity.

33 In Masonic initiation the keys given are most numerous. Freemasonry does not stint its sons. It gives generously. While the Church has always typified the feminine aspect of Divinity, being called the "Bride of Christ" and by other feminine names, Freemasonry represents the masculine nature and character of Divinity, and in this aspect of Fatherhood, the Fraternity provides most generously for all its children. This is well known so far as the material plane is concerned but we are interested here with the esoteric or spiritual side alone. Esoterically, it is due to its characterization of the masculine aspect of Deity that Freemasonry confines its membership solely to men.

34 If the newly initiated brother will take any one of the Masonic Principles that have been ceremonially placed before his consideration and use it as a focus for concentration and deep meditation, it will serve to open up to his inner vision a wealth of spiritual truth he has not heretofore experienst or even suspected. The Fraternity has wisely left its various definitions in such a status that the enquiring mind can readily carry them farther, allowing free play for individual original thought. In this fact the candidate or rather, the neofite (new plant), has his opportunity, for by meditation and concentration he can take a given symbol and carry it on thru mental analysis followed by synthesis in a way that will develop a wealth of thought and elevate his mind to a truly spiritual plane of vantage at the same time.

35 The Masonic brother who will faithfully follow this suggested procedure with all the symbols of Masonry, taken in their proper turn and place, will find that his real initiation was on a mental plane and that such deep delving therein is only bringing out what he least suspected he had within himself. It will prove a true test of the extent to which his initiation has really extended.

36 There is nothing magical or bizarre about this concept of the double nature of Masonic initiation. It is simply another way of stating a truth we all know to be operative in every day life. Day after day, we go about our affairs with little seeming attention to details that do not concern us. But let some mental shock, twist or psychological phenomenon occur and we are amazed to note that sub-consciously (as we say), we have been registering impressions and visual images of things to which we gave no active attention at all, and of which, ordinarily, we would have claimed entire ignorance.

37 The same phenomenon occurs in initiatory ceremonies that have a substantial background of reality and vital truth to justify them. The body and the waking senses or normal consciousness may respond as usual to external stimuli, but the inner spiritual senses are registering impressions received upon and from a plane of consciousness higher than the physical, altho we may not be conscious of it at the time. The psychical centers with us, which have been referd to, have received new impetus and the energization developing from the new impetus makes active our powers of visualization and intuition to a markt dgree if we will but give our earnest attention to them.

38 While we are incarnate as human beings, we have no right to discount or belittle any of the physical processes. There are cults that indulge in extravagant claims to superhuman and supernormal developments. There can be nothing of the sort. We cannot be more than human or normal, try as best we may. Few of us are completely normal and few of us are wholly human. There are too many hold-overs or atavisms of animalism still observable about us.

39 So we may regard with suspicion claims to a spiritual development or cognition that takes an attitude of condescension toward the physical environment for every step we make in spiritual process or development must have its basis in some sort of physical fact. Spiritual development or true initiation is both physiological, psychological and psychical. If we attain a spiritual unfoldment due to "stepping up" our individual vibratory status, that vibratory status functions in a physiological way on a physical plane but the results manifest as a psychological and psychical phenomena of some sort.

40 If we attain a higher spiritual status, it is due to a "stepping up" of our psychical natures, with a psychological basis which, in turn, is developt on the solid foundation of physiological activity. All development is a function of the individual cells and without taking them into consideration in our unfoldment processes, all initiatory work is in vain.

41 In conferring ceremonial initiation Freemasonry, therefore, wisely begins with the physical plane, well knowing that the Spirit of Freemasonry Itself will take care of the inner processes involved. The Craft gives to its neofites, keys in plenty, when the neofite has demonstrated that he is worthy and well qualified. But it does not give him Further Light until the neofite has put himself in a proper position to receive it, which proper position is upon the psycho-spiritual plane. When he attains this plane of consciousness, he is prompted from within to seek further, realizing inwardly that something still remains of which the outward ceremonial is merely the shadow.

42 The factual evidence of the observations developt in this lesson is found in the ever and rapidly increasing number of thoughtful Masons who are interested in Masonic Research. By Masonic Research we do not mean to imply the resurrecting of dusty archives, historic manuscripts, ancient Charges, eminent craftsmen and similar data. These activities are most valuable for the preservation to the wisdom of future generations of a complete knowledge of the exoteric aspects of the Craft. But such matters are exoteric only, and they do not satisfy the yearnings of those to whom the true nature of their individual initiatory experiences has become apparent.

43 Such brethren as we have just refer'd to have heard vaguely of "Masonic Secrets" and they are determined to find out what those secrets are and in the beginning of their search they have discovered that the secrets are not those of ancient archives nor upon the physical or even the intellectual plane of consciousness but pertain solely to the realm of spirit. To the truly initiated Mason, the staircase that leads from the Ground Floor to the Middle Chamber is but Jacob's Ladder leading from the Ground Floor of earth to the Middle Chamber of the lower heaven worlds or planes of inner spiritual consciousness and the angels ascending and descending are those initiates who are seeking to rise, and the celestial Brethren who descend to earth to help the seekers.

44 To the truly initiated Brother, the sprig of acacia is not alone a symbol of immortality, it symbolizes the famed mythological Tree Ygdrasil, whose branches bind together hell, earth and heaven and from which all humanity derives nourishment. On top of its branches sits the Eagle (of the A.A.S.R.), between whose eyes sits Vedfolner, the hawk (of ancient Egypt). In ancient mythos, "the roots go down into the three great realms (1) of death, where, in the well Hvergelmer, the dragon Nidhug and his brood are ever gnawing at it: (2) of the giants, where, in the fountain of Mimer, is the source of wisdom: (3) of the gods, Asgaard, where, at the sacred fountain of Urd, is the divine tribunal, and the dwelling of the Fates."

45 In the three regions penetrated by the roots and branches of Ygdrasil, it is easy to see the correspondence with the three degrees of Masonic Initiation, the Enterd Apprentice where the world is over operative to swerve the neofite from his newly assumed responsibilities; the Fellow-Craft wherein he learns wisdom, and the Master Mason, wherein and whereby the initiate, as one of the gods in creative ability, becomes the Master Builder and Workman.

46 Contrary to popular opinion, Freemasonry does not stand or fall with the legend of King Solomon's Temple. It is far more substantial and enduring than that, for the myth of the famous Temple is not supported by the facts of history or archeology. The attainment therefore, of a place representing the Sanctum Sanctorum of King Solomon's Temple is only an allegory of the real initiation which is the attainment of and raising into the Sanctum Sanctorum of the Inner, Invisible Temple on the spiritual planes. This Temple on the invisible planes is a very real structure altho not apparent to physical sight. Nevertheless, those who understand what is meant by the cosmic consciousness* will readily understand how it is possible for mortal man to function in a Temple served by spiritual entities.

47 Initiation is so almost identical with regeneration as to mean practically the same thing. In initiation, the candidate, as heretofore stated, does not receive essentially new truths, so much as he receives a clearer view and a more complete and comprehensive understanding of known truths. When he assumes his Masonic Obligations, he does not assume anything essentially new. On examination, it will be found that all that is embodied in the Obligation is no more or less than what would normally be expected of a decent, thoughtful, progressive, enlightened man and citizen.

48 But we grow careless, thoughtless and indifferent as we rub against the world and friction wears down the keenness of our better natures. The candidate for church membership in the process of confirmation, renews and ratifies his baptismal pledges and is confirmed in this renewal. The candidate for the mysteries, in assuming his Obligation, renews his principles of manhood and citizenship and is sealed in that renewal by the witness he invokes in the presence of earthly witnesses.

49 Renewal is a form of regeneration. Initiation provides for this process of renewal, therefore initiation is essentially and fundamentally regenerative in its action and its effect upon the individual. With the renewal effected, the candidate for advancement is given a new lease as it were. He has assumed a definite scheme of life which, if faithfully lived up to, will unfailingly have its effect upon him, manifesting thru his external attitude toward all mankind but especially with the brethren.

50 In the regenerative and initiatory process of Freemasonry, the glyphs of the Craft make a powerful appeal to the individual conscience and inner moral nature of the neofite. We say inner moral nature advisedly, for it is the inner morality that counts, not the external veneer that we often fail to realize is but a veneer. Crises in life bring out the truth of this statement, and in such crises it is the inner, inherent nature that comes to the front and reveals the real man within.

51 Real initiation teaches one lesson that is paramount. It is the lesson of toleration. True, we often discover those amongst our fellow craftsmen who are not tolerant but that is not the fault of the Fraternity. In every instance, toleration is taught as a cardinal principle, a Masonic virtue, whereby each brother is led to see that each man's conscience is his own guide and that it is not within the power of man to superimpose his ideas upon another or upon others, with any reasonable expectation of seeing good results accrue therefrom.

52 Intolerance has been the curse of the ages. It has been the cause of more warfare and shedding of innocent blood than any other single cause, as will be found on examination, for intolerance is one of the basic principles of greed and selfishness. Tolerance of the ideas of others, especially their religious ideas, is a virtue that should be cultivated far more widely than it has been, and doubtless there will never be a time in human history when intolerance will not be a foe to be reckoned with, for as we advance, we carry over, tho perhaps in higher form, the same atavistic tendencies.

53 Real initiation is a mental vacuum cleaner. The man who enters into the process in the right state of mind should emerge therefrom with his mental impurities cleared away. He faces the world with a clean slate, ready for a new and better record. The neofite who is truly initiated will have replaced an attitudeof intolerance with one of widest toleration. He will replace sentiments of race or religious prejudice with those of acceptance in the light of true brotherhood, and the certainty that all races unite under one common Fatherhood. He will realize that brotherhood is not a platitude but an organic reality. He will understand that the terms "free" and "accepted" are but synonyms for "liberty" and "equality" in the sense of a sharing of opportunity and responsibility and moral accountability.

54 The man who has received initiation in the grades of Freemasonry has passed thru the most searching and critical examinations of conscience and conduct it is possible for man to apply to his fellow man. Therefore, the world has a right to expect much from the Masonic initiate, for he has assumed much. He has not assumed anything that was not previously to be expected of him, but in his renewal and regeneration, he has consciously assumed that which was ethically expected of him, therefore, as a "child of Light" his regeneration is to become manifest as an exemplification of Masonic Principle and Conduct in the external world.

55 Assuming the requisite evolutionary status, the Masonic initiate is in a fair way to progress on the Path that leads to cosmic consciousness, if he eschews the pitfalls of politics and cliques and keeps to the straight and narrow way of true Masonic Principle. He cannot fail to make that progress, for over the same Path have trodden those who, having gone that way before us, have enterd into Light.

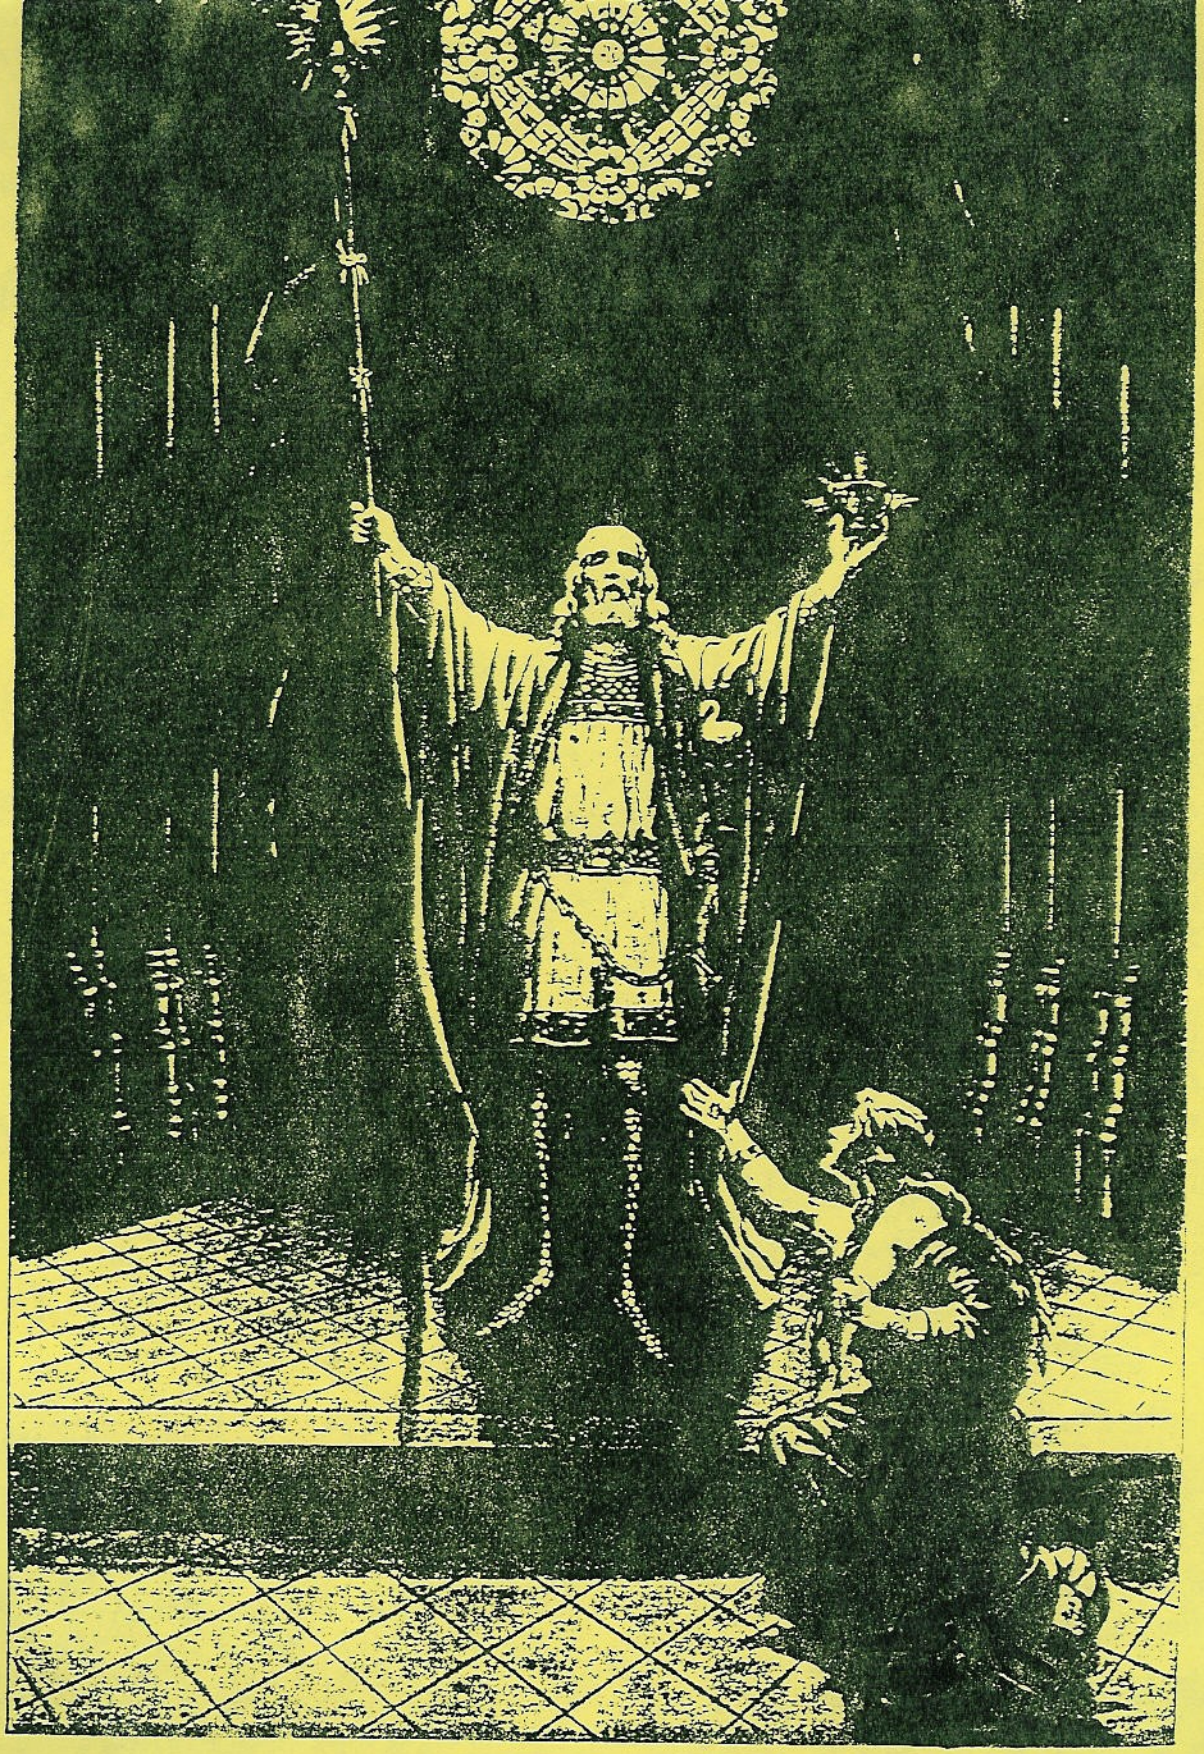
DEVOTED TO THE ADVANCEMENT AND MYSTICAL ENLIGHTENMENT OF MAN



PARSIFAL AND THE HOLY GRAIL.

In the great temple on Mount Salvat stands Parsifal, the third and last king of the Holy Grail, holding aloft the scintillating green Grail Cup and the sacred spear. From the tip of the spear trickles an endless stream of blood. Before Parsifal kneels Kundry (Kundalini), the temptress, who, released from the spell of the evil Klingsor, adores the sacred relics of the Passion. Of the Grail Mysteries, Hargrave Jennings writes, "The council of the Knights or Brothers of the Holy Grail, or Graël, was a reflex of the sacred bond sanctified by sacraments which held the majestic and mystic Rosicrucians together. These were really the guardians of the greater mysteries. In this sense of the mysterious and the sacred, the 'garter' of the 'Most noble the Order of the Garter'—is not a 'garter' at all, but the 'Garder,' or 'Keeper,' the sacredest and holiest guardian of the supernatural chastity of none other than the most exalted feminine personality (of course in the abstract and miraculous sense), the very foundation of Christianity—the 'Cestus' or girdle of the blessed and immaculate Virgin Mary, the Queen of Heaven, with her victorious foot, for all the ages past and to come, trampling upon the Dragon, in her celestial purity, as the 'Mother of Christ.'" (See Phallicism.) The key to the Grail Mysteries will be apparent if in the sacred spear is recognized the pineal gland with its peculiar pointlike projection and in the Holy Grail the pituitary body containing the mysterious Water of Life. Mount Salvat is the human body, the domed temple upon its summit, the brain, and the castle of Klingsor in the dark valley below, the animal nature which lures the knights (brain energies) into the garden of illusion and perversion. Parsifal, as the purified candidate, becomes the Master of the holy relics and of the sacred science for which they stand. Kundry, having fulfilled the purpose of her existence, dies at the foot of the altar with the immortal words, "I serve!"

THE ESOTERIC TRADITION AND THE TEMPLE

THE CATHARS

The word Cathar is derived from the Greek word Catharoi meaning pure. It is believed to have been first used in the second half of the twelfth century to describe members of a heretical Christian sect which developed in southwestern France and certain other areas in Western Europe during the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. The Cathars were also known as the Albigenses, meaning "Men of Albi." One of the main centers of Catharism was the town of Albi which is today the capital of the County of Tarn, situated about 47 miles northeast of Toulouse. However, there were other heretical sects in the region which were also called Albigenses. In order to understand the meaning of Catharism, a brief mention of the Gnostics, the Manicheans and the Bogomils will be necessary.

GNOSTICISM The word "Gnosticism" originates from the Greek Gnostikos which means one who has gnosis or knowledge. Gnosticism is an ancient religious movement which predates Christianity but which subsequently interacted with it during the first three centuries of the Christian era.

The basic doctrine of gnosticism is dualism, though the degree and nuances of the doctrine have varied throughout its history. Dualism is the belief that there are two creative forces: God the Absolute who created the spiritual world, and a lower being who created the evil material world. According to this doctrine, there is an aspect of man, of which he is not normally conscious, which is part of the Godhead itself. Because of the Fall this became captive in matter. Through an initiatory experience bringing revelation from above, Man can become aware of his divinity and destiny and thereby regain his original world of the spirit. This realization cannot be achieved through studying sacred books or doctrine; it can only come through an inner revelation.

One of the effects of Christian influence was to encourage a certain flexibility among different Gnostic groups as to the relationship between God and the created world. Probably the greatest effect of Gnosticism on Christianity was to oblige the latter to develop a doctrine to counter the concept of dualism and to assert the importance of the work of Jesus Christ.

MODERN GNOSTICISM The term Gnosis is frequently encountered in hermetic and esoteric teachings. Modern Gnosticism is no longer dualistic, and the word Gnosis is used nowadays generally to mean the realization of one's divinity through inner revelation rather than through mastery of a given doctrine.

The original Gnostics accepted the idea of the Christ within, but rejected the atonement. To them the Christ was a great prophet who had realized the Gnosis. One of the better known sources of Gnostic doctrine is the Pistis Sophia, and as it was written in the third century, it shows considerable Christian influence. This work takes the form of a dialogue between Jesus and his disciples along with Mary Magdalene on the Mount of Olives, 11 years after the crucifixion. Pistis Sophia is the World Soul which has fallen with Man and can be redeemed by Man if he redeems himself.

THE MANICHEANS The Manichean sect was founded by Manes, a Persian mystic who lived between 215 and 276 AD. Manes was initiated into the Mysteries of Mithras, and although he is reputed to have studied those mystical teachings of esoteric Judaism which were to become the Kabalah, his own teachings were very much influenced by Gnosticism, of which he adopted a very radical form. He taught that the spiritual world and the material world were completely separate. The spiritual world, which was good, was created by God, and the material world, which was evil, was created by Satan. Man contained the goodness of the spiritual world within him, and his main purpose in life was to free his spirit from the evil world of matter so that it could return to God.

Manes taught that Jesus as a personality was neither the unique son of God nor the provider of salvation. Jesus, according to Manes, came to show the way, demonstrating that the Christ within him and within all human beings was the only hope of salvation.

Manes ran into opposition from the Zoroastrians and was eventually tortured and crucified. After the death of Manes, the inner circle of his followers organized and promoted the sect so effectively that it soon spread through Turkestan, parts of the Middle East and as far as India and China.

BOGOMILISM
MANICHEISM
ALBIGENSIANISM
CATHARISM

Manicheism was adopted between the tenth and fifteenth centuries by a number of people living in the Balkan region known today as Bulgaria. The Bulgarian version of Manicheism was named after its founder, Bogomil. During the eleventh and twelfth centuries, the movement spread European and Asian provinces of the Byzantine Empire. The strong reactions against heresy at the time brought persecution, and in 1100 the leaders of Bogomilism were imprisoned and their leader Basil burned to death. About 1150 the influence of the Bogomils began to be felt in parts of France and Italy. In Bulgaria itself they remained a powerful influence until about the fourteenth century, when the Ottoman conquest brought the movement to an end.

The Albigensian movement and Catharism were at first not just a branch of Bogomil Manicheism; there were already doctrinal trends in that direction in southern France. The Bogomil movement strengthened and gave more systematic and organized form to these heretical tendencies, but around 1150 the situation changed considerably and the doctrines of the Bogomils became closely associated with Catharism. Nicetas, a Bogomil bishop, visited the south of France in 1167.

THE CATHARS

Ironically, Bernard of Clairvaux was called into the breach to persuade the Cathars to return to the Catholic fold. Even he was not successful and they proceeded to organize themselves into a church. Shortly afterwards a large number of bishops were appointed in Albi and others later in Toulouse, Carcassonne and Val d'Aran. A number of bishoprics were also established in Italy.

In 1209 Pope Innocent III obliged the Cistercians to preach a crusade against the Cathars. A civil war took place in which the Provencal civilization of southern France, including Toulouse, was destroyed. The Cathars and other Albigenses survived only to be crushed later by the Inquisition in 1239. In 1244 the fortress of Montségur, the main Cathar stronghold, was captured and destroyed, and large numbers of Cathars burnt alive. The surviving Cathars had to go underground and many fled to Italy, where persecution was less intense.

DOMINICANS & FRANCISCANS

The Dominican and Franciscan Orders were founded in the thirteenth century to counteract the influence of the Cathars. Their respective techniques were different but equally effective. The Dominicans evolved techniques which developed into the Inquisition, while the Franciscans preached and won over the masses with the message that the world was God's and therefore good. An interesting point in passing: St. Augustine was once a member of the Manichean sect, but when he embraced Roman Catholicism he became one of the sect's most ardent enemies.

In the way they lived the Cathars were very similar to the Essenes, and even their detractors had to admit that they were very pure people. At one stage there developed a divergence of doctrine within the Bogomil churches, between those who took a more moderate view on dualism and those who wished to follow a more radical line. The Cathars supported the radical form of dualism.

CATHAR PRECEPTS In the practice of their beliefs, the Cathars were extremely ascetic. Meat and sexual intercourse were forbidden. In order to accommodate those believers who were not able to follow the very strict discipline of Catharism, a division was introduced whereby those who followed the discipline completely were known as Parfaits, or Perfect Ones. The latter were set apart from the others by an initiation ceremony which involved the breaking of bread. The Cathars, incidentally, did not believe in transubstantiation. As far as the Holy Scriptures were concerned, the Cathars did not completely accept the Old Testament and had their own interpretations of some parts of the New Testament. The Cathars also believed like the Manicheans, that one's spiritual being remained in heaven and could be united with one's soul (which was attached to the physical body) only through a revealed spiritual knowledge -- Gnosis. If this Gnosis were not realized, one's spiritual being would be obliged to attach itself to another physical body when the existing body died.

The legacy of the Cathars was not merely the memory of their purity and their courage. They and other heretical sects laid the foundation for what became Protestantism. There was also an esoteric side to the Cathars linked to the legend of the Holy Grail. According to the Tradition certain of the parfaits decided to perpetuate their secret teachings by disguising themselves as troubadours, peddlers, merchants and craftsmen and to discreetly pass on their teachings in the course of their wanderings. It is also claimed that they infiltrated the guilds, the remnants of Templarism and Compagnonage, and later the Freemasons.

Wagner's Tannhauser and Parsifal were based on the Grail stories accredited to Wolfram von Eschenbach, who almost certainly came into contact with Cathars whilst practising his calling. There is the legend I referred to earlier which states that when Montségur was about to be taken by the armies of Innocent III, the Cathars secretly sent away their sacred relics to be hidden in a safe place. According to this legend one of these relics was a chalice which, if it was not the original Grail, was reputed to have had the qualities of the Grail.

Various researchers have tried to trace links between the Knights Templar and the Cathars but the evidence is not clear. It appears that some Templars were obliged to take part in attacks against the Cathars. It is also claimed that some Templars managed to avoid taking part and even provided hiding places for the Cathars who wished to escape persecution.

There is no clear evidence to direct contacts for the sharing of respective experiences between the Templars and the Cathars. It is reasonable to assume, however, that if the Cathars had any teaching which could have added to the collection of knowledge the Templars sought to preserve, it is likely that the Templars would have availed themselves of it.

GNOSTIC IDEAS OLD & NEW #224

As most of you know, the Gnostics predated Christianity and flourished in the first centuries of the Christian era. They were pressured almost out of existence and driven underground by the orthodox Christian machine.

Students of Gnosticism should keep firmly in mind that Gnosis is a manner of perception and not a specific belief, and in pursuing any study about Gnostics and Gnosticism should eternally bear in mind that there never was, nor is there today, a uniform Gnostic teaching. Therefore it is quite impossible to say "the Gnostics taught this -- or they taught that -- or they teach this -- or they teach that...."

The following compilation was made by a recently established "Gnostic Church" and is being shared at this time because of the subject matter we are presently studying. We must add however, simply for clarity, that this compilation was NOT made by the Universal Gnostic Church, which you will remember, was declared by Papus as the official Church of Martinism.

COMPARISON BETWEEN SOME ANCIENT PAGAN GNOSTIC CONCEPTS WITH THOSE OF A MODERN CHRISTIAN GNOSTIC GROUP.

(1) Some Pagan Gnostics believed that the physical universe was created by an evil being as a trap for souls. This evil being (of various names) deceived human beings into worshiping him as God, and thereby kept their souls bound forever in his domain. Some Christian Gnostics believe that the physical creation is an emanation from the Godhead Itself and therefore is inherently divine, though presently in need of restoration and healing through Christ.

(2) In keeping with this, some Pagan Gnostics believed that matter was essentially evil. Some Christian Gnostics believe that matter is part of the dynamic power known as the Holy Spirit and is therefore essentially holy.

(3) Some Pagan Gnostics believed that the body was evil and a thing to be hated and escapted from. Most Christian Gnostics believe the body to be subject to the laws of suffering and death because of the ignorance of the person inhabiting it, but that it can, in Christ, be transmuted into an instrument of righteousness and made holy and perfect. The imprisoning force that binds the soul is not the body, but the "sleep of death" -- forgetfulness of God and our own true nature, and identification with the temporal, which is ultimately unreal.

(4) Some Pagan Gnostics believed that God was in no way present in the temporal world, but that He abandoned it irrevocably. To reach God, then, one had to escape from this world. Some Christian Gnostics believe that the world itself is a form of God's Presence, and it is ignorance of this alone that needs to be escaped from through Christ. As soon as ignorance is dissolved, the individual will find himself one with God and Christ in a union of love that has always existed, though forgotten.

(5) Some Pagan Gnostic believed that Jehovah of the old Testament was a negative "tribal spirit," and not at all the true God. Consequently, they rejected the Old Testament as a book of deception and evil. Some Christian Gnostics believe that Jehovah is indeed the one true God and that the Old Testament is true (though in many places allegorical) and is to be accepted by all who would believe in Christ.

(6) Some Pagan Gnostics believed that there were two great, co-equal Principles: Light & Darkness; God & Satan; who warred with one another continually, neither ever really winning permanently or completely. Some Christian Gnostics believe that there is only ONE existence: God, who is the Supreme Good. Evil is not an entity in itself, but a distortion of goodness. The "sinner" is starved of good, and therefore does evil. It is not his nature, but rather a denial of his nature, to commit sin. This is why Satan is called "a liar from the beginning."

(7) Some Pagan Gnostics believed in the absolute separateness of the individual and God, believing that at best the individual could ascend to a better realm than this world. Most Christian Gnostucs believe that man is irrevocably in the image of God and is in essence one with God, though presently "astray" from the true fold -- the Bosom of the Father.

(8) Some Pagan Gnostics believed that salvation was for the few -- eternal damnation or total annihilation being the destiny of the great majority and held almost total pessimism as to the ultimate fate of man. Some Christian Gnostics, on the other hand, were -- and are -- of just the opposite opinion. The doctrine of the APOKATASTASIS PANTON (the restoration of all things to the divine perfection through Christ) is central to Christianity. Saint Paul's statement: "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ all shall be made alive" is fundamental to a right understanding of Christ's mission in this world: "that God may be in all." I Cor 15:28. This is an entire study unto itself.

(9) Some Pagan Gnostics held that either Jesus of Nazareth was the natural son of Joseph and Mary, or else they held that his body was a non-material illusion. Some Christian Gnostics hold that Jesus Christ was supernaturally conceived and born of the Virgin in a body that was real.

(10) Some Pagan Gnostics, whatever they thought about the nature of Jesus' body, denied that he suffered in any way on the cross. Some even postulated that a Pagan Jesus was substituted for the real Jesus and died in his place, while the real Jesus looked on from a distance. Some Christian Gnostics affirm that Jesus did indeed suffer -- fully and to the utmost extent, even refusing the drugged wine which could have alleviated his pain.

(11) Some Pagan Gnostics taught that Jesus did not really die on the cross, but only entered a cataleptic state from whence he was roused after his burial. Many Christian Gnostics, on the other hand, teach that Jesus did indeed truly die, and his spirit fully separated from his body as it hung upon the cross.

(12) In keeping with the above, some Pagan Gnostics denied that Jesus actually rose from the dead. Some Christian Gnostics hold that he did indeed rise from the dead, and keep the festival of his resurrection -- Pascha, the New Passover -- as "the Feast of Feasts."

(13) Some Pagan Gnostics taught that the Twelve Apostles and their associates did not know the true teachings of Christ, but that the real Gospel had been confided to others. Some of the Pagan Gnostics claimed to be the spiritual descendants of those 'others', having received the 'secret knowledge' from a succession of hidden teachers -- including the sorcerer, Simon Magus -- who were outside the visible Church. Some Christian Gnostics deny this, considering the Apostles as perfect conveyers of the Christian Revelation which they (the Gnostics) in turn hold in conscious fullness. (Unfortunately, much of that knowledge was expunged from public knowledge by the efforts of the Byzantine Emperors but it continued to exist among the monastics and in the writings of the Church Fathers whose expositions of ignored truths are today passed off either as "quirks," "corruptions of the texts" or "slips of the pen.")

(14) Some Pagan Gnostics disdained the use of many Sacraments, usually acknowledging only Baptism as viable. Many Christian Gnostics avail themselves of a full range of Sacraments -- in no way confining themselves to the later Western numeration of only seven.

(15) Some Pagan Gnostics especially held the Eucharistic Rite in contempt, insisting on 'spiritual communion' alone as being valid. Most, if not all Christian Gnostics, on the other hand, place supreme value on the Holy Eucharist as the ONLY valid way to enter into full communion with the whole Christ: Body, Psyche and Spirit. Without that Eucharistic Communion there is no life in Christ, as he himself insisted during his public ministry (John 6: 53- 58).

(16) Some Pagan Gnostics undertook ascetic observances in order to reduce the body to its bare existence, that they might escape its influence. Some Gnostic Christians undertake ascetic observances for the purpose of transmuting all the energies of body and mind into the "gold" of spiritual illumination in Christ.

(17) Some Pagan Gnostics saw the body as an instrument of bondage. Some Christian Gnostics see the body as an instrument for liberation when dedicated and used according to the ways of Christ.

(18) Some Pagan Gnostics taught that it was evil to have children, for that brought more souls into bondage to this evil world and its evil god. Some Gnostic Christians teach that it is a worthy thing to have children, for through them souls can be given the chance to grow unto "the fullness of the measure of the stature of Christ" -- something impossible outside the physical body.

(19) Many of the Pagan Gnostics taught that women were evil -- instruments of the false God of the world to perpetuate men's bondage therein. They taught that women were antithetical to the true God Who, in the final analysis,. was a Male. Therefore sexual intercourse with women was abhorred and many Pagan Gnostics urged their followers to engage in various sexual aberrations. Most Christian Gnostics of course hold that women are in the image of God as much as men, though God has no gender, the expression "Father" being an esoteric symbol. The sexual attitudes of some of the Pagan Gnostics are of extreme repugnance to Christian Gnostics.

(20) Some of the Pagan Gnostics believed that the evil God of this world should be defied and his influence destroyed by engaging in the grossest acts of violence, crime and sexuality -- with the accent on sexual acts. There should be little need to point out that the view of most Christian Gnostics is just the opposite, that "whoever commits sin is a slave of sin".

THE ESOTERIC TRADITION AND THE TEMPLE

The Order of the Golden Dawn

In 1865 an Englishman named Robert Wentforth Little founded an esoteric society — the Rosicrucian Society -- in Anglia. Membership was deliberately limited and only to Freemasons who had reached the grade of Master Mason were allowed to join. The nineteenth century novelist and politician, Edward Bulwer Lytton, author of the successful historical novel The Lasts Days of Pompeii, and the Rosicrucian romance Zanoni, was one of the senior officers of the Society.

After Wentworth Little's death in 1878, three men took over the running of the Society. They were a retired medical doctor, William Woodman (1828-1891), a coroner, Dr. Wynn Westcott (1848-1925), and Samuel MacGregor Mathers (1854-1918).

In 1887, so the story goes, the Reverend A. F. A. Woodward, an elderly parson and author on Freemasonry, gave a coded manuscript which he found in a London public library to Wynn Westcott. The origins of this document have never been established, and Woodward himself died in December of that year. Westcott deciphered the document and found that it contained the outlines of a series of rituals for a group which called itself the Golden Dawn. What transpired immediately after this event has been the subject of heated debate ever since.

What is certain is that Westcott asked Mathers and Woodman to join with him in setting up a new esoteric order, which would derive its inspiration from the rituals found in the document. They agreed, and the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn was established in 1887/88. The official history of the Order claims that the address of a German initiate in Berlin called Anna Sprangel was found in the deciphered document. When contacted, she gave Westcott authority to set up an English branch of the long-established secret esoteric order to which she belonged.

Some historians in this field claim that in order to give an authentic background to his new order, Westcott invented the story of Anna Sprangel. Whatever the truth of the matter, a series of systematic study instructions including lessons on the Kabalah and Hermetic Symbolism were drawn up, a system of initiations and grades established, and a hierarchy of officers appointed. Mathers undertook the development of what were to become the Golden Dawn rituals. Shortly after an inner Order was added to which only the most advanced members could belong.

The Order was very well administered by Westcott with Mathers supplying the inspiration. Membership increased rapidly and by the end of 1891 when one of the trumvirate -- Woodman -- died, there were some 81 members in the London Lodge alone. Some of the well-known people who joined the Golden Dawn were the writers Arthur Machen, Bram Stoker and W. B. Yeats; Gerald Kelly, the president of the Royal Society; the Masonic expert Arthur Edward Waite; and one of the most famous actresses of the time, Florence Farr.

In 1892 Mathers produced a new ritual for the inner order based on the myth of Christian Rosenkreutz as related in the Fama. He also reformed the Order with himself as head, and introduced more practical work, which made membership of the inner order even more demanding. Even his detractors admit that the training followed in the inner Order was extremely thorough and that those who managed to stay the course ended up with a very good grounding in almost every aspect of the Western Esoteric Tradition.

The Order's best years were 1891-1896. After this the personalities of Mathers and Westcott clashed, and the Order declined rapidly with members splitting off to form rival orders.

The Golden Dawn did not have a good press during the years of its internal convulsions, nor in the years immediately following the first World War. The public antics of Aleister Crowley, a former member who subsequently set up his own order, did not help the image of the Golden Dawn, despite the fact that most of Crowley's notorious activities were carried out after he had left. In recent years however, researchers have been able to take a more objective look at the Order and there is no doubt that whatever the true origins of Westcott's original authority and information, and whatever the truth about the strange personalities associated with the Golden Dawn, the combined genius of Westcott and MacGregor Mathers did produce a system of psycho-spiritual training containing a genuine and dynamic synthesis of the different strands of the Western Esoteric Tradition whose vitality remains unsurpassed.

Even Crowley has benefitted from a re-examination of the Golden Dawn history. An increasing number of specialists are now of the opinion that Crowley was in fact merely an early "hippy," and that, whatever might have been his personality faults and rather tongue-in-cheek way of expressing himself, his courage and qualities as a hard-headed researcher cannot be denied. But whatever the final verdict, the Golden Dawn tradition still survives, and some modern esotericists are busy up-dating the system, discarding some of its nineteenth-century exaggerations and supplementing it with new knowledge which the Age of Aquarius has been showering upon us. Thus, despite the human failings of the individuals who drew up the Golden Dawn system, it was certainly one of the Guardians of the Tradition. Anyone doubting the efficacy of the system has only to try out some of its methods, which have by now been borrowed by all kinds of groups and are included in many current books on spiritual self-development.

STEWARDS—OF THE MYSTERIES

"And David assembled . . . all the stewards over all the substance and possessions of the king." 1 Chron. xxviii; 1.

STEWARDS are the lowest in the scale of ranking officers of the Lodge, being among the "appointive officers." For that reason, perhaps, they are not always given the consideration that is their due. Their position has become overshadowed by the more dominant offices that carry more generous "speaking parts" and are therefore more coveted. In fact, Stewards, in many Lodges, are regarded, more or less, merely as the proper officers to assume charge of the essential work of the "Fourth Degree", the "Working Tools" of which, are the Knife, the Fork, and the Spoon, not symbolically, but naturally applied—with vigor.

2 There is an old adage that a chain is no stronger than its weakest link, and this adage, while fairly venerable, has not yet been disproved. The Stewards of the Lodge are essential links in the chain to an extent equal to any other position outside that of the Master and his Wardens. At the present day, the office of Stewardship has become largely usurpt by a multiplicity of other petty officials; Standing Committees, Finance Committees, Trustees, Entertainment Committees, etc., etc.

3 As a matter of fact, the Steward is the official to whose care is, or was, committed the custody, not only of the properties of the Lodge, but its general welfare, and the position is pre-eminently one of trust and responsibility. However, aside from this fact, Stewardship is really a preparation for the assumedly more important functions in responsible office, and some Lodges are awake to this truth to such an extent that they have for a general axiom, "appoint stewards as potential future Masters."

4 This is the special phase we are to consider. Stewardship is, in itself, a phase of initiation, for the brother who cannot properly fulfill the duties, simple as they may seem, of Stewardship, is not competent to assume the final responsibilities of the higher offices. In the early Christian Church, Stewards had definite responsibility of a most active sort. They were charged with the care of the sick and distrest, the hospitaller's duties and the guardianship of the general welware of the faithful.

5 We are not oblivious of the existence of "Lodge politics" and we are aware that the chairs are not always fild thru sequential promotions, but we shall ignore this status, for it is not germane to the essential principle of Masonic values. Theoretically, at least, Stewardship is the first step taken by those who are not only entrusted with the mysteries, but also, with the responsibility of conferring them upon other worthy and well qualified candidates for advancement.

6 Stewards then, are not merely functionaries upon whom devolve the pleasures of the after-lodge collations; they are Stewards of the mysteries, neofites in training for the proper rendition and interpretation of Masonic teachings and allegories. They are potential Masters, and Masters are graduate Stewards. Like the Sephirotic Emanations, they symbolize the beginning and the ending, the ending merged into the beginning and stand at Malkuth on the Sephirotic Tree of Life.

7 There is a special dignity attacht to the office of Steward that ought to be emfasized more vigorously. It is an honorable position. It is a symbolic position. It is an esoteric position. It would possibly be more correct to say that the Junior Steward represents Malkuth and the Senior Steward Yesod. Malkuth, Kabbalistically, signifies "Kingdom" and the Junior Steward stands between the Kingdom of the World as symbolized by the outer world of everyday life, and the inner world of spirit as represented by the Kingdom of the Mysteries, the Threshold of which the candidate seeks to cross.

8 The Senior Steward, as Yesod, symbolizes, Kabbalistically, "Foundation." As one step higher in the Steward's grade, he symbolizes the fundamental basis of Masonic teaching, into which, the Candidate who has passed the Threshold, is entering. The Ten Sephiroth, of which Malkuth, the Junior, and Yesod, the Senior Steward are the bases, represent symbolically the fundamental activities of En Soph, as specific rays of Intelligence.

9 Esoterically, therefore, the Junior and Senior Stewards hold a definite place in the sequential chain of symbolic official units in the Lodge. They are positive links in this chain and from the spiritual standpoint, their place and position is as fundamentally important and vital as any that may be more notable by virtue of ritualistic activity on the floor of the Craft.

10 The Stewards stand, as it were, between the Initiate Brethren and the Profane of the outer world. All Masonic Brethren are virtually Stewards, for all Masons are potentially custodians of the mysteries, by virtue of the Obligations they have individually assumed. But the Lodge Stewards hold an appointive office bearing the distinct appellation as such, and so act as exemplars of what all members of the Craft ought to have continually in mind—their responsibility toward the teachings they have received.

11 As the Stewards symbolically represent Kingdom and Foundation, so these properties represent the great body of Masonic membership at large. It is the general membership of the Craft that constitutes the Masonic Kingdom of Light and it is also the great body of Masonic membership that constitutes the foundation upon which the successful work Freemasonry conducts for humanity is and must be built. Singularly, but most appropriately, these two properties, Kingdom and Foundation, represent the basis upon which, that Spiritual Structure, the "House not made with hands, eternal in the heavens" is Masonically erected. Kingdom furnishes the locale, and Foundation the substantive base upon which the spiritual building only can be built.

12 The success and permanence of any building depends entirely and basically upon the foundation that is under it and the place wherein and whereon that foundation is laid. It is an evidence of the genius of Freemasonry that Stewardship forms the Foundation and the Kingdom upon which the fabric of the Craft is developt.

13 The importance of the several official Masonic positions is shown by the symbols appropriate to each. The Cable-Tow, previously mentioned in these instructions, is essentially a physical symbol of limitations. Until freed from limitations, the Masonic neofite cannot expect to make the complete progress that the Order opens out to him. Similarly with the Plumb-Line. It is not alone a symbol indicating the upright manner which should characterize the actions and attitude of Masons toward each other; it is to a greater extent, the symbol of continuity.

14 The Plumb-Line symbolizes the continuity of the Order, not alone as an institution in the world, but as an organic, continuous stream of illumination, developt by the conjunction of many sources thru past eras into one unified organism, in which the spiritual life stream has been preserved. It is the symbol of what is commonly called the "Apostolic Succession" in some religious bodies and it is the symbol of the living protoplasm transmitted from cell to cell thru the process of fission, extending back incalculable time periods in biological history.

15 A single break in such a stream would have checkt the supply from all subsequent ramifications. The Stewards, as Malkuth and Yesod in the Lodge, symbolize and are the keys to the beginning of the chain of Masonic-consciousness, for it is not too difficult to visualize the Fraternity as an Entity, with its individual Group Spirit, and the Stewardship preserves the continuity from one source of origin to the new one. For this reason, the Plumb-Line is peculiarly appropriate to the station of the Stewards, althou of course it is not so allocated in the Lodge.

16 In modern usage, the Junior Warden responds to the symbolism of the Plumb-Line and as his office has largely to do with the assumed actions of the Craft while at work, it is not inappropriate, nevertheless, from the standpoint of continuity, it also symbolizes to a notable degree, the work and responsibility of the Stewards.

17 A Steward is one to whom something of importance is entrusted. The Lodge Steward therefore, is, or should, be an exemplar of what all the brethren of the lodge should be,—custodians of the mysteries in an active, operative sense, not passively initiated members, for no matter how many degrees one has taken, no man is truly initiated unless and until he has received the Light within as a part of his individual consciousness. Then he is truly a custodian of the mysteries,—a true Steward.

18 A man enters Freemasonry as an Entered Apprentice, in order to become an integral part of the Foundation of Masonry. A Mason enters the ranks of the Lodge Officers as a Steward, in order that he may become an integral part of the "Kingdom" of Masonry. All life is a process of initiation into the spiritual kingdom and Freemasonry exemplies this truth, not only by initiation into the Order itself, but into the official grades of the Order as well. Stewardship therefore, together with the Junior and Senior Masters of Ceremonies, may be regarded as the Entered Apprentice grade of official Masonry.

19 The office of Stewardship is a test, an excellent test. It is not by any means an impressive office at first sight or thought. Seemingly, the Stewards have little to do of obvious or appreciable value. Too often the chairs of the Stewards are vacant and the Master is obliged to fill them temporarily. This is natural, for it is normally human for ambitious ones seeking the lime-light, to electioneer for positions of greatest apparent brilliance. Nevertheless, we have in mind the declaration of an historic character who preferd to be a doorkeeper in the house of his Lord, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness. The same application might profitably be made to the office of Stewardship.

20 It is a genuine test of the sincerity and capacity of a brother, to decide, by appointing him to the office of Steward, whether he can be trusted with small responsibilities, in a seemingly obscure position. The negligent Steward is apt to make a negligent Deacon, Warden or Master. Those who cannot be trusted with small matters are seldom able to rise to the responsibility of larger and more important matters.

21 Esoterically, the Steward represents a step into another and a higher phase of initiation. To the ordinary Master Mason, the Lodge satisfies and appears to offer him what he has sought. But the official ranks of Freemasonry represent a different phase of attainment. Officialdom, in any usage, represents power, deputed or entrusted by suffrage, to chosen ones. Roughly speaking, the Body of Freemasonry represents the Lesser Mysteries, while Official Masonry represents the Greater Mysteries. The Steward therefore, is one who has made a still further step. He has allegorically entered the lower grades of the Greater Mysteries of the Craft, a step carrying with it a slight degree of power, which is to be increast as time passes and the neofite proves worthy of the seemingly slight responsibility reposed in and upon him.

22 The Steward personifies every individual brother of the Order, for every Mason from Entered Apprentice to Grand Master is a Steward. Every Mason has been entrusted with a greater or lesser degree of the mysteries. At the time they were conferred upon him, or, rather, at the time he was invested with them, they may not have seemed especially mysterious or, in fact, as partaking of the nature of mysteries at all. This is because humanity is prone to judge superficially and things worth while lie deep beneath the surface.

23 The writer has known of many men who have entered Freemasonry with every expectation of having some portentous mystery revealed to them and have exprest a keen disappointment at the apparent simplicity of the ritual. A few years later however, several of these same men had become ardent esoterists and were and are strong for the more specific instruction in the arcanes, in the Lodge room. But this is not the mission of Freemasonry. The Fraternity, as previously stated, presents the keys and furnishes the Light, and it is the province of every sincere seeker to make his own search, by his own inner guidance, and in so doing, he will discover to his pleasure, that congenial minds will rally to his aid and companionship.

24 According to Mackey, it is the duty of Stewards to "assist in the collection of dues and subscriptions." Stewards in the modern usages have little of that to do, except by way of soliciting subscriptions for the inevitable Lodge dinners, suppers and collations. The jewel of office of Stewardship is the Cornucopia, a symbol of plenty. Esoterically, this symbolism is most ancient, and takes us back to the earlier custodians of the mysteries. In those mysterious rites, the analogues of the modern Stewards, had, as their specific duty, the support and nourishment of the workers who devoted their time to the instruction given to the continuous classes of neofites. Such a duty is no longer incumbent upon Stewards, for times have signally changed.

25 Ordinarily three compose a M.·.M.·. Lodge, but when composed of seven, the personelle consists of the Master, Senior and Junior Wardens, Senior and Junior Deacons, Secretary, Treasurer. There is reason to assume however, that in earlier times, the functions of the Secretary and Treasurer were taken over by brethren not in the usual order. The full working staff of the Lodge outside of the Secretary and Treasurer are, the Master, Senior and Junior Wardens, Senior and Junior Deacons, Senior and Junior Masters of Ceremonies, Senior and Junior Stewards and Chaplain.

26 The Tyler, Marshal, Precentor, Organist, etc., may be regarded as extra-ritualistic functionaries. Here then, we have ten officers, corresponding to the Ten Sephiroth or Emanations. The whole staff constitute in the exoteric plane, the collective forces of the Ray from the Great White Brotherhood, which is a body entirely dissociated from any individual organization one the physical plane, but operating thru such bodies thereon as may prove to be acceptable and facile instruments for its great purpose—human enlightenment and freedom.

27 Each member of this illustrious staff, is a direct representative of brethren who have gone this way before him thru ages upon ages past, in the presentation of the mysteries. They have indeed an illustrious ancestry and lineage. They are the Stewards to whom the great husbandman Freemasonry has entrusted specific talents, and from whom Freemasonry will and does require an accounting.

28 Associated with the Stewards are the Masters of Ceremonies, Junior and Senior, who correspond, Kabbalistically, to the Sephiroth Hod (Splendor) and Netzach (Firmness). In the Rosicrucian Grades of the First Order, the Junior and Senior Stewards and the Junior and Senior Masters of Ceremonies have, as their ritualistic correspondences or analogs, the Zelatori, Theorici, Practici and Philosophii.

29 Researchers who seek the Masonico-Rosicrucian correspondences will find, therefore, in the Masonic Stewards and Masters of Ceremonies, a collegium, or body representative of the First Order of Freemasonry, the Ground Floor of the Temple, analogous to the First Order of the Kabbalistic Structure of Rosicrucianism. This correspondence is not a matter of chance. It is evidentially intentional, as preserving a definite adherence to a cosmic schema that has, thruout many ages, conserved, or rather, concealed and revealed the Lesser Mysteries.

30 Furthermore, there is ample evidence to "those who seek" that the Stewards and Masters of Ceremonies are a passive development of the functions of the Dadouchos and Stolistes of the ancient mysteries, perpetuated in the work of the officers still bearing the same names in the Rosicrucian Work. We say "passive" advisedly, for Masonry proclaims itself to be a speculative Order, altho its Work is really quite operative, for work can be performed actively, operatively and constructively to far greater permanent advantage on the mental plane than on the purely physical. It is probable that, in their limited knowledge of mental energies as we understand them today in the light of modern psychology, the founders and formulators of Masonry as it now exists, sought to develop an organization that would function solely in the "Outer". In this they were not only successful, but even more so than they had any idea, for Masonry functions both in the "Outer" and in the "Inner" as well, and to good purpose in each.

31 The Ground Floor of Masonry's Spiritual Temple is, Kabbalistically, built upon the four fundamental factors, Kingdom, Foundation, Splendor and Firmness. To complete the picture, the Tyler standing without, armed with drawn sword, symbolizes the Kerubim who, with flaming swords, (Caduceus of Mercury) guarded the Gates of the allegorical Eden. The Tyler, by his position outside the Door of the Lodge, corresponds to the Rosicrucian 0°-0°, which symbolizes the commencement of all things under the simulacrum of No-Thing and is inclusive in its functions. The Tyler therefore, symbolizes the commencement of the Masonic career and his functions are included in every degree or phase of the Lodge's Work.

32 The basis of Freemasonry is, as may be seen, complete. To those who can establish true values, and see with the eye of experience and real depth of appreciation and understanding, a building is not impressive thru applied decorative beauty alone. An ornate entablature, imposing columns, elaborate peristyles, and sculptured pediments do not constitute the measure by which the beauty of a structure may be unfailingly estimated. The critic whose opinions have weight and depth, bases his appreciation, on the ensemble, to some extent of course, majorly upon the foundation; the solid, substantial basic principles of legitimate construction.

33 The work of the Masters of Ceremonies is not at all spectacular, but there is a feature about it that should dignify it with a special impressiveness, namely, that these officers are primarily those with whom the candidate for the Mysteries comes first in verbal contact ritualistically. They . . . . prepare the Candidate. This process of Preparation is, in itself, most symbolical. First of all, it teaches the Candidate that Freemasonry, like anything of real worth or dignity, cannot be "rusht". It cannot be taken by storm. One cannot rush in off the street and make his entrance to the Lodge. A special Preparation must be and is provided for and the Masters of Ceremonies take care of it.

34 The writer has known of Candidates who have refused to proceed with the Initiation, due solely to the effect of their first contact with the Masters of Ceremonies. Whereas they expected solemnity and impressiveness, they were met with flippancy and levity, intended, no doubt, as fraternalism and good fellowship, but Candidates at the time of actual entrance into the order are not usually thinking of good fellowship. They are in a highly psychological condition. Things that would ordinarily be passed off understandingly, are mistaken and misunderstood.

35 The actual preparation of the Candidate is highly symbolical. Divested of the insignia by which he is ordinarily recognized and known to the world at large; stript of the conventionalities of any given age, custom, style or precedent, the Candidate, in a state of "neitherness"—presents only himself to the Lodge. Symbolically, it is "a soul laid bare" that, being properly instructed, enters the Lodge. Symbolically therefore, it is not the outer man who becomes a Mason, it is the inner man, the Ego alone, divested of all that the world has invested him with, stript of all outward honors, decorations and the glittering baubles of custom or environment.

36 Added to this lack of physical investiture is the lesson inculcated that the aid of Deity must first be sought in all important undertakings. This procedure, his first experience with the Craft he is entering, makes one of the most striking and deeply seated impressions upon the neofite.

The lesson is a wholesome one that he can take with profit into his home or office and, in fact, this is true of every definite principle inculcated in the Masonic curriculum. All the teachings of Freemasonry are eminently practical.

37 From the very outset of his Masonic career, the teachings of the Fraternity are sharply imprest upon the Candidate's vital consciousness in a way he is not likely to forget. It is only thru pain that we understand pleasure. It is only thru darkness that we understand what light means. Experience is gained thru contrasts. A life that held only pleasure would be deadly dull and colorless. Masonry gives its neofites a taste of contrast and drives home the moral of its lessons by the vigorous application of its Working Tools.

38 The Masonic neofite enters the Craft thru Pain and Darkness. As Manly Hall has well said, "Ignorance is the darkness of Chaos and Light is the knowledge of Cosmos." This is quite true and most apropos, for entrance into the Masonic Fraternity symbolizes release from the mental darkness of the chaotic outer world into the light and liberty of the cosmic world, and as we have already pointed out, light gives liberty and liberty is freedom and Light, Liberty and Freedom are essential Masonic Principles that mean—TRUTH.

39 It is in the Entered Apprentice Degree that the Neofite receives his distinguishing badge, the White Lambskin Apron, the insignia by which all Masons are known. The Neofite is taught, at the time he is invested with this Apron, that "its spotless white surface should be an ever-present reminder of a purity of life and conduct, a never ending argument for nobler deeds, for higher thoughts and for greater achievements." It is considerably more than that, however, esoterically. The Apron with its Flap, shows the Square and the Triangle. The Strings represent the Cable Tow applied to each section or factor. The Square represents Man, as a creature of Matter, in fact the plane or region of Matter—the World. The Triangle represents Spirit. When the Flap or Triangle points upward, it represents Spirit superimposed above Matter. When hanging downward, it represents Spirit involuted or involved in Matter, the Logos of the Man, or the Word Incarnate in Human Form.

40 Considering the fact that, esoterically, it is not the physical Man but the Spiritual Ego or real Man who is entering, thru Initiation, into the Craft, we may see how really symbolic the Masonic Apron is. The Apron is worn in ways peculiar to the various Masonic Degrees, but by the aid of simple diagrams which the Masonic reader can easily prepare for himself, it will be seen how the manner of wearing the Apron signifies not only the classification of Working Craftsmen but the degree to which Spirit is merging into and vitalizing Matter thru Involution, also the extent to which Matter is Evolving up to Spirit. Symbolically, the manner of wearing his Apron, should distinguish the evolutionary status of the Neofite.

41 The Strings of the Apron are, symbolically, applied one to the Square of Matter, the other to the Triangle of Spirit. They are the spiritual umbilici, corresponding to the Cable Tow and as we have pointed out that the Cable Tow is a symbol of Limitation, so these spiritual umbilici are likewise limiting symbols. They remind the Neofite that, altho essentially a spiritual being, he is limited in his spiritual capacities on the Material Plane. As a physical being he is limited in his faculties on the spiritual plane. But when tied about him, they symbolize the unity between the functions of both planes,—spiritual power materialized and material power spiritualized in constructive activity.

42 Bro. J. D. Buck points out that "Freemasonry is the subjugation of the Human that is in Man by the Divine; the conquest of the Appetites and Passions, by the Moral Sense and Reason; a continual effort, struggle and warfare of the Spiritual against the Material and Sensual. That victory, when it has been achieved and secured, and the conqueror may rest upon his shield and wear the well earned laurels, is the True Holy Empire." This struggle and conquest is symbolized by the Lambskin Apron and its component elements of Spirit and Matter coming into unified activity. The Master Mason who wears his Apron appropriately to his Degree, is wearing a symbol that it requires courage to display, if he only realizes the full import of its complete symbology.
