Horseshoe curve of the Aare River loops around the stately Old Town section of Bern, seat of the federal government and capital of the Canton of Bern. In a land that has historically shunned centralization of power, Bern performs its key political role with a minimum of fanfare. The cautious Swiss, rather than have too many federal branches in one city, maintain their Supreme Court at Lausanne. Each of the 25 cantons and demarcations (map, page 72) jealously guards its autonomy and separate identity.
