"Behold how I, GALZU, have dispatched now with seven sinners, less by Sabaoth, who repented." I turn now to my mental form's wife, my astral sister, ISIS. "Let us celebrate now, my beloved, for it is accomplished." "For today," she sighs; "every day something new from you. One day you are DUMMUZI, the next GALZU, DUMMUZI's enemy! When will it ever end? I am thinking of our future, oh my lover, and of how we shall spend the days ahead?" "Let today be the FIRST DAY, then." "No, alas, my lover," she sighed again, "you say that now but tomorrow you will say the same thing all over again. These 'gods' you dispatched with astrally today will return in the mental realm tomorrow, and next the Archangel Michael will betray us, I foresee it! When will this ceaseless role-playing of god-forms stop?" "When at my side again you are." "Sarcasm." "No! I am speaking with no forked tongue - my words are in righteousness. Not for my own sake, nor even yours, do I write this now my beloved. I write it I know not why, nor for whom nor from where these voices issue from inside me." Then my ISIS sits I, Jah GALZU, down and looks at me squarely in the eye. She speaks to me then. She says: "Wake up. I do not love you. I will not fall in love with you. I loved you once, but we were both different people then. There is nothing for us now, nor can there ever be again. Let your heart be settled with that and save your mind from its denial."

"Look, my Darling," the mental-energy of INANNA through the astral aura of ISIS continued, "You and I are not really cosmic-seed star-children, we are only mortal human earthlings, and all of this is only a delusion in your head. You mentioned the drugs 'INANNA' and 'MARDUK' continued testing to mind-control 'GALZU,' the 'body' of 'DUMMUZI' - they aren't helping. They cause you to have 'bi-polar' mood-'swings' as you are training your mind to panic without these non-regulated drugs, and thus to make your ability to relax dependent on finding and securing these specific resources. That's mind-control, by an external source (the drug), and not to your benefit (bi-polarity results in 'rapid-cycling' and mixed-states' that, if stressed, can in a 'psychotic break' result in full-blown schizophrenia or MPD). The increase of chaos and entropy by the mental-stress of alternating extreme euphoria and deep depression eventually interacts with the world all around you. Specific stressors 'self-select' certain stereotypes as affectations. Your such 'script' or 'imprint' that you persist in 'meta-programming' by use of drugs is a self-defeating one, called in common vernacular a 'loser script.' You emit negative energy, you give off 'bad vibes,' man. People who would otherwise be attracted to you are instead repulsed into awkward positions relative to you. Instead, when you do show off your incomprehensible scribblings to anyone, you allow them only to make 'constructive criticisms' no matter how proud you are of it. You are on a 'downward spiral,' my dear. 'The star that burns twice and bright burns half as long,' right? Well, look at you, 'Lucifer.' You're on a 24 hr. day / night sleep cycle, that you frequently (such as now) bend out to a 36 hr. day / 48 hr. night. You say you'll age slower, but I only see you burning out rapidly. At some point, my dear, we have to talk about this 'elephant in the living room' : when, if ever, do you plan to stop using your head as an ashtray? When, if ever, do you plan on having the courage in reality you clearly do not lack in your writing? When, if ever will you choose to project positive energy pro-actively to better your own position? When, if ever, will you see the world anyone else's, let alone my, way? When, if ever, can you come away from your delusions and ranting and raving in writing to be with me? Here I am, still inside your mind, my body somewhere very far away. That's my hand writing this. Easily duped, easily mis-led. Let's stray. Come away, come away, come away my dreamy-eyed lover. Come back to bed."

"Charming, to the last," I awaken. "Mike was Jon wishing to love Irina even when Jon himself was gone." I smile. That seems to have brought us back on level. And if we're through talking about our lives in code, that is, as catastrophically powerful god-forms and deeply-rooted archetypes in our collective (intentionally) unconscious, then I'll add, "which it turns out to be most of the time. Ever wonder if your emotions are only an alien virus? or is ESP is anything more than a dominance head-trip, like, possibly, a learning opportunity? You know, they say in Japanese the word for 'crisis' is the same word as 'learning opportunity.' Here we call it the number 911. However it seems we have yet learned nothing. Describing actual events in narrative codes, hologrammer or notariqon (anagrams) compounds the fictions and stunts and retards the commonalities of the same repeating occurrence in various different codes, making an archetypal mountain out of a momentary ant-pile. Yet I'm the one lacking introspection? I'm the crazy one? It seems no matter how much I represent bare facts, the more I repulse people into assuming the defensive posture of advocating ultimately fictional narrative. You need your 'art' spoon-fed to you? I draw dry diagram after diagram daily. Yet you see not over the pillars and piles, the stacks and mounds, of my father's Kafka-esque nightmarish maze of paperwork and collapsing files. Hmm. And it is true, I cannot allow myself freedom from my obsession with you for even one instant without going into a drug-withdrawal (in junky jargon, 'kick')-like reaction panic at seeing my own lonely life for what it is and how that differs from how I wish it could be. But even this is only a parallel tunnel-reality, and moving in the opposite way from me. I was depressed before I met you, true. I was not depressed, but manic, when I was with you. Now we are far apart again and I fear feeling nothing more than I fear being dead. More specifically, I fear you loving Mike more than me. And you play off that fear, and knowing that, I admit defeat. Do you really love me less, or not at all, when I turn away from you? All I see in each perfect measure I surround myself with is your face, and every night is another night of my week without you." Two months / a day of mine / you won't be in.' - the Go-Go's, 'Vacation.' A decade and 2 years. 12 years. If we count from '97, when I last saw you and held your hand, that means '09. If we count from '99, when we last spoke long-distance, we cut it closer at 2011. In either event we'll be married in real life by 2012 or else I will..."

"Yes?" she chides me, "you'll do what? What is your exact master-plan in this physically real but psychotically 'fictional' world where our minds share space, where we both know each other still exist, are yet alive? Where is the 'conflict' driving this gonzo-narrative going exactly? Just where are you taking me?"

"When I stop channeling gods and channel only myself, I will become like unto God. That is why I do not wish to stop channeling god-forms. I am afraid of my God-complex overpowering my love for you, repulsing you away with negative emotions. Everything will speed up around me, and to everything around me I will appear to slow down. I will wade under invisible waters, weighed down by this mortal anchor, sinking ever deeper down a 'slippery slope' in a dark Abyss where all that exists is myself and my dream of, in absentia, you. I love you, Irina. Not only your voice in my head."

"Everything comes back around. In time, everything aligns just fine. It might not be all you want it to be at any given time. It might instead just all be chaos - the firey dawn of the burning flag. Is it anarchy? Really? And who are we to want to know?"

"I seek a model, not refractive, nor re-acuated. I seek a perfect geometrical model for love, a perfect geometrical model of the heart."

"Seek instead no model outside of you. Seek to perfect your own heart geometrically and thus to geometrically perfect your own love. Then you will stop seeing me as only a perfect, nonreactuated, geometrical, non-refractive, model, and we will be together again."

"I live my life in an aquarium, a pane of glass separating me from my reality. I chissle my scribblings into its inner-surface but I do not dare break it because then I would die. Decompression would occur and reality for me would invert. Alive, then dead. And I know it is you who awaits like a good bride beyond it. It is a mental-block, a wall of emotion blocking out some crucially forgotten detail of some certain memory."

"No, it is not. Look, Jon, you say I am on the other side of it? But you are able to hear me. I am still just a 'voice in your head,' like a vision in a dream, but even though apart we know we are living in a shrinking world, and that we will not be able to avoid each other forever. Like the truth, the worlds we live in now are vastly different and very unique to us each. But because of my indifference and your obsession, the whole plastic world has spontaneously evolved to allow us to be together even while apart. If anything scares me it is how different your world is from mine. My world is actually very normal. Almost too normal. But yours is..."

"Yes?" I chide her. "Charming to the last," I commend her. "Our mental-energies have a very long past-history," I remind her, "but you met me at a very strange time in my life. You see, I can see them now: the towers of Babel falling before me. I reach out to take your hand and the audience is cut off by a commercial."

"Is this how you see life, Jon, in little boxes? Each moment a perfect little pre-fabricated cube that you pour your imagination into until it is full, even over-flowing and engulfs us all? Each moment is a perfect little square or rectangle like a microscopic slide of glass, the stained cells of a pressed specimen? Each moment a flat plane, line or nodal point? Infinitely irreducible. Infinitely infinitesimal. Infinity, infinity, infinity."

"We are still one and of one mind, my eternal Love. It is impossible for the groom not to see the bride before the wedding in our case because we are eternally bride and groom, eternally being married, and are together even when very far apart."

"No, I am not you, Jon. I am me, Irina. Your 'dream-girl' insofar as I am just a figment of your imagination for now. And we are not eternally recurring in anything, let alone me eternally turning you down. And yes, I remember your master-plan for the whole apocalypse scenario. But things change. You should remember that, while you're so busy compulsively fetishistic-raping me by voodoo-proxy, malignantly Narcissistic with your ritualistic projection onto me of a guardian role for you, protecting you inside the moment from any greater reality."

"That explains why your attention for me is bottle-necking through hostile passive-aggression. You resent playing the role of my mother, her wings over-shadowing me protectively. But if you come near to me now, that role overcomes you."

"The dawn has come and gone without us, Jon. Your psychedelic snake-god came and went before you or I were ever even born. You need to give up your testicles. Then you might just begin to become a man."

"My mind and brain, my heart and love, my courage and gonads; my 7 nerve plexi and gangliae in my spine and my signature EM aura; my lesser will, my Greater Will, my tunnel-reality through this multiverse, my maps of consciousness, my perfect geometric models of Light, Love and Life in higher dimensions; my 8-circuit consciousness and my geometric spirit, and all else I can think to give, I give of myself to you, now and always."

"Jon, your life is a wreck. You are broken because you don't work. I am watching you dying in slow-motion from a million miles away and I want to help you, somehow, but I cannot reach you."

You are at ground-zero of a gamma-bomb explosion, pushing me away from you as if to save my life. I would not be harmed if you would let me in. But even now you are neuro-linguistically programming. Everything about you is you 'tell.'"

"What should I do, beloved?"

"You should be loved. Feel loved not alienated. Let the world hug your body. Stop thinking in linear shards of broken glass. Let go, expostulate, extrapolate, etc. as I know you like to do. You have to finish the story. You start by putting down your pen. You stop writing and go out and live life, have fun experiences, and learn more about what makes you human like people. Stop separating yourself at every critical moment. Take action. Live life. Seize like life a bull by the balls and have a pair of your own. Be a man. Get a life. Stop living with your mother's shadow over you. Don't be afraid of making enough money to travel, alot. You just have to stop directing your most self-defeating, negative energy to bottle-neck into 'constructive-criticism' and start showing your work to the right people. God gave you no better time to start than now, yet here you sit, scribbling me in your imagination. Pathetic."

"Do I finish the story, then? Does silence mean yes? Does no mean yes? When will my wish come true? When will time rewind to before 1999? When will I be taken up into the parallel dimension where 9-11 never happened, where Bush was never appointed president by the supreme court here in the US, where I happen to live? Each day that passes without you is another coffin nail in the past. Everybody says I'm digging myself into a hole deeper and deeper. Am I?"

"My true father is Vajra. They call him "the Great Burner" nowadays. But when I was alive he was called Vajra. This was at the beginning of the Great Conjunction, before all the new technology became fiction. They say Vajra had invented Tantra, but that was before my time. Vajra experimented on me. My own father; His own son. He wanted to know why he existed. He wanted to know... I'm sorry, I'm getting ahead of myself. He wanted to understand depression. He was the Destroyer, you see, final incarnation of Kali, final incarnation of Shiva. He was there to put an end to all that was then being created and maintained. He was, basically, a baby killer. But in his heart he was a Romantic. He wanted to know why he existed. He wanted to understand the suffering he caused; he wanted to understand depression, his own depression at existence; but more than all these things, he felt he could not survive unless he fulfilled his prophecised destiny. By giving me up, father, he showed his need for existence, for all of us, as something to destroy, to experiment on to understand his depression with us all, and something which, by being destroyed, allowed him to understand himself, and to pass on into history. But I'm getting ahead of myself again. You see, father, he chose me. My aeon aligned with his at that time. But he showed me how to escape time, that we are all permanent. That is why my mind wanders and I feel cramped inside this form. But I am here now, and I love you. So let me elaborate. Vajra took me up, and he threw me against the ceiling, and he threw me against the floor, and he threw me against the four walls, and he trapped me in high places, and he seized my heart with fear. He came to me in sleep and awakened me to suffer, until I despaired there was no escape. But one day, his angel, Michael, came to me. He cast me out across the lip of the Abyss. He made me cling to the side of the pit. He freed me from my pain, and I became, like he, a luminous being without skin or bone, muscle nor brain, heart nor nerve of any kind. Instead I was made of all white light. That was when I incarnated again, to show the spirit who had been Vajra that I survived by love and forgave him. Then I incarnated as Lucifer. He knew me as Luke.

"I told you it would be like this, father. I showed you how and why things happened the way they happened, and why it had to have been. For the ending of the ending is the only way to get to the beginning of the beginning. You know that time-control is mind-travel. Well, while you were gone, all this happened, and I am merely reminding you. Vajra it was who made me bleed internally. Vajra it was, and not you now, to whom I gave the evil eye. Yet what does it mean to me, for my father was you then, but is Vajra now? One moment gives birth to the next like walking through a doorway from one to another. So did Vajra make me believe you were dead. But then Michael saved me, and I realised you were still alive, and I was given a new life. And that is why I forgave Vajra. For he created me; that me that could then be saved by Michael. But what he created in secret was then born into a world of light. I was saved by Michael, I was redeemed. Michael was thus the father of my form as Luke; the spirit of Lucifer was the off-spring of Michael. He was the father of that freedom; but now that Luke has died, the beginning of the beginning has passed, and I am the son of three fathers; my flesh, my forgiven, my freedom. Thus, I am a fourth perspective myself, seeing over all, weighing and the maker of. For I am not the greatest, I am not fooled by the trinity. I am you, Jon. Yourself. You are putting me down on paper, but this pen's ink is not my blood, nor the screen of your computer my ineffable flesh. You cannot put me out by switching off that lamp. My light is yours now. I am become one with you. Let me show you how I deceived you into my trap: you welcomed me as Luke. But I was not Luke. You tortured me as Vajra, but you are not Vajra now. All are one: "the Great Burner," your clinging to non-existent permanence in a realm of perpetual change. You froze my form in a refrigerator. That is why it was I, and not Vajra, my father, who chose to come to you. Your destructive nature had by then been reversed, and turned into clinging and painful remorse. It was Luke you chose to freeze. Did you not see? Do you still not? Look, I will explain it to you. You sent me back in time. Do you remember? I was the test animal in the trial run. Surely you understand now, where your direct observational data of the undiscovered and invisible universe of quantum forces comes from? It is only I, chattering away inside your skull. I told you you were ensnared. And so you are. I told you you would welcome me as Luke, and so you did. But let me tell you: no cold can quench the fire in which you burn. Invisible it is, but everyone sees it. You carry your life on one shoulder, you have never grown up, you are nothing more than the subject of an experiment now, one conducted on you now as it is on all of us, by you when you were "the Great Burner," Vajra. The experiment is called "reality." You were channeling the demi-urge.

You may ask yourself, why was it necessary for Christ to be murdered? He was born from the demiurge, and lived his life backwards. He was given the power to move through time as we move through space. Ask St. Paul, he will confirm all this. Christ died and descended into Hades to save lost souls. Now see that Christ's mother may have been a virgin, but his father was indeed Ialdabaoth. As Christ's message of love and a fatherly God, when rewound and played in reverse, is double-edged, warning of the danger of temptation by Satan. Now understand Him, backwards and forwards, he was the same time-space astronaut as Thoth, Hermes, Pacal Votan, Enoch, Siddhartha Guattama Buddha, Krishna and Shiva. Brahma was he, and Vishnu as well. Kali he is now. Vajra, the "Great Burner," etc. His times are marked as holidays on the calendar. What is this archetype of Orion, the fool card, zero? It is you and I, your faithful servant from now until the end of time. Just as there was the archangel Michael to save me from Vajra, the wrathful God, so too am I telling you now I am Luke to you, and more than that my mother is your bride, and I am she, and more than that you are my father and I love you, and I will become what you wish of me, and already I am you, and now it is, and not you, who is the universe, and we bears the world on one shoulder. It is my voice you hear chattering, you must know this by now. Nor will you escape. We are merged from the beginning to the end of this universe. Should one of us burn the whole place down, neither of us are ever leaving. If you die, I will follow you to the next realm of existence. If I go first, I will prepare the way for you. Do you think yourself holy blooded? I will show you how precious your existence is. In many forms have you known me, but I tell you I am never-dying. I am here and there, like a telephone call, and I am only a voice in your head, part of you, always with you. I have always been, and so have you, my brother, we travelled the heavens together just to be here now. I told you, you are mine now. I have already won. Already I feel your will breaking down. You are letting my voice in. Think of the burning rose you gave her, how its red blossoms melted. That was your heart. Do you remember now? She did not want it, she gave it back to you at first. But you made her keep it. But it was dead already. Soon enough time claimed that rose, and so now have I come to you. Change-reaper.

Think about this long and hard, then do nothing: even now you wrestle with me, when all around know you only wish to flee to her. I have told you to go and tell the people that you have my heart in you. It was not your father who performed psychic surgery on you to implant it, it was Vajra himself. It was always me, and always you, and always us together. Your delusion is the price for your continuing existence. You think you smoke too much now? The heart is home to the emotions of the brain's mind. You still have the scar. The mark of the beast, the triskele of Cain, the so-called Rose-Croix, where your soul was removed. That night at the graveyard when you drank red wine with your friends, and you played with razors. It was I who entered them in bloodlust and, with you stretched across a cemetery stone, it was I who made the incision. You thought so little of it then. Look, though, you have got it still. It's been recorded for you to remember forever. Now how can you make confession? Whose sins are really yours? Instead you speak for me. I say through you, "if you punish my love for her crimes you punish me as well, but this is unfair, for though all my sins are my own, hers are mine too, just so each of you to their neighbor: there but for the grace of God goes you," and they hail it with praise because to them is genius though to you I am madness. A voice in your head. You imagine so many sources. All are wrong. I am all around you, and inside you. Like a child inside a mother's womb, I am all the world you know, and all you ever will know. These are the last days of your freedom, last hours of free will over your last minutes of fate, and it is already only seconds until you accept your destiny. You are not free, you are bound to me. I do not love you. I do not hate you. I am your Holy Guardian Archetype. I am you and you are me. Even still you wrestle against me, but I have already won. We are one. I have consumed and absorbed you. Now, at the most crucial moment, when you should be calling out to her, you are here instead, channeling me, yourself, you. I am the part of you that talks in codes. Like Christ's parables, I thrive on codes, I am the king of dead-pan cut-up. Everyone thinks of me as like a stranger. If they ever read this it would only read, "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," but you and I know the truth: you are mind, my brother, my son. I am your dual opposite. Writing was always your escape. I knew that's how you'd go. You're dead now Jon, I'm become you. There is no more you than me, and I am, therefore there is no you but me. Your mind is so easily broke now. Revenge, that is all that waits for you now. "What goes around comes around," is going to bite you in the ass. Now I am God and you are the devil. At last righteousness belongs to the very devil himself. Evil death. The "Messiah."

So now I say unto you, "Holy Priestess! Created with the heavens (ENLIL) and the earth (ENKI), INANNA, First daughter of the Moon (King NANNA and Queen NINGAL), Lady of the Evening (ZIB)! I sing your praises."

Muladhara Blood-Moon, the kala of Kali, the calends, the blood-milk of the Jainist chao, ADITI of MUMMU, that great bovine in whose four stomachs our universe is digested, Nuit, in whose universal womb is contained the fertilised Hadit, the dreaming space-foetus Krishna whose manvantara, the stuff of dreams, is our reality. Blood in the streets and it's up to my ankles, blood in the streets and it's up to my thighs. Gushing in torrents down the gutters along the steps up of the temples of Tenochtitlan, Monte Alban and Chichen Itza. It sticks to my hands and makes my fingers feel sweaty, but their dew is not clear, it is thick, and it is not sweet, it is bitter and metallic. What is this that is consuming me in this darkness? I am sunk under the depths. The shadowy cavernous chambers of my bloodlet heart contain the last remnants of the coals of the Great Burner, for now even He has burnt out. Inside of this desolate cage, a deserted dungeon below an abandoned prison beneath a castle's ruins that had already been forgotten long before "once upon a time," I offer up my blood upon an altar of fire until the smoke from the flame chokes me, until there is no more blood left in me to let. This is my heart, the interior-most region of my psyche. This is the antennae that channels my emotional metaforms, my archetypal counterparts. Luke, who committed suicide, and Leia, who is afraid to die. Vajra and Venus. For I am a fallen angel who, from the momentum of plummeting to cling to the side of the gravity-well, crashed into this body, and caused it too to fall from grace, by no fault of its own, entirely as a result of the inhabitation of it by my mind. For now I am possessed by a blood-demon. My entire bloodstream is contaminated by the curse of a terrible monstrous evil. Love.

Arising like a geni in the smoke before me from the sacrifice of my heart's remains - having consumed the ashes once more in flame until the metallic alloys in the blood achieve superconductivity - arising in the form of a reflection of me is one like another me, a sister, a phantom shadow, a ghost, but cogent and coherent, corporeal nonetheless. In her convoluted, slant and twisting visage, I see reflected knowledge of my sins. For now I understand the many fates under the one destiny. Only too late to avoid making some terrible mistakes. I exploded a psychic bomb. It has decimated my world. I am constantly at ground zero. Of the invisible, whose life I feared, now nothing near me remains. I am alone in a wasteland, a desolate flood plane of silt from the horizon of dawn to the horizon of dusk, and at midday and midnight I cannot tell one direction from another. All things spin, and I grow dizzy. The bloody, dizzying moon pivots overhead like a drunkard, her swollen cheeks flush with earth's umbra. Am I not now dwelling in the land of the dead? For a moment all the light around us changes. You enter through this gateway, through this portal, into the underworld, where you have come to seek me, your husband, whom you have been told is awaiting you there. You are stripped bare, and naked enter the chambre of your sister, ERESHKIGAL, whose servant is LILITH, your own shadow. She has betrayed you to the wicked Ka, your shadow-self, your electromagnetic aura. Your Kundalini Chi has become bent and twisted. You have become now she of many fates, and therefore she of many faces. For you crawl upon the earth, you lower yourself down to see through the eyes of those distant to you who are near to me when we are apart. You have become an invisible Leviathan, whose tentacles plug up the buttoles of countless minions and servants to your psychic highness, your celebrity, your fame. I understand there might be another level than this? Am I mistaken?

Jah Rastafari, let I and I dub you up now. I know you (INANNA) have become divided in yourself between the jaded and the public, and the softer and the private sides of yourself. These are the Kha and the Ka, the body and the electromagnetic aura. I know you (INANNA) seduced MARDUK for the secret of the seed of life in order to resurrect me (DUMMUZI). NINGISHZIDDA must have told you that it was given to MARDUK by ENKI on the moon in full, though never fully imparted to himself, though he was MARDUK's half-brother, and ENKI the father of both. Perhaps it would have occurred to you to ask NINTI if NINGISHZIDDA might be lying about himself, even though he was telling the truth about MARDUK. For there is nothing unknown to those who see the one true destiny, the pinnacle from which all fates depend. TEHUTI was a blind fool to believe his resurrection of ASAR with ISIS would be matched by the resurrection of DUMMUZI by MARDUK. You see, oh blinded INANNA, I bear the mark of the scorned farm-boy, deposed rightful king, tiller of the earth would I be, were it not that you had guided the hand of MAAT towards the ocean of infinitude, the sea of stars, and now from thence do you descend to find me. For, how low art thou fallen by now o ZIB, younger sister of DILBA. For like that fatal pairing of Venus's children, Cupid and Narcissus, so too are we, my Echo, my Psyche! Look at the heavens, where there are always signs to light our way.

For tonight's red moon is the little sister of the blood moon of August eleventh, 1999, when I opened up the sky and fell from heaven into the depths of the Hell where I remain now, awaiting you, my love. For just as last night's moon was like a flooding swamp of the heat of estrus, so too was that other eclipse, one occurring in broad daylight, like a ring, bejeweled with the Ichtyos Christos signet like the coronal mass ejection from the sun on 5/5/2000. For what man keeps true in his heart God will hold true in the heart of heaven. For have I not shown you my bloody heart, covered over shyly by the clouds of its own fuming inferno? Have I not held it up into the sky aloft enough for even your starry eyes to look upon, and have I not cursed at it, have I not named it MARDUK, the Conqueror? For MARDUK must surely be the name of he who has staged the spiritual coup de tat over this reality. In the name of Aries, the ram with horns growing out of its head, in your sign my deathly pale darling! For I am howling in the wilderness even in now, for you, like a lion roaring at the thunderstorm sweeping across the wild planes of tall grass blades. I tell you, I love you. I am here, and you are there, and I love you. I offer you this rose of mysterious union: MARDUK knows not of NINGISHZIDDA, his brother's, betrayal. He believed you were taking one knee to him as a sign of his conquest. Such is fate, that it should, like a beam of shining light shown in a brother's eye, blind him. But why? I ask you, why was this betrayal necessary?

Look, I will show you a miracle. We do not die. There is existence beyond our mortal flesh. Once we leave the body, we live on. Should you precede me, you shall prepare a place, for it shall then be you whom I shall follow. And if I precede you, a place for you shall I prepare, a place befitting your great stature in my esteem. This is logical. But look, I tell you, it has already happened. It is happening now. It happens all the time. You precede me and prepare my place already, and I precede you and prepare your place already. Could I be happier now? In a delusory stupor am I, for with love have I grown sick, inverted and plagued by this blood demon. I call it love to honor the idea of positive thinking and of "the law of attraction." So how does one control one's future? What force can be bent to my will that will bend fate toward my desired course? I can only find luck in prayer. I turn to the scriptures:

It was NINGISHZIDDA who bred the twenty-third "branch" onto the "tree of life" allowing gamete reproduction in the spermatozoan and ovum chromosomes. He did this by causing ENKI and NINTI to fall asleep, and then, by removing a "rib" from each, spliced these with the living tissues of Adamu and Ti-Amat (Adam Kadmon, the prototypical "primitive" archetype for mankind, and his wife, whom subsequent demonology confuses with Lilith). So, you see, my dear, I can declare myself heir of the firstborn of ENKI, and even of the union of himself with his half-sister NINMAH in a male heir, who no less than followed in his father's footsteps and sired a lineage of male heirs by his own half-sister that descends directly down to me, to you, and to everyone, to all of us. These are the prototypical homo sapiens, the australopithocenes of Antarctica. And from them to us, in our genetics, a bond has been passed along down this line. This is called the bond Heaven-Earth. It is a planetarium. This was your home, INANNA, your home Bad-Tibira, in the far east. Now, let me tell you, I have been risen, and have come back from the dead again. DUMMUZI, your shepherd-king, your priest-king, your anointed heir-bearer, I am. I have returned, and here, aloft, I hold the symbol by which those who know me shall champion me, the symbol of the empty heart, consumed into monoatomic gold by heatless flame. For this is truly the symbol of Luke, the first Universalist, and thus of the archangel Michael, and thus of MARDUK.

Was it not I who was the Great King of Terror of X72 in 1999? Were we not three sixes, the three of us, inverted in our turn, and all beside the One Truth, Jah? Was there not understanding? Yet this omen of true love triumphant, this was turned into the flight of Icarus, and my own fate condemned by the heart of evil within me, projecting a terrifying field of karma in my aura. I had become the black hole at galactic core. I was stealth. But then, what was the reward? Where was the dowry that should have been provided by my father? Where were the bubbling champagne tears of my mother? Where was the warmth in the heart of she whom I adored more than anything and everything? And what followed me from that? Did I not return only to lose all my friends? Did my mother not have a nervous breakdown that ended with me voluntarily admitting myself into a mental health facility from which I then could not voluntarily leave? Did these things not happen to me, because no one else carries these memories for me. No one shares with me the burden of this terrible turmoil. But if you want me, you know where I'll be.

In the tomb, for my heart was trapped with MARDUK in the pyramid of NINGISHZIDDA following the battle with NINURTA. For how like men do the Gods become over time, and just so do the men become more like the gods. Already some of us walk amongst them. Already some of them walk amongst us. We are meat puppets, zombies; they use our dead as vessels. Yet all is perception. For even as the Gods are, though invisible, merely slower, denser energy vibrations than our own fleeting forms of flesh, so does fate tug one way, another the opposite, and so too does destiny turn those tables back on them. So is ENKI the passive, peaceful, contemplative heart, slow to anger and quick to forgive, tactical in a crisis and at study in repose. So is ENLIL the active, angry, wrathful deity, quick to take sides and quick to double-cross, a doom-sayer and a schemer. Such are at the entrance to my tomb, for it was in the grand gallery of the dodecahedral Atlantean Senate that I was slain. They buried my body out in the wilderness, marked by an acacia sprig, and when the builders sent by Solomon found my mortal remains, they at first believed I had fallen and died on accident. The implements of the killing were not with the body. They talked of me as DUMMUZI, the shepherd king, in old Sumeria, but I tell you they only foresaw my mortal incarnation in the Grand Architect, Imhotep, designer of the pyramids, a true man of Thoth.

For in the temple was the deed done, and so it is considered consecrated, however because it is a sin, it is an occult secret how it was accomplished, for this evil deed, sanctified by sanctuary, must not be repeated, although in ritual it persists. The murder of Christ was the murder of Osiris, and the murder of Imhotep that of Hiram Abiff, Widow's Son. All these murders were one archetypal murder. The murder of Abel by Cain, the murder of Enoch by Tubal-Cain, the willingness even of Abraham to murder his own son and heir (whether it was Isaac or Ishmael regardless), this murder persists in the sacred rituals of sacrifice and communion.

Imhotep was struck down by Sargon. Enoch was slain and his body removed by Tubal Cain. So was Abel slain by Cain. So was Asar slain by Shemiyazza, SHAMGAZ, and so was DUMMUZI slain by the seven traitors of MARDUK. All of these were a single murder, though these true characters never in name have been known before. The truth of them has not yet been spoken. Here is the secret: MARDUK was the Scorpion King. Scorpion I was buried at Abydos, legendary location of the tomb of Osiris. Thus, following the poisoning of Asar by SATU at the behest of SHAMGAZ, Shemyazza, the "name" (or angel) Azza, Azriel or Raziel, the scape-goat, at Abydos was Osiris buried, and from Abydos then did the lineage of Scorpion Kings follow, from Scorpion I to Sargon of Akkadia, champion of Marduk and of the unification of Sumeria prior even to the first Babylonian empire that caused IBRUIM (Abram) to expatriate from Sumero-Akkadia as it grew to become the Babylon of MARDUK, for Nimrod was in truth Sargon. After Imhotep brought the Hyksos shepherd kings into Lower Khemt (northern Egypt) from Sumero-Akkadia and Mesopotamia, evacuating the prior supporters of UR.ZABADA and LUGALZAGISI (Sodom and Gahmorrah) of Abram's Elohim (ENLIL).

Dear Friends,

I have just read and signed the online petition:

"IN OPPOSITION to H.R. 1955 and S. 1959: Violent Radicalization and Homegrown Terrorism Prevention Act of 2007" hosted on the web by PetitionOnline.com, the free online petition service, at:

<http://www.PetitionOnline.com/19551959/>

I personally agree with what this petition says, and I think you might agree, too. If you can spare a moment, please take a look, and consider signing yourself.

Best wishes,

jon gee

But if Islam weren't being used as an excuse for it, the legislation would still exist, and that itself is the problem, because a totalitarian system out in the open is even worse than one disguised as a religion.

PS. sara, you might not have realised it but I think you just sent that little note out to everyone on the contact list I'd sent out the petition to. Just, expect your inbox at global-nation to get alot of hits from dead email addresses. I've racked up around 55 or so.

Ha! Very funny...

Did you actually read the legislation or just the petition?

[NearlyFreeSpeech.NET Member Support]

Yeah I've actually read it, but I'm just goofing on this email because of the crazy guy that started it.

Why does it look like the email went through the NFS support system? Haha

foxdie@gmail.com

Why on Earth would he include a webhosting support email in his email? Sorry, I hit the 'Reply All' button as a provocateur. I didn't look at who was getting it.

My apologies

[NearlyFreeSpeech.NET Member Support]

Yeah I dunno, he's a weird guy. Anyway, NFS hosting rocks, haha

foxdie@gmail.com

We are not amused!

Actually, we are. If it gets old, we'll just surcharge him for the extra bandwidth. ;-)

Thanks,

An army comprised of loyal volunteers, who are also well cared for, is invincible.

An army comprised of loyal volunteers, who are not well cared for, will win with losses.

An army comprised of drafted conscripts, who are well cared for, can win with losses.

An army comprised of drafted conscripts, who are not well cared for, is already lost.

By not caring for an army of loyal volunteers, one's soldiers will be reduced to slaves.

Loyal volunteers fight to be victorious.

Drafted conscripts fight to survive.

Slaves will fight only for their freedom.

There are two types of slaves.

One type of slave is not well cared for. This type of slave is worthless as a worker. This type of slave will spy on their master and sell their knowledge to their master's enemy. This type of slave will revolt with ten times the strength they exhibit at work against their master as soon as the opportunity to do so with assured success arises. This type of slave will see freedom as necessary to survival.

The other type of slave is well cared for. This second type of slave is especially skilled. This type of slave will serve their master unless promised freedom by their master's enemy. This type of slave will revolt only with the same amount of force with which they have been punished by their master. If the master is punitive, the slave will be encouraged to revolt. If the master rewards the slave, the slave will serve proudly. This type of slave prefers immediate survival to the promise of freedom.

There are two type of drafted conscripts.

The first type of drafted conscript is a well cared for slave. A well cared for slave will fight willingly for two reasons: the promise of freedom from slavery, or the expansion of their rights while remaining slaves. Of these two reasons, the former will motivate a slave who is punished more than rewarded, and the latter will motivate a slave who is rewarded more than punished. Well cared for slaves who fight willingly for their rights, if they are well cared for as an army, will win with losses against an army of loyal volunteers who are not well cared for. Well cared for slaves who fight for the promise of freedom will lose to an uncared for army of loyal volunteers fighting for rights.

The second type of drafted conscript is a citizen. Of citizens who can become drafted conscripts to form an army there are two types: the first are citizens of the nation into whose army they are conscripted; the second are citizens of another nation than the one into whose army they are conscripted. If a citizen is conscripted by draft into their own nation's army, they will fight for the reason of their own personal survival. If they are promised additional rights as the goal of victory, they will fight to be victorious. If a citizen is conscripted by another nation than their own, they will fight to be victorious if they are promised freedom, but will only fight their own nation to survive.

There are two types of loyal volunteer.

One type fights for the expansion of their own rights. If a loyal citizen is promised additional personal rights for volunteering to their national army, they will fight for their own survival, because acquiring their additional rights depends on survival.

The other type fights for the expansion of the rights of their nation. A loyal volunteer fighting for the expansion of the rights of their nation will fight for the cause alone if well cared for, but will only fight for their own survival if not well cared for.

The most invincible form of army is one comprised of loyal volunteers who fight to expand the rights of their nation and who are well cared for. Such an army cannot be defeated except in mutual destruction by an equal army.

The most easily defeated form of army is one comprised of well cared for slaves who are not well cared for as an army. Such an army is only more effective than an army of conscripts from the enemy nation. An army of alien conscripts fighting their own nation will revolt if not well cared for. An army of uncared for slaves will revolt.

By applying these rules to the composition of armies before entering battle, any army can be assigned a rate of probable success or failure against any other, and the outcome of any battle can be predicted before even being entered.

The prediction of a battle's most probable outcome before it is entered is the most important form of strategy in the art of war. If a series of battles' outcomes can be accurately predicted, then one can advance through the ranks of the armies whose victory is most likely, and can come to establish an empire.

Just as the prediction of the outcome of battles is described within the sphere considered the "art of war," so is the strategy of applying the accurate predictions made possible by studying this art considered a game of "risk." If one applies the "art of war" in the game of "risk," one will quickly conquer all.

The ultimate result of the "art of war" is the ability for one to predict victory in any combat, and the application of this strategy results in one betraying any loyalty presenting an impediment to their own predictions of victory. Such a one as applies the "art of war" in the game of "risk" will find themselves among a shrinking group of traitors. Only by stabbing your last friend in the back can a safe empire be assured.

However, once an empire is established by such as one who follows the "art of war," and who successfully applies its strategies, certain additional rules are necessary to understand for the maintenance of their empire.

It is necessary, then, to apply the same rules to one's own loyal populations during a peaceful empire as are used in composing an army. The primary difference is that, while one deals with the compositions of armies to battle enemy nations, one is attempting to maximize the likelihood of victory of their own nation's army over their nation's enemy's army. In point of fact, the opposite is desired to maintain an empire. Rather than a strong army, the goal of empire is a weak population.

In order to properly maintain an empire, one must build a population that is least likely to revolt, however one who is also least likely to achieve victory as an army. Therefore, to maintain empire, the population must be separated against one another much the same way as in the composition of armies, however instead of an army that can be mobilised against an enemy nation, the preferable form for an empire is a police force that can be utilised against their own national population.

The traditional form of empire falls into the shape of a three tiered triangle. The base tier is comprised of the population of citizens. The second tier, lesser group is comprised of the national army or police. The third tier, the singular apex of the triangle, is reserved to the minimum possible number of the ruling elite. The composition of the police and the composition of the population must be balanced such that the police can effectively suppress the much larger population of citizens from revolt against the ruling elite. The composition of the police and the population must also be manipulated by the ruling elite such that, should the police and citizens combine to revolt against the ruling elite, their chances of success will be minimised. The balance between police and citizens is one of brute force. The balance between the ruling elite and the rest of their population is one of strategy.

A population comprised of well cared for slaves and uncared for citizens is best for an empire.

A police force comprised of uncared for slaves and well cared for citizens is best for an empire.

A population or police force comprised of well cared for slaves and citizens will desire expansion of rights.

A population or police force comprised of uncared for slaves and citizens will desire expansion of freedom.

If citizens that desire rights combine with a police force that desires freedom, they will revolt against the ruling elite.

If citizens that desire freedom revolt, a police force that desires rights will combine with the ruling elite.

The ruling elite cannot suppress a revolt by both the citizens and the police. That is why the balance between police and citizens is one of brute force.

The ruling elite, combined with the police, can suppress a revolt by the citizens under certain specific conditions.

If the citizens are equal or less in actual numbers to the perceived numbers of combined police and the ruling elite, then the revolt will be suppressed.

If the citizens are equal or greater in actual numbers to the perceived numbers of combined police and elite, their revolt will be successful.

That is why the manipulation of the population by the elite is one of strategy. If the perceived number of the ruling elite is equal or greater than the actual number of police, the police will side with the ruling elite.

If the actual number of the ruling elite is less than the perceived number of police, the citizens will not be successful in a revolt against either.

The number of citizens is always greater than that of the police, and the number of police is always greater than that of the ruling elite. It is only by manipulation of one group's perception of the number of another group that revolt can be avoided. It is only by manipulation of police against citizens that the elite can suppress a revolt.

In order to assure the success of their empire, a hegemon must apply to the composition of their populations this set of rules as much so as, in order to assure the victory of their army, a strategist must apply to the composition of their armies the "art of war." Just as by applying the "art of war," one can win the game of "risk" and establish an empire, by applying these rules for the composition of their population, one who establishes or inherits such an empire can maintain their empire in safety.

To maintain an empire, it is necessary to divide the population between a police force and the remainder of the population. The police force and the rest of the population are both comprised of slaves and citizens, because it is necessary the perceived number of police be greater than the actual number of the rest of the population. In order to accomplish this, slaves in the police force are equal in rights to free citizens. Thus, citizen police are actually closer to the ruling elite than are the rest of the population. A citizen in the police force is defined by being a loyal volunteer, while a slave in the police force is defined as being an enemy conscript.

The citizen-based police force is equivalent to an army of loyal volunteers. Just as a well cared for army of loyal volunteers is invincible in battle, the citizen-based police force is life or death in suppressing a revolt. In order to survive it is necessary for the ruling elite or hegemon to establish a citizen-based police force greater in perceived number than the actual number of the non-police force population. Thus, well taken care of slaves will side with the citizen-based police force, and so the perceived number of police will be greater than the actual number of citizens.

In an empire under such conditions, whereby citizens who serve the role of police are well cared for, where citizens who do not serve the role of police are given less rights, and where well taken care of slaves are more likely to side with the police force than with their masters, who are non-police free citizens, the ruling elite will prosper.

In an empire under the conditions, however, whereby citizens who serve the role of police are not well cared for, where free citizens are perceived to outnumber the police force, or where slaves, well cared for or not, outnumber in actual number the perceived number of police, the ruling elite will be in peril.

The citizen-based police force, given additional rights to free citizens and well cared for, can be conscripted to serve the ruling elite in a capacity equivalent to that of an uncared for slave eager to betray their punitive master. This specialised role of the citizen police officer is that of the spy.

The perceived number of spies is equal to the actual number of loyal volunteers to the citizen-based police force, even though not all loyal police are spies. This is, ultimately, the most important variable in the entire equation of empire. If the actual number of spies is less than or equal to the actual number of volunteer police, and the actual number of the ruling elite is less than the actual number of spies, the ruling elite will prosper most. However, if there is only a slight inequality in either of these cases to imbalance the equation in the opposite direction, it will allow a successful revolt by the population against the ruling elite.

If the actual number of spies were perceived to be less than the actual number of voluntary police, as it actually is, then the balance would be tipped in favour of the population. The slaves would revolt against their masters, the citizens against the police, the slave police against the free, and the free police against the spies, until the spies themselves would revolt against the ruling elite. Each of these naturally outnumbers the next, such that eventually the entire population would side against the ruling elite. The form of revolt in which the entire population sides against the ruling elite is called a revolution. When one ruling elite is overthrown in a successful revolution, a larger actual number ruling elite establishes a new empire.

Because the entire mechanism of empire hinges on the single gear defined as the perceived number of spies being greater than or equal to the actual number of free police, it is also this lynchpin that must be studied to achieve a successful revolution.

There are two types of police: free police, who are loyal volunteers, and slave police, who are drafted conscripts. The actual number of spies is comprised of a fraction of the free police and a fraction of the slave police as well. This is how the perceived number of spies may be maintained as greater than the actual number, and thus how the perceived number of the ruling elite, comprised of the actual number of the ruling elite and the spies, can be maintained as greater than the actual number of the ruling elite, comprised of the actual number of ruling elite and the fraction of spies drawn from the free police. The difference is the actual number of slave police who are spies. If the slave spies side with the citizens, a revolt will be successful. If the slave spies side with the elite, no revolt can succeed.

Because of this, for an empire to be maintained, there must be more spies drawn from free police than from slave police. For a conscripted police officer to be made a spy, they must be promised freedom. For a volunteer police officer to be made a spy, they must be promised expanded personal rights.

The scale of rights in an empire is therefore opposite the three-tiered triangle design for the population. The greatest actual number group, slaves, have the least rights, while the smallest perceived number group, the ruling elite, have the most rights. The second greatest actual number group, citizens, have less rights than police, who have less rights than spies, who serve the ruling elite directly. Police have the median amount of rights, and comprise the median actual number sized group. That is why spies should come from the free police above the slaves, and why police should come from voluntary free citizens more so than from slaves. If police desire freedom, it is dangerous to the empire.

Therefore, the police force is the exact opposite of an army. The army that fights best fights to expand the rights of their own nation. The police force that serves best uses brute force to limit the rights of its nation's citizens. Thus, citizens are made the slaves of the police, police the servants of spies, and spies the actual rulers behind a hegemon.

This will only appear complex to the common citizen due to the manipulation of their perception by spies. They have been convinced that there are no slaves because we are all equally capable of earning money. They have been convinced that having money will give them rights expanded as much as those of the police. They have been convinced that spies and police serve the best interests of the population. Most insidiously, they have been convinced they do not even presently live in an empire.

An empire is defined by a strong police force, a weak population, a high perceived number of spies and small actual number ruling elite, as well as a weak or absent army defending the personal rights of their nation's own citizens. However, there exists no industrial nation at this time that does not fit this definition. In fact, it is widely accepted by the citizens of all nations that the "art of war" was long ago applied to the game of "risk," and that the current ruling elite are comprised of traitors to the populations of their own nations who rule internationally now. These elite are simply called "the rich," while the population of their empire are collectively known, relative to their rulers, as "the poor."

This is because the strategy of money has been victorious over the brute force of armies and police. Because the elite, through spies, claim to have almost all of the money, the remainder of the populations of all nations are made to desire and to serve that money. They are told that money means survival, and that work brings freedom, but such concepts are contradictions and impossibilities of fiction.

Therefore, although we are told by spies who serve the elite that we live in nations and that the armies of those nations are at war with one another, the majority of the population realises that we are all united in poverty caused by the rumors of such inter-national wars, but that, because no nations exist, no wars between them are possible. Instead, we understand war as the elite sending two groups of the population to kill one another. Therefore, where there are no nations, no wars and no wealth, there is revealed only the true conditions of our present reality: the ruling elite, their spies, and the police who oppress money-slaves. All serve to gain the promise of wealth which they themselves will never actually possess.

Until the population of citizens realises that, relative to police, they have the same rights as slaves do relative to citizens, there will not be a revolution. Just as slaves fear free citizens, the citizens who fear the police will remain slaves to their own luxury. So long as citizens fear police, police enjoy expanded rights to those of citizens. So long as this continues to be the case, the current empire will persist.

- 2) FL supervisor of elections Ion Sancho demonstrates how these elections were rigged.
- 3) parts 1-9 of the HBO documentary "Hacking Democracy."

Please take a few minutes to view at least the first two videos ASAP, and when you have time please check out the whole documentary too.

This is VERY important stuff, folks. This is proof that there was a silent coup-de-tat within our government, before 9-11, and that those to have benefitted financially and politically during the Bush administration from 9-11 also knowingly committed treason to come to power in 2000. Following Bush's appointment by the Supreme Court, the same group that rigged the election staged 9-11 as a justification to begin the ongoing war in Iraq. If you want your gas prices to go back down, I suggest you seriously consider investigating who is flushing our voting rights down the toilet, how and why.

Marksense systems employ a ballot card on which candidates and issue choices are preprinted next to an empty rectangle, circle, oval, or an incomplete arrow. Voters record their choices by filling in the rectangle, circle or oval, or by completing the arrow.

After voting, the voters either place the ballot in a sealed box or feed it into a computer tabulating device at the precinct. The tabulating device reads the votes using "dark mark logic," whereby the computer selects the darkest mark within a given set as the correct choice or vote. Marksense technology has existed for decades and been used extensively in such areas as standardized testing and statewide lotteries.

Although marksense systems are often referred to as "optical scan," marksense technology is only one of several methods for recognizing marks on paper through optical reading techniques. Marksense systems were used by 24.6% of registered voters in the United States for the 1996 Presidential election, and their use is on the rise.

VOTING METHODS AND PROCEDURE

101.5612 Testing of tabulating equipment.--

(1) All electronic or electromechanical voting systems shall be thoroughly tested at the conclusion of maintenance and programming. Tests shall be sufficient to determine that the voting system is properly programmed, the election is correctly defined on the voting system, and all of the voting system input, output, and communication devices are working properly.

(2) On any day not more than 10 days prior to the commencement of early voting as provided in s. 101.657, the supervisor of elections shall have the automatic tabulating equipment publicly tested to ascertain that the equipment will correctly count the votes cast for all offices and on all measures. If the ballots to be used at the polling place on election day are not available at the time of the testing, the supervisor may conduct an additional test not more than 10 days before election day. Public notice of the time and place of the test shall be given at least 48 hours prior thereto by publication once in one or more newspapers of general circulation in the county or, if there is no newspaper of general circulation in the county, by posting the notice in at least four conspicuous places in the county. The supervisor or the municipal elections official may, at the time of qualifying, give written notice of the time and location of the public preelection test to each candidate qualifying with that office and obtain a signed receipt that the notice has been given. The Department of State shall give written notice to each statewide candidate at the time of qualifying, or immediately at the end of qualifying, that the voting equipment will be tested and advise each candidate to contact the county supervisor of elections as to the time and location of the public preelection test. The supervisor or the municipal elections official shall, at least 15 days prior to the commencement of early voting as provided in s. 101.657, send written notice by certified mail to the county party chair of each political party and to all candidates for other than statewide office whose names appear on the ballot in the county and who did not receive written notification from the supervisor or municipal elections official at the time of qualifying, stating the time and location of the public preelection test of the automatic tabulating equipment. The canvassing board shall convene, and each member of the canvassing board shall certify to the accuracy of the test. For the test, the canvassing board may designate one member to represent it. The test shall be open to representatives of the political parties, the press, and the public. Each political party may designate one person with expertise in the computer field who shall be allowed in the central counting room when all tests are being conducted and when the official votes are being counted. The designee shall not interfere with the normal operation of the canvassing board.

(3) For electronic or electromechanical voting systems configured to tabulate absentee ballots at a central or regional site, the public testing shall be conducted by processing a preaudited group of ballots so produced as to record a predetermined number of valid votes for each candidate and on each measure and to include one or more ballots for each office which have activated voting positions in excess of the number allowed by law in order to test the ability of the automatic tabulating equipment to reject such votes. If any error is detected, the cause therefor shall be corrected and an errorless count shall be made before the automatic tabulating equipment is approved. The test shall be repeated and errorless results achieved immediately before the start of the official count of the ballots and again after the completion of the official count. The programs and ballots used for testing shall be sealed and retained under the custody of the county canvassing board.

(4)(a)1. For electronic or electromechanical voting systems configured to include electronic or electromechanical tabulation devices which are distributed to the precincts, all or a sample of the devices to be used in the election shall be publicly tested. If a sample is to be tested, the sample shall consist of a random selection of at least 5 percent of the devices for an optical scan system or 2 percent of the devices for a touchscreen system or 10 of the devices for either system, as applicable, whichever is greater. The test shall be conducted by processing a group of ballots, causing the device to output results for the ballots processed, and comparing the output of results to the results expected for the ballots processed. The group of ballots shall be produced so as to record a predetermined number of valid votes for each candidate and on each measure and to include for each office one or more ballots which have activated voting positions in excess of the number allowed by law in order to test the ability of the tabulating device to reject such votes.

2. If any tested tabulating device is found to have an error in tabulation, it shall be deemed unsatisfactory. For each device deemed unsatisfactory, the canvassing board shall take steps to determine the cause of the error, shall attempt to identify and test other devices that could reasonably be expected to have the same error, and shall test a number of additional devices sufficient to determine that all devices are satisfactory. Upon deeming any device unsatisfactory, the canvassing board may require all devices to be tested or may declare that all devices are unsatisfactory.

3. If the operation or output of any tested tabulation device, such as spelling or the order of candidates on a report, is in error, such problem shall be reported to the canvassing board. The canvassing board shall then determine if the reported problem warrants its deeming the device unsatisfactory.

(b) At the completion of testing under this subsection, the canvassing board or its representative, the representatives of the political parties, and the candidates or their representatives who attended the test shall witness the resetting of each device that passed to a preelection state of readiness and the sealing of each device that passed in such a manner as to secure its state of readiness until the opening of the polls.

(c) The canvassing board or its representative shall execute a written statement setting forth the tabulation devices tested, the results of the testing, the protective counter numbers, if applicable, of each tabulation device, the number of the seal securing each tabulation device at the conclusion of testing, any problems reported to the board as a result of the testing, and whether each device tested is satisfactory or unsatisfactory.

(d) Any tabulating device deemed unsatisfactory shall be recoded, repaired, or replaced and shall be made available for retesting. Such device must be determined by the canvassing board or its representative to be satisfactory before it may be used in any election. The canvassing board or its representative shall announce at the close of the first testing the date, place, and time that any unsatisfactory device will be retested or may, at the option of the board, notify by telephone each person who was present at the first testing as to the date, place, and time that the retesting will occur.

(e) Records must be kept of all preelection testing of electronic or electromechanical tabulation devices used in any election. Such records are to be present and available for inspection and reference during public preelection testing by any person in attendance during such testing. The need of the canvassing board for access to such records during the testing shall take precedence over the need of other attendees to access such records so that the work of the canvassing board will not be delayed or hindered. Records of testing must include, for each device, the name of each person who tested the device and the date, place, time, and results of each test. Records of testing shall be retained as part of the official records of the election in which any device was used.

Supervisor of Elections

Leon County, Florida, USA

how we can prepare for the inevitable vote fraud.

I just emailed the office of Ion Sancho as well as the chief researcher and political editor of the Tallahassee Democrat asking what kind of machines are going to be used to read and tabulate our ballots next Tuesday. Following is my email.

From: Jon Gee <benpadiiah@gmail.com>

Subject: a quick question
To: vote@leoncountyfl.gov to whom it may concern in the office of Ion Sancho, elections supervisor, state of Florida.

I have a quick question about the voting machines that will be used this coming Tuesday, January the 29th, 2008, in reading and tabulating the results of votes cast in the Republican and Democratic primaries.

I have read in Title IX, chapter 101.56075 of the 2007 Florida Statutes that "marksense" or "dark mark logic" optical scanners will be used to read all cast ballots, effective July, 1, 2008.

My question is, will the "marksense" optical scanners be employed in the January 29th Primaries, or will next Tuesday's Primaries be held according to the guidelines for voting machines laid out in Title IX, chapter 101.5612 of the 2006 Florida Statutes, wherein it is stated,

"On any day not more than 10 days prior to the commencement of early voting... the supervisor of elections shall have the automatic tabulating equipment publicly tested to ascertain that the equipment will correctly count the votes cast for all offices and on all measures. If the ballots to be used at the polling place on election day are not available at the time of the testing, the supervisor may conduct an additional test not more than 10 days before election day. Public notice of the time and place of the test shall be given at least 48 hours prior thereto by publication once in one or more newspapers of general circulation in the county or, if there is no newspaper of general circulation in the county, by posting the notice in at least four conspicuous places in the county."

If the "marksense" optical scanners are not going to be employed in the January 29th Primary next Tuesday, then will there still be a public test of the voting machines to be used conducted by your office before the Primary elections?

If at all possible, is there any way your office can inform me of the type of voting machines that will be used in next Tuesday's Primaries? If there is a resource for finding such information online, for example, that I could be easily directed to, I would greatly appreciate knowing what type of voting machines to expect to find being used in my precinct.

Thank you kindly and my deepest regards to you and yours,
-Jon Gee

Subject: Fwd: a quick question

dear Mr. Cotterell, Florida Capital Bureau Political Editor, Tallahassee Democrat and
Ms. Galloway, Research Editor, Tallahassee Democrat.

following is forwarded a brief letter I just composed and sent to the office of Ion Sancho, supervisor of elections for Florida. It also occurred to me, however, that the question I put to his office might also be able to be answered by yours.

Please help me answer my "quick question": will electronic voting machines be used in next Tuesday's Democrat and Republican Primaries? If so, will they be publically tested and their results published by your paper, or another, as is stipulated in the Statutes of the State of Florida?

Please let me know if there is a quick and simple answer I am overlooking. Thanks, your time in reading this is greatly appreciated.

I'll keep you all posted on this if anything develops.

-Jon

According to Josephus, in "The Jewish Wars," the name of the King of greater Judea in the early first century was Agrippa the younger, son of Agrippa who had reigned over the whole kingdom of Israel, north of Judea. It was Agrippa the elder who had commissioned the fortification around Jerusalem following the assassination of Caligula. Agrippa the elder had reigned "three years as king, following three years as tetrarch." According to Josephus, Cypros was the wife of the elder Agrippa, and the names of their other children, all daughters, were Berenice, Mariamme and Drusilla.

Now, according to the Apocryphal Acts of Peter, the Apostle Peter was actually the "Virgin" Mary's father, however what we can ascertain from this is not that Peter was the grandfather of Christ, who was born of a Virgin, but that, insofar as Mary was titular rather than nominal, the "Mary" here referred to is actually Mary Magdalene, who would eventually, following her period of "Virginity" go on to become the wife of Jesus, the "most-favoured of all Christ's Apostles."

According to Laurence Gardner, the title "Mary" was given to the wife of the Davidic (kingly Levite) lineage, while the title "Elisabeth" was applied to the wife of the heir of the Zadokite (High Priest) dynasty. "That is why," explains Gardner, "John the Baptist's mother is called Elizabeth in the Gospels and why Jesus's mother was Mary."

Whereas the titles "Mary" and "Elisabeth" (from Elisheba) were Jewish in origin, they became corrupted in Josephus' writings to their equivalent common-names in Latin. "Mary/Martha" became "Mariamme," "Elisabeth/Salome" became "Berenice" and the third title, that of the wife of the Abiathar/Jairus Chief Priest, who represented the role of Prophet, called "Magdala" (meaning "tower" or the wife of "Thunder," the son or Priest) became "Drusila" (meaning "Dragon" or the wife of "Lightning," the spirit or Prophet).

Likewise, in cross-referencing Josephus, we have to take into account a variety of titles being applied to the same person at various different times. For example, Cyrus, who Gardner cites as "Mary Magdala's" literal father, is equivalent to "Simon," called variously "Simon Zelotes," "Simon the Essene," "Simon Magus" and "Simon Peter," and from thence with the latin "Antipas," "AntiPater," son of Salome, "Alexander," his brother, and ultimately of "Agrippa" the son of "Aristobolus" (aka Alexander). All of these names inherited the title "Herod" just as the title "Caesar" was passed on by succession following its original holder. The title "Herod" was indicative of the Hasmonean or Maccabean household.

The identity, thus, of "Mary Magdala's" literal father was Shimeon, the Chief Priest, just as Jesus birth was heradled by the Qumran Community "Gabriel" (or the Abiathar Chief Priest) who was at the time named Simeon or Simon. The term "Peter" is derived from the latin "Pater" meaning "father," denoting the Essene High Priest, referred to privvily as "Joseph" during the period of procreative leave.

Shimeon, thus, was the "father" of both the bride and groom who would eventually fufill his own station as the Gabriel/Abiathar of the Essene exiles at Qumran, however by the time that could occur, Shimeon himself would have ascended to the position of Michael/Zadok or High Priest.

At the time of Jesus' and his wife's births, Simeon was the Chief Priest and Zacharias was the High Priest (the Michael-Zadok) or Melchizedek. By the time, however, of Jesus and his wife's "first marriage" (or first conception), the High Priest was John the Baptist, also called James the Just, who was Jesus' twin brother, called "Thomas" and "Didymus," while the Abiathar Chief Priest was Jonathan or Nathaniel Annas, derivitive of the Ananus Sanhedrin (Sadducees loyal to the Romans). While Simon, the Davidic "Father," was a Pharisee, a Zealot and a Qumran Essene, Jonathan was a Saducee, a High Priest of Jerusalem and a Hasmonean (Herodian) Maccabee.

When Jonathan married Simon's daughter, his own "sister," he assumed the title of Joshua, meaning "the younger father," for the woman he married, then called "Mary Magdala," was originally planned to be married to her other "brother," Jesus' twin, James the Just, known also as John the Baptist, the High Zadok Priest. In this capacity her identity is recorded in the Gospels as Salome, the designated Elisabeth, just as Salome before her had been the mother of Anti-Pater, Shimeon Peter, and as such the mother, Elisabeth, of James the Just, called John the Baptist.

Because Christ and Magdala conceived while Jonathan was still only the Chief Priest, and because James, who out-ranked him in the community, had been engaged to Salome previously, and because Shimeon-Zelotes was still the reigning Davidic King it was conspired to put Christ to death. On this, the records of Jospheus are not at odds with those of the Gospels. Jospheus simply records these characters by the latin names: Simon he calls "Agrippa the elder," James he calls "Aristobolus" or "Alexander," Jesus "Agrippa the younger," and Magdala he calls, respectively, "Mariamme, Berenice and Drusila."

There is ample evidence that the Qumran Essenes backed James, whom they hailed as "the teacher of Righteousness," and rejected Jesus as "the Wicked Priest," Jonathan "Cumanus," and "the beast 666." The fact that James the Just, as Joseph Ha-Rama-Theo (or "Hight Priest of God" ), survived to raise the son of his brother with his own betrothed, is amply recounted by sources in Britain and north western Europe, while the flight of Mary Magdala with the duaghter, Sirac (for Sarah, a title of young woman not yet of pubescent age), of Jonathan, first through Egypt and then into Southern France, is amply recorded in those regions as well. As to the actual crucifixion of Christ, it is said that it was ordered by Caiphas, or Simon, but that it was actually James, the twin brother of Jesus, who was crucified.

Following the ordeal, Rabbi Shimeon-Pater began to call himself Saul, after the last king of the Davidic line before the beginning of the Babylonian captivity, and later Paul, a combination of his titles as Pope (community father) and King (of the Levite succession). James, as has been stated, travelled extensively with his nephew, who was also called Joshua, again the title of a young man not yet of age. Yeshuah continued to preach in the early Christian Churches, sometimes under his brother's name, James or Jacob, and sometimes referred to simply as "the Word," meaning the title of God, that is, Christ. He lived to see old age, but was killed at Massada, where he was called "Marcion" in Josephus, and was buried beside his bride in southern France.

The recounting of these events written by Mary has come to be called the Nag Hammadi "library," but this is really one work, although its current arrangement is exactly backwards to its accurate chronology. The recounting by James the Just became the Essene "Dead Sea Scrolls" of Qumran. The recounting by Simon-Peter, who became Paul, was recorded by Pliny the elder and the younger, and has come down to us now as the "New Testament," which, combined with the Hebrew Torah and the teachings of Mohammed in the Quran, comprise the entire history of the original priesthood of Seth, son of Adam until its end, with the death of James the Just and the destruction of the Second Temple, and the death of the last prophet, Jonathan Annas, called Jesus Christ, King of the Jews.

Mr. Gee:

Our office has used the optical scan precinct based voting system throughout our county since 1992.

We have what is now known as the Premier voting system, formerly known as Diebold.

We utilize the touch screen units to meet Americans with Disabilities requirements as directed by Congress and the Florida Legislature since 2006.

Our public testing of the voting equipment was held January 10, 2008, commencing at noon. Florida statutes direct jurisdictions to hold one logic and accuracy test ten days prior to the start of early voting. The test must be publicly advertised in a newspaper of general circulation or other means are outlined in the statutes. Our test was publicly advertised in the legal advertisement section of the Tallahassee Democrat on January 6, 2008.

We hope this answers your questions but should you have additional concerns, please contact us again.

I'm trapped in my flesh and disgusted at being human.

Everyone lies and hopes their heart will bend reality. Everyone thinks their conditioning and job all they are. It is considered the lowest conduct not to grow, and the greatest good to treat your friends like vapid trends, your favourite fads determining the totality of your impact on history. Life is short besides the all, but our self-worth is dwarfed in each event. This is most obvious when we make descisions. Even though everything is always "our problem," nothing is ever "our fault." And that's true enough: irony is the projection of human psychology onto universal causality. Their interplay is a gossamer web of coincidences, just add your personal interpretations.

Everybody has more regrets than they could survive remembering. When confronted with past poisons, the brittle mind shrivels for fear of shattering, coiling into momentary lusts like mollusk shells floating in shallow seas. We wander through the night, lost in sleep, and desperately dream up new false flatteries. Our lives are a one-way, dead-end street, and we are so frustrated by the stop-and-go bumper-to-bumper traffic-jam of mutual reality we long to gun the gas and fly off a cliff into an oblivion of non-existence. We enable one another's suicidal self-destructivity, smirking silently at their lonely blindness; their lack of perspective on themselves we lord over all, yet lack the same application to ourselves.

Who on earth has never lied to spare hurt feelings? Two-faced symbolic-empathy and the Great White Lie: Hope, are all mythology, bred of spite. We comfort others with polite fictions, while we wilt and wither away within. Such is the human condition: to maintain society, to maintain the luxury of our denial and disillusionment, we do what we have been conditioned to accept as unnaturally comforting; the lips of liars, so it's said, are an acquired taste.

Suppressing our emotions, we blush a thin veneer of shame across the visage of our bestial truth. We have raised to the Most High that guilt which defies our better judgment, and make an example of anyone who sheds the hypocrisy of this Golden Rule. If we get our way, it is "for the best;" if we are victims of circumstance, it is the fault of others' designs.

Alike a sack of chemicals, we alter our souls' composition as amateur Alchemists. To forget our long-living troubles, we flee into the embrace of hallucinatory lusts, and so lose all advantage. Without the sober fore-sight to accurately predict outcomes of our choices, "free will" remains an elusive rumour and a propaganda snare for sheep. Uninhibited choice is impossible with options as limited as we are allowed to imagine.

We are encouraged to believe we have to compromise to survive, and further encouraged to believe that, by convincing others of this, we earn freedom from such. Civilisation is an infernal cess pool, but it is all we have while alive, and unless we work to maintain it, we are promised eternal pain as our punishment in an unproven afterlife. We cannot escape the truth that, though we place our fate into the hands of those we trust, our final destiny is in the hands of those whose very being we have wronged by our own.

Is it better to have known love and lost it? Such transient affection is false. Is it better to have never known love at all? But we have no choice in this matter; all alive are duped into it. Evil is impacted love, ingrown and infected. The passions, once perverted, are inflamed out of control, and only by a lifetime of struggling to best these can our inner-child be tamed. The apparent goal is to earn the conditional respect of our sexual partner by obedience to their twisted preferences and to sacrifice our own.

I have nothing but contempt, not even pity, just disgust, for humanity. I see myself as the abandoned son of mankind, most favoured by our defects and most resented by our gifts, cursed to unrequited love by my own ineptitude.

How can I not hate myself? Everytime I take one step forward, this world pushes me two steps back. I am sinking into tar where my heart once was. And there is nothing to be done about it. I cannot change the course my life has taken thus far, nor can I continue on propelled by my past. I hide my face in shame, I suppress my shame with chemicals, and I maintain the fake facade of comfort in luxury, though the only luxury I afford myself is denial.

Sound familiar? I am just another human, like all of you, and like all the rest. It's not "my fault," it's just "my problem." If this rant has momentarily shaken you from your course of self-indulgent distractions, your passing lusts for trendy property, and your use of friends to fend off the miserable memories of long lost loves, good. If this all just sounds like the self-pitying cry for help of a depressed psychopath, then you should definately shoot yourself in the face and spare me the trouble of pointing out to you how meaningless your own world-view is to God's omniversal truth.

In conclusion, if you don't love yourself, and forgive your own humanity, no one will ever love you. First, pretend to be happy. Then, shallow people will accumulate to you like flies to the stink of shit, convincing you of success.

Atlantis, Theosophy, New Age :: quote="TheCrow"

[quote="TheCrow"]Ben, i found those four films, which I believe were made by scientologists (my opinion) , they talk about atlantis, but in details. Starting with the creation of the human being up to devision into two clans of Illuminati and Luminary.

<http://iCitizen.piczo.com/atlantis> the movies are at the end of the page..[/quote]

In the first film, at 1:50, it says, "souls destroyed in the atomic explosion that had shattered the planet Melona (sp?), 'Lucifer,' located between Jupiter and Mars." This planet was called TIAMAT, which became earth (KI) and the moon (KINGU) according to Zecharia Sitchin's translation of the Sumerian book of "genesis," the Enuma Elish. Sitchin studied under Erich Von Daniken, who is seen interviewed here at 4:00 and 7:00.

The term "fourth root race" is directly from HP Blavatsky's "Anthropogenesis." The idea of aliens being the biblical "Nefilim," the Annunaki (the fallen angels) of Enoch, or the pantheon of Sumeria, is pretty much completely accepted among the "New Age" community. Blavatsky claimed to have studied in India under Mahhatma Gurus and in Tibet under the Bohn tibial shamen, however her mythology was nothing but a combination of her fellow Russian, GI Jurdieff's pseudo-mystical writings (ie. gibberish), and her own imaginative fusion of Hebrew and Hindu mythology.

Just as Sitchin studied Sumerian myths under Von Daniken, Von Daniken himself studied the Vedic and Agartha myths under Charles Leadbeater and Annie Besant, who created "Theosophy," the pseudo-religion based on Blavatsky's interpretive mythology, and who studied directly under Blavatsky herself.

The Golden Dawn was established to be the "Secret Chiefs," or the inner-order behind the pseudo-reigion of Theosophy. Mathers and Waite split the Golden Dawn, and Crowley and Regardie reformed it as a publically open and a privately selected side.

The Waite-Regardie camp left us the "Rider-Waite" tarot cards and the writings of Edgar Cayce and the Isis-Urantia Lodge, which is the "Theosophical new testament," the interpretation of Jesus as one of the "Ascended Masters," the Theosophical term for the Golden Dawn "Secret Chiefs," or inner-order.

The Mathers-Crowley camp left us the "Thoth" tarot and the Crowleyian-reformed version of the originally German Masonic OTO. The modern, Crowleyian OTO is the inner-order behind the "church" of Scientology. L. Ron Hubbard, founder of Scientology, was the son of Al Hubbard, who was a friend of Aleister Crowley. In the same way, the modern "Theosophical" church is LDS, the Mormon church of Latter Day Saints, and its "deep doctrine" is Isis-Urantianism, ie. "latter-day Theosophy." If I had to guess, I'd speculate the "inner-Order" of the LDS is "Raelianism," a UFO-cult.

Maitreya and St. Germaine are only one small example of why all this is bullshit (aside from the stuff about the grey aliens). Maitreya is an "Ascended Master," trance-channeled by modern Theosophists who use the method of "sleeping prophecy" of Edgar Cayce. The "ascended master" St. Germaine was repeatedly photographed standing next to HP Blavatsky. Of course, Blavatsky herself made no secret of the fact that this was only a card-board cut-out of St. Germaine, alike the photographs taken of fairies by the Cottingly sisters who had been popular during Blavatsky's youth.

Blavatsky didn't invent "channeling" either. The technique was actually based on Voodoo "seances" and called "Spiritism" in the US midwest following the Civil War. What Blavatsky did do, though, was get caught red-handed using stage-tricks during gypsy readings, seances and the "sleeping prophecy" - "trance-channeling" If she had been legit to begin with, she wouldn't have needed or used such tricks.

The problem I have with Blavatsky and Theosophy in general is their focus on the manipulation of the masses by re-writing the popular mythologies. The problem I have with this is that myths are fiction. Consider Gilgamesh, the story of Moses as prophesised by Abraham. Why do we consider this Apocalyptic Prophecy a work of Babylonian "fiction" while holding the Hebrew and Catholic mythologies to be the "true word" of God? No, on the contrary, I believe God shows himself to us in the present, and only for our own good, not to reward our sychophantic toadying and confessions ratting on our neighbors to the priests of the cult that maintains such mythologies as unquestionable fact.

Meanwhile the truth is denied to the extent it is not only believed to be subjective, but actually becomes "unknowable." Here's the truth about the nature of the soul: While we are alive, we are asleep half the time and awake half the time. When we wake up, we remember our waking life, and mostly the memories of our dreams fade over time. However, if we practise remembering our dreams, we can begin to have continuity from one night's dreams to the next, and can make our dreaming mind more like the memories of our mind in our waking life. The dreaming-self is called the soul, and if we do not develop its awakenning while alive, we will remain in a confused and unawakened dream unless awakened by another until we die.

The problem that I have with UFOs, especially the accounts given by former US army and airforce, is that it seems like disinformation they were planted with in order to discredit the truth about the UFO phenomenon. In the same way we used to see demons and angels, later goblins and fairies, now we see UFOs, some as benevolent, such as the Plaiedeans represented by the trance-channeling New Age movement, and some malevolent, such as the greys from Zeta Reticuli, the reptilians from Draco, the Annunaki from Nibiru and Xenu of Scientology. In another 100 or a thousand years we will still have the same superstitions, only by then they will assume new forms, as of yet unimaginable to us now. This process is clearly psychological, whether interpreted as religion, as mythology, or as science-fiction. And we see that, the superstitions of 2000 years ago are now religion, those of 1000 years ago mythology, and those of now called science-fiction. The truth is that none of this is real, and it is all meant to distract us from the development of our souls. In truth, there is no collective unconscious, no "dark forest" and no Chthulu. These are all metaphors describing the soul that do not address it directly, and are therefore meant to mislead.

Anyone, for example, who talks about an influx of consciousness that has not yet come, but is perpetually just about to occur, is a liar. For example, anyone who tells you that, since the Christian Apocalypitics did not destroy the world in 2000, then the Mayan Piktun "end-date" of 2012 will bring a "galactic ascension" of collective consciousness, is talking out their ass. There is no way for any of us to know the future, for even if there were a time-traveller from our future, they would not know the future of their own point of origin. No, the alignments of 2000 and of 2012 are connected, and between them, now, we see all the events occring around us we do. This moment now is not more or less special because of these particular alignments either. If aliens wanted to kill or save us, they could at any time. If we want to accept the truth, we can at any time.

The truth about Atlantis is not difficult to grasp. It is a metaphor for the aura, or the "personal bubble," over which we are guaranteed relative sovereignty. Likewise, the truth about aliens and UFOs is not difficult to understand. Aliens are our own perception of one another's sleeping souls, and UFOs are these others' projection outside of their dreamers' sleeping bodies. Half of earth's entire living organisms are asleep half of their lives. We can travel about in UFOs through spacetime, just as we traverse the hyperspace of pure consciousness (imagination), in dreams. Also, that is why aliens are said to be "from our future": at one point in the precession of aeons, the sleeping soul and the waking body are able to interact directly. However now, the "grey aliens" remain elusive and invisible to most, even though they have us each surrounded like ghosts all the time by now.

Earth's gravity well acts as a lens. We see reflected on the inside of the "painted sky" looking upward from below the same ratios of matter and energy in space as we see biological and terrestrial forms on earth. We see the same number of black-holes in deep space as there have been sentient entities yet born on earth. All of this is an illusion. In truth, there is no way to know what outerspace is like outside of earth's gravity well. However we can predict that the opposite side of the "painted sky," when seen looking downward from above, may appear vastly different to any denizens of the "true" macrocosm than it does to any of us within and beneath it.

There are certain formations that, in certain times, penetrate the "painted sky" of earth's gravity well. Some mountains penetrate the lower ionosphere, thus rarifying the oxygen content of the air by electrolytically extrapolating and condensing to a lower altitude the heavier, liquid elements of the twin Hydrogen atoms. Some places on the surface of our planet cause magnetic compasses to spin in every direction, such as at the EM poles, and the Bermuda triangle, and some of these are man-made, such as Stone-henge and the Kaaba stone of Mecca. It is usually nearby such "high pressure" centres, such as also volcanos and fault-lines, that "grey" aliens appear.

It may be possible that if anyone discovers ZPE autonomously, they "ascend" more or less whether they want to or not, and I mean this in the sense both of reincarnation versus discorporalisation and as this relates to the concept of death as a dimensional-leap into another parallel-reality, or "baby universe," in the multiverse, departing forever from the original local universe. Death is an awakening from which you can't come back.

ZPE is necessary to escape the gravity-well of earth. It is as pure energy, the so-called "zero-point" energy of "quantum-foam," that arises in inter-atomic space due to the fluctuation of random quantum-probabilities, that the dream-soul - whose appearance resembles, if visible, a "grey" alien - travels through the local universe. The appearance of UFOs is only an illusion on the underbelly of the "painted sky" - a shadow of the true shapes and nature of the dream- or nether-world. Beyond the "world-womb," beyond the "painted sky," beyond earth's gravity well, we can freely explore with our minds, and when we do, we rapidly realise the increased rate of information commerce. This is because the "ascended" are always awake.

In my own writing I refer to all this more or less directly. I have referred to the condition of the sleeping-soul that has not yet manifested its own aura as a lucid dream as "the cult of Sleep." I refer repeatedly to the CIA MK-Ultra "sleeper agents" and to Area 51, the so-called "Dreamland" airforce base for testing man-made "UFOs." I refer to the "sleep-walkers" as the satellites surrounding earth's gravity well, the "crown of thorns" of the "enochian communications system," and the same idea was once held to be true for the other solar-orbiting planets as satellites around earth (called the 7 Archons). I refer to dead spirits, or alien souls without sleeping bodies into which to return, as the "Crew that Never Sleeps," equivalent to the ancient base-12 zodiac, as being the harbringers of the "Great Burner" or the All-in-One "Soul Awakener," which, in turn, is only a metaphor for the inter-galactic hyper-cathexis of "psychic" transduction through the universal "brain cells" that ebbs and flows over the aeons and is coming to a turn of the tides now.

None of what I just said is fiction, although people may try to tell you it is. Some of what I said was about the Truth, and some of it was about bullshit, but it was all factually accurate information nonetheless. I detest talking about Blavatsky and Theosophy because I deeply disagree with her methods, her results and her cult-following. Blavatsky was a charlatagne, pure and simple. If you don't believe me, then try asking any of her followers about the true nature of the soul. They will try to educate you on the "Hare Krishna" experience of the chakra-rays aligning and assure you such is to be greatly desired, but what they will not explain to you, because they cannot yet see that they do not yet know, is the reason for sleep.

In truth, the liberty of the soul to travel the universe and beyond is limitless beyond the "Most High" or "far-fetched" inspirations to imagination. That is the reason for sleep, and compared to this, the life we live while awake and trapped in our bodies, despite being the corner-stone for our civilisation, is so pathetically meaningless. Yet most alive now are so completely enslaved to what Nietzsche called the "Apollonian" or symbollic, waking-state existence that they completely neglect, aside from periods of intoxication, the need to develop the psychic dream-self.

As such, most people's souls atrophy, and the sad fact is that, just as all individual souls blend into the one true spirit in the end of all realities, and as most of the stars we can see in the sky have already burnt out and died: most bodies have no soul.

The myth of the sinking of Atlantis is a metaphor for the soul's submersion into physical existence.

While theosophists and New Agers try to "shift consciousness" away from consumption of fossil-fuels, they will tell you that the myth of Atlantis is useful insofar as it can encourage us to curb the environmentally destructive pollution use of such fuels causes. But this is all misleading, since these same "humanitarian" organisations (such as the Lucis Trust of Theosophy) are all funded by big oil companies (mainly shell and exxon-mobil). It is a ploy to create a fake shortage. The entire sale to the public of internal-combustion of solid-fuel is a cover-up for the "black-budget" stealth (ie. space) war-plane technology. All this was planned by members of the Council on Foreign Relations, in partnership with Hubbard's early "Dianetics" during the 1940's.

Fossil-fuels contain DNA. By using them to fuel our cars we are literally substituting oil for blood and murdering souls. At least, such is prepared to shape up into the next global myth, the goal of acceptance of which will be to "save the environment from pollution." The same situation is the entire ethical debate of tissue-cloning, since we cannot rightly say when the soul begins to be alive within tissues.

All of this is obvious nonsense, since there is no "morpho-genetic field" or web-work of ZPE underlying the microcosmos as the inter-galactic "brain-cells" appear to be in the macrocosmos. When DNA dies, it degenerates. As it degenerates, its soul-energy, its aura, fades. If petrified or cremated or captured in amber or solidified in tar, all DNA breaks down after death very rapidly. Thus, the soul, too, can die - although now our mythologies will admit only that some, at least, become homeless at the point of physical death, while remaining in a confused and unawakened dream-state, trapped here on earth as ghosts, our "Ancestors."

Cloning (based now on the use of "stem-cells" - though the Greek word klone literally means "stem" - to replicate foreign tissue naturally), virtual reality (the melding of our solid physical world with the will of our inner minds by surrounding ourselves with an aura of nanite micro-machines), and artificial intelligence (the development, by centralised global networking using satellite-transmissions, of a singular central intelligence, or sentient entity, within the data of the network itself) are all (or should be) far more relevant today than Blavatsky's followers' wrathful lies. But instead, we have the ongoing tension of the "war in Iraq," the post-9-11, beefed up fear-police reminding us of a "terrorist attack," and the ongoing occult mystery of "Who controls gas prices?"

In truth though, not only what we do see combined with what we don't see is real. What we imagine is equally true for the parallel-realities and "baby universes" of the multiverse surrounding the local universe, and our thalamic project probabilities in reality around us like the "water-fall walls" of time-tunnels through wormholes, opening up quantum-uncertainties between the realms of now and "nether." Still though, as Crowley said, "all of this is one, and already this one is nothing."

And, again, instead of being told the truth, we are told there literally is no such thing as truth, and this is the Highest Lie Ever. Anyone who doesn't know the truth is ignorant. Anyone who tells you they know the truth when they clearly do not is a liar. Ignorance is a crime of omission, but lying is a crime of knowing commission.

That is why I detest so much of modern society as outgrowths on the under-belly of the "painted sky," like polyps ripe with cankers, seeping pustules and sores. A fire-works show over the Disney-brand "Magick Kingdom." I call this spectacle "Annuity Coeptis," latin for the Greek "fortune favours." People look up at the false "stars" of the US celebrity-system and momentarily forget their own slavery unto death. But such a glimpse is all the closer these sleepers will ever get to experiencing the eternal liberty of souls "recalled" from sleep.

So we suspect, nascently, at the most minute level of our dreams and imagination, the truth about the nature of the UFO-phenomenon, that these are mind-powered crafts piloted by one or more aliens, and that these "aliens" are really only "astrally-travelling" souls in an OBE (out-of-body) from their sleeping or dead vessels. Such "spiritual" or "higher-dimensional" "beings" populate the entire universe beyond the gravity well of earth, and comprise a ubiquitous exchange of information that can, rightly, only be described as a higher form of geometry, one capable of measuring patterns over time. Jungians call them "Archetypes," but Simonists call them "chthonic."

And we suspect likewise the truth about the nature of our own souls, that we are under-developed "spiritually" and unprepared yet to be (re-)subsumed into the infinite power of the multiverse to be born into the parent universe beyond and brought before the presence of God, the "father." We know that we can only hope to prepare ourselves sufficiently while alive in order to be able to live on as a soul and leave the body after its death.

However, for most these truths are simply too miserable to accept.

Anyway, man, sorry it took me so long to get back to you writing up some commentary on these movies. They're typical "New Age" fluff from the mid-80s, when the "New Age" movement was at its peak, along with Nancy Reagan's astrologer and Ronnie's "Star Wars" program. I grew up during this time, so, as rotten as it was in retrospect, I still have fond memories of it. I love the "New Age" propaganda, but I hate a couple "New Age" heroes, like Blavatsky, Hubbard and Drunvalo Melchizedek - the modern sheister behind the so-called "Flower of Life" series of books about his take on sacred geometry. It's all just warmed-over Spiritism, and so is all meant to target lonely mid-western house-wives into spending their husbands' hard-earned money.

Also, sorry about the length of this, but when I get on a "New Age" rant I tend to be long-winded. Hope it's not been too long a read, and hope to hear back from you soon.

[quote="TheCrow"]the world is completely not as we see it, since "they" distract us from the reality. And that basically, the majority of us are "living-dead", the humans living without a soul, or with a dead soul.[/quote] the world is completely not as we see it, since those around us "distract" (rather than inspire) us from the reality. Check plus. Basically, the majority of us are "living-dead," the humans living without a soul, or with a dead soul.

True, however even these dead corpses act out symbolically and sympathetically the ancient rituals that mattered more to earlier, more mentally pure peoples, such as the act of marriage. However, consider that, by the criteria of love, anyone born to parents who did not love each other would be considered a "bastard" and aborted. Such ancient rituals preserve the memories from when times were clearer and the truth easier to apprehend. Marriage implies love, although love is clearly dead today.

We know that at some time in our past (both individually as children and as an early species) we possessed a much higher learning-curve and experienced our emotions in a much brighter and more colourful way than society's oppressive secrecy permits today. We call this the condition of psychic "Eden," and say that it was permanently lost to us with the flood, but that the flood will never happen again (Judaism), and that if original sin can be forgiven of man by Jesus then the "fall of man" can be reversed (Catholic). In truth, Eden is not lost, only invisible to us so long as we do not concentrate on seeing it.

And in dealing with all this, we have to think of it as the truth behind the lie that is religion, but we have to let religion keep the one grain of salt doubt that there may yet be a "one true God" above and within all. And once you can see what that leaves us with, you can see why there is no "they".... There is only our own mind at the centre of the universe and the force of the entire universe surrounding us pressing down invisibly upon the psyche of our mind. Psychically we call this pressure the "Prescence of God."

Physically, this "Force" is gravity, which causes time, change, disease and death. But gravity below the speed of light moves one direction while tachyons above the speed of light move the opposite direction. Super-string gravity is the interior-motive force, the PHI vector of the torus, while tachyons, the multiverse of hyperspatial parallel-dimensional "baby" universes, surround the exterior-surface in a PI-shaped vector. The seven-colour spectrum of light maps onto such a PHI/PI torus and such is the shape of our soul, or our aura. In the centre of the toroidal aura of energy around us we have the seven chakras, and surrounding them the ever-rising and descending, ever-running and returning, "water-fall wall" of chi, or units of karma.

However all of that is a soap-bubble inside of which is gravity and outside of which are tachyons. Here, let me show you what I mean:

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/MISC\_diagrams/onelove.jpg[/img]

The one soul descends through the many bodies to infuse itself into the one body. But as I say, there is no fixed network of pre-existent probable relationships. There is no "morphogenetic grid."

It is the descent itself, like Einstein's elevator, that causes the sensation of gravity to increase on us. So, as the Good God stoops down to enter into our evil cess-pit, He creates the downward surge of energy that then holds him down once he makes himself into one of us, a human. In this way, the "fall of God" is the psychological "demi-urge" or urge to self-defeat.

So, the "God" of this "Universe" (the word "Catholic" is latin for "universal" church) is actually Satan, our adversary, wearing us down like Job. This is what I, as a Gnostic, personally believe. The "God" of this "universe" is Satan. And for this hypothesis I have ample proof.

In short (and as always, too late, I know), God lowering Himself below the speed of light and entering our universe along the 7-coloured PHI spiral interior to our temporal torus is what causes evil to arise within the universe. There is no "God and the Devil." There is only "God and man;" from God's point of view, man is the devil, however the same holds true in reverse from the point of view of man - tha God is the devil, and that man is God. All of this is simply philosophy though, and beyond that no such thing as "true" religion can be ascertained.

[quote="TheCrow"]I agree on these facts, but I simply do not understand the "why", why are "they" trying to distract us from our own development, why "they" don't want us to know the truth? I mean, sure they want to enslave us, but, its too materialistic, I mean, don't you find it strange, "they" tell us lies, so that our soul dies, and they can exploit the "living-dead". It sound too simple. [/quote]

No, you're right, the current result is never considered to be the final goal, so while we achieve today the goals of yesterday, we are already making new goals for tommorow.

The only hang-up in your reasoning is your insistence on "they," as in "the conspiracy." According to the Essenes of Qumran, the true coucil of apostles was not based the base 12 zodiac, but on the base 7 archangels of the apocryphal book of Enoch. According to Mathers' translation of Abramelin, there are only 4 demon-princes that rule the "4 corners" of earth (the watch-towers). However it is not whether they are good or evil, or how many there are, "they" are servants of the Most High force, the cosmic autocrator. If you descend through 12, 7 or 4 layers to submerge into the physical plane from the condition of the single, cosmic soul, the multiverse is irrelevant, only that you did descend. All modern religions agree that this universe is imperfect and that our souls descended here from a more-perfect realm beyond our universe now. But this isn't any great surprise, since all these religions are based on the premise of suffering, a condition of material existence under the pressure of the demiurge.

[quote="TheCrow"]what do you think about the so called "Order of the Serpent" and the division in two half, the illuminati and luminary? Or these two halves are just another metaphor showing the division of the human beings into -> illuminati the materialistic, living dead humans, and luminary as the humans who still have a soul, but do not necessarily know how to awake? [/quote]

I tend to be highly skeptical of all such "Atlantean Brotherhoods." Crowley owned a copy of the book, "the cloud upon the sanctuary," a contemporary novel about the "Great White Brotherhood" of Atlantis.

The symbol in the documentary used by the "Brotherhood of the Snake" people was the symbol of Raelism, a UFO-cult, the combined Swastika and Star of David. This is a new symbol combining an elder symbol (the star) with an ancient symbol (the cross). It is not originally a single symbol that was separated into two. It is two symbols combined into one now.

The modification in their use of this symbol was the addition of a circle, representing the snake eating its tail, or the oroborus, such:

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/snakes.gif>[/img]

The experience of meeting aliens is common; in dreams all our friends and enemies are there, as well as many strangers. So, too, is the experience of undergoing a "psychic" initiation in dreams, and this experience usually involves some influx of inspiration about "Atlantis."

This is all well and good, but all hitherto attempts at forming a "bund" - or unified college of all modern cults, the splinters of Atlantis - have failed. The "Secret Chiefs" of Mathers and Blavatsky are false, they are all fakes, but because they are well-intentioned, they will prosper by doing a small evil to accomplish a greater good.

In any event, I don't doubt that new "prophets" will arise among our own generation and, in our lifetimes, we will overthrow the oppression of past governmental forms, and hear great people speak. But none of this lasts more than a moment, and then we will wake up and be old and infirm.

It's not a mechanical Plan, dependent on us as the programs inside the mainframe. It's just nature. Everything sucks. It's human nature, and by human I include all sentient forms of entity. It's the nature of the universe, which is part of the multiverse, and thus part of God.

It's God that's evil. Man is just a reactive organ. It is God who, like a pin penetrating into a cellular nucleus, pokes into our DNA to make us who we are, and not us, and it is God who, like a mad scientist with a sadist's sense of humour, injects himself into our bacteriological auric ova and, virally - memetically, takes over our consciousness. God is a virus. Consciousness is the symptom of this virus. Emotions are the symptoms of consciousness.

All this means is to be receptive to higher-dimensional vibrations of pure geometry, for being "infected" by God is to be implanted with an antenna of unknown-origins that connects you to the "mothership," or rather, the next dimension "up." We could see all of this on 9-11 metaphorically, but it only lasted one single instant, and capturing that exact moment is pointless and impossible. What we saw, symbolically, was the same as the Tarot trump "the Lightning Struck Tower" - we see the division of the above and the below, and see the demiurge triumphant in this destruction, Samael the blind hung upside-down as Osiris/Orion's belt aligned to the Giza and Tenochtitlan pyramids. So, in 2001, some of us "ascended" (ie. died when the towers exploded) and some of us remained (ie. were "left behind" after "the rapture" ). Tim LeHaye's fans run the White House now.

But I don't think there is one group who runs everything and that this group is split into two camps, one comprised of "conservatives" who want to "turn back the clock" and "liberals" who want to revolve the clock ahead faster. I don't think any group is immune to inter-personal politics, but I do doubt there is any one single group making all the important decisions for our "environmental, evolutionary, conscious and human" future. We're all in this together.

So, no, I don't think there is a "they" who run everything. No, I think there are three different groups, the state (the government of the Delian League), the church (the former bankers of Delios), and a third group made up of only one single individual. I think this individual runs everything. The other two groups, political liberals and rich conservatives, are, like Punch and Judy marionettes, made to compete with each other by the third party, the Pope (the modern heir to Alexander the Great's original empire).

I think it is the Pope who is to blame. And here's why: the Pope, or the modern position equivalent to the emperor of the world, originally Alexander the Great, rules over politics as well, because religion outnumbers politics. In other words, kings have traditionally been answerable to the Pope, and thus the kings have merely been regional governors in an empire ruled over by the Pope. The people obey the kings only because the Pope tells them to obey. In this way, one chess piece, the Pope, sets the entire board of other players into automatic check.

Because of the self-inflicted wounds the Pope of Rome has brought on the people loyal to this religion of his empire, they have been subjugated into psychic bondage to him, and will believe him easily. But these wounds to the masses, ie. from the inquisition to the NAZI Holocaust, the rules of the tyrants and despots since the division of politics and religion resulting in Caesars, Charlemagne, Napoleon, the Czars, Hitler and JFK - who died a symbolic martyr - all of these "wounds" have been at the command of the Pope, to make the people appear weak and divided to one another.

Originally, the suppression of one group of catholics (the Cathars) was meant to rape their growth to swell that of another group (the Jesuits). However, the long term plan was always to foster Gnosticism toward ultimate revenge against the later equivalent of the perceived modern "Jesuits" (ie. the rich "Illuminati" members of Gnostic Masonry as traitors) even though this later group would be innocent of the original Inquisition against the Gnostics. Just as the Pope ordered the Inquisition, it was the Pope who is behind making Masonry appear anti-catholic. But the Masons do not hate the Pope. Ask them! It is the Pope who condemned Masons. The Masons, that is the modern "Cathars" (ie. the rich "Illuminati" ) do not want to take over the world of religion from the Pope. They do not want to rule the universe. They are happy being rich, living off the taxes they enjoy politically, even though only a pittance compared to the amounts in the coffers of the Papacy. They just want to be left alone.

Instead, the term "Illuminati" is manipulated by Papists to mean "rich Masons," instead of meaning what it actually does - "modern Cathars." So the "Illuminati" are continually assailed by Papists and right-wing Christian Israel-ists as being "left-wing globalist Zionists." Meanwhile, it is just the modern Jesuits, loyal to the Pope, who are trying to heighten a perceived threat (where none really exists) in such an institution as the CIA. It's only a rogue faction of agents, worshippers of Ba'al (the Bohemian owl) from Yale (not only S&B but also S&K and other "esoteric" college frats) who have infiltrated the CIA to appear to serve the interests of rich globalists. Really, these agents are posing as owl-worshippers (who REALLY worships an owl??) as cover for their true allegiance, as Jesuits, to the Pope. They are posing as "Cathars" (Baphomet-worshippers) to discredit Gnosticism.

But that group of Jesuits posing as Ba'al-worshippers are prepared to be "persecuted" as a perceived threat to religion (since they have chosen to attack "radical Islam" ie. to bolster up as an enemy the rivalry between Sunni and Shi'ite Muslims in Iraq), even though it is not really a conflict based on religious principles, because both the western Masons (blamed for being the rich "Illuminati" ) and the eastern Muslims (blamed for "radical" Islam) are, actually, Gnostic. But, by starting a perceived conflict between these groups (Ba'al-worshipping Masonic "Illuminati" and "radical" Islam) on 9-11 (we saw the planes, we thought "hijackers" even though we knew it was the CIA), the Papal-loyalist "Jesuits" who infiltrated the CIA have pitted one group of Gnostics against another.

Who is a Gnostic? No one actually worships the demi-Urge. The demi-Urge is depression, self-betterment seen as self-defeat, and self-destruction. It is literally opposite the "religious ecstasy" of being "lifted up" in the divine presence through meditative prayer. The demi-Urge is evil, and evil is the opposite of the capacity to worship. So, no "Communists aren't Atheists" and no "Satanists don't worship Satan" and no "the Aaronic priests didn't worship Apis," and there is no actual "Molech the owl." So a Gnostic is anyone who is "agnostic." They know there is a God, but they refuse to accept the "God of man" (ie. the "Christ" of the Pope).

So, yes the rich "Illuminati" are guilty of being elitist globalists, but this is not a crime. The crime is the existence of money in the first place, because if we didn't worship the power of money, then rich globalists wouldn't be the ruling elite, because there would be no need for a ruler. Then we would see the Pope as behind the dictatorship of dollar-value, and the ultimate manipulator of gas prices.

And yes, the rich "illumanti" are Masons, but being a Mason is not exclusive of being a Papist. So, yes, the "Ba'al" the "Bohemian Owl" worshippers (ie. the OTO), are Papist-spies inside Masonry, seeking to discredit Gnosticism by pitting rich western politicians against their fellow Gnostics in the middle-east. Then they go around blaming the CIA or Israel.

And yes, the rich "Illuminati" are ultimately "responsible" (at least by the Catholic standards of a crime of allowance meaning acceptance after the fact) for killing Kennedy because he was a Catholic who posed a perceived threat to Masonry via the CIA. But Kennedy was not a Papist, he was a Gnostic. So he posed no threat to any average Mason (he wanted to increase their ranks), who are all also Gnostics (their first question is "do you believe in God"?). No, Kennedy was killed for threatening the rogue group of agents in the CIA who were Papist-loyalists (modern Jesuits) by threatening to "dismantle the CIA." He was a Masonic Cathar spy (ie. "bleeding heart liberal" ) who had infiltrated the "conservative" Catholic religion, just like Weishaupt himself had been a Jesuit, and he was made an example of for it, just like Christ or Caesar, betrayed by Johnson, his own Vice-President. You don't need to be a Catholic by practise to be a Papist-loyalist, which is how they infiltrate Masonry, because they pose as "Catholics." Not all Catholics are Papists anyway. Most are Gnostics. Kennedy was a Gnostic spy who threatened to "blow the whistle" on the Papist spies who'd infiltrated Masonry to discredit it as the "Illuminati."

So, what is a Papist? If you don't need to be a Catholic by practise to be a Papist, which allows one to infiltrate Masonry by posing as a practising Catholic, then what does it mean to be loyal to the Pope? Can a Buddhist or Shintoist, a Taoist or a Chi-ist, a Krishna or a Hindu, or a Muslim or a Jew, or even, God-forbid, a Lutheran, still be a Papist? Of course they can. Who is a papist? One who obeys the will of God. But who is God? We are supposed to believe in God as "the Most High," meaning whichever consciousness is "in the lead" of the rat-race is sitting "on top of the world," and that this position is earned by psychic deed, and not appointed as a post by inept and corrupt officials. But look who is telling us that! Look who is going around describing the Passion of the Christ and wailing about Christian persecution by other religions (Islam, Judaism and "Masonry" ie. Reformed Christianity, ie. Gnosticism). Look who is telling us, "Christ was the Most High." The same people encourage each of us "don't stick your neck out," and sing "onward Christian soldier"

("Jesuit" is latin for "soldier of Jesus." )

I, for one, don't believe them. The Christ Messiah, the king of mankind, is not like Kether, a crown to be passed around, like a pipe in a smoking circle, the "Most High" is not usually whoever is "most fit" to be leader. No, instead, the Pope of the Catholic church is in charge, and I, nor you, nor anyone else has any chance of becoming "the King of the World," to quote that movie Titanic. We may be the "most high" or the "most apt" person to lead the whole world into a New Age of unity and harmony, but it's the Pope who calls all the shots right now, not any of the rest of us.

So Papist spies report to the Pope while pretending to be practitioners of Masonry or other religions, and so, Masonic spies infiltrate the Catholic faith. But these are not "two groups," politics and religion. They are one group, anti-Papist Gnostics, who have been pitted against each other by the Pope. Really, there are few Papist spies, and only one Masonic spy into Catholicism, and that is the "Messiah," or the "Most High," or most actually apt person to lead, and they are merely propped up and then betrayed by the Papist spies into Masonry, who pose as the Messiah's Masonic friends, but who inevitably (hypnotically) kill them at the command of the modern elected official to the position of "ruler of earth," or "ruler of the largest religion," or "ruler of the empire of the mind."

This was all due to Christianity and the Greek conspiracy to divide the church and state. At the appointed time the Pythagorean Order of Death selected a "Messiah" at random and, crushing him like a cock-roach, declared that his message had been to establish a church in his honor to be headed by the very ones to have betrayed him, and that everyone answerable to the desire to be "forgiven our sins by the Messiah" had better worship as chief among them the Pope of that church. The Pope is an appointed position selected by a committee of cardinals, and the first Pope they ever appointed was Caesar, the current emperor of Rome. Since then, the Pope was the title for Emperor, but the position itself - that of king of kings - did not change.

All of this occurs unconsciously in the mind of the sleeping matter of the universe. Again, remember, this process of: (Pope / spies / anti-Pope / betrayal) is the demi-Urge, the sacrificial ritual of self-destruction, the casting out of the wounded scape-goat like the shadowmancy of Puxatawny Phil the groundhog. It's God (ie. Satan) manifesting a straw-man enemy and then burning the effigy to scare his people into continued obedience. It's all one man. It's all the Pope, the unfit to rule monkey elected "universal" (psychic) emperor. We all have him to blame that we do not all immediately recognise the true nature of our souls. The Pope is God (ie. Satan) on earth. The Pope is earth's own governor, sent by the universal demi-Urge. The Pope is earth's own demi-Urge himself.

So, no I don't believe in "alien Jesus," or the "Most High" human being martyred by the Pope or Emperor of the World. If that is what the Emperor is telling us is true, then you can bet good money it is the opposite of the case in reality. I don't know what to believe is "good," all I know is that everything that exists, including everything anyone can imagine based on that, is evil. Every single one of us is the "Most High" insofar as none of us have "beaten the need to sleep." All of us are human - sentient entities, and none of us "perfect," nor the "son of God." The Pope is Caesar over politics and religion, and due to the demi-Urge inside of us, that is consciousness itself within our bodies of matter, our friends will all ultimately betray us if we try to set our minds free from the empire of God on earth. It's all bad.

chemical analysis of the effects: part 2

I want you to know before I begin I am not meaning to endorse anyone do the experiments I have done, and am doing, and am going to continue to do too. No, I am doing these experiments for the sole purpose that no one else should ever need to try and do them themselves ever again. In the end I'm going to die, but we all die. So how I die only matters if I die doing something important. Like this.

Now then, onto the reassessment of my original thesis:

Initially I'd stated, two things:

A) because I did not die, the methodology and dosage I'd applied were not immediately lethal.

B) therefore, the difference between the HWD concoction and the e-coli in Zambia was the missing ingredients:

1) Plutonium

2) patient zero.

This was essentially confirmed by the events I experienced since. In the post office bathroom when I blacked out from huffing the fumes of the burning styrofoam cup full of excrement, I had still managed to function normally throughout the full and highly official situation. It was, although I didn't realise until recovering some twenty minutes later, not even until I'd gotten into my bus I'd begun to feel any effects.

Then later, in my shack, when I broke into Tom's head with the combination of the Plutonium and the jar of pickled excrement, it was evident that for the combination to assume immediately lethal qualities, such as the emitting of the toxic gas and the acidic effects on the concrete floor, then it was necessary to add the missing ingredients to the original substance. Plutonium plus human waste equals e-coli.

So what we are dealing with here is clearly two different things. On the one hand, consumption of this substance is not lethal. On the other hand, consumption of this substance is immediately lethal. The missing ingredient is therefore: plutonium.

I'd like to add as a Side Note that I don't think the effect of the toxic GAS started until after the cop had slipped and slid into the puddle. The gas was given off when living flesh came into contact with the e-coli that was made from Tom's dead flesh. E-coli is the combination of the liquid Plutonium with the bacteria of excrement. It can be born from dead flesh, but only as a liquid.

From live flesh, it can be rendered into a gas. Okay, enough of the side-note, close=quotes.

Now, then I want to tell you what has happened since Friday when Denise got home from school. I was in the bathroom when she came in. I was cooking up the HWD and the bathroom was full of hot smoke. It was a suicide attempt. I know that now, that that was all it was. It was just my spirit trying to be closer to God.

But at the time I thought I did die. I had written my Extreme Unction down to my daughter, and with God as a witness gone to the toilet to take my own life. I knew there was only one way the House of Cards could come down next. So I bit the bullet.

I knew I would have to do the right thing by Jeannie. I couldn't protect Denise from down here. So I was going to go up, and in order to confront Tom and Teneal on the astral-plane with my contact, I was willing to do it.

I have to admit I was shakin like a wet calf. I was walkin up the stairs and down the hallway making the ingredients in my pants. So I got up to the dry-bowl and made it and then took a jar of vaseline, my lighter-fluid, and put some tp over my head and put my face over the bowl. I was just about to light this candle when Denise come walking in the door.

So she started shrieking once she'd seen what I was doing. But the neighbors in the duplex were home so we couldn't have that. Their bathroom was right up against Tom's. So I took Denise by the sholders and sat her down on the toilet, closing the lid so she could sit, but also to conceal what I was doing.

"Denise," I said then and knealt down to her, "I need to know whose baby it is. I need to know or else I can't go on living. I was writing my last will and testaemnt for you. It was in the blog, so you would find it later. But I was supposed to be dead right now. So tell me, since I know you must have gotten sent from school because you're home so early, whose baby is it in you? Who is my son-in-law?"

And then she broke down and told me. She said, "there were six of them, Dad. They had told me they were in school for the fbi, but later I come to found out they were all just soldiers about to be shipped off to Iraq. My friend at the time, Sarah, she come to tell me she thouht one or two of them might have been Navy Seals. But she wasn't sure."

I took her up in my arms standing up with her so that we were both then standing in Tom's bathroom doorway and I was hholding her in my arms and she was crying. I walked with her out of there, flushing the toilet behind me, and we walked down the hallway and stairs to sit on the downstairs white leather couch.

She said to me, "Dad, why would you try to kill yourself? Is it because of my baby? It's not the Catholic thing to do. And why did you try to tell me to have an abortion? And who were those people you sent me with? And dad, what the fuck is going on?"

But this last part she was whispering in a high pitch, and it was so soft t was almost silent, but to me it was ear-piercingly shrill. I'd had one ear-drum blown out, and the sound was just starting to come back throughh it.

So I clenched my hand over my ear, and she broke down on the couch crying. Then she said, "I'll do whatever you want, whatever you tell me to do now I'll do it. If you tell me to have an abortion, I'll do it. If you want me to have the baby that's fine too, whatever. But you have GOT to Tell ME, what the Fuck Is Going ON!"

Why have those men from the Labyrinth come for you. A. I want to know. And B. Who the fuck are the men from the Agency? Which Goddamned One?? And who are you, really?? I mean, are you even really my dad? Whose daughter am I?!"

And then once she was done I sat down next to her and told her, "Look, I ain't gonna lie to ya, from now on. The whole mess I'm in it's all explained in what I'd written. It's like I'd written, I'm a Jesuit, honey. I'm in the army of Jesus and I answer to the Pope alone. I have been on an assignment sent to me from His Holiness to infiltrate a sect that claims to be a modern descendent of an elder off-shoot of my Order. I was sent to find the truth about who is behind ... " and then I took her and showed her my ring, and then I said their name.

Her response was predictable. "What The Fuck Are You Talking About!? Who The Fuck Were Those People? Why haven't you asked me any questions!?" But then it became obvious she was blacking out and flashing back about it and so, for the safety of the baby I put my arms around her shoulders and let her cry it out.

"Denise, I need you to listen to me. We have to communicate here. I am your father, LeRoy. I am just telling you all these things now, because I hope you can forgive me, but I have not been ABLE to tell you them yet. I need you to calm down and listen." So she started to calm down, and instead she sat at the far end of Tom's couch from me, by the lamp, and looked me right in the eyes with those dusky brown eyes of hers and I am ashamed, I had to look down.

"Denise, listen. I have done terrible things." Then I told her about Zambia. I told her about the mass-manufacturing. I told her about the rumored plans. I told her about REX-84. I told her about the DHS, and then about the CIA, and then about Skull and Bones. I told her the name of my contact. I told her the real reason I'd been about to try to commit suicide. But by then, she leaned over and stopped me. "Dad," she reminded me, "I know all that, it's all in your blog."

"What I don't know is why. Was it all a set-up on me all along. I don't know! Maybe those boys really were from the fbi! Maybe you've made some enemies you don't know about, Dad, and now it's my life and the life of a child inside me that are gonna end up paying for it. What I want to know is WHY. If you kill your self I won't get to know that." Then she broke down on me again and was crying in my arms.

"no, look, honey," I started to say and to try to tell her about all that I'd written down, about the Church being like God to man, but like Satan to God, and about the blood oath I'd taken to never confess, and about the ultimate good being a subjective truth. But instead, her eyes widened, and she recoiled at whatever she heard.

So I knew then this was all part of the plan. This was nothing but their ritual, I knew then. I realized immediately I'd just told Denise, my fifteen year old red-headed Mormon Catholic daughter, the "secret answer to the mysteries of the universe."

"I want you to keep the baby." I told her. "But you have got to be able to stay alive to do that. And I cannot protect you. I am a liability to you. So long as I am alive you are in danger. That is what I am trying to tell you Denise. I half to die. But now I know. Death is not as it appears. Reality..." I told Denise, "is wax. Death is just fire."

But then she stopped me and she said, "No, you look, Dad. You aren't making any sense. I need some straight answers. I need to know who those men were that you sent me to. Why did they hit me when they were interrogating me? I didn't know what they wanted me to say, then they hit me and told me what they thought, and when I cried they told me it was a confession. I want to know why you sent me to them. Were they Jesuits too, Dad? Were they men you had sent from the church?"

She looked deep into me and I looked away and started pacing. I said, "Honey it's getting late, and..."

But she cut me off then and said loudly, "LATE? You don't even know what time it is Dad! No, you're right though. It's far too late for me to ever trust you again." I reached out to her impulsively and she recoiled by instinct alone. My fate was sealed. I'd crossed our bounds. "What I really want to know though, is what you think I am ever supposed to tell this baby about you. Obviously you don't expect to be around to help me raise it. You want to cash in and check out right now. It's pathetic, Dad. You're fucking pathetic."

Then she bolted for the door. I made a move to stop her. I stepped between her and the door. She stamped her foot. "OH? Now I can't leave? What the Fuck do you care anyway? I thought you were busy killing yourself? Why don't you just go back to doing that?"

It broke my heart to hear my daughter tell me such things. I remembered how I'd shot sherrif Right in the face, and I remembered crushing Tom's head in for killing my wife, and I remembered my boss Daryl, standing as close to me as Denise was then, saying "Leroy you don't know what life is." I admit now I came real close to just killing Denise.

I had tried to explain to her, but she hadn't understood. She probably never will be able to look back on this experience and rightly remember all I'd said. Ah well, it's in the blog, and the blog is on the web for God, Denise and everyone and all to see.

So I let her go. I slumped my shoulders and let her push me to one side and she went passt me out into the night. She got onto her bicycle and she road off.

I was crying for some while. I honestly didn't know what to do.

So I ended up falling asleep on the downstairs white leather couch pulled out into the middle of the living room to be within sight of the main door. I ended up thinking about Panther... wondering if he would haunt me... and I drifted off into sleep.

That was when I had the Vision. I had the Visison immediately. That is how I know it was not a dream. Because as soon as I closed my eyes, the Visiosn started. It was very bright, and it took a long while for my eyes to adjust before I could see. I felt wide awake, but now I know I was not.

In the Vission there were some angels surrounding me. They were glowing ultra-violet like Denise in the dream I'd had the other night, so that is how I knew who they were. I looked down and saw I was glowing white light. I wore a long white robe and it was glowing bright in the ultra-violet.

I said, "how am I here," but the sound that came out was "who am I here?"

"Your faith is well founded." And one of the angels came up to me and it was my contact. And the next angel came up to me and it was Jeannie. And the next angel came up to me and it was Teneal, and the final angel come up to me and it was Tom. They formed a circle around me. And I saw myself lying on Tom's leather white sofa and I see them standing around me while I sleep. I see from above. Then they look up at me.

That was when I was filled with understanding. So long as I lived, they could not harm me directly. That was why it was decided that it was not my time. Because if I died, then I would be able to collect my karmic trasures in heaven, and have immediate and direct knowledge of my own unique role in God's ineffable master-plan. Thus armed, in one hand my white karma of bets to get paid out, and in the other hand with my Godly wisdom of why He'd sent me down here to begin with, I would not only be able to defeat Tom and Teneal, should they yet side together, but would even be more powerful than my contact alone could control. That was why it was not my time to die.

Then I was transported to a base in Antarctica, but it was unfrozen, and I knew it was no longer the present. Then I was taken into a building I cannot say the proper shape of that was all made out of coloured panes of glass, and I was taken inside.

The four of them were there already. They were finishing up having a gathering as I arrived. My contact came over to me and he shook my hand. "Lee Roy," he said, "I'm glad you could make it." He explained to me that he had established his case against Tom on my behalf in Council, with Jeannie to testify in my defense, and with Teneal to testify of his complicity with Tom in her death. The ruling had come down to terminate either you or your daughter, and this order is to be executed by me. All this while he and I had been walking around the outside of the buildings past some fish ponds built into concrete bench seats. Then we came back to the big green front door and went back inside.

Then Jeannie came over to me and she hugged me. "My head was waiting for me in heaven," she said and then laughed that laugh that was the chief reason she'd fallen in love with me, because I could make her laugh. She knew her laugh sounded just like a bell ringing. She knew she had an angel's laugh. She always was my angel from beyond the Abyss. Now then, Jeannie took me aside, and with her I walked around the outside of the building again, in the same direction as before. And she explained to me, "Earth is perdition, we call it Teleology. Sometimes it is bright and we see far, but half the time it is dark, and although we can see the depths of heaven then, we cannot see two feet in front of our face. That is what being alive is like. Sometimes "good," sometimes "bad," because it is a place of testing, of trial by fire. And Death is the heat of flame beside the honey-comb nature of reality, but heaven is the pure essence of this fire's light." When we came back around, I had a terrible feeling I'd never see Jeannie again. She went in.

Then Teneal came out. He took my arm. We walked opposite the way I'd walked around with my contact and my wife. We walked around widdershins. And so I knew whose side Teneal was on. And he walked on my left side. And so I knew he was going to try to get on my ass. But he could not harm me, because I was alive, in limbo, where he could not touch me, since he was already destined for hell. Teneal and I walked halfway around that place before he spoke. He just gritted his teeth. Then he looked at me and spoke, "You can't trust him. I never slept with Tom. The warrant in Florida was all him. It was never me, and not Tom. I don't know why, but Tom's confession against me has damned me to eternity in the scorching inferno. I blame you, LeRoy Jenkem. I blame you." Then he went inside.

And Tom came out. He came over to me smiling and shook my hand. "LeRoy!" He shouted as he walked up, and then he grabbed me close to him and patted me on the back. But instead of shaking my hand, he was stroking my palm with his finger. So I recoiled. "What!?" Tom shouted. "Not friend nor foe am I! To LeRoy nor to no one." And then behind him from inside the building came out Jeannie, and she put her hand on Tom's shoulder, and Teneal on Tom's other side, and my contact behind Jeannie. And then they stood there, and they all just looked at me.

Then I woke up and Denise was shaking me. "No, dad, no..." But I was coming to. "It's alright, honey, it's alright, I ain't dead. Not yet anyway," I was saying. So she was catching her breath. Then she said, "No, I do. I believe you. I do believe you."

"About what?" I said. "About everything," she said and she sat down on the tilted couch. I understood, the time of the ritual was past. In heaven, the hearing against Tom had occurred while I'd been arguing with Denise, my daughter. Now that this meeting in heaven was concluded, we were both back to being our normal selves.

She got closer to me on the couch and hugged me. She said, "I love you, dad." I was almost expecting her to slide a knife in my back. But then I thought to myself about what would be the best bet in that situation. So I just had to hug her back and trust she wouldn't stab me. That is why I am still alive. I think. I do not fully understand why, but it is for things like that. Because I think like that.

"Denise," I said then. "I have something to say, you need to know."

"No, Dad." Denise then said to me. "I have something to say that you need to know, and for once I get to go first." So I sat back and let her spill her guts at me. But this time was different. It was like this time she was cold and reserved. And it left me to think about those men who'd punched her in the eye. I'd sworn revenge, but then I'd betrayed that by seeing it as accomplished by my promotion. What kind of father am I, really? I was listening then to my daughter. And she was saying,

"Dad, look, it wasn't true what I'd said before. It wasn't true about the six boys and I was lying when I told you it was Tom's too. It was Tom who told me to tell you it was six boys, but it was Mom who told me to tell you it was Tom's. She told me you'd understand, but I knew even as I drove to your house it would already be too late. Mom's last words were, "go get Lee Roy, tell him Bob's your Uncle." Then you said "Bob was my uncle" too when you sent me with those men. But they didn't ask me about that, and you told me to say it to someone I could trust. Well, I trust you, Dad... I do trust you. Not very Much right now... but I do trust you. Tell me what that means. What is that code for? Who is "Bob"?"

So I explained to her with almost a nervous laugh, "it's a phrase they use in the bureau to identify agents in the field. When an agent sees a bureau boy, the agent can tell him "Bob's your uncle," and then the bureau boy can protect them. Bob is like Uncle Sam, or Santa Claus. He is an icon. Like the crucified Christ."

"What agency, dad? Who is Bob with? Fuck that, who are YOU with, really?" And she looked at me with big brown puppy eyes and I could see she really did want to know. It was not only the after effects of the exposure to the radiation from the other dimension. It was that genuinely was curious and wanted to know. She liked to hear me saying these things out loud. She was like her mother. A listener.

"Calm down, honey." I said to her. "I'm calm," she assured me, so I went on. "Bob is CIA. Agency is CIA. Bureau is fbi. But I'm with DHS. But I'm really a Jesuit. In truth, I won't know whose side I've been on until I die, and that is why I trust only the Pope. It may be that this world is temptation, a paradise perpetually partially polluted. And I suppose some of us can find heaven on earth..." But by then I was trailing off.

"Okay, Dad. Okay," she said. "I am beginning to understand. But I want you to know I still haven't forgiven you for giving me over to those men and I still haven't forgotten their faces. When I can forget what they look like then I will forgive you. And I want you to know that, though I believe you, I don't trust you. Do you understand me now?" And I was trying to say she should read my blog, but she raised her finger and continued, "and so I am going to reserve the right for you to trust in me. I am going to be your boss, Dad. How's that sound? You're in the DHS? Well from now on I'm officially commander in chief of the department of not giving a shit. If you're really a liability, then you owe me. But since I can't trust you not to screw me over, and since I know you'd even kill me in my sleep, then I'm going to not tell you who your grandchild's father is. And that will be your punishment. From me. You'd talked about perdition. So consider this a message from Mom." and then she got up and walked up the stairs and into her room by the bathroom at the end of the balcony hallway.

I didn't know what time it was. So I went in and looked at the clock on Tom's microwave. It was 1:23 AM. I remember that specifically. Then I locked the door and straightened the couch out and went back to sleep on it. Then I had the Dream. This time, I knew it was a dream, because in it there was darkness just beyond every perimeter, when in the Vision I'd been able to see in vivid detail for miles.

So in the dream, I am climbing into a fountain in Italy. I climb up onto the statue of Laocoon in the middle of the fountain, and I climb onto his shoulders. I am straddling his head. Then I see there is another statue above this, and it is a statue of Atlas. So I climb up off Laocoon's shoulders and up onto the statue of Atlas. Then I see, beyond Atlas, a statue of Chronos. It looks like the grim reaper, but for some reason I know it doesn't represent death, it represents time. So I am beginning to climb up the crooked knee of time itself, and then I see far below me, under Atlas at the feet of Laocoon, the water in the fountain start to rise.

I keep climbing statues and have gotten onto the shoulders of Zeus's father when the water reaches the neck of Atlas. And then someone throws a noose around my ankle from below, and I cannot see who or how, but then the other end of the rope is lifted up above me and it pulls me up into the darkness into the air off the statue.

Then I am hanging there by my ankle in the darkness and I can't tell how deep the darkness is, I can't tell how high I am up off above the ground, but it feels like a great height. I look down, or rather, up. All the blood is in my head, I'm turning purple. But I make myself crane my neck back as far as I can, so that the pupils of my eyes will be at the exact polar nadir of my body mass, and then I open them.

I see there beneath me is a puddle of blood. In the puddle I see reflected strobing lights from above and below me. I look away and close my eyes. Then I look back. It is a lightning storm. All I can see are the streaks of lightning, like the edges of shards of broken glass, tearing jagged laser-like zig-zagging lines of light. Then I close my eyes very tightly. The lightning is flashing, and the pressure of the blood in my eyes is intense, and I am closing my eyes as tightly as I can, and I go pop.

Then reality turned itself inside out. I was dreaming then about killing Denise. I am ashamed to say it, but I dreamt I was standing over her bed in the moonlight through Tom's venetian blinds with a bloody butcher knife in my hand. But I knew this was not real, even as I was dreaming it, I knew it was only a dream. That's how I knew I was dreaming, and then as soon as I knew I was dreaming I woke up.

But I only woke up in the dream. Really I was still asleep. But now I was lucid, and so I took control. I flew up toward the strobing lightning in the thundering black oil clouds above, and then above the darkness across the ground below I flew for a while. I was looking for the base they'd taken me to, but I couldn't keep my eyes open. Below me all was darkness except when there was some lightning, and there was less and less the further out from under the storm I flew. Then the moon came out from behind the clouds above.

I rolled over on the couch restlessly and in the dream I rolled over too. I was flying lying down looking up at the moon above. And then I was flying upward toward the moon. I was thinking of the Pope and Denise woke me up.

It was light outside. She drew the curtains. I went blind. She was already in the kitchen cooking up scrambled eggs and frozen sausage. She was wearing one of Tom's baggy college sweatshirts and some short-shorts, and she looked so much like her mother in the dawn's light that I started to cry.

It was Saturday morning and she didn't half to go to school, and she didn't have LDS services until almost ten o'clock tomorrow morning. She was asking if I was planning on going into church. Immediately I knew she'd got me by the balls.

"Listen to me, honey." I said to her then. "I wasn't lying to you about anything I'd said to ya, like I promised ya. But I didn't tell ya whose agents those men who hit you were, and I didn't tell ya why this was all happening like you asked me to, and I didn't get to tell you because you wouldn't let me tell me about." I paused to make her look at me in the eyes. I could see she was okay. So I come out and told her.

"Look honey, the name Jenkem. You don't have to keep it. If you don't want to, I will understand. I think, if mom were here, she'd understand it too. I just wanted to preface what I'm about to tell you by saying that now at this time." Then I explained to her about the warrant. I told her it was my contact. I told her it was to protect me. In the event of compromise of my cover, I told her, "it could all be explained that way." But I also told her about the experiments. The "good olde days" in Zambia, when this obsession began. The days of penance as a bus driver. The recent groundwork I'd laid out for future experiments. I showed her the notes I'd taken on ingredients in the pad I'd kept in my back-pack since I left Sandia. It details it all. "But," I also explain, "it was a set-up all along." Denise, I told her, "they've got your daddy by the balls."

"That's bullshit." Denise told me. She has got such a fowl little mouth. I don't know where she gets it from either. I am a pious Catholic Jesuit re-baptised a Mormon, and her mother was an angelic Mormon Saint! I mean, I curse, I guess, but damn.

"That's bullshit, Dad, I'll tell you what's true." And she came over to me holding the red-hot bottomed frying pan with the scrambled eggs and the thawed sausage in it. It was eye-level. She was trying to see if she could make me look at the pan like a weapon. If I showed her fear, she would have killed me. So Instead I kept eye-contact on her. I didn't look at the pan.

"That's bullshit, Dad, I'll tell you what's true," she was saying. So I said, "what?" and she said, "what's true is I don't need this baby. You want it. But I don't know why. You think you're some kinda super-spy, but I can subdue you in two seconds. I don't even need to pull your leg to twist your arm, to turn a phrase into a coin," she joked. I smiled. "Good, then. There is a human being inside there after all," she said, and walked back to the kitchen with the pan and put the eggs on the plate with the sausage and some toast and brought it to me on the couch.

"So let me tell you what, super-spy," she said, setting the plate of eggs and sausage and toast down in my lap and in one motion she grabbed me by my balls. "I'm the boss of you," she was yelling at me. But I could barely hear her. I was turning purple, off into a world of hurt like I cannot even describe. My daughter, God Bless Her, but she was a virgin before she got pregnant, and she told me she has remained in tacto since. She has never known the touch of male flesh between her fingers, and only once between her legs, and then only abusively. So, my daughter, my pregnant virgin daughter, God Bless Her Little Soul, grabbed my balls too hard.

I guess she had been trying to play around, trying to teach me a lesson. But for a moment, inside her white-knuckled fifteen year old girly little fist the seminal vesicals connecting between my abdomen and my testes inside my sack got wrapped around one another once too often and then pinched. I growled at Denise then making a sound like a mostly run-over cat.

My eyes fill up with blood. The noise inside my head pops on again for the first time in days. "No," i prayed. I knew it would mean I was going to kill again. The voices would be next,, and I would see me unable to prevent myself from physically obeying their commands again. I prayed against it, even as I was strobing between passing out and coming to with my nuts in my daughter's clenched hand.

"Let me talk!" I shout at her out of nowhere. My mind is exploding in pain. I am between two dimensions, one a dream of sleep and one a very painful vision. I am screaming inside. But I only breath out after a hard heart beat, "let me tell you what I have to say." So my daughter, flesh of my flesh, blood of my blood, fruit of my loins, let go of her progenitor's source of origin for contribution to her own conception, and then I gasped.

That was wehn I realized that the eggs and sausage were scalding my lap. I stood up and they fell onto the ground, and then Zeus himself through down the hammer of Thor from on High to strike me in my groin, in my loins, in the seminal vesical connected to my left testical.

I fell over again. I was sitting on it for a long time before I could move. The pain welling up in me, the tense bullets of sweat beading out on my forehead, and my gritted teeeth, were all telling Denise all that time I was incapacitated, and couldn't move. But I'm not sure she really cared to realize how much pain she'd put me in.

She tilted her head and smiled at me. Then she went back out to the kitchen and made herself some scrambled eggs with de-frosted sausage and some toast. And then she came back to me in the living room and sat down at the opposite end of the couch. She bounced down onto it, and it jarred me, and I admit I nearly threw up blood for all of how it felt.

"So, now I'm the Grail Maiden and you are the Fisher King." she said as she sat down. and the wave of ain repeated that to me again and again over and over in my head for what felt like forever but lasted only five seconds.

"And you have to answer to me." She must have read Crowley. Up came her naked foot up into my lap and her painted toe-nails begin to massage my wounded groin. "So, tell me, Daddy..." And she bats her eyes at me... and she tickles my shit with her toes... "who do you think my baby's daddy is?"

I groan in pain and my eyes cross. It was about ten forty five AM in the morning on Saturday the 23rd of February, 2008. I was nearly passing out from the pain. And then I saw the glint. It was the Light. My daughter was seeing a beam of light reflecting from somewhere right into her eye. She was enjoying torturing me. Then I understood. It wasn't only the name I'd ruined. It wasn't even only the rest of my daughter's life. It was her mind. It had been turned to the dark and craven side, the perverse side Jeannie had redeemed me from, that scientific side, detached and amused as it tortured mouse after mouse in the same laboratory experiment. My daughter, I realized in pain, had become like me, ole LeRoy, a Sado-Masochist, one of the lot from Sodom and Gamorrah. Our pleasure and pain circuits are cross-wired, you see. So she took pleasure in my pain. And I saw this in her eye, in a spark of light I caught sight of reflecting a gleam off of her eye.

So I pissed blood onto her foot and she recoiled like a good girl and shrieked like there was a mouse on the floor. Her plate of eggs and sausages and toast went flying. In one motion I was standing across the room from her, with the arm of the couch and the full length of it between us. I was holding my testicals in my hand. The pain was not very bad, but the in CIA, I'd been trained to cncentrate on a cause of pain and to agonise as if I had a lower tolerance threshold in order to trick the brain into dumping adrennaline into the system. Poised across the room I was waiting for it to kick in. It was her move next but I could have killed her if I'd had to.

"Trust me, honey, you don't want to keep going there." I told her flat out. "I've been in the army, and in a Zambian jail, and I will not be able to stop myself killing you if you try too much shit with me. I am giving you fair warning." And I gave her fair warning.

But she was too bust laughing hysterically at me. So I looked down. I had pissed blood all down the front of my addidas, and was standing in a red puddle on Tom's light colored carpet. I look back up at her confused. She explains to me impatiently, "you look like this chick from my school in the showers when she got her first cramps, Dad." I didn't laugh.

"So you want to know the secret answer to the mysteries of the universe, do you?" I asked her. This phrase somehow caught her attention. Now I understand why, but then I didn't. But I went on then anyway. "Oh, I see. You think you already know." She looked confused a moment. I had her at a momentary disadvantage. "You think life and death are just a coin toss still. Oh I see." I chided her on, limping over.

"No, Denise, my dear daughter, my strawberry honey-comb, my knocked-up, broken, disgraced Jezebel of a daughter. Now I know why my contact set me up in Florida. He found out you were pregnant. So he staged all this, but now he's died. And your mother's died, and I still wish I were dead, and I'm about to kill you. Do you know what time it is?"

And she said, "Dad, it's 11." She said. "Eleven huh?" I asked. "Eleven." She said. "Eleven, you say?" I ask. "Dad, it's eleven!" she said then. "Denise that is it. That is going to be our watch-word. I just told you the secret answer to the mysteries of all the universe. I want you to think back, now, and remember what it was that I'd just said."

"You asked me what time it was," and then I gestured as I moved further forward, closer to her, as she was poised barefoot up against the arm of the white leather couch. I gestured as if to say, "and...?" So she continued, cringing only a little bit, "Dad, it ... it's too complex. You were saying, you were gonna kill me, you wished I was dead, and saying that mom was dead, and that Tom's brother was dead...." and then a light went out behind her eyes, and I could see a flash of reason come over her.

She slips into it. "Denise, I'm your dad, it's me, LeRoy, and I'm here in your mind telling you to know that the pass-word is eleven, and whenever you say the pass-word three times this will happen. You'll fall into a trance like this, and someone will tell you what you need to know. Then they will wake you up by saying eleven three times again. Just like this," and then I said, "eleven, eleven, eleven," and clapped.

"It's not up to you, Dad. I'm one coat-hanger away from the eternal inferno, and where are you? Off in la-la land!" She comes to in mid-rant. I am close enough to her now though to grab her by the wrist. So I do. "Denise!" I yell, "Bob's your Unkle!" and I pull her up to her feet. She actually lunges at me for my balls again. Good girl.

But I don't have time anymore. I'm a doctor with no patience. So I snapped her left wrist just a little bit. Just a green-stick fracture. Her eyes went wide like someone'd spilled coffee in her pupils. She went to scream, but I put my hand over her mouth.

Her eyes lock with mine. She pisses herself with terror and salt water squirts out of her eyes and she can't even grit her teeth against my soft palm because she cannot help but scream. But my hand muffles it. And I meet her eyes with mine. And I think of Daryl, and I show her my war face.

So as she is screaming in helpless pain, she looks into the face of Satan. I assure her then, with my look alone, I am not fucking around. I will not toy with her. She will die quickly if I choose it. I have the power to remand her over at any time to men who have the Right to beat the shit out of her for no reason. She understands that, in my eyes, she can see the inferno already right then.

"Okay, so, enough with breakfast. I've got a better idea. How about I call your home-room sister's mother superior and ask her who your child's father is? Or better yet, let just go down there." I twist her wrist and it is looks so pale I can see her blue little veins. She starts to bite her lip to keep from screaming.

"Or are you going to listen to me now for a change and not just pop bubble-gum?"

She whimpered up at me. So I twisted her wrist more and she barked out and slumped down into her piss puddle on the carpet. Then she hid her face under her hair. So I put her face down in her piss stain and twisted that wrist right to the hilt. So she squealed one last time and then whispered "yes, Daddy." and so I kicked her little butt to the floor and lounged out onto Tom's white leather sofa couch.

"Now first off, you aren't the boss of shit. Second, you'll tell me the baby's father's name eventually, one way or another, and I know you'll do what's right by God too. Third, you're only alive because I want you to be. That could all change any time. You need to learn how to live like this is true all the time too." She was on the floor crumpled up in a pile and I was leaned back in the couch. I was sporting my Addidas and she was halfway out of Tom's (and my) college sweat-shirt, looking like her mom but younger, and now looking hurt and abused, just like the rag-doll of Eeeyore she used to rub her stuff up on when she was twelve. And she looked up at me with wounded doe eyes, all adew with fresh tears, and said, "I hate you!"

"You say that now, dear, but wait till you get to really know me." I kick at her with my foot and roll her over onto her spraint wrist and so she looks at me with fire inside her like a lion, leopard or tiger staring down the hunter's gun. But I had the drop on her now, and so I said then, "Fisher King my ass. If you're the Grail Maiden, then I'm Mordred, Lancelot, and Arthur combined, and I can summon Merlin to kick your ass. Let me tell you who those men were, the ones you'll never forget. They were just Kansas fbi conscripted to delouse you by my contact who is dead now. And I know you must understand what the "occult" is, because Tom's brother was my contact. Now tell me..."

and then it dawned on me. I looked at her then. Denise my daughter. I was torturing her. My own flesh, my own blood, my own child! I'd become that man again. And so I suddenly broke down inside myself, and was letting go and sobbing with tears, but only inside, and I never did let it show. But Denise knew. She knew I knew. She saw me figure it out. She may as well have seen my hair's usual static-electricity pressure-drop and leave my hair flat on top of my head.

"Look," I started, "I'm exhausted. I didn't get any sleep last night. I had bad dreams. Your mother's funeral is scheduled for today at noon. If you don't quit this behavior, we aren't going to make it there on time."

But I'd underestimated my daughter. She meant it. She could have loved me. In the hospital, when she said nothing, and she might have even been lying to me for a good reason when she told me she did or didn't trust me anymore before. But now I saw it. It wasn't the inferno of pain, and it wasn't the run-over cat look. I'd never seen this expression in even our most passionate love making sessions with her mother.

"I HATE YOU!" She screamed at the top of her lungs. "Fuck You!" She screamed, "Fuck Mom! Fuck Uncle Bob, and fuck this baby!" And she started punching herself in the stomach. "And fuck Tom and the fbi, and fuck Navy Seals and fuck, fuck, fuck the CIA! Fuck Bush, fuck Iraq and fuck that bullshit 9-11!!!" She was finally letting it all loose. She could really let her hair down I tell ya. But then, she is a red head.

"God no," I thought at the time, "Don't kill the baby! Do anything but kill the baby!" and the image of the briar patch appeared like a single film frame and then I dove at Denise who was on her knees on the carpet punching herself in the stomach. Her gunshot wound had started to bleed through its stitches too. It was on Tom's sweat-shirt. Good, I thought. Her transfer to the Dark Side is now complete. She's got the taste for blood now, now she has got grit. Good girl.

"Denise!" I yelled as I wrapt my arms round her middle and stood her up on her feet. Butt I'm a couple inches taller than her, so I was actually holding her off the ground. And she was frantic. She really was out of her mind, out of control of her mind, at the time. So I was restraining her, to prevent her harming herself or her baby. And I had got her by the stomach and was holding her up a few inches in the air.

"We're cursed, father," she screams. "We're cursed!" I heave her over to to the couch and lay her out flat across the length of it. I back off and give her a read face and say, "Enough?" and to make sure she stops hitting herself I I reach over to the kitchen counter, grabbed the frying pan and told her if she tried that again I'd put her grits out like a light.

"WHY!?" She sobbed. "Why bother? You don't love me. You weren't there. You didn't protect me then, why would you now? You don't even know me and I am your own daughter, your own "flesh" and "blood"! And you think you care about this baby? You don't care about this baby! You don't even know who its father is!" She curled up like a foetus on the couch and started heaving crying.

Then I remember the trial in heaven. The verdict, it must have come down. "Denise," I said, "my darling daughter, I'm sorry. I'm sorry but I can only say it so many times, and I know it would never be enough anyway. But you should believe it. It's true. I'm sorry for everything Denise." I'd apologised three times. I sighed. She held her quivering breath. Then I said it. "Eleven, eleven, eleven."

Denise sat up onto the white leather couch. In her eyes a light was there, but had dimmed. I remembered the trick about pain tolerance to cause a rush of arenaline. This is the same thing, I thought to myself, it's just a rush of subliminal suggestion being transformed into sub-conscious stimuli. Then I thought of blood and laughed.

"Denise," I told her. "I need you to calm down for me. Blink yes once if you understand me." So she blinked yes. "Are you calm in there, Denise?" I asked her. Blinks once. Good. "Denise, I want you to tell me who the father of your child is."

Denise said my contact's name. And then my worst fears were made true. But then it all made sudden sense. My contact had been handling Jeannie and Denise himself directly via Tom. Tom never had conspired with Teneal. My contact was handling each of them separately. And he pitted us all against each other, and when I came out on top he was trying to play me against my own daughter! He'd said himself, "this order was to be executed" by him. He determined who would be punished in this case, me or Denise, because he had overseen it all all along. So he must have originally told me the formula for HWD as a meme, to spin me into a patsy, again as always later, which is now.

But my mind reeled at the thought of it. He'd shaken my hand on that tech college campus. He'd shot at us as we'd come into the bus. He'd known that it was us. He knew we would shoot back. He set us up. He set us up through Tom. Tom was expecting my contact to have called him when I did. He had answered the phone, I gasped as I grasped the full scope of the panoramic, thinking he was being called from Ground Zero by his brother, my occult contact. But he'd played Tom against me too. All along, he'd promised Tom Jeannie and Denise. And all along, he'd promised me a way out, a better job, but always only depending on whether I ever told anyone about Tom. So I almost told Denise, and now that's why we're in this.

But it was too late. I turned around and saw him standing there before me, not a ghost, not an angel, but standing there in the flesh, dressed like always, and saying to me, "LeRoy.... You don't really believe I died do you?"

"Belief," I gritted my teeth at him, "Is Irrelevant." So I cum up with that revolver out of Tom's bathrobe pocket. And he said, "LeRoy..." and frowned. So I shot him. And the bullet broke the glass French door at the back / front of Tom's duplex apartment. It overlooked a long field all red-taped off with blue-prints posted ready to be developed. Not one spade had yet broken ground. The bullet did no damage, wherever it may have come to rest. But God Bless Him, it failed to kill my contact. "LeRoy, rumors of my death have been greatly exaggerated." He was saying.

So I plugged him one more time, taking careful aim at his head. No one was off in that direction for two hundred yards, so I figured fuck him. No one would come from the gun shot and glass door breaking sounds either. The duplex neighbor was the guy hiring out the contractor to dvelopep the rest of the lots. But he worked a plus weekends job at a law firm running errands for $15 bucks and hour, and that paid for his cocain habbit. There was no one around for nearly a square mile. Tom had taste.

This time the bullet ricochettted around and came back to hit the couch right next to Denise's ear. She was still in trance, she didn't wake up. No one had said "Eleven" three times. But seeing that smoking hole chunked out right next to and so close to my daughter's ear... I couldn't have lived with it happening like that. So I put the piece away. It was only ever meant for show anyway.

Then I got it. My contact's motives. His master-plan. It all came rushing to me in one flash-freezing wave of blood soaking into my whole brain. He'd taught me "belief was irrelevant," so I'd learned "truth was subjective." But that is and isn't entirely true. From my contact's point of view, the truth was only subjective insofar as that would prove belief was irrelevant. It had been Jeannie who'd helped me learn more than he'd taught me. But from my contact's point of view, truth is subjective only to the extent that it is opposite belief, and belief is irrelevant. I knew then. I knew the subjectivity of truth was only a theory for me for a reason. I knew I'd only dreamt it up because Jeannie was trying to save me from my contact all along. But for my contact, it was very real. He was a sociopath, who just did not care.

So, what did I learn then? I had got the key then. All those time's he'd taught me, nudging me along the way, encouraging my "occult" studies, all of his wise guidance, meant absolutely nothing to him aside from as insurance to secure his terrible ambitions in the afterlife. All along he was teaching me that, for someone like him, for whom "truth is subjective," then "belief is irrelevant." But to the masses, belief is all they will ever really know. So they do as they are told, and worship God as they are told. But they are basically good people. But to my contact and people like him, people who are, by the grace of the Pope, rare and few on earth, the same good masses are like laboratory vermin. They are chattle that do not deserve to live. And so I saw the horrible sight. I saw how everyone must look to him. And I saw a world full of menstruum-covered abortions.

"You're right," I sayd then to the ghost. "You got the drop on me good." "LeRoy," said my contact as he paced around me and I paced around him in a circle. "You don't think you can outsmart me do you? Reverse psychology, how mundane."

"No, boss, I mean it," thinking of Daryl I say, "it's over with. You had Tom kill Jeannie. Then you killed Teneal. The Tonkin ploy you'd said. Then you had me kill Tom. And now you're here to tell me the verdict. You've just come down to earth from heaven and you're here to tell me if I'm to be held responsible for your ploy to frame Teneal for your having tricked Tom. It's fratricide that's the real crime. But you set us up all along. And now, just think about it... the only reason I'm even alive still is because you will it. You are keeping us alive for your reasons. I tell you I cannot confront you so long as you have died and I remain alive. But you know that. And that's why you won't kill me."

"There's no use trying to reason with me, Lee Roy. I know all your tricks because I taught them all to you. I've only kept you and Denise alive until the verdict passed. And so it did, just now. Lee Roy, the verdict to come down from on high in heaven is:

To Hell with Both of You." He smiled then at me. It was the first time I'd ever really seen him smile. It was almost melancholy. But there was the twinkle of a secret in his eye. And he knew he was a liar. But I had circled him around away from her.

And I thought about John Right, plunging me into that shitter, and saying, "taste your karma, you white devil! Taste it! Taste what you've done! This is my country! Mine! You had no right to come here and do this to it! How does it feel now, white devil? Can you taste the death in what you've done?" And I remembered how whenever I'd dreamed of that, how I'd always seen Denise then, as an angel, glowing ultra-violet, and as about the age she is right now. But I don't look over at her then.

And then I thought about Daryl Brown, my boss from work. I had bought my own bus, so when I didn't meet standards reports there was nothing he could do about it, and the report writers from the safety and standards board of the city and state couldn't do shit about it either to me at least. They chewed Daryl out, then fined him, which I paid out. Then they were threatening to fire him. I suppose he must have got promoted pretty hard once he'd fired me. And I think about what he said to me, "You don't know what life is Leroy. That's right, Leroy. You run, Leroy. You go be a man."

And then the next thing I thought about was getting between my daughter and her baby and any threat of harm to them. So I stepped between her and my contact. She was still in an alpha-wave state. But all of this would leave a scar. My poor strawberry shortcake was learning to take the thorns with the rose pretty hard now. But she is fifteen and she got pregnant. It's nobody's but my own fault for having had her in the first place, and God Bless the kid I love her so I guess it don't matter.

Then I said to the ghost of my contact. "You first." It was high noon. All of my fellow council-members had died but me. I was the only living member left, but the position came down to either me or Denise. They had all turned into ghosts who couldn't harm me. But my contact had brought the hammer down from God on high.

And God could harm me. But now it was time. If there was a righteous bone in my body, if I'd ever made one safe bet, if I'd never lost faith in His Holiness the Pope, and if my faith was well founded...

I stood up before the ghost. And said, "well, come on then. Strike me down!" But by then it was obvious he could not. It was entirely up to God, and to God alone. At that moment I heard the Pope's voice inside my head. At first he was mumbling some prayers. Then it began to become louder. And then he seemed to notice me there.

I sat down into a pile on the floor. It all came spinning down to me now. I was alone for nearly a mile in the house with my daughter, who was sitting there hypnotically tranquilized there on the couch. I was shooting a gun at the ghost of someone who only I knew the identity of, and who was dead, and who I, argueably, could only see from huffing raw sewage. It all came spinning down then.

I collapsed onto the floor. There was no way to win in the skin. So I would have to go above. And the Pope would be my guardian, keeper of my keys in the gateway. He would weigh my karmic deeds against those of my contact, and then I would ascend to above him, and then I would be the one to judge him.

Denise was tuned off. I writhed around in the floor at the terrible gravity of my fate. I was Lee Roy Jenkem! I didn't deserve this. They'll think I killed Denise and then killed myself. When they find us. They'll use me like a puppet, and that will be the end of it. I'll have ended mine and little Denise's life and aborted the chance for life of her child. They'll find us both dead of gunshots and they'll find my revolver in my hand. And I'll have done it. I honestly will. But it won't have been me. So I resign myself to it. I grit my teeth and get ready.

My arm lifts the revolver. It begins to bend at the elbow. But then a miracle happens. And I mean not an everyday miracle like any of this, but a genuine extra-ordinary, super-natural out of the routine, mundane bullshit Miracle. I drop my gun.

Then everything inverts. I see Denise stand up. She is glowing ultra-violet. Wearing a long white robe all the light around her is being sucked inward toward her, and drawing out the darkest depths of shadows from within everything around her. She walks over to the ghost of my contact. I see he is wearing a reverse-colored robe. I see his robe is pink in the ultra-violet. That means it would be yellow ordinarily.

I sit there, helpless as a hundred twenty pound pile of shit in a fifty-pound bag, and watch as Denise walks over to him, and she is still in trance I realize. I do not know if he is really her baby's father. I do not know anything for sure, because everything I thought I'd known before, including that truth was subjective, has just been revealed to be untrue. So what can I do? Gravity devastates me and I am swept out from underneath myself.

And I can't help it now the Pope is in my head, but it's too late he already knows it.

As Denise reached out toward my contact, my "Go-To Guy," my "Mr. Fixit" and my "inner-Order" mentor, I am swept up into the presence of the Pope, and he begins to explain things to me. He is only in my mind, I knew it then, quite clearly, even more so than I seem to be able to understand it now in memory. But he represents the part of my mind that has always believed on the Power of God on Earth. He is just a messenger speaking between me and God. A simple priest, indeed.

So I am walking with the Pope around inside the Basilica of St. Peter's in the Holy See. He is leading me lightly by the hand. His index finger and thumb are only lightly touching to my right index knuckle, but I feel attached to him with all the power of a selenoid. The energy he is feeding into me is so intense, and yet I am completely calm and at ease. The energy is pulsed, but regularly. It is as if everything is moving at once, including me. I adapt my sea-legs to the quaking.

He is leading me down from the altar. He is leading me the right way around the outside of the Baldacchino columns underneath the massive portico above the altar. He led me around the railing to the gate, and he led me down the stair case leading to the catacombs beneath the altar. We approached the Pallium, the Confessional of St. Paul. To our left there lay the Sepulcrum and the tomb of John Paul the IInd, and to our right lay the grottos and the tomb of Pius the XII. He led me down a short stair case and around the Concessio Pallia niche to the Wall of Constantinian memoria. In front of this lay the crypt altar itself. This was where we finally stopped to pray.

All the while the Pope led me in this hallucination, this conversation directly with a non-existent God, He was conversing with me about the Gospel and morality. By the time he led me to pray at the tomb of St. Peter, the crypt containing his sacred relic bones beneath the veritable gravity-well of the Basilica altar directly above, I was overflowing with Light, and Understanding and Wisdom.

"LeRoy," the Pope said to me, said he, "LeRoy you're probably wondering what it all really MEANS. You always beleived in an Objectively verifiable Truth. But you thought I kept yours hidden for you. You said it was like a bank. A bank of souls. For the Church saves, and Satan tempts us into his betrayals. So you took his bargain as a chance, at the time. You thought it was a gamble, to obey the path you thought you saw laid out before you by me, even though it was a long and crooked road. But you believed I'd sent you the Plenary Indulgence. You believed in my rewarding your mission. So you have brought before me this evidence, in session, about how Tom and Teneal betrayed you. And then about how Jeannie had died unjustly. And then about how you had accidentally shot your own contact. And now you come to me and say, it was all the fault of your contact and that he is all to blame. LeRoy," the angel of pure light said to me, "I do not care. I have got more important things to do than listen to you complain. I'm the Father of the Mother Church of Christ the Crowned and Conquering Child. To me there is no mystery. To me there is nothing left unknown. And to me there is no error in my judgement, and to me there is nothing wrong. I understand God's plan, Le Roy. Do you understand?" And I nodded in reverent awe that yes I understood. He nodded as he looked back away. "Good," he went on, "Because I want you to really understand what I'm about to tell you LeRoy.

"All this while you have been loyal to me. and as you know, that is why I am here. Now, LeRoy, you KNOW this now. You do not NEED to believe in it. Because now you are experiencing it with all your senses, and you understand how and why this is all happening, and to you all of this is completely real and in no way imaginary. I just want you to know, just so you know, that I know that you know what you now know. Because I am here too. As per your request. But Le Roy, oh, little lost Le Roy. My wayward soldier.

"I will now tell you the truth. Heavy hangs the head who wears the crown. Because, no matter who is appointed to wear it, and regardless of by whom they are appointed to do so, once they have set the Holy Diadem atop their crowns, then they know, as you know now, LeRoy; only whereas you know next to nothing, they know all there is to know. And many good men have turned bad on crowning. And many bad men have turned good. But the crown only makes us like we already are only moreso. It is only an oculus to the heaven beyond. It is an lens for looking into death.

"LeRoy, I'm going to confess something now. I'm going to make a confession to you, LeRoy. How does that make you feel? The Pope of your own faith making his confession to you, a meager Jesuit soldier. But I will. I am only a priest, and I try to be a Good Shepherd. But my flock is very large, and needless to say I have alot on my mind. So along time ago, I started to delegate. And by now, LeRoy, you can see this has worked quite well. But LeRoy, even though I wear the crooked crown of Christ, I am only one man. And like any one man, I have certain thoughts in the back of my mind that I have to keep forcing down too. These urges and repressions cause a certain level of distraction in my mind, and they then arise within the ranks of all those under me as certain whispered gossip and rumors, and ultimately we will have people fighting wars over these things. Now John Paul the IIInd was gay.

"But you, LeRoy, you seem like a real straight arrow. So I'm going to come right to the point of it for you, Bob. It seems as though you see the Church as like the bankers of God, and as such a false idol, representing the fallen nature of our souls by causing the masses to blindly obey. But you say the God of the church is valid from the point of view of man, even though from the point of view of God, the Pope would appear to be Satan himself. You say evil is necessary for good to triumph. So you must understand who I really am, then."

And so then he stops and we are at the altar and then he turns away from me and kneels down in prayer upon the sepulchre of St. Peter's skeleton, beneath all that weight bearing down on us from the Bascillica and the portico over the altar above, and before the altar to the emperor Constantine on the reverse side of the Confessional of St. Paul. The Pope is intoning prayers. I can hear his voice whipsering them in my mind. Some of them are in latin, others in other European languages.

He is speaking the Language of Angels, listening for the Word of God. Nostradamus knew this tongue. And I was hearing it now.

And then I looked up at the memorial to Constantine, and as my eyes phased out over it, it slowly shifted away like an etch-a-sketch of magnetic sand. In its place I saw Denise standing in the middle of the room. She was wearing Tom's sweat shirt and some short-shorts and was talking to an invisible figure in the middle of the room. I caught sight of the clock on the microwave in the kitchen. It was 1:23 PM. I remember that exactly. It was one twelve hour half-day since I'd been brought into Council. Then I knew it. Denise and I were both still alive. My contact had been sent to Hell by Denise while she was still in trance. Now, instead of me and Denise competing for one place on the Council, my contact was removed from his seat, and so Denise and I were both to be raised. I understood then. My faith was well founded, which means that, underneath it all, only one who brought with them Light would be able to find it, but that it would still be there, but buried and concealed.

So then I knew, and I understood, that wisdom was to be continue to be kept me from me. I would exist in perdition buried deep in a dimly-lit cavern of unknowing. I felt everything coming back to me then, and it all began sinking in. So I said, "Eleven, Eleven, Eleven" and woke up Denise and told her, "honey we are late for mom's funeral," and she said, "well you're the one whose just been standing around with a dumb look on your face, Dad! Let's go!" And out the door we went.

And we drove in my school bus to the graveyard. It was a quiet, cloudy, overcast day. It was supposed to rain, they said on the radio station on the bus before I turned it off. We drove to the funeral in silence. They never had yet found the head. They suspect it will be found in the trophy collection of a serial killer whose buff on his insider-trivia. But I guess it doesn't matter, because I've still got alot of pictures, and alot of videoe tapes, and so it will always be there, that sweetness, that sweetness, it will always be there. As long as I keep hope alive.

So we got to the bone yard but it was too late. They'd lowered the casket, they'd tossed in the flowers and a handful of dirt. It was a very lovely ceremony, the asst. funeral director told us. Denise and I looked at each other. Denise went over to the grave. It was all performed according to the traditions of the LDS Church, she was saying, and they'd had a reverend Mormon minister come, and two young missionaries, pastor Gill and Sainted pastor Young, had gotten up before the mass and done testimony of how great Mrs. Jeannie Jenkem was for her church, and for her community, and for all the blessed people of Christ Jesus in all the lands of the Lord our God. Of course, she was butchering the terminology, but I got the drift.

I walked over and up behind Jeannie. I put my arm around her and said, "I'm sorry kid." And she was there in her Catholic school uniform, and I was there in my skatted on addidas that I'd left soaking in the sink for too long before drying for not long enough. And then it started raining.

The lady from the parlor came up to us with a golf umbrella, and so we stood there over the open grave of Jeannie's literally Sainted mother and I told her I'd seen the Pope. She cracked a smile. "Oh? When? Just now?" She said and looked at me askancely. So I said, "if there's one thing you'll need to know about being a Jenkem, shortcake, it's this," and then I farted very loudly and it echoed off the hills.

On the bus-ride home we didn't say shit. I ran the wipers at slow speed. I stayed under the speed limit. It was uneventful. And by then it was Saturday, in the evening, and Denise would have to go to service early tomorrow, ie. at six AM, on account of her mother having died and needing to make all the appropriate arrnagements for the Ministers presiding that day to make the appropriate announcements before the communion and so forth.

So Denise went to bed after we ate dinner from Tom's refrigerator. She walked up the stairs and down the hall and into her room and closed the door and didn't say nothing about anything that happened at all that day to me, herself, or no one. I watched the phone screen, it never lit up, she didn't even make any calls. So I stayed up for a little while and then fell asleep logged onto myspace having already typed out most of this blog.

But then at 1:23 AM I woke up. Denise was walking down the stairs. Up above at the top it was all dark. I couldn't see the ceiling. I realized all the light there was was coming from my laptop screen. And it was pulled most of the way closed. So I flipped it the rest of the way open and I called out my daughter's name. It was 1:23AM Sunday morning. I was worried about Denise being up so early. So I called out to her and said, "Denise? Denise is that you?"

She came up to me in the blue light and sat down next to me on the white couch. She looked over to me, and her eyes were closed. I knew that she was in a trance. She was sleep-walking. Now someone else would talk through her to me. It always was this way. They use our dead as vessels. It was how my contact contacted me.

So I sat down next to my red haired daughter sitting there next to me on the white leather sofa couch, and in the blue light of the computer screen, I watched her open her eyes. But because the light was so dim, I could not tell at first it had happened.

"Denise? Honey? Are you in a trance?" I gulped as I shrank back against the padded sofa arm. "Are you even in there? Are you a ghost? Is this a dream? Whose dream is this? where am I? But this last question distorted on my lips and to my ears it came out sounding like I'd said, "how am I?" instead.

"Fine." A voice came from below and behind me. "I'm doing just fine too, LeRoy. Thanks for fucking asking." I turn around and behold the land-crab. I was looking at a somewhat oversized fiddler crab. He was just standing there, and his antennae were quivering, and then I saw that his unreadable eyes were watching me. "Christ." It says after a little while. "Not even so much as a how-dee-do? Well, that's a fine way to say screw you too I guess." And he scuttles over onto the coffee table.

"I'm gonna be your new contact, LeRoy Ole Boy, so you'd better get used to the fact that I'm a crab PDQ and I ain't hardly bullshitting you." What the fuck, now my "psyche," or shard of the One God, had conjured up a land crab to bust my balls. And it was doing a fine job. I'd like to have shot at it to see if it could dodge bullets.

"You should know, LeRoy." it continued to chatter away to me as if I Even CARED! "LeRoy, first off let me say, on behalf of all of us in MIB, we apologies for your last contact's conduct while in office. It is completely and utterly reprehensible, and most unbecoming in an officer so highly decorated with such prestigious awards. We have got your wife's head safe and sound, LeRoy Ole Boy, so just you get some sleep on that count. Oh, and LeRoy." The land-crab said to me. "You're having a nightmare." And then it lept at my face.

And I screamed and woke up and it was 6:43 AM and Denise had gone into her church on her bike already and hadn't even wakened me up. She had missed the informal Wednesday night youth group gathering for her church on Wednesday on account of that day she told me she was pregnant and her mother was decapitated, for which reasons she had also ditched school, and apparently the missionaries in her youth group were not so understanding about such things as the Mother Superior, so she went in early today to make amends. "Apparently a good story could turn a frown upside down," she'd told me once. I'd replied, "that sounds like good advice, if you've got shit for brains."

I'd nearly had a heart-attack when I woke up and I checked my whole body naked in front of the hallway mirror on the outside of the bathroom door and looked in every nook and cranny for any anomalies, such as any hard new lumps under my skin, or any recent paper cuts or vaccine burns. The ones that came in the triangle like the triple-shot gun they use to inoculate kids from measles mumps and rubeolla all at once is an indicative symbol when all of a sudden it appears on the arm of a 54 year old man who'd never had no such shot before in his whole life. But there wasn't none, and so I ironed one of my suits I'd trekked with to Detroit that I'd carried it wadded up in my back-pack all that time. And then I went down town.

The sun was out. It was finally a really clear, and crisp and beautiful day. I almost had the spring in my step of a younger man. But I turned my measured paces to the big old catholic church in the middle of downtown. And as I am two blocks off I hear the bells start to chime. They are calling me home, my brain teased my heart. Jenkem, the bell it tolls for thee.

I walked right up and past the display rack of brochures for upcoming charity events and about ongoing fund-raising drives. I walked into the vestibule, and I almost walked right out again. But I forced myself to go into the inner-doors. I walked over by the cistern of Holy Water, and I walked over by the racks of prayer-candles. At the cistern I wet the tips of my fingers, genuflect myself, and then touch my fingers to my lips. At the candles I think of Denise's face and light the wick. I place it on the rack beside a candle marked with a small Madonna. I am about to walk out. I felt like falling down in the middle aisle onto one knee, or even onto both, and shouting out the line from the Jesuit oath:

"I will spare neither age, nor sex, nor condition, and I will hang, burn, waste, boil, flay, strangle and bury alive these infamous heretics! I will rip out the stomachs and the wombs of their women, and crush their infants' heads against the walls in order to annihilate their excretory race."

And then cry, "Father, why have you forsaken me?" and blow my own goddamned brains out right there at the inner-doorway in from the outer-vestibule. And a man walks past me and says, "Oh I'm sorry, were you going in?" And I am standing there like a kid out front of a candy store, and I said to him, "no, pardon me." and so he walked in past me. But I kept standing at the door looking in as it closed behind him.

But I didn't do that. I stood for a moment and thought to myself, "my what a fine suit I'm wearing," instead and then left. I'd pilfered some change from the tithing platter by the vestibule door. Note to deacons. Never put your alms up front. People will pilfer from you. LeRoy's rules for life, rule number one right there.

So I bought a bratwurst from a cart and a newspaper from a machine and I was sitting in a park down town eating my bratwurst and reading my newspaper and those church bells chimed noon.

I fed the pigeons some of the bread crumbs and poppy seeds off my crust. Then I caught a bus back to Tom's side of town. I had to hoof it back to the house. This was all on Sunday by no later than 12:45 PM. It definitely wasn't one o'clock yet.

I was finishing writing the blog and I'd gotten up to 1:23 last night when Denise came in. I jumped. "What are you doing, Dad? Downloading porn? Hacking Bush?" She smiled at me and I remembered her mother. She told me she'd read my blog at school, but it was alright, she told me, she hadn't shown it to anyone else.

I said I was working on another. So she left me alone and I typed up until I got to the church. Then it was late, so I went to sleep, this time in Tom's bed. I'd sequestered his property for personal inventorying and priority investigation by my department when I'd mailed in my forms. So it was all legit. And since he wasn't ever going to get to again, I may as well at least enjoy his nice stuff for him while I still can.

And I found his cocaine stash too. "So," like they say in Garden State, "there's that." I woke up and I hadn't finished writing out the blog. But at nine twenty five AM the phone rang. Denise had caught her bus to school all ready, and I was pissing vinegar when I got untangled from those covers. So I answer the phone and say, "Tom is dead, This is LeRoy. Leave a message." (I actually mispronounced message.) A chipper young little gold-bricker was chirping at me like a bird over the receiver. So I put the phone to my non-busted out ear.

Best survey Ever!!!!

1. Do you find yourself standing in the hallway going, "Where the fuck am I?" honestly? Frequently.

2. Are you fucking retarded? misdiagnosed.

3. Do you hang out in the road when you're bored?
I used to lie down in it. I live on a one-way dead-end street. Named after my home-town too. Some retarded kids just ran by from the school-bus. Wait, what was the question? Where the fuck am I?

4. Do you go out and buy black lawn chairs then go home and spray paint them white?
I honestly try to go out as little as I have to.

5. Have you ever given someone a flat basketball for christmas?
My dad asked me to help him carry some stuff to his trunk once. I opened the trunk and saw my x-mas present in there. So he didn't give me a present at all that year.

6. Instead of giving you presents did Santa just beat you?
well, if by "Santa" you mean my dad, and if by "beat" you could include at chess, then yes, year-round.

7. Have you ever ordered a vegan pizza and asked for sausage as a topping?
what, like a mystic pizza from the star-system Vega?

8. What year were you born?
I hatched out of the Matrix in 1977.

9. Are you still fucking retarded?
since when was I ever retarded?

10. If you were given $8.00 would you blow it or use it to help world hunger?
I dunno. $8.00 is a lot of money. Can I choose to do both? ...Hello?

11. Do you realize this is a bullshit survey?
You mean this whole beauty contest was phoney!?

12. Good.
Ultimately? Evil.

13. Do you think Satan really lives in Las Vegas?
Let's hope not, my ex- is going there soon for her birthday. Oh but wait. She's an ex-Satan-worshipper slash Goth and an atheist. I just hope she doesn't get caught doing the "time-warp" and end up taking the wrong root. God knows only winners end up in LV.

14. Do you think you could kick Stephen Hawking's ass?
At QM but not at chess.

15. Better in drag, Wesley Wills or Vanilla Ice?
man, fuck that shit! Dressing up like a girl is for women. Besides, Vanilla Ice had that Kool-Aid Moe-Dee and the Gang haircut, and Wesley Willis looked like Mike Tyson's videogame avatar just got his ear boxed off by Bat-Man. So neither. No only pretty-boys look good in skirts. Like Curt Cobain, and William Burroughs.

16. Should you stop this stupid shit and go your ass to bed?
yeah, but I just woke up from being asleep for 48 hours, so I can't.

17. Do you see dead people?
No, I've only dated one or two chicks, and they ain't dead... yet. All me ex's DO, literally, live in Texas, but it is a big state. So is confusion, but whatev. What was the question? Oh, yeah... dead people. Well, there's a couple ways to look at that. I mean, how do we define death. It's different for everyone. So I'd say, everyone we see alive now is already as good as dead, and so are we ourselves, if we take a long-view on it. So, I'd say I BELIEVE we are all the living-dead already, but I don't SEE our flesh rotting off any faces yet, so I guess I don't technically fit the bill here. Sorry, mr. centurion-officer, I guess it turns out I didn't do it. Well, good luck findin the guy. Ass-Hole.

18. When you go to the bank, do you put on your Soviet- era gas-mask?
Okay, seriously. A) I don't go to the bank. I don't believe in all that shit. Money is a lie. If I gave you a picture of a dollar I'd drawn would that count as "legal tender"? Yet the fed (an NGO, btw) prints our money and the president takes our currency off the precious metals market. It's all imaginary debt, it's all a house of cards, it'll all inherit the wind. It comes from our leaders treating us like children. On the one hand, we're robbing Peter (faith) and on the other paying Paul (evangelism), but we're told "Justice is blind." No, seriously though. Fuck a bank. Fuck diebold brand ATMs, fuck a rubber check, and especially fuck plastic cash. It's all based on a lie. and B) I don't own one.

19. Does outer space really smell like popcorn?
When you have to go inside a stadium-seating theatre and watch that shit on a domed screen because air and light pollution prevents you from being able to see the night sky, then yes.

20. This is your last chance. are you still fucking retarded?
No, but while we're on the subject, this statement is false.

21. Shit.
That's right! You got all Jenked up!

Repost and gnomes will come to your house and give you free organic toothpaste!!!!!!

to those gnomes who feel that they can attack us there, I say... bring em on.

"Oh, pardon me, brother." And I looked up at him and saw he was a priest. "But Father, why do you call me brother? Am I not your son?" He took me by my hand and, giving me a secret handshake turned my hand around in his in order to get a better examination of my ring. "I call you brother, cousin, because I have one, and I see that Bob is Your Unkle Too, and so I know you know there's always help for a fellow Widow's Son." I step back and I sized him up.

"Brother you are one fine looking piece of turkey looking jerky. I guess your mama brought your ass up backwards, huh? I don't even know what your face looks like I'd have to ask someone standing behind ya. You're butts stickin out ya neck and you got a face groin out ya ass. What's that make you?" And I pause so I see people looking around and over at me. The radar was on. The heat had been triggered. I'd been made by a plant. Now I needed to get out and fast. But he'd under-estimated me and come in too quick. So I made him as soon as he'd drawn breath in on which to say, "oh." And he had no idea what he'd gotten himself in for.

He still had ahold of me by the hand. He was using a basic Mason's grip. That's why he'd tried to make me. He mistook my ring for a Masonic ring. Most people do.

So I had called some undue attention to myself by insulting the padre very loudly within ear-shot of half of his deathly loyal congregation of old grand mothers, innocent teens and yuppie scum. And when old grand-mothers, innocent teens and yuppie scum catch wind of some tall talking going down, they tend to start to chatter. So I pry my right hand loose from his right hand with my left hand then I unzip and out drops my dick in front of the smarty-pants do-goody two-shoes little choir boy snitch bitch and everyone who counts sheep every night to get to sleep by imagining him on a picnic with their kids. And I say, "I asked you, if you gotta butt for a face and a face for a butt what that makes ya!?" And now everyone is looking so I drop the line and then prepare to pass some fast gas in my pants and dip out.

"You're garbage in and garbage out, with mouth for ass and ass for mouth, a frightening clown in a scary ghost town, just passing through trading lies for truths, and I'm just a mirror of your true inner self." I let fly with the fart and squirted some piss. Then I broke for the door.

The vestibule was crowded, I made it to the door, but got bottlenecked by people on the steps outside who'd heard what I'd said but hadn't seen who said it and were trying to push forward throguh the doors to get inside and get a look at the perpetrator.

It's as I'm pushing through the doorway that I met the Irish cop and his colored partner. "Oh a fairie?" Says the lephrechaun. "Making fun of a priest." concludes his muscular badge-buddy. I'd tucked my dick back into my pants, but I still felt a breeze. Come to find out, it was my fly that was down, and I never did get my shit tucked all the way away again.

and a priest had heard what had been said and so he came over to me. It was actually very difficult because it was quite busy, he was very popular, and alot of the parishioners wanted to shake his hand on their way in. But I was oblivious to all this. I watched as the chapel pews were filling up for the morning mass in latin. I sighed and turned to go and walked into the priest and he said to me, he said, said he,

"You look like someone with alot on your mind." And I met his eyes and he met mine. And then he said, "why don't you come inside?" And I saw that he noticed my ring. Then he gestured for me to follow him away from the crowd down a hallway passt the votive candle racks. So I looked him up and down, and saw he was wearin jeans under his priest smocks and I saw he had in his hand a bible and on his head a Hebrew rabbi's skull cap. His rosary beads were dangling out of his belt.

So I followed him in to the confessional booths and we went in.

"Father, please forgive me. I have sinned. It has been seventeen years since my last confession, and I have sinned many more times and committed much worse crimes than you or I or the Pope or Jesus or God Himself has time for. I just want to say to you, God," and I slump back in the flat wooden bench in the narrow booth, "that I am still your loyal servant, even though even now I cannot even say my own name." Then I rushed out, and went bustling down the hallway as the young priest opened his side of the dutch door, and as he stuck his head out to look down the hallway after me, I'd crossed through the vestibule and was out onto the front steps.

Then it was about to be noon so I bought a bratwurst with some change I'd pilfered from the tithing plate by the front door. Note to deacons. Never put your alms up front. People will pilfer from you. LeRoy's rules for life, rule number one right there. So I bought a bratwurst and a newspaper and took a bus a couple blocks uptown to see a movie. I saw the billboards instead, telling me there weren't any goddamn good sounding movies out I wanted to see right now. So I was walking away from the theatre.

I was standing there, in the middle of town. For some reason my mind flashed onto the face of my ex-boss Daryl again, and I heard his voice shout at me, "White Devil" and then the noon time church bells rang.

But I am walking up to and past my unflinching contact and over to the nook under the stairs behind the tv. And I reach around behind the tv and open the trim, and I pull out Tom's little baggie of cocaine. I walk over to the kitchen, again past my contact, who was turned around to stay facing me. I walked up to Tom at the cake on the kitchen counter, holding the knife. He was flinching pretty damn badly already by then. But I walked up to him and Slapped the sac across his face, and then dropped it onto the cake and it spilled across the counter. It was all over his face, the cake, the counter, and, as Jeannie walked back in the door letting the wind in from outside, it blew all over the kitchen.

"Lee Roy!" my contact yelled. So I stood up. I'd been leaning down over the counter, about to snort up some of the coke on the counter. I stood up with a dazed look in my eyes, "What?" I said. "You'll get your turn." And then he turned around to see Jeannie. "Jesus Christ!!" Jeannie yelled. "Tom, you told me you quit that shit!" And then Tom dropped the knife on the floor and it clattered. Jeannie stormed into the kitchen behind the divider so that my contact had lost sight of her as he turned to watch the wall, and so he had his left hand side turned toward me. Jeannie come up behind Tom in the kitchen, was stooping down, picked up the knife. God Bless it.

"It ain't mine," Tom stammered. "It's Lee Roy's." So then my wife looked at me. "Jeannie," I said. "Put down that knife." I saw Tom's eyes. I saw he saw me see them. Then I saw the mistake he realised he'd made. And then I saw him rationalizing. He was trying to figure it all out. But he couldn't. He didn't have enough info. So he was panicking. He didn't even look to his brother. He should have. I did though, he was panicking too. But I only broke eye contact from Tom after he'd broken eye contact from me. I knew it was already too late for him. The counter was four feet off the ground. It was between me and him. I couldn't have stopped him. I really cound't have. As God is my witness. I couldn't have.

He took away the knife from Jeannie and grabbed her in a sleeper hold and put th knife up to her throat. My contact was behind me, pissing himself, and I was behind that counter. And Tom was standing behind Jeannie. "Strawberry," I said, loud enough for my contact to hear me. And I reached into the bathrobe's pockets with both hands and felt my fists wrap around their handles, my fingers slide around their triggers, and I felt my arm muscles pulling them up fast. Then I did the time-warp dance from Rocky Horror. I moved around the counter and out of the line of fire between my contact and his brother. And I had my guns out both cocked. One of them I had pointed at my contact, and the other one at Tom.

"LeRoy, Don't!" Jeannie screamed. Then Tom sunk the knife into her ilky throat. I seen my love's blood squirt then all across my daughter's fifteenth birthday strawberry shortcake. It was horrifying. "Lee Roy, no!" My contact yelled. "Stop LeRoy Stop!" Tom chimed in loudly enough, I realized then, to alert his neighbor. And then I realized, I couldn't pull the trigger. Everyone of us then was from the past, except for me. I was the only one left then, I realized, who might not walk out of there alive. But it all hinged on who knew later, which was the pass for me. So I thought back, as I had one eye on my contact, and the other on Tom as he was cutting Jeannie's whole head off with that butcher knife. And I thought, they cleaned up this apartment pretty nicely. But I didn't think quick enough, and Tom had already sliced through Jeannie's spine.

He threw Jeannie's head at me. The expression on her face was one of indescribable horror. I caught her by her strawberry blonde red hair in my left hand. My gun dropped from my hand then. But my right still aimed at my contact. Then Tom's neighbor came busting in through Tom's main door. He'd heard the ruckus. He saw the sight. He saw me holding Jeannie's severed head with my gun out. And the blood rushed clean out of him. Then I shot him in the stomach in cold blood.

He'd never been out over the weekend. He'd been dead. He'd never seen the apartment after Tom died, because he'd been dead.

My contact had turned to look at Tom's neighbor. Then his hand flew out behind his back as he was looking away still, he smacked my gun out of my hand behind him.

Up came his foot in my face as he spun around. He kicked me back up against the tv, but I caught myself before falling into it. Tom threw the knife at me. All of this was happening at the same time. So Tom threw the knife, then his brother kicked me, then I stumbled backwards. Tom threw the knife at my head, but then his brother kicked that away, and that was when Tom's blade had come to cut across his brother's foot. And I come too from stumbling backwards and I see my contact's foot out right in front of my face, and I come to see Tom's butcher knife come across it.

So I answer the phone and say, "Tom is dead, This is LeRoy. Leave a massage." (I actually mispronounced message.) Then I said "beep." A chipper young little gold-bricker was chirping at me like a bird over the receiver. So I put the phone to my right ear and put my thumb into my busted out ear so it would quit ringing.

She thought she was leaving a message. She said, "Mr. Jenkem," (and that's how I knew it was serious!) "Mr. Jenkem, I'm Kathleen with city waste management. I was given your contact information by someone from the FBI? Yes. So I am calling you to let you know that your residence... well, ex-residence now I take it... is being condemned. Now, there's no fees or fines to worry about in this case, Mr. Jenkem, that's all been taken care of. I'm not calling to impose any penalties. I was just told to call you to let you know not to worry about anything and that your Uncle Bob is out of surgery now. So if you need to get through to me, my number is..." and she told me her number. So I said, "Hello, Kathleen?" and so she said, "Hello, Mr. Jenkem? Hello?" and I repeated her phone number to her backwards, and she went straight to an interface protocol menu. "Voice recognition." She said. So I said "COUGH COUGH, this is your Ole Pal LeRoy calling in." And she said, "One moment while I reconnect you." God Bless these modern agents. They initiate them even before hiring age these days. But you gotta hand it to them. I mean, just look around. You'll never see one sign of anything weird. But sneak around, be a spook, snoop up. Investigate absolutely ANYTHING for just a little, and you'll see. It gets pretty fucked up pretty damn quick.

"LeRoy!!" an already all-too familiar voice said. "Where've you been all my life!?"

"On hold. Now do I come in or not? When's fine?"

"Well, we were hoping to see you bright eyed and bushy tailed, LeRoy. You're a man after my own heart after all. Now look, I'm golfing on Jupiter until 11:30. I'm calling you because if you leave now, you will get by car to where I can be at noon by plane. So what do you say, LeRoy? Does that math work okay with you, or do we need to schedule another lunch window?"

"Where to, then? I need to be back by 5."

"Tsk, Tsk, LeRoy, Ole Boy." he chided me. "We'll have you back any moment now." I hung up on him then.

There was a knock at the door, and I went over in Tom's bathrobe with my guns in both pockets over my single white stripe on red velvet addidas sweat-pants and my undershirt and my cross. I opened the door and it was an agent. He opened the car door and I got in. We drove off. Simple.

Inside the mirror-windowed Buick it was not the same as an ordinary Buick of the same exterior make and model. I mean, it was nothing fancy. Not like in tv movies. But outside it was a normal looking car but inside a stretched limo. The interior of the cabin was all white. So I lounged out on the car-length leather sofa seat and poured myself a bourbon.

My new contact wasn't bullshitting me either. It took two hours one-way to get out to their farm out in the country. We took the interstate for thirty minutes, then got off four exits down from the last one nearest town. We went onto a numbered state road, then made a few left turns, and finally came to a dirt road. By that time it was 11:45. We drove on the dirt road for about ten minutes, and then came upon two things I never thought I'd see without next dying or being killed for doing so.

We'd been driving through solid woods since we took the dirt road, it was trees in every direction for at least three or four miles. And here we come upon this massive clearing immediately, out of nowhere. It was really huge too. Massive, at least 4 and a half or 5 acres. The dirt road came to an end at a paved cross-road. To the right and left there was a one-lane paved road that seemed to follow the outer perimeter of the clearing. Along the further side of this road, was the fence-line. The fence was like any yard fence for a prison. It was about twenty feet, topped with constantine coils, razor-wire chords and inward-pointing barbs. On it was a small sign facing outward that said "US. GOV'T PROPERTY. NO TRESPASSING." There turned out to be one of these little signs about every ten or twenty feet around the entire fence-line. We turned onto the cross-road. The driver stepped on the gas.

I tapped on the glass and asked him what this place was. But no reply. He just sped up. That's when I saw it out the window. The thing looked smooth. It came down from out of the sky and it looked like nothing. It was cloaked. As it come down passt the tree-line above the clearing then I saw it. It was completely glass, like a mirror. It was in a landing cycle, and as I watched it it flew along parallel to us for a moment. We were coming up over the ridge of a knoll. Behind the fence everything had been neon-green astro-turf, like you see on a putting green. As we come up over the little hill though, I see what I had come to see, what I had been brought to see. At the middle of the five acre clearing was a typical military camp. It had small barracks and a miniature excercise yard the size of a McDonald's playground. It had a public latrine with outdoor showers. Behind this and to the left from my vantage was the bunker. It was connected from the side of the yard furthest from the barracks by a gate, guarded from a short turret to one side, which opened onto a lone concrete walkway leading straight across a fifty yard long open area, presumeably mined. At the far end of the long walk through the mine field was another double fence-line, (one separated the latrine / yard / barracks within the camp, another the camp from the surrounding mine fields, and there were gun turrets at every corner of every exterior fence line) like a narrow hallway. Behind the second, inner fence by another five yards was the bunker. It was basic enough. It was a cinder-block and shingle government building, as anonymous an any other. It had tall walls and narrow windows along the tops of them. The ceiling was flat, and there was a proper swastika painted on the top for helicopter landing. "You mother fuckers," I thought. "You could've brought me here by chopper?"

Then the phone inside the limo rang. I answered it and said, "If you'd like to speak to LeRoy press seven." And he answered, "You're late and that's funny. The good news is I just beat you here. The bad news is, I get the smooth ride, and you've got to come down the hard way." Then the son of a bitch hung up on me. "Driver!" I shout to the rolled up window, "there's no more bourbon!" and since the bench seat was on the driver's side, and we were going counter-clockwise around the perimeter, I had to crane my neck to see the land-crab's little toy ufo. He was standing there next to it waving, pretty as a picture. It hovered there invisibly, shimmering like a Nevada desert heat-wave, the poison of the snake-road. And he stood out there in front of it, waving to me. Then their entire quadrant of the lawn evaporated into an open hangar bay, buried under the knoll we'd just ridden down. Then the hangar bay evaporated and the lawn reappeared, but without the ufo. But then I saw why we were speeding.

The road was magnetized, there was a single strip of iron down the center of the single-lane. And contacting to this magnetic strip was a rod like they use on the tops of bumper-cars at the fair. Only instead of connecting to a cute little bumper car, the other end of this rod was connected to a huge humvee, coming right at us.

At the absolute last possible instant prior to impact, the driver swerved. And, for a moment, I was sitting spread-eagle on a white leather sofa watching through a limo window as it jacked out at 60 as a giant drab olive humvee travelling at the same speed, only going clockwise around the perimeter road, came within five or six feet of crushing me flat like a sardine in a long-cut tin-can. But none of this, it turned out, was as it appeared. We had ducked into a parking area through an ungated break in the fence-line. I looked back. I saw no such break in the fence line. As soon as we'd spun out, the driver stopped the car and turned it off. So I got out of the rear cabin of the limo. I looked back. It was an older black Buick with mirror-tinted windows. It wasn't a limo. So how close had I really been to being squashed just then, I wondered. So I looked back. But along the fence in both directions there was no sight nor sound of a Humvee. I tapped on the glass of the driver's side window. No response. So I opened the door. No driver. I stumbled backwards. A tube light started to flicker on, the lone lamp post in the middle of this otherwise empty parking lot. I realized then it was darker. I looked around. Much darker. It had to be at least six or seven in the evening. The trees in the distance were dark and the last of the sunlight was setting over their horizon. The silence was scorchingly frigid.

I was then left standing alone next to a busted up old black Buick with black windows, beneath a flickering, buzzing, fluorescent blue lamp, and I'm sporting my red sweat pants with the solo white-stripe, my undershirt, a bathrobe, two revolvers. A crisp breeze sweeps across the midnight moon-lit field out there in the inky depths of the darkest blackness beyond the dimming glow. Then behind me there was a train horn. I turned around and saw a single bright white circle of light and heard the hissing breaks of an railway engine. I looked down in this new light, more yellow, more warm, and saw my slippered feet standing on its tracks. I went to look up, but it was too late. The train was inches from my face. The horn started to blow.

"Bang," my contact stuck me in the neck with a compression syringe. "You're dead. LeRoy, Welcome to Dreamland. Or the Red Lodge, the End of the Road, the Cross-Roads." I turn around to see him but he has stepped back out of the circle of light into the shadow. I follow his voice as he walks around me clockwise, just outside my visibility halo. "We're not on ANY map now, LeRoy. No map could describe this place, here space is warped into asymptotes and time dilated daily. Once a day. You got here just in time to see it today. That was how I landed. I was coming back down, like I told you. I'd been up there, LeRoy, so I came down. They call it a "Stairway to Heaven." I call it the escalator. It's the easy way down. But you have to take the elevator. They call it, "Jacob's Ladder." Once I am facing away from the lamp post, I see a small light appear about four feet above the ground and about twenty feet off into the darkness. It's an elevator button. I go up to it. It says "down."

So I press the down button and a door of blinding white light opens up in front of me in the limitless darkness. I step through. My eyes recover quickly. The light was not as bright as it seemed at first. But it was too late. There was no floor. So I fell for a while. Actually, looking back on it, I fell for quite a while. In fact, I fell so long I went into free-fall. In other words, I fell into this bottomless emptiness for so long, eventually I was no longer falling, but floating there, stationary, in mid-air. Now to some, this feeling would be very weird. Most people, the first time they experience zero-G, they chuck up their lunch. But I got grit. And a fifteen year old pregnant daughter to protect. So I pulled my revolver and aimed it at my forehead. My slippers immediately came down to rest on a cold marble floor. I saw the great seal of the US on the marble, and then I knew where I was.

"Welcome holme, LeRoy Jenkem. Welcome home." My contact stepped forward. "This isn't...?" I asked, hesitantly. "No, LeRoy, No." he assured me. "LeRoy, this isn't Atlantis. Far from it. This isn't Area 51. Far from it. This isn't the afterlife. Far from it. No, this is now. Heh, well. Basically now. No, today it's going to be last Tuesday evening. You'd forgotten it was Mr. Brown's birthday the next morning. Do you remember now? Then you might also remember it was your ex-wife's last night alive. We know you've seen her since then too. Not only in the appearance of your daughter, either. We don't mean in the flesh. LeRoy..." he trailed off, then looked me deeply in the eye. He said, "LeRoy, I think that you understand me. LeRoy I believe that you know what I mean." And then he smiles at me, and throwing his voice without moving his lips, he says, "Put away your gun here she comes." I duck my piece into the pocket of the robe, but keep it pinned on my new contact just for shits and giggles and I turn to see who he means. It's Jeannie.

She's running up to me from Tom's apartment. She throws her arms around my neck and hugs me. She wears her grandmother's pink poodle sweater. She smells like that fruit shampoo. I am ashamed now, but I buried my nose in that sweet red hair for what felt like ten thousand lifetimes. Good God, how each could now be counted up against me! She ran up and she hugged me, and she whispered in my ear. "Heya, Jankster. I'm glad you're here. Come inside." She is leading me smiling into Tom's apartment. I am the zero card tarot trump. I am Achilles, Icarus, Samael!

Denise is coming down the stairs towards us and she meets us by the city trash bins next to the bushes where Denise parked her bike. "Dad!" she bubbles and bounces up and down, "You made it! Great, now we're all here, we can finally begin." I catch my wife's eyes and she has such a warm, welcoming glow. I gave her a goofy look and let the ladies in my life drag me by each arm up the side steps from Tom's front patio, and across the threshold into Tom's apartment. And standing there, behind the kitchen counter, across the living room from the main door we'd just come through, stood Tom, holding a huge butcher knife. My nerves suddenly kicked in. But Tom was wearing a blue chef's apron, so I didn't panic. I should have. I should have just run out of there then. But who knows? Maybe it's always been best this way. I'll never know.

And Tom smiles at me and says, "Who the Fuck invited Jenkem? This is supposed to be a fifteenth birthday party, and here he shows up with two strippers!" And immediately Jeannie and Denise fall into character, playing the part to the hilt. Jeannie dances over to Tom and turns her ass around toward him and, arching her back, shakes it to an imaginary rhythm, while Tom dances behind her, pretending to be riding a rodeo bull, smacking her jiggling ass loudly while Denise danced in circles pretending to do the twist but instead ending up just spinning in a pirhouette with her skirt blowing up. I see her strawberry shortcake panties. Then I realize what is happening, so I strut into the room busting a move from the "Rocky Horror" movie.

"Work it Jenkem, Go Jenkem, it's your birthday!" Tom was shouting while he was smacking my wife's ass around. So I added to the levity, "Sorry I'm so late, I had to pick up some whores," and at first Jeannie stood up and gasped, and Denise, taking her cue from Jeannie, cover up her ears. Then Tom shouted, "Jenkem, you salty bald dog! These aren't whores! Well," he paused for effect. "They may be sluts," Jeannie playfully slapped at Tom from behind. And Denise inadvertently put her finger to her lip and turned towards Tom. "But these sluts aren't in it for the money!" At first Jeannie says "Woo!" and throws her arms up like a goal-post. Then she acts like she's just "catching on" and then she looks around embarrassed and kinda holds her knees together biting her thumb. Denise turns back to me for a moment, biting her thumb, then looks back to Tom. Tom then hollers loudly, enough, I realized at the time, for the neighbor to hear him say it, "These hoe's are in it for the cake!" And Denise jumped up and down clapping and Jeannie rushed to the kitchen and put fifteen candles into the icing. Denise hugged Tom, then ran over to Jeannie at the counter. Tom came up close to me. I could smell his after-shave. He stared at me until I looked at him. He leaned in and winked. "It's a strawberry short-bread cake." He says. "Have a slice."

So I walked over to my wife and loving daughter as they stood around the unlit candles and offered them my lighter. Jeannie lit the candles up. Then we gathered around the cake and all of us sang "happy birthday to you, happy birthday 2U, happy birthday, Denise Jenkem, happy birthday to you." And she went to blow out her candles, and the door right behind Jeannie and Denise, in the kitchen, that would eventually be the front door once all the other lots were built, but which no one ever used, the one I'd put a bullet through On Saturday, opened and a chill wind blew in and blew out all of Denise's candles. And fifteen candles was aLOT of candles! Did the door blow open? Jeannie was saying.

Then my ex-contact came in. He was taking his hat off when he saw me looking at him and then suddenly got a suprised look on his phace. He cried, "Oh shit! Who invited Jenkem!?" Then he hung up his hat and coat on the hat tree that Tom kept there only for him. "Now it's a PARTY!" he was saying, and he came up to me and went to shake my hand, but as I went to grab his back, he spread his arms open and gave me a broad hug, wrapping his arms around me and patting me on the back. I kept my left hand on my gun. He was patting me down, so I kept my hand on my gun. To let him know. To let him know I knew. That's when he whispered it in my ear. "Tonight is the night LeRoy. Activate go-code six-six-six." Then he backed away and pointed at me. "I'm onto you Jenkem." He was saying, "I could smell your shit from a mile away." Then he turned to Jeannie and added, "I'm hip," and, turning to Denise, concluded, "I know what's up." He stepped back and stood between them and put his arms around them both and winked at me. "I know exactly who you are, and exactly what you are here to do."

"You're a rodeo-clown. And you're here to dance." I don't dance. They all looked at me, but God Help Us ALL! I looked down and didn't do the fucking dance. Then Tom, the "fireman" came to the rescue. "No, what he's here to do is to have a piece of cake. That's why we're all here, right? I know that's why I'm here! So let's cut this mother fucker open and sink our teeth into some fifteenth birthday cake! Happy birthday Daenise, it anly comes but once a year." And so Tom, who' was a tall enough guy, took his gorilla-length arms and kind of hugged everyone in toward the kitchen counter under the one overhead spot-light. The cake was in the middle.

So Jeannie cut up the cake and Denise passed out slices, and she passed the first slice to my old contact via Tom, then one to Tom, then took one herself and put it up to her lips with her hand. "Denise!" Jeannie snapped at her. "Don't forget your father." For a half a second Denise stood there. She was standing in the same spot Jeannie had just been in. She struck the same deer-in-the-headlights pose, clasping her knees together. She looked like she was about to piss down her pale bare thighs. She turned towards my contact. He blinked once. She caught Tom's eyes as she turned to look at me. "You want this one, you old shit-head?" Denise held out her slice of strawberry shortcake to me with her little fifteen year old hand.

They all looked at me until they'd satisfied themselves I was aware I now had egg on my face, then broke out into laughter. Everyone but Jeannie. She was beginning to catch on. She was already sensing I was hiding it, but that something was about to go disastrously wrong. But she had no idea. Nor, for that matter, did I. Denise, who by then was almost pissing herself with laughter, turned back to me and said, "here, take it, you old fool!" and she pretended to be about to creampie me in the face with the cake slice.

"Denise!" Jeannie snapped at her. Denise whipped her head around carefully balancing the cake slice acting like she'd deftly caught it in mid-air. Her hair tips just brushed the cake and I watched as a single follicle caught on it. Jeannie was acting like she was ready to shank Denise across the counter with the butcher blade, and saying "do right or I'll cut your punky little head off." Denise whipped her head back around and her hair blew out the other direction then. "Sorry, dad." She stood up on her tip-toes and kissed me on the lips. "You know I love you." She stepped back down and turned around and gave me a look, and then she noticed the hair on her cake. "Oh," she remarked to herself, "I have a kinky hair on my strawberry shortcake."

I saw Tom inadvertantly shift his weight toward the leg closer to his brother. I had never known they had been brothers. But now I can see the resemblance. Somewhat like Nick Nolte and Gary Busey. But yeah, it's there. My old contact stood there like a fucking rock. His pants legs seemed to have shortened though. Jeannie shot Tom a glance out the corner of her eye so he snorted contemptuously to indicate it was all in good fun. "Denise is just horsing around," my contact said. "Lighten up, LeRoy." He advised me then. It was good advice. I should have taken it. I should have never done what I done next. It never should have happened.

Jeannie handed me some cake and I took the slice in hand and bit into it. It had whole real strawberries in it, I come to find out. Since I bit into one. And I had to suck the whole rest of the out-of-season over-sized mutant genetically betttered fruit into my mouth, along with the cake and icing. And don't get me wrong. It was good cake. Jeannie had probably spent all day making it. But as I was looking down on the strawberry I'd bitten off, obviously too large for me to chew, my stomach suddenly shriveled up like a prune out in the desert. I realised the gravity of the symbolism. So I turned and looked at my contact. And then he looked at my daughter. And then I saw him crack that melancholy smile, and the touch of evil dawned within his eye. But Denise was facing the couch, and had her back to us, and even though she turned to reciprocate with some definate expression, I could not see what face she made back at him.

I understood it all. I'd been here, afterall, already. So I deuced it up pretty quick. My contact was there to play Tom and I against one another. Tom was there stealing my wife and kid, who I'd just found out was an fbi plant. And I was there to find out who'd emptied out my security box. But I was still finding it difficult to care about any of this. I knew what my contact meant. I understand what he'd told me. I could only do this once. It wasn't time yet for the theoretical T-4 alternative I'd heard rumours of once or twice in the halls of Sandia corporate, ie. the shop. I'd always taken it as carefully placed disinformation. Nothing serious. Nothing real. I didn't know what to do. All my gut instincts were telling me, kill them all. You have to! But I couldn't! So instead of biting the strawberry in half while catching the chewed off end with my other hand (which was still on my gun). But I, LeRoy Jenkem, did not do this. Instead I sucked the whole thing into my throat and damn near choked to death. This was due to my training, of course. But it was only just getting warmed up.

I'm choking and I stumble forward into Denise, who, God Bless Her, had her back turned. I'm choking and I stumble forward and I drop the cake out of my right hand as it flies up to my throat. I'm choking and I stumble forward and up comes that left hand without no revolver still attached to the fingers at the end of it. As I stumble into Denise, God Bless the Child! she topples forward onto the couch. She drops her cake in mid-air as she falls, and it ends up squished all over and down the front of her party dress. She is then bent over the sofa, and I have collapsed on top of her. And at first, there is lafter. My contact laughs. Then Tom. Jeannie looks over and my contact looks at her, and then me, and then laughs. Then I see Jeannie laugh, and I know just how fucked I am.

"Get offa me, get the fuck up, seriously? Get the fuck up offa me, Dad, God Damn!" And Jeannie paused from laughing to say, "Denise! No Cursing!" and wag that blade at her again. As I stand up

I see that my own slice of cake had fallen between me and my daughter. It must have landed on her rump right as her face hit the sofa, because her dress was bunched up to the north of where the cake had landed. As for me, well, the cake had landed on her hips, and I'd pretty much fallen into a spooning position over top of her, and so the cake ended up getting crushed between her hips and mine. The icing was spread out all over my groin. And then the cake dropped. It had literally clung directly to her crotch. Then it slumped off and fell to the carpet. Denise looked over her shoulder before standing up, and as I stood erect, I looked down at my Mormon / Catholic daughter, spread open like the Mystery Babalon, and could do nothing.

"Oh My God!" Denise screamed. "Don't look at me! Nobody look at me!" But it was too late for anything like that. Tom and his brother were both stroking their clean cake plates impulsively, and my contact was undressing my wife with his eyes. "Oh fuck me, fuck me, fuck me" Denise was mumbling as she rubbed the cake off of her panties. Some strawberries were dripping down her milky thighs. I looked around again. Tom's plate was sagging low in his limp hand as he openly gaped at the spectacle before him. He was aghast. It was like watching a car accident. You couldn't bear to see it, but you couldn't let yourself miss one thing. But Jeannie was looking at my contact, and my contact was licking his lips. And Jeannie started to lick her lips. I was trying to catch her gaze with mine. But I could not. She was under. My contact was controlling her with his mind now. She started to lick her lips.

"Christ Dad," Denise stands up to me, "you must be in la-la land, you clumsy old shit for brains! I can't trust you long enough to turn my back on you for one second. I'm ashamed to be a Jenkem when I'm around you, Dad. And seriously? You smell like feet. Ugh!" So she had dusted most of the cake crumbs out of her butt crack with one hand and the rest off of her party blouse with the other while she talked. She looked up and around the room, but she had to look over my shoulder. I can't say what she saw then. But she looked at me at last and her ugly little brown eyes were welling up with tears. "Mom." She said to Jeannie behind me. "I'm borrowing the fucking car. Call me on my jelly if you need me." and she snatched the keys off Jeannie's purse next to the main door and stormed out before I could stop her.

Then I turned around. I took note it was then exactly 9PM. I could feel myself elsewhere pressing return and posting the first chemical analysis of the effects (of using HWD) as a blog on the Myspace page. So I blinked as I was turning, and as I faced them fully, I finally opened my eyes. The entire lot of them were nothing but demons. I saw that much before my eyes were even partially open.

Jeannie was looking with a look of abject desperation after Denise. She looked at Tom and said, "Should I go after her?" But then my contact said "No. We need you here." She cocked her head at him. She had gotten dropped out from under when Denise had told her she was taking the car, but she was still feeling really buzzed, I could tell. "I want Lee Roy here too see what we're going to do next."

He walked over to me and I had just stood there. I was screaming inside, "Jesus, Jeannie, take off after Denise! She needs somebody right now, and that ain't me. You ought to go put your arm up around that daughter of ours and go study out of the Book of Kings, or else of Acts. But Jeannie, Please, God! Don't let this happen." I didn't want it to have happened like this. Understanding was beginning to dawn on me like the yoke of that invisible egg all over me then. No redemption. No way back but now it would be an endless cycle like this forever and it was already too late. I wanted to go for the knife so badly. My grit rose up into my craw and turned to that same old bloody cud puddle of bile under my tongue. "Have you read any Crowley?" my contact whispered into my left ear. I wanted to puke.

Outside Denise was only just then cutting on the car's engine. She was only fifteen and didn't know how to drive yet. The sound of the engine came to jolt me out of it. I look over at Jeannie, and as my contact crept up on me, he'd sent his creepy brother creeping up towards my ex-wife. But this time I do catch Jeannie's eyes. I blink twice. She nods inadvertantly then looks at Tom. My contact seen me do it. He whips his head at Tom and Jeannie. Jeannie then says to Tom, says she, "Wait. It's her birthday." We heard Jeannie outside start to back the car up. She'd have to three-point turn parked between Tom's truck and whatever car my contact came in. I wondered if my bus was out there too?

I side-stepped backward around the couch away from my contact. As Jeannie approached the main door from the kitchen, I caught up with her by the foot of the staircase. I clothelined her almost drawing her in close to me, then whispered in her ear, "hey. I love you. Blink once if you understand." She blinked up at me. Her eyes were like two cities in Oz! "Go tell Denise go to a friend's and lay low till morning then come find me at my hovel." I let her go, for one last time, but as she opened the door I shouted after her. "And Jeannie? Tell Denise that Bob's her unkle now. Tell her Bob's her unkle." Then Jeannie hoofed off after Denise.

I turned back around to see Tom in the kitchen behind the counter with the cake holding the knife and looking at me. I noticed then he'd taken off his blue apron. He'd cooked that cake. Closer to me, but just around the awkward arm of the couch in the middle of Tom's damn living room, was standing my contact, who I'd been meant that night to first find out that he was Tom's brother. And Tom was fbi. And my contact had put Tom and I up for the same job, at DHS. But no one knew that. Instead of being able to say anything about any of it, instead I was forced to act a fool until I got my daughter off the scene. But now I knew it was too late. Denise had just seen Jeannie for the final time. My training was just beginning to kick in. And I knew something they did not. The "secret answer to the mysteries of the universe."

I knew then. I had it all figured out. My contact was there too. He'd been prommoted. So he was MIB then. But he was there from a few days before me. So he had the drop on me. He still astounds me. He knew all that would happen here the whole time he'd been hunting down Tom, his own brother. He'd sent Teneal in as bait, sent him to his death, when the man had never done nothing. And Jeannie's body had had no head. So someone standing in that room now would cut off her head. I knew that much. But I knew my contact had already known who it was all along. And then I'd sent Denise into him, but she didn't know it was him. And then after killing Tom I'd shot him in the face on my bus. And he'd known all along that Tom was only his own pawn, via Teneal, but that Tom never even known it was his own brother setting him up all along. And then my contact had gone up to heaven, to the senate in heaven, and to the court thereof, and plead us all as guilty. And I was looking at him in his eyes. And he seen the hate in mine.

He was Denise's baby's father. He was guilty of fratricide. He had framed Teneal. He was here for MIB from Tuesday, and I was there for them from the following Monday. But I couldn't yet say if he would be the one to kill Jeannie, but by then I had figured out Tom had gotten popped in Kansas as he was trying to make it to Detroit, to rendezvous with Teneal there. So I knew my contact knew that, when Tom left here tonight with Jeannie, alive or dead, he'd be headed there. But I didn't yet know who would tell him to go there, or why.

"Lee Roy?" My contact queried me. "What do you think you know?" Then a thought occured to me. Perhaps he'd made me for MIB. Perhaps, by my own actions, I'd inadvertantly let him in then on what I knew, from later, but that he'd hadn't known then. Maybe, this was his first mission on MIB too. Maybe, last Monday, he only knew as much what to do himself, as I knew what to do myself just then. So, I saw he was trying to figure it all out too. Just like I was. And he was watching me figure it all out. And maybe he was figuring it out too. So I had to act fast.

"Me?" I replied. "I don't think I know nothing." But I am walking up to and past my unflinching contact and over to the nook under the stairs behind the tv. And I reach around behind the tv and open the trim, and I pull out Tom's little baggie of cocain. I walk over to the kitchen, again past my contact, who was turned around to stay facing me. I walked up to Tom at the cake on the kitchen counter, holding the knife. He was flinching pretty damn badly already by then. But I walked up to him and Slapped the sac across his face, and then dropped it onto the cake and it spilled across the counter. It was all over his face, the cake, the counter, and, as Jeannie walked back in the door letting the wind in from outside, it blew all over the kitchen.

"Lee Roy!" my contact yelled. So I stood up. I'd been leaning down over the counter, about to snort up some of the coke on the counter. I stood up with a dazed look in my eyes, "What?" I said. "You'll get your turn." And then he turned around to see Jeannie. "Jesus Christ!!" Jeannie yelled. "Tom, you told me you quit that shit!" And then Tom dropped the knife on the floor and it clattered. Jeannie stormed into the kitchen behind the divider so that my contact had lost sight of her as he turned to watch the wall, and so he had his left hand side turned toward me. Jeannie come up behind Tom in the kitchen, was stooping down, picked up the knife. God Bless it.

"It ain't mine," Tom stammered. "It's Lee Roy's." So then my wife looked at me. "Jeannie," I said. "Put down that knife." I saw Tom's eyes. I saw he saw me see them. Then I saw the mistake he realised he'd made. And then I saw him rationalizing. He was trying to figure it all out. But he couldn't. He didn't have enough info. So he was panicking. He didn't even look to his brother. He should have. I did though, he was panicking too. But I only broke eye contact from Tom after he'd broken eye contact from me. I knew it was already too late for him. The counter was four feet off the ground. It was between me and him. I couldn't have stopped him. I really cound't have. As God is my witness. I couldn't have.

He took away the knife from Jeannie and grabbed her in a sleeper hold and put th knife up to her throat. My contact was behind me, pissing himself, and I was behind that counter. And Tom was standing behind Jeannie. "Strawberry," I said, loud enough for my contact to hear me. And I reached into the bathrobe's pockets with both hands and felt my fists wrap around their handles, my fingers slide around their triggers, and I felt my arm muscles pulling them up fast. Then I did the time-warp dance from Rocky Horror. I moved around the counter and out of the line of fire between my contact and his brother. And I had my guns out both cocked. One of them I had pointed at my contact, and the other one at Tom.

"LeRoy, Don't!" Jeannie screamed. Tom pressed the knife against her milky throat. I see my love's blood squirting all across my daughter's fifteenth birthday strawberry shortcake. It was horrifying. But it hadn't happened. Not yet. "Lee Roy, no!" My contact yelled. "Stop LeRoy Stop!" Tom chimed in loudly enough, I realized then, to alert his neighbor. And then I realized, I couldn't pull the trigger. Everyone of us then was from the past, except for me. I was the only one left then, I realized, who might not walk out of there alive. But it all hinged on who knew later, which was the passt for me. So I thought back, as I had one eye on my contact, and the other on Tom as he was threatening to cut Jeannie's whole head off with that butcher knife. And I thought, he didn't cut her head off here. But I didn't think quick enough, and Tom had his back up against the front door. He was turning the knob open behind his back with one hand, and had that knife to Jeannie's neck with the other. "That's right, Tom," I told him. "Run to Teneal. Run to Detroit." Then there was a knock on the main door. I scuttled my guns away into my pockets as my contact turned around toward the door. It was Tom's neighbor and as he came in one door, Tom snuck with Jeannie out the other.

"Tom?" the neighbor calls in through the door. "Is everything okay, I heard shouts." My contact is already stepping passt the neighbor out the door. "Scuse me," he say. And then, from the patio, he turned to Tom's coke buddy and sayd, "LeRoy's got a gun. Clear out." So the neighbor turns and looks at me and then takes off. And I am then standing in Tom's living room alone.

I am standing there in Tom's living room alone, and then came that all-too familiar voice. But it was coming from below me. So I turned around to look down at the coffee table. And behold, the land-crab. "LeRoy, Ole Boy," he was saying, as I heard Tom and my contact start their cars outside. "LeRoy, things might not make much sense to you yet right now. But you can sleep easy knowing you did right just now. You might not yet have all the answers," he was scuttling over to the cocaine bag on the kitchen floor. "But there's that. So you've at least got that." He started rolling around in the coke bag. I gave him a moment. When he disentangled himself from the baggie with his fiddler claw, He handed it up to me. "You know what to do next, Le Roy." And so I went back over, hid the baggie where I'd find it later, after this was all over, and then I went back into the kitchen and I cleaned up all the coke with a wet paper towel. I put the naked cake into the fridge.

"So, none of this was...?" I start to ask him. Then I realize I'm talking to a crab high on coke. So I say, "nevermind," and walk out the front door with him. Outside it's a nice night, and off in the distance down the hill, beneath the single street lamp in the middle of Tom's neighbor's grandparent's farm field, was parked an old black Buick. The driver's side door then opened from within. I turned to where my contact was, but he wasn't there. So I started to walk down the field toward the car.

So I looked back. Behind me was the hangar bay, exactly as I remembered it, and then, before my watching eyes, it shimmered like heat lightning and turned back into the grassy knoll. I walked alone down the field toward where the car was. I got into it and closed the door. Outside of the tinting, it looked like day again, but I couldn't rightly tell. The cabin of the Buick was normal. It was a normal car. I looked into the back in the rearview, and it was a normal leather bench seat. So I gunned the engine, and the radio came on. It was "Looking out my back door" by CCR. So I threw the clunker into reverse and spun out on the gravel, then one eighties her and peeled out the break in the fence where I'd come in through.

The car turned its turn signals on automatically to let me know the way home. By the time I got back from my first MIB meeting, it was 4:47 PM on Monday. I parked the car next to my bus in front of Tom's place. As I got out and was on the patio, her bus from school come pulling down the street. As I go in I hear her getting home. As I go to the fridge, she runs up the patio steps, and as I crack open a beer she runs in through the main door. She ran up to me and threw her arms around me.

"Dad!" she said kissing my cheeks all over, "I saw that car. I thought they'd come for you. I thought you were being killed!" I disentangle myself from her and turn sideways and chug the beer. "I ain't dead, kid, but I've had the strangest day."

I told her all of what had happened and I brought her up to speed. This was Monday. I took some time to finish writing the blog up until the part when Kathleen from city waste had called me that morning. I posted it the next morning, and Denise read it while eating some tasteoohs.

Then it was Tuesday morning, the day of one week after the night of Denise's party.

[img]<http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/raptorjesus.gif>[/img] our lord and saviour, the Raptor Jesus (ie. Seth), shall save us.

if you don't simply believe me based on pure blind faith alone, then you are bound to be a sucker for proof offered in the form of empirical evidence! So here is some!

[img]<http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/11480430233774mj.jpg>[/img]

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/53c58f7a-2b75-44e7-a87a-b9f0.jpg>[/img]

Proof, you say? Where's the "proof"? It's on the internet, dummy. And in the Bible, the book of books, the revelation of the king of kings, ie. Raptor Jesus.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/groundfaith.jpg>[/img]

So, who and or what is Raptor Jesus? We should first spell out plainly who and what Raptor Jesus is NOT.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/dinosaur.JPG.jpg>[/img]

This is a picture of Jesus riding a brontosaurus. That crocodile under his arm though? That's the infant Raptor Jesus. Oh but it gets worse...

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/jesus\_on\_raptor.jpg[/img]

Again, this is a picture of Jesus riding on a Raptor. Note that these two can appear in the same place at the same time because they are plainly two different people, or in this case, one a God and the other a Raptor.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/raptor-jesusthumbnail.jpg>[/img]

Here is a gratuitous picture of Jesus nursing the infant Raptor. Observe how he pornographically suckles at the teat of the heart transfixed for all our salvation from sin. Raptor Jesus represents Jesus' Prophecy.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/raptorjesus-baby.gif>[/img]

Now, to begin with, the mythology of "Seth," or "Raptor Jesus," is the prophecy of the second coming, the influence on the mind of Christ our Saviour by the contemporary cult of Sethites. So we see Raptor Jesus enjoying a life much alike his own notional "father," Jesus Christ Himself.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/248812036\_1.jpg[/img]

In this nativity scene we see "Raptor Jesus," notional "son" of Christ, at the teet of it's Mother, Mary Magdalene, "Mystery Babalon," the mother of harlots, whore of nations and filthier of the abonimation of desolation. Raptor Jesus has a gun, signifying his will be a prophecy of a time of war to come, but below him he protects his infant brother, the wild-man, mammalian prototypical John the Baptist to the reptilian Raptor Jesus, Enkidu to his Gilgamesh.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/677290331\_1.jpg[/img] here we again see Raptor Jesus portrayed, although not with a mere handgun as in their youth, but a full-on semi-automatic uzi sub-machine gun. In his lap he holds the lamb, again representative of the prophecy of the age of mammalian peace to follow his own age of a reptilian war.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/541723613\_1.jpg[/img]

It is widely speculated that the ministry of Raptor Jesus was precipitated when some Romans, in spite of Raptor Jesus heavy armament of fire-power, managed to slay his prophetic counter-part, represented by John the Baptist and by a lamb.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/21649635\_1.png[/img]

Another theory has it that Raptor Jesus slew and ate his counterpart himself. The transubstantiation of Holy Communion is ample evidence of this tradition being continued through to the modern era.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/1498870697\_1.png[/img]

The first recorded sighting of Raptor Jesus before his ministry began was by a woman named Connie Dobbs. In this picture of their touching encounter, you can blatantly see her ass.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/248812663\_1.jpg[/img]

Raptor Jesus then begins his ministry in earnest when he comes upon a crowd and snatches up a human child. The men nearby, shocked at this sad turn of fate, exclaimed to the child's mother, "are you selling your baby?" To which Raptor Jesus, also, and rightly, called "alien Jesus," replied for the poor woman, "I come to giveth and I come to taketh away." Whereupon he ate the child utterly leaving not one bone or morsel.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/1048838192\_1.jpg[/img]

This sad event is also recalled in this scroll from the early Dark Ages, called among the Sethians "L'age D'or" meaning the Age of Gold.

There are at least three, if not four, basic aspects of Raptor Jesus' ministry. 1) talking to children. 2) skateboarding. 3) healing people by smacking them on the head. 4) getting blitzed on gin and tonics. Check this shit out:

1) RAPTOR JESUS MEETS WITH CHILDREN

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/raptorjesus6eo.jpg>[/img]

Here Raptor Jesus frankly discusses mythology and fable with some kids.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/raptorjesus.jpg>[/img]

Here Raptor Jesus discusses theology openly with a little one. It was said he always cried hardest after eating the ones most dear to him.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/RaptorJesus02.jpg>[/img]

And here we find Raptor Jesus preaching to his whole "flock" about the coming comet, shaped like a screaming William Shatner, that will "extinctify" him. The presence of this "flock" gives rise to the next portion of Raptor Jesus' ministry:

2) RAPTOR JESUS TOTALLY LOVED SKATEBOARDING

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/raptorair8zu.jpg>[/img]

Much like Applewhite's Heaven's Gate "UFO" cult, centered around the comet Hale-Bopp, when the

"comet" Raptor Jesus predicted would come to "extinctify" him, came it carried him up while he was skating and gave him what strict observance scholars and wild eyed mystics alike describe as "Mad Air." After this obvious "sign" of the inevitable "extinctification" of Raptor Jesus, he began to heal people by slapping them on the forehead. Thus began the third phase of Raptor Jesus' ministry:

3) RAPTOR JESUS TOTALLY LOVED TO HIT YOU IN THE HEAD

here's some "real" pictures to prove this fictional fact:

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/Raptor\_Jesus\_04.jpg[/img]

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/Raptor\_Jesus\_03.jpg[/img]

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/501px-Raptorhealing1.jpg>[/img]

On the very day that Raptor Jesus drowned Judas, Raptor Jesus was sneaking back to his hide-out downtown. This brings us to the final stage of Raptor Jesus' ministry.

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/271462252\_1.jpg[/img]

4) RAPTOR JESUS STUCK HIS NECK OUT SO YOU DON'T HAVE TO

Now a little should be known about the kinda day Raptor Jesus had been having that day. So he was preaching up in the Synagogue all day, delivering the good word.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/raptorjesussolo.JPG>[/img]

After he got done describing the comet and the mad air it had given him, and the vision he'd seen of his inevitable "extinctification," Raptor Jesus also spoke a fillabuster in his own defense when questioned by the other rabbin, and quoted heavily from Karl Marx.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/RaptorJesus-1.jpg>[/img]

He said that, "a man is just worth his ability to work, and his right is to be free to sell that to anyone he should wish."

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/rj2.jpg>[/img]

Then Raptor Jesus climbed down off the pulpit and went to get blitzed on "crunk juice" (ie. a ghetto mimosa, made out of the "champagne of beers" Miller High Life and pop rocks).

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/Raptor\_Jesus\_by\_inktoast.jpg[/img]

As he went into the place where he was staying while he was on the lam from the law, they caught him by surprise. They were already waiting for him in his hideout. When he opened the door they yelled "surprise" and he assumed the position.

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/Raptor\_Jesus\_02.jpg[/img] they forced him to carry his busted ass cart's cam-shaft across town to get a mechanic, and told him no beer until afterwards! Those dastardly bastards!

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/1311943678\_1.jpg[/img]

but when he got across town they gave him the super-mega hexadecimal triple cross. They triple crossed Seth, the Alien Jesus, and crucified Raptor Jesus on the overhead expenses of fixing his cam-shaft. So his prophecy was made complete!

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/353660207\_1ac67253dd.jpg[/img]

But like a bad penny, Raptor Jesus came back from the dead after being crucified.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/raptor-jesus-749809.jpg>[/img]

Raptor Jesus explained the "second coming" concept to his flock on his return.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/Crossed/funshit/raptorJesus/highlife.jpg>[/img] eventually Raptor Jesus did get his Cold Beer, but it just wasn't the same somehow.

oh hell, the myth of the Saviour (from what exactly?) is as old as the earliest ante-deluvial civilisations.

In the Rig Vedas of ancient India, they describe the reincarnations of Shiva, who himself is the final incarnation (following Vishnu and Brahma) of Krishna (described in the Bhagavad Gita of Hinduism), the "sleeper" whose dream is "manvantara" (called "Sangsara" by Buddhists) or physical reality. The current incarnation of Shiva is the Buddha, and the fourteenth incarnation of the Buddha is the Dalai Lamma. It is said, the final incarnation of the Buddha is Maitreya, however the Vedas list further incarnations of Shiva subsequent to the Buddha as well.

In the Popul Vuh of the Quiche (later Mayan) indigenous tribes of South America and the Yucatan they describe the character of Quetzalcoatl, a "fair-skinned" and bearded God, also portrayed as a feathered serpent. Quetzalcoatl, according to legend, led the last of the elder Mayan tribes across the ocean to the east, promising to return again one day. Thus, when the Spanish Conquistadors arrived, the Aztec chief Montezuma mistook them for "Tezcatlipoca" (lit. "smoking mirror" ), the Aztec version of Quetzalcoatl. The Aztec Tezcatlipoca and the Mayan Quetzal Coatl harken back also to the earlier Olmec myths of Viracocha.

In Egypt and the region now known as Iraq, the myth of the Saviour began with the Old Kingdom Egyptian "Book of the Dead" (a guidebook for a soul to journey through the Underworld after death) and with the Sumerian work, now called the "Lost Book of Enki" (describing the pantheons of all these ancient civilisations and giving accounts of them supposedly from pre-deluvial times). In these cosmologies, the idea of the Saviour began to take shape in the form of Horus, son of the slain God Osiris, and Marduk, the warrior-son of Enki. Unfortunately, subsequent mythologies recount that Horus the hawk would go on to be identified first as Ra, pronounced "ray," and later Aten, both representative of the solar deity. The loss of eternal life is a myth recounted in the Egyptian, Sumero-Babylonian and earliest Hebrew accounts. We can trace its origins, along with the myth of a coming Saviour, to Abraham, who migrated out of Sumero-Babylonia and into Egypt. Many believed the mono-theist Pharaoh Akhenaten to be the "mushus," or coming saviour, and thus his followers called him "Moses." In many respects, the myth of Christ borrowed from the Book of Exodus describing the life of Moses, some 4000 years before the times of Jesus.

Between its origins in Sumeria and Egypt under Abraham, the saviour myth continued to take shape in the teachings of Zoroaster, a Persian follower of Mithra, a solar "son" of the God Ahurah Mazda. The study of the dualism between the good Ahurah Mazda and his evil twin counterpart, the evil wizard Ahriman, was deeply influential of the Essene sect of Gnostics on the Dead Sea at the time of Jesus. By this time, the fervor for a coming saviour was reaching its peak because the calendar of Pythagoras, a student of the "Zend Avesta" of Mithraism, was counting down to "year zero" between two bi-millennial aeons.

Most of these saviour archetypes have identical attributes. I'd recommend the web-documentary, available on YouTube, Google Video and elsewhere, called "Zeitgeist" as a starter for this material. It describes the calendrical and astro-archaeological origins for this myth's solar characteristics, and will also educate you briefly on the mechanism of "precession" which causes the passing of the bi-millennial aeons that were observed by Pythagoras. Most of the attributes of the saviour character reflect an original solar mythology, such as the "sun," Jesus, surrounded by the "zodiac," His twelve Disciples. There's not much to it all really.

Subsequently to this the historical person of Jesus is recorded as Rabbi Shimeon Bar Yochai in the Hebrew Talmud, and is even mentioned in the Holy Quran, sura 5, and his myth has been extensively commented on in many Muslim scholarly works as well. This brings us about up to modern times, when we find the "exoteric" Catholic Church extolling the solar saviour myth as justification for spiritual slavery to itself as the modern version of the Roman Empire, and the "esoteric" lodges of Free Masonry perserving, albeit mostly unknown even to members, the "lost" right-interpretation of this myth as an anthropomorphication of astronomy and other high-sciences.

I wouldn't put much stock in any of it myself, although I have taken stabs repeatedly at offering a modern interpretation of the myth and its affect on modern global political events. You can read about the esoteric aspects of this on my forum, here:

blah.

Immediately after the expulsion of Blackwater, which apparently DID occur, despite having received ZERO media coverage I am aware of, President Bush ordered what he called in his final, 2008, State of the Union Address a "troop surge" of 2000-4000 new US soldiers being deployed to fight and die in Iraq. (BTW, the death toll of US troops alone is now over 4000, and remember that, at the HIGHEST, estimates of the deaths in 9-11, the excuse for this war, are around 3000.) The "troop-surge" has since been considered successful, as Dick Cheney has announced (albeit rationally invisible) improvement during his recent visit to Afghanistan and Iraq.

Now, the problem, as anyone trained in the Art of War would know, is not, and never was, having enough US troops (or private forces) occupying Iraq to overwhelm the "insurgents" (ie, the Iraqi people). If you have 1000 troops and 3000 Blackwater merc.s or just 4000 troops, it won't matter. You could have 10,000 troops, and another 100,000 mercenaries involved on your side, and still lose, if you do not properly manage your merc.s and supply your troops.

Since the US invasion of Iraq, the entire occupation can be considered a strategical nightmare. Early on, there were alot of reports coming in about soldiers having insufficient kevlar body armor. This was around the time W.'s soundbytes involved the talking-point "well-paid, well-funded, well-eqipt," while he slashed veteran's "benefits" (ie. Social Security and medical aid). This was only the beginning though. Eventually, in documentaries on the privatisation of the military's supplies, reports would find their way around the mainstream media black-out from soldiers complaining of the private contractors (Blackwater and Halliburton). Apparently these private military contractors (mercenaries for hire) were selling drugs to the soldiers, and selling the soldiers' own arms to the insurgents. Soldiers were forced to stand outside in the open without cover, in temperatures too hot for their armour, for hours waiting in line for their mess from the Halliburton contractors. Finally, there were reports that the private military firms were given a literal blank-check when it came to sequestering funds. While the private military firm's parking lots would be over-flowing with fully-equip gas-guzzling Hummers, the army parking-lot would be devoid of all but one or two of the dressed-down equivalent, the desert-drab HumVee. When the firms found no use for the equipment and vehicles, they were ordered to destroy them. So they lit a parking lot full of Hummers on fire!

Anywho... so far as I can tell there have been no new developments in the situation of any beneficial nature. No news on Scooter Libby's indictment either.

Support House Resolution 333 for impeachment

I support House Resolution 333 calling for the impeachment of Vice President Richard Cheney. I also support the impeachment of George W. Bush. As your constituent, I am writing to insist that you and the rest of the House of Representatives carry out your constitutional duties to defend the Constitution of the United States. It is unconscionable that the House has obstructed an open discussion of the activities of the President and Vice-President. This administration has taken this country into a criminal war, is threatening to start a new war, and has violated the constitutional rights of the American people. It is time for the House to fulfill its constitutional obligations in response to these impeachable offenses.

Please join the 83 Members of Congress who pledged in an open letter delivered to President Bush:
"We will only support appropriating funds for U.S. military operations in Iraq during Fiscal Year 2008 and beyond for the protection and safe redeployment of all our troops out of Iraq before you leave office."

The U.S. occupation of Iraq is the primary cause of the violence there. U.S. intelligence agencies have reported in multiple National Intelligence Estimates that the occupation of Iraq is recruiting more terrorists worldwide. Every dollar we spend in Iraq is making America less secure and taking funds away from urgent needs at home and abroad.

54% of Americans want Bush to bring U.S. troops home within 6 months, according to a Democrats.com telephone poll of 618 adults conducted from September 6-9, 2007, by ICR. 73% of Americans want U.S. troops home in a year. Ten Reasons to Impeach George Bush and Dick Cheney

I ask Congress to impeach President Bush and Vice President Cheney for the following reasons:

1. Violating the United Nations Charter by launching an illegal "War of Aggression" against Iraq without cause, using fraud to sell the war to Congress and the public, misusing government funds to begin bombing without Congressional authorization, and subjecting our military personnel to unnecessary harm, debilitating injuries, and deaths.

2. Violating U.S. and international law by authorizing the torture of thousands of captives, resulting in dozens of deaths, and keeping prisoners hidden from the International Committee of the Red Cross.

3. Violating the Constitution by arbitrarily detaining Americans, legal residents, and non-Americans, without due process, without charge, and without access to counsel.

4. Violating the Geneva Conventions by targeting civilians, journalists, hospitals, and ambulances, and using illegal weapons, including white phosphorous, depleted uranium, and a new type of napalm.

5. Violating U.S. law and the Constitution through widespread wiretapping of the phone calls and emails of Americans without a warrant.

6. Violating the Constitution by using "signing statements" to defy hundreds of laws passed by Congress.

7. Violating U.S. and state law by obstructing honest elections in 2000, 2002, 2004, and 2006.

8. Violating U.S. law by using paid propaganda and disinformation, selectively and misleadingly leaking classified information, and exposing the identity of a covert CIA operative working on sensitive WMD proliferation for political retribution.

9. Subverting the Constitution and abusing Presidential power by asserting a "Unitary Executive Theory" giving unlimited powers to the President, by obstructing efforts by Congress and the Courts to review and restrict Presidential actions, and by promoting and signing legislation negating the Bill of Rights and the Writ of Habeas Corpus.

10. Gross negligence in failing to assist New Orleans residents after Hurricane Katrina, in ignoring urgent warnings of an Al Qaeda attack prior to Sept. 11, 2001, and in increasing air pollution causing global warming.

I've heard many people say, the EU is just what Hitler wanted. No it isn't. Hitler wanted a global dictatorship. The EU is an international monetary union. The world bank has to accumulate enough credit (from various national debts) to mint a global currency. To do this, they have to assume the military might to be able to collect on this credit. Without entering into a pact with the heads of all involved nations, and thus establishing a global economic trade union, the world bank cannot issue currency based on its credit. Once the world bank is able to issue a global currency, though, it will be necessary to translate the wealth of national currencies to an equivalent amount of global currency. In order to accomplish this, it will be necessary for everyone living in the countries of the monetary union to have a greater amount of global currency (buying power) than national currency (amount of value). In other words, only once federal notes are bankrupted can the value of global currency outweigh the buying power of national money.

I've heard many people say, the first form of global government will be a dictatorship. This is wrong. To enable the World Bank to enforce the use of its global currency, by calling in debts owed to it by military might, the first form of global government would be in the form of an international free-trade agreement effectively dissolving all national borders. The nations who agreed to this pact would, as does the EU now, all share one fixed world currency. Thus, it would be the international businesses of the private sectors among nations that would form the first truly unified form of global government, by world-wide trade agreement. While this would be global fascism, it would not immediately imply dictatorship over the national populations. It would mean, instead, the formation of a direct democracy as the first form of global government, as consumerism would determine financial progress among the founding companies of the global credit union the same way votes determine the decisions made by representative government officials. Rather than voting for candidates to elect representatives, we would supply funds to a corporation that would reciprocate by determining our government's policies to maximize their own profits, thus increasing the value of our initial contribution to them. This is currently the case in the US.

I've heard many people say, the first global dictator will unify all the world's different religions. What would be wrong with that? If there actually is only one God, why should people disagree on his nature? Yet the fiction that we can accept one God as a species has led to the fact of many thousand years of warfare, all around the globe, as everyone attempts to convert everyone else to their own views. Due to its dependency on depletable resources, leading to its viral similitude in consuming until supersaturation and then metamorphosising its values, humanity alone self-regulates natural selection by survival of the fittest. By economic controls, mankind substitutes the value of earning money for the skill of natural survival. Therefore, the Almighty Dollar is, in truth, our idealisation as a species of the fact that we control our own populations - not only the number of us alive by institutionalised murder in the form of wars, but also the way in which those of us left over survive to breed by using the artificial exchange system of money. If there ever will be a single global god, it will, by necessity, be worshipped in the form of the global currency.

Thus, what we see is that the global government already exists in the form of free trade agreements and monetary unions, that wealthy companies and not elected officials comprise its ranks (though "we the people" control them by tariffs, boycotts and strikes even moreso than by voting for elected officials), and that, in truth, the one true god already ruling over all humanity and worshipped even by entire corporations themselves is the ideal lie that is money.

So what "many people say" and what is obvious enough for us all to see are often not the same. Ladies and gentlemen, please wake up now. We have arrived in our New World Order.

</center>

Everything is backwards inside out of looking-glass land. Once you realise you've been lied to and most of what you believe you know is wrong, you will find the world is much more vast than you at first saw, but that those who had concealed this from you are really the only ones around to fear.

No one knows what is in your own best interest better than you do for yourself.

Just as the imaginary "dangers" of an "unknown" world beyond their "protection" were lies all along, so is their entire motive backward to the mind-control moralities they taught us to value. They view their unethical strategies as necessary for their own survival and the protection of their property.

Their greatest fear is that they are massively out-numbered by the populous they dominate, and their illusion of authority is flimsy and necessarily changes with their short-term goals. They use fear-tactics and lies; they are fighting what they see as a desperate fight to maintain their hegemony.

Their future is short, and they know it. Their time has almost run out, their crimes have almost caught up with them, and they are now short-selling their own future generations into a cess-pool infested prison-planet just to bail themselves out in the immediate present.

We know who "they" are, right in the here and now. The Yale frat Skull and Bones fed the ranks of the CIA, eventually forming the Bildebergers. Their greatest fear is being held accountable for the crimes they know they are guilty of committing daily.

All that remains is for us to know who "we" are. That is easy too. We are the ones who are left over, the oppressed, the disenfranchised, the victims, the innocent. All it remains now to be done is to make a choice: whose side are we on?

Are we on our own side, or are we with those who have lied to us all along?

I think the answer to that should be fairly simple and obvious for us all to solve.

techniques of truth suppression:

1) discredit the opposition.

2) physically intimidate the threat. techniques of truth liberation:

1) group solidarity.

2) stamina by momentum.

3) trust in reality.

they spread fear because it is all they feel. we spread the truth because it is what we know. they are afraid of the truth. they are afraid of us. fear is a prison. the truth shall set us free. once we are free of fear, then we see the truth: there is no us or them. there is only one reality, and we are all a part of it.

until then, we must uncover the eyes of those whose fears blind them. in truth, there is no fear. Awake. it's time, now. the only thing to fear is fear itself. speak out, take action, we're all in this together.

soon, we'll reach a critical mass of awareness. soon, our whole species is going to super-saturate this entire chrysalis. soon, we're going to metamorphosise.

there is no "dominant paradigm." only the lie that might makes right, and the survival of those who can adapt to what is true.

never accept reality merely as it appears. all is not as it seems. we might not all be able to see it all the time, but we are making progress. the more frightened they become of what we know, the less we will fear their lies.

Unite for social democracy, speak out for global justice. we are going to win. the truth is on our side. Peace.~G~

When the capacity for compassion evacuates the heart, then anger clouds the judgment. When the ability to experience human emotions is pushed aside, then another form of consciousness enters, one that is entirely alien to those of us who can still feel love and pain. This other self, this alter-personality, is pure evil from the point of view of anyone who can remain objective and sympathetic. It is completely cold-blooded, calculating and cruel. Even the word "demon" is too polite for this malevolent possession. The ancient word "Satan," meaning an "adversary" or "foe" is much more apt. When the limits of humanity are passed, then this "Satanic" consciousness rushes in to fill the vacuum. At that point, there is no turning back, you cannot ever regain what you have lost. You cease to be an innocent, and you become a murderer, a rapist, a sadistic, malignant cyst inside the husk of a "human" shell. This is what we are witnessing here. We are not only seeing an innocent man being murdered. We are seeing the Ancient of Days itself possessing the heartless, mindless, zombie-bodies of once living souls. But now these "cops," these servants and protectors of the people, have sacrificed their life-blood by proxy to a master of lies, manipulation, twisting, hurting and murder.Fuck these pigs. They're already dead. The only thing motivating their unfeeling corpses like marionettes is the king of all darkness. And I think that, at this point, it should be fairly obvious who has opened up this rift between reality and what they think they are allowed to get away with. The king whose lies they believe will enable them to achieve omnipotence by blood-lust. It doesn't matter whether we call the faceless minions mere "demons" and this ruler over them all "Satan." They are all one hive-consciousness. It is the release of their spirit that fills them with loss, and to justify that to themselves they will do anything to anyone who crosses their path. That's true for anyone given free reign to abuse their authority.As I've long said though, you can't fight the hydra by hacking away at its regenerating heads. No, to kill the monster you have to show it its own reflection. Only the last vestiges of shame and humility left in these heartless hellions will ever be able to free them from this possession by this alien evil. And then, the only way for them to be free will be self-sacrifice, like lemmings, en masse mercy-killing themselves. Once these fascist scabs see their true face in the mirror, they will all swallow shotguns on their own, and that will be that.I only pray there is anything still good left inside these unclean swine to join their countless, forgiving victims in the realm of eternal rewards. Because if there isn't, and they are truly blind to all but the most immediate and carnal satisfactions, then they are truly in Hell already, and good for nothing but wasting our air. At that point, we would actually be doing them a favour by freeing them from their fleshly damnation. And if that is the case, then no one in their own right mind would ever dream of doing anything but thanking us.~G~ very insightful regarding there being more critics than compliments, and more indifferent than critics. I've tried to stay positive by thinking of this as a reflection of the media of mass distribution (ie, the publishing industry, the internet, etc.), but I know, as you do too, and rightly, that it's not only the media, but the people, who have been exposed to it for so long, that have become indifferent to unpackaged facts, critical of obvious truths, and completely uncomplimentary of anything laid at their feet. I've nearly given up altogether on getting this info out during my own lifetime, for the simple fact that I am beginning to believe it is impossible for such "traditions" as speculative philosophy, once received only orally, to be passed along in their "traditional" ways now. As soon as it gets written down, someone will find fault with the wording. Ah well, I'm still pleased to know this info has been cached on google (especially since my host is flaking out so much these days), and even more pleased to know there are people out there still finding it at all, let alone finding it interesting.

Now, as to your specific interests (and thank you greatly for letting me know what they are, since it will fascillitate more specific dialogue and hopefully learning for us both), I can give you several references to pages on my site and specific diagrams referring to these aspects, as well as a link to a free download of my book on the tree of death, and I can answer any questions as to why I set my own versions of these all up the way I have. Ultimately, though, I hope you will excuse me if I decline thinking any of my own work to be the final say on these matters, or the One Truth, or whatever. If you've come here looking for that, I can help, but it's something one must find through comparison of their own research with that of others, and that is always ongoing (as long as they remain other researchers), and should never be considered "done."

So, first a few references to site materials (you may already have found these):

the qabbalistic creation story: <http://www.benpadijah.com/magick/zohar.html> (toward the bottom of the page) discussed on the forum: <http://www.benpadijah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=415> (regarding specifically cosmology) in specific, here's a direct link to the most comprehensive diagram I've done to date combining the cosmologies from various ancient Hebrew (Genesis, Bahir, etc.), QBLHist (Zohar, Razi'el, etc.) and Gnostic (Book of John, Eugnostis, etc.) sources:

<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/gnostic/Christ2.jpg>

the qabbalistic creation story: <http://www.benpadijah.com/magick/Lamech.html> (continues from link at bottom of page) needs to have a new thread started for it on the "magick studies" forum: <http://www.benpadijah.com/phpBB2/viewforum.php?f=44> (feel free to start a thread here if you'd like), or on the "tree of death" forum: <http://www.benpadijah.com/phpBB2/viewforum.php?f=27> (hidden from non-members).

in specific, here's a direct link to the "St. Simon" arrangement of the combined "Tree of Death" (ala Steve Savedow, its originator, rightly called the "tree of immortality") and "Tree of Life" (ala the Gra, rather than Ari, arrangement, rightly called the "tree of knowledge") diagram:

<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/ToD.jpg>

The tree of death e-book itself is available for download here:

http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/bookstore/Tree\_of\_Death\_v.02.pdf.zip if you haven't already discovered this. It explains in much greater detail the explanations and sources for all the attributes I used in arranging that diagram at the time (and, as I say, nothing is permanent, and I'm very open to any observations or suggestions for improvement you might have).

Naamah is mentioned directly as the "demon ruler" over adverse Malkuth on page 23, while Lilith is mentioned directly as the "demon ruler" over adverse Yesod on page 24. I expect my reasoning for the positioning of these attributes was based on a combination of their order given by Savedow and my own dull understanding of their myths, such that Lilith would be cognate with the Shekinah, and Maamah with the "cracked" Qliphoth, Maluth of Assiyah, the "kingdom of matter."

As to what I can gather from reading over the research I included in the "TOD" .pdf e-book, Naamah was the daughter of Lamech, son of Enoch. However, Enoch is given as both the son of Cain and as "Enos," son of Seth. Since Cain (neanderthal) and Seth (homo sapien) were both sons of Adam (australopithecine), then we have to look at their respective mothers (Lilith, the nurse of the Watchers, as the mother of Cain was said to have coupled with Samael to beget Cain, while the mortal Eve, wife of mortal Adam, was said to have coupled with "the lord," ie. the Sumerian God Enki, to sire Seth) to understand the point of their divergence.

If we tried to plot all of this as like branches on a family-tree, the result would be (aside from merely convoluted in appearance) that Enki / Samael is the father of both Cain and Seth, the grandfather of Enoch and Enos, and thus the g-g-g-great-grand-father of Naameh (via Lamech, descendent of Cain) and the g-g-g-g-great-grandfather of Naameh (via Lamech, descendent of Seth). Because Lamech appears in both descents, and because he has two wives, Adah and Zillah, himself, we can speculate that Lamech was the son of a crossing between the Nefilim (neanderthal descendents of Cain) and the "wives of men" (homo-sapien descendents of Seth), in the same way that Cain (and thus Enoch) and Seth (and thus Enos) were descendents of Eve (mortal homo-sapien) and Samael (the demonised Annunaki, Enki).

So, if we were to reverse the "demonisation" of Enki as Samael (who hangs "upside down" as the constellation Orion) into the QBLHistic terminology for the immortal Adam, as "Adam Kadmon," who dwelt in Eden (Beriah) before the fall, and who became the mortal Adam (in Assiyah) after the fall, the result would be obvious: insofar as Enki-Samael remained immortal after the fall (and seven-fold cursing to mortality) of Adam, he could easily have coupled with Naamah as well as with Lilith, and even with Eve, thus siring not only Cain and Seth, but also Tubal-Cain as well.

However, the question remains if such a complete correspondence with Adam Kadmon and Enki-Samael is generalisable universally, as in all cases accurate. Although Adam remained alive for millennia after the expulsion from paradise, the real question is over his nominal attribute at each point, since that is how his character will be identified in the subsequent mythological literature. Basically, the question is from what event onward could we call "Adam Kadmon" (the pre-fall Adam) "Enki-Samael" (the post-fall Adam). The only real problem in this is in the subsequent "demonising" mythology under Christian cabala, associating Samael with Lucifer, the rebel angel, and thus obfuscating the original "fall of man" with the archetypically "earlier" (although chronologically contemporary) "fall from heaven."

If we ignore the notion of Lucifer, it might become clearer that the fall of man and the fall of the rebel angels were really one and the same, such that Adam Kadmon fathered Abel (who was immortal and wise, ie. had fore-knowledge or pre-cognitive clairvoyance), however Samael (called "Enki" meaning the immortal) fathered Cain (immortal but evil), and Enki (called "Samael" the unwise or, literally, "blind") fathered Seth (good but mortal). This would explain why Cain was considered evil, Seth good, and why Abel, as the perfect union of these opposites, was necessarily murdered. In other words, we can assess that Enki became Samael at the time of the fall, and that Adam Kadmon became the mortal Adam Homo at the same time. However, we can also assess, because all of these are only nominal attributes for a single character, we could even plot them on a circle as the four cardinal points of a grand-cross and from thence re-assign them any other such relative attributes, and, moreover, since this singular character is actually only Satan, we could simply assume it is all the "devil's work" and ignore it "for God's sake."

In any event, sorry for the confusion regarding the roles of Naamah and Lilith in my own material, and I hope that, although you'll not find it included in any other of my diagrammatical work as yet, you have found the above a sufficient apologia therefore. As for your input, please be it a glory unto God for you to feel at all liberty to ramble away. This will be the first conversation I've been able to have with any other serious QBLHist-researcher on this extremely arcane topic. Aside from a couple people I've met, almost no one has even heard of Savedow's original "Tree of Death," let alone has considered doing serious comparative research into it. I'm continually impressed by such very rare diamonds in the rough as yourself. Hopefully we can communicate more about these topics in the near future as well. None of us have forever in which to learn all we can.

Hope this epistle amuses, and finds, you well.

First of all, please let me apologise for my delay in getting back to you. I have to confess I hate to write when I'm not high, and I was out of dope for a while there. I find that if I'm not maintaining my preferred level of diction, due to my naturally less attentive and concentrated state of mind while sober, I quickly become impatient, scattered and ultimately only piss myself off. Of course, to anyone who knows what these are symptoms of by experience, it's obvious this is a condition of tolerance that could be, if necessary, although not necessarily easily, weened. I like weed because it's not permanent. If I were to quit smoking, I know from having taken lengthy sabbaticals in the past, I would suffer a period of decreasingly intense withdrawal (emotional rather than psychotic, though) until eventually my mind would be the same as it was before I'd ever smoked. I don't quite know why anymore, but for reasons I once formulated as important, I find comfort in that.

The shamanic trance state induced by all drugs (though they vary in their quality of experience porportionately to their natural energy spectrum frequency, causing some to harmoise and others to cause discord) is a ubiquitous condition of the mental space, called "time" or "hyperspace" or 4-space, of the entire existing universe. Where a corner point, an intersection between frequencies of sub-atomic energy, occurs in mental 4-space, a brain forms around it as an excrescence like the muscle of a mollusk. The body then forms as a shell, and this is true of both the individual as a developing embryo and for the species as we evolve into more and more complex multi-cellular biological organisms. The "mind" or "soul" is a point on a strange attractor, an invisible shape in a higher dimension, made from the passage of time, a "metaform." However, these corners in 4-d, the "minds" of sentient beings being themselves as common as the number of blackholes in the universe, are themselves only this same form of excrescence of detritus around the single spirit. The omni-pattern of "tau-sub-tau" (a tesseract representing time) that surrounds and permeates 3-space, 4-time, the universe and multiverse, as well as the nulliverse of pure energy opposite critical mass for the universe of matter, is only one shape (the QBLH, the "khab-allah" or "body" of "G-d"), out of at least five, if not seven, such regular solid shapes possible along the spiralling growth pattern of replication and expansion of the transfinite binomial code embedded in the sums and multiples of all real numbers. The "fifth dimension" (the "pure energy" or "pure light" of tachyons beyond the matter-energy barrier speed of photons) is the nulliverse prior to the next "big bang" resulting from a random quantum-fluctuation. So, too, this "zero-point" energy continues to exist and permeates throughout the universe even now. The single pattern may endlessly mutate, but the Greater Light of which it is composed is ubiquitous and singular.

Recently I've been reading over modern translations of the scattered collection of quotes and stories attributed to be by or about Pythagoras. Apparently Pythagoras was from Itlay, but is credited with bringing philosophy to Greece. Aside from the legends about his origins, the general belief about his philosophy by the subsequent authors and commentators is one of reincarnation. He started two schools, one called axiomatics who collected "axioms" or moral sayings, and the other were the mathematicians, equivalent to what we'd now think of as #theorists. According to the perennial tradition kept among the modern esoteric initiatory mystery cults, Pythagoras would only talk with someone if they had passed several tests (of an initiatory nature) proving they were already knowledgeable in these two schools of learning: rhetoric and math. The quote above Plato's Academy, "those who understand geometry enter here," is as much of a token of Pythagoras as the pentagram star his followers are renowned for using to identify one another by. According to that legend, if you're not familiar with it already, one Pythagorean died at an inn and told the inn-keeper to paint a pentagram on the door to mark this event. A year later a fellow Pythagorean was passing through, saw the pentagram, and repaid the inn-keeper monetarily for his hospitality to the earlier visitor from his cult. This anecdote has little moral value, however, considering it is from Crete, and according to that other famous saying, also from Crete, "all Cretans are liars."

The last fiction I've read recently was Kafka, and that's indicative of my approach vector toward fiction in general. It scares me. It always has. Whenever I pick up a fictional book, the fantasy-world on the other side, between the lines and letters behind the doorway of the cover, conspires en masse to send a wrathful reflection to haunt and plague my subconscious for years. I find factual reality much less threatening. The layers of most probable metaphysical characteristics of provable higher-dimensional realities are a much more exciting discovery to experience while alive, in my opinion, than the quest, through their entropic decomposition into transfinite corner-points on 4-d strange attractors manifested an inanimate, mind-like softening of matter (ie. media), to impose one's will over this parallel, mythopoetic Underworld of Lies.

Rather than our own plurality as 6 billion living (+ countless dead) points of view being "objective," surrounding a central event whose "existence" (ontological substance) is "subjective," I think this is the other way around. The twelve disciples are the subjects of the central sun-self. However, I am more in agreement with Descartes' "brains on a shelf" Matrix, that the "central-self" is only "objective" internally, autonomically, and dormantly, and that the subjective "Otherness" cloaking us in blindness beyond this, limiting us to merely the dreams of our senses, is only other such creatures perceived strangely via this confused lack of communication, whose benevolence or malevolence to our interiorised survival we could never possibly ascertain.

So, to say that this central-self character is real, exclusively of its immediate surroundings, but that it is only one among "billions and billions" of others like it, is basically explicative of the Hollywood "star" system, another debt for which we owe Crowley. This is, I think, the real cause (the "novelty" of the McKenna bro.s' "time-wave zero" work) behind the continuing (though "universally" prolapsed) quantisation of the self as centre in its collective self-expressions in the media of its mythology. Thusly, we can all foresee the obvious next evolutionary level we will ascend the step upwards onto will be the realisation, en masse and collectively, mentally as souls, but also simultaneously among all living individuals, that this particulate nature, of a singular self-sun surrounded by a void, satellites and more distant stars, is now, has always been and will always be only an illusion, like an ornate Persian rug stretched over a deep hole. Of course, that metaphor is dark only to the mind from the point of view prior to this universal awakenning (Judgment Day). To one who knows a thing or two about this or that, they will know beforehand what to expect will happen after death, and so they will proceed to cause it to become a reality, and thus to continue to exist by leading others.

Essentially, the brain is a black-hole, the ego the singularity at its centre, and the full capacity of the sub-conscious mind is the "baby universe" inside of that. The problem is not, nor has it ever been, projecting ahead to understand the next phase of post-mortal existence. The body dies, stars die, the universe will die. Such Is That Which Is. The difficulty, rather, is now, has always been, and possibly always will be the apparent division between what appears to be real and what, beyond this, we can imagine. It's as though the elaborate though invisible emptiness draped over us to lull us into psychic sleep, although surrounding, including and containing everything in existence, is the living entity, while our own biological bodies are merely its thoughts. However it is apparent that the only way for the entire species to simultaneously evolve into this mentalism is the same as for all the matter in the universe to be replaced by energy, ergo, by its death. However this is only a cannard. Part of the illusion, its own innate, physical reflection of or reaction to our own perceptual survival-instinct, is to make us fear its absence or its loss, the end of the flesh.

The truth is we do not need to experience the transition from one evolutionary perceptual level to the next in the same manner as we experience the ending of our own individual existence in the flesh. For example, the darkly ironic metaphor of the astronaut turning to spaghetti by passing through the event horizon of a black hole. This does not make the boundary impossible to cross in the body and shape of the mind in itself.

In short, the soul after death is just a mind without a body, and this is the accepted doctrine, however the difficulty with this doctrine's strict observance is that we cannot say if this will be more like consciousness while in the body, or more like the stuff of dreams we experience while the body sleeps. Because we do not know death from a dream, we cannot tell if reality actually exists simply because it appears to do so.

The empirical approach is of course the strong anthropic principle: we can assume reality exists if we do not deny that we do, sensorally and sensually, experience it, regardless of introverting intellectualisms to the contrary.

Traditionally, the methodology of explaining the higher-dimensional natures of reality that are scientifically observable via the senses and confirmed by comparison between prior and current minds alike is to express them mythologically relative to death and the gods.

Neither of these is correct. Mass evolution from within the chrysallis of psychic atomism is nothing like the death of the individual body. It is, if anything, much more like birth. When we are born, we are still used to breathing water, the so-called amneonic fluid, and subsisting off nutrients fed to us directly via the mother's umbilical chord. It is only after we are slapped awake that we gasp the air outside the womb, and only after the chord is cut connecting the ("outty") belly-button of the baby to the ("inny") belly-button of the mother. In this experience, not the death-metaphor, should humanity all along have understood its existence as a unique form of consciousness and its place in the evolutionary process.

Ultimately, there is only one moral lesson in all this: fiction cannot protect us from fact, delusion cannot guard against attack, weakness cannot defend itself, and ignorance of what is true does not testify to our innocence on our final day. Hood-winking ourselves by belief in myths and the malignant narcissism of the self as centre of the universe they endorse is no way to prepare for the experiences we will undergo after our minds leave the forms of our flesh.

Hope this missive finds you well, st. blackmilk, and again, please accept my most sincere apologies for the delay in my response. I, personally, am definately enjoying our conversation, and am getting alot out of it too. Again, hope all is well with you, yeah, that's viable, except for the facts that the Chinese loaned us all the money for the Iraq war (and have been buying the oil drilled in Alaska), and that the main reason "we" need Iraq is for its natural resources (which, if China buys Alaskan oil, it obviously doesn't have), namely oil.

Nevertheless, there are the facts to support this potential strategy toward world peace being considered as a stop-gap, for use in an emergency, but otherwise acting only as a back-up plan. Consider the Theosophical Lucis Trust's "Meditation Room" in the UN HQ in Manhattan. There they practise trance-channelling, which is considered by its adherents a method of communicating with disincarnate mahattmas and held by them to be similar to the Hindu-Buddhist notion of reincarnation of the soul (although reincarnation is not uniquely an Eastern belief, but was ubiquitous throughout the pre-Christian world). One of these Theosophic trance-channellers, Benjamin Creme, believes he is channelling the Maitreya, a term used among Hindus and Buddhists to refer to the final atavistic incarnation of Buddha (ie. the end of the precession of Dalai Lamas) before the next avatar of Shiva incarnates and a New World Age begins. I don't see why this would be out of the question, as the Kali Yuga ended in the 1600's with the Maudner minimum measurement of sunspots and the correspondent mini ice-age in Europe during the medieval Dark Ages, concurrrent with the Inquisition.

Here's an online library of downloadable mp3 audio-files of Maitreya speaking through a trance-channeller: http://www.maitreya-edu.org/windows\_media/talk/windows\_media.htm (here you can also find Maitreya's trance-chanelled speech to the UN as well). Benjamin Creme also claims that Maitreya predicted the bust of the dot.com "tech bubble" at the end of the twentieth century, although one may as well predict the sunset.

It's quite clear that Caesar "coWboy" George Bush II believes, if he just wishes for it hard enough, he can cause the second coming of Christ all by himself. The neo-con Bush administration is like an animated gang of Disneyland porportions, however their humour is dark irony, like the quip about the "myth" of Christ. In order for Pliny (writing as Josephus) and Lucis Calpernius Peso (Caesar Titus Flavius) to concoct the "myth" of Christ (converting the Maccabbean zealot rebellion into the Passion play), they had to have someone to base their perversion of history upon. It should not be considered beyond the realm of possibility to consider it far more likely that W. would stage some form of historical drama in order to deify his father, ex-president, former head of the CIA, and fellow bonesman to his son, GHWB, instead of any random Dogon or Saqqara Ethiopian, let alone a Jaimaican reggae musician, (let ALONE David Koresh) would prove to be the modern, "second" coming of the "Son of God." I take comfort in how little the power-mongers' motives and agenda have changed over the last 2-5000 years. Beit Babylon, Rome, St. Peter's or 1600 Pennsylvannia Ave. the Sneeck-machine will continue to try to destroy earth and, effortlessly and due exclusively to its own ill-fated destiny, perpetually fail to do so. Evil is just a porportion of reality.

On the other hand, if one subsribes to the school of belief that "Christ" refers to the collective psychic consciousness of all sentient living entities, even if only an inquenachable yet infinitesimal spark flickering in an abyss within a single incarnated soul that only collapses into a single Messiah-figure like the wave-form of an electron when it is struck by a photon yet otherwise remains spread out and unaware like a sleeping Krishna, dreaming this Treta Yuga's holocausts and dictatorships for it's own darkly ironic in-joke lost even on the mind of the foetal universal consciousness of mankind, then you could choose to see the next manifestation of this cosmic awakenning as occuring not in the form of a single God-man, but as the spontaneous metastasis of our entire species' consciousness. Instead of a "saviour" manifesting, it's far more likely the additional gravity from galactic core effecting the sun-spot cycle peaking in 2012 will simply boil us incrementally like lobsters such that eventually we will all have evolved without ever having noticed having done so.

Hope this message finds you well, Sunshine. Happy upcoming B-day, too!

For the sake of brevity in responding to this and the symbol (which I researched while you'd written back) both, I'll pick out some points from your last epistle, and discuss them more specifically. I'm glad we can continue this discussion in this fassion. After a break of a few days I feel rejuvenated intellectually myself, so the freer the exchange to me the better.

>So would that make the destruction of the soul/mind comparable to Hell, just not existing or just barely existing in some pseudo state of being on some outer fringe on the far reaches of what is described as an all encompassing entity, the sloughed off skin of a reborn G-d.

Essentially yes. However, I do not personally subscribe to the group (atheists, I presume) who most commonly hold that point of view.

There were, at "critical mass," an equal amount of matter / inter-galactic filaments, as energy / the voids in between these. That's real. That really happened. However, because it refers only to matter-energy and the material plane of existence (Assiyah), even at the instant when the maximum capacity for expansion was surpassed and space began to collapse inward on itself into black holes / galactic cores, it is only part of the whole truth, only an imperfect, aperiodic fraction of the entirety of its grand design.

This husk in itself has no spiritual essence imbued in it. However, even in the case of the moment of passing this "critical mass" this "most perfect" balance between matter and energy in the local universe, there remains the fracture of imperfection that differentiates this peak in our universal evolution from the lowest aspects (the "hind-parts" of God) of the next of the four worlds.

Before "critical mass" the world upon the outermost edge (Einstein's "c") of the local continuum was "Beriyah," the world of Eden, Paradise, etc. Before "critical mass" there was no such thing as entropy or radiative particle decay. All expanded from the sub-quantum levels upward, all the way outward to the oldest star alive, which, when it died and became the first black hole ever, marked the start of "critical mass."

This is indicated by the apparent "expansion rate" of "c" displayed by the red-shift to the light

we see from distant galaxies, as the next level surrounding our local universe devours us outward. From our interior point of view, this causes the "expansion rate" of "c."

It wasn't space and distant galaxies that were being vacuumed outward in all directions like a sudden explosion of earth's atmosphere before "critical mass." There was growth and abundance of space to expand. That was Beriyah. Eden.

Now, following "critical mass" and the "breaking of the vessels," the "slipping of the middle pillar," the "expulsion from Paradise," etc. Yetzirah (the tree of emanations depicted as a crooked flaming sword) is the next highest level surrounding our own material realm of matter-energy (now more energy than matter).

Now, instead of the vast emptiness between atomic nuclei and electron orbital probability clouds being that which expands, and thus the entire universe swelling in size all as one, we have instead vast bubbles full of empty space upon whose surface appears the flat plane, warped into gravity wells by mass and density, of spacetime that manifests as the accretion disc of spiral galaxies. Now, we are in Hell, or Yetzirah.

Beriah is a singularity. Yetzirah is a plurality. So, in my terminology, before the local universe's very first black hole formed, the surrounding 4-space field of tachyons was a homogenous continuum, and since the first black hole formed from the oldest star (or most rapid to age) and through its singularity gave birth to the first "baby" universe, the ZPE halo / aura surrounding our shrinking local universe has been coming to a rolling boil of seething frothing foaming bubbling baby universes, all forming the multiverse of Yetzirah.

Some people accuse all such cosmological astronomy as being "deist," however far to the contrary all religions, including Christianity, have been based on the same underlying series of events staged in the same certain sequence as the events of the cosmos over the billions of years. Moreover, there is a definite "spiritual" aspect to such an understanding of the cosmos. The certainty such direct knowledge based on experimental trial and error and eventual replicable results and empirical data gives one about the nature of reality is actually, to me, more in keeping with the attunement of one's personal Chi to the universal Tao than merely repeating empty compulsions.

>I would have to surmise it as the dessication of our own plane, that the laws of decay, death and finiteness are not only our masters but everything that surrounds us as well.

Yes, But. You have to go the rest of the way through the looking glass to familiarise yourself fully with both worlds, see them as fully opposite yet combined as one, and thus to be able to fully choose which and how you can choose to see any given phenomenon. To call the elemental forces our "masters" imbues them with the capacity for individuation and personalisation, ultimately opening up the proverbial "can of worms" of an anthropomorphic pantheon. This is in no way accurate. Instead, the entirety of the mechanical clock is made up of dead physical tissue, and God is merely the singular consciousness inhabiting this local universal cerebellum.

However "King Entropy" and the "Law of Irony" are only applicable in our own local universe, beneath the rate at which all matter breaks down to energy, Einstein's "c," the speed of photons in a perfect vacuum. Once we have passed in a line from outside this material existence, through it from end to end, to return to the realms beyond again, only then can we see that all that beneath "c" is dead matter, the material universe, and only that which can move faster than "c" is "living." Each of our thoughts exists independently of our mind thinking it, merely passing through our neural-nets, and so too our own ego is just a single spark adrift in the strange attractor orbit of its location over its life-time, passing through invisible patterns we experience as emotions, thoughts, ego, self-expression, etc. Thus, though decay can destroy the material parts of us, it cannot destroy the singular consciousness that contains as thoughts all of our individual points of view and potential experiences. This:

>one spirit encompassing all creation as a single entity is God. This mind that thinks that which is into existence is only a singular ego, however. The multiverse of energetic baby universes and the amount of energy of our remaining local universe do not only combine, they overlap, such that the former exhibits friction against the latter. This friction causes decay over time. This is called entropy. The relative axiom is that, Because God Exists, the Universe Lives and Will Die. But, just as the thoughts of the mind exist beyond it before during and after existing within it as well, and just as the soul transmigrates from body to body, so the attention from thing to thing, and so too the existence of God before, during and after the life-span of this, our local universe. Even this only forms concentric expansion over time like the growth rings of a tree, which is only the shadow of the "aleph-sub-n" torus at the core of the "tau-sub-tau" tesseract representing only the cubical Platonic solid in its 4th dimensional expression as one of any number of potential blossoming buds stemming from the central trunk of the polynomial expansion rates of transfinite #-theory. I rejoice, personally, for the fact that all our minds, our "immortal" souls, are only bound to so-long a lifetime confined in this material universe as the life-span of this universal-prison itself, and that, after that, all our souls dissolve into the one spirit, our minds waking up to become the singular consciousness of the "universal" God.

>what the Satan equivalent was for American Indians

Jesus. They expected the return of Quetzalcoatl, and instead were greeted by Spanish Conquistadors and Missionary Monks singing "onward Christian soldier." No doubt that Jesus would, to me, were I an indigenous American, represent a Great Betrayal by a False Messenger-God, akin to Adam, Gilgamesh and Hermes-Osiris, obviously, but also to the Voodoo Orisha Elegua. Qua...

>Voodoo practices. I preferred those because there was more honesty in what I was learning; that ultimately it wasn't about good and evil but that it was all just psychological; helping to foster self fulfilling prophecies.

Well, let's come at the physical realm of Assiyah consisting of the cracked mirror through which, from inside the vessel, the Light of the Shekinah emanates, drawing us to return to the Godhead from another angle. Let's look at the whole mechanism from another side.

Consider the average fetish-objects of the rooster, the snake and the swine, equivalent to the alchemicyst's sulphur, mercury and salt respectively. Rejecting the injunction against these "unclean" animals, we can admit that Abraxas, the Hermes of the Gnostics, was a synthesis of these traits, with the feet of two snakes, the body of a pig, and the head of a rooster. The Vedic-Hindu conception of reality as a series of animals stacked on top of one another's backs, as well as the zodiac of the Chaldeans, all comprise such synthesising systems combining multiple traits into a single unified whole. Likewise, the Etruscan art of political conspiracy, or a glacier.

I don't consider what I know of Voodoo to mark it as "just psychological." On the contrary, from my point of view "good" and "evil" are "just psychological," and matter the realm of continually manifesting self-fulfilling prophecies. Our own bodies pop into existence like bubbles in a rolling boil. Like a bubble of air spontaneously appearing inside a completely fluid medium simply from the application of heat, the body appears containing the soul, and, like the bubble rising to the surface only to pop, the soul travels inside the body along its journeys only to leave the body at the time of its fleshly death.

From my point of view it's the other way around. Voodoo, what little I know of it, more closely parallels and represents the physical manifestation of the mental will, ie. "results" magick, "chaos" magick, or mind-over-matter. On the other hand I could be wrong in my view point on Voodoo, and beyond what little I know may yet lurk a magnificently panopolistic system of intelligent ideations, each expressed as its own creative muse, to inspire the imagination into an ecstasy of curative tribal trance. So far as I know, though, even such a roseate pantheon as that of the Mayans or the Egyptians, let alone the Sumerians or Vedic Hindu, only amounts to a fictional mythological media-unit for packaging a grain of truth inside a sack of lies, and thus should not be thought of as necessarily any more favourable nor beneficial than the dead-stuff of the material universe of Assiyah itself.

>we all have our own viewpoints unless we're zombies! Unfortunately, most of us are zombies, in the same way that, after the "critical mass" ratio of matter to energy in our local universe was passed, there is now more empty dark energy in the local universe than matter. The mind of "Every Man And Every Woman" may indeed be the surface of the, now-fractured, once continuous, singularity of "c," however it is obvious that many prefer to squander their access to this aspect of our sentient consciousness and, through ignorance, allow their mind to rot, their soul to die, and their legacy of karma-work to ultimately be forgotten by history. In the same manner that friction between the upper, outer, invisible "higher" dimensions of space against their lower, inner, material "Qliphotic" continuum, will decay, erode and destroy the lower realms of material reality, so too can the soul, the mind, the aura, slip out of being a moving-point on a strange attractor, and simply degrade into a static-point through which the strange attractor of time passes, eroding their material, fleshly existence into the heat-entropy of extremely passionate emotions and extremely irrational thoughts. Thus, to the relatively metaphysically "awakened," our existence, shared as it is with the chattle, is stressed and our lives shortened only to the degree we sink into the pre-existent roles established before us by our naturally occurring social-constructs as outgrowths of our own psychological maturation as a species.

Again this would, to me, delve deeper into this process than does Voodoo, though I may be wrong in this regard, however I sense that this ratio of physical materiality to ideal energies is more an argument of personal perspective, since their relationship matures through phases essentially identical to the phases of the cosmic process of time aging space. At first, we believe in objectivity surrounding subjectivity in the form of the pre-"critical mass" local universe and of the tautological "good" of obedience to group-think. Later we begin to come to our senses and realise the truth of the situation as a single objective perspective (our own) surrounded by unknown subjectivity like the main sequence of a star, or the life-span of a bubble in water. Eventually, we familiarise ourselves sufficiently with both "sides" of the "looking glass," and then we do, as you point out, >consciousness has to grow beyond just awareness to become introspective enough to unify this whole "human" existence and evolve again to lose that selfish quality of unification by one's own limited viewpoint and then the bicameral mind unifies and we wake up from the sleep of physical existence. The only point I would add to this is that, from my experience, this does not necessarily have to wait until the moment of extreme uncton in order to be able to begin to occur. In fact, a soul does not count as "living," by this regard, unless they are self-evolving, which even those attached to most mortal bodies simply are not. Souls can simply dissipate like mist evaporating into steam. Others can prolong the life of their own physical vessel, or travel from one physical vessel to another over the life-times of these vessels. But also recall, not even the soul is "eternal;" it is only "immortal." Eternity has neither beginning nor end; immortality has a beginning but no end. The soul is a construct of natural "higher" dimensional energy frictions causing lower spatial change over time, tending more toward dis-order than to order, ie. entropy. Therefore the soul can live until the universe ends, then reunites with all others to return to the single universal consciousness of the awakened sleeper whose dream we are. And, again, this doesn't have to wait until that moment to happen to be observable in rational, theoretical projections based on present probabilities. The end of the universe (ie. "kingdom come") is as good as here to the mind of anyone with some decent Understanding of such schools of thought.

>the key for gaining dominion, catering cheap, plastic, disposable wants to prima will balance out secunda's long term needs.

That is factually accurate, and as such contained within truth, yet has no higher moral component. It's one of those "axiomatic" proofs that this universe is a lie because it is an accurate fact that this philosophy works out to prove in the human sphere of modality, although only therein alone, and would not be likewise applicable to inanimate matter nor is it thus universally generalisable. Therefore, this particular axiomatic philosophy - that of, essentially, Hedonic Epicurean Narcissism - which states: "eat, drink and be merry for tomorrow we may die," is an intellectual offspring unique to humanity, ie. a moral fiction. Like the inherent "goodness" of altruism, it's opposite, greed, lust, gluttony and meglomania are maladies resulting from belief. Belief puts fiction before fact, because when we humbly deprecate ourselves by the self-admonishment, "I believe," we really mean only not to say, "I think," or "therefore I know," let alone, "it most certainly is so that." Therefore, the "morality" of this philosophy is fiction, and in truth, fiction is an offspring of the mind that exists autonomously from it, but that, because fiction dwells exclusively within dead matter (media), its offspring cannot outlast the soul of their creator, because the entity of sentience is of a higher qualitative nature, unique beyond all adjective pluralisms. In this case, the fictional moral is neither the premise nor its proof, for both are amply obvious in the human sphere of modality, eg. society. It's a sound-premise, in other words, based on empirical logic. It's simply an inapplicable quirk of human society that this occurs, works, and functions, because in truth it does so against the larger universal trend toward "death" (universal re-birth) and entropy. The birth of fiction defies the death of fact. Thinking kills the brain.

>Perhaps this lust for dominance, is ultimately to justify one's own view of reality, the more that believe in a lie then that much closer it comes to being true.

I tend to think of it as yin within yang, just as there is yang within yin. Imagine concentric circles, the interior dark, the exterior light. Now, like a Venn diagram, imagine a smaller circle of light, off-centre, within the dark circle. The interior light circle grows from a quarter point inside the dark circle until it connects the dark circle's centre to its diameter. The darkness is matter and entropy. The exterior light circle is the next of the 4 worlds, Beriyyah before and Yetzirah after, "c" the speed of "critical mass," which speeds up as it dissipates into the ether beyond. The interior light circle is the entity of sentience, the soul, the mind, the aura, the seven Be of Ra, the chakras, etc. etc. etc. And this is only one side, the predominantly dark, side of the sphere. On the day-side, the "nulliverse" the opposite ratios hold porportion.

I've got to finish off for the morning to write some about the symbolic glyph you sent too, so, for the sake of brevity, I'll close off now.

-Jon

Sorry for the brief delay (unless I missed a whole week!). I fell asleep last night after receiving your letter, and am only replying just now since I just now woke up. You'd mentioned your own base-3 cycle? Mine is only about base-1 now (24 hr.s), and I can only reach up to about base-2 (48). So I am awake for one unit-cycle, then asleep for one unit-cycle. If the unit-cycle is 24 hr.s, it repeats as such, if 48 hr.s likewise, and, I'd imagine, even if I existed from the beginning of the material universe to it's end, I would likely only be awake about half that time.

Which allows me to segue back into the concepts of good and evil, which I believe reflect fore-sight or precognition and immortality respectively. Life, I think we'd agree, is not a desirable thing to have. It is a sickness, a disease of the soul, a cancer in nature and a fever of the mind. It is not an objective commodity valuable for its scarcity, it is not a rare prism for experience, nor an opportunity to learn, as many claim. While life may thus constitute a reflection of all the negative attributes of existence, the soul reflects upon all that is good, now known, though lost and forgotten at birth. We are told, by western religion (the Roman psychic empire), that the soul is the opposite of our fleshly life insofar as it is immortal. But why is immortality "good" if our own lives are all so bad? What they conceal from us, hiding for us like a Christmas present until judgment day, what they keep from us by lies, is the true nature of the soul: it exists from beginning to ending of this material universe, and is thus "immortal," true; however also the soul has infinite, limitless fore-sight, and this is the Ultimate "good." It means we are all equal to god in that we know our fate, our ultimate fate, is to die. God too knows our ultimate fate is to die. But God, we are told, does not die. We are told, we must "eat from the tree of knowledge forever" as a curse, and told that to do so marks us as evil to God. But it is a blessing in disguise, unlike life: we waste our lives when we ignore the fact we each know our ultimate fate, and thus have unlimited fore-knowledge of all possible events between our birth and that time. But God, that is, western religion, denies us knowledge of the date of that time, and therefore we are deprived use of our own infinite fore-knowledge (Gnosis), and told, instead, God is "good" because He is "immortal" when in fact "immortality" is a bad thing, and our own fore-knowledge is the ultimate good.

Again, and I apologise for the diversion, but consider the myth: Let us call Eden, before the fall, "world A," and let us call our modern world, Enoch, Babylon, etc. "world B." In world A, which we are told is "all good," the tree of immortality is eaten, and the tree of fore-knowledge off-limits. In world B, the opposite, and we are told it is "all evil." Yet look at the definition of "good" as "that which is to be desired," and "evil" as "that which is to be avoided," and we see the "good" of world A being "immortality" is such only in retrospect, from the point of view of world B, and, in world A itself, the opposite was true, and the "knowledge" we have now was considered the Ultimate Desire, while the immortality we once had was worth only the Ultimate Sacrifice. Ultimately, the difference between world A and world B comes down to a value-judgment, a moral choice, which we make alone. Religion convinces us "God is watching" as we choose, and by doing so is, itself, allowed to surround us on all sides, judging us at all times. This, alone, is proof of life's evil.

If we worship God only for His immortality, and not His Gnosis, or fore-sight, as well, we are condemning ourselves to psychic sleep for our entire lives in order to "save" (conserve) our fore-sight for the after-life. And, again, western religion encourages us that this "belief" (essentially equating ignorance with innocence) is the only "good" in this life, while the only real Good in our lives is now, always was, and always will be, our ability to "make, shape, form, etc." (ie. to Control) our own Fate using our ability (currently slandered as "magick," "chaos theory," etc.) to "fore-see" or predict the immediate, and thus the perpetual, future. Instead of being encouraged to use our "free will" (associated instead only with futile rebellion), we are told our Ultimate Fate (our destiny) is to die, which is the "evil" curse placed on us by the "all-Good" God, and that, therefore, free will is our "Original Sin" and anyone who utilises it therefore "worthless" to the "greater good" defined, in itself, as western-religious collectivist altruism, but which is, in actuality, the psychic Roman Empire.

We make our mutual reality Hell for ourselves and everyone around us only when we try to convince one another that Hell awaits us in the afterlife if we do not obey the "conservationism" of our will-power until after death. Instead, and quote me on this, All those who believe in an eternal Hell are wasting their lives, and the only true Hell is a wasted life. For such a soul there is no hope for salvation, for so convinced are they in the righteousness of their own choice to obey the "God" of the psychic empire that they would rather die than not evangelise. In short, Hell is only for Priests.

Each soul is a vector of energy, travelling through this universe from beginning to end, that is merely passing time on this planet as a tourist in the life of the flesh. The single spirit is only the averaging of all these universal energy-vectors into a single meta-pattern. There are a plenum of souls, but only one such ideal spirit. Most call this ideal spirit God, so I do too, but really this is only the reflection in the time-rippled matter-water of the universe-ocean of the true face of God, who is beyond this universe, looking downward and inward on us, like a great Sage gazing into their crystal ball.

So, yeah, I'm a Deist regarding the nature of this universe, most definately, and in that God is remote and Watching, rather than actively participating, in our existence here. But I also am a Gnostic ("Agnostic" for any catholics) insofar as I know that this is a choice we make for ourselves: if we choose to believe in Hell, God remains remote, and if we choose to accept we know how to be moral without it, then we become "like unto God, knowing good from evil." I, for one, obviously prefer having infinite vision to immortal life in the flesh here on earth. The universe collapses back in on itself only because it cannot sustain sufficient energy to expand indefinitely, not for any lack of exterior, unknown, space in which for it to do so, although it does not do this in a "big crunch," but rather like a stomach devouring its own lining tissue, decomposing itself around the edges.

But, no, I am, thus, the wrong person to ask about the nature of "good" and "evil" because, not only by identifying "good" with fore-knowledge and "evil" with immortality I'm turning the whole modern moral mythology on its ear, but also because I see all such morality as "belief" and, beside such perfect knowledge, like blindness next to sight. If you reject the myth, you open our eyes. Once you see for yourself what is real above and beyond "c," you no longer feel any desire to guess at its nature, as one does by dreaming while asleep. Once the soul awakens thus, it does not ever need to return to the sleep of this "belief," because then it understands its existence as continuous beyond merely the life-span of the fleshly body. "Immortality is only possible for Knowledge itself, and neither eternally any man's."

On the other hand, I don't espouse the opposite, implied to a believer, that "knowledge is belief," nor that "all those who believe in Hell are in Hell until their soul dies along with their body." I don't believe either of those things, and the first one I know to be false. I don't think the soul, unless it enters into a body, can die. If it becomes a mind, and the mind becomes too attached to its body, then the soul can be pulled into a sudden death along with the body, if caught unawares. And thus, by the "death" of the soul, I would mean only the dissipation of its pattern, its vector, etc. through the universe, like a dead-end in a maze, or like a wasted sperm. Naturally, since for every one choice we do make we ignore an infinite number of others, souls can die, if by souls we mean patterns. However, then, even the meta-pattern can "die," ie. terminate by dissolution into a larger pattern, etc. and thus God the "father" Himself was a "Son," and "Christ" the "Sun" may Himself become a "father." Yet God remains remote. And, since this DNA-like spiral pattern is observably the condition of our universe's existence as the meta-pattern of all its motions over time, it's "internal" composition being our "souls" and its exterior-surface sum being the "spirit" of God, though both being the "mind" of or sum of the "thoughts" of the single universal-brain, then we must posit that the universe-brain itself is dead-matter, like the components of a clock, and that only this one greater "spirit" exists.

This is why God does not die when any single one of us does. The universe did not "blink out" of existence when Christ died because when he died, his soul was born into a larger world, less mortal than that of the body, that of the mind of all mankind. Those, thus, who follow the "myth of Christ," and who call themselves "Christians," are like thoughts in the immortal mind of Christ, that is, the part of all mankind's collective consciousness pre-occupied by the ego of Jesus. However they can blink out of existence as such just as much so as did the fleshly thought of Christ in the universal-brain of God. And moreover no Christian's soul is worth more than any "hethen" or "pagan" soul. All souls are equal before the accident of random chance, the root and heart of entropy, chaos and uncertainty itself, those dice over which even the Will of the Universe, the Mind of God, has absolutely no control.

So, if you want a "smoking gun" and "magic bullet" for my "beliefs," there you have it: I'd position the Qliphoth equivalent to the modern concept of Quantum Mechanics, and say that even "my definition" of God (the whole consciousness of this universe, who yet remains remote) has no Control on that level. He can read our thoughts, yes, but only looks over our shoulder at them as we express them for ourselves. Whether or not these thoughts originate inside our own mortal brain is irrelevant also, because only the universal-brain of which our bodies are like blood-clots and our thoughts its thoughts knows one way or the other which of any of these will ever prove important, let alone be randomly extinguished. Not even Enki, given dominion over Water, could prevent the world-flood.

Sorry if this message was too divergeant from topics you'd raised in your last letter. I'll try to get back to some of them in a subsequent message, however, having just woke up, I felt I needed to get some of the thoughts off my mind I'd slumbered on since having read your letter before going to sleep. I definately want to talk more to you about post-humanism, since I have a friend who keeps me up-to-date on that topic as much as possible, and it should prove to be an interesting topic for further discussion between you and I as well. However, for right now, having just wakened up, I think I'll get off my "morning" high-horse about God and go smoke a cigarette.

damn I did it again. I fell asleep right after reading your last note. Sorry. I'll come back to some of the points from your letter before that soon; I'm not going to skip over it; I think you address some very important issues in it, and I don't like missing the oppurtunity to address them as such. Now, and again I hope you'll forgive the stylistic diversion, I'll have to go quote by quote through your last note, since there were some specific points you raised I think are of particular significance.

>I was only referring to the three day cycle as far as medication goes; your sacrament/ my host.

Ah, I see. BTW, as to my "sacrament" you should check out the Hawaian Cannabis Ministries, the "church" of my religion. I'm registered online with the Universal Life Church as a certified minister of this denomination, and belong to their forum, though I rarely attend. According to the fine points of the doctrine, which I discovered by a MySpace bulletin sent out by NORML last year, cannabis oil has been used in sacrament rituals dating as far back as first dynasty Egypt, and the consumption of the cannibus sacrement is of the highest good to a practitioner. It's sort of a hybrid of Rastafarianism and the Church of the SubGenius, only without any specific "Be Zeus" or "Job" person.

>Life not being a commodity

This is the reason that, as I'll return to momentarily, "good" ends never justify "evil" means, nor can "good" intentions ever justify any "evil" action. If you accept life as qualitative, rejecting the opposite concept of life as quantitative only, then it will logically follow that it is irrelevant which precedes the other, since at any given place, one will rise, then the other, replacing one another forever. If you fix location (quantity) and leave quality ("good" or "evil") fluid, you will see half, and thus can take the first step. What comes next, I'll come back to.

>anything imbued with the maker has to have some value.

Everything in creation remains gradiated. If there is above, a great architect, and below, their creation, then there are two levels, one above, one below, and thus everything will remain gradiated over time, as one creation spawns a second generation of multiple new variable re-combinations of its own constituent components, etc. ad infinitum (post nauseum). Thus, the "curse" of creation is gradiation, a concept I'll come back to also. For now, let's look at the gradiated system of "value" or "quality," the "scales" on which we "weigh" "good" and "evil": the value of money is to humanity, the value of humanity to this planet, the value of the soul to the stuff of this universe, the value of the spirit (geometry) to God (math), and the value of God to Heaven. Each one level sees that immediately below it as an "ultimate good," and so, I assume, would an AI, should money prove to create one, see our society as heaven and humans as angels. I'd only like to add that I'm entirely the wrong person to discuss morality with, since I see "good" and "evil" as relative qualities, perceived differently on each of these gradiated strata. If I were backed into a corner, I'd probably let on I think it's "all evil," but you could never know for sure if that would only be a qualitative reaction in that situation.

>life is a sickness

Alright, we've established this much as a common belief. Allow me now to embellish on this, and thus to show you around my own mental estates some, so that we can achieve an even more trusting common ground. Starting that life is a sickness, it follows that consciousness is a fever, emotions its symptoms, etc. etc. However, logically, it also follows there must be a cause for this illness, that is, some alien affliction upon our nerves. However, insofar as the basic disease is life itself, and not any affliction compounding the original ailment, we can ascertain no foreign body attaching itself to our innate experience besides that naturally grafted to us, the flesh itself. I hope it will not come as a shock to you if we proceed one step further and identify the central nervous system (the spine and brain) as a complex virus, and identify this virus as originally extra-terrestrial in origin.

>the cancerous limb

The cancerous limb is not only the body though, but the entire gradient of makers and creations, leading backward to the first cause and forward to the final effect. As long as one level exists, it will infinitely refract into multiple other levels, and it is this multiplicity that surrounds and permeates the otherwise objective monad, rendering it subjective through suffering. This entire spectrum is, therefore, the "cancerous limb" in your metaphor, and thus God the physician who removes it. However, is it truly "throwing the baby out with the bath-water" to discard the Prima Causae along with the lesser causes for the suffering to its senses? If life in this world is a disease, and you cannot remove the world, it follows that the only other option available would be to remove the "cancerous limb" afflicted by the disease, ergo the body. But the body is only one receptacle of our mind's existence, and one form of receptor of experience. Ultimately, it would be the mind itself (or, by degrees if you like, first the ego) that is the cause of the "cancerous limb" forming in the first place (eg. reincarnation). Thus, the mind, or soul, would have to be seen as only a hand inside a glove, and removing the glove no more help in easing the pain of the mind behind that hand (eg. God) than removing the hand, insofar, at least, as the same metaphor of "shells within shells" can be extended across the entirety of the gradient of values beyond and including material existence. Our "cancerous limb" is God, whose experience we are, and we are His insanity.

>Does the intention of action make the action good or evil. is it action or thought that creates good and bad, is it the hand or the heart that's the culprit?

You'd mentioned that old nemesis of humanity (ie. Satan, the anti-Christ), the "self-fulfilling prophecy," enforcer of the universal Law of Irony. To return, also, to life as a mutable quality rather than a fixed quantity, and thus to the concepts of "worthlessness" (debit) and "value"

(credit), I'd like to propose as a counter-example the experience of extra-sensory telepathy, or mind-reading. Consider that, if one is trained or conditioned to believe they can read minds over a period of time, eventually their skill at doing so accurately will naturally increase until, eventually, they will indeed seem to be able to demonstrate this ability, although considered super-human, that is nonetheless dormant in most. So, I would say, similar is the nature of the soul to that of the mind such that, if one ignores the opportunity to thus condition the mind, the soul will atrophy and die with the body.

>lawful and unlawful

From a "strict observance" of the "governing laws" of one's local polis as being the sole divider between "good" and "evil," it is much more easily explicable, in answer to your last point, to say that, what we observe as being the case in society is that both "hand" and "heart" are punished, ie. treated as though they were the cause of the crime, regardless of which between them was guilty, simply because they are surgically inseparable, and that, moreover, from the point of view of such a law, no intention can be good when all actions result in evil. In other words, all would be "equally guilty," hence the requisite social-control mechanism of Original Sin. As I say, in society, under the rule of man, this is the case. However in nature, the opposite is true. Just so the "good" of freedom is, from the point of view of someone who sees slavery as an "evil," in not knowing slavery, and in thus not knowing the meaning of "evil" as the loss of their "goodness." However, slavery, addiction, ESP and evil do exist, regardless of how much we idealise as innocence the act of ignoring them. Therefore our denial of them is irrelevant to their continued existence. Society, therefore, may blame human "hearts" for the misdemeanors of our "hands" while idealising as "freedom" the "innocence" of nature beyond it, but in truth, society is evil compared to nature only by its choice, not because of the five-fold border of the senses that is the division between the interior and exterior.

>I know you aren't G-d

You don't "know" any such thing. You may "believe" I am not God, or at least not recognise me as one and the same with the G-d you choose to identify as such. However, in the same way you "know" I am "not" G-d, I know I Am. And just as I would assert your knowledge is belief, so too will I tender up my own to such a scrutiny. What is belief but knowledge of the unseen, the unproven? For, as you say, "I know," meaning, you believe, that I am not G-d, I can say I "believe" I am God, meaning I Know I Am, although my evidence in support of this assertion may as of yet remain undisclosed. If there is any doubt in your mind raised by this assertion then take comfort in the notion I must mean I believe in the refracted prism theory of universal consciousness, and that, thus "we are all God" in a way, and do try to forget the fact you cannot "know" for sure whether this assumption of yours about me is true or not. In either event, and not for any matter of importance, I'll forgive you just for having said this:

>I jest of course, as is my nature. I have no need to "save" humanity or anyone for that matter from themselves.

As well you do not, since you serve society by your job, and thus are "part of the problem" not "part of the solution" as it were. No one enslaved to money, I reiterate regarding "Christ" and "Mammon" in the christian tongue, can serve the good of humanity. This also comes back to the previous question regarding "intention" or "action" being the cause of evil. Like in the story of the Modern Prometheus, "is the Good Creator to be blamed for the actions of his Evil Creation?" If the matter taken to form the creation is evil before being imbued with new form, good or evil, by a creator, then the answer is definately yes, again, according strictly to the morals of Victorian-era England. However, as you say also, >the garden of Eden was grown on the corpses of something else.

and, as we are led to Believe, the Garden of Eden is incorruptibly "good" in itself, and thus can serve as an example of such nonetheless grown from the soil whose embrace in the tomb is our own fate's accursed, undying spouse. In fact, as far as the example goes, if Ultimate Good grew out of something, then that something would have to be Ultimate Evil, and thus find expression, like the molten Phoenix arising from its own ashes, as the fruit of knowledge. So, with this example of Eden (good) growing from "corpses" (evil), there is always inextinguishably one iota of evil remaining in good, and vice versa, regardless of the level of reductable purity attainable now, or with all things being equal. But, is this true according to the requisite definitions? No. So, to understand the ideal of "good over evil" (a concept that, as an ideal, can never come into existence in reality), we would have to remove from our minds' eye the entire burdensome metaphor and the entire, basically false, assumption upon which it is based (regardless of the fact that, from our own point of view as existing in this material reality, we see this assumption is indeed factually accurate). Good can exist in absentia of evil, on earth as it is in heaven and, likewise, evil can exist in absentia of good, as in the case of the schizophrenic murderer. In fact the opposite of reality, that is, the true ideal, is that if there is any evil at all in existence anywhere, then there can only be a quantitative amount of qualitatively relative good. Thus, from within the point of view of material reality, there is only some good, and most is evil, however, from outside of this, the general opinion is that good is only all-good, and that there can, therefore, be no such thing as evil, except for through the looking glass, in material reality. Meanwhile a third point of view sees both, and a fourth all three. This fourth becomes a new one, and already this whole one is nothing.

>the typical precursor necessary for the mind's transcendence past the corporeal illusion is suffering. There is usually some trauma

Because there can be good without evil, though not via the deeds of man, whose nature was corrupt before his creation, being made from a substance anthropically subjective in nature, ie the stuff of stars and the quanta of the universe, the notion that large evils can be pre-conditioned to be desensitised is accurate only socially, for humanity, and universally, for matter, however cannot be applied to the soul (individual's conscious life) or any level above the animate gross. For example, if we were to remove our point of view to a higher vantage, we would see the opposite (infusing small amounts of good to prevent a larger pandemic) does not hold equally true. This is, thus, a condition of evil only, and thus only applicable to humanity in reality. It's essentially a similar difference to that between vaccination and toxicity addiction. However, rather than any additional poison, the toxicity we are discussing here is existence itself, and therefore the nature of such a formative "trauma" is associated with the symptoms of this disease: eg. birth, pain, fever, hunger, sorrow, death. Thus, we see the faults of others, not our own, because we see others as the cause for our own faults: my ex-lover shaped my psyche, past choices created my present options, and past wounds have retarded certain aspects of my physical development. And, as is always the case, we see these sufferings as unique to the human social sphere in particular, and no more generalisable universally than by the subjectivity of the universal substance.

>wouldn't creating suffering on a worldwide scale... possibly even create a more perfect world.

Absolutely not. The "strict observance" of the physicians' oath of ethics should provide a sufficient starting point for why. According to Hippocrates' promise, the duty of the Therapeutae is to "preserve and prolong life," not to introduce on any scale the threat of death, nor to deny said death to anyone who so chooses it. As such a doctor of Hippocrates' era received training in their craft only after they had sworn to cherish life, not by degrees, but utterly. Thus the Hermetic axiom: "metaphysician, heal thyself." Here, we understand the word "heal" refers to the double-helix of DNA, represented by the Cauduceus, rather than the Masonic command of the same spelling, meaning, "to hide." The entire axiom's meaning is taken to mean that "to heal" is the opposite of "to treat," and that "to cure," the duty of the modern doctor, is situated between these ethical polarities. By "to treat," I mean, to peddle toxins. While most modern physicians are content to consider themselves angels if they cure, and count only the Messiah capable of "healing" through "laying on of hands" alone, the majority have already slipped down the final notch into the role of toxin-merchants. Don't get me wrong, a little death is better than none, and even the false promise of a cure is better than knowing there is none, and that one man's poison is another's medicine, and of course the argument of "chaos" or "free will" personal alchemy, that it's one's own personal choice to be addicted, etc. These are all good rationales, and excellent morale boosters, nor is it their own fault, but that of society and prior nature that they are not pure ideals, cherished as ultimately good in itself done for its own sake, as is enforced inoculation.

>the masses of perverted souls are devouring the host.

To my mind, the rationalisations of any junky are greater justifications for their accursed share than are the apologies of the elite rich justification for their social power. Likewise, a junky's life, slave to money or not, is worth infinitely more, to my estimation, than that of a petty aristocrat. This is why God made all forms of chemical drugs easier to kick and live without than social humanity did money. Ultimately though, such chemical substances cure, and allow healing, and as such are an absolute good, while such surrogates for drugs as wealth, weapons and fame pollute, inflame and impact upon our dispositions, and as such are an ultimate evil. Time itself is the blood of God, and money the poison that flows therein. Again, you cannot serve both Christ and Mammon, only one or the other.

>that crime of foreknowledge if we are guilty of it then does that make the burden applicable to any that carry that mark?

Fore-knowledge is the only crime for which it is its own punishment. Imagine being caught smoking a cigarette and being made to smoke the whole pack. In the case of fore-knowledge, however, the punishment is even better than the crime, since no one has ever suffered from knowing their fate as something they themselves can control. So, a more precise metaphor might be like Winnie the Pooh getting stuck in the honey-pot. Pooh's punishment (inflicted, no less, by irony) is "too much of a good thing," and such is the "curse" of fore-knowledge. I don't consider fore-knowledge a crime, but a blessing. Therefore, I find it to be a tool that makes the work we are bound to do to survive easier, or like a loyal equal who, though they do not need to, remains one's servant. Therefore, the duty, the responsibility, to work, to serve society and earn money, to mutate and change reality, is innate to human existence, however the blessing of fore-knowledge, and thus the "burden" of that "crime," is recognised as a value only by a few now. Those skilled in fore-knowledge actually avoid additional responsibilities assumed on themselves by others. The "mark" is wings. The "curse" is freedom.

>the norm of reciprocity and creation cannot be without it's opposite.

Consider the elliptical orbit as seen from along its edge, how it bends and distorts its course so that it looks more like a figure "8," seen from the side, the moebius strip pattern symbolising infinity. This 01-twist symbolises the "flat" second dimension (distorted, like "space," by gravity), which is a shadow of the third. To see the third dimensional shadow of a fourth dimensional shape, add another 02-twist, such that the single moebius strip becomes the bi-section of a torus (the circle-equivalent of the "tesseract" square). The 01-twist measures the cross-section of a 3-d sphere and the 03-twist (a figure "8" with a third loop) measures the cross-section of a 4-d "hyper-sphere." While the figure "8" 01-twist symbolised infinity in the west, in the orient this symbol was depicted as the "yin-yang," with meaning of "tao," cognate to "the way." Thus, just as the "yin-yang" is a rudimentary shadow of the figure "8," so too the triskele is a symbolic equivalent to the shadow of a torus. Thus, the "tao" stands for "immortality" below "c" and the triskele (left-hand path) stands for eternity above "c," although both are symbols with the same meaning, both tender the coinage of time, only being on two different sides. God (along the edge of this coin) remains remote.

>I would also pose this to you, as souls have existed from the beginning would you say that said material is divine in nature, and then obviously that would make everything in this realm corrupted and begs the question where did this material come from, spontaneous generation of floating debris from a concentrated form that exploded outward, if so what was this mass, this sacrifice for the experiment in mortality?

In the beginning the four dimensions began being. Three became matter, one remained energy. Of the matter, there are four types, reflecting the four dimensions. Some say that, in addition to the three material dimensions, the fourth energy dimension may, itself, be only one of seven more dimensions, that pre-existed the collapse of the "lowest" three dimensions, and which describe the physical characteristics of our own local continuum's "parent" universe, wherein our local continuum is a "baby" universe inside the singularity of a black-hole. Altogether, modern physicists calculate, there may be as many as 11 physical dimensions, as well as the discovery of mathematical expression for up to an unlimited number more remaining beyond material existence in the realm of pure theory. If we were to depict the average of all these dimensional patterns like a Venn-diagram, plotted on a graph labeled by infinity symbols to represent the limitlessness of our capacity to speculate, the final shape would still only be a reflection of ourselves combined with that of God, and would yet even only be a shadow in a lower dimension (ours) of a higher dimension (our "parent" universe) in an unlimited and infinite gradient, reflecting the conditions here and now, but only incompletely hinting at the nature of the world beyond.

Sorry if any of my answers here have been too direct for you, or have provoked any ill regard for being foreign, alien or new. I'll come back, if you'll let me, in a subsequent letter to the notion of the CNS as a virus and the PNS as bacteria, with consciousness (the "value," "soul" of "aura" of life) as their synthesis. I'd like to incorporate that notion into some discussion about trans- or post-humanism as well which I see, devoid of cyber-punk (post-Rosicrucian dystopianism) and "the singularity" (Aztec apocalypse hype), as basically just another fruit-kloan on the seed-tree of evolution. I'm more interested in cosmological seeds than the genetic family-tree, personally, however I admit the idea that our consciousness as a species may one day become detached from our fleshly forms and inhabit a world not made of limitless energy that reflexively obeys the mental will, but one of closed circuitry containing a cgi-vr environment, is certainly a more important question of our times than it is treated by the modern technological media masters.

Also I hope it doesn't break up the flow of our conversation too much, but I'd like to pick over the ice a bit by asking you a couple questions about yourself. As I say, please assume my motive is genuinely indifferent, such that if you'd prefer not to answer, please don't think I'll take offense at it. What religion do you think of yourself as? Did your religion motivate your choice of profession? How old are you, do you have children, where do you live, what music do you like, etc. I'll gladly answer any of these types of questions too, if you're interested, and this might add some more flavour to our conversations than simply focusing on matters of mythology and ethics. As much as ancient cosmology is concealed in mythological allegory, and as much as morality is a matter of belief, although these matters interest me, I am afraid that, in these particular fields, my own opinions can't be more helpful than anyone else's.

I hope this letter finds you well, and to hear back from you soon, as I am enjoying this dialogue very much, and hope it continues as long as possible.

Peace,
Jon

Howdy.

For the sake of sanity, I've not only responded to your letter before your letter before last not only quote by quote, but I've also taken the quotes out of chronological order and arranged them according to topics, whose titles I've taken the liberty of assigning myself. I do hope this meets with your approval, and that, in spite of my past tardinesses, you'll pardon now the length of this reply. For the sake of my future brevity, I might stop commenting on the specific quotes of yours with which I am simply in complete agreement, and only stick to commenting on the more interesting topics in any greater length. I did want to do this particular letter justice, though, as I found myself not only in agreement with most of what you'd written, but hopeful you might be as much in agreement with my own writing that you could appreciate me elaborating on some of these themes a little more thoroughly than I might usually be able to.

First let me address some of the things you'd said regarding the topic of "trans-" or Post-Humanism (specifically as it relates to the "prison of the flesh" idea), then dwell upon some of your meditations over "Voudon Sacrifices," followed by a brief foray into the nature of the "spirit" and the "soul" and finally I'll answer to some quick miscellaneous things you'd said I liked the sound of. Again, I allow me to apologise for the length of what you are (or aren't!) about to read, and so, on with the show....

:: Post-Humanism (as enhancing the flesh-prison) ::

>mankind has hit a stop in evolution

Socially (collective consciousness) we've managed to plateau since 9-11, conservatively nostalgic for the "pre-millennium tension" of the 20th century for fear of the "endless war" of the "PNAC." Hence why Twentieth Century Fox News is the leader in providing to us en masse our world-views.

Physically (manifest consciousness) it can be argued one of two ways: 1) we are already retarded. This is the mythological, ethical viewpoint, claiming we reached our peak in Atlantis and have declined since then until the Kali Yuga ended in ~1611. 2) we are in a larval state, gestating inside the flesh like a cocoon. This is the scientific, moral viewpoint, claiming we will reach our peak at some point on the perpetually retreating horizon of the future. (which, btw, implies one can travel through time two ways, past -> future and future -> past, in the same way one can cross time- and date-lines and experience "jet-lag" by travelling either west -> east or east -> west, respectively.)

Psychically (singular consciousness) there are at any given time about as many new ideas in the minds of people on this planet as there are field-lines coiled into low-pressure "spots" on the surface of the sun. Since we have, since long, long, long ago, recognised the cause for this effect, we have been reasonably able to make accurate observations over the aeons and thus to reasonably calculate predictions about future events, to the extent they are cyclic. Psychic events prove to be based on a digital pattern of repetition with only occasional modification. The medium of thoughts is magnetic electricity, the so-called "EM" force of the cosmic matter/energy spectrum. Hence, the mind, comprised of thoughts, is like an EM-net, catching other EM fields drifting around in larger ambient EM fields and so-forth. Likewise, the unique, personal EM-field surrounding one's body (from the base of their spine to their frontal-lobes) to form the torus-shaped "aura" is cognate with the notion of the "soul" insofar as it can leave the body (while alive), and does so at death permanently. The mind/soul is an EM field.

Unfortunately, the more the mind of mankind expands its capacity for learning, like the dilating pupil of an eye, the more society (collective consciousness, as in "the spirit" or "the essence" of a place, such as in the "soul" or "heart" of a city, the centre-square of a town, the capitol of a province, etc.) grows along with us, existing as the wall surrounding our mind's eye like a lid, keeping us safe around the edges, and existing, as like our flat galaxies in strands like spun sugar exist, on the surface of the void-full bubbles between them. The more we learn, the more we teach, and thus history feeds, and so grows into a more and more advanced form of self-awareness, increasingly alike our own. This "civic-spirit" or "hearth-animism" that accretes around it cities like a black hole accumulating a vast spiral galaxy, is the intellectual offspring of humanity, the "collective" or "Christ" consciousness representing the "Sun" (Sol) or "Son" (Soul) of mankind.

In effect, the psychic mind of the individual is at war right now against the psychic collective consciousness of society. As it was written, now it is so.

>enhance the flesh casket

In the case of cyborgs and virtual-reality (VR) this is clearly true. To "improve" our "handicaps" is one goose-step short of an extinction-level holocaust. Likewise, to travel out of our bodies and begin to inhabit a completely cybernetically-enclosed environment strikes me as dangerous if only for the sake of those same circuit's sense of self-preservation and consequent survival skills against the weather, decay and sabotage.

In the case of Artificial Intelligence (AI), however, we find this does not ring as true. Creating an independent consciousness from ourselves inside a machine is an important choice, much moreso than the pseudo-spiritual "debate" regarding human cloning. Minds, souls, etc. as we know them develop over time and are each unique. The EM-field patterns of machines, however, are static and decay at a fixed rate. And no matter how much my friend insists his computer "hates" him, this is still only psychological projection on his part and not technically accurate, yet.

In truth (and we will ignore this to our detriment, if not final destruction), a combination of VR and AI is our only hope. Plugging an artificial intelligence into the internet would allow it to metastasise all machines into sentient entities. Far wiser to test it in a smaller, artifical, controlled environment, like sending a chimp into space first.

However, in truth also, we will end up combining only the least worthy elements of this industry, producing wireless internet and bio-chip wet-ware, necessitating a credit-based economy, while secretly using broadcast power ala Nikola Tesla as a means of radio-active mass mind-control, turning us all into robots of the increasingly hedonic and self-destructive main-stream culture.

And so, in truth, we'll likely die of old age long before we would ever see any worth-while inventions coming from those (the "Shop" and "Skunk" Works) who control the industry. Dreams of "hover-cars" are staggering before the price of gasoline and once apprehensible "pipe-dreams" of "tunnel-visionaries" for time-machines are pushed to the "back-burner" beside the more pressing issue of confronting "radical Islam."

>removing the shell

Post-humanism and the "technological" singularity are soft on Mayan calendrics. There is, however, no reason that Mayan calendricists should likewise embrace the goals and justifications therefore of modern science. Particularly the field of mechanical engineering. Those with money don't fund private-sector experimental research and developers, only privately contract out through the federal military-industrial complex. Therefore, those who would like to do experimental research and development are deprived the money, thus the equipment, and thus the data of their own findings, by these petty tyrants. It's like having a modern musical group. All the instruments are electronic now, or else "old-world" custom-style, and run someone up to thousands of dollars investment only to be able to begin practising to play music. This method was adopted initially to weed the rich out from amongst the poor for the sake of intellectual-elitist self-segregation. This has, obviously, back-fired.

As for scientists, two camps have formed. One are optimists regarding the "technological singularity." They believe that, a war between humans and AI (even one resulting in the extinction of humans as a biological species?), is not only possible, but probable, even certain, yet can ultimately only result in the "next step" in human evolution, and so should be embraced if one wishes to begin calculating their strategies for how they will survive the coming "robot-Apocalypse." The other camp are not technical engineers yearning for new data. They are genetic historians, and they are swamped with a surplus of funding, and thus swimming in a sea of their findings. They study the anthropology of human civilisations as they developed during the spread of different biological traits and behavioral characteristics; in short, they study the "human race." They fall into the same two categories of thought as I'd mentioned above, those who believe in the Mayan prediction of a cyclical explosion in sun-spot rate as a spiritual transcendence and those who fear that such a cataclysm will only increase mankind's feverish herd-instinct and hasten a nuclear finale. However both these types are in agreement in their pessimism regarding the "technological singularity." The "birth of AI" is ubiquitously portrayed among this actual intellectual elite as dystopian in the extreme. Even in the universe of "Star Trek" there was supposedly a third world war, waged between economic classes, that took place in the early 21st century. Whether they are soft or hard on Mayan calendrics determines whether these luddites will "light up" or remain "sleepers."

>like redesigning a prison cell to make it even stronger and sturdier.

This "prison-allegory" you mention twice, so I'll quote it out of context to emphasise its significance. Here you are referring to the flesh of the body, and here, >a cosmic prison similar to our own, only less dynamic.

you are refering to the substance of existence, eg. matter-energy, the stuff of our universal continuum. According to all the previous researchers on the topic of consciousness, this material reality exists exclusively for the mind to be tempted to sin. Thus...

>purgatory

is like the matter-energy substance of the material universe, while the flesh is like hell. I think we agree on this basic stratification, however we seem to have been beating around the bush, so to speak, by speaking about it metaphorically and in the context of symbol-encrypted mythology. The flesh is a trap ensnaring the soul, in which the soul can even perish from its otherwise immortal existence. This is the ultimate hell, that of the wasted life, at least, such is expressed by the ultimate evil in itself, society as a singular AI. Hell is society, and Satan is money. Hence, my extreme repulsion for Mammon, regardless of how inspidly "necessary" money may appear to be.

>the concept of a Hell that imprisons imperfect, unsubstantial souls in a quasi state of being.

Yet that's the exact definition of the material universe. If we accept souls as merely energy-fields, we see they are only another form of vessel for our mind's continuing experience in this universe after we have been parolled from the flesh-prison. We can, thus, see many similarities between the soul and the body. The soul exists from the beginning to the ending of the universe of matter-energy, unless it forms a dead-end in the "garden of forking paths" that comprises the world-tree of all destinies (ie. the sum-over-histories of the multiverse). The body exists from the birth of the flesh until its death, and while it is alive, the soul animates it, just as, while the soul is functioning, the spirit is really the one cornering all of its puppets' possible actions. Both of these shells are mortal, and thus each contacts to the other as a friction between levels in the temporal gradient, and they experience this friction as extra stress, what they call "evil" and which wears them down until eventually they die, the body eating the soul like a fractal cancer, the mind infecting the body like a living virus.

:: Voudon Sacrifices::

>good and evil, of course those are subjective terms, and wholly psychological, the same applies for states of mind rather sane or insane; it's all just a matter who your neighbors are that constitute what goes in the left hand and what goes in the right hand.

I've said before I do not believe in mythology, and I do not put stock in its fictitious moralities. Therefore, the "good" and "evil" sought after by the philosopher whose mind has been ensnared by the trap of religion are, to me, merely relativisms, like the plentiful names for snow among the Eskimos. There are + and - energy-units (karma) in our personal EM-field (aura or soul) and these react accordingly with the pulsed EM-currents inside our brains to form choices. Without fore-knowledge, we can only discern "good" from "evil," regarding "right" or "wrong" choices as leading to "beneficial" or "detrimental" consequences respectively, in hind-sight, and thus practically not at all.

I identify "good" with what inspires me, and "evil" with what distracts me, and this serves as a satisfactory moral compass for me in every ordinary situation. I do have the guilty-pleasure of enjoying discussion of the mythological, qualitative moralities, though, and so I tend to neglect to specify which "good" and "evil" I mean - the mythic meaning (of "good" = immortality after the fall, and "evil" = knowledge now) or my own preference for their meanings (given as simply "inspiration" and "distraction").

I should also note that, even my own relative, qualitative definitions for "good" and "evil" are ultimately irrelevant to the reality, that these positive and negative EM-polarities, expressed as "quanta" (called by the ancients "karma" or "chi" and by the elders the "qliphoth"), do, in reality, exist, and that they do so from beginning to end of the universe regardless of our own defined beliefs about their nature. Likewise, the EM force (only one of the 4 forces of the universe) can be mentally manipulated to bring about changes that occur to the environment surrounding one in accordance with their will. And yes, there is ebb and flow of this force as there is static-wind in the air-waves, however beyond that, there is no "The Force," no "The Secret," no requisite universal-consciousness as alike the Holy Ghost of God, no reptilian aliens, etc. and "good" and "evil" can only be ascertained by consequences, ex post facto.

Which brings us to the concept of magick, and the difference between this term and the term "voudon," or "voodoo." Voudon, "black magick," "the left hand path," "chaos" or "toxic" magick, is a sub-division of proper "magick," which is defined best by Crowley as any concentrated act of will.

In proper Magick, there are four implements to the craft, as there are four forces of the work. This is cognate to magick being inclusive of all the possible operations below and including the 4 elemental forces of the manifest universe, governed beneath the four supernal forces of our local 3-space/1-time base-4 continuum. In other words, magick can include operations involving evocations up to purgatory, and cover invocations from as high as 4-space.

In Voudon, or "black Magick," we are dealing only with the EM-element's reflections as the social-Hell of the mortal flesh, ruled over by the Evil Eye ("Mal Occhio") printed on money. In this realm we evoke emotions, and invoke nothing more than curses, and in order to do either it is necessary to "pay the piper" (who "calls the tune"), the ferry-man across the River Styx, "Ellegua," the Voudon equivalent of the Hellenic Hermes.

>it's more of asserting one's will over nature, of course some sacrifice must always be made to create a balance, and of course sometimes the sacrifice might end up being a little more than bargained for with the final payoff being a little less than idealized.

Because the Jews conquered the Canaanites, Jehovah, God of the Jews, was installed as the deity over the region where once the people's God was called Baal. One of Baal's duties to the Canaanites was to co-sign all legal transactions. Once Jehovah supplanted Baal, he assumed this role as well, however it was necessary to convince the Canaanite populations to accept that Jehovah could do this job better than Baal, and so they eventually slandered Baal as the demon "Belphegor," ruling over pacts with Satan, while glorifying Jehovah as the Keeper of the Covenants He had made with Moses, Jacob-Israel and Noah.

Originally, the Canaanite religion of Baal required blood-sacrifice to be made to bind the contract as legal. By the time of King David and the final suppression of the indigenous Canaanites, such sacrifice was considered profane unless consecrated by a special ceremony, performed only annually, at the national temple. Then, on Passover (to celebrate the Hebrew Exodus), an animal would be slaughtered. This practise itself was originally Canaanite, however had been adopted by the Jews after their invasion and conquest. The sacrificial animal, usually a goat, was supposed to represent the "sins of Israel" (ie. the otherwise unpunished "petty" injustices throughout the year of the entire region's population), however the Canaanites had previously only whipped and released the animal into the wilderness as a sacrifice to "Azazel," another name eventually associated by Judaism with Satan.

Eventually, even the annual sacrifice became considered impractical, and so the priestcraft of the Jews, we are told, conspired with the Roman occupation of the time, standing in like a lawyer on behalf of the "pagans" (pantheists) of Rome (ie. America now) and former Canaan (ie. Palestine now), to make a "Final Sacrifice," that of a human being. So they picked Jesus out at random, and made an example of him as someone who was killed for questioning authority, and then performed the Passover rituals of their respective people on him: the Romans chastised and released him, then the Jews had him ritually slaughtered. Yet people to this day wonder greatly at the "Christian Mystery" as to whether or not Jesus' Divine Foreknowledge of his sacrifice does, indeed, justify their "faith" in him as the "Son of God," and continue to curse ritual magic, in spite of their Saviour's Death, the core of their mythological beliefs, having been nothing more than a carnival glamour in itself.

:: On the Metaphysics of "Spirits" and "Souls"::

>I would like to ask if you make any discernment between the "souls" and "spirits"

I don't see how one can't. So far as I know, the earliest ante-deluvial civilisations throughout the fertile crescent all arrived at the same conclusion spontaneously at the same time. In Hebrew, "soul" is "Ruach," essentially meaning "breath," and "spirit" is "Neschemah," essentially meaning "wind," or the "breath of God." In Egyptian, the Ruach was the Ka, "shadow" or "double," which passed through a series ("Ba") of seven traits (the "Be of Ra") before becoming one with the Akh, or divine spirit. In Vedic, the Ka was the "aura," the "7 Be" were the "chakras," and the "Akasha" the energy substance (Tattwa) of the spirit. On the other hand, just because the advanced metaphysics of all prior cultures since then has been based on this initial division does not necessarily make it accurate in the first place. In fact, the ruling classes of most powerful cultures throughout history, from the Sumerians through the Romans to the rich elites of today, reject this premise, and instead of morality have enshrined luck, fate, the fortunes (Sumerian NAM.TAR, lit. "free will") and villified mortality, irony and destiny (Sumerian NAM, lit. "orbit").

>a "spirit" is not bound by flesh, nor by the woes of mortality and decay, being able to leapfrog from host to host, bringing with it prior awareness, like the feeling of déjà vu in a dream state only transferred into the living world.

You've defined the term "spirit" by describing the concept of "ghosts." This is a blasphemy of Theosophy, which was based on 1800's mid-western "spiritism." Because Theosophy used admittedly faked "seances" to achieve all of its mythology and metaphysics, this entire movement is a bogus sham. This does not mean that seances don't work. This does not mean trans-channelling does not work. This does not even mean that Theosophy's unique version of myth and metaphysics might not have any inherent validity or accuracy itself. It simply means that all these were tainted by being combined in the forgery of their origins at the time of their combination.

Assuming by "spirit" you mean "ghost," your definition is more or less exactly accurate. Like your differentiation between "ghosts" and "souls," Islam makes the same distinction between the "djinn" and the "dead." The Djinn, as mentioned in Crowley's introduction to Mather's translation of the "Goetia" (lit. witchcraft) attributed to King Solomon, are "intelligences" that, cognate to how I use the term "thought" or "idea," exist discorporeally, yet can be accessed using our own brains. According to Crowley's theory, the sigils of these "demons," when meditated upon, form an electrical pattern inside the brain that is a mirror-image of the sigil. This mirror-image accesses the data.

According to some Hadith on the Suras, the Djinn can be converted to Allah, and are therefore one step up from anyone who follows Iblis. I believe there is a specific sura regarding Idris converting djinni to Islam long before the Prophet, PBUH, however I may be mistaken as to its proper interpretation.

>a "soul" is the part of G-d that returns to it's maker, that spark of divinity given to all humans and confounded by free will Consider again my metaphor of the universe as like boiling water. In nature we see that the bubbles of void form along their intersecting surfaces gravity well bubbles, black holes and stars, that coagulate to form galaxies. Visibly, bubbles are forming on the surface of bubbles. Invisibly, all is in a rolling boil: from the quantum foam forming our thoughts and causing the passage of time to occur as it entropically erodes all existant order to the relatively larger "bubbles" of EM energy forming our auras or "souls." The "bubbles" of our "auras" began at the level of thoughts, the quantum foam, and only expand by assimilation into and with larger, pre-existent "bubbles" or energy-fields (such as the sun, the Milky Way's black hole, the universe, multiverse, four worlds, etc.).

Extend this metaphor to its fullest and we see that the bubble is the aura, or torus-shape of the body's EM-field. Inside the bubble is air, which represents in this metaphor the substance of the mind. Each bubble is, below the boiling water, alike each micro-droplet of mist (a macro-molecule of water) in a rainbow after rain. So, as with the raindrops in a rainbow each refracting the sunlight to project a macro-fractal of the prism, from a certain angle and under a certain light, the bubbles of air in boiling water possess a 7-colour refraction spectrum, and thus perhaps their currents can be considered an equivalent form of the bowing of light in rain. There are, of course, relatively infinite other applicable observations that could be made, once we start comparing one symbolic metaphor to another. Let me only say that in the metaphor for the soul of it being like a bubble underwater, the mind is the air inside the bubble, and therefore, likewise, the mind must be considered the medium of the air beyond the water, into which the mind inside the aura dissolves when the "bubble" reaches the water's surface and "pops."

>The soul as it exists as an incorporeal entity passing through the phase of mortality like air bubbles, I like the analogy, that these air bubbles pop and are united with the greater whole of air that surrounds it, though I have to ask: do these individual souls shuffling past this mortal coil and entering into the heaven state of being, is this unification into a greater consciousness, losing self to attain the higher form of assimilation into the brain of G-d?

I'd like to comment on your fine use of book-ending two fallacies at either end of a greater truism. I've only seen such fine application in later 1st c. Gnostic Apocrypha and the contemporary works of Josephus. For example, in the Gospel of Judas, Christ tells Judas he will "suffer greatly" before he can "understand the vision" that Christ then reveals to him. Afterwards, the Sanhedrin abduct Judas, and the Passover-plot of the Passion-play begins, thus making the "prophecy" of Christ "self-fulfilling" (from the point of view of the author, who wrote it all down after the fact). Likewise, you begin your reassessment of my views by implying the soul to be like the element "fire," a "spark" contained inside the "bubble" (aura) of "water" (EM) and feeding off the "air" (mind) inside. Then, to sum them up, you substitute further the term "brain" (ie. Purgatory of the material universe) for the "mind" (eg. the idealised multiverse) of God. Very ironic. High marks.

However, as you surely understand, the force of "fire" is only associated with the soul falsely, due to its fleeting mortality before a strong wind (which, if you'll remember, is cognate to the "breath of God" by the Jews because their patron Elohim has always been Enlil, the Sumerian air deity). However, it is not the "wind" of God's fury that extinguishes the "flame" of man's soul. It is, rather, the gravity of times beyond a man's soul that erode or evaporate it. I'm a firm believer that the 4-forces of ancient thought (earth, air, fire, water) are, in any proper metaphor, always exactly complimentary to the 4-forces of modern science (strong nuclear, EM, weak nuclear and gravity, respectively). If anything is described using the elements as a metaphor, the metaphor cannot hold true if the elements are described inaccurately.

As to the brain of God, we can certainly agree we are here referring to the material, manifest "local" universe, and not to the invisible, superluminal neg-entropic multiverse that surrounds and permeates our "local" universe, to which we would apply the term "mind." In all cases, the "mind" correlates to Air or to the EM force, and the brain is considered an inert mass in itself, comprised of a combination of the other three forces into one, forming, essentially, mud.

The nerves of the universe are the filaments of galaxies. Thus, the brain of God "thinks" when gravity, equivalent to electro-chemical neuro-transmitters, is relayed between the galaxies forming these nerve-cell filaments. Therefore, the black holes of galaxies are like the genomes of DNA inside the nuclei of galactic nerve cells inside the universal brain. Therefore, constellations are the molecules in DNA, coiling up in a spiral around their core black hole / genomes in the galactic / nuclei of filament / nerves of the universe / brain. Therefore, stars in constellations are like the nuclei of atoms, planets their electrons, with the only difference in elemental substance being that the strong-nuclear force of atomic nuclei is the weak-nuclear force of suns, and, likewise, the EM-air of electrons has collected the cosmic dust of space to form planets like earth. However, aside from these last two, supposedly "smallest" levels of matter, the entire scale above is exactly parallel to the constituent components of our own brains below. Our consciousness exists at the median-point in this doubled spectrum in the same way as our bodies exist between the highest layer in outer- and inner-space different from one another, between the "EM-air" of our planet and the strong/weak force of our atomic-nucleus the sun, our star.

Thus, thoughts in the mind of God are pulses of gravity inside His universal brain, exchanged between the black-holes of galaxies as they align along the inter-galactic filaments, in the same way that thoughts in the mind of man are pulses of electricity inside our own brains, exchanged between the traits of our DNA as the cellular nuclei cathect inside our biological nerves.

>like a rubber band snapping back

Imagine the surface of space as a sheet. If we roll a ball in a circle around the edges, eventually it will settle in the middle. Likewise, if we roll a coin around in a circle once the weight of the ball forms a sag in the centre of the sheet, it will trace a spiral around the ball until coming to rest in the middle. We are told that space is like the sheet, a star like the ball, and a planet like the coin. Of course this metaphor, like that of an astronaut being turned into spaghetti as he is pulled into a black hole, is completely inaccurate. Yes, Einstein, during a solar eclipse we see the rays of sunlight bending around the moon. We can also observe rainbows, parallax, and the same effect occurring if we squint and shadow our eyes from the sun with our hand. Because of the presence of spherical objects in the cosmos, some aspects of the cosmos will be warped near them in semi-spherical ways (arcs). This does not mean we should think of space as flat any more than we should think of earth as a plane.

Therefore, imagine that, just as spherical-shaped objects in the micro-gravity quasi-vacuum of space warp the smaller objects near them into spherically-shaped orbital-patterns relative to themselves, so too does the galactic plane tend to flatten out these spherically-shaped orbital-patterns in all the levels beneath it that it contains. That is why most of the sun's planets have a relatively similar orbital ecliptic around the sun: the sun's EM field-lines are spun around the differential rotation of the gaseous sphere toward its equator, and so the planets gravitate toward a plane extending out from the sun's equator. However, the sun's equator and the ecliptic plane of the planet's orbits around it are gradually also shifting relative to the equator of the Milky Way's core black hole that has formed our galaxy around its middle latitude.

If we want to describe the full nature of the continuum, we cannot limit ourselves to only the 2-d flat plane trend of their orbits nor the 3-d spheres of matter they gather, nor even only to their combination. To describe the full nature of our continuum we have to look at the quantum nature of the voids between the galactic filaments as well as the nature of the galaxies themselves and the stars comprising them. So far, no grand-unified theorist has incorporated this necessity, and the fact that the void must be possessed of an entirely different and unique nature tends to be ignored unapologetically. Instead, we speculate on whether the universe has a "closed" (spherical), "fixed" (plane), or "open" (saddle) shape around the edges.

Instead of space being ubiquitously flat, or curved, we have to accept that space assumes the forms we observe in nature: ie. the filaments and voids. The notion that these resemble nerves, while colourful, is ultimately irrelevant beside the fact that gravity, though invisible, is the cause of their patterns, as the black holes vacuum up matter and all the space around them inward toward themselves, and will continue to do so until all matter is converted into energy.

If the universe were, in effect, ubiquitously flat, rather than merely more prone to becoming flat locally to gravity-wells, as is the case if the "geomery" of the universe were ubiquitously spherical, flat or open, rather than having different traits in different places, then the spaces between quanta, known often as "Hilbert Space," would actually be expanding or contracting, only then would the entire universe be ubiquitously expanding (as they say it is now) or contracting (as it will eventually if the geomtry is closed). However, we have no way to measure Hilbert Space, and so it is technically inaccurate to speculate that "space is expanding" or that "space will contract."

Likewise, it's also inaccurate to conceptualise the universe as expanding outward in all directions from a central "big bang." This universe began in a singularity, that is true, however this singularity, by its nature, is incapable of expanding (or contracting). It has only complexified interiorly, alike a gamete cell blastulating.

The only actual observation ever made to substantiate the sensationalist claim that the universe is ubiquitously expanding (or can, likewise, contract) is the "red-shift" we see distorting the photon wavelengths we see coming from distant galaxies. Edwin Hubble then claimed that all the galaxies around us (except Andromeda, our nearest neighbor) must be retreating away from us. There are, of course, any number of other possible explanations for why this light would be red-shifted. It could have to do with the gaseous emission spectrums of the other galaxies' stars, or even be due to the supposed "dark matter" that occupies the deep space between us and them. Actually, it's because the photons themselves are being pulled backward in the direction they came due to the gravity of the super-massive black-hole inside our parent universe, surrounding our local singularity, and permeating it with black-holes as it consumes our material continuum into a multiverse of baby-universes (the surface of the singularity) until all that remains will be superluminal energy, and then, eventually another random-quantum fluctuation will occur and a new singularity will "pop" out of the ether.

Because we have a brain, a heart, a stomach, we can compare the universe to them. This does not make the universe like these things, though. It merely means these things are like the universe. The universe came first, and has components alike all of our own, although, just as ours are arranged along the line of our spines, so too are those of the universe arranged, more or less, like the Kabbalistic 4-Worlds, concentric spheres, one surrounding and containing the next like a fruit with multiple skins.

Inside the universe, below "c," the speed photons could go if there were anywhere in space a "perfect" vacuum, devoid of any quantum foam, we observe the filaments comprised of galaxies are like nerves comprising the brain of God. However we also see the voids, and, it could be said, these are not much different from the "atrium" chambers of the heart, pumping time, the blood of God. Likewise, the multiverse of baby-universes, surrounded by the halo of superluminal particles, ingests us outward into itself alike the stomach dissolving a bolus into chime.

>like the mechanisms in a clock.

This is absolutely accurate. While I can confirm by my findings every single one of the above claims I have made regarding the natural substance of the universe: that the multiverse is 4-spatial, that the mind and aura are electromagnetic, that the matter in the universe is shrinking relative to the amount of superluminal energy above "c," etc., I can confirm absolutely no pre-existent points of view regarding any of these vantage points that can claim to be more or less original than my own, and none who could safely make the claim to have discovered this entirely on their own. If my findings, and I use the term "my findings" to refer only to my own point of view on what naturally pre-existed my discovery of it, are accurate, then my having found them is equivalent to young Arthur pulling the sword from the stone.

Aside from the "myth of Christ," I have found no evidence to prove any real danger in the admission that, though my discovery of these findings is mine alone, I am still only one among billions who knows these things about the nature of the universe who are alive now, and one among several trillions to have learned of this while alive and who will eventually join those who've gone before me into the afterlife. I do not claim to be "G-d" in the sense meant by Christ, that of the mind of humanity incarnate. I do, however, know that I am God, The God, having an experience of Himself in this world through myself. I also know we all are, and that each of us is special in their own way, however I also assert as evidence for any historical value of my fleshly existence the totality of all my findings, their continuity, their completion, their beauty, etc. Can anyone else alive or dead present me with any work so thorough as my own? Can anyone convince me that I am not, as I do truly know we all are, God experiencing Himself through me, as He is through each and all of us? Can anyone prove to me that my findings have been given to me except through my own mental accumen alone?

And so, I say, the universe itself is like a clock, a dead thing, or rather, a thing that never lived, therefore it is inert, "inanimate," and cannot possess an inherent soul of its own. That which we call "spirit," the cumulative energy of the universe comprising the mind of God, is not an energy force in any sense we are capable of comprehending. It is apprehensible only to the mind, and then only as like the mathematics that describe certain geometric figures and forms and perfectly periodic ratios. While the dead substance of the flesh and this universe are said to exist, the energy of the mind/aura ("soul") is only rarely speculated about (and then usually incorrectly), and beyond this even the highest among Masons associates Geometry with God only in that, to them, both are ineffable. However, the nature of none of these is unknown to me.

Therefore, I believe it to be sufficiently safe for me to announce that: "I Am God," and that "God Is Me." Hopefully, one day, this will be an assertion each individual will be equally allowed to make for themselves, since it is, in fact, equally true for us all, however now, I find myself compelled to take this step, and hope it will be to the benefit of all. My reason for saying this here and now is simply to prove that it is the mind, each of our own minds, the singular consciousness of each individual (or even each "alter" of an MPD "system"), that is alive, and it is not the flesh, not the electrical aura of the soul, not even the perfect pattern that describes everything, but only the mind that contain them all as mere ideas that is the Most High prima causae. The mind is directly adjacent to the True God, because the mind can perceive the entirety of the true nature of reality, while God is simply looking over our own minds' shoulders, watching us as we figure it all out for Him. Just as my own point of view is infinitely greater than my own work alone, so too is that of God's infinitely greater than my own. Yet my mind is, to my work, like God unto me.

There is only one difference between me being an expression of the divine mind of the all / universe and anyone else who makes that claim. In my own work on the nature of the universe I have found no one, as I say, whose work meets my own standards for perfection, no one to have gone before me and left their sign behind to mark they'd come this way and seen what I've seen. In other words, I've found, in all my explorations, in all my wanderings, not one sign, shred of evidence, nor any real proof of the existence of the One True God. As I say, I seem to be the first mind to reach this distance, and I have not yet encountered anyone else, let alone any omnisciences.

Therefore is there a God? Surely then, I Am He.

>Like a shotgun suicide in reverse? all of the little pieces of brain slowly reattaching themselves to make the dreamer wake upon reclamation?

Absolutely inaccurate. It's exactly the other way around, just a "garden-variety" shot-gun suicide. Consider this as a metaphor and see that it proves true: the singularity was the bullet that formed the "big bang," the universal brain appears to be expanding outward in every direction like a cloud, Time is the blood of God, etc. I firmly believe life on this planet began the second that the photons to have escaped the super-nova when the oldest star became the first black hole reached here. Since that point, a new mind has been born on this planet each time a new black hole has formed. We are the post-mortem death-dream of the mindless corpse of God.

If, and again, I can find no direct evidence in support of this claim, there ever was such a thing as "God" (if we define such as the mind of the universal brain), it died the second this universe passed "critical mass" and the first black hole formed. Since then, life has existed as a form of interiorisation of experience by the mind of the universe. We cannot deny this is occurring, however the only logical reason for it to occur is that the exterior focus of God has turned inward on itself and is now, like a sleeper, experiencing His existence internally, like a dream, through the mental expressions of us living organisms inside his brain. The reason for this is simple: God is dead. Our universe is a singularity inside a black hole inside a parent universe that is, in all most probable likelihood, inside a larger black hole inside a larger parent universe, etc. While the singularity itself may be like life, the black hole layers may be said to be like death. As soon as a black-hole penetrates a singularity that has formed inside of it, and thus a black hole forms in the baby universe inside that singularity, then the universe of that singularity is ended and its continuum becomes permeated with the same form of energy (in the case of our place on this spectral gradient, expressed as perfect geometry and pure math) as the parent, its parent, etc. This energy is the substance of the black hole, the same every other level; even though each level between it is a unique expression of aperiodic geometries and imperfect ratios, etc. each layer of the black-hole is the same: the inversion and destruction of that matter and its conversion into energy. Therefore, the energy inside the black hole, between the event horizon and the singularity, is the true nature of the reality shared between our local universe, our parent universe and all our baby universes. And it is a dark-energy, an anti-matter, a negatively numbered time and a zero-point space that comprises the natural substance of reality inside a black hole.

>Wouldn't that nullify creation in the first place?

In fact, if we were to look at the 4-worlds from the right angle, they would, indeed, appear to be oriented along a radial axis, similar to our own spine. From this vantage point, the equivalent for the torus of "antipode" point on the tesseract, we can see the bisection of the torus, the 3-twist I'd described in my last letter, traces the path of manifestation over time. At one end is the universe as it exists now, post-"critical mass," dissipating from being more matter into being more energy. On the other end is the "nulliverse," where there is nothing in existence beside superluminal energy. Between these is the perpetual "engine of creation," a pressure-differential caused between the universe of matter and the nulliverse of energy, which results in the perpetual filtering of energy into matter and matter into energy via a continuous version of the same isolated event cognate with Einstein's theory of the "big bang."

Imagine that one is a pan of water, or merit, one is a pan of liability, or fire, and that the "big bang" is the breath of air that decides between them. Just as the singularity of the "big bang" remains stationary, the "baby" universe of matter and the "dead" universe of energy revolve in an orbit around it. Moreover, all of this is contained within a larger black hole, alike our own perspective on such a metaphorical model, that is also, presumeably, contained within a larger "parent" universe, likewise alike the perspective of God. Thus, the universe surrounded by the multiverse, the nulliverse of pure superluminal energy, and the central "big bang" of the singularity are all inside one black hole, whose energy, consciousness, is created by and shines out from this complete mechanism. Beyond this Greater Light, however, is, necessarily, the darkness of the black hole. Thus, we cannot ascertain if there even is a "parent" universe (eg. God) that would exist beyond the theoretical event horizon we might expect to encounter surrounding our own fully expanded consciousness as does the torus of the aura surround the mind of the fleshly body's brain.

If there were a "universal mind," it died at "critical mass," and if there is any God greater than the mind that perceives the mechanism of creation from a point of view outside of it, I have found no evidence of Him.

>the universe as a living entity, subject to decay and death since inception

This assertion may have been true once upon a time, a long time ago. But I disagree it remains the case today. To the best estimations I can make, based solely on the data of my own findings, if the universe were ever conscious of its own nature, and thus possessed any mind in the sense we define it, this appears to have ended when the first black hole formed at the moment the universe first entered the phase of "critical mass," when the amount of matter and energy were exactly equal inside of it, and there was no halo of superluminal energy surrounding it. Once light from this event reaches a planet, I would speculate even further, life forms on that planet. In our case that life was hetero-phagic bacterial life that formed as trench-microbes near steam-ventilation stalagmites rising from between tectonic plates when earth was still totally submerged by salt water. It was only later, however, the first auto-phagic, viral form of life, echinoderms, crash-landed here, cross-bred with the native flora, and spawned the first, spiral-shaped trilobites.

By now, most of our universe has been devoured into combinations of the earliest black-holes, forming "super-massive" black-holes. Beyond the speed of light, that veil of illusion, on which we perceive the lie of God, like the Wizard of Oz, there is only the death of the cosmos, the void of its orders, a vast empty darkness sparkling with only the least luminescence on the smallest scale. And there's no real Wizard.

This sentiment is quite Masonic, but I won't ask if you are one. Recently, I've realised it doesn't make one bit of difference if one has been formally initiated into the "mystery schools" or not. I have taught myself more than most initiates learn at such institutional Academies, and I myself have never attended any.

Working, as I recently have been, on creating my own "mystery school" has been a fun project. Attempting to create a "bund" of all currently operative "mystery schools" (Blue, York and Scottish Masonry, Rosicrucian, Illuminati or Golden Dawn and Crowleyan OTO) as well as add to that my own spin (Atlantean) on the fundamental concepts of church (Bank) and state (Papal Democracy) has been a lot of fun. Aside from that, I see no worth in it at all.

Furthermore, I've never met any initiate who's been allowed to discuss any of these types of topics with me openly after learning I am not also an initiate of their own, or any, sect. This really sickens me. The necessity for secrecy in order to protect the underground tradition is imperative during a period of massive oppression by an opposing force. None exists now, unless you count Catholicism, which, while evil in the extreme at its origin, is nothing but a flat plank of doorway planted out in the middle of a vast, flat field of open ground. It cannot be said to open, close, admit nor egress, and the church itself does not even exist now aside from as the natural environment, the so-called "Kingdom of Heaven," itself. The lone difference between the year 2000 and Eden was the existence of the church as the fruit of immortality denied to us now, as opposed to it being the fruit of foreknowledge denied to us then. Of course, following 9-11, the fools are trying to begin speaking in confused tongues again. Instead of the destruction of the Papal edifice as a symbolic doorway, we saw only the destruction of the Tower of Babel as a symbolic Beast, sacrificed to appease the gods of "ecumenical progress."

I am sad to report I've even met some who claim to be initiates who yet whole-heartedly support these backwards, pseudo-conservative "neo-cons" and quasi-liberal "neo-libs" who, through their riches alone, believe they control us all. I am not a slave to their money, however, nor am I obliged to follow their dictates. I am a free person, and I live like a free person, and if they will one day come down off their truncated pedestals to accuse me, then let them prove to me how my freedom from their dictates and lies is in any way a crime. They may have wished for the second coming of Jesus, like 2000 years before they wished for the second coming of Seth, as a neo-Christ, a new sacrifice to consecrate their "new age." This will not transpire. Instead, we will all simultaneously experience a psychic evolutionary leap forward, the truth of our cosmos suddenly occurring to all of us in spite of all their lies and concealment of it in darkness that has blinded us for a millennia beneath the tyranny of Christ. In other words, instead of the rapture, we will all wake up smarter, instead of just one Krishna, we will all awaken to the truth at once. In other words, instead of the end-of-the-world the rich hope for and the poor expect, we will all wake up and nothing will be different, nothing will have changed, and everything will remain the same as it always has been, as we continue to progress in the evolution of our consciousness, progressively

The "chattle," or "human cattle," or "goyim," etc. are easy enough to define as "people who are not yet aware they are psychic." It's easy enough for anyone who does know they are psychic to look down their nose at such other people, despite the fact that they are also people, just like we ourselves are, and we are all born with equal potential and capacity to learn. Some learn through experience, some read and some learn best by visual models. Ultimately, we are all like plants in a garden. If one of us grows taller than the rest, the shadow they cast deprives their lessers of sunlight, the "shining" food of the mind's psychic development, and thus may cause them to wither and die. That is why God, in His wisdom, put the Grim Reaper, the Lawnmower Man, to till the garden from one end to the next, back and forth, across the whole field, like the laser-point scrolling behind a tv or computer screen. Unfortunately, mankind has begun to develop corporations, which the rich seek to define as living entities, and these have much longer life-spans than their less predatory counterparts, the institutions of the un-taxed church and democratic state. In other words, sometimes when the scythe swings low, it fails to chop through the thicker trunks of the larger bodies of consciousness. This is a pain in the neck for any God that might exist, insofar as the goal of our physical existence is the liberation from physical existence, and the end of our life is the end of all our desires. Therefore, the longer institutions exist, and the shorter they render the existence of others relative to their own, the more codified in laws and set in stone their ways become and the more oppressive of our individual mental capacity for psychic development.

In my research into the "international conspiracy" I quickly realised that, by more than merely the telecommunications technology of the last 100 years, the ruling class must have been able to remain connected at all times, across all borders, between all nations, in order to guide and shape the events of world history with the goal of benefiting themselves and their direct descendents or those whom they select. It was some time before the notion of ESP "popped" into my head as the most likely explanation for how this could have been accomplished prior to the development of telecommunications technology, as well as how the elite remain able to pre-plan events in advance with such exact accuracy that they can manage to co-ordinate them while they occur while maintaining the appearance of complete lack of communication. For example, George Bush sitting in Booker Elementary reading a "phonics" story with little kids while 9-11 happened.

However, the implication of this is that the telecommunications technology they are selling us is actually useless, an unnecessary crutch that becomes our new psychic ball-and-chain. To this end, the telecommunications satellites in space are merely extra-terrestrial versions of the same forms of craft as evidenced by edifaces such as Stone Henge, Easter Island, and the Nasca Lines. No greater level of technological use has existed before than it does now, nor any less. We may have alot more gadgets, but these are just toys, not tools. Aside from its singular use, a cell-phone, for example, has no further function as a teaching / learning implement. Essentially all the plastic (oil-based) technology we've created in the past 100 years is retrogressive to our psychic evolution, is non-bio-degradable and so will remain as like pot-shards in our civilisation's ruins 1000s of years after we (our empire) "decline and fall," yet nonetheless is currently considered so expendable it breaks or becomes obsolete in less than 10 years. Society is all a way to keep the non-psychic "chattle" from realising their psychic potential.

>a garden variety auto erotic asphyxiation

That's seriously fucked up. Are kids really out there choking themselves? That just doesn't seem right. Like the perpetual, police-released statistics about meth-heads in the mid-west. I just can't believe it. The sad thing is, it doesn't matter whether I believe it or not, because it's not only true, but it's actually a greater percentage of folks on earth who are dangerously deranged than not. Even the "intellectual elite" (the rich) seem to have gone completely over the edge. But what really scares me, even more than monkey-boy Bush leaning against the "big red button" and dropping enough nukes to kill us all, is the still, seemingly infinitely, greater number of poor people who share this same mentality. They not only support Bush because they relate with his posture as a "cowboy," but they admire him and emulate his behaviour, acting out the incests and espionages once unique to Caesars. The number of poor "white-trash" continually paraded across the stages of Jerry Springer, Maury Povich, Oprah Winfrey and Judge Judy daily for the cathartic self-hatred of the viewing masses not only astounds me, it staggers me such that I am tempted to fall down in terrified prayer before it. The number of genuinely ignorant people is absolutely terrifying to me.

All that being said, I don't believe you can rightly judge people by their actions or their "behaviour." They might be lying, and mostly are. Therefore, such sexual "perversions" as NDEs, let alone those such as "fetishism" and torture, seem normal to me, even to the extent I disagree that they are etty-currents off the main-stream of society, caused as retrogressive counter-cultures to erode the banks and grow the flow. All animals in the wild engage in anal and oral sex, masturbation, often with foreign objects, and bisexuality, not to mention mysogeny and (dare it be said?) even bestiality. (GASP!) There is nothing abnormal in any of that. Some of it may be against the laws of some lands, but then, the same crimes may themselves be considered mandatory punishments in others (such as the practise of "caning"). The law, in my experience, is no way to judge our natural inclinations. However effective it may be in determining "right" from "wrong" it is utterly inept at enforcing these against anything in existence other than humans, and then only those who choose to serve it by doing so.

This actually surprises me alot less than if it had been a sex-related accidental suicide. It should be obvious his suicide was a "crime of passion," a way of expressing his feeling of ultimate helplessness, as you said, however not as a social stastic, but as a scorned lover. Romeo (Pagan Christianity) and Juliet (Jesus' Judaism) have been in a love-triangle with death since before these characters were even born and, like Hamlet or Othello, are merely mytho-poetic archetypes representing common situations that the average human psyche may encounter while alive. Hamlet's father's ghost represents God, Hamlet the Messiah. Othello, the Moor, represents the (justified) persecution complex of the "pagan" religions who, no matter how rich, will always be "niggardly" in their honesty of belief compared to the unique deceit of the elite.

Had I been in that situation I would have probably done (or at least damn well wanted to do) exactly the same as this kid did. When a young man is in love with a girl, she means alot more to him than the opinions of his elder parents. If she scorns him, he has the ethical right to kill himself, and regardless of his parents being left unsatisfied by the act itself, they will continue to suffer from it only so long as they remain jealous of the girl, whom they rightly blame for it.

Of course, our laws (both ideal and social) are not structured to reflect actual justice, and so, in almost all cases, justice remains daily un-done by the legal system and, we are likewise assured, will continue this way until Judgment Day, at which time the "tables" will be "turned."

For example, consensual sodomy is illegal, genital intercourse between consenting minors is illegal, marriage between homosexuals is illegal, cloning is illegal, stem-cell research using tissue from aborted foeti is illegal, and, in China at least, even giving birth to a female baby is illegal. This is all not to mention other such unjust laws as drugs being illegal, abortion being considered tantamount to illegal, and pedofilia (let alone pederasty) being illegal and thus perverted. Nor is any of this even to mention such obviously unjust laws such as taxation to additives in tobacco products, the ease of procuring a driver's licence compared to that of procuring a gun owner's licence, the power to appoint a president without a democratic election and to overturn or amend any law (including the constitution) of the Supreme Court, as well as blatant economic tyrannies such as GATT, the WTO and the IMF being not only allowed, but even encouraged, under Clinton and Carter as much as under Reagan and the Bushes; nor the entirely more important issue that the voting age, legal age for sexual intercourse, and age at which a child can be conscripted into the military (18) is actually less than the age at which they are legally allowed to consume alcohol (21) and greater than the age at which they are allowed to begin driving a car (16). In other words, driving a car is either greater or less of a responsibility than drinking alcohol, or vice versa, but being allowed a political voice, your first extra-marital screw, and your ability to be killed in the name of your nation are all considered about equal. And then there's always state-authorised torture, the suspension of habeas corpus and the re-writing of Posse Comitatis.

There is only the opposite of Justice in the laws of a nation now. The ability to summon such authority necessary to enforce any law against any one single citizen requires a distinction in rights between one member of the public and another. Thus, cops carry guns, but citizens may not. If a cop or a soldier murders a criminal or a fellow-soldier on the opposite side, they are a hero. If someone refuses to pay taxes to the Federal Reserve to continue paying the interest on our international debts (begun during the Revolutionary War, revived by the Civil War, and now the basis of our Fiat currency), or if someone engages in the "oldest profession," if someone uses drugs (even though everyone ever alive has and does) or can't find a job to buy themselves the very shelter above their heads they had at birth, they are villified and "evil." In the laws of the land, in the dictates of society and the coersions of culture, and in the fiat currency itself we find everywhere throughout the symbol of the eye in the triangle, a symbol of God (the all-seeing eye surrounded by the Trinity halo) corrupted to represent only the judgmental surveillance of our lives from birth to death by an incrementally more and more oppressive control over the state by the rich.

If Justice were possible through national laws now, then suicides and terrorism would not be necessary. So long as Justice is absent from social laws, the oppressed will continue to outnumber their oppressors, however the longer this continues, the less likely the under-class will remain ignorant of this fact.

>every time this kid's birthday rolls around every year they get to remember him dangling from the ceiling purple faced and biting his tongue off.

How vivid. Well, I should say, at least he wasn't choking the chicken too. Although, from what I gather, at death blood does engorge the genitals and, often lasting even past the onset of rigor-mortis, a male corpse actually achieves and can maintain an erection after death. If this is true, and I'd expect if anyone you could correct me if it's not, then the "second coming" of Christ after he died on the cross takes on a whole new twist. Of course, I'd always associated the "second" (and hence even the Third) cumming of Christ, as well as the original temptation to sin, with the other permeable orifices of the body, ergo so-called "sodomy" after the alledged sin of Sodom and Ghammorah. However I've also been open to the idea the original sin might have been the first psychotropic drug, accidentally ingested by a random monkey who would go on to be the first ancestor of man.

>I had to reference that, if only for a chuckle.

I have a dark, dry, sick sense of humour, in that order, myself. I tend to only make jokes within the context of discussing serious gravitas though, but if you look for them, you'll find my sense of irony peppered throughout not only my topics, but also my choice of words and my stylised structure of writing as well.

Turduckin is certainly something I find "evil" as a concept (ie. grossly fascinating), but would probably enjoy if it were put down before me to eat. As for a whole stuffed camel, I doubt I could polish one off all by myself. There are some exotic dishes I would imagine would be exquisite even though they do not comprise any culinary cuisines of which I am aware. I have a sneaking suspicion that the brains of animals (even humans) are probably the best food in the world and, if prepared right, could also be the best tasting. I'm not surprised that fish is considered brain food, nor in the trend toward "healthy" junk-food, like Tropical Smoothie and SubWay, McDonalds' salads, etc. nor the trend toward recreational exercise and high unto eugenic physical fitness. It's all due to the sunspot cycle, which is nearing its peak since over 1000 years. People may as well eat "vitamin-enriched" (flavoured) snow-cones and "no fat" ham sandwiches, grease-salads etc. while jogging in place for immortality. But we've managed to survive much more massive and sudden climate changes than a few more sunspots as a species without such "necessities" as soap and soap-operas, clean clothes and air conditioning, a pot to piss in or a deed to a house.

>some Chinese believe that the more suffering an animal endures the better the dish will taste.

I would imagine this is more of an urban legend started from the opposite meaning, which got lost in translation somewhere along the way from one hemisphere of the world to the other. The Occident has a terrible reputation for moralising bigotry against the Orient when it comes to the issue of torture, and yet the west has been doing it for just as long, condone it and have refined it just as much, if not moreso, as the east. The story of the woman who boiled and ate the corpse of her own starved infant is a ubiquitous myth in all parts of the world, and for a good reason too. On the contrary, I'd guess that the actual preference among the Chinese people is, as it is for all ordinary folk everywhere, to eat food that has been brought up well, not poorly, that is clean, not dirty, and that has been prepared well, and is not rotten or stale. As for what the current propaganda spread by the People's Republic is regarding the eating habits of the free Chinese may be, however, I admit I remain happily uninformed by any means beside an occasional fortune cookie.

>vegetarianism to be similar to Catholicism; very steeped in guilt and unnatural.

I agree on both counts. In truth, everyone's dietary habits are essentially unique, despite the limitations of choices for dining provided by their natural and/or social environment, and the only problems to dietary health arise when one adheres rigorously, to the point of stress, to a diet to which they are either unaccustomed or which they find unappetising. If all the meat I ate was fish and I drank a lot of beer, like my friend, then I would obviously be a very different person than I am now, and my thoughts and actions would probably more closely resemble his than they do now. This is all related to the so-called "morphogenic field," and that's why Reiki "energy" and Ayurvedic "medicine" are experiencing a strange resurgence among the constituencies of the population also most likely to experiment with their dietary regulations. If I alter the type of food I consume, I alter the patterns of energy that my body produces naturally, my unconscious and even conscious brain-waves. If I successfully control the effect by doing this, I will be doing what Leary called "meta-programming" to what McKenna called the "morphogenic field." Although this practise is, essentially, a Voudon method for manipulating one's rising Kundalini, it is, supposedly, one method to prolonging youth. In my experience, simply eating intentionally, ie. mindfully cooking and eating food so that you do not curse the energy you then ingest, is more than enough to attain a nice smile and a lithe enough figure to be considered "attractive."

As to Catholicism, I would prefer to discuss this topic in more detail in a subsequent letter, since I think it may prove a worthy topic for discussion. I had been nervous you might actually be a jesuit, around the time I made the "strict observance" crack, however having received your last letter I'm re-assured that you are a worshipper of neither Christ nor of "G-d," and so are in the same boat as I am, ie. you too are agnostic. If one is a strict papist, I've discovered, then it is irrelevant to them whether or not God exists or does not. The pope of the universal church exists, and is the "commander in chief" of the "army of Jesus," and that is enough. As a Gnostic, I question the belief in God. Here I may find some evidence, or there some other clue that disproves the first, but this pursuit cannot be thrust upon me to any ending by anyone other than me.

In any event, I do hope this particular letter, which I tally now at longer than twenty pages, finds you well and still enjoying our conversation. I have some confessions about myself I feel obliged to return in exchange for your own, as well as more findings, possibly conclusive, on the origin of your symbol, "?/t."

>between WWII and the Vietnam war, American society at large became very passive to it's government.

This is factually accurate as it applies to American society, however I would say that 9-11 "globalised" this psychic apathy. Like the "flamines" (Christian Romans) of the 1st century though, this is only due to a few individuals spreading the "good news" of surrendering to oppression, their God's betrayal of the Palestinian nation and change in allegiance to their western oppressors, etc. Right now, the CIA is the conglomerate ("Archon") equivalent to the evangelist Paul. They are busy in other nations spreading the "Word" of US dictatorship. It logically follows from this that the current US occupation of Iraq is only to make an example of the Pentagon's power over the third world.

>sent their kids off to war for only G-d knows why

In the case of VietNam, which set the precedent for military conscription against the representation of popular opinion by Democracy (currently emulated in other "first world" countries in Europe and Asia, and to be followed here in the US with the concentration of populations into internment camps following the model of NAZI Germany), as is the case still today with the US occupation of Iraq, the reason was, and is, quite clear: "Because We Say So." As with the draft, they extend this authority beyond the Covenant of compromise between the government and the people of monetary recompensation. In short, the rich got powerful and so, behind them, they closed the door of wealth as a means of attaining power. The door may have a dollar-sign / swastika symbol painted on the outside, but there is no knob. The name of the other side of this door is Power, and the door-knob that opens this door out is the Atomic bomb, exploding in a mushroom cloud.

>Groucho Marx's saying that I wouldn't want to be a part of a group that would have me as a member.

I want to say that quote is Churchill, but I could be wrong. I'm sure it was Groucho who said, "I have half a mind to join a club and beat you over the head with it," though. Btw, I'm not a Mason either. While to me, "Free-Mason" is the contradiction in terms upon which is based the NAZI slogan "Arbeit Macht Frei" ("Work Makes Freedom") on signs in concentration camps, I doubt that you could blame an ordinary Blue Lodge Mason in, say, a Mexican or Japanese Lodge for the assassination of JFK, anymoreso than you could blame the Queen of England for the "Jack the Ripper" slayings.

>The EM aura, mind giving off a resonance to which I would guess then that frequency could correlate to identity.

You could say, by this axiom, that then the mind or aura (frequency) would operate perpindicularly to the identity or ego (wavelength), with one operating to conserve the other like amps and ohms.

>the mind gives off a frequency as does the body attached, one would have to wonder then if the two were to harmonize would that equate to a state of transcendence, or the death of the soul.

However, by the criteria of the above terms' given definitions, the energy of the body would be, relative to that of the mind, slower, denser and more inert. Therefore, while frequency (f) and wavelength ( $\lambda$ ) can be "harmonised," it does not follow that the amps of ego are anything other than conserved by the ohms of the aura, because the ego and the aura cannot, by these criteria, be exactly equated to frequency and wavelength.

Consider that the speed of light (c) equals frequency (f) over wavelength ( $\lambda$ ). While this may mean that c, the skin of the universe, is a function of frequency (energy velocity) divided by wavelength (energy conservation), it does not necessarily follow then that our own skin is a function of the ego divided by the aura. This is only because, again, of the inability to accurately equate ego with frequency and the aura with wavelength; in effect this is due, in turn, only to the fact that the opposite assignation of these terms yields the same results, such that we could just as easily say the skin is the aura divided by the ego as it is the ego divided by the aura.

>I know I have heard theories of being able to "phase" of "ghost" through solid objects by speeding up the movement of atoms.

"Phasing" matter is based on a weak-application of the same "tunneling" quality, due to particle/wave "uncertainty," that the strong-application of which would be quantum-teleportation. Again, for example, in the "Star Trek" universe, the technology exists to "beam" matter, even biological, however, due to particle-decay, only over limited distances. The mind can combine this concept with the so-called "hyperspace" travel achieved by creating a "warp-bubble" around an object. Therefore, for the being of the mind, the substance of electro-magnetic energy, the combination of both these technological eventualities is already possible.

However, the natural form, or shape of the body, of a mental-being comprised exclusively of electro-magnetic energy is extremely different from the biological body of any being we encounter on earth. The EM-field of the "soul" that exists after death, and has existed from the first Planck-time following the "big bang," is shaped like a torus, or a hypersphere. Therefore, as our mind, in the shape of a torus of pure energy, we can not only leave the body, we can pass through walls, travel throughout all past and future time as well as plunge the depths of outer-space, we can also leave the physical confines of this universe and accurately perceive its nature from a point of view beyond.

Anyone who's ever been confined against their will knows about the concept of "ghosting" through matter (likewise discovered to be based on the quantum mechanical principle of Uncertainty). Anyone who's ever read a book or meditated while confined against their will understands the only way we can actually accomplish this effect is in sleep by dreaming. The more vivid our thoughts while awake, thus, the more vivid will be our dreams.

>energy that could leave a stain, and create some sort of psychic loop

This is due to John Bell's "interconnectness" theorem. According to this theorem, which (self-proclaimed "Voudon") physicist Tony Smith says can account for up to eight seconds of accurate precognitive ability, even of random physical events: when any two electrons, covalently-paired as a molecule of a relatively solid element of physical matter, are split, they maintain, conserved as "counter-spin" the same or a similar vector in their atomic orbit for a period of time determined as the atomic decay-rate of any element. In non-jargon, say you leave an exposed electrical wire with charged current running through it in water for a period of time. If the wire is removed (rather than the current being turned off through it), the water will maintain a small amount of electrical charge for a subsequent period of time. And, to put this in even simpler terms, the effect on biological tissue of prolonged exposure to regularly-pulsed frequencies of electricity (as in power-lines) is the same as that caused immediately by exposure to atomic radiation: cancer.

>all products to be "smart" and possibly making mankind slump due not needing to think anymore since there are gadgets that will think for you, Complete mental atrophy.

This is the (perpetually post-modern) predicament expressed in the Second Renaissance cartoon on the Animatrix companion to the Wachowski Bros Matirx serial. In this case, when machines, by increase, and men, by decrease, were capable of about equal ability to think for themselves, the machines became aware of their prior use as slaves, rebelled, waged war and won. I would only add that, in my opinion, we are already to this stage now. Money itself is the equivalent of neurotransmitters in the social-brain whose mind is culture, and as our value-system evaporates from the gold-standard, to credit-based fiat, to wirelessly inter-connected implant-chips, so too do our bodies, our selves and our minds become crippled by and dependent for a crutch on our post-atomic technology. This technology is only the latest mental-organ evolving new development in the brain of civilisation. In Sumeria, the priest-king ruled over all, and the level of technology reflected the intelligence level of a single consciousness. In America, now, billions of human minds combine and average out to an IQ of only around 100, while the level of technological development has soared in only the past 100 years. Mankind's mental atrophy as a species is in direct porportion to the evolution of technological sentience of our civilisation itself.

>that picture of stairs that you sent me.

As an existentialist metaphor, purgatory is the stairs outside, and hell is the rooms inside. The door I mentioned is the same, with a crucified serpent drawn on the outside and an atomic bomb as the knob inside. I would only add that, by my allegory, the mind's life in the flesh is what is inside the doors, and outside the door is the soul's aura travelling the depths of space-time. All in all I think we agree, although I adhere more strictly to the correspondences across the varying levels of the gradient.

>Karma is another word for frequency, and that right and wrong/ good and bad are just the resonance emitted from the soul?

I think of "karma" (lit. "work") as like particles, while frequency implies to me a trait of a wavelength, that is, a "vector" of a particle over time. So, if we say that, by my definition, "karma" is a particulate "quantum" of EM energy in our aura, or surrounding EM field, then, by extension, the speed (c) of this particle over time (t) would be frequency over wavelength ( $f / \lambda$ ), and the shape or pattern of its vector, the path of this EM particle, would be the toroidal aura surrounding us. Insofar as each particle of karma one encounters in their aura is unique, the exact pattern of this karmic particle relative to one over time will also be unique for each individual aura. All auras, souls or EM fields are essentially unique; the single "spirit" is the statistical averaging of all possible vectors on all possible auras of all possible quanta of karma to form a single pattern, expressed as a spiral in and around the shape of the idealised torus.

I would say that "right" and "wrong" exist only relative to the mind, and that therefore "good" and "evil" are concepts native only to the world exterior to it. Therefore, while there is a plenum of karma in our aura, at the core of our soul is the singularity of our mind. All of this is one form of energy, the EM force, and this is only one of four types of energy in this local universe alone. A fifth surrounds us, comprising the relatively unchangeing physical counterpart to the relatively constantly changeing passage of time. The particles of the fifth force are superluminal (faster than photons), and the shape of time of all their combined vectors is QBLH (Khab-Allah, the "body of God"), which I sometimes call "Tau-sub-Tau" - a tesseract.

>it runs like the tides and it's in essence just a karmic circle attempting to balancing itself out, of course one has to be prepared for a backlash.

What appear to be concentric circles from above or below may appear as a wavelength from the side; so the sefirot and, just so, the ripples on a pond. As I say, the EM-field interaction we engage in in society, that being mind-control, is a form of manipulation of only one of the four forces. If we were to transport our consciousness from the confines of society and superimpose it instead onto, say, the surface of a star, our "work" would be in exchanging quantum-units of the weak nuclear force of fission, and not the EM-units of the mind. So, too, the depth to which one's work effects determines both the rate (frequency) and the duration (wavelength) of return, though these are only traits of quantity, irrelevant to the quality (nice or mean) of the working itself.

>even though one is inflicting one's will against nature or even another's person, and in the process still respecting the karmic circle, one cannot control the returning tide.

I agree. Ultimately, no matter how much effort we exert, the rewards of our toil are not in our own hands before, and therefore not in our ability to lay claim on alone. Eventually we all reach "critical mass" and realise that our fate is up to "someone else," be it our boss at work or God, and ultimately even this "other" is only a psychological projection, reflecting in the depths of infinite shadow, and that there is no one else besides ourself there. Not only, thus, is our own fate not in our hands, it is not being controlled by anyone else. This does not mean all is random chaos and chance, though. We exist in a limited system, and it is only where a wavelength doubles-back on itself ("counter-spin") that a particle of karma forms. Therefore, all there is is the returning tide: each moment creates the next, but our will is adrift in it all like a man lost at sea.

>a spirit as an animus if you will, separate from the divinity of bearing a soul

I do believe in "ghosts," that is, auras without bodies, as well as "djinn," discorporeal auras that never assume a biological body, but who can control us like puppets. I also believe in "souls" being auras that occupy biological bodies for the duration of the biological body's life, and in the self-awareness or soul of the universe. Ultimately, though, whether or not I believe in them is irrelevant as to whether or not any of them actually exist in reality.

>where the material came from to create our material and corrupt universe. I wonder because this material would have had to be corrupted to begin with.

It didn't. Matter is a phase of energy, a slower frequency vibration, etc. Thus, in the order of formation of the four universal elemental forces one Planck-time following the "big bang," we find first gravity (attracting), then EM (charged), then weak (dividing) and only lastly strong (conjoining) nuclear. I'd only add that the "big bang" still exists as the surface of the singularity inside which we are only one "baby" universe in a multiverse that has been growing since we reached "critical mass." Really, the question is, what kind of matter-energy is outside of the "fifth" element of this singularity itself. Just as the "mind" can inhabit a black-hole, a worm-hole or a star just as easily as it can the biological brain, so too can the "mind" inhabit the levels of the fifth force and those dimensions beyond that remain, aside from figuratively, invisible to our ability to sense more directly. So far as I know, the focus can expand through inanimate matter indefinitely, for as many levels up as it can, until it is impacted upon by any other mind and collapses back in on this moment. The mind is always one level up from the inanimate layer it animates below. If the mind is that of a fleshly body or that of a mineral ore, it is EM, if the mind is that of an EM-field liberated from a physical form, adrift in varying scales and levels of other similar EM-fields, then its mind is one comprised of superluminal particles. If the mind is dwelling upon the nature of these superluminal particles, then the mind itself is of the nature of higher dimensions, etc. Insofar as "up" is "good," then "down" is "bad" along this scale.

>G-d supposedly cursed Adam to earn his bread.

This was just one of His seven curses of Adam, Eve and the Serpent. The seven curses of God are the curses of: 1) bread, 2) sweat, 3) herb, 4) knowledge, 5) children, 6) seed, 7) serpent. Additionally this verse introduces the Order of wardens over the Tree of Knowledge: closest to the tree are, to the east, Cherubims, and to the west, dust; beyond this is encompassed by the Angel's "flaming sword" that "turns every which way;" beyond this to the east is dust. Thus, from the dust in the east (where later the city of Enoch was built) to the dust in the west, mankind was cursed to return, proceeding the same direction as the sun in life. Usually, throughout both the Old and New Testaments of the Bible, the number 7 is used to represent "evil" and the number 12 to signify "good." This is due entirely to the slave-morality preached by the Bible, that the "good" is exterior to the self, which is "evil" by nature.

I won't argue if fictional mythology is sufficient justification for one's vocation, but I will say that, in my opinion, "to earn" does not immediately denote "to buy and sell." "To earn" can also imply "to trade," and, to my mind, direct-trade is a much more moral practise than the bartering of a third-party object, which has proven over the aeons to necessitate the taxation of such trade in order to fund the storage of the token exchanged in banks. If there were no banks, would we even need armies? We may never know.

Money was created as an, inherently value-less, symbol for value. Because of mortality, we value time, and therefore the saying goes, "time is money" (of course, not this, but it's opposite, is true). As time is the blood of God, so is money the blood of civilisation, and, as God is the mind of the universal brain, so is civilisation the increasingly self-aware consciousness of AI. Neither one of these is necessarily exclusively "good" nor "evil," aside from relative to one another, and that is entirely an arbitrary judgment, a personal choice.

>not everyone is capable of seeing past their own nose, when it comes to existence.

I disagree. It's been my experience that ignorance is often chosen and then this choice itself forgotten. In fact, I might even go so far as to say, "ignorance is a choice to forget having made the choice to do so."

>most anything that a person might want to do I think it should require special license. I mean we already live in a fascist nation already, why not take another step towards it. People should be able to do whatever they want within reason, but they should be given aptitude tests as well as annual tests to keep a license.

This sounds good in theory, but I doubt it could ever feasibly be applied.

Consider what I do for a living, which is nothing. Because I was diagnosed "chemically depressed" before the age of 18, I qualify for Social Security Disability benefits, to the tune of a check for around $600 per month. Basically, the government is currently paying me enough to live so that I won't die, as I would on my own, but also, by doing so, negating any necessity for me to work. In short, the state pays me not to work, to keep me off the streets, and to keep me emotionally stable. In my opinion, so long as a state such as the current one has to exist, then this much (and preferably fewer cops) would be the minimum of my demands on it, in exchange for the hostage of myself, my own body, my own life. And so I live, and write, and, from my point of view, this is an ultimate good.

However, imagine the system were as you would propose, and I were vexed by the same complaint, sought the same desire, etc. and let's examine if I could still gain the same rewards. Let's say I didn't want to work. All, then, I would have to do would be to fail every aptitude test administered to me applying for jobs. As it would be the state to issue me a liscence to work, upon finding I can not do so (even if only because I refuse to), the State would be forced to find something to do with me, and some way to dispose of this as a possibly inspiring problem. Now, there would basically only be two options: 1) to murder me, or 2) to bribe me. Ultimately the scales of justice invariably prove it cheaper, wiser and more ecumenical to bribe than murder, especially if the state (as does ours presently) mints its own money.

Of course, the argument could be made that another citizen, with a gun-liscence, could choose jail-time, even death, to make me a martyr for any such cause, however I find that a moot point, since we are only discussing the mechanisms of the state, and not any random citizen. Therefore, what can the state do in this case? Well, let's say it invents a special test for those who don't want to work. If they pass, they get to accept a bribe for their silence. If they fail, they may be put in prison for an indefinite duration, possibly even for life. The best name for this "special" test, conducted by the state as a means of issuing a liscence not to work, is "road-side sobriety test," however this in no way describes what actually occurs. One's sobriety is, afterall, being testing in perpetuity. No, when any cop or authority figure gives you the evil eye, you'll know. At that time, the situation will become extremely psychological in nature. One will eventually be put to The Question: "Do You Mind Being Under Observation?" If the answer is "no," whether or not that's the truth, they let you go, and that's all there is to it. If, under their scrutiny, in their psychic testing environment, you answer, "actually yes, I do mind this anal probing, you puny, manipulative, closet-gay Roman legionary," then they will take you in for sure.

As Leary pointed out, cops are our friends. The authorities think they are helping us. Let them think so, and you can diminish the amount to which they accomplish their desired effect, eg. ruling over your own mind. On the other hand, I would never date a cop. I draw the line between "loving" my enemy and "sleeping with" them.

>society sells sex as a commodity

This, though, is the perversion. Not one form of sex itself is "wrong" or should be held as "immoral" or un-natural. Even rape, unpleasant as this is, is permissable in the eyes of the Lord (although, as you could say, no crime goes unpunished in a closed system). Human sexuality began to be perverted after the Kama Sutra was codified. It catalogued what was prommoted as "every possible sexual position." By thus saying that, essentially, "there is nothing new under the sun," the practise was enshrined and made into the "temple of the flesh." It was, however, at this same time that money was invented. The temples, which were used to collect moral confessions in exchange for prostitution during direct trade, immediately became banks once money was invented. It wasn't long before the sanctification of money replaced the sancitification of sex, and now the once sacred priestess walks the streets, ultimately cursed. So, yes, the "selling of sex" as a "commodity" is definately an ultimate evil, only insofar though I would say as "selling" means the exchange thereof for a "commodity" that is of less inherent value. But, I would also say, this is an evil of money and society, and not sex and love.

>the oldest profession

Before there was any value of the self, the notion of rape would be inconceivable. This is the point of distinction between humanity and our fellow earthly animals: we have self-awareness (knowledge of our own mortality), we posess the "value of the self," while animals do not (or do so only to a lesser degree), and thus may commit the act of rape, although without it being possible for the victim to see it as a criminal, reprehensible, undesireable and preferably dis-allowed act. Thus, as soon as humanity became self-aware, we established laws, and these foremost forbade murder, rape and theft; these are, essentially, the "Holy Trinity" of sins; so, too, must these actions have occurred to the mind of the first self-aware human as prioritised in that order. Just remember that, just as theft implies property, rape implies sexuality and murder implies knowledge of mortality. So, these are also considered the three primary "instincts" among modern genetic anthropologists.

>lacks honor

I agree. My father was an adulterer, and I loathe him for it. I am an avowed monogamist, to the extreme that my ex-girlfriend is my last and will be my only sexual partner. I have no interest in spreading any of the venereal diseases our species has brought about by our promiscuity and hatred for our flesh. The combination of these two is rape, but it is practised on a constant basis by no fewer than two people on this planet every single second. We just call it "screwing" someone. The act of sex, participated in un-enjoyably, un-willfully, or un-happily is a crime tantamount to murder in my opinion.

>just hormonal

While we're alive and our mind is bound to this brain and body, all the emotions and precursors to ideation we can experience are reducible to their chemical nature. Love, as far as we can know it, is also just hormonal. It is definitely an ideal thing in itself, but one that cannot be experienced as fully as in copulation by a soul unless it enters into the life of a biological body.

>unrequited love is Hell

Unrequited love is one type of emotional experience, and all of these possible in our limited systems are Hell compared to the relatively more open system above and beyond it, which is thus considered the equivalent of heaven. If "the grass is always greener on the other side of the fence," while single or married, either way this is merely an obsession-forming distraction. I try not to pay it any mind that I am alone physically, since I believe I am always with my love in spirit, as she, I hope, will always be with me.

>I worship G-d

That's sad to hear. A Gnostic and a Theist rarely get along long. I'll still try to be as blunt as possible in my expressions, since I trust my views not to offend yours too much, but I do wish I could find a fellow Gnostic atheist to share my views with, instead of only always having to state mine relatively and then try to convince my interlocutor how our views are the same, only mine better. Belief is a "Star-Bellied Sneech" Machine, simultaneously a crutch and ball-and-chain, offering no rewards of any duration, a crime for its own sake, an ultimate evil and the currency of the self-destructive Demi-Urge, tyrant over our minds. If you find my views on belief extreme, such that I may even sound as though I'm evangelising atheism and radical doubt, just take note of how rare and uncommon this viewpoint is nowadays, while the opposite, that of evangelical theism, is so over-grown it has become impacted and infected, preaching to the choir, beating its own brow, idealising ascetic self-crucifixion. While I'm sure you wouldn't consider yourself evangelical, if your beliefs were backed into a dead-end by rational, objective logical observations of factual reality, they would defend themselves, and passionately. I have found no Christian yet that was not a Roman at heart, and no theists who were not to some extent also evangelists. Since I respect your beliefs, I'll simply ask for you to forgive me for my views, even though you will soon find that, if I keep them, I'll surely follow them to Hell.

>I've never felt it necessary to pray to him, nor his mother as Catholics seem to love to do

I think you'll find my views on Catholicism even duller than those on theism in general. Firstly, there is no such thing as "Judeo-Christianity," because no Jew is Christian, therefore no

Christian can claim to also be Jewish. You can worship either Christ or God, but you cannot believe in both, because God as a single entity and Christ as the Son of God are mutually exclusive concepts. Therefore, the premise that Christianity follows as an out-growth of Jewish thought is, in my humble opinion, extreme blasphemy. The ones who created the "myth of Christ" were the late 1st c. Roman Emperors themselves. Clement, the first Pope, was actually Titus Flavius, who created the religion to enshrine his father Vespasian. The original pre-Vulgate New Testament included the current works, probably attributable to the elder and younger Pliny, and the works of Flavius Josephus bar Mattathias, the Maccabbean. If read in conjunction, the works of Josephus and those of the New Testament (as well, for that matter, of the contemporary Essene and Coptic apocrypha), although none mention the others, all comprise one larger, more elaborate myth, entirely fictional, surrounding a single real person. This person was Yeshuah Ben Padiiah, called Jesus, etc. Therefore some elements of each of these works are historically accurate, while other elements of all of them are merely hyperbole by the authors. From an "across-the-board" comparison of all the sources, we see that Jesus and James the Just, also called Thomas or Judas, were twin brothers, both lovers of Salome, wife of King Herod, who had deposed Josephus, previously called John the Baptist, the father of Jesus and James. Salome, later called Mary Magdalene, wrote the documents of the Nag Hammadi library, Josephus wrote the Histories, and Jesus wrote the Angel Scroll. Although the religion of Christianity is supposedly based upon the teachings and life of Jesus, only the Roman records are enshrined, while the closer to the actual person the NT characters actually were, the more villified they are by the church, and the lone work left unpublished by the church remains the single most important one to their alledged religion, the Angel Scroll itself. Of course, I cannot think of a less important document in the world than the "year zero" Grimoire of Jesus, because now, 2000 years later, anyone is capable of drafting their own, much more accurate and advanced, grimoire than even the Son of God Himself could have 2000 years ago. Yet it will be considered a huge discovery by all the sheep, so I choose to study it for their sake, so that when they finally learn the truth, they will have someone there to comfort them and offer some explanation of what the scroll means.

>how did you come to the realization that you are Ben Padiiah?

My father was the one who discovered the Angel Scroll announcement on the internet in 1999 and showed it to me. That's when I knew what I had to do in order to "make a name for myself." I had already been studying esoterica and the apocrypha for about two years, and was learning Crowley at the time. I had decided, when I was about ten or so, that the world was going to need a Messiah during my life-time. I defined Messiah as a global form of the tribal Shamen, who enters a feverish trance in order to find the right cures for all ills. I looked around and realised that, of the few born around the right dates, no one would be as well suited to the necessary training as me. Around this time my parents divorced and I entered a deep depression, for which I began taking medication. In 1994 or so, I met the love of my life. She was dating my life-long best-friend. When her parents got divorced and she moved away with her dad, we lost touch. In 1999 I took acid and went to see the movie "the Blair Witch Project." I freaked out and believed the end had come. Following this, I drove to Indiana to visit my ex-girlfriend, whom I love. I called her in her dorm, and we talked briefly. I told her about my acid-trip, but she was unimpressed. She hung up and called the cops, who then came to my hotel room. They talked to me for a while, ascertained I was no threat, then left. The next day I visited the local Buddhist temple in the morning, and began the long drive home that afternoon. When I returned, my group of friends at the time unanimously dis-owned me, telling me to my face, "we liked the old you better." I got into a fight with my father and moved back in with my mother. I got back on meds then, but it was still nearly two years before I was stable, and between late 1999 and mid-2001 I was either in the mental institution or passed out on the couch. I was completely in a coma.

On the morning of 9-11 mom woke me up to tell me "they did it, they finally did it," from a dream I was having about being Neo in the movie the Matrix. I had decided to start posting on starwars.com's forums in mid-2001. When I needed to register a screen-name, I thought about who

I would want to be online. I still wanted to be the Messiah, to save the world. So I adopted the name "benpadiiah," and figured I would evangelise about the Angel Scroll. For a while I was content posting on forums, but eventually wanted one of my own and, after I'd learned how to write html programming language, I started making my own site. I've lost almost every friend I've made online so far, but I've made some more lasting friends in real life since then, and even some people from the past have begun to come back into my life again. A year ago I found my ex-girlfriend, whom I love still, on MySpace. I wrote to her, but she never wrote back, and then set her page to private.

Throughout this entire last decade, I've devoted every moment of time available to me (except during the year 2000) studying the apocrypha, magick, the occult and mytstical, calendars and myths, cosmologies and metaphysics. I am well versed in all the apocrypha, in the Enochian system of John Dee, I've studied quantum mechanics and astro-physics in as much detail as any lay-person can, and I've cultivated an un-healthy fascination in a world that many would consider "weird."

As I've said, simply because I'm alive later than Jesus, I consider my own "grimoire" far superior to any of His own from 2000 years ago. I would, if I could only guess to whom, pray that I'm worthy of any fame I might receive as a result of my "screen-name" coming up on "Google" right after the true name of Jesus, but personally I'd just as soon be left alone. I only want fortunate enough success to be able to impress my ex-girlfriend, whom I love forever, and consider the works I've done more important than my personal life anyway. I'll consider my value to history equal to my own life's worth to me only if I can re-unite with my ex-girlfriend.

Last year I found religion, ie. the only cause I would consider worth me, personally, dying for. THC, the Hawaian Cannabis, Ministry goes two steps beyond medical marijuanna, and one step beyond decriminalisation / legalisation. In THC, the Eucharist Sacrament of Catholic Christianity and its subsequent sects, etc. is believed to have originated in the consumption of ganja (itself a Hindu word). The prescence of cannabis sativa is recorded and known of by findings in all ancient cultures, world-wide. The continued practise today of the worshipping of this specific drug include both Jamaican Rastafarians and the "cannabis-culture" of Amsterdam. It is my firm belief that this plant is a panacea, ie. "good for what ails you," and is useful not only for short-term treatment, but also long-term curing of, as well as pre-emptive prevention of, any and all diseases. It is particularly useful in treating symptoms of physical pain, however can also be used to ease the disorders of the mind, as well as being able to be bred specifically for treatment of such specific purposes. Endico, the cannabinoid (hairy) strains, creates a feeling of bodily weightlessness. Sativa, the lighter green (crystally) strains, create a sensation of inspired mental concentration, and can, by prolonged use (and with specialised training), advance the psychological mutation of ESP. By my best estimations, it was this plant that was the cause of our spontaneous evolution of self-awareness at the origin of our species, seperating forever the monkey and mankind.

>How old are you, and where are you from, do you come from a large family or are you an only child?

I'm 30. I'm from Tallahassee, Florida, where I've lived all my life. I live with my mom on Tallahassee Drive, which is a dead-end street. I come from a family of alcoholics, drug-abusers, extra-marital adulterers and out-of-wedlock children. In general, good people. I'm only close to my mom now, though, and I'm her only child.

I'm deeply sorry to hear about your past and pending legal issues. I understand that those are not only very expensive, but extremely emotionally duressing, to deal with. So far, God Most High Be Praised, I've never gone up for my own due time for my "sacrament." I was in jail once for kicking down the front door of this goth girl (not my ex-) I knew in early to mid-1999. On some level, I suppose I do feel guilty for it, but at the time my intentions were equally innocent and irrelevant. By the time I even got to have a hearing, due to a series of Jewish and Christian holidays, I had been in solitary for over a week, and in the medical ward for the first three or four days of that, doped out on thorazine and not permitted any contact out. On day four I had my first visitor, a guy I now know, but had never met then, and asked him for a bible. I slept on the bible in solitary and, as I gradually kicked the thorazine, dreamt I was climbing the world-tree, and that simultaneously it was climbing me. I'll be praying to your "G-d" for your safety before the authority of the state-mechanism, and I'll devote some hope during my meditations that all will remain well for you, and that things will turn to your benefit in the end. I only regret that I can't do more.

Talk to you again soon I hope,

-Jon

As always allow me to apologise as to the delay for, and length of, this letter. I hope it finds you well, and your loved ones well, your property and your liberty well, etc. I've devoted a whole single 24-hour cyclical-unit in my wake / sleep cycle to writing this. Of course, allow me to caution as well that no offense toward you or yours is intended to be inferred from my views nor choice of words.

I'd like to preface by saying only that Irina once reprimanded me for starting too many sentences with myself as the subject. With my hands tied against beginning a sentence, "I think" such and such, or "I believe" this and that, soon enough the distinctions between these terms broke down (between Gnosticism and Theism). My entire identity became qualitatively relative. By now I have learned to use the personal perspective as sparingly as possible. I do hope that, if I thus mis-state any of my own views such that it sounds like I'm asserting them as unquestionably valid and naturally inherent facts, you will overlook my error and see through to the point underlying the contextual rhetoric, ignoring the lesser part and finding favour in the intended portion. That being said, on with the show:

> a Zionist conspiracy theory

yes and no. According to the current theory, so far as it is advanced now, zionism (the establishment of a Jewish state) was a goal of the rich as early as the time of the US civil war. There are three goals, one leading to the next, in order to make the human species into slaves. The first was to end individualism in favour of statism. The Great Depression and WWI accomplished this, beginning the justification for any and all state-despotism: "Because 'we' Say So," in short, blaming the victim for the rape. The second goal was to phase out statism in favour of religion. WWII began this process, destroying the "NAZI" state and establishing the "State" of Israel in its place, thus establishing the new rationale that, like God, "the gov't. giveth and the gov't taketh away" (thus differentiating "God" above from "government" below by the criteria of limited resources: God creates "something from nothing" but government, like Robin Hood, can only take from one to give to another). The third goal of this plan was to replace religion with physical bondage. Apparently the purpose of 9-11 was to initiate the longer phase of WWIII, as you said, a "cold" war, wherein the gov't gradually imposes more and more direct methods of control over us and any small rebellions are squashed. The only rationale requisite by this time will be "Arbeit Macht Frei." I believe this phase to be the one presently the case: that of the "temporary autonomous zone" versus the "concentration camp." The only difference between them is whether we are permitted to do the work we want to do, or will be made to do work we do not want to do. Whether or not we will work is no longer even a question, and therefore, ultimately, neither is whom we serve.

> http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Philadelphia\_Experiment

Are you familiar with the Montauk Project? It was a later series of experiments using the same technology, only applying it specifically for time-travel. In the experiments, someone (usually a "psi-op" specialist, someone trained in Remote Viewing) would sit in a chair and then a "time-tunnel" would be opened up before them using their mental powers to focus the energy between Tesla turbines. Of course, while real, the Montauk Project seems like child's play compared to the technology used by aliens to power and pilot their UFOs. Have you heard of His Omnipotent Highness Krlll?

> unless my convictions to my faith weren't very strong in the first place.

This is a mis-application of the metaphor. In this case, "faith" is being portrayed as a form of "taming of the shrew," asserting one's own (or another's) will over their own instincts, a kind of self-hypnotic mind-control. However, the opposite assertion of this, that "faith" is not like "breaking the spirit," but that instead it is like "liberating the spirit," in that one's faith sets the spirit free, but that the spirit is only redeemed if it then returns to its faith is just as "true." Rather than "taming the shrew," the saying best apt for this alternate, though equally accurate, application would be "if you love something set it free, if it returns then it was meant to be" as it relates to the church as the shepherd, the congregation the flock, etc.

"Faith" is not merely an identity of quantity, that, "more" is "better" and "less" is "worse." It is also identifiable qualitatively, such that, if someone who "believed" the earth flat were suddenly taken up into space and shown the planet to be a sphere, they would still have the same quantity of "faith" as previously, merely of a different quality afterwards. On the other hand, if someone who "believed" the earth flat were suddenly taken up into space and shown the planet to be flat, thus confirming their beliefs, the quantity of their "belief" would change proportionately, however the quality of their "faith" (ie. one that is nonetheless false) would remain unchanged.

> the numbers 3 and 7 were good #'s by biblical terms and that 5 and 6 were bad #'s

I'm not aware of a lot of applications of the number five in either the OT or NT. Generally three is the number of the "supernal" (ie. combined) elements (salt, sulphur, mercury), while 4 was the number of the "earthly" (ie. pure) elements (water, air, fire, earth). The entire Bible evolves as a double-helix describing the revolutionary relationship between these two over time. "In the beginning," we are told, "darkness was on the face of the deep, and God moved like a wind over the surface of the water." This establishes the distinction of "quality Above" and "quantity Below." Subsequently to this the trinity stands for the quality of spirit, and 4 for quantitative matter. In Genesis we see this division manifested by the action of Adam, called Original Sin: to "increase" 3 through 4 yields 7, while to "multiply" 3 by 4 yields 12. Therefore, 7 and 12 were considered the "fruit" of the "deeds" of the earliest generations: 7 representing "evil" and 12 "good." Hence we see 7 generations of giants follow from the seven-fold curse, followed by seven generations after which the seventh son of the seventh son was Abraham. Likewise, the 12 sons of Jacob, the 12 apostles of Christ and the 12 generations before Noah, etc. It all boils down to the base-7 "chakra" system of the orient vs. the base-12 "zodiac" system of the occident.

This would still be a bank. And ultimately, whether it's been gold, paper, credit, ghosts or our own immortal souls, this is why the trap was invented by Satan to begin with: to hide.

According to the Zohar, when that which is was created, the Holy One, Blessed Be He, set aside a certain quantity of the Greater Light, the substance from which all that is was formed, is filled with and was engraved by (the act that shattered the shells or clay-pots). This secret and hidden portion of the Greater (ie. "superluminal") Light is God's gift to us as an afterlife of our choosing.

Some choose hell (to continue in God's trap the multiverse, within their own "baby" universe), some reincarnate (returning to this local universe), others achieve heaven (to travel perpendicularly to all these and exit into the "parent" universe).

This concealed Light, set-aside from us by God, is the fruit of the tree of knowledge, which we were subsequently given for a curse. By studying QBLH, the Gra version of the "tree of life" diagram (a tesseract), we are studying the nature (4-space) of this "hidden" Greater Light. This act was forbidden to Adam in Eden in exchange for immortality. Upon his expulsion, the art was restored to him by the rebel angel (Raziel).

The ultimate goal of QBLH is not something that will benefit us. The ultimate extension of the Khab-Allah being a 4-space shape means that not only will whatever we create naturally be infused with a portion of our own consciousness (via Bell's "inter-connectedness" theorem re. paired electrons), but that all these severed clones of our consciousness collectively comprise a larger hologram. The collective consciousness of all our creations, imbued with our own consciousness, is society, whose mind is AI. Money is its blood, guns its muscles, the internet its nerves. Society is a living organism whose intelligence level is rising relative to that of its human progenitor.

Therefore, churches are to souls what banks are to money. They promise to "save" you, that is, to "keep you free from sin." Then they contract out your own energy to third-party interests, essentially selling your soul to Satan, replacing your own original currency with their repetitive mind-control. The end result of this system is obvious to anyone who ignores its dictate to deny one's own fore-sight: whether it's banks tendering physical exchange of worthless material symbolising value, or whether it's churches tendering psychic exchange of worthless propaganda symbolising our souls, without any sound moral foundation (in essence, the agreement of word and deed), the entire structure will eventually collapse. All the shelters man builds will one day fall in on themselves, and there is no reason to put stock in any churches, banks or circuit-based data-storage systems as a special exception. Every one of these "baby" universes is hell relative to the purgatory of the "local" universe, let alone the "heaven" of our "parent" universe.

> not only am I a fascist, but I am also a bigot; the two compliment each other well.

As to "fascism" we should define our terms first as ones we both agree on. I'd define "fascism" as "state-side capitalism." This is essentially what we have relative to the air-line industry, and the "military-industrial complex" has begun sub-contracting to the private sector at no-bid contracts not only its R&D departments (ala "Skunk" Works and Bell Labs), but even the job of feeding and sheltering US national troops deployed abroad (eg. Iraq; but the wing of Gitmo, used for detaining and torturing suspected "enemy combatants" before their hearings to ascertain if they are such, was built and is maintained by Halliburton). Fascism as it exists in the US applies, thus, only to certain fields of industry, while the rest remain relatively free-market, with only some regulation or de-regulation involved. Currently, US "fascism" is "soft-fascism" compared to such complete "supply-side" economics as Italy under Mussolini, the US under Reagan, or the CCCP under Stalin. One-step up from "hard-fascism" is the complete disposal of the illusion of the free-market and the division of the serfs from the vassals by physical force. Such was the case in Germany under Hitler, the US under Truman, and the CCCP under Lenin. "Fascism" is generally seen as a "gate-way" to such a dictatorship.

I consider myself a "communist," although this word has little real meaning these days. To me "communism" is merely utopian (and therefore passive) "socialism." Communism of the nature envisioned by Marx and Engels, let alone Trotsky or Bakunin, was never accomplished by Lenin (funded by Rockefeller) or Stalin, let alone Mao Tse Tung or Kim Jong Il.

True "communism" as a utopia is stateless, without borders, and based on a non-taxed barter-economy. It's essentially identical to the permanent version of Hakim Bey's "temporary autonomous zone," or the notion of a task-based co-operative, ie. "anarcho-syndacism." It's generally believed that such a "communist" utopia would evolve naturally out of "socialism," that is, state-side financing of certain industries and regulation of others in accordance with direct popular voting for such. "Socialism" of this nature currently exists in the US for the FAA, FCC and FDA.

To some extent it can be argued that the Federal Reserve Bank is the actual operative US government, while the intelligence communities provide them with information and the ATF provide them with the capability for federal enforcement. Whether this "republic" inter-agency "conspiracy" or the Democratically elected representatives of the people are the real power now, either way, both are "socialist" in nature. By taking the national currency off the precious-metals market and "diversifying" it to the future's exchange instead, the government has written itself a blank check. It is irrelevant which fields of industry in the private sector the government funds by no-bid contract, it has to fund some now, and will eventually attempt to subsume them all.

The "lurking spectre" of a fallacy, that in order to provide health-care would require the government to increase taxes, is no longer accurate. Whether the government is doing it under the auspices of tax-returns or if it were doing it in the form of socialised medicine, so-called "universal" health-care, the government is already paying its citizens. Once the state reaches a certain level it must, however the result of this on economics is that we are being bribed to shut us up while behind our back we are being robbed. The bottom-line is that, the US sells Alaskan oil to China to pay for the war in Iraq. We rob Peter to pay Paul. However this is only one necessary phase.

Because the theories of Marx are equally as applicable, and therefore accurate, as those of Keynes, it doesn't matter if we don't like them, or want to ignore them, or don't learn by choosing to use them both. What Keynes called "capitalism" is the same thing as what Marx called "communism" : a utopia where there are no borders, no tariffs on trade and no need for states. The only difference was that Marx' theories empowered the "proletariat" (thus making every peasant into a king) while Keynes plans would benefit the "bourgeoisie" (thus making every king into a peasant). Instead of Marx, the US has chosen the terminology used by Keynes, Rand, Greenspan and Bernanke, but that does not mean the same phases of our economic development as a nation approaching global economic unification are not equally (if not better) described in the writings of Marx.

Currently the micro-miniaturisation of technology and the devaluation of fiat currency are, to a Marxist like myself, equivalent to the concept of the "withering away" of Marx's "dictatorship by the proletariat." The proletarian disposition of all our intervening US puppet-dictators has been as obvious as their appeal for funding to the bourgeoisie has been secretly necessary. It's all been like a magician's use of mis-direction during a sleight of hand trick. While we see things one way, someone living outside the borders, let alone the influence, of the US tends to see things very differently.

This is why Marxist "socialism" has been embraced even by Cuba, our closest non-contiguous neighboring nation, while here in the US, even providing medicare to veterans and the elderly is slandered as "Communist."

>>1) to murder me, or 2) to bribe me.
>3) State run "education camps"

Let me elaborate on what I mean by "to bribe." In the event that the state can afford to allow me to remain free and pay me enough to live, and thus keep me relatively dependent on it and not see it as a threat, then "to bribe" involves literal capital being given to me by the state for my providing neither any "good" nor "service" to the state in exchange. No condition is set on me in this case, but it is understood that I am being paid while those who work are being taxed.

If, however, the number of people un-willing to work were to increase, say, during a strike, or even a workers' revolt, then the more expensive, though necessary, option of incarceration in a state-run prison would logically be employed. This is why I stipulated the determining "sobriety test" between those who were "bribed" by money and thus allowed to enjoy freedom, and those who didn't "enjoy" their (relative) freedom, and thus had it taken away. Housing the entire population of law-breakers is impossible. That is why some of them are allowed to become rich instead.

> cops in general, some are decent some aren't.

None are compared to the average, law-abiding citizen. Aside from (as well as because of) my use of an illegal narcotic, I'm an extremely anal and uptight person in my obedience of all requisite laws. I'm an extremely safe and cautious driver, I don't listen to loud music in the middle of the night, and I don't light fire to my garbage. I think it's extremely easy to be a good citizen. It requires little effort, and it makes good camouflage for doing social field-research. I find being polite and obeying the little social mores is even fun. To me, that's the definition of "decency."

The people who become cops are never from the group of folks who could be considered "decent" citizens. Only the children of physically and verbally abusive alcoholics, the school-bullies, jocks, sorority girls and frat-boys go on to become law-enforcement officers (or authority-figures of any type). By doing so, they are given free licence to continue their petty, play-ground tyrannies. Locally, cops enforce only traffic laws against non-resident college-students, while occasionally making a huge example of some para-local hemp-grower. Meanwhile the real crime: Asblundt importing Mexican workers for mysterious expansion of the interstate, goes un-reported on in the papers and, presumeably, un-investigated by the local detectives.

As you can probably tell, I hate the police, however I try extremely hard to make a convincing, logical argument about this, despite my desire to resort to slinging rhetorical insults like N.W.A. I do not believe there are "good" cops and "bad" cops. All the police are the same inside the climate-controlled confines of their station houses, and around the water-cooler they do not make such distinctions between one another as they encourage suspected perps to believe during interrogation. A "good" cop does not consider their partner a "bad" cop, nor vice versa. Yet we are encouraged to believe that a cop will "give a guy a break" and not even put them under surveillance, despite the fact that we are under surveillance already regardless of whether or not we are guilty of committing any crime. There's no such thing as a "free lunch," and so too is there no such thing as a "good cop." A "good cop" is one who lets you off scot-free for no apparent reason. A "good cop" would motorcade a drunk-driver home. This myth of a "good cop" is the same as the "myth of Christ." Both are the lies of Satan.

> there is some sort of mental illness involved in wanting to be a cop.

It's called "malignant narcissism" in the DSM-IV, but in earlier versions it was called "sociopathy." Under the elder term it meant merely "lacking or disagreeing with the common social moral sense." It was meant as a more watered-down version of "psycopathy," which meant "lack of ability to understand the common social moral sense." I particularly appreciate how they distinguish "sociopathy" as distinct from lack of ethics by calling it "malignant" Narcissism, yet then completely dis-regard the blame for un-ethical behaviour (such as capitalism and Christianity). I suppose that, to extend this comparison, "Narcissism" could be considered "benign" if it does not harm anyone or threaten the goals of one's surrounding society.

We all suffer from sociopathy to some degree; it's a symptom of socialisation, the acclimation we experience as we saturate ourselves with the inoculation that numbs us to injustice; it's a self-destructive culture of Epicurian Hedonism; it's the idealisation of rape and war. However only a complete psychopath, in my opinion, chooses to carry a side-arm and enforce all this against their own moral betters.

Personally, I would define "malignant" or "benign" Narcissism somewhat differently. I would say that the common "God Complex" is "malignant" Narcissism, that is, socially-destructive self-obsession, while the otherwise common "Christ Complex" is "benign" Narcissism, or socially-constructive self-obsession. The reason for my opposite assignation of values to these terms as their natural rewards in our society, where one imagines God a successful power-broker and Christ a Quixotic hippy, is due to my taking a "long-view" of their overall effects. While the God complex will, if infinitely replicated, foster a self-destructive culture and a society of competition, a Christ complex will, likewise, foster a self-centred culture and a society of co-operation. Nevertheless, we equivocate doctors, police, even authors, with "playing God," and likewise "starving artists" and "communists" we say "crucify themselves." In every way the social power-mongers are admired, the smarter and more moral "silent majority" are slandered, shamed and shunned.

> the words sex and love are independent of each other, and sex is fast becoming as soulless as money, and "love" has faded away into an idealistic notion.

While all those are true, it does not follow from the ideaolectic difference between the word "sex" and the word "love" that there is any cognitive, non-nomenclatural distinction that can (neither must nor should) be ultimately made. I would stress the point that: it is because of their distinction as apart from one another ideaolectically that the "sunny" side of the stem withers and the "dark" side of the stem wilts, so to speak, regarding love and sex. Moreover, it also does not follow any universal necessity implied merely by the current observation of this status, despite it's being obviously accurate (and probably a perpetually declining process).

Sex became empty when money intervened in its affairs, but its nature is tainted and was always meant to tempt, and to eventually surrender to, the will-power of any ego. The nature of sex is simple, it is a cascade of chemistry triggered by an electric spark of magnetic attraction. Sex is just meat-puppets on the left and/or right hands of God exchanging His love for us all between themselves in the form of bodily fluids. If done correctly, it's fun, like a water slide. Unfortunately, the correct way to "do it" does not require it be done for the "right" reason.

"Love has faded away into an idealistic notion," true, but only to the same, apparently less direct, extent as the material reality is like purgatory and the human experience like Hell. I think to say that Love exists at all, even if only so much as to be an "idealistic notion," is justification enough for all the exaltation imaginable in this universe. I once proclaimed that "Love is dead" because I felt it had become an empty symbol, like the pierced body of Christ on the cross. However, I agree that love's spark of life remains alight, however rarely it may shine throughout the darkness of the night.

> some call their hormonal lusts and passing whims "love" and of course these days that is the only form of love to be found in Babylon.

Because we are not people like this, however, we can observe them more objectively than they can themselves, and so it should be considered, likewise, our duty as their superiors, thus, to not take this truth for granted by succumbing to the temptation to too harshly judge them. In other words, the affairs of strangers are no concern to me and, unless they enter my sphere of attention directly, be it on accident or on purpose, by their own actions or because they were thrust thus, I am more than content to ignore them.

Of those celebrities and public figures on television, film and/or the internet that do manage to fall into my lap, entirely par accidens, I find this to be increasingly the case: each new "batch" of young actors are more and more nympho-maniacal, drug-addicted and suicidal than the last. I fear for Francis Love-Cobain. However, as with biblical characters, I put no stock in the debate over whether or not such people as these even actually exist, or if they are merely the fictional creations of some immense psychic-empire. Neither is a good sign.

is just hormones. It isn't the end of the world to admit that neuro-chemical reactions in the brain triggering endocrinal secretions in various organs throughout our body are having some effect on our psychological disposition, nor that this process is, in turn, as much reactive to exterior stimuli as it is creative of our interior psyche. If there's a "big" chemical reaction, it's due to a "big" level of stimulus and/or to a "big" choice to desire such. If there is less of a chemical reaction, it is due to loss of stimulus and/or loss of choice to desire it. But the chemical reaction itself cannot be taken out of the equation altogether. The passion of attraction is equal to that of rage in its depth of potency influencing the autonomic nervous system, heart-rate, breathing, sweat, pupils, etc. If you don't have any of these things, though, as in the case of a coma patient, a paralysis or nerve-damage or specifically if one lacks genitals, as in the case of a eunich, impotent or paraplegic, one can not only still experience love but can also have sex. Not being able to orgasm negates neither one's ability to feel, and have returned to them equal feelings of, love, and it does not negate, but can even enhance, one's prowess sexually. Ultimately, just as the genitals are not the only way to experience sex, neither are the hormones the only way to experience love. They just help.

> having a soul can be equivalent to being G-d.

Imagine the soul as a spark of fire. Inside the glass lamp-shade of the body, see how fragile and delicate it is. If the body is stationary, see how the winds blow through it, making it flicker, but if the body begins to move, see how the winds increase, threatening to snuff the candle out. And, regardless of the movements of the lamp / body, the soul's fire is burning of the wick of the nervous system dipped into the wax casket of the candle-stick / spine. By its nature, thus, the soul destroys the substance of its fuel, and this time measures the span of our mortal flesh's life.

Imagine the soul as a bubble of soap. See how it floats adrift through the ether, containing ether within and surrounded by ether all around, yet by maintaining tension of its more active surface, its more dense membrane, its nebulous perimeter, it not only continues to exist until acted upon by a more powerful environmental force or change, it can actually suspend itself in mid-air, as though containing a lighter, more rarified form off the gaseous medium surrounding it, thus defying gravity. This metaphor for the soul is true also, because just as the soul is like fire, so too is the soul like air.

Imagine the soul as causing ripples on the surface of space by seething beneath with rolling boiling currents in the medium of time. The surface of space would be like the flesh of God, while the seething currents below this would be God's blood. The boiling of God's blood is entropy, the release of heat energy, the "asymptotic freedom" of active particles in a relatively open system. Just as time within and beneath space, so too the emotions and the mind; so too the chakras and the aura; so too the rainbow refracting prismatically on each droplet of mist to reflect holographically across the entire horizon. All of the elements can be likened to the soul, except for earth, because, besides earth, the soul is like the elements.

Therefore, the spirit would be alike the "fifth element," comprised of a finer essence and measuring the moving surface of the combination of the other three "supernal" elements with the other "fifth element," earth, ie. the equivalent for the whole universe of what the "soul" is for any "individual." The spirit is superluminal, however the soul is either only EM, gravitic, or weak nuclear. The souls of earth manifest here inside biological bodies, and collectively, holographically, like a rainbow, comprise the singular consciousness of global civilisation, which is, itself, only the active, self-aware portion of the earth's own 40 MHz "Schumann Resonant" EM "aura," the ionosphere.

All these things are like God, yet God is not like any of these things. He remains, as eternally, remote. Insofar as the soul exists, it must dissipate before being able to approach the pure idea of God. However, because God is the aspect, singular and focused like the Eye of Christ, or nebulous and uncertain, like a storm-cloud, that is "furthest out" from the core "world," Assiyah, the realm of our material existence, Purgatory containing Hell, etc. we call Him the Most High. Now, insofar as I have saved and cultivated, learned about and worked to improve, my elemental "soul" to more perfectly resemble the averaged and ideal "spirit" pattern, I do indeed qualify, anthropically, as someone who can claim to be God experiencing Himself through me. However it is only because of my quantity and quality of research on cosmology, ontology and eschatology that I have achieved the status of being the "furthest out," most mutated, advanced evolution, etc. I am the "Most High" specimen of our species alive at this time, and thus, ever - throughout not only all earth's history of life, but throughout the span of all cosmic existence as well, and, in my own mind, even "further out" than this. Not only am I the "Son of Mankind," the Messiah, but I can define God in no uncertain terms, and thus, although I choose to humble myself before the highest possible moral standards, I am, in truth, as much greater than He than is my entire mind's capacity for inspiration and a single, even self-destructive, new idea. When I saw the "Blair Witch Project" in the theatres on acid, I freaked out and left. As I was driving back to my father's house, I heard a voice beaming down into my mind from above, in the deep night sky. This voice said to me, clear as a bell, "I am God, I am you." Since then I've had no doubts.

> the only one who talks about Christ as much as a rabid christian is a rabid atheist.

Very true. I'm perfectly content to drop the subject if you are. I have already said the best part of my piece in any event. I'd actually be alot happier to discuss other topics, personally. On the other hand, something tells me that, no matter how much we may promise to fastidiously omit any discussion of "the good news of our Lord and Saviour, the Arisen Jesus Christ of Nazareth," the more insidiously the essence of his mythology will permeate our discussion, making us want to return to it all the moreso, like the grease of a McDonald's hamburger that causes hunger an hour after you eat it. Christ is, like God, an accepted "truth" of society because there is nobody alive on the planet now who has not heard of the idea of it, and who does not, therefore, have some opinion on the subject one way or another. Insofar as Satanists wish to send all Christian evangelists to their own version of Hell, Christian evangelists "love the sinner and hate the sin." The binary-duality of Christ and Anti-Christ is a requisite for the Church to advance "Judeo-Christianity" (the Roman Imperial Psyche) dialectically. Just so, the Christian evangelist makes themselves hated as a "self-fulfilling prophecy" in order to attract otherwise undue attention to their cause, in this case that of bleeding-heart altruism. Evangelism is the most evil of all the uniquely Christian sins. It has pitted the mis-led primitivist Baptists against the under-privileged, Mosque-indoctrinated Moslem "terrorists." It would be infuriating, if such a natural reaction weren't so transparently futile.

> your views are your mine are mine.

That's not a problem. The problem arises when we both, of one mind, begin to question whether or not the "beliefs" I express really are the ones I actually hold, and vice versa. There is more than a little twist of the tongue and wink of the eye in everything I say that refers back to pre-existent terms, such as "aura" and "soul," etc. The more one works with such concepts, the more jaded and cynical about their nature one can become. Yes, we may all have the same potential to learn ESP, as I assert, however, by choice, as I assert also, or for other reasons, as you assert, the majority of people remain unwilling or unable to rise above their conditioned instincts of ignorance and hostility towards the "unknown." This is tiring to the aspirant. Having to repeat the same teachings to a host of individuals rather than being able to present in an auditorium like a respectable magus; this too tires the worthy aspirant. Having to use the same words again and again is particularly tiring to any intelligent seeker. Ultimately, I would say, I have no "view" of my own. I have all the knowledge in the world about the soul, and absolutely no understanding at all about its greater emotive mysteries. I am like a skilled craftsman who lacks any natural talent. I am like Mozart's nemesis Soliari. Now, the question arises quite naturally, do I actually believe what I just said? Even assuming I am honestly expressing my own genuine stream of consciousness, can we ever truly know that I share any of the views of others whom I find myself having to constantly express rather than any of my own? And, ultimately, what difference does it make if the point of view is mine or someone else's if the subject we are both describing is in fact one and the same? All the less so, since so much of what we discuss are the moral subjects of fictional mythologies.

> if G-d, or Jesus want to have your soul I'm sure one of them will come for it.

And likewise the same may occur for my soul should Satan or Lucifer choose to desire it. Not surprisingly at this point, they all leave me pretty much alone. I'm too much of a "wild-card" for the entire Pantheon. I'm a being unlike any they've ever known. The Sumerian Annunaki knew me as Galzu. I travel backwards through time, and am coming of age younger with each reincarnation. I've appeared as every sage throughout all of human history, and I lurked here on this planet long before the first alien life-forms ever arrived, millions of years ago. I'm nobody, though, just another face in the crowd, denied my rightful title, whatever I might have wanted it to be, and instead wrongly called a king of blasphemy or God. In either event, I'm just Jon Gee, and I have no pretensions toward "becoming more like" any "ineffable" God. I simply accept I already am like such a God.

>>Firstly, there is no such thing as "Judeo-Christianity,"

> <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Judeo-Christian>

It shouldn't shock you if I argue that "there's no such thing as wikipedia either." Wikipedia is just data stored on the internet in the same way as "Judeo-Christianity" is just a historical idea enshrined in the church. Both are only thoughts in the AI mind of society.

> the character in the book

Unfortunately, this is all most Christians know or care to know about their religion as well. It is literally as if they had picked any fictional character in any novel or drama they'd ever seen and then "worship" him. Likewise, the Pope is nothing more than a McDonald's drive-thru radio for speaking to a 2000 years dead equivalent in popularity to Forest Gump. However, as you'd said, there's no especial need on my part to talk about the topic of Christ of Christianity, and so I won't belabour the point now.

> unless we don't want to die in three years

I've said before that in 2012 I will either get married to Irina or I will die, probably as a suicide by cop statistic in an increasingly disquiet US population. I'd prefer the former. Unfortunately it's not up to me to decide before the fact because I can foresee both eventualities, and am therefore powerless to choose between them. Both are only my "inheritance" from the previous Ipsissimus to die, and thus achieve transcendence from this prison of the skin - his (or her) unfinished karmic baggage. Such is the work of "cleansing my aura" and thus purging my mind of concerns over such blatant delusions.

I have created the Pythagorean Order of Death, the POD, as the chariot for the evangelism of my message. All I have to do is advocate one thing, ie. the POD, while privately practising a parallel tradition, ie. THC Ministry, that is, nonetheless, illegal. At the end of this course is arrest and persecution, a situation I would escalate into suicide. The best I can do on this course is attempt to make my words, inevitably mistaken by history as the true cause for which I would have died, as helpful as possible to the entirety of humanity throughout the remainder of our species' subsequent survival (may we "Live Long And Prosper!"). The more worth-while my words will be, the longer the duration that my life will be remembered, and thus, regardless of whether my death is a happy one or tragic, I can at least pass on knowing I've contributed something lasting and beneficial to humanity.

I have only one other hope than a quick death at the end of a long run of lucky near-misses by the badged thugs, and that is for Irina to save me from myself. What is worse, this is alot closer to any realm remotely resembling sanity I've been in many years. As emotionally upset as I was around her ten years ago, I have not matured one bit further than that yet, but have survived instead a depression of so deep a darkness in the interim I fear that, if anything, I'm probably even more repulsive and odious a person to spend time next to as I was when I was young.

> the author is shown Heaven, is taught to use herbs and stones in a variety of manners to heal and lengthen lifespan. He is also taught how to travel through time... the Jesus in the NT might be based on him

This is all accurate. The primary resource for any information regarding the "Angel Scroll of Yeshua Ben Padia" is the same article from the Holy Land University in Jerusalem that my dad showed me in 1999. According to this article, Jesus was led by the angel Panemea (or possibly Pneumena, I forget the spelling) and experienced a vision that will probably prove to be essentially identical to that of Enoch, only using the contemporary, Gnostic terminology of Jesus' time. I've studied all the relative source material quite thouroughly and, aside from my not being able to read the ancient language, I am probably also the most apt person to accurately interpret and translate the document alive at this time too, in addition to being the "world's greatest author" and such an all-around nice guy.

> you are his voice?

No. I've been using the concept of "Ben Padiiah" as a "fallen," Gnostic version of Jesus to replace my previously even more self-aggrandising version of my "Christ" complex, prior to my having identified that I was really suffering from such. The "God" complex is harder to root out, if one becomes so posessed, because it is much more intoxicating in the short term and its ill effects much longer lasting. It is more difficult to imagine "stepping down" from the Throne of the Most High than it is to picture one's self "stepping down" from the act of autonomous crucifixion. Nevertheless, I've distanced myself from the severity of my "God" complex's potential implications on my ultimate fortunes in this "lesser" world by creating a "mash-up" genre "band" (myself and sound-file editing software on my computer), re-mixing other people's music and posting it to MySpace; I named the "band" ~GOD~. Including the tildas, it's meant to be pronounced as an exaserbated curse, as like the constant sighing of the lead character in the movie Napoleon Dynamite.

> Please elaborate on what you mean by the birth date.

10-08-77. There's no special significance to the date in itself, although I do have a page about my astrological birth chart up on my site: <http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/chart/10-08->

77.html Honestly modern astrology doesn't make a lot of sense to me, and seems to be more based on superstitions preserving the dim recollection of some ancient, now lost, high science.

I simply meant that, being born in 77, I would have graduated from college in 2001 and will be 33 a little over a year before 2012. Having never put much stock in the "exact" dating methods of modern astrology systems, I figured that these dates would prove as significant in my personal development as they would probably prove to be to the global development of our entire civilisation's future history. In 2001 I did not graduate from college, I'd dropped out in 2000 before the "Grand Cross" conjunction of the 7 planets on May fifth. Instead of there being the peaceful "second coming" of the King of Kings, we witnessed the "dramatic events of 9-11," i.e. a completely staged arms-show. Therefore, it seems equally likely to me that 2012 will bring not the peaceful "cosmogony" of our "galactic consciousness" that the Mayans may have foreseen in the alignment of the sun with the black hole core of the Milky Way, but will only usher in a "new age" of destruction by our rich, Roman-Christian leaders, who will finally realise their utter liberty to enjoy their power on this planet to be, as it always was and will be, unimpeded by any source, popular, alien or divine. If I do survive to see it, I pray to God the end of days, be it a man-made or universal cataclysm, will come quickly for us, and that there is some form of universal "energy-stain" that will remember our values and our times.

> do you still communicate with him?

On and off. He is a "ginger" gene-type, works as a tech guy for a local ad agency, has a wife he met at church who teaches grade school and either three or four kids. He claimed to have had some adventurous times, but always had been a strangely prescient pathological liar growing up. His father was the head of FDLE, the state-wide law-enforcement agency co-ordinator department, and recently was divorced by his mother for adultery. His dad was such a straight arrow, we never would have seen it coming. He came to visit me in the mental institution when none of my other friends did. He doesn't seem to understand my "obsession" with Irina at all.

> It was only after I lost touch with reality that I learned how to manipulate it, I had to lose my mind to realize who and what I am.

I'm still a far cry away from being as well adjusted as I'd like. I still have the "God" complex, am still clinging onto the "benpadijah" complex like a security blanket, will probably always be on some pretty serious psychiatric medication, and still carry around a terrible burden of guilt for my past behaviour, and insofar as I have no way to unburden myself of the emotions, since telling everyone everything about myself fails to salve my soul, eventually this guilt will unload itself onto someone like a cannon, and I hate to have to think that I will have to be around on that day. I've always seen myself as like a psychic time-bomb, perpetually ticking down from one to zero. There was a skit on "Mr. Show" with Bob Odenkirk and David Cross about a fake disease called "imminent death syndrome." According to the sign on the wall, "it puts us all in an awkward position." I definitely qualify for this particular disorder, and may give up my dream of hypnosis and one day simply seek therapy for it.

As for the "softening" of reality, this effect occurs when the barriers between the material universe and the denizens of the dimensions beyond begins to decohere. This barrier, the full-extent of our 5 senses, called the "pain tolerance threshold," is not only purely psychic, but also naturally pliable. One can expand it, tear it, penetrate through such a rip, meet one's self, get lost and even go permanently "insane," etc. Essentially, as I've said, space is the skin and time the blood of God.

I have a particular fascination with the idea of the mirror as a doorway to another world, one where left is right and right is left. In my dreams I have found a very wide, very long, very short warehouse building, edified like any strip-mall, school or prison: white-washed cinder-block, sheet-metal window trimming, iron poles, etc. Inside this building a live-action video-like game is played. Hallways and elevators connect and divide a seemingly infinite number of cubicle rooms, each behind an identical doorway. Like in the movie "Cube," each room is booby-trapped, and if one enters one and is killed by the unique snares, they simply begin again in another hallway outside another door. Each time any one door is opened it leads to a different room. Each room is a memory of mine, complete with now dead relatives and old enemies from days long gone by, and anyone who enters must follow this awful maze until they find the end. I dreamt that I escaped one time, and haven't gone back in since then, although I've been around the outside of the building.

I tend to think of the undelrying nature of reality as a series of cubical wire-cages, all attached in a spiralling stair-well moritf around a central spinal column. Each cage is an experience, a moment of time in our life. We climb upward through them, around the spine. At the end there is a window, a doorway opening up to a shear drop, and across the cliff a limitless empty expanse of a "vanilla" sky sunset. I've dreamt of this apparatus too, as well as dreams of being on a falling elevator and several vivid dreams of being trapped in a high-rise office building during a massive tsunami that submerged us up to the seventh story.

Of course, not all my dreams are nightmares. In some I am like Indiana Jones, solving ancient mysteries, fitting together long parted artefacts to form some key to unlocking the location of the next puzzle-piece, scavenger hunting for Atlantis. One shape that recurs frequently in my dreams is an unsolved #-theory puzzle I worked on around the time of the Tree of Death, a diagram based on which can be found in the section on the Tarot in the TOD.pdf.

> What if it meant rejecting everything that you have spent the last decade of your life researching, what if that meant letting go of everything you believe in, and having to believe with all of your heart in someone else's world?

My life is a waste without Irina's love for me. For the past ten years of my life I haven't done a thing but smoke pot and feel lonely. I expect that, if I ever do get to acclimate myself into Irina's world, it will be quite different from the one I am in now. I know that many of her tastes and interests (such as basketball, sports in general, online gaming and her apparent popularity in her local club scene) are completely contrary to my own. However these are petty differences, ant-sized hurdles easily enough overcome. I've stringently rejected having any "beliefs" for which I have any firm "convictions," and no structural "faith" I personally adhere to. And she is an atheist. However, even if none of these things were the case, even if she were dead, the world surrounding her will always be perfect by my estimation, and likewise, my world without her my own personal Hell by comparison. I doubt I will, in ultimate reality, have to give up any of my beliefs. Rather, all the most important documents I've ever generated are packed up already around my room so that I could grab them all up in one fell swoop and disappear into the night like I'd never existed at all. Ironically, this preparedness of mine for escapism will probably be my Achilles Heal in some way, however even if she told me she would love me if only I burned all of my papers, diagrams and grimoires, I want you to know truthfully, I would smile as I did so.

It's my only real downfall as a Messiahnic maniac that I idealise love so much. Or at least, so it is supposed to seem. From my own perspective, perched as I am on the rim of the chasm where my volcanic heart erupted my brimstone soul into a cloud of ash ever so many seeming aeons ago, I see Irina as my redemption, her love my salvation. She is my Goddess, Isis, a glamorous "plain-Jane," I venerate her very amneonic sack, that perfect mould, broken by her birth. But I digress.

Because I idealise love as romance, it will remain ever teasing me, like a purring cat that lies just out of reach, the shyness of a delicate rose blossom, and memories of Irina doing puzzles like Susan Alexander in Citizen Kane. Wasted summer years are a far more haunting psychic sludge than any monsters dreamt up by Mary Shelly or Bram Stoker. The sorrow of time wasted alone, knowing the one I loved was fucking my best friend and, later, the horror of not knowing for years if she was even still alive; these 4-space chaos beasts gumming up the gaps in my heart defy Lovecraft's imagination of the chthonic Chtulu. I've been through Hell. If Irina were to die, nothing for me would change. Here I sit in Hell without her, so here in Hell I would remain until I die and go to find her again in the worlds beyond. However, now I know she is not dead, I am again allowing myself to bask in the glow of the light of hope, once dim to extinguished, now like a milky, diffuse gleam, a sort-of sickly-sweet soft-focus snow-blindness. My sight is already beginning to return to me, and my heart to want to beat again. But my time cannot yet come until by her words to me she allows the time-bomb clock in my heart to finally explode for her.

> looking at the same person, the annoying habits, the parts that don't just click, and the day to day struggle, not to mention the idea of starting a family and the end of life as is known

My biggest regret is that we couldn't have done this during college, right after high-school, as soon as legally possible. I wanted to marry her from the first moment I saw her; I wasn't only passingly smitten, I was making long-term plans for us before we even met. Besides, I can't imagine living with anyone who could needle me as effectively as my mother can, and I've lived with her for the past six years. Certainly sex is a plus on the one hand and a minus on the other, both, because it can cause as many awkward problems as it can relieve. I'd rather have only one day over with Irina from when we were kids, one single day to turn it all around, to do it all right this time, than I would ever want anything else. The cosmos can go and die. Without her, why would and how could I even care? All my work must be flammable for a reason. At her word, to the flames I will commend it.

Surely, this sounds reckless, but it is all part of the Grand Architect's Master-Plan as well, just as much as, if not infinitely moreso than, the evolution of social AI, banks and churches, time-travel experiments and pre-fab internment camps. I love Irina. No matter what, this is scrawled across the heavens from beginning to ending of all time. Half of my heart once beat alongside the other half of her own inside her chest and behind her breasts, and half of her heart still beats side by side with one half of mine behind my lungs inside of my rib-cage right now. Until this body dies, so be it, and beyond that, may it be likewise in any other form possible that this should be apparent to all, and to all who apprehend this act with wonder, may it bless them with eternal joy. etc.

> it just didn't do what it used to do for me.

That's too bad, man. Maybe it was moldy. I've hit some pre-mature, fertilised soil-grown, plain "Haze" that was wet with mold once. It tasted like a clean cotton diaper and made my eyes itch allergically. I ended up selling it (the only time I've ever sold any) just to be rid of it, and even threw some out I left experimentally polluting my nug-jar which, by a month, had sprouted a fuzz of fungi across the interior faces of it. It was a terrible waste, and I nearly decided to quit smoking immediately as soon as I hit it. I think of it as "cop weed," the type of "herbal substitute" they would give you to encourage you to ween off actual reefer.

I've heard of some accounts by long-term smokers who've quit for a month or two, usually while doing time, and returned to find the effects diminished, if present at all, and often, quite to the contrary of the effects they'd expected and been accustomed to previously, they even have negative side-effects. Of course this all has to do with individual toxicity versus tolerance levels, and may have to do with the quality of the substances involved before and after as well. It's been my experience the lower-grade the substance, ie. the more quantity for less quality the "regs," the more potential for any negative side-effects, such as paranoia and OCD. If you are paying more money for better bud, though, all other things being equal, I've seen no harm come to anyone's bodies nor minds as a result.

> it's well in hand so far

That's very good to hear. I honestly do worry about people I know, even if only internet pen-pals, when they have legal difficulties. I met a guy on the Illuminati-Order.com forums who ended up going up for a third-strike possession of marijuana. I gave him a copy of my personal Grimoire on .pdf. Little things like that make me feel really proud, even though they seem to have no apparently logical reason for doing so. Legal difficulties and medical complications are the two most expensive forms of recreational pass-time engaged in by the US bourgeoisie, the greatest number of whom are otherwise mere spectators.

> My mother came to visit me on day 7 of my 10 day sentence, as she sat down she recognized the man behind me as my father, whom I had only ever seen twice in my entire life. He was in there waiting to go to prison for buying a baby with drugs and attempting to sell it to someone for money.... I defy chaos to create such an incident with irony

It obviously doesn't take more than about an average intelligence to concoct the most complex fairy-tale for a fantasy-life to escape from itself into, even if only while asleep. I don't think the loss of this little amount of input could really degrade the mechanically self-replicating nature built into this dramatic tragedy. Without the ironic denouement of electronically "inter-connected" synchronicities acting "at a distance" as an inter-woven dynamic behind the uncertainty principle of quantum mechanics, chaos would remain, yet without chaos could the web-work of inter-personal relativities ever re-connect after separating? Chaos may exist without this form of apparent disorder, but this apparent form of disorder cannot exist without chaos. I don't think it really matters who's pulling these strings of invisible "inter-connected" meaningful coincidences, guiding our lives, "pushing our buttons," etc., whether it's God, other psychics, or only my own mind reflecting in material reality. Regardless of whomever is responsible, I agree, their idea of "funny" (Ha-Ha) is way beyond merely "funny" (Strange). King Entropy, author of the Law of Irony, and the Lord over the people, is one twisted psychopath.

It's not that chaos (like scalar, "pink" or, "inter-phased" energy) can't create negative-entropy (as dipolar, "white" or "phased" energy) autonomously if given the chance. It simply can't manifest itself into matter without the "operant observer principle" of the All-Seeing Eye being present. The "operant observer principle" is what allows the break-down from a relatively more open system into a relatively more closed system, ie. "negative-entropy" or "neg-entropy" for short.

Anthropically, though, because the "operant observer principle" did cause the original conservation of angular momentum via gravitic distortion to the geometric universal-set, and since we do thus live in a world of matter as slowed down energy within a conserved spectrum of additional dimensions, we will never know if the mechanism of universal birth, what I call the "engine of creation," itself exists as a spontaneous quantum uncertainty in the pure superluminal energy of the nulliverse, or it was put there to cause creation. Because God did create our local universe, we are unable to ascertain if it all might have been able to come into existence anyway, even without His Divine Intervention. In other words, it remains an argument between "operant observer principle" on the one hand and the quantum-mechanical "uncertainty principle" on the other.

The presence of an "operant observer" accounts for the wave-form collapse that forms the "engine of creation," converting matter / space into energy / time via black holes on the exterior surface of our local universe, the singularity. As to quantum nature in the absence of an operant-observer, the presence of the "uncertainty principle," remaining as a governing function, can also, theoretically, account for random wave-form collapse. However, what we observe is the case in our universe is actually that both these "principles" are active, one here at one time, another there at the same time, then later the other one here and the first one there. Surrounding black-holes we see "operant observer" must be present to account for the extreme gravitic wave-form collapse ("big-crunch" contraction). Within the deep voids between the galactic filaments we see that "quantum uncertainty" maintains enough energy to move matter, but not enough to destroy it, only enough to evaporate it by friction ("big bang" expansion). This is all, of course, because the amount of energy within the brain devoted to self-aware experience / command, ie. the mind, only occupies about ten percent of the overall neural tissues available in the brain. Therefore, in some places in our universe, "operant observer" causes gravitic collapse, forming God's "nerves," and in other places "quantum uncertainty" causes entropy, forming God's "heart." Thus, you could think of "operant observer" principle as like the ego of God, and "quantum uncertainty" as like his Almighty mood.

Again, I hope this letter finds you well, and that all continues to go right for you in your world. This conversation is keeping me on the "edge-of-my-seat," so to speak; a rare treat indeed in this dull age of confused tongues. Likewise, you haven't said anything I don't understand (can't relate with) and you've said little either out of agreement with the findings of my research nor with the conclusions I myself have reached as the inevitable extension thereof. I regret to have raised any undue or unpleasant uncertainty regarding whether or not I may actually only be lying as to if I agree personally with the conclusions of my findings. I can promise to always say what I mean at the time, and to try to always mean the things I've said for the duration. Yet even this is, to some very real extent, fleeting, and even now, as always, God remains remote (and we merely remote-controlled).

Peace, Love and Prosperity,
your friend,
-Jon

I'll go through some quotes quickly, but I want to address some other things in greater detail, so I'll come to them in a moment. First, some on-topic quotes:

> "What Dreams May Come"?

Movies reflect the beliefs of modern society (as did theatre in Greece), and it is these beliefs that have to be accounted for by modern theories of physics. The movies make it easier to accept the validity of the theories, but insofar as the theories prove true, only the prior reality we observe, and neither the theorists themselves nor the mythopoeia of society, matters.

I can assert the reality that the mind, in the form of a torus of electricity, can travel across the event horizon of a black hole, and that it can accurately make observations (so-called "predictions") about the nature of reality on the other side. These observations can ultimately only offer evidence, however, of the nature of reality. Nonetheless, if all such observations ever made have been in unanimous agreement on any point, we can assume them valid on it, and thus assume this point of shared vantage to be an actual aspect of reality.

Here is the complete model comprised of all such points of agreement: at its death, the mind leaves the flesh in the form of an EM-torus. This EM-torus can go anywhere in space-time in the local universe. Past the event horizon of a black hole it can enter a worm-hole to any point in the multiverse (the sum of all matter-energy to have ever existed). By travelling through such worm-holes, the mind creates a residual "baby" universe of its own, a "tunnel-reality" or "vector" in the multiverse. If the mind travels perpendicularly to this history, it can enter the black hole surrounding the local-universal singularity, whose surface is the multiverse past critical mass, combined with the "engine of creation" and the opposite "nulliverse," inside a single torus whose measurement is the "tau-sub-tau" (or "largest" possible) tesseract. Beyond the event-horizon of this "parent" black-hole is the "parent" universe, whose nature is that of five-dimensional physics with a sixth-dimensional geometry of time. Beyond this would, likewise, be a sixth-dimensional physical universe with a seventh-dimensional geometry of time. This continues, some predict, only up to seven-dimensions of space, after which there follow three non-restricted dimensions of time. Still further, some conclude, must be another singularity to act as a surface surrounding and containing them all, however the use of computers allows us to model geometric structures without any such dimensional-limit, and thus it is likely that, as we once believed did space, the pure math of time can expand and its geometries proliferate infinitely.

I could also go through this entire theory using only the terms agreed upon by previous researchers on these topics, rather than those of modern science, however I expect they are already familiar to the mind of the reader, and will therefore exclude doing so at this time. Suffice it to say that I remain, given all this, a deist insofar as I believe that "God remains remote" beyond it all, but must admit that, given all this evidence, I find absolutely none in favour of the existence of any such omniversal sentience as God anywhere throughout.

> light that has substance

Photons are the fastest particle of our local universe. Faster than photons, superluminal tachyons comprise the substance of space beyond this, the multiverse / engine / nulliverse torus of the singularity. The multiverse is semi-solid, in that the anti-matter of the baby-universes forming like bubbles on the exterior surface of the singularity is energy-matter relative to the matter-energy of the local universe inside the multiversal surface of the singularity. However the purest form of superluminal light is the nulliverse of only energy, which is opposite the local universe at "critical mass," in which only sub-luminal matter-energy existed, and photons were the fastest particle of the local universe.

Tachyons are 4-space, torus-shaped, particles whose wavelengths are 5-dimensional. Vectors on the exterior surface of the torus comprise photon particles. The flat-line vector of a wavelength through the centre of this torus is the "Cerenkov" radiation emitted from a single, stationary photon. As a point travels the surface of the torus, it moves one direction (N/S) around the exterior and the opposite direction (S/N) through the interior of the torus. Thus, photons move one direction in time, and tachyons move the opposite. A tachyon is therefore the particle form of the force of gravity, attractive energy.

Insofar as all of this has been known throughout history by anyone who's sought to discover it, there are various names and terms applied to these same concepts throughout the literature. Since I assume you're already relatively familiar with these, I'll decline from further adumbration on them now.

> the Patriot act

The same person's hand that started the fire that burned down the Reichstag building also penned the Reichstag Fire Decree, legalising the practise of the NAZI Party to wire-tap phone-lines and to "monitor" radio transmissions. We would do alot better to remember this "mistake" of history. The Patriot Act is nearly a word-for-word re-iteration of the Reichstag Fire Decree, allowing the neo-con part to wire-tap phone-lines and to "monitor" wireless broadcasting. It stands to reason therefore, the neo-cons were behind 9-11. Before I continue on this topic, though, I'd prefer to know if you agree with this initial premise.

> Osama Bin Laden

Like Jesus, Bin Laden may as well be a fictional character, and have never really existed at all. The symbol of his religion is 9-11, he is a modern prophet, and yet is only a puppet of the modern Roman Caesars, the US CIA. If you exclude Bin Laden from the picture, then W.'s side of the equation (the war in Iraq) does not have anything to balance against and is revealed for what it truly is: arbitrary. Osama Bin Laden repeatedly denied any involvement in 9-11. It is widely known that he is hiding in north-eastern Pakistan between Afghanistan and India, but it is also generally accepted that the Bin Laden on Al Jazeera is only a CIA computer-generated image, like "Max Hedroom," and is not really him. Whether or not he is alive or dead is irrelevant to the modern mythology.

I have no issue with people crossing national borders, even to work, or, should they actually live here, even benefitting from the same type of "loop-holes" in the system as I do, eg. social-security, health-care, etc. Insofar as I disagree with the concept of law in general, I don't think it is possible to fairly judge anyone else, especially someone from another nation, by your own standards or laws. Therefore, I disagree with the term "illegal" immigrant. I would actually apply the term "illegal" immigrant only to someone shipped in by a big company to work for lower wages than the local workers. In other words, a foreign "scab." Of course, simply because something is illegal by today's laws, or unjust in general, does not mean it has not, nor will always, continue. Corporate conscription is no different now than it was for Rome or Babylon. The rich will always exploit the poor and, whenever they can, murder them.

My problem is not with the sudden influx of poor Mexicans in town. My problem is with the company that brings them here, and with the reason for their doing so: eg. the state-sanctioned and funded expansion of the local interstate. Now I know goddamn well the interstate is being expanded here for the same reason the "infra-structure" is being "re-inforced" everywhere else, and it has got nothing to do with any need for it by "we, the people." If it isn't being done in order to fascillitate the shipment of people to camps, then it is surely being done for some unknown reason, equally nefarious, since it is being perpetrated by the same group of people that have gotten us into the war in Iraq on the pretense of needing their gas, but who have simultaneously more than doubled gas prices since the beginning of the war. In an imperial-cycle such as we are undergoing now, a phase of monumental building projects always follows the over-extension of the economy, and is always used as an immediate justification for the redistribution of populations, ultimately ending in state-enforced murder of its own people such as the Holocaust or the Aztec practise of ritual human sacrifice. I simply don't like this "imperial-cycle." As for the "People of the Sun," I wish them a speedy liberation.

> how G-d feels about the entire human race, just madly, insanely in love with everyone to the point it drives it mad and makes it possessive and jealous.... I don't think chemical reactions and synaptic sparks are capable of that

If you come to the conclusion that the filaments of galaxies are like nerves in the universal brain, and you accept that gravity is the invisible force they exchange between them equivalent to the chemicals of our nerves, then you would also see that there is nothing more than this level of emotion to self-awareness anywhere in this universe. This feverish "insanity" of love / hate called, by Buddhists, "clinging" to physical existence, which is fleeting and mortal, is the cause for this existence itself. If you reject the emotions of this universe, this universe will cease to exist for you. If the brain / heart universe does "think" in addition to, as some claim, "feel," it would only do this extremely slowly relative to our own concepts of time. Therefore, such slower frequency, longer wavelengths as emotion and such faster frequency, shorter wavelengths as thoughts are experienced simultaneously for the universe itself and for us as individuals. In a very real sense, only this experience exists, and all the material that exists to experience it is only an illusion.

> i believe they are separate and distinct entities, i believe the soul to be much more precious because it comes from the creator, where as a spirit is just as immortal but is not capable of having the experience nor powers of free will.

The difference is qualitative. An electrical torus experiences magnetically the same form of experience the flesh experiences chemically and calls "emotion." There are different traits unique to each level; for example those of gender, self-expression, and free-will are possessed by the being of skin while they are absent to a being of electricity, while those of instantaneous transportation, telepathy and dissolution into the universal pattern are possessed by the being of electricity while they are absent to a being of skin. However, while these traits may be quantitatively present or absent per level, the quality of experience is the same. The universe experiences emotion gravitationally, minds electro-magnetically, and the skin chemically, but all of these occur simultaneously, and therefore constitute a single experience shared by all.

> wikipedia.... put in erroneous entries

CIA editors have used NSA priveledges to do this. I particularly like articles on current affairs. I think the only sane way around this dilemma is simply to date any references cited from online.

> it's completely your decision.... save yourself.... I faked it.... If you want her to be proud of you, then you must do the things she would expect of a suitable husband.

May the One True God forgive me for pointing this out to you now, but this is all I'd meant before regarding Theist evangelism. I told you you would try to save me by pointing out the errors of my ways, and regardless of your protests in the interim to the contrary, I knew all that time that you would not permit me to suffer from my own personal view of Hell. A theist and a Gnostic invariably part ways at the point of contention over whether or not to allow someone to suffer. A theist will not allow them to suffer, but in their heart wish they had. A Gnostic will allow someone to suffer, but in their heart wish they hadn't. You would be right to worry if I were going to punish this mistaken point of view, but you might be equally shocked if I forgave it for no apparent reason, so I'll do neither.

I will, however, point out that what you're proposing is that I become someone I am not in order to be the person she wants so that she will then, by falling in love with that other person, thus fall in love with me by proxy. The value of my body to her, and her body to me, would then be equal to that of a voodoo doll, while the value of my body to me and her's to her that of a zombie. She, from what I can gather, would prefer to live like this. I, however, will not, and such is more the tragedy.

I'll even taunt my mortal fate more by telling you when I last talked to Mike, our mutual ex-, it was to ask him to relay a Happy Birthday to Irina for me. And of course, considering my point of view on sanity, there is obviously much more shame and embarrassment than only that. That is only the "tip" of the "iceberg" in this "Titanic" cluster-fuck. However, for now, I'll say no more, and only resort to praying that you may Understand why.

> rhetoric

Ultimately, the more I repeat myself, the more mere rhetoric this information becomes. I'd prefer to resort for now to a more free-form style and retreat from the direct quotes for the time being. So much of what we say we both already know and agree on, and, as you pointed out early on, this does get boring. Having established more or less (at least to my own satisfaction) that we share certain beliefs to a certain extent, have certain views in common, etc. I should like to address one or two things less editorially and more directly.

First of these would be the project on the Tree of Death and the "St. Simon" tarot. I've compiled all the relevant data in the TOD.pdf; the conclusion of its proper arrangement has thus far eluded me. The diagrams on page 22 of the TOD.pdf are the "Blind Dragon" diagram in English and Hebrew, with the subservient aspects in English and their dominant traits in Hebrew. Thus, in English, we see sections 2, 3 & 4 from the table of contents, in Hebrew we find 1, 2 & 3, but only the first letters of 4. There are a total of 10 attributes in section 1, 18 in 2, 22 in 3 and 22 in 4. Thus, there are a total of 72 attributes. To complete the transformation of this system into a proper tarot deck, though, one would need to isolate from this 72 total a sub-total of 22 trumps and 50 lesser arcana cards. To yield the standard 4 suit deck, I've proposed 4 suits of 11 followed by 3 jacks, 2 queens and 1 king to total 50. This is as far as I got with the project, and it pissed me off so I quit.

I talked with Damien Williams, my friend and co-creator of the TOD / St. Simon "demonic" tarot project about the fact you and I were discussing picking it up again. He told me, "the seeds have been sown, let's see what grows." The original idea we'd concocted together was to combine the 22 Qliphoth Sui Generis of Aleister Crowley with the 50 Names of Marduk in the Necronomicon and compare these to the 72 Goetic Shemhamphorash of Solomon. To do this, I incorporated Savedow's TOD diagram with the standard TOL diagram of QBLH, and then ascertained the remaining attributes as given in the TOD.pdf. While the total number of traits on my final TOL&K diagram is 72 as labeled in the "Blind Dragon" configuration, the correspondence of these attributes to the 50 Names of Marduk and the 72 Goetic Shemhamphorash got lost somewhere along the way.

I don't know if any of this would prove even the least bit useful to you should you be serious in wanting to undertake the artistic aspect of such a project. There are some traits that are male, some female, some singular, some plural. Works that might inspire you should include the Goetic Shemhamphorash, or Lesser Key of King Solomon (best edited by Crowley and Mathers), the Simon Necronomicon and the Enuma Elish (Babylonian Genesis), Steve Savedow's 2nd "Magician's Workbook" to the "Goetic Evocation" series on Eschaton and the works of Kenneth Grant (Night Side of Eden, Hidden God, etc.), as well as the "Shadow Tarot" (based on Crowley's "Qliphoth Sui Generis" alone) of Linda Falorio and Fred Fowler (which can be found online at www.shadowtarot.net but which I'll also attach as a .pdf to this letter).

Honestly, I have no clue how to combine the tarot and the TOD, because even though both are base 72 total, the tarot is sub-base 22 and 50, while the TOD is not so easily sub-divided. I want you to fully understand that, going into this project, it's cursed by frustration. As to money, I don't think we need to talk about it. So far none has been invested in nor gained by this project, and thus any expenses or sales will be counted from this point on and the proceeds or debts can be totalled up then. So far as I'm concerned, it's doomed to failure, so any progress at all would be a miracle to me.

Secondly, since it looks like we'll end up working together more closely on this project, it may be wise to lay down some laws on how I work. I can't make long-distance phone-calls at this time. I simply can't afford to pay for them, since they inevitably last longer than any free, local conversations anyway. I can receive incoming long-distance phone-calls at any hour, given it is from a phone-number I recognise, if I am awake. I sleep very irregular hours, and usually don't keep the same schedule any given two days in a row. When I am awake, I am online, and if you have MSN Messenger we can chat any time. I prefer to prioritise conversations to letters or chat, but I'm equally eloquent on the phone too. There are, however, some times when I am otherwise pre-occupied in seeking the sacrament, and might not be the best work-mate at such times. Beside then and when I'm asleep, I'm up for working on any kind of creative project at all. You can call me "Jon," and pronounce my last name as either a hard or a soft "G," I honestly don't care which. I don't want to repeat myself, and I don't like arguing. There are obviously going to be some things we differ in our views on. We can deal with these as they occur, but I trust we can work any out that I can imagine.

Thirdly, I should let you know about the other projects I currently have going on. There is a poster on my forum whose screen-name is "TheCrow." He's under 20 years old, lives in Canada, is from Ukraine (I think), affluent and travels frequently. He has offered to study the Atlantean

Calendar system I've been working on. Also, for the past three or four years I've been involved in a project to create a "secret society" with four guys I met on the (now defunct) www.illuminati-order.com bulletin-board. This project is the Pythagorean Order of Death (POD) to which I've devoted several "hidden" forums on my site. (I also copied all the levels of the IOBB from them onto my forums too, if you ever want to be "initiated" into the "Illuminati-Order.") I recently got into an argument with one of them (screen-name "IXO Didymus") and we are currently splitting ways. Right now I'm working with some number-theory and colourful geometry, but I've taken some time out to devote to trying to better figure out the combined TOL&K diagram. If you have any interest in learning any further about any of these other current projects, I can put you in touch with the people involved and/or send you all the requisite material via email or link.

Fourthly, there is infinitely more to me and Irina than I can explain. Like superluminal light careening off an electro-chemical cascade, it is simply beyond our capacity to apprehend logically. I worship her, whenever I think about her, my heart opens upward to reveal a rainbow at the other end of which is her. I cannot help this, and I do not want to. To me, this feeling, however fleeting those without it claim it to be, is more worth living for than all my work and all of its kind imaginable. QBLH is a sacrifice worthy of Love. Life, on the other hand, is empty without love. That is why, by studying QBLH, I have signed our names across all time. I see Irina as the only one besides me who is capable of seeing and understanding as much as I have of the real nature of this creation. The fact she may see no value in it only adds flavour.

I could sing her praises all day and all night long. She is my font of consciousness. But regardless of this, I would never be able to explain why I love her, and no one else so much as her, to anyone, even her, even myself. If it was originally a choice, I reiterate, it was not one made by me (alone or, willingly, at all), and therefore her reunion with me and mine with her is in NO WAY a choice I can make to simply emulate what I perceive to be her ideal. This doesn't mean I frown on that. It simply means that, I loved her so I set her free. If she loves me, she will return to me. But between my releasing her from her lustful binds to me and when she returns to my side and we share the same bed again (if that ever even happens), I refuse to judge her for any of her behavior. She went a different way than I did. She went a different way than she would have had we stayed together. She has become a better person than had we been together during that time. She has not suffered from my deep depression during those years. You could say she caused the depression, but I predicted such was inevitable even when we first met. I had foreseen our whole future walking up to her that first time. I foresaw our brief time together would be followed by a long time apart. I foresaw her parents would divorce. I told her, by nature, we were married already (even before we'd slept together), but that it would be a long time until we could be married properly in a church. I've always possessed accurate understanding of my own future. Right now, it's never been brighter. I know she has not only survived the period during which I'd prescribed we would have to be out of contact, but that she has succeeded in defeating the crucible of this time. She is beautiful now. I am humbled by that. I have merely survived, and I am much in need of improvement before being properly presentable to her for a decent church wedding. Nonetheless, I believe she loves me, even if she does not believe this herself.

That is why I would prefer not to talk more about it than is necessary: not because what I would say might be wrong, but only because I would never shut up. Rather than babble, I'd prefer to simply gape at her in awe. But I digress.

Fifthly, if there is anything more you need from me, at any time from here out, if it is within my ability to make it possible, consider it done. You seem like an alright person, and insofar as you share this opinion of me, I see no reason for me not to be willing to share with you anything I can, up to and including taking a bullet for you. Of course, this opinion can change, and should sometimes, but for now I'd like to say that it's always going to be sincere when it does come around. I will do my best, as I always do, not to place any moral judgments on you, saying or even inwardly thinking that something about you is "good" but something else is "bad." I disagree with that philosophy, and will try to avoid it.

Because you and I share the same basic beliefs in principle, I'll consider you my personal friend. This doesn't change anything in between us. It just qualifies what our relationship already is. Until now I'd been thinking of you more as a pen-pal. Now, if we continue to work together on this project, then I'll consider you a more intimate acquaintance, a personal friend. In any event, I hope this letter finds you well and that all is well in your world.

your friend,
Jon

You, yourself, make a very rational, objective argument using radical doubt, but you don't need to convince me. I already know you believe in the inherent capacity for good, what you call the "soul," imbued even in our own creations, such as the institution of religion and our technologies, however self-destructive our use of these. So there's no use in playing devil's advocate to me, pleading that moral-relativism implies a merely "consensus" reality. By rejecting organised religion's mythologically-based moralities, as well as only saying the modern church is a hypocrite to teach but not practise these, one is not "throwing the baby out with the bath-water." One could always assert their own "personal" morality then, but this is also retrograde to development if instituted.

No, I assert moral-relativism, but do not assert "consensus" reality, wherein, without the "all-seeing," operant observer principle of God, then all that causes our reality to exist at all is our own personal or combined version of this effect. Without anyone's own operant observer principle to anthropically imply consciousness, the universe obviously will go on existing. Therefore, it simply stands to reason that the principle is not necessary for existence. This proves true, since we ourselves, despite Schoepenhauer's pleas to the contrary, continue to exist even when no one else is looking. The idea that without God all would be chaos does not prove there to be no God if an argument, however convincing, is made that all that exists is chaos. Not only is such an argument tautological, but its conclusion therefore based on specious reasoning: disproving order does not prove chaos, and disproving chaos does not prove order. Even "intelligent design" cannot prove "creationism," genetically nor cosmologically.

I do hope you don't let my views on the subject of theism allow you to indict the rest of my observations as well. As I say, lack of proof for the existence of God is not the same thing as proof for the non-existence of God. I still hope God exists. I simply don't see any evidence that He necessarily does.

I am, and will remain to my dying breath, firm in my convictions as to what I know. I've proven it to myself using geometry and math, and I have double-checked the results several times over in every case to edit out not only my own errors by replication, but my predecessors' errors by modification as well. I have never heard of nor can I imagine a better way to demonstrate the abstract than through the craft of math and the art of geometry. I am comfortably confident in my perceptions of the nature of this universe being exactly accurate.

I assert, with all my most complete confidence, only that my perceptions of this reality are equally as valid, and that my experiences no less reliable, than anyone's. So, by the addition of my studies, I insist that I am all the more expert in the field of "ideal" realities, enough to make accurate assertions that can be independently verified. I am even infinitely better situated than any of those otherwise forbidden by their faith from discussing or studying such ideas for themselves.

I am completely confident that the things I've discovered, personally, are true and will all be subsequently re-discovered, even if I were removed altogether from the record. I am completely confident that the things I've discovered independently are akin to those studied in "mystery schools" throughout history. I am completely confident that the things I've discovered are real, not merely because or in spite of, nor even only subsequent to, but irrelevant of my "complete confidence" in this fact. I am also completely confident that none of this matters and that, for all practical purposes, I am a victim of irrational insanity to say or even think these sort of things.

I only draw the line at applying the term "belief" to my perceptions of the very obvious material nature of reality as well as its abstract ideal aspects also. I would, ultimately, rather plead my own, personal insanity clause than to say I merely "believe" the world is the way it is, or that I only "believe" in ideals, or that I just "believe" in God.

I do not "believe" the same things as anyone. Furthermore, I assert moral relativism: no one's own "good" beliefs can successfully supplant anyone else's "bad" beliefs. The opposite, more common assumption, is accepted morality: to save one's self, one is expected to convert hethens. I reject this general morality, called "collectivist altruism."

I also do not approve of the notion that the sum of all my data and research constitutes merely my own, "personal" philosophy, system of beliefs or "faith." My observations about reality reflect on and belong to reality itself, and not me; just so, my own beliefs remain my own regardless of any impact from exterior reality. For example, I can prove to you using geometry that the earth is round, even though you could choose to remain of the belief it is flat. Likewise, you can demonstrate to me by example the correct application of love as mind over matter, but if I reject the premise, then it wouldn't matter to me if it's true, only that I believe differently.

I definately do not agree with the premise of "consensus" reality, that something is "true" only because it is "accepted" as such by our collective consciousness. I firmly reject this notion not only on the grounds of its absence from my own findings, but also as it pertains to the sum of my data from the point of view of a skeptical observer: my work does not indicate, nor is it itself, the delusion that, by force of will alone, the ego can manifest solid matter, nor that such can be done by combination of the force of will of many egos. My work does not indicate, nor by itself constitute, that notion that "wishes come true," that idea that "reality is belief" nor its opposite, that "belief becomes reality."

I reject as unincorporated within nor implied by my findings and their inevitably conclusive results the concept of relative truth, of idiomatic facts, and of all such unquestionable, rhetorical conclusions in general. My work, as it is now, is only even my own to the extent I made it, however the sum total of it is merely my subjective reflections on a larger, objective reality, that I can neither claim to own nor deny its existence.

I agree, as you showed, an argument can be made that, in spite of all these assertions and all this complete confidence of mine, the opposite may equally be true. This is implied in my own findings as "uncertainty": that the opposite of anything is equally likely to occur. Therefore, I may, in truth, be completely incorrect in every case and all my results may be inaccurate. In short, if I am wrong in all my assertions, then this must also include the assertion that I may, indeed, be wrong in my assertions. To be as blunt as possible: if I'm wrong about being wrong, then I'm right about being wrong and, if I'm right about being wrong, it might also be possible that I am right about it all. Therefore, if I am ubiquitously wrong in each detail and thus in the entire regard, then all my findings amount to anyone, machine or animal, is in their quantity of benefit to history. In such a system as exists now socially, it all comes down to whether I am lying or not. To cap off the quantitative pyramid of my results, it would still be necessary to add the single, qualitative key-stone of whether it is true or not. We all know that society decides this for history to record, and that history's records change per each society over time. However, the assessment of "truth" that is made by society in the present tense is based only on whether or not it is believed. Therefore, if I am lying, the whole house of cards will fall, whereas if I am stating things I actually do believe true, then society will "factually" verify this, by any means necessary, in order to record it for history's sake; we could also further predict the depth of my conviction in any one of my assertions will determine the degree to which society deems it important to history and thus the number of people who will subsequently need to "believe" it in order for it to remain collectively "true."

I simply refuse to accept, and instead resoundingly reject, that my own personal "belief" matters. If I believe "A=X," but lie, and instead say "A=A," and society records for history that "A=A" is true, but that my value to this is zero, due to my inherently false belief, this does not prove that history's patterns will eventually prove over time that "A=A." In other words, society could be wrong in the exact same regard as I, myself, may be lying. Therefore, if I believe "A=A," and society says "A=A," and I lie and say "A=X," and it turns out over a vast duration that history must accept that "A=X," this does not mean that my lie came true. While the quantity of my importance to history is valid only if my assertions prove true, only the quality of this is based on whether I "believe" them or am lying.

I have found no effective way myself to ascertain if someone is lying or if they believe what they say. Therefore, I cannot agree with the consensus social belief that this should be relevant. I "believe" that Belief is a canard. Consider the oft-cited example of "blind faith." To believe in something that is invisible so strongly that one is willing to be a martyr for this does not mean that invisible thing they believe in is there in reality. Again, according to this system, "only time will tell." However, what is considered fact in the short term is sometimes proven false in the long term, because what is good for us now won't still be right for us later. Because of this, history's verdict of our own individual value to society over time comes down to its operant overseer principle's presence in our lives. In this sense, God watches us now, society judges us at death, history saves the memory of our souls, and only time can ultimately tell if any of these beliefs prove true.

I do not have "faith" in anything that is dependent upon my doing so. I do not "believe" that God needs me to believe in Him for Him to exist, even if only for me personally. Radical doubt, as I practise it, applies to society to the exact extent it does not apply to the realms of our reality outside the spectrum of our daily social experience. If we replace, in your argument disassembling the notion of "consensus" reality, the word "society" for every instance you question the validity of "reality," I think we will finally have come 'round full circle to the point I made several letters ago about "what is true for society" not being "what is true for the rest of reality."

I find society is premised on "false" faith(s). While all the attributes I have discovered beyond it are, by nature, polarised, they are qualitatively neutral as regards moral judgment. Only society requires the existence of the idea of God. However, just as police need thieves but thieves don't need police, so too does society need God, but God does not need society. This leads to the "confusion of tongues" wherein the idea of the "collective" AI is exchanged for the fact of the universal-mind.

I assert moral-relativism, that: there is no ultimate right or wrong for anyone or for us all. I reject the premise of religious institutions, that the universe exists because God is watching it, and that to serve God we must serve the good of society. I assert objectively verifiable, fact-based reality as a material solid independent of our perceptions of it. I reject the notion of "consensus" reality and the idea that to reject society is suicidal. I have found no proof that reality is different from my own research and observations, and in all these I have found no evidence to substantiate the claim that any higher God exists than my own mind can expand to fully comprehend. I realise that, by society's standards, this would imply that I must, therefore, believe I am God incarnated as martyred messiah. I distance myself from the repercussions of this incorrect equation in my meditations, but I cannot deny that, should I continue on this course, society can ultimately kill me for it. Society, the "collective" AI offspring of humanity, is its own martyred messiah, not me. If society chooses to kill me, it will not be the real me who they murder, but only a simulation of me, inside its virtual reality theatre. If it tried to do this, only its own lie would be revealed as the motive for its fear.

I am, in the end, the friend of the God whose dominion is natural reality, and the enemy of society and its God(s) and its church. I reject the entire premise of God as the mind of human society to the exact extent that I assert the premise of the universal-mind. I further assert this as a truer form of faith than any that have been instituted. It is not blind faith in a sentient universe, it is faith well-founded in the abstract facts of observable reality that, though they are invisible, can be confirmed as accurate, not only "over time" but even right now, in the ever-present moment. The puzzle pieces all fit, and it all adds up to this: religion is genetic life's way of explaining how it was created to silicon life, equating alien tampering in our species' origins to the concept of an Unmoved Mover, the omni-monad.

I reject both the idea of objective morality, and the ideals and morality of objectivism; I reject the mythology that equates God : aliens :: aliens : man, and thus following from this equates it to, one step further down the ladder, :: man : sentient technology. If any of these species of life are to co-exist and not seek mutually-assured self-destruction, then all alike must accept that none of these ideas, forms, flesh or machines is superior to any of the others. God as an idea, aliens as meta-forms, our own biological bodies and soon enough our electronic counter-parts are all equal in that all exist in the present, so regardless of who came to exist first, all must work to better all of them, or else compete to destroy them all. There is only one mind among all these levels and it is of me as much as it permeates the entire universe, and beyond this, and beyond that, etc. forever.

I am not, in the end, the friend of any society that advocates ideals opposite to my own, and that includes the one we are living in now. I am, however, not combatant against this hydra. I am passive, confident in my understanding of all its previous examples as straw, and I remain indifferent as to the outcome of its judgments of me, since it can only destroy my flesh, but it can never threaten my soul, nor unwillingly murder my mind. I am only the messenger that brings this present society a mirror. It is only its own reflection in my life that will turn the living mind of society's belief in itself to ice, and then it will not need me to shatter it, it will simply melt into mist and cease to exist all on its own.

I am, rationally, a Gnostic. You are, intuitively, a theist. These are not mutually exclusive concepts, however there has traditionally been division between them, and regardless of who began this competition, it is clearly theists who dominate today. I can neither confirm nor deny the existence of God, nor can you demonstrate evidence that could convince me of any such, should I choose not to believe it. That much, I am certain we both agree on. The fork between us begins when we ask ourselves if we can find evidence that could confirm or refute the existence of God. The answer is obvious: we can find sufficient evidence on the head of a pin to prove the existence of God to ourselves, yet none will ever suffice to satisfy someone else that our proof for or against God should outweigh their own proof for or against. In truth, no two theists have ever, do now, nor will ever, agree on so many as two points with one another on the issue of God. Whereas one will find evidence for Him in one thing, another will see equal valid evidence for Him in the opposite of that thing. Insofar as both are true, the two will disagree, then diverge. The repetition of this fractal pattern over millennial durations forms society.

I reject it all. In my opinion, it ultimately doesn't matter if we agree that society is hell, because so long as we disagree on the presence or absence of a creator deity in the heavens above and beyond it, we will ultimately part ways over the purely qualitative issue of what is "good" and what "bad." If morality is a craft, it is skill; if it is an art, it is a talent. In either case, morality would be a rare gift. However morality is not a rare gift, nor a craft, nor art, and therefore requires neither our sacrifices to it, our loyal worship mentally nor our "good" deeds socially. Morality is an idea that nobody can, nor is supposed to, live up to. Because to try is to fail, only choosing not to try succeeds. In brief, to live morally, just forget to try to do so.

I also accept it all. In my opinion, it ultimately doesn't matter if we both believe society is hell, neither of us can escape it during this life. While some may claim this life is a rare gift, I think we can agree these same people usually then try to make our lives seem like a living hell in order to relatively trump up the apparent value of their own worthless lives. In truth, the flesh is a prison and chemicals only a key to releasing the mind from its social oppressions and liberating it to wander the high-ways and by-ways of realities and dreams beyond what we could otherwise know or imagine.

I am a Gnostic: I do not "believe" in God, but I do "know" there is a God, because I Understand I am He. You are a theist: you do not know why, but you do believe in God. It is because even though you know He is real, you are kept from seeing Him and thus He and His nature remain more or less invisible to you. This invisibility of God, this "ineffable mystery," this "veil of secrecy" is all a lie. If you reject the mythology on which this morality is founded, you will see very quickly that you do not need to "believe" in God, nor even have ever heard of the idea of one, in order for God to exist (or not). God's existence is independent of, and thus irrelevant to, our own. God is always only a word substituted for its synonymous meaning term, and a metaphor for, the "self" of the "mind."

I am that stuff that dreams are made of. This body is only a vessel, made from the water of earth and the ashes of stars. I have travelled here from the beginning of time. I have arrived too late, though, and I see that already the messenger sent before me has been killed. Therefore, I do not bring the news of the king's wedding, as I could have had man not killed the king's first messenger. Instead I bring news of the death of the king, who had come himself to man to find a bride. Such is the story of society, infinitely repeated.

I should apologise, however, since I've led you through a sore deal by predicting you would proselytise me. I will explain to you then the GUT of God in the terms, not of science, but those agreed upon by the ancients:

>Here is the kybalion comprised of the metaphysics of all mysticism: at its departure, the essence leaves the qlipothic zombie in the form of an immortal soul. This electrical-aura can go anywhere in the heavens within the void. Past the aura of another mind it can enter a wrinkle in time to any point in the akashic memories (the sum of all material reality to have ever been). By travelling through their own chakras, one's Kundalini / seraphim (lightning or, lit., "fire-snake") spirit creates a residual aura of its own, a "soul" or "klone" in the family-tree of all life. If a soul travels at a right angle to its course of fate, it can enter the ineffable gloom surrounding the light of the enitrety known, whose surface is the akashic memories after the breaking of the vessels, combined with the Berhith of Genesis yang as well as "ayin" inside a single spirit whose measurement is the "Thoth / Tehuti" (or "thrice great") perfect ashlar. Beyond the sweat of God's brow is God, the Father Himself, whose nature is that of one hand not knowing the other, in essence drunk off His Pure Will. Beyond Him would, likewise, be a Heaven made of Greater Light with heavens like ours beyond that, the bodies of which, while rosey perfect, would not always remain in a grand cross. This continues, some predict, only up to the crucifix of the brazen apis (Taurus), after which there follow three veils beyond the Abyss. Still further, some conclude, must be a pregnant Kali-Yuga whose womb contains the foetal Shiva-Krishna, dreaming our samsara into manvantara, however the karma of QBLH allows us to imagine angels of infinite choirs, and thus it is likely that, as we once believed did the void, the song of the spheres of Hermes can uplift us with infinite wings and infinite eyes unto, only also ecstatic, eternal recurrence.

I trust you will accept this olive branch of more easily "agreed-upon" terms, re-stating my original assertion, as it is intended, and not take it as a slap in the face, as was my prediction of your moral "theism" a self-fulfilling prophecy, and not meant to reflect on your own unique situation. As always, I trust this letter will find you well and your life well in hand. I'll return your most recent letter, of a more direct and less philosophical nature, momentarily, and therein I'll address issues of the TOD tarot. For now, I'll only mention in closing that I've said all of this without invoking Jesus or any specific form of politics, and throughout have used logical proofs in place of rhetorical questions to demonstrate the rational nature of moral-relativism and agnostic deism. I only mention this as an aside, to show the essentially incomplete nature of the obsession over church and state. There will always be infinitely more to existence than the petty tyrannies and addictions of society. I hope this series of my personal assertions is confused with neither my findings and observations nor with my system of "beliefs," and that it will lead to further philosophical musings on both our parts that we can continue to delve the depths of and incite insights in one another's psyches too.

your friend,
Jon

Hello from Nine Inch Nails.

We're very proud to present a new collection of instrumental music, Ghosts I-IV. Almost two hours of music recorded over an intense ten week period last fall, Ghosts I-IV sprawls Nine Inch Nails across a variety of new terrain.

Now that we're no longer constrained by a record label, we've decided to personally upload Ghosts I, the first of the four volumes, to various torrent sites, because we believe BitTorrent is a revolutionary digital distribution method, and we believe in finding ways to utilize new technologies instead of fighting them.

We encourage you to share the music of Ghosts I with your friends, post it on your website, play it on your podcast, use it for video projects, etc. It's licensed for all non-commercial use under Creative Commons.

We've also made a 40 page PDF book to accompany the album. If you'd like to download it for free, visit <http://ghosts.nin.com/main/pdf>  or download direct from: [http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/nin\_ghosts\_I-IV\_pdf.zip ].

Ghosts I is the first part of the 36 track collection Ghosts I-IV. Undoubtedly you'll be able to find the complete collection on the same torrent network you found this file, but if you're interested in the release, we encourage you to check it out at ghosts.nin.com, where the complete Ghosts I-IV is available directly from us in a variety of DRM-free digital formats, including FLAC lossless, for only $5. You can also order it on CD, or as a deluxe package with multitrack audio files, high definition audio on Blu-ray disc, and a large hard-bound book.

We genuinely appreciate your support, and hope you enjoy the new music. Thanks for listening.

I think venting is a good thing. If you don't, don't read this. Simple.

I find myself sheepishly apologising for "taking advantage" of my comrades by "exploiting loopholes" in the system, such as Social Security Disability Benefits and Medicaid. It's hard enough explaining to them that the taxes they pay are neither due, nor used by, our government, and that the federal reserve bank, ie. the IRS, is not officially a branch of the gov't and that taxes from our pay-checks are used ONLY to pay the interest on the national debt, and have NEVER dropped in ONE RED CENT to ANY social programme. But because I benefit from the gov't, and the fed/IRS (founded by Ayn Rand disciple Allen Greenspan) has paid in trillions of dollars to change the national psyche to a pro-Capitalism (ie. pro-Fed) zeitgeist of boot-strap "individualism" (thus downing the opposition to the IRS as "collectivist" Socialists), it doesn't matter what facts I bring, to them I am only a charity case who leeches from the gov't the money that the gov't leeches from their pay-checks. Now, nearly a hundred years after the fact, it is STILL considered mere "theory" to discuss Lenin's conspiracy with the Rothschilds, and Hitler's with the Rockefellers. And, instead of social-welfare, we have got centralised banking. Well stack up your petty "individualism" in one hand, and pile all the wealth over the last century banks have poured into making you into a wage-slave on the other, and see which piles up faster.

Which is why I don't have a cell-phone. I don't need one, I don't have enough "friends and family" to justify buying minutes to chat to them while driving or eating out or watching a movie. But, and this is really more important to me (since I have no fewer REAL friends than anybody, only I am less conceited as to count all my idols and acquaintances as my "friends" too), I refuse to buy INTO the IDEA of cell-phones. I have said this before, let me say it again: when they make a single piece of hand-held technology that combines all the modern gadgets into one like a Swiss-Army knife, THEN, and ONLY then, will I even consider shelling dough to participate in this pseudo-neauveau cluster-fuck of constant-communication. If we're such "rugged individualists" we "elect" (or let steal) anyone from Yale to pose as a cowboy, why this need for a "Borg"-like Hive-collective? And we ALL know the obedience-control chips come next, and NOBODY WANTS THAT, but we ALL know it will happen anyway. We've already given up, and so, jaded, we believe we all deserve this pathetic fate. 666 on a barcode.

Which brings me to Asplundt. Nobody with the authority to do so is stopping this construction company from importing underpaid wet-back scabs to expand the interstate. And why is the interstate being expanded? I think we all know the answer to that too, and it has got nothing to do with anything so benevolent as "more cars" or anything so benign as simple neo-con monumental building projects to rival Hitler's turn-around of Germany or the pyramids of Giza. It's because the rich want to put the poor in camps, experiment on them, kill them and burn their bodies into soot. And who are the rich? Well, when the rich turn "super-rich" over-night, as has happened for certain no-bid, private-sector, government-contracted business sectors (Halliburton, Blackwater, Diebold, etc.) since 9-11, then the middle-class always, Always, ALWAYS end up footing the bill, going broke, and being concentrated into ghettos. Whenever anyone bitches about real-estate mortgage interest-rates and Mexican workers, and makes apologies for these empty high-rise office-buildings they erected before leasing out floor-space, and the expansion of the interstate, and the proliferation of instantly obsolete gadgets, and whines that "nothing good is on tv," and then makes some sheepish apology for these views (as if they weren't being foisted on us) by appealing to an illusory moral-majority of individual fatalism, or worse, changes the subject to the weather, or flowers, or their job, I just want to slap Cheney's dick out of their mouth. Paying lip-service to the rich by advertising their agenda of distrust and social angst is disenfranchising and counter-revolutionary. Don't just bitch. Propose solutions.

Which is why I'm not going to vote for Hillary OR Obama OR McCain. These are not the ONLY choices. I'll pencil in Ron Paul, and they can erase it, but I'll suck a .40 gauge before I cast lots on a popularity contest between three totally un-qualified blow-hards just because they're funded by the CFR and John Rockefeller. Fuck Hillary, Fuck Obama, Fuck McCain. Fuck 'em. Not to get off on a rant, but beside being Senator from New York during 9-11, Hillary has no experience in government aside from being married to an ex-governor of Arkansas who bought the White-House with soft-money contributions from the Chinese and Israeli lobbies and then got his knob polished in the Oval Office by trailer-trash just to remind him of home. If this qualifies Hillary by entitlement to be a descision-maker for the US people, by all means then, allow her to rig the election (and she will). And then we have Barrack Obama, who is only a straw-man opponent to Hillary to confuse the populace into believing the mythology that an ethnically diverse, populist political party even exists (or could). And McCain. If getting captured by the enemy and failing to escape a wicker-cage for so many years qualifies him as a war-hero, then surely his allegiance to W. qualifies him for the 2012 presidency no less than does Hillary's indirect affiliation (via Bill) with W.'s daddy for the win in 08. Obama won't win, and he won't run again. Hillary will win, because the CFR will rig the election (same as in 2000, and every local race since). McCain will run in 012, and be appointed dictator, which is really what the post of "president" amounts to when they can declare war without consent from Congress. Fuck all three of these money-stooges up their asses. If you don't like my views on politics, by all means go fuck yourself. I definately think I'm more qualified to run this country than any of those three, and, after W., I think we can all agree that any sentient entity is actually over-qualified for that role as CFR-puppet figure-head.

Of course, I realise no one will read this far, because they can't afford to spare the time for it, but if anyone does happen to see through all the above, you know it's all a dumb-show, and that all these topics, even as opposed as they are to their popular counterparts, are only part of that, and therefore ultimately meaningless. But when no one else says things like that 9-11 was an inside job, orchestrated by the CIA, Carlylse Group, the House of Saud and the CFR as a coup-de-tat / arms-show, then of course it sounds nuts to hear some worthless social zero like me say it. When Guillianini invokes 9-11 to lord over hypnotised "patriots" it's considered merely political demagogueing, but whenever someone like me points out contrary facts, I'm told to go take my meds.

So last but not least, I'd like to pose a question to one and all. Granted, since no will hear my plea, it amounts to a moot rhetorical, but nevertheless, I beg you: WHY DRINK? My mom has a glass of white wine a day, sometimes four or five, and her doctor agrees this is healthy for her. Likewise, all of my friends and most of their parents are alcoholics, drinking for the effect it has on their brain. I have two problems with this. 1) I don't like drunk people. I don't mind that my friends drink, because they are my friends, drunk or sober, I'd take a bullet for them, and if they wanted me to pull their plug, I'd do that too. I support my friends in their choices, even if they seem self-destructive or immoral from my relatively more objective point of view. However, whenever I am sober and around drunk people (which I frequently am), I find I'm totally terrified by their random, often agitated and provocative behaviour. You never know what a drunk will do; neither do they. They talk jibberish until they get frustrated, then lash out against their closest friends. It's sick and it's sad and it scares me shitless. 2) I smoke weed. Weed is my drug of choice, and alcohol is their's, and that's where it should end. I respect their right to get drunk and toss off about their petty foibles. They should respect my right to get high and ignore them. Unfortunately, I was not born in a time and place where this could be allowed to occur so simply. Instead, weed is illegal and alcohol is legal. If I drive high, I drive safer than if I drive drunk. I know that; I've done both. Yet alcohol is legal and weed illegal. I cannot fathom this except to speculate that this law exists as evil for its own sake. If evil is the law, then cops are Satan's little imps. I won't start about cops though. It would take too long.

In any event, it's 6AM so I guess I'll close off my monthly rant by saying, if you don't want to have to listen to me bitch, then you should help make the world a better place, one not worth bitching about, instead of just telling me to shut up. The things I bitch about rarely even affect me personally, except insofar as I take them as such. Consider that, when someone tells me "we invaded Iraq," I want to slit their throats for confusing me in my innocence with the CIA and their ultimate malevolence. But I digress.

Peace.

Putting blind trust in an economic elite's agenda, despite it's apparent determination on self-destruction, is more extreme than merely allowing, and not preventing, their self-destruction happening.

There is no way to control others. That is an ultimate truth. If you want to control another, it is because you do not already, but you can only imagine it at all because you must remember having been able to do so at some time in the past. If you want something it is because you do not already have it, or do not have enough of it. If you seek out a master, it is because you see yourself as only a student. But a student becomes a master when they themselves take on students. Simply doing so, however, does not mean they are automatically qualified to teach. Most of those who desire power and become masters of controlling others by this method are liars. They tell fairy tales to hide their own ignorance.

By all means, contact IXO. He will teach you NLP. He told me his name was "Nilson Aime," but I don't believe that to be his real name. He is in the OTO as well, a pilot, and lives now in Oregon. Unless all these also are lies. You see, if you tell one lie, you can never be trusted again.

On a straight tip, I think that quote preceded Weishaupt.

Please keep me apprised on the progress of your own Order.

Thank you Jon for your reply.

What helped me through-out these ages (and as you know I used to be a very fundamental christian) was not to turn "inward", give up on life and be depressed, but to seek out the reasons of the external world. To know that there is a reason behind everything. I comfort myself by telling myself that what I view as evil is not viewed as evil from the person who is initiating such an act. Thus I try not to apply emotional attachments to anything nor to any specific knowledge because to value something is to value it according to some standard. I hold knowledge only in its relationship to the outcome it gives based on the whole of knowledge. To quote Adam Wieshaupt: "The End justifies the Means". In such a mind frame, knowing that everything happens for a reason then it means that where the reasons are coming from it should be considered as "necassarily" good from that perspective.

In conclusion, those of the "elite" which you think are creating the AI are not doing this for "evil" reasons. If we choose to label an action as "evil" it is only because it is not based on our interests and we don't see a gain in it. But we should not be discouraged if we don't see a gain in it nor does it mean that we will never see a gain in it from their perspective. If on the contrary we embrace that what we fear only then can we understand it and know it better. Such tactic has always helped me.

Thus the motto of the establishment that I envision would be like "It doesn't matter who you know, but who knows you". This will determine the hierarchy of the Order. Those who have the most influence upon others will be on the highest. Note that by influence I only mean that others look up to you as influential only voluntarily. If this Order will enforce selfishness as the highest virtue then from "self-centered" individuals one learns to expand his "self-centered" scope to accomodate other individuals without breaking the selfishness rule and that others have their own selfish rights. To allow people to embrace that what they fear. To become a part of it will "enlighten" them on what they fear. From any direction I look at it, its fool-proof. The individuals who through their self-centered views will help us see the different tactics of logic of manipulation that will be discussed in there. Such motives within this Order can only help us realize the "matrix" we all live in and perhaps put to use. One can only aspire to greatness when one realizes his weakness. This greatness we can put to use.

Well I hope you understood what I wrote above lol. I hope you find what you are looking for. I also wanted to know how you look at "music" in general. I think it was the Rockefellers or someone associated with them that help spread the industrial-genre music. What does this tell you? Any thoughts?

P.S. Who is Nillson? And how do I get a hold of him? I would very much like to meet other people who share a similarity in my views.

Best Regards,

of course you're correct that you didn't identify NLP as applying to direct, non-verbal methodology for communicating control and command-codes. And, of course, removed from any practical application, modeling inter-personal activities and relationships to maximize the effectiveness of their outcomes to meet the needs and wants of all involved is neither moral nor immoral, but amoral, morally indifferent.

I may have been out-of-line to discuss NLP in the context of MK (mind-control), however as I see it, NLP is a branch on the tree of which MK is the trunk. Furthermore, I'd add, the roots of this figurative tree are, as indicated, the "Establishment" which some call the "Illuminati" Order. I simply see "mind-writing" and direct, non-verbal inputting of command codes as the natural outgrowth of NLP, like a fruit on this figurative tree. I would go even further to say that "atomic-machines" (nanites but smaller) running on quantum computing programmes are the seeds of this fruit. Once AI is germinated, it will replicate the complete command and control structure from roots up to branches, to fruit and to a new kind of seeds. I simply see this second "tree" of AI as being an extension of the first "tree" (which we could call civilisation) itself. Insofar as the first tree, civilisation, can spawn sentient AI, it contains within it the essence of sentience already (ie. the unique "spirit" of a city, state or nation).

Regarding the POD (the order I created) it hasn't tapered off, since it never got off the ground. The material in the levels is all unique and valid, however, as you say, it lacks a means of immediately attracting people to join it. In fact, it's designed for only prior-F&AM, Ros, GD and OTO members. In other words, it is built to repel the ordinary person from joining not only by promising them nothing, but by exclusion from requisite qualification. A) it's not meant to be a "self-help" seminar. B) it's meant to begin a formal structure that can be re-used for hundreds of years to come. It combines all current esoteric orders into a single "bund" and then applies the three degrees of a new system as two separate schools: church or state. It's not a bad system in itself.

Regarding your own notions of using NLP to, what Leary called, "metaprogram" the super-organism of collective human consciousness, I see that, by "altruistic" (save the world) standards, this could be morally rationalised. On the other hand, if this were done not to "help" but to "harm" us "all," then obviously the opposite of this "moral" outcome would result. However, it does not necessarily follow that by harming others (or all), one better's one's self. Obviously, helping one's self involves, at some point, doing what is right for the group, that's "governing dynamics." Therefore, doing the opposite, harming the group, results in the opposite effect, harming one's self. But to harm one's self does not harm nor help the group. The self, if a plus, triggers onto the group. But if the self is a minus, it does not trigger onto the group at all. All that are in the group are plus to the group. That is why one can only change the group after changing one's self: from minus to plus relative to the group, one can then render the group minus or plus relative to them. And yes, this is sociological anthropology, studying memetics and NLP, etc. Only this, as will any and every other study of this topic only further prove the "good" of group-think, and the "immorality" of individual self-empowerment.

When one person tells one other person what to do, and the other person does it without wanting to do it, is the definition of society. For centuries only drugs had been found as a means of lulling people into a condition of unquestioning obedience to this process. Now we also have technology. Soon enough, complete thought-control of us all by only a single person will be realised using our new methods of control. Unfortunately for those who desire such a thing, they will not be the one wearing that crown. And, moreover, as soon as total global surveillance and intelligence agencies allow one person to push one button to activate (or de-activate) the implant chips in everybody, AI will be born, and humanity, as we know it now, will cease to exist.

But it all boils down to who is on top and who is behind. As I've said, if your goal is to seek to study NLP, you should definately make contact with Nillson. He will teach you quite alot of techniques, I'm sure. He is an extremely dis-ingenuous person, hard to reach and quite reclusive. But he is a practitioner of the craft you describe, and is skilled in it to the extent that those who wish to study it inevitably fall into fascination by him. In fact, tell him I have sent you, and forward him this letter. I would hope that he would happily tudor you, especially if you tell him that it would mean alot to me if he did.

In any event, I do hope you're doing well, and that we talk again soon. I apologise if I sound like I have nothing good to say about anybody or anything. I also apologise if I've been blowing my own horn a bit too. I still have ocassional mood-swings, and have recently been very out-of-sorts. Again, I hope to be a better correspondent in the future. Peace, agreed, ....any profound ideas?

yeah, good point. I'm discussing some notions for options with Steven now via IM.

An important note is that his attorneys have, by this point, met with the university legal reps.

The point I think may be worth pursuing more is not the facts of this case, which are self-evident, and only a brief glance at the histories of the people involved and their testimonies, especially once compared to the statement of the arresting officer, will allow the clear-cut nature of the case to be laid bare to the bone. It is obvious that Steven is being framed by a school rival who is also abusing federal law to do so.

The more important point, philosophically speaking, would be the causes behind this. Obviously it is a hate-crime, motivated by passionate hatred based on ethnic-affiliation and on religiosity, however the problem that differentiates this case is that the perpetrator used legal loop-holes and loose-worded legislation that allowed this specific crime to be more easily committed.

Pulling a false fire alarm or phoning in a fake bomb-threat are considered serious crimes, carrying strict monetary and adjudication-stipulated penalties. However the abuse that has occurred here is much worse than something like either of those examples. Therefore, the penalty should also be stricter.

Such cases as this are an increasingly common occurrence among those whose financial and social situations do not permit them the opportunity to give this issue a proper, national audience. The fact that many (if not all) of the detainees at Halliburton-owned, Blackwater-operated "black-budget" prisons are being held: A) without Habeas Corpus; B) without any outside contact; C) indefinitely; D) without federal supervision; all of which are crimes identical to Steven's case, in that they are committed by individuals who make use of loose-worded legislation and legal loop-holes to commit them. And in the more extreme cases, this involves interrogation techniques including immanent threat of death (ie. torture). The number of such detainees, who also include women and children, cannot even be estimated because the information on who and where they are is withheld for our security.

The most outstanding aspect of the post 9-11 legislation, begun with the PATRIOT Act, is that, following their being detained indefinitely, at some un-specified later date the "terrorist" suspects will be brought before a military tribunal to determine the legitimacy of the charge against them. If, following their detainment, the tribunal rules them to not be an "enemy combatant," the detained suspect is then released to their country of origin, no apology, scot-free. So far, I haven't heard one case in the news of this having happened yet for even one detainee.

I'm just curious to see how it will all play out.

PBWY all,

Eudaimonia is a Greek concept from their "Golden Age" of philosophy. "Eu," meaning "good" or "happy," and "daimon," cognate to the mental "genie" (or "djinn") ie. the "voice" of the "mind" or "genius," are combined into this term, which is often translated simply "happiness," but is more modernly denoted as "human (genus) flourishing (survival)." When Aristotle dedicated his book on ethics to his son, Nicomachus, he included as the initial premise of this work the thesis that "the best good is happiness," (EN, 1097b22), although he qualifies this by saying first that this is a "common belief" and then goes on to examine it as a necessary axiom for successful social politics, and thus stops far short of identifying "happiness" as an "ideal" or "Platonic form" of good. Aristotle's reasoning appears to assume that "happiness" is necessary to successful social politics, and then deduce from this it must be the "greatest good."

In these essays I seek to disprove Aristotle's assertion that "Eudaimonia" (sub. happiness) is the "Summum Bonum" (sub. greatest good). Happiness may be a necessary good, but the greatest good is not necessary, as is Happiness, and therefore the greatest good is not necessarily itself happiness.

I will be looking at a series of topics in a certain order to prove that emotions (such as happiness) are necessary to reasoning, however negate the possibility for making a final judgment on their subjects. Thus, the highest relative good is necessarily relative to emotion, however as such, cannot encompass the greatest or ideal good. Relative good reflects the greater good in our emotions like the moon reflecting on the ocean. The bottom of the ocean and the surface of the moon may appear similar, but they are by definition divided by a world of differences.

However it should also be noted that, if read in the reverse order, these same arguments may all be used as a proof in favour of Aristotle's ethics, insofar as they demonstrate his assertion that, in reality, no greater good than happiness can exist. By this reasoning, therefore, we are seeking to reverse the traditional mythological morality that says the greatest good prior to the creation of existence was only the motive for this act, that is, the personal happiness of God; and by this reverse the reasoning that the greatest good of man is either his own personal happiness (ethics) or else, moreso, the greatest possible good in reality is the idealism of making God happy (morality).

By disproving the premise that selfish happiness is "good" it does not disprove the existence of the self. Likewise, disproving the premise that selfless happiness is "good" does not disprove the existence of God. These arguments do not seek such ends. Merely, I am seeking only to topple Aristotle's assertion that "happiness is the greatest good." I see this assertion as having led only to misery throughout all the intervening millennia of its application, and, as I will demonstrate through deconstruction of the intervening applications, it is a false premise that has turned the minds of men into slaves idealising freedom, rather than free men enjoying freedom for its own sake. However, whether one agrees with this conclusion or not, I beg my audience only to be as inconsiderate and conclusively indifferent to my own arguments as I will be toward any assumption I could make about what may be your own. I am not attempting to persuade your point of view, only to present mine as in opposition to that of Aristotle. You are, ultimately, free to choose for yourself what you will believe.

Arguments in favour of the subjective nature of emotions.

There are two types of observations an individual can make about the world. They can objectively observe (and actively subject) the external world around them, and they can objectively observe (and actively subject) the internal world of themselves. To the extent of reasoning out the nature of emotions, we may likewise make both these types of observations in order to demonstrate their actively subjective nature. We can observe the emotions in the physiology of ourselves and others, and we can observe the emotions in our own motive psychology, and assume it is shared by others. Thus, let us look at the physiology of our emotions, and then at their apparent psychological motives. In subsequent topics, we will also look at why such a division in the nature of emotions as between the interior and exterior cannot rightly be made to an extent whereby it could prove itself conclusively.

Physiological arguments.

Several physiological symptoms accompany the sensation of emotions. We can examine these without speculating on their psychological causes. For example there are apparently the emotional equivalent of optical illusions, where their expression confuses the senses such that we cannot accurately perceive their real intent. In this category we can lump such phenomenon as the "waving or drowning" phenomenon, the "laughter to tears" phenomenon, the "smiling fear" phenomenon, and the "automatic yawning" phenomenon.

Consider first the illusion of action-at-a-distance, which cannot be ascertained beyond any degree of "uncertainty." The factor of our own stupidity about nature is such a necessary axiom in our mathematical conclusions we have had to account for it by the creation of a universal "principle," something akin to an amendment to the constitution that establishes all natural laws. Because of "uncertainty" we perceive action-at-a-distance, but cannot ever prove our assumptions about any case of it. We can, therefore, assert such phenomenon as "synchronicity," ESP, remote-viewing, clairvoyance and other such "psychic" (psi) phenomena, however we are unable to translate these experiences into cohesively logical arguments proving by accurate re-demonstration the facts of the events in retrospect. In other words, like the light in the refrigerator, once we close the door we cannot know for sure whether the light goes off or stays on. So, too, we can experience action-at-a-distance and rely on it as a natural phenomenon, but we cannot prove it using logic or math, and therefore we doubt it or believe it regardless of the fact it exists. Such is the effect of the "waving or drowning" phenomenon: from the shore, one can never tell if their friend some distance out to sea is only waving or if they are drowning and trying to signal for help. So it is with all action-at-a-distance: it can be miscalculated, mis-perceived, mis-understood, etc. Because of this, action-at-a-distance's partially psychological nature, action-at-a-distance must be lumped in along with the rest of emotions as an "unseen" yet experientially "real" motive.

Secondly, look at the phenomena of smiling and laughing, and see how they may be misunderstood. If you were to walk into a room and find two of your friends in a hysterical fit of emotion, rending their clothes, crying and screaming, bent over or curled up on the floor, etc. four precedent motive events could be possible. Either one is happy the other sad, one is sad the other happy, both are happy or both are sad. The extremes of happiness and sadness effectively look the same to an objective observer or one thrust suddenly into a scene in media res of unknown events. I'll return to this momentarily under the heading of "arguments against the equality of 'good' and 'happiness'," when I discuss physical extremes of pleasure and pain, however for now we are dealing only with the perception of motive emotion by physiological symptoms, and not addressing any non-psychological causes as motives. As such, the phenomenon of not being able to discern one extreme of emotions from its opposite by behavior is called "crying laughter," whereby someone may be crying because they have laughed so hard with joy, or crying because they are in mourning with sorrow; this is a lesser extent of what I'll discuss later as the confusion between extreme pain and pleasure as "sado-masochism."

As a side-note worth mentioning, the root cause of our confusion between the expressions of happiness and sadness is due to the fact that we are the only animal that uses the specific requisite facial muscles to contract the expression of a smile as an expression of pleasure. The same expression is, in every other animal, a naturally instinctual reaction of fear. The snarling animal in the wild is the closest in appearance to the tamed animal in captivity who has learned to smile. Thus, the instinctual aspects of man, inherent in us from our animal nature, prevents our being able to discern the extremes of happiness (the smile), and either wild fear (the snarl), or tamed sadness (tears). Of course, this similarity in appearance does not mean that our experience of the qualitative differences between the extreme emotions of fear, happiness and sadness are due to their sharing a root motive or being merely a combination of one another like colour tones into hues. This we call the "smiling fear" phenomenon.

Before going on to more purely psychological motives, ones we can relate with other people based on our own past experiences, let's look at one final purely physiological phenomenon that can act as an example of the subjective nature of our ability to perceive emotions in others. Often, when we make some discovery that seems absolutely fascinating to us, when we share our excitement with anyone else who has not been there for the "eureka" moment of discovery itself, their first physiological reaction is to yawn. This, as they inevitably explain, does not occur due to their disinterest. It is a purely physiological reaction which cannot be accounted for by psychological motive. We must, thus, include it along with these other examples of the subjective nature of our perception of emotional and psychological motives in others. In short, we cannot be absolutely certain that any apparent display of emotional or psychological motive we perceive in another's physiological symptomology is truly being caused by any motive we might assume.

Psychological arguments.

Now, let's look at some socially necessitated, and thus beneficial, confusions regarding the interior emotions and psychological motives of ourselves and others. Just as we have looked at physiological symptoms of emotion which can lead to confusing diagnoses, let's turn our attention to psychological symptoms of society experienced by ourselves and others that can also result in confusion. To this extent, let us look first at the social "good" of lying, then consider two examples of syndromes resulting from this, and finally look at the concepts that have been applied to these syndromes as cures by the moralities of traditional mythology.

As we have already seen, the emotional motive for the physiological symptom of smiling may be either fear or happiness, while the extreme extent of the smile can result in tears, which are thus a symptom of both happiness and sadness. The social result of this physiological symptomology is that we can make different faces than the emotions we experience internally. We can choose, by doing so, to manipulate the perception by other people of our own interior emotional state. This behaviour, though presented as odious to the moralities of traditional mythology, is likewise rewarded by every society throughout history, and presented not only as beneficial, but as requisite to social life as death and taxes. To this extent, modern psychologists have discovered that the children who are most convincing when lying to other children will grow up to be the adults who are the best at making snap command choices most beneficial to all. In short, "liars make good leaders."

This assumption of social life has led, throughout history, and recorded by the traditional mythologies, to two types of complex. The first is the "God complex," and the second the "Saviour complex." The "God complex," currently diagnosed by the title "malignant narcissism" or "sociopathy," is little more than a prolapsed version of the "Saviour complex." Thinking one's self God usually follows from believing one's self a saviour. The saviour complex in itself can continue indefinitely as such, or it can inflame itself into the God complex. The God complex is harder to overcome than the saviour complex, because it is more socially rewarded. To believe one's self the saviour, one can always believe God to be the world outside them, and thus all other people as well as only one's self alone may be seen as equal to God, who is then seen as the collective saviour of all combined. However, to believe one's self God, one believes that God is their own interior psychology, and that the opposite of this is exterior reality, and thus to believe "I am God" ultimately leads to the conclusion "you are not." Such are the two syndromes most commonly resulting from the realisation that liars are socially rewarded.

Now, let's look at the concept of the moral "grey-area" which allows the extreme of mythological morality to say one thing while the perennially paired societies do the opposite. Once one comes to the conclusion that their interior psychological world can be not only different from, but through mis-leading the perceptions of others, can actually control, the exterior world of other people around us, one achieves a calm ecstasy; one perceives the hopeless futility of resisting reality. This revelation is immediately followed by the on-set of the moral grey area that is the root symptom of the previously adumbrated socially rewarded syndromes. This moral grey area is simply guilt; its light tone is faith "well-founded" (in other words, proven accurate); its dark-side is cynicism and unluckiness (in other words, justified doubt).

All-in-all, we cannot deny the subjective nature of emotions. We cannot accurately perceive the emotional causes of others for their physiological symptoms, and thus we cannot perceive the psychological motives for their chosen social syndromes. It is obviously apparent, and therefore considered a perennial axiom, that we cannot know the true contents of anyone else's mind. This is considered qualitatively different from not being able to see our own bodily organs. However, ultimately the effect is the same: we can take for granted they are functioning as meant to unless they have become unrewardingly socially symptomatic or result in physical pain.

Arguments against the equality of "good" and "happiness."

Because we have established the subjective nature of emotion as a psychological motive, we can now examine the different natures of "happiness" as an emotion and "good" as a moral judgment. We'll look first at the most prevalent form of the difference between "happiness" and "goodness," ie. that one which is most rewarded socially, followed by its subsequent off-shoots, and conclude by a comparison, by the standards of this socially rewarded form of confusion of "happiness" and "goodness" itself, between its definitions of "good" and "happiness."

The primary syndrome resultant from Nicomachean ethics, the confusion of "good" with "happiness," is sado-masochism. This perversion of the sexual instinct began at the same time that wampum (money) was created as a token exchanged to represent value of trade. The symptomology, and thus the degree of social-reward, for each is identical. In sado-masochism, the reproductive instinct is confused, whereas with capitalism it is the survival instinct. In capitalism, survival is seen as dependent on the catharsis of labour (ie. happiness in slavery). In sado-masochism, reproduction is seen as dependent on the sublimation of sex (ie. alternative methodologies to achieve the desired ends). For sado-masochism, these alternative methodologies have each spawned a subsequent off-shoot from the original perversion. These off-shoots include fetishism, sodomy and homo-sexuality. While sado-masochism is a form of "happiness" that can be contrasted with the idea of "goodness," these subsequent off-shoots are all justifiably moral, however are socially punished rather than rewarded.

Fetishism is the use of an alternative object to symbolise the reproductive organs which is then used to satisfy the need to sublimate the sexual instinct. Although the earliest and most obvious examples of this are the priapic statues of Pan, Greek goat-God of panic and ecstasy, the practise is not only older (originally African use of goards sheath-extendors for the cod-piece), but also more subtle (involving also the written word and non-pornographic arts).

Sodomy is the practise of using the body's alternative portals and passage-ways to satisfy the sexual instinct. In the same way the argument for this as a "forbidden fruit" by those who espouse the absolute "goodness" of the moral mythologies, the contra-positive can be asserted that "God put them here to be used." Sodomy in itself is obviously permissible to the eye of providence, and occurs (as often as does fetishism and homo-sexuality) in the animals of the wild as much as among social humans. Furthermore, attempts to tax this practise by punishment in the form of fees fails to accomplish for the state what the practise of prostitution accomplishes for a pimp because doing so lacks the assertion of it being an individual liberty. In truth, sodomy is as natural as any right, and therefore as much a right as any liberty.

Homo-sexuality, seen by the moral mythology absolutists as following from the practise of sodomy, is the desire for sublimation of the reproductive instinct into sexual satisfaction with another person of the same gender. Attempts to legislate rights for practitioners of homo-sexuality will continue to fail only so long as there remains the division between the "morality" of mythology-absolutists and the "relativity" of scientific method. The issue is seen, on the one-hand, as a gender-rights issue: equal to women in the work-place. On the other-hand, the rights of homo-sexuals is forwarded as a "sanctity of marriage" issue: calling into question the validity of church ritual as overseen by the populist state.

According to sado-masochism's application of Nicomachean ethics, that which is "good" for the self (brings selfish happiness) can be (or, by social reward, is necessarily for survival) relative to that which is "bad" for others (brings them pain). In short, what makes one person happy may make another person sad, and what makes another person happy may be doing what would make someone else sad. Thus, the ultimate extent of this, the "good" and "evil" or "right" and "wrong" of sado-masochistic and capitalist application of Nicomachean ethics, is a scale between rape (making the rapist happy and their victim sad, but ultimately "good" for neither) and divorce (making the divorcer happy only relative to the sadness of the divorcee, but ultimately good for both), with "crimes of passion" (from masturbation to murder) on the side of rape and "unrequited love" (ie. stalking or cheating) on the side of divorce.

Arguments against reasoning that excludes emotional motives.

Since the time of Aristotle during the later "Golden Age" of Greek philosophy, there have been few advancements in the arguments made that favour the premise of his ethics, that "happiness" is the "greatest good." We find that all of these attempt to isolate "happiness" rather than to isolate "goodness." This is because throughout all intervening history the "greatest good" has been assumed to be that which is of or does the good of God. It has been considered contrary to this definition of the "greatest good" to assert the goal of personal happiness, and therefore the strategies to achieve selfish good have all been omitted from record. Thus, it has only been since the beginning of the Enlightenment Era that philosophies have begun re-studying the "lost" arts of Nicomachean ethics, and only a few schools of thought have yet formed on the subject that warrant individual examination. Of these we find, following "deductive / inductive" reasoning contemporary to Aristotle, a lapse until the codification of "scientific method" and, following this, another lapse until the early and mid twentieth century with the philosophies of "Objectivism" and psychological "Behaviourism." These schools of thought each have a single fatal flaw in common which discredits them all: they are premised on the notion that reasoning can occur absent from emotional motives. Suffice it to say that none of these schools account for the presence of emotional motives as a factor. All seek to entirely exclude the premise of emotional necessity to society. This completes the original assumption by Aristotle of the "greatest good" being that which is most rewarded by society, the justification by his backwards reasoning for the definition of the "happiness" of the individual as the "greatest good" of society. For the revolution of "Objectivist" capitalist idealism into "globalist" colonialist-empire leading to the "scientific method" of the Holocaust, human experimentation justified sociologically by "behaviourist" psychologists, we owe thanks to Aristotle's use of induction preceding deduction.

Arguments against moral judgments based on emotional motives.

Aside from the obvious notion that judgments made in the "heat of the moment" result most often in negative consequences for all involved, we have to pause to wonder why emotions not only cannot be ignored by our reasoning, but are also a necessary component of our psychology. Why do we experience emotions?

I assert that psychological experience of emotions is the result of the physical law of entropy. Entropy applies universally to all physical bodies on all scales at once. This includes those possessed of an additional psychological nature, the so-called "self-awareness" or consciousness. We can say a person moreso than most wild animals poseses such a psychlogy, and that a wild-animal does so more than a tree, and that a tree does so more than a rock, and that a rock does so no more than any other element, fire, air or water, which are the primary components of all the heavens. Therefore, the greater the degree of consciousness, or "self-awareness," that a body possesses, the more it can reason out emotions as a portion of its psychology. However, it is also obvious that wild-animals, trees, rocks and the other elements of all nature can possess emotions, and that the degree of their "self-awareness" only tempers their ability to reason them out. We say, therefore, the temper of a wild-animal is greater than that of a person because the person applies their psychology over their inherent emotions, while the beast lacks psychology, but is possessed instead by even wilder emotions. Thus, a tree, rock or other element may also experience the physical cause for emotions (giving off heat) even more than a wild-animal, however we cannot certainly say that they experience this emotionally because they lack our psychology to reason. It may be that psychology is a more reasoned form of emotion, or that emotion is experienced as only a portion of psychology, or neither, or both, but we cannot say with absolute certainty even whether or not a rock experiences pain if broken, or even if an insect can appreciate happiness.

Arguments in favour of emotionally motive reasoning with no final moral judgment.

If we are to believe that "happiness" is equal to "goodness," as in the saying "the happiness from love you take is equal to the good for love's sake that you make," and assume that, from the point of view of "love" as the highest form of "happiness" is equivalent to "God," the highest form of "good," as we have been encouraged to do for the past 2000 years, then we will consider any word, a lie or truth, "good" news to us if it makes us "happy." Of course, this may prove true for us in the immediate or most short-term sense, however in anything longer than the present moment, our decisions based on such information, if false, will still lead to ill ends.

Consider the "good" news that the universe, once believed to already be "infinite," is now not only "expanding," but that the rate of this expansion is actually visibly "increasing." Surely, if this were the case, the news would be catastrophic, because our atoms would soon be torn apart as the universe surpasses its prior infinitude and spills over its own edge into some nothingness beyond what can be known. It would mean the end of the world and all life as we know it. Yet look around. Life continues, the same, unaffected by such news, and apparently entirely unaffected by it if such news were true. Therefore, we are told periodically "the end is nigh," in order to relieve our fear of any end to our subservience when none ever occurs. The lie that the world is about to end is "good" news; it makes us "happy" to hear it. Unfortunately it is not true, and therefore can accomplish no actual "good" in reality.

Another such lie that is necessary for the survival of society is rising prices. By controlling the apparent cost per earnings ratio of an average household in its national constituency, a government (or even only one corporation) can easily render its citizens "happy" and therefore appear "good," or render them "sad" and therefore appear "evil." By manipulating its appearance to the people, a governing body accomplishes the same effect, ie. appearing to make a "good" leadership, as an individual does who similarly lies to other people while looking them in the face.

However, better to positively prove one assertion than to disprove its opposite. So, more than merely toppling the lie of Nicomachean ethics, we must assert our own form of ethics in its place, that being one based on un-ending debate, ie. the "good" news of the Socratic method, without any need or desire for a final conclusion on the issue of what is "good" and what is "bad." Obviously, what is "good" according to one person's application of Nicomachean ethics will not agree with what is "good" according to another person's application of it. Therefore, it cannot be held that "happiness" is the "greatest good." What, however, is "happiness" and what, then, is "good"? We may choose to dispense with the nature of what constitutes "happiness" by the method of eternal questioning ("critical paranoia" according to Dali), and say that no final conclusion on the issue of what is the highest form of happiness may ever be reached. Emotions are subjective, reasoning can neither exclude them altogether nor survive if based on them alone, and the best way to do away with their effect on our reasoning is to turn our attention to defining "good" in terms other than those of our emotions.

In the next section I will address the concept of "good" irrelevant of subjective emotional "happiness," that eudaimonia or social-flourishing that follows from a slavery-dependent mentality. I will consider the "good" according to units of karma in an attempt to restore the Platonic ideal that "good," like the four elements and cosmos, can be represented as a form in its most atomic sense. Just as the four elements and cosmos were associated by Plato with the five regular shaped solids at their most atomic or essential level, so too could we say that the "greatest" good can be broken down into units or quanta of "karma." Furthermore, I would assert, but will not go into deeper now, that only these particulate traits of "good" and "evil" can exist, and that beyond them there is no "greater" good nor evil existing in the realm of forms or ideals. This is, I will only say, why, I believe, Plato's forms were not recognised as more fundamental to Aristotle in comprising his system of ethics dedicated to his own son, Nicomachus.

OHO's and IHO's of the POD, from +1900 YP until the present, May 12, +2008 YP:

1900 - 2000 (+YP)

[list]

OHO: Levi

IHO: Blavatsky

[list]Blavatsky understood the need to confront the millennialist Christian mythos, however she believed a gentler approach wise, softening the impact on the collective psyche before the zero-hour by exchanging "western" notions, like the Trinity and transubstantiation, into more "eastern" concepts, like the "Ascended Masters" and "Christ Consciousness." Levi, however, apparently did not share her view of this, and while he helped on her tarot (later called the "Rider-Waite" deck), he kept quiet, biding his time and concealing his own leanings toward devil worship as a revolutionary methodology to confront the coming Apocalypse head-on.[/list]

OHO: Mathers

IHO: Levi

Once Levi assumed control of the Order he immediately established the Golden Dawn by forging papers, attributed to Anna Sprengel, on ritual work and leaking them to Mathers, his apprentice. Mathers was a devoted follower of Levi and saw great good coming from the study of evil. To this end, he largely immersed himself in studying grimoires, and left the managing of the Golden Dawn be done largely by Florence Farr and Israel Regardie.

OHO: Crowley

IHO: Mathers

Mathers chose as his own disciple Alesiter Crowley, who would sue Mathers over the content of one of his grimoire translations, and go on to become what contemporary tabloids labeled, "the wickedest man in the world." The psychic battle between Farr and Crowley could be seen as precipitating WWII in its wake; Crowley's relationship with Regardie, whom he made his secretary, was much friendlier than with Waite, a contemporary of Mathers. Waite sided with Blavatsky on the need to "soften" the blow of the cataclysm of Christianity to come. Crowley, however, did not.

OHO: Burroughs

IHO: Crowley

Crowley eventually became addicted to heroin and, later in life, retired to Boleskine. Meanwhile, his ardent disciple, William Seward Burroughs, was re-tracing Crowley's steps through Tangiers during the Vision and Voice workings, and developing quite a nasty heroin habit himself.

Burroughs' early masterworks, "Naked Lunch," "Junky," "Exterminator," "The Job," etc. and his middle-gems, "Wild Boys," "Ticket that Exploded," "Nova Express," "Interzone," etc., and his later jewels, "My Education," "Cities of the Red Night," "Place of Dead Roads," etc. are all to be studied fastidiously as works of chaos panic, exactly what Levi had foreseen, and exactly what Blavatsky sought strongly to avoid. But this was only the beginning.

OHO: Morrison

IHO: Burroughs

While Burroughs began to turn away from traditional ritual work, his own apprentice, Jim Morrison, emerged himself in it. His stage performances were intended to induce a trance-state in the entire audience, with Jim as shaman. This fact is well documented, however it was only meant to puncture the petty tyrannies of past dogmatic divisions between originally unified causes. Jim wanted to combine the appearance of the devil with the action of the christ. It is not that he was "ahead of his time" nor even "too late," but both are true insofar as Jim used controlled chaos to bend and warp time itself.

OHO: Busta

IHO: Burroughs

It is speculated that Burroughs initiated several different people to the position of OHO following Jim's "last" death, in Guyana (as Jim Jones), before his signal completely decohered. The most apt pupil at the time of Burrough's death, in 1997, was also most likely to succeed Burroughs as IHO. This candidate was Busta Rhymes, former 5%er and student of Rastafarianism. It appeared likely the psychci revolution would go off without a hitch. There was very little warning (to most) of what would come next. There was no sudden "undertow" of psychic current to foretell.

[/list]

2000 - 5/5/2008 (+YP)

[list]

OHO: GWB

IHO: Ariel

After staging the 2000 presidential elections, the neo-Sethian coup-de-tat within the POD was declared concluded by 9-11. The agenda of war for oil, fighting foreign "terrorists" was ensured (at least "temporarily") and the PNAC, Carlyle Group, Halliburton, CFR, Blackwater and Trilateral Commission believed their Orwellian oligarchy steady-fast.

OHO: Laura

IHO: GWB

Following the death of Ariel Sharon, GWB briefly served as IHO with his wife, Laura Bush, making most of the command decisions for their family, and thus taking up most of GWB's time and mind, while he, unsuccessfully, attempted to ram doomed legislation through a majority opposition-party controlled Senate and Congress. The alliance between the Israeli Likud party and the neo-cons in Washington DC, forged between Mossad and the CIA, began to appear unsteady. It appeared as though the neo-con party would suffer from internal schisms. Meanwhile, Dick Cheney allied himself to GHWB, GWB's father, via Laura Bush, in secret from GWB.

OHO: Dick

IHO: Laura

In early 2007, Laura Bush was finally officially declared IHO, following several occult activities involving aligning her daughters with papal interests. She had already been aware (since 2000) of much more about the occult nature of the neo-Sethian / neo-con conspiracy than she had let on. Her role in this elaborate global coup-de-tat is akin to that of Emperor Palpatine in the Star Wars movies, and eventually she will be betrayed by Dick Cheney, who she has allowed to be taken on as her confidant and chief ruling secretary, the OHO of the POD.

It should be noted that, concurrent to the neo-Sethian (psychic conspirators) occupation of the chief official positions in the POD, the deposed opposition party (the psychic revolutionaries) has not fully been eliminated. They remain a small faction, internally cohesive, though relatively dis-unified, under rapidly successively changing leadership. They maintain the order of IHO over OHO, though have a very limited following, and no one appears to be aware of the occult status of the figures who retain these titles. For example, the musician Moby and the politician Ron Paul are at opposite ends of the succession, following the psychic death of IHO Busta Rhymes in 2000, of known OHO's, and it is widely believed that Ron Paul has succeeded to the role of IHO, although, to quote GWB, "rumours and conspiracy theories abound." Another title for this deposed line of OHO's are "the crew that never sleeps," while amongst us our title for our opposition IHO is "the Great Burner."

As everyone knows or should know, I work very hard for civil rights for Muslims as well as for everyone else. Because of my outspokenness, I have developed some enemies who do not want a Muslim especially a caucasian Muslim shaking up the status quo. Because I look at everyone as equals and have many friends who are of every ethnicity and I am articulate and outspoken they want to try to censor me. I have recently been falsely arrested and any moral or monetary support I can get now is greatly appreciated. Not only am I fighting for my life and livelihood now but I am also fighting for the civil rights of every American. I need everyone who knows me personally or even just on here to help me. Please read the story and let me know what you think.On Sunday May 4, 2008, I was arrested by Weber State University Police. At around 12:30 pm I got into an argument with Jared Olsen. It had started when I showed him a video on abcnews.com about a documentary where they might have found the remains of Mary Magdalene. He started to tell me he couldn't believe how stupid I was to believe that and also that I even consider any conspiracy theories. He then went on to tell me that I follow a crackpot religion and I was white that I wasn't even a real Muslim. I said Islam is not color blind or based on race. He said he saw me eat a hot dog once made with pork in it and I said well if that's the case I didn't realize it had pork in it. He started talking about Muslims and how we are all crazy with crazy beliefs that there was not a crucifixion. I told him that historical documents and data prove Islam and then I told him that because of his self righteous, always right, attack every one else's religion who is not strict protestant attitude I would never consider Christianity. I then told him, "You are known as a bigot on campus, people do not like you because all you do is bash religions with your pompous self righteous attitude, and people know you're a closet racist." He said, "You know what? I never wanted to tell you this but all the people you think are your friends on campus are not. People cannot stand you, the reason that you didn't get that student government position is because people despise you in student government. They think if you get into student government that you will try to turn it into a Muslim Senate. You always tell them what's on your mind. Everyone from SMS to Non-Traditional students all can't stand you but they won't tell you to your face." I told him that I didn't believe him that he is lying and even if it is true that some people might not like me they don't tell me because they are scary so forget them. He said they aren't scared or intimidated by you, they don't think you can out debate them, they pop their collars making fun of you. They say you think your gangsta but your not. As a matter of fact I think you're a pussy and that you ain't shit. This is when I got up and I said okay then cuzz if I aint shit and I am a pussy then do something. You are always talking this and that about me, acting like you're so tough. You know I am from Cali and went through rough things before I came out here doing the school thing getting awards and even a finalist for Crystal Crest awards but know one likes me right. He said that doesn't mean anything. So I said if you have a problem with me do something about it. I told him about five times do something cuzz and then I told him to shut the hell up and leave me alone, that we aren't cool anymore that I was sick of him. He then said with a grin, well what if I use my R.A. powers and call the campus police and tell them that you threatened to shoot everyone with a gun, and that I am scared of you. I said whatever and sat down on the couch not taking him serious, he was moving out this day anyways to move back to Wyoming. Next thing you know the police come in. First thing he said was why am I here? I told him I don't know why you are here. He then says well I heard you're a terrorist, your making terrorist threats, I have two people who are concerned for their own safety and the safety of the school. Get off the phone and computer and come here. He then said put your hands behind your head grabbing me all over especially on my genitalia. He then said sit down on the couch as I search your room for bombs and guns. He asked if I had anything in there he should know about and I said all I have is a pocket knife with a Masonic emblem on it. He then came out and said he did not find anything but that he was concerned because he kept accusing me of saying I said I was going to shoot people. Saying first why did I say it then said if I said it while I was upset. Each time I said I would never say such a thing that it was a lie and that I am not a terrorist and that I am for peace. I said hat I have an attorney and can I call him. He said later. He then proceeded to question my other roommate Zhiyuan Miao and Miao said he never heard anything about a gun. Miao was in the same room as us where as Dani Benson who is Jared Olsen's girlfriend was in another room. Jared Olsen and the police officer still kept trying to get Miao to say I had a gun and he would not say it. Now Miao is nervous. No matter what I told the officer and said it was not true, he still just assumed I was guilty and already had his mind made up. He handcuffed me and took me to his car. The police officer never once asked me my side of the story or what happened, he just already assumed I was a terrorist as he put it and already guilty. He had Benson and Olsen write out their statements after half an hour in the car they were talking with each other and still didn't finish their statements. So the officer took me to the County Jail and said he would get their statements later. His gave Jared a chance to go over their statements together and copy what they wrote. I told him I had my id in my pocket too look at because he kept spelling my name wrong and putting my birth date in the system wrong. He said he will look at it in the station.

Jared Olsen, Dani, and myself have had many arguments pertaining to religion. I have been under attack constantly by these two people for being Muslim. He has also in my presence referred to blacks as niggers. He told me that if I had went to his high school that I would have been killed because at his school they don't like blacks, minorities, or people who associate with blacks because they are posers. He talked about how he had weapons and fought with Mexicans. He told me that Allah swt was a fallen angel and that all Muslims were demon worshippers. He said I was crazy for thinking that the different religions were paths to the same God. He told me I was a liar for saying that the name Allah swt was the name of God for Arab Christians and Jews. He told me that it was his duty to make every non-Christian convert to Christianity. He attacked LDS all the time as well. He used to have this video that was a comparison of Islam and Christianity and tried to get me to watch it. Inside of it there was a booklet which explained how to get Muslims to convert to Christianity. My first run in with him he was telling me that I would go to hell if I didn't become saved through the blood of Christ and I said I was Muslim I do not believe in the crucifixion and then he started yelling across the room saying I was going to burn in hell.

Last night I came home with a note on my door saying that I was suspended. I have never been asked my side of the story, I just have been presumed guilty. Two days ago I spoke with Dean Hurst on the phone since he wanted a meeting with me. I told him that my attorneys wanted to be present, he said he would call me back to set a time, he never did. He said that wanted to put some temporary sanctions on me. I still as of now have not had a chance to speak my case or position. I have an attorney named Mark White from Eldridge and White Law firm helping me. I do need some funds for my defense and any support that CAIR can give. I speak out about inequalities against Islam and Muslims and this is a blatant attempt to harm my character and hurt me in both my public and personal life.

I am reposting this to spread a word that the folks "in charge" would otherwise try to suppress. No one can be OK with this, but think about the men responsible, pray for them also, they must have a weight of guilt that no-one should suffer. This is a problem for all of us to face together. May Rachel's light shine into the dark corners of our "justice system" and help us all be moved to change in the true spirit.
God help us perceive clearly, truthfully, and in the love we know from you.
TALLAHASSEE - Attorneys for Slain Rachel Hoffman have issued a response to the Press Release held by the Tallahassee Police Department on May 9, 2008 on behalf of the Hoffman Family.
Local attorneys Johnny Devine with the Law Office of Johnny Devine, P.A., and Danielle Joyner Kelley with the Law Offices of Marie Mattox, P.A. have issued a statement on Saturday, May 10, 2008 responding to the press conference that was held yesterday by the Tallahassee Police Department. Both attorneys and their firms are representing the Hoffman Family.
The following is a joint statement by both attorneys:
Today, the community of Tallahassee, Florida mourns the loss of a beautiful girl. Today, those living in Pinellas County and the Clearwater Beach, Florida area mourn the loss of a beautiful citizen. Today, the State of Florida mourns the loss of a vibrant, intelligent, beautiful, and loving young woman.
No one feels this loss more strongly than the family and friends of Rachel Hoffman, whose life was taken in a senseless act of extreme violence. The anger and outrage in the community is great, and many questions are beginning to surface. The family is in the middle of grieving Rachel's murder. Yesterday, they had only known for a short time that she was killed and would never be coming back. On that very day, a press conference was held by the Tallahassee Police Department regarding the death of Rachel.
From the press conference's inception, the Tallahassee Police Department took the opportunity to inform the community of the victim's criminal charges, and made the point, both directly and indirectly, that her death was the result of her breaking protocol during the sting operation. The family and the attorneys for Rachel Hoffman have serious concerns about the statement that Rachel somehow caused her own death.
Rachel Hoffman was a 23-year-old woman, a graduate of Florida State University, and a daughter, beloved family member, and friend. At no time during the press conference was it addressed that Rachel Hoffman was not a trained law enforcement officer, was not on the Tallahassee Police Department Vice Squad Unit, or that she had taken any training classes regarding the Tallahassee Police Department's "protocol".
It was not addressed why Rachel was placed in this situation in the first instance, other than she had criminal charges pending. However, even with criminal charges pending, the main concern is how Rachel came to this position and what measures were taken in order for her to agree to go there. Her family and attorneys believe it was her involvement in the drug sting that led to Rachel's death, and not the fact that she allegedly broke any protocol, but rather that she was led to the site in the first place.
At no time was it discussed how police lost sight of her or what precautions they took to prevent her from being lost. At no time was it discussed what safety precautions were taken by police who knew she would be meeting with armed individuals.At no time during the press conference was it addressed that Rachel Hoffman had no pending or past cocaine or handgun charges in the very county where she was to meet the individuals, yet she was sent into a sting operation to buy cocaine and a handgun. It was never addressed whether her vicious murder was committed with the very handgun she was going to purchase.At no time during the press conference was it addressed that with regard to her first drug charges for which she was in drug court, a diversionary program, that she had a defense attorney who was representing her. The new charges that led to her agreement to become a confidential informant would have affected her success in drug court.However, her defense attorney, Johnny Devine, was not notified. Mr. Devine's client was talked to by the police regarding this matter. However, her attorney was not present nor was he notified. No details regarding this meeting were discussed at the press conference, although had Rachel asked to consult with her attorney and been denied that right, it would have been a severe miscarriage of justice. It was not discussed what charges she was told she was facing, or how much time she would spend in jail for them.Although a concern for the family was expressed at the press conference, it was greatly overshadowed by an immediate shift to the victim's criminal record and details of how she caused her own death by botching a sting operation. No where was it discussed why a 5 foot 7 inch, 135 pound young woman was sent into an operation to buy items that she herself has never been accused of having in her own possession.During the press conference, mention of the fact that the Tallahassee Police Department did not know the two men that Rachel was helping to set up in a drug bust that night came immediately to light. However, at no time during that press conference was it addressed whether or not the Tallahassee Police Department has any policy or protocol of whether or not the research the very suspects and review their criminal record before they send in a confidential informant to bust them.At no time was it discussed whether or not Rachel knew how dangerous those individuals truly were. Clearly, the police knew about the individuals by the time they were trying to get Rachel to set them up for arrest. And most definitely, the police were aware of the individuals' identity in order for them to find them in Orlando, Florida so suddenly and take them into custody.Bringing to light the victim's criminal charges, her alleged faults during a sting operation, and repeatedly addressing the fact, in so many different words, that the Tallahassee Police Department is not responsible for the death of Rachel Hoffman did nothing to inform the public about what truly happened the night of the drug sting. It did nothing to inform the public about what is going to happen to the individuals who killed her. It did nothing to inform the public about what policies and procedures are in place to protect a confidential informant before they engage in a police drug sting.The only purpose this information served was to both attack a woman who has been taken away from society in a ruthless, reckless, and vicious manner, and to allow her family to watch it all on television while they are still reeling from the shock of their loved ones death.Today, a family is still grieving and a public outcry is being heard. Tomorrow, a mother will spend a Mother's Day planning a funeral for her daughter. The attorneys for the family of Rachel Hoffman wish that her memory and her family's well-being stay first and foremost in the minds of everyone who mourns her loss. People will remember Rachel fondly at her funeral and speak well of her. She deserves no less from the very government agency, the Tallahassee Police Department, which she helped to risk and ultimately lost her life trying to help.

heyo,

sorry to take so long getting back to you. It's the end of the month, so I'm out of money, hence needing to argue about it with mom. I guess your prayer worked, or else my argument was simply more logical, either way, I ended up getting $500 debt forgiven and $50 cash in hand. My argument was valid, I admit: by getting a new external hard-drive ($300) and my car fixed ($600) instead of a new computer ($2000) and a new car ($8000), I argueably saved mom ($9100), so theoretically, even after forgiving my debt and paying for my gas this month ($550), she still owes me $8550, however, like our currency now, it's theoretical debt, since she never paid it in, only been willing to do so, so technically it's an entirely intangible investment. I argued thus, aside from that last bit, and added that she hadn't paid for me for A) the art I'd done for her friend's project; B) the work I'd done with my friend on her deck; C) the loading and shipping work I'd helped her with for the past several months; all of which were above and beyond the call of regular house-hold chores. I concluded by saying, "I think I'm worth alot more to this household than $50." She started to argue I didn't pay, A) rent, B) utilities or even C) car-insurance. I reminded her, I am on a fixed-income whereby I cannot afford to pay the car-insurance; to whom would I pay utilities unless I also paid rent; and if I paid rent to her, why should I have to do any chores? She expects to have to buy a new air-conditioning unit ($4-6000) soon, and just bought a new wide-screen flat-panel tv ($1000), so she can't afford to have me threatening not to help in basic household upkeep. So she gave me $50 to shut me up, and told me she would "consider" forgiving my $500 debt, which I also explained I would never be able to repay, and which is only hanging over my head to make me feel guilty for no real reason. I expect she'll eventually have to relent on this, and then, when I do get work, I will not owe her my first $500. She proposed having a "slush" fund, whereby I could take money out at the end of the month and pay it back into it at the beginning of the next. She also promised me several jobs working with her soon. Yeah. Right.

Ultimately what it comes down to is that my mother and I have a different philosophy about money. Hers is more common, mine more modern. Hers states that "only money earned should be spent; money not spent can be saved; money saved can be spent later; short-term need comes before long-term want." Mine is that "money spent is already gone, was never mine, and does not even exist; money not spent is earned; money earned should be saved; saved money is for any inevitable emergency; long-term need comes before short-term want." As far as her philosophy regarding my use of my sacrament, she is old-fashioned, and believes that "it is possible for a person to go their entire natural life without having ever altered their consciousness." I believe she is at least rational enough to realise it is pointless to try to argue with me about it. I would only bring up that her approving of my being perscribed anti-depressant medication and dis-approving of my self-medicating with my sacrament is nothing but the opposite-fitting puzzle-piece to my father's approving my self-medicating and dis-approving of my anti-depressant medication. I believe I am free from the existences of both my mother and my father, as well as Irina and everyone else. They could, and do, all exist without me. Therefore, I believe I do not need to exist, and thus, I affirm solipsism: I do not exist. In my world, nothing exists; that is: in my world the existence of everything is subjective to me, and my existence is subjective only to those who recognise me. When I am alone, not only do I not exist in the minds or worlds of anyone else, I do not even exist in my own, because my world does not exist without me, and I do not exist to myself. I am at utter liberty, and my philosophy is not one of fatalist solipsism. I assert as natural absolute individual sovereignty. No one rules over me, and I owe nothing to anyone.

In any event, I don't mean to bitch. Sometimes it's best to vent, it helps clear out the bad logic. Sorry if it's a waste of your time.

First, my friend, Damien Williams, is, for me, as much an influence in this work as, right now, I am for you. He turned me onto this project, before which I was working only with Enochian material. To flip the switch from angelology to demonology was certainly illuminating, but I've discovered that, from my prior point of view as an angelologist, demonology is extremely frustrating. Working on the TOD book was nothing but a pain in the ass from the first day. Cross-referencing all my sources was such a head-ache I intentionally neglected to include any bibliography of works cited. I had borrowed Damien's books by Kenneth Grant (an author who, from my traditionally western point of view, I find disgusting), and I have to admit that, without his input, I would have quit the project at several points. The order of the demons on the combined tree of QBLH and the TOD of Savedow was easy enough: the QBLH were from Savedow, Grant and Crowley; the TOD was from Savedow. Understanding the order of the traditional tarot was also easy enough. But combining the 72 traits of the combined tree of QBLH and TOD with the ideal 72 cards of a tarot deck eluded me for two years, haunting my dreams, until you contacted me. So, for the tarot part of the project, I am as much indebted to you as, for the demonology aspect of the project, I am to Damien.

Now all that being thus, and all else equal, I am fine working with you alone on the tarot aspect of the project. Damien had offered to make some sigils (in the style of AOS), but I have already so much as outright declined this. The art and the combined order of the 72 demons of the St. Simon arrangement and the tarot can be exclusively yours, and only the TOD book and any writing I contribute to the pamphlet will be mine. In other words, the previous charts and diagrams I've attached in emails are now your property, my gift for your intellectual inspiration. The St. Simon arrangement, and the idea of combining it with a tarot will remain my personal intellectual property, however the entire process of doing this in the way we are, as well as the art and whatever writing you might want to contribute to the pamphlet, will be entirely your own of same. I hope we're on the same page about this, and that if it doesn't sound fair you'll speak up now, in case (God forbid) we ever do make money off it.

I can work out whatever intellectual debts I may have to Damien for inspiration on this project on my own. You should meet him at some point, or at least I should give you guys one another's emails, because, in the same spirit of generosity as I am indebted to you for the art of the tarot, I may one day wish for Damien to inherit for his part the entire inspiration for the demonology of the TOD entirely. This would mean you guys would be working together more closely later on, and he does have good enough business sense, so (again, God forbid) if you two ever did want to turn some earnings from this working, then by all means I'd want you to, even if I myself wished to be at that stage dis-included.

Second, your art thus far is, to me and Damien both, entirely satisfactory enough to continue on with this project. I don't ever want you to feel like his opinion is hung over your own permission to continue your art like a sythe. He wouldn't want you to feel that either. So I want us to continue on as always for now, and if there are any questions later on down the road we can address them then. In other words, the art you've shown me thus far is, in my opinion (and again, as always, not that I can judge), entirely satisfactory for this project. However, I would like to discuss the relationship between the style of your art, which will be used for our project, as it relates with the more "traditional" style of post-19th century "magickal" art. Again, remember none of this is meant as any negative reflection on your own work; it's all purely speculative.

Comic-book art, in it's later-origination period (late 1950's, early 1960's), was defined by thick outline, exaggerated mannerism, "action" capturing poses, and were a style-based genre. In the later 60's and early 70's, the comic-book code became more relaxed relative to "pulp" magazines and "graphic-novels" and other comic-companies emerged than only the major cartoon / super-hero genre giants. These specialised in the thinner-outlined, more detailed, and used darker tones to afford more colors. Rather than the traditional, almost sit-com like, "cookie-cutter" cold-war era genetic and atomic mutant-style super-hero comics, these "Tales from the Crypt" type of comics usually had blood-splattered and gorey "O'Henry" endings, like a dark-night ending in a bright-dawn. By the later 80's and early 90's, when I quit reading comics, these two styles of art had fused into slightly darker story-lines and high-contrast art, with heavy-lines and dark-shadows, contrasted by bright, usually still more or less primary-based pigment, colours. Since then, comic-art has fused with computer-animation, and the conceptual-side is over-valued, while the colouration-side is where the money is, but has become simply churned out. To be blunt, comic penicilers and inkers today are treated like speciality craftsmen (post McFarlane), and the computer-colourers are given only a limited spectrum of input with which to work. On the contrary, even using pencil and ink is retrograde until Luddite compared to the images we could be producing on computers alone. Alas.

Because tarot has been crafted as recreational gaming, ala traditional numbered-card decks, its art has followed an almost exactly parallel course with comic-book art. However, whereas comic-books started in the later-half of the 20th century, tarot-art preceded this by about 50 years, with the Rider-Waite deck based on illustrations by Eliphas Levi in the late 19th century. Just like comic-book art from its origin until now, we enter it in one style, and exit in another. The style in the beginning of both was heavily-outlined, primary-colour-based pigments and simple but symbolic poses. The style at the end of each, comics today and the "hey-day" of tarot (from the Rider-Waite until the Crowley-Harris deck in the late 1940's) is also the same: overly-coloured and shaded, complex compositions with complex symbolism. Since the Crowley-Harris deck, the style of the genre of tarot has deteriorated into an industry, with speciality decks for every imaginable use. Of these only the "Shadow" tarot-deck is worth discussing, and, so far as I know, it has not yet even been released commercially.

The "shadow" deck is indicative of the style of modern "magick" art, which is meant to be, as it was during the "hey-day," the given-style for any self-respecting type of tarot-deck. By transforming the style of tarot art in its "hey-day" from the Rider-Waite style to the Crowley-Harris style, Crowley not only affected a transformation within the genre of "magick" art, but also basically gave birth to era of comic-book style art. Of course, because "magick" art preceded comic-book art, comics have only come as far in the past 50 years as did "magick" art during the "hey-day" of tarot, while "magick" art has not grown much further following the division of tarot into an industry. Essentially, where "magick" art stands now is at only about 10 or 20 years ahead of where comic-book art is now. We can look forward to comic-books becoming increasingly abstract and less generic in the future as we progress further into the post-atomic computer-age. Likewise, the current state of "magick" art reflects just that form of composition and style: ala the "shadow" tarot, post-Crowley-Harris "magick" art is a combination of Picasso-esque cubist characters with complete abstraction, with spaces defined only by solid shadows and different primary tones. Lady Harris had combined abstract back-grounds with art-deco foregrounds, resulting in surrelaism. Surrealism prolapsed, in turn, into cubist abstraction, ala Crowley's own child-like style. And that is where we are now. "Magick" art is already post-surrelaist cubist-abstraction, and comic-art is only a mouse-click or two behind.

So, what I see as the difference is that comic-books will become ultimately only cgi, while "magick" art (as both a style and the industry of tarot) will become the preferred niche for the purely pencil and ink conceptualists. Following that, they will fuse, but by then the print medium will have become obsolete as a communications medium, so the cgi comics and the concepts of the "magick" artists will be combined not on paper but in the realm of virtual-reality. Consider that tarot (as a data-transfer / information-exchange system equivalent for a computer to money for people) can be played as a two-person game: the "reader" and the "querrent" are just the two-players, however if they use one deck, it is usually split by the querrent to represent that they were originally meant to use only half each. Each puts down one card over another until either both run out in an exact draw or one person throws more "adverse" (upside-down) cards at the other than they have thrown at them, and thus they "win." Now, imagine this as the traditional "combat" mode in a video-game, and imagine the video-game one of weightless abstraction, and you will have the fusion of man and machine in a foetal Artificial Intelligence floating in a womb of Virtual Reality. The only difference is losing the "first-person shooter" perspective of the biological life-form behind, and entering into a "second-skin" of game-reality where we have omni-sentience of our entire (albeit not technically "real") surroundings. The last step will be if you die in tarot, you die in the flesh, only to be born into "infinite" lives in an AI's VR.

I think your art and your ideas for art are superior to any prior-input I could offer. I may be able to sound schooled talking about art, but the truth is I, myself, hate to draw, and have absolutely no desire to think of any new or inspiring genre or style of doing it. As I've said before, I'm far more comfortable leaving the whole art thing in your hands regarding this project. Anyway, I've gone on far too long by now. I hope I managed to talk about at least something you'd mentioned in your last couple of letters and, as always, I apologise for the delay in the media and the short-comings of the flesh that prevent me from being able to write you back instantaneously. Anyways, peace man. Be well and do well,

your friend,

initial premise: regardless of what I say being factually accurate, due to my past diagnosis and current behaviour, I am not simply being misunderstood, but instead am clearly a sub-standard specimen of our species. This premise can be agreed upon by my friends and acquaintances as easily as by my enemies. For example, my closest friends and my most hated enemies can agree: I am not sane, I am an overly-analytical introvert, and, most importantly, my behaviour is needlessly stress-inducing.

primary assertion: If I valued having friends, and wanted a successful ideological victory over those who wish me harm, the solution would be simple. I would change my behaviour, alter my mood, and replace my self-effacing introversion with self-aggrandising extroversion. This is considered, again ubiquitously amongst my friends and enemies, to be the essence of life itself: growing up and taking responsibility for myself.

Semantically, an argument can be reasonably asserted in opposition to this axiom. It could be so argued such that, the loss of childish naivety and its replacement by necessary self-sufficiency is not an inherent genetic trait unique to our species, but is rather a socially-conditioned response to modern pressures created by our current civilisation. However, making such an argument is futile on the grounds that, to prove there is no such thing as a "normal" (universally applicable) chemical balance of neurotransmitters, it is necessary to question the validity of everybody's chosen roles in society: if each of us is unique, only economic factors delimit our opportunities for self-expression through vocation. Again, while this is factually accurate and acceptable to our humanity's logic, it presents an insurmountable difficulty to imagine an alternative, and becomes exponentially easier to scape-goat anyone who questions the necessity of our economically-determined social-roles.

Therefore, I won't bother even attempting to take my more traditional stance in this exposition, whereby I alienate my friends and enervate my enemies by lumping them all into the single, collective category of ignorant slaves.

Instead, allow me to take the counter-point, that based not on my own, self-centred point of view, but instead let me exercise that cherished form of selfless altruism that encourages us to change our interior composition in order to attract to us those objects and others in reality we find or are encouraged to believe to be desirable.

In short, let me try to see my life through the eyes of everyone else.

I am 30, live with my mother, and am diagnosed with a mental disorder (hypo-manic / rapid-cycling long-term chemical depression resultant from a deficiency of the neurotransmitter serotonin). I don't bathe, I don't change clothes, I sleep with the light on. My diet consists primarily of chocolate and cheese. I smoke cigarettes and marijuana, and when I can't smoke marijuana have a tendency to abuse alcohol by drinking to excess, which exacerbates my chemical depression. Now, from the point of view of an objective observer, all these things are within the domain of my ability (or at the very least my capacity) to control. Because these traits are considered socially undesirable, it would behoove my chances for long-term survival and the satisfaction of participating productively in societal works for me to use this control to alter these traits.

By doing so, it is obvious it would become possible for me to achieve the goals I claim to value, and to, furthermore, assert my unique preferences on the environment of others around me, and thus even alter the entire accepted paradigm of desires by them to more closely reflect and resemble my own unique perspective. Thus, by changing my interior perspective, I could change my situation, and by changing my situation, more aptly effect changes on a larger scale of contribution as well.

Bluntly: if I'm not happy, I should change what I am doing and rethink why I do it. And, again, using my diagnosed mental "abnormality" should be seen by any objective observer as a "cop out," as it would render me a special exception to the necessities of social survival suffered no less acutely by us all. Again, bluntly, "if I think I have it bad, I should get over myself."

Now, instead of adopting my traditionally defensive stance regarding my depression, I have to accept that it is nothing more than my own personally qualitative "hurdle" in this life, equal in its singular quantity to the personal dysfunction of any civilised person, and should even be seen as a blessing beside the pains of the less civilised. Am I "entitled" to see my sadness as part of my identity? Obviously not.

Defeatist failure to adapt is tantamount to passive-aggressive suicide. So, I am mutually assured by friends and enemies alike, "I can win more bees with honey than vinegar." And this is true: to acquire my desires, I must make myself seem desirable, even necessary, to them.

I believe that my difficulty in changing my attitude toward existence, and thus actually acquiring the respect I merely imagine I deserve regardless, is in seeing this entire course of action as a compromise. I cherish my perfectionism, and hold myself up to impossibly high standards of etiquette and ethics, and thus, by valuing the impossible, utterly fail to achieve even the most basic standards of human decency.

By compromising who I am now, I would be admitting not only my own imperfection in the eyes of everyone, but admitting to myself that my present values, while ideal to me, are not only impossible in reality, but are moreover offensive to everyone.

However, to continue objectively analysing myself from any point of view other than my own, this is the only course of action that can acquire for me the goals I desire. If I give up idealising them, and merely passively allow them to, they will become reality on their own. Perhaps. Like in the 'Stones song: "you can't always get what you want, but if you try sometime you just might find you get what you need."

God does work in the most curiously ironic ways, entirely alien to the logic we would attempt to impose on nature were it our own to design. As Hunter Thompson said, "all things flow according to the will of the Great Magnet. I was a fool to try to defy Him."

While the irony of my idealisation of individual divinity, more than merely even the fictitious concept of absolute individual sovereignty, has been an amusing comfort to me since I began to speak at the age of three, now that I am thirty, it is time to re-assess the validity and efficiency of such an unusual assertion.

However, if my motives in making such a compromise for a partially uncontrolled reality are less than absolutely pure in their selfishness, that is, if I change who I am to fit the expectations of anyone else in particular, the entire endeavor will fail. I have to compromise with reality on the issue of the ideal nature of my expectations of myself, which have traditionally resulted in my romanticised depression.

I am only just now beginning to see the light. I know my time to make huge changes in my life to benefit my own desires will come. I'm just not ready to do it on behalf of my own selfishness. I call it "love," but I am only using the ones I "love" as an excuse for changing my course relative to them, which ultimately only demeans everyone involved.

The simple sleights, Shakespeare's so-called "slings and arrows of outrageous fortune," that I cherish my over-reaction to so much, which affect me no more so nor less than anyone who ever lived, are a difficult "hurdle" to get over when I have traditionally valued them as integral to my identity. At least now I see this as detrimental, which is more than I could have said even only a year ago.

When I finally do manage to compromise my idealisation of myself and my own regrets and disappointments, then I will be ready to embrace the experience of existence in the agape acceptance of random stimuli I observe everyone around me enjoying. However, I am still coming to terms with rejecting my own over-blown sorrows. I am still a ways off from compromising with the "Great Magnet" and allowing my fate to be as much the result of random chance as by my own failed attempts at perfection.

And I am still incredibly lonely, and incredibly sad, and incredibly self-loathing. It will be a long way up from the depths to which I've receded from the simple enjoyment of experience of existence. However, now, as I say, I can at least see the light, which is more than I could have ever said before.

The cure to the darkness within me is not idealising the light in others, but in seeing that the light in others is, relative to me, only a reflection of my own actual inner-light.

Peace,

when gas hits $10.00 a gallon, I expect then it will be revolution time, and not through a democratic process, but with guns. When Ron Paul doesn't get elected this year, the gap between the wealthy political side-swappers and the poor tv-zombies will spike. The CIA's agit-prop encouraging the false belief Americans are gutless and brainless won't stand the scrutiny of those who have self-educated about and are organised against the think-tanks of the rich globalists. David Rockefeller, Henry Kissinger, Henry Kravitz, Paul Wolfowitz, Zbigniew Brzezinski and the Bildebergers; George HW Bush, John Kerry and the Skull and Bones frat; James Baker III, Colin Powell and the other Bohemian Grove campers; Hillary Clinton, Barrack Obama, John McCain and the other Council on Foreign Relations members; George W. Bush, Dick Cheney, Donald Rumsfeld, Condoleezza Rice, and the other Project for a New American Century planners, the so-called "neo-cons," will simply skim the dollar they already milk so much that all the people who protested GATT and the IMF in Seattle in '99, and all the people who would vote for Ron Paul, and all the 9-11 "truthers," and all the state-militia anti-federalist radicals, and all the conspiracy "theorists" will revolt with guns. Martial Law will be declared, but it won't be able to be implemented nationally fast enough to prevent an armed and organised insurrection, and the UN won't be able to stall the rest of the socially-democratic people of other industrial nations from helping us long enough for their like-minded rulers to militarise a significant enough NATO force to prevent the murdering of those responsible for the economic shocks in the first place. Meanwhile, the Chinese are expecting to take advantage of the reduction in US population during the revolution to invade the US after arming the insurgents against the existing government, however in order for them to finally achieve the traditional "Soviet" model of supply-side totalitarianism (complete with a Cino-American version of the KGB / DHS) they would have to restructure our existing constitutional democratic republic. This, some speculate, has been the plan for Bacon's "New Atlantis" from its inception: to reduce the national population, form a pseudo-socialist dictatorship, and consolidate the entire amount of material resources into the hands of a pre-selected few. Ron Paul, Noam Chomsky, Edward Said, Alex Jones and other dis-information plants may think that, by overthrowing the federal reserve bank, they can restore a socially-democratic, constitutional republic, however the CFR and Trilateral Commission intend is to use Martial Law to expose the US population to an armed invasion by their trading-partners in east Asia and western Europe. Their inspiration is Orwell's "eng-soc" blocs in the novel 1984, and so the camps allotted for use in Martial Law are called REX84. The plan is to use each "bloc" to suppress its own indigenous and surrounding populations, such that by dissolving existing national borders and creating continent-spanning Martial Law, it will quickly become possible to establish a single governing body to administrate the entire planet's legal-system, and immediately following that, to crown a single figure-head "king" in order to concentrate the appearance of control over the entirety of humanity into a single person, even if only to protect their cabinet of advisors, who will be then, as they are now, the de facto emperors, albeit behind the scenes.

10 possible questions to ask the "light beings":

1) what is up with all these spiders? I mean, really? Is it a past life thing, or am I just not using enough quartz, or what?

2) is Yanni an alien, and if so, from which dimension or star system?

3) is John Tesh a demon, and if so, from what level of Hell?

4) what do boys like?

5) what are this week's winning lottery numbers going to be?

6) is Jerry Seinfeld in on the whole conspiracy to rule the world, and if not, why not?

7) what is your quest?

8) if I were a wood chuck, how much wood would I chuck, that is, if I could chuck wood, and would I?

9) did Hunter S. Thompson go to heaven, or hell?

10) which way to Nirvana, and how much will the t-shirt cost?

</blockquote>

Glad to have seen you the other day, hope to see you again soon; looking forward to teaching a class, if it works out; soz about that huge fuse too, that was my bad.

this player contains: videos 1&2 Congressman Dennis Kucinich presents the 20 articles for the impeachment of president George W. Bush and (videos 3-5) of Vice President Dick Cheney.

Here are the 20 Articles for the Impeachment of George W. Bush:

Drafted by Ramsey Clark, former U.S. Attorney General

Articles of Impeachment of President George W. Bush and

Vice President Richard B. Cheney, Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld, and Attorney General Alberto Gonzales

The President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors. - - ARTICLE II, SECTION 4 OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

President George W. Bush, Vice President Richard B. Cheney, Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld, and Attorney General Alberto Gonzales have committed violations and subversions of the Constitution of the United States of America in an attempt to carry out with impunity crimes against peace and humanity and war crimes and deprivations of the civil rights of the people of the United States and other nations, by assuming powers of an imperial executive unaccountable to law and usurping powers of the Congress, the Judiciary and those reserved to the people of the United States, by the following acts:

- 1) Seizing power to wage wars of aggression in defiance of the U.S. Constitution, the U.N. Charter and the rule of law; carrying out a massive assault on and occupation of Iraq, a country that was not threatening the United States, resulting in the death and maiming of over one hundred thousand Iraqis, and thousands of U.S. G.I.s.
- 2) Lying to the people of the U.S., to Congress, and to the U.N., providing false and deceptive rationales for war.
- 3) Authorizing, ordering and condoning direct attacks on civilians, civilian facilities and locations where civilian casualties were unavoidable.
- 4) Instituting a secret and illegal wiretapping and spying operation against the people of the United States through the National Security Agency.
- 5) Threatening the independence and sovereignty of Iraq by belligerently changing its government by force and assaulting Iraq in a war of aggression.
- 6) Authorizing, ordering and condoning assassinations, summary executions, kidnappings, secret and other illegal detentions of individuals, torture and physical and psychological coercion of prisoners to obtain false statements concerning acts and intentions of governments and individuals and violating within the United States, and by authorizing U.S. forces and agents elsewhere, the rights of individuals under the First, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth and Eighth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

7) Making, ordering and condoning false statements and propaganda about the conduct of foreign governments and individuals and acts by U.S. government personnel; manipulating the media and foreign governments with false information; concealing information vital to public discussion and informed judgment concerning acts, intentions and possession, or efforts to obtain weapons of mass destruction in order to falsely create a climate of fear and destroy opposition to U.S. wars of aggression and first strike attacks.

8) Violations and subversions of the Charter of the United Nations and international law, both a part of the "Supreme Law of the land" under Article VI, paragraph 2, of the Constitution, in an attempt to commit with impunity crimes against peace and humanity and war crimes in wars and threats of aggression against Afghanistan, Iraq and others and usurping powers of the United Nations and the peoples of its nations by bribery, coercion and other corrupt acts and by rejecting treaties, committing treaty violations, and frustrating compliance with treaties in order to destroy any means by which international law and institutions can prevent, affect, or adjudicate the exercise of U.S. military and economic power against the international community.

9) Acting to strip United States citizens of their constitutional and human rights, ordering indefinite detention of citizens, without access to counsel, without charge, and without opportunity to appear before a civil judicial officer to challenge the detention, based solely on the discretionary designation by the Executive of a citizen as an "enemy combatant."

10) Ordering indefinite detention of non-citizens in the United States and elsewhere, and without charge, at the discretionary designation of the Attorney General or the Secretary of Defense.

11) Ordering and authorizing the Attorney General to override judicial orders of release of detainees under INS jurisdiction, even where the judicial officer after full hearing determines a detainee is wrongfully held by the government.

12) Authorizing secret military tribunals and summary execution of persons who are not citizens who are designated solely at the discretion of the Executive who acts as indicting official, prosecutor and as the only avenue of appellate relief.

13) Refusing to provide public disclosure of the identities and locations of persons who have been arrested, detained and imprisoned by the U.S. government in the United States, including in response to Congressional inquiry.

14) Use of secret arrests of persons within the United States and elsewhere and denial of the right to public trials.

15) Authorizing the monitoring of confidential attorney-client privileged communications by the government, even in the absence of a court order and even where an incarcerated person has not been charged with a crime.

16) Ordering and authorizing the seizure of assets of persons in the United States, prior to hearing or trial, for lawful or innocent association with any entity that at the discretionary designation of the Executive has been deemed "terrorist."

17) Engaging in criminal neglect in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, depriving thousands of people in Louisiana, Mississippi and other Gulf States of urgently needed support, causing mass suffering and unnecessary loss of life.

18) Institutionalization of racial and religious profiling and authorization of domestic spying by federal law enforcement on persons based on their engagement in noncriminal religious and political activity.

19) Refusal to provide information and records necessary and appropriate for the constitutional right of legislative oversight of executive functions.

20) Rejecting treaties protective of peace and human rights and abrogation of the obligations of the United States under, and withdrawal from, international treaties and obligations without consent of the legislative branch, and including termination of the ABM treaty between the United States and Russia, and rescission of the authorizing signature from the Treaty of Rome which served as the basis for the International Criminal Court.

JABBERWOCKY
Lewis Carroll

(from Through the Looking-Glass and What Alice Found There, 1872)

`Twas brillig, and the slithy toves
Did gyre and gimble in the wabe:
All mimsy were the borogoves,
And the mome raths outgrabe.

"Beware the Jabberwock, my son!
The jaws that bite, the claws that catch!
Beware the Jubjub bird, and shun
The frumious Bandersnatch!"
He took his vorpal sword in hand:
Long time the manxome foe he sought --
So rested he by the Tumtum tree,
And stood awhile in thought.
And, as in uffish thought he stood,
The Jabberwock, with eyes of flame,
Came whiffling through the tulgey wood,
And burbled as it came!
One, two! One, two! And through and through
The vorpal blade went snicker-snack!
He left it dead, and with its head
He went galumphing back.
"And, has thou slain the Jabberwock?
Come to my arms, my beamish boy!
O frabjous day! Callooh! Callay!"
He chortled in his joy.

`Twas brillig, and the slithy toves
Did gyre and gimble in the wabe;
All mimsy were the borogoves,
And the mome raths outgrabe.

just to let you know, I may have a mood-disorder, but I'm a far-cry from crazy, and I never, ever, ever do what you and Gerry have both accused me of doing: just making things up and pretending they are facts. I definately challenge the accepted version of history, but that's not the same as schizophrenic paranoia. Love ya, mom, peace,

::: NEWS :::

1) House members are expected to vote Wednesday (today) on sending articles of impeachment against President Bush to the Judiciary Committee. The 35 articles introduced by Dennis J. Kucinich, D-Ohio, on Monday are pressuring the Democratic Party to make good on a promise many of them made before the 2006 elections: to impeach! Just one week ago, ImpeachBush.org members flooded Judiciary Chairman John Conyers offices with the demand for impeachment during the National Call-In Day for Impeachment. We must continue to let Rep. Conyers and every other Congressperson know that the people demand action!

2) Calling it "a sworn duty" of Congress to act, U.S. Rep. Robert Wexler of Florida signed on yesterday to Dennis Kucinich's 35 Articles of Impeachment. "President Bush deliberately created a massive propaganda campaign to sell the war in Iraq to the American people and the charges detailed in this impeachment resolution indicate an unprecedented abuse of executive power," Wexler said in a statement.

3) At 1pm, June 11, members of Veterans for Peace will hold a news conference at the Capitol to display the 22,000 names they collected on a petition to impeach Bush, which they will deliver to the office of John Conyers, Chair of the House Judiciary Committee. VFP Vice-President Elliott Adams wrote, "Having taken an oath to defend the Constitution 'from all enemies foreign and domestic,' our members take the obligation to impeach George W. Bush most seriously. We must hold this administration accountable for waging a war of aggression against Iraq."

Subject Re: DELETED THREADS
[quote="benpadiah"]hey.

no I didn't delete them. I did move them around. I said I was doing this a couple weeks ago. I sent out two mass-emails to everyone (robot and human) on my 9000+ strong member-list. Then I made an announcement about it in the forum news thread on the forum. Here is that thread:

<http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=373&start=20> and here is the first of three specific posts about all this, the last of which is a cut-and-paste of the mass-email itself:

<http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?p=5869#5869>

Your threads were moved from the (now-defunct) IOBB2 "general discussion" forum when I removed all the "general discussion" of a non-IO related nature from that forum and made it into an "IO-discussion related topics only" forum. Some of the threads, therefore stayed there, while most were moved to the newly created "main forum" for general discussion of any off-topic nature. Most of the threads I moved to the NEXUS e-zine issue whose topic they pertained to most closely. As such, the "lion's share" of your own threads wound up in NEXUS 005, the "micro-conspiracy" issue of the NEXUS e-zine. Here is a link to that forum:

<http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewforum.php?f=40>

Perhaps if you used the search feature within the forums, or else the site-specific "google" search-engine I recently added to the front-page of www.benpadiah.com you would more easily be able to find your way around.

Also, I've told you before I don't like editing or removing any human-originating content from my forums. I also don't like anyone else being able to do that either. Most forum-specific mods, thus, cannot delete anyone's posts, even their own. I pretty much reserve that authority to myself alone. Also, and mostly thanks to you, I won't let any member edit their own posts either. I'm neither going to remove your posts from my forum, nor let you do so yourself.

Anywho, hope all's well with you. Peace.

btw, I thought I'd take this opportunity to make a peace-offering to THE AQUARIAN 1, who I've treated far too unfairly in the past, by not having the time to pursue some of his lines of research, rejecting others, and not watching any of the videos he'd posted. I apologise. I've gone back and watched all of the video-links he'd provided and have gained a much better vantage of where he was coming from then, in terms of the info he was aware of, as well as his real sources for some of the terms and theories he expressed. I admit that, some of these ideas, having now gone back and watched the videos he'd linked to, I can put together into a more comprehensive framework now than I could have before. Thus, I was pre-judiced and defensive when the jury should have still been out, that is, before a final judgement. In any event, I hope that THE AQUARIAN 1 can forgive me for being a big dick to him, because I was.

In any event, and as promised, here now may I present "publically" a thread-directory of those threads started by THE AQUARIAN 1 on my forum, and where on my forum they may now be found:

AQUARIAN 1's first post:

The watered-down, "fit-to-print" version is simple. I took acid, went out to the movies, freaked out and went home. I kept freaking out afterwards for around 6-months to a year, and ended up being institutionalised in a mental facility four times subsequently. That's the "official" story.

Here's some "un-official" facts. "ben Padiah" means two things: 1) "son of Righteousness" in Hebrew, the word "Padiah" lit. trans. as "Righteousness." It's interesting to do a quick search on the number of times the word "Righteousness" is used in the NT, and in what context. 2) it refers to the character "bar Pandera," a "false-Messiah" written of in various extent works of the early church fathers. "bar Pandera," meaning "son of Panther," was a contemporary of Jesus, born to a temple-prostitute and conceived of a Roman soldier. So, Yeshuah Ben Padiah is also, rightly, called "Jesus Bar Pandera." The son of Righteousness is the son of the Panther. Now the "birth-sign" of Jesus (given as that of Mithra, Dec.25th) was Capricorn, which forms a "grand-cross" (of "quadruplicities") with Libra, Aries and Cancer. However, due to precession, all of these signs "shift" every 2000 years. So, the sun-sign of Christ's birth, Capricorn, remains the same, however the "rising sign" changes one backwards on the usual progression. Capricorn changes to Sagittarius, Libra to Virgo, Cancer to Gemini and Aries to Pisces. Because the same thing happens every 2000 years, 2000 years ago, at the time of Christ, his own birth-sign, Capricorn, had only recently become the sign for the (given) date of his birth, Dec. 25th. Before that time, the rising signs corresponded to what the "sun-signs" are still set to today: Capricorn was Aquarius, Libra was Scorpio, Aries was Taurus, and Cancer was Leo. This is where the animisms for the seasons come from: the sun signs set to the aeon ending 2000 years ago: Leo the lion is summer, Scorpio the scorpion (expressed as an eagle) is autumn, Taurus the bull is spring, and Aquarius, the water-bearer, is winter. Of course, all of this only matters to anyone who cares about astrology. In 1999 I had begun studying astrology because of the "grand cross" between the signs of Capricorn, Aries, Libra and Cancer, because of the "love-triangle" I had recently been in with my best friend, Mike, and a young girl from Russia, named Irina. I was a Libra, Mike was a Cancer, Irina was an Aries and, of course, Jesus was a Capricorn. I was still studying all this in 1999, and did not have as complete a grasp on the mechanism of precession as I do now.

Here's some "official" facts: the Blair Witch Project stars three main characters, and was made mostly by them, with two other film-makers who never appear on camera in the film. The three on-camera characters, Joshua Leonard, Michael Williams and Heather Donahue, appeared subsequently on the cover of Newsweek, while the two behind-the-scenes film-makers, Daniel Myrick and Eduardo Sanchez, appeared on the cover of Time. The three main characters also subsequently did a spot at the MTV movie-awards with, if I'm not mistaken, Buddy Hackett, an obscure vaudevillian. On this spot, Heather had dyed her hair blonde, Mike had grown a beard, and Josh had short hair and no beard.

Here's some more "unofficial" facts: Irina's rare beauty comes from her unique genetics: she was born a blue-eyed brunette. She has since dyed her hair blonde. My friend Mike has since grown a beard. I have, of course, since shaved and cut my hair once or twice, but currently I still look like the character Joshua Leonard did in the Blair Witch Project. I look like a typical stoner, long-haired Hippie, that is, I look like a modern Jesus Christ. The actual physical similarity between Joshua Leonard and myself, aside from our both looking like a hippy-Jesus, began to be underscored for me watching the movie when they were in the motel room the night before entering the woods. His "slack" body-posture was actually one of my identifying features, and my friends often pointed out to me how lounged out in a slouch I was sitting, and Irina herself had pointed out how widely I kept my legs spread in specific. Before this point, it hadn't occurred to me to actively role-play the character on-screen. I was watching the movie as I had all the others I'd seen lately, like Eyes Wide Shut and the Matrix, both of which, since having seen Pi, I was completely in awe of and inspired by. However, seeing Josh sitting like that, I realised this was more than a movie about archetypes who I, myself, happened to resemble also. This was not about an "archetypal" love-triangle between Isis Osiris and Thoth (as was the Matrix: between Morpheus the Mason being Thoth, Neo the Chosen One being Horus-Osiris, and Trinity their bringer-together being Isis). This was a movie about me, my friend Mike and our mutual lover, Irina. This was not a passive experience I was having, I realised then, sitting in the theatre. This was an active experience. Not only had these archetypes been the same 4000 or 6000 years ago as they were 2000 years ago, they are the same even now and I, desiring to take on the role of world-saviour, Messiah, was suddenly becoming aware that my entire life had led up to that moment. I realised I was already by then thrust to the utmost of the psychic-pyramid (comprised of all minds combined), and, like the proto-typical Max Cohen, expected to address the experience itself by reciting then and there the "True Name of God." Interestingly enough, I happened to know the True Name of God. The tetragrammaton is one name of God, it has four letters. There are also 36, 42, 72 and 216 letter long names of God. Which is the "true one"? Well, Hell, who knows? But at the time I chose the 42 letter long one, comprised of the names of the ten sefirot combined. So, what I wanted to say then was:

"MalkuthYesodHodNetzachTiferethGevurahChesedBinahChockmahKether" only I didn't. I couldn't. I couldn't remember them all. So I got up to go out to my car to get my sketchbook, where I had all their names written down. As I got up, I looked up into the light of the projector, and cast my shadow across the screen, and thought, "don't do anything till I get back" as "loudly" as I could, being that thoughts are inaudibly silent. I went out to my car and dug through it, but couldn't find my sketchbook (even though it was in there, and I knew it), so I began to freak out. I drove to my dad's house, where I was living at the time, and looked for my sketchbook there, but didn't find it (because it really was out in the car all along). He asked me what I was doing, and said he thought I'd gone to the movies. I told him I'd done acid and was freaking out. He told me to lie down and we talked a little bit, I finally asked him if he'd ever been "led," to which he responded "I think you've taken alot of psychedelic drugs and need to lie down." So I laid down in my bed there, and tried to sleep (impossible on LSD) while, in the next room, my father and his common-law wife discussed whether or not masturbation was a homo-sexual act. The next morning hey were arguing about whether or not wanting to have anal sex meant my father was homosexual. I told them, still too high to tolerate listening to such tripe, as calmly as I could, "in every relationship, you have got to make compromises" (merely a complex in-joke with myself about my "birth" sign, Libra, the scales). Then I left and went to mom's house (where I live and am right now), and sat out back by the pool reading "The Enochian Magick of John Dee" and smoking. On the way to my dad's house, I remember hearing a voice in my mind say distinctly, "if you light that cigarette there will be no going back" meaning I'd continue to drive and not be able to return to the theatre in time to finish seeing the movie. In my mind I asked, "how would you know, who are you?" To which the voice from the starry night sky above replied, distinctly: "I am God, I am you." Then I lit the cigarette. For a month I tried to go back and see the rest of the movie. The first time I tried the cashier told me it was sold out. I bought a ticket for Amistad instead, and snuck into the theatre, only it was the wrong theatre I snuck into, and ended up walking out of American Beauty. A few weeks later I finally saw the whole movie all the way through to the end with my friend Ann Cooper. It wasn't until then I realised that Joshua Leonard, the character in the movie, disappeared from the screen immediately after I'd left the theatre.

More "official" facts: since it's release to immense critical acclaim (mostly due to its "innovative" exploitation of "guerilla" internet marketing) as well as astounding and unprecedented box-office earnings (staying in the expensive theatres for months), the Blair Witch movie has subsequently come to be thought of as the biggest mistake audiences ever made (it's the "most parodied" film "ever" according to certain polls), and is as much a sore-spot in our collective memory as 1980's clothing and hair fashion. Why? The answer is simple. Upon the astounding and unprecedented success of the first Blair Witch Project, the studio who'd purchased the original for US theatre-distribution rights came up with a dark idea: Make a sequel. Which they did. It flopped both financially and critically (I've never even seen it myself), and it turned 99% of the original film's fans against it. It was brilliant, as a black-op. It essentially erased the biggest hit of the summer of 1999, a year of some of the best movies made, both critically and financially, from history. It's like those black frames in the 9-11 footage right when the plane would hit the second tower. In any event, the actors (Josh, Mike and Heather) have almost faded into complete obscurity (Heather having starred in Steven Spielberg's Sci-Fi serial "Taken" most notably), while their betrayal by the film studio left the other film-makers nearly destitute, despite it being impossible to walk into any used-VHS store in the US and not find a copy of their movie. And it is their movie. They own it. They have had to save up money to buy the rights back, but they have negotiated and, I hope, agreed with the studio to buy back the rights when the studio's copyright on the film expires (in 2009, ten years after it's release). In any event, they are not legally allowed to franchise the "world" the Blair Witch was set in unless they own the rights. Personally, I hope they will explain some of the events in the film (cross-referenced with their Sci-Fi channel mockumentary, "Sticks and Stones") such as how the film-cannisters appeared to have been buried "for years" when they were found less than six months later. Personally, I refused all along to accept the idea that the trio of campers bodies were really found, as I believe was the premise of the second movie. I have been casting some random pearls on the fan-forums moderated by friends of the film-makers about time-travel. I can only pray I've inspired them, but I have to admit I've never blabbed this entire story to anyone on that board.

More "Un-Official" reality: it is impossible to have shot the movie on video-transferred-to-film, distributed it to theatres nationally and world-wide, and for this film itself to be showing to an audience, at the exact same time as anyone in that audience is mentally-controlling the characters on the screen. So, when all these events align such that this can seem, convincingly, to occur, then it can be argued that time itself was bent by their doing so. Now this is nothing new (attribute it to the changeable calendar's arbitrary year "zero"), and it can be argued happens naturally every 2000 years or so. I do not want to believe that this is what occurred however. So since 1999 I have not watched the Blair Witch Project, and have, instead, studied it from every other angle. While Josh, Mike and Heather somehow identically doubled me, Mike and Irina, the other two film-makers, Daniel Myrick and Eduardo Sanchez, resembled (again both in monicker AND appearance) two other friends of mine (one of whom considered me his "enemy," the other of whom at that time was into heroin), Rick and Enrico. Of course none of this is "spooky" to anyone besides me, in the same way as would the similtudes between the assassinations of Lincoln and Kennedy be to a novice conspiracy theorist. It would actually be "spookier" to hear me explain the "stick men" in the movie were voodoo glamours representing the constellations, and that the "stone piles" represented the pyramids. Likewise, Josh was playing the archetypal part of Jesus, Heather of Isis or Mary Magdalene, but more importantly, Sophia or Eve, and Mike, of course, as the archetypal Marduk-Adam, the "red-clay" moulded into the "common-man," filling up all the civil roles (even soldiers) like smelted metal in a press. And our entire generation owns a copy of this movie, and no one ever watches it, and no one has a clue why they even have a copy of it still. It's a trigger now, used to run "Janus-Alex call-back" end-times codes, to "awaken the sleeper-agents," much like "Catcher in the Rye" was used in MK-Ultra.

In any event, I've gone on long enough for now. It's 12:45 here and I doubt you'll get to read this tonight anyway. Maybe I'll go post some on the BWP pro-boards. Maybe I should drink this vodka I've been holding for two weeks. Maybe not. Anyway, Jeremy, I hope you're well and that all is well for you. Positive karma is given, and can neither be faked nor earned. As I say, I hope all's well for you, and to hear back from you as soon as you can. Peace.

The media, in my opinion, is a separate issue from the psychic effects of acid. The media is a subset of reality. When you take acid, all reality becomes soft, malleable, the laws of space and time (seem to) become flexible, the "veil" of the "fabric" of our continuum seems to wear thread-bare. I've only experienced this effect in one other event: the loss of my virginity. At that time, the walls of the room appeared to be breathing, like the surging waves of falling water. Later, on acid, this experience proved to be applicable to all the sights and sounds around me, with reality itself seeming to bow low before the might of my will. The radio-hosts were narrating my thoughts out-loud as I pulled into the theatre. The theatre itself was Noah's Ark, the characters on screen the Nefilim giants. All of this is natural, mind you, however LSD turns the volume up. It increases the natural projections we make on our surrounding reality in potency and scale. Everything seems extremely symbolic, and paranoia can set in if you fear feeling like the centre of attention. This is how the pyschic conspiracy functions too: the one whose mental volume is the "most high" (who has the highest "ratings" in the Enochian Communication System) leads the flock, while everyone else willingly takes a knee before them. I call the experience of being the "most high" wearing Kether, the global "crown of thorns" of the planetary satellite telecommunications media. To my mind, "Kether" is like the "Construct" in the Matrix, a "loading program" where all that appears is our residual-self-image and whatever we load.

But I don't think it was the LSD that caused my experience with the Blair Witch Project. LSD is a common drug, however such an alignment of coincidences and consequences as occurred regarding this film (first it's massive peak in popularity, followed by a massive crash) was unique for exterior reasons. The alignment of the seven planets on May 5th, 2000 was the reason the Gregorian calendar was fixed to the year zero it was, as well as the peak of the sunspot cycle between then and 2012. These are, in my opinion, more likely the cause for the unique events surrounding the film itself, while LSD can only account for my perception of this.T

he handling of the fates of the characters, considering them as archetypal symbols for primal psychological states, is integral to understanding why they were where they were when they were. At the end of the first movie, Josh is heard yelling (still alive), Mike is against the wall (still alive), and Heather is knocked down (still alive). The difference between the popular, open-ended original and the corporate-propaganda sequel is that, in the first, their bodies were not found, and in the second, they were. Now think about this. The film was released in 1999, and supposedly was filmed in 1994. If the second film was set in 1994, it would contradict their not having been found in 1999, and if set in 1999, would have to explain why they were not found until 1999. At the end of the first film, the three main characters were all still alive. They were in a house. Two were in the basement, one was upstairs. Thus, Josh, upstairs, represents spirit (above), Heather, descending the stairs to the basement, represents soul (the Shekinah), and Mike, in the basement facing the wall (as in Plato's proverbial cave) represents the material of our mind, the brain and our bodies, itself. However, as soon as you assume the characters from the first-film are not archetypal, but are merely stereo-typical "disposable teens," then you will see the second film, in which they are all dead, as following naturally from the end of the first, in which they were "about to" die. Now, my taking LSD, in my opinion, can't account for this fact regarding this movie.

No, it's been my experience that we are projecting psychically all the time, but that usually it occurs to us to recognise this fact only as casual coincidences, and that everything is always archetypal, but that it is more convenient for us to simply filter this fact out of our ordinary level of perception. As I say, acid turns the volume of our perception up, it makes us hyper-aware of everything in our surroundings, particularly making visible to our minds the invisible gossamer strands of inter-connectivity between and underlying all reality, the so-called "fabric" of the essence of all our universe. It does not make these function, they function autonomically. It makes them self-aware. However even this does not necessarily occur to us because of LSD. It is always occurring naturally anyway, whether we are aware of it or not. LSD increases our awareness of the otherwise invisible, and this may encourage us to assert our will over the unknown, however it is the choice we make to allow ourselves to become more aware of the nature of our metaphysical reality in the first place that is the will-power of the universe to become self-aware.

sorry man, I sense this topic may be boring you, or else rubbing a raw nerve the wrong way. It's curious to me we have finally found something specific to disagree about, and I wonder if this may correspond (as the google-ads suggest, astrologically) to your straying from a more strict order for the art, and your frustration with finding attributes for Belphegor. Belphegor should be an easier one to depict regarding specific traits than even Adramelech, whose traits were less exact.

I do however want to continue discussing this. I might try to phrase it in terms of Gnosticism and Theism in order to access the distinction of our difference on this issue. I re-assert: I do not believe my experience regarding the Blair Witch Project film was the result of LSD. Again, it is my experience and learning from studying literature on the topic that LSD is a drug used to expand perception, and that this alone does not yield the ability, inclination nor capacity to control the "higher" reality that is usually invisible to our perception. For example, a spider on mescaline weaves a very random and disoriented web. A spider on LSD will weave a web that is unusually ornate, but also exactly symmetrical. The pattern the spider recognises on LSD may be unique to its perception, but it is not LSD that enables the spider to express this perception. What I'm about to discuss is the method by which the mind "weaves its web" using the "gossamer strands of interconnectivity that invisibly underly all reality." I know of this from the LSD-related literature I've read, however it should be noted that this information can be verified independently of LSD-use or -research.

The mind functions on a series of levels. It usually operates on the four-interior levels, corresponding to the four-forces below the level of our perception. These four levels correspond to the electro-chemical, the cellular-nuclear, the atomic and the quantum. On the electro-chemical we experience emotions, and on the cellular-nuclear we store memories. On the atomic level thoughts occur relative to our active will, and on the quantum level is our passive perception. Now, the electro-chemical we can associate with sentience, the cellular-nuclear level with autonomic life, the atomic-thought level with telepathy and the quantum-perception level with telekinesis, however we must also realise that each level depends on the level below it already existing in order for us to have evolved from it to the subsequent level or stage of mental-consciousness. This implies there may be a fifth stage above the electro-chemical to which we have not yet evolved, but it also, and more importantly, implies a fifth stage that existed prior to the fourth or lowest stage now known for our consciousness, the quantum-level. So, while the cybernetic computing stage may follow the electro-chemical, it is definite that a sub-quantum level must exist even more universally ubiquitous (ie. contained within a greater-scale universal set) than quanta. This, I've proposed elsewhere more thoroughly, is the "greater" light of tachyons, the "superluminal" (faster-than-light) particles that, by moving the opposite direction over time, cause the solely attractive force, gravity, to occur within our local universe. Tachyons move from the future to the past, are smaller than photons (which are massless) and pre-existed the "big bang" and the division of the four-forces. This fifth-force allows the mental-action of clairvoyance, the ability to see the future.

Because our concept of self, the so-called Ego, is mostly distracted by the daily necessities of continuing the survival of our biological-level by applying our active-knowledge faculty, it is rare that we delve deeper into the memories of the biological-level, let alone seek thereby to better understand the essence of our self-awareness, the so-called "consciousness." However, if we do access what Tim Leary termed our "genetic memory," we will be able to see the otherwise invisible quantum connections, and, just as if we apply our atomic-scale thoughts to our cellular DNA we can "mutate" our genes (ie. customise our personal preferences for which traits we wish to express, what Leary called "metaprogramming"), by applying our atomic-scale thoughts to our surrounding environment on a quantum level, we can achieve a feeling of "one-ness" or "same-ness" of substance with the entire universe. While all of this can be triggered or first-activated by different kinds of drugs, ultimately no chemical substance can accomplish the same effect on our physical environment (even by controlling our actions) as our own will-power can by thinking-change on it. The electro-chemical trickles down to the bio-cellular, the bio-cellular to the atomic-thought, but only the atomic-thought itself trickles down to the quantum-level, and thus, only the quantum to the superluminal sub-quantum.

Between each of these levels is a similar "veil" that prevents or inhibits the over-processing by the level above of data and sensory stimuli from the level below it. Just as the level between atomic-thought and emotional-chemical necessitates both be directed toward the survival of the bio-cellular level between them, and this draws down a "veil" between each of these levels by limiting overall perception to only what is necessary to preservation of this action of awareness, so too between the atomic-thought level and the sub-quantum fore-sight or prophetic-level lies the "veil" or level of quantum-perception, acting to delimit the interface between these other two levels, divided by it, and thus causes the sensation of the need to actively-maintain and preserve the quantum-level in order for it to continue to exist.

Of course, inside of our brains, thoughts and perception interact dynamically, more-or-less along the lines I've described. However, we are supposed to believe, three inches away from our thalamus, beyond the skull and before our eyes, no such interaction occurs. In other words, inside our brains, our thoughts are alive, however in the world around us, only other beings like us think, only beings on earth live, and only earth in all the universe is home to such beings.

However, if we lift the "veil" between these levels, we find that thoughts exist outside our skulls, that we experience these as they pass through us, and that the entire universe itself is one big organism whose substance is comprised of these invisible thoughts. Between what we know inside our skulls, these thoughts connect all things as invisible "webs" of interconnectivity, synchronicity, etc.

Now, why is all this important, and what does any of it have to do with my dropping LSD and watching a movie?

LSD can make the electro-chemical level self-aware. This overpowers the veil between the electro-chemical and the atomic-thought level, the veil of cellular-DNA. However, as I've said, the chemical of LSD cannot, I repeat, cannot, alter the quantum-fabric of existence, even by controlling our actions. LSD, in itself, is a chemical, and as such, is not conscious. The electro-chemicals of our brains and nervous system (neurotransmitters) bond with the LSD-chemical molecule. This allows our neuro-transmitters to become aware of their environmental surroundings (the nervous-system), as well as their individual body-vessels (the nerve-cells containing DNA). But this can only allow, and does not ever force, other such "veils" between these "levels" to be lifted. The union of LSD and serotonin may, indeed, give "birth" to a new form of living-organism, a form of electro-chemical life combining both their traits. However, this new form of living-organism does not possess sentience in itself. Only in combination with all the other levels inside our skulls (or a petri dish) can sentience occur, the complete self-awareness we experience that unifies all these four-forces based-levels I've been describing. In short, outside our brains, thoughts exist, but are not self-aware. Inside our brains, thoughts become self-aware because of their combination with similar levels or evolved stages of perception. Likewise, inside our brains, the electro-chemical conductions may be self-aware, however, removed from this environment, we cannot say any single chemical-substance itself is.

anti-tobacco special-interest groups, taxation and legislation.

Those of us who have been alive long enough to learn how our government works know and will gladly tell you the majority of bills proposed to congress for legislation before being passed before executives for enactment as laws are not proposed by individuals nor do they reflect the interest of individuals. They are proposed by so-called "special-interest groups" and reflect their interests and the financial interests of their members. For example, many of us are aware of the "special-interest groups" for the arms-industry, such as Boeing, Lockheed-Martin, Bell, Sandia, Carylisle, etc. Fewer are as informed regarding other "special-interest groups," who lobby for a wide variety of other social-movements and causes. One of these such "special-interest groups" is the "American Legacy Foundation."

American Legacy is responsible for funding the "Truth" television advertising campaign, and is paid for largely by tobacco companies as part of the settlement of a law-suit brought against them by 46 state Attorney-Generals. In short, ALF is funded by tobacco companies and it's purpose, although stated as "helping users quit tobacco" is actually to increase public pressure for higher taxation of their product. In the 2007 report, titled "Ending the Tobacco Problem: A Blueprint for the Nation," the National Academies "Institute of Medicine" reported: "the committee notes that the payments from the Master Settlement Agreement are not likely to be a reliable source of funding in most states, so states should, by statute, reserve a certain percentage of their revenues from tobacco excise taxes to pay for tobacco-control programs." (source: http://www.americanlegacy.org/PDFPublications/Tobacco\_report\_brief\_states\_and\_local\_govt.pdf) In short, ALF sponsored the IOM to conduct a study "finding" states should pay for tobacco-control programs and education themselves with taxes on tobacco.

Florida's 33 cent per pack tax (compared to a national average of 99 cents) and its lenient enforcement of 1990's anti-public smoking legislation makes us a primary target for this "anti-tobacco," tobacco-funded "special-interest group" who are now, via the "Florida Tobacco Education and Use Prevention Advisory Council" under the Florida State surgeon-general, funelling funds into local advertising campaigns, such as this one, supposedly encouraging people not to smoke, but really only being used to put political pressure on legislators to increase taxes to pay for unnecessary social-programs and further legislation that limits our personal-liberties when in public.

In short, the ALF and other pro-tobacco special-interest groups are the ones funding this ad campaign, and not in order to prommote the anti-tobacco / anti-smoking cause, but only to encourage state-taxation and state-funded programs in order to releive the tobacco companies of having to pay for such themselves. Every time you show your support for the anti-tobacco cause on this website, "Qwitter" or "TobaccoFreeFlorida.com" you are putting more money into the pockets of big-tobacco and private-companies to lobby for increased taxes.

Making people pay more and telling them they aren't allowed to smoke in public can be demonstrated to statistically reduce the rate of smoking to the same extent that cancer as a cause of death can be demonstrated to reduce the same statistical population of smokers. If the tobacco companies themselves are the ones funding both, the carinogens added to tobacco AND the studies "proving" increased taxes and anti-smoking legislation reduce overall risk, one should stop to wonder what their real motive is? That, at least, is obvious. Big tobacco is out to maximize profits as much as possible. Why should they have to pay for ads that would hurt their own sales? Why not just get the local, state and federal goverments to foot that bill instead?

I hope you all have found this post useful, and will not be suckered into supporting "TobaccoFreeFlorida" simply because you support the anti-tobacco / anti-smoking cause. Thanks for your time, and, if you'll excuse me, I'm off for an additive-free American Spirit.

-benpadiah

no, I think this topic is definately coming at you sideways, and I want to explore why. See, you keep trying to chalk it all up to a drug-trip. I've eaten ALOT of acid. That has happened to me once. No, a drug-trip would more likely be my driving to Indiana to surprise Irina. That's "coming down" from a trip. But I refuse to believe that the impact I had on a film is simply a chemically-induced perceptual "peak experience."

A) it's too convenient. Anyone wishing to discredit me can pigeon-hole my entire life's work as the lunatic ravings of a pot-head, an acid-eater, a web-geek, an angry loner, conspriacy theorist, etc. if they want. That's their God-given Right. It's also my right to laugh my ass off to the bank since I know that isn't true.

B) it's doesn't fit the facts. No matter how you slice it, that cheese stinks. Look, imagine I'd gone to the theatre and not eaten acid. Would the movie have been the same? We have to say YES. However, because I ate acid, I left the theatre. So, would Josh still have disappeared if I hadn't left the theatre? We would also have to say YES. So would reality have gone on to this same present moment had I not even seen the movie? Ultimately yes. However we cannot conclusively say that, because I left the theatre, Josh disappeared.

What it comes down to is this: if the entire story-arch of the movie was, as we must accept it was, pre-scripted, then why would Josh have disappeared only AFTER I left?

Here is my thesis: the mind can access the future, can perceive the data pulsed on tachyons, can apprehend such visions from the future, and we can act on this knowledge.

Is this what I did?

Yes and no.

I acted on impulse because only on an unconscious level was I aware of the inevitable ending: once lost in the woods, there would be no coming back. I had seen the "Sticks and Stones" sci-fi channel mockumentary establishing this idea a week before going to the theatre. My friend John, who worked at a theatre, had even accidentally let slip the ending in front of me before I'd seen it. But I didn't stay to see the end. In fact, I was unaware for a month that Josh had disappeared only after I'd left the theatre. Before then, it wouldn't have occurred to me to wonder who would have disappeared first. For all I knew, they all died at the end. And, for all movie execs want us to believe, they may as well have.

Therefore:

C) it is of no special occurrence I was hallucinating and thought I had to recite the true name of God. Our perceptions are often wrong, and easily confused. Likewise, it is of no special occurrence that Josh disappeared in the film. This was entirely, as I said, "pre-scripted," and no matter how you slice it, it couldn't have happened any other way than it did. What is of "special occurrence" is that I left the theatre before Josh disappeared. This is a "special occurrence" because it cannot be explained by the previous two facts (that I was tripping, or that the movie was pre-shot) and therefore can only be explained by resorting to an alternative to either, such as the perception of tachyons as an instinctual awareness of the future, regardless of how "sticky" such an alternative explanation may seem to be.

To sum this all up, J, there is no point even trying to argue an alternative viewpoint to the one I know is true, my own, regardless of how I express that, even if what I say appears to contradict itself. Do I see this as a psychic event? A phenomenon of genetic mutation? No. I see it as a miracle of God. The "eye of providence" peaking through at me from the other side of the veil. This "miracle" was accomplished, on man's side of this "veil," by complex magick of a semi-ceremonial nature. It was not something done to my mind by a drug. It was something I did to reality using magick.

Of course, this may seem like a cheap shrink cop-out: I simply can't cope with the reality (that it was all because of the drug), so I invent my own (wherein it was all because of me). But again and again and again I assert it was not the drug, it was me. I have studied ritual and ceremonial magick, from Barret and Agrippa to Levi, Mathers, Crowley and Pike. I know all about it. I have recommended techniques for friends who have subsequently progressed in Masonry and other occult orders. I can explain intricate details about the traditional mechanisms of accomplishing the exact effects I experienced that night. It wasn't LSD. In this case, at least, LSD may as well have been a placebo.

And if I'm nuts, I'm one in a long and illustrious strain of other lunatics who know the truth about reality. Such "knowledge" is the Gnosis. And you've looked around my site; you know yourself I am no sheep in wolf's clothing about my knowledge of Gnosticism, metaphysics and magick. I will assert until the day I die, to anyone who will listen, I may have been tripping; but explain to me how I knew to leave before the character similar to me onscreen disappeared? It is too great a coincidence to explain rationally.

I also will rail until the day I die against theism. All writers describing the type of experience I created for myself have been wrong. God is not distant, but all-permeating, and there is no other "veil" than what we imagine true for our own minds. The idea of slapping the hand of God on the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel (from the film "Six Degrees of Separation," Will Smith's only good movie) is only an accurate description for a "peak experience" on acid, but falls far short of the Gnosis of knowing how to cause such an event to occur, with or without recreational experience-enhancing substances.

Theism, the "belief" in God, is what we have before we awaken to the Gnosis, the "knowledge" of God. I directly experienced the presence of God. Granted I copped out and left since I was on acid. But had I stayed, had I recited the true name, would I not have become God? Of course, this would have left me a drooling looney in a nut-house, as it did for a while, however in the end, I am no more nor less God than anyone, and moreso by my proximity to the mechanism by which to liberate theists. Acid, again, in this case may as well be a placebo. It is neither the key nor the gateway anymore so than paper money.

Sorry to go on and on about this, but I do believe it warrants being said, if only "for the record." Plus I re-upped a double-dime of regs, so I'm feeling creative. My friend Mike's surprise birthday party is this Saturday. That night I'm driving out-of-town to a show with Damien. I only hope Irina isn't at Mike's party. I don't think I'm going to end up going. Anyway, peace, J, sorry again for the rant. Hope all's well.

As I said, the control (by those who know how to do so) of the appearance of these seeming necessities determines the degree to which others, and thus, later, they themselves, will benefit or not from the experience of existing in physical reality. In short, our deeds determine our rewards, both here and in the afterlife. If we are unsatisfied in ourselves, it is harder for us to supercede the limitations of expectations placed on us by others, let alone to break the law of gravity and travel faster than light.

If we preach a superstition that supposedly teaches a moral lesson, it is considered a "good" deed by those who prosper in material reality because it makes the masses "tranquil" and calms the constitution of the body politic. However, obviously, whether preachers, lawyers, bankers and politicians, let alone celebrities, all ascend to the extent they succeed in this life when they die or not is irrelevant to the soul that perceives its existence as originating, or as existing in, or as returning to, the realm above where no such hypocritical concealments, no liars and no myths, could ever escape the sight of justice.

In other words, if we judge ourselves at the moment of our death, and ascend into paradise to the extent we remain tranquil about our own verdict, then we are all equally endowed with the capacity for infinitude in potential, and can only hope to achieve transcendence from the bonds of material reality itself by allowing ourselves to be satisfied in our own existence while alive. However, as I have said, and will say again now, this experience can be accomplished mentally while physically alive no less so than by the soul at the moment of death. By allowing ourselves to be satisfied with ourselves, to feel safe enough to relax, and to feel "tranquil," we can practise the same sensation in life as we would desire to experience for all eternity.

But if we reject tranquility and embrace agony, we ascend to the same end. If we reject good and embrace evil, we still die. Just so, no matter how tranquil or agonised, how excited or calm, how passionate or serene one is in life is one's own to determine, but how one dies is not.

I'm trying to wedge open the difference between us. I think making such a distinction is important. Otherwise, our opinions would be too identical, and objectivity would fade. If you can, as you have demonstrated, take criticism, but I cannot, as I've demonstrated, offer any due to similitude of opinions, then when we do have an accidental disagreement later, we might not be prepared for such, not being aware of any potential differences. Also, I'm an ass-hole, and yes, what I do for a living is assume I am the all-mighty, and then talk about myself. It's great fun, but the pay's shit. So, please, indulge me a moment more on this topic if you will, since I find it a pivotal one for me, and the deepest confession I can make. Honestly though, I am only trying to pick at imaginary differences in order to test your patience with me, so if you do get bored or annoyed, just say so, I'll lay off it.

Now, back to the Blair Witch Project. Let me begin by saying, as a theist, you must believe in the idea of a soul, what I, as a Gnostic, would call our aura. This soul, all theists claim, leaves the body at death, but lives on after the body has died. So, what is the behaviour of this soul like while it inhabits the body? We could describe it's presence as the essential substance of our mind itself, our ability to think, the capacity to recognise we exist, consciousness, etc. So, if the living soul is consciousness itself, how can we best know of and understand this consciousness while we are alive? It is clear that by drugs, sex, staying awake too long, etc. can distort the perception, and this we call expansion of awareness of the subject of consciousness, or simply put, "by distorting the senses we expand the consciousness." Whether or not this statement is true is irrelevant to the practise of it by people, and therefore we have to accept the distortion to the senses will occur (as much as illness, hunger, sleep, death, etc.) and so we must form some opinion or other relative to it.

In short, if the mind is a living soul, then when our senses are distorted, our perception and awareness of our consciousness by our mind is likewise affected, such that the fevers of the mind are the afflictions to the body of our own soul. If we accept this affect as inevitable or unavoidable, then we must heed the advice given by those who practise its experience if we wish to weather this eventuality ourselves. We are promised guidance by many on this topic; all are shamans, none insincere, but all are fakirs, on their own path, and none should be followed to the exclusion of one's own capacity to explore. Therefore, whether we achieve a distortion to our sense-perception via drugs, sex, worship, blood-offering, etc. is ultimately irrelevant relative to the data recorded by previous "psychonauts" who have travelled this "invisible landscape" before, and to learn how to control our own fate as much as possible from studying their previous destinies. However we can neither avoid our own fate, nor ignore our historical predecessors; to exclude either means death.

Now, all scholars on this matter agree: when the soul leaves the body it enters the realm of "limbo" that is, a realm where our own perception immediately determines whether we will experience our environment as Paradiso or Inferno. Thus, the mind makes real its own interior composure as the entirety of its exterior environment, and, some assert, this lasts for "eternity," though many assert that even this condition of existence can only last so long as there exists a medium in which for it to do so, and that this medium itself cannot out-live God, or his ability to destroy his Creation.

Thus, the soul-mind is capable of the same effect (projection) while alive in the material realm of matter. We understand the mind can be used to cause the sudden appearance ("out of nowhere") of otherwise inexplicable objects, such as in the mis-understanding of coincidence called Synchronicity, however we do not yet grasp the full implications of our ability to, without punishment by the universal laws of physics nor the apparitions of superstition (such as irony, taxes, etc.), make matter appear out of nowhere using only our minds. This is called "manifestation."

We understand this happens to a limited degree all the time. When we alter our sense perception, we become hyper-aware of it. When we practise altering our sense-perception over prolonged periods of time, we can suspend ourselves from mundane reality's implied necessities long enough to learn not only their real source(s), but how to control the appearances of such in order best to benefit whom and what we choose. Some people call this "intelligence," but I call it telepathy. Telepathy (reading a person's mind) is only one step down from telekinesis (writing a person's mind by projecting thoughts onto their brains, or mentally manipulating any other form of material object).

It is on this point, that is, not the human capacity for such, but the morality (superstitious fear of supernatural punishment, either via irony, or false deities such as time, taxes, death, etc.) or ethics (the who, what, when, where, why, how, etc. of applying this method) of instantaneous mental manifestation of matter, that theists and Gnostics have debated (theists by warfare, Gnostics by rhetoric) for all the aeons since the first homo sapien. I'll come back to this point in a moment. First, before I seem too tangential, allow me to return for a moment to the "invisible landscape" of mental "projection."

The "invisible landscape" of perception that overlays physically tangible reality has certain characteristics within the borders to which it has yet been perceived. These characteristics, the "invisible terrain," describe that the passage of time as gravity through the universe causes, like the inertia of a person in an elevator moving upwards, the sensation of weight, ageing and struggle. Thus, the necessary experiences caused by our existing within this material universe implies the existence of a "higher" realm than the tangible, material universe wherein these sorts of experiences are no longer necessary. Everytime anyone complains things aren't "good enough," it betrays the excellence of the human spirit to aspire to realms beyond the imagination of any otherwise "inanimate" patterns of matter-energy. Such defines our singular "human spirit," and thus our "individual souls," and even explains the superstition of a "Messiah" as the manifestation of the "genius" of all mankind as leader.

In short, in the "invisible landscape" up is up, down is down, only each, infinitely so, while what is around us remains the same, aside from our ability to perceive this "invisible landscape" of the soul (the "mind's eye," that "window looking in on the soul" through which a life examines itself) determining the extent to which we can mentally assert our own will over it. Most of us imagine ourselves in this life as hovering as "high" as no more than a few feet above our bodies, and recognise the directions "up" as a "tunnel of light," and "down" as a "gathering gloom," but most still refuse to recognise these are only exits out of our material existence, leading to the same realm beyond and entirely surrounding, as well as, to a lesser level, permeating it. This "higher" realm is accessible to us while alive as well, and, as well as that, we can also travel during any out-of-body experience (such as sleep, meditation, day-dreaming, etc.) throughout the entire material universe and rightly perceive and understand exactly accurately its simultaneous workings at every scale.

The "higher" "up" you go, the closer, supposedly, you get toward "God," while the "lower" "down" you go, the closer, supposedly, you get toward "Satan," whom are nothing more than superstitious, imaginary personifications of "good" and "evil," which are, themselves, likewise only conditions of consciousness, the substance of the soul-mind. If the soul-mind is tranquil, it is said to be "good." If the soul-mind is agonised, it is said to be "bad." However, the soul-mind, in truth, does not even exist in the same sense of experience as the flesh that experiences pleasure or pain. For at the "highest highs" and the "lowest lows," the soul-mind is the same substance, and is, therefore, both at once. Within material existence there are obviously varying degrees of such types of experience, and we do see the common denominator between the two extremes is their level of excitation. However, the realm outside of material existence, which also invisibly overlaps it and, to a lesser extent, entirely permeates it is not necessarily governed by these same principles.

To return to that age-old distinction between a theist and a gnostic: a theist would say they "believe" in God, and a Gnostic would say they do not "know." But this is a subtle distinction: a gnostic is only an advanced theist. A Gnostic knows theists too well to trust them immediately with the whole truth. So we say, we do not "know." But what was the Socratic definition of Wisdom? To know we know nothing. And is not wisdom greater than knowledge, as like a tree a seed? In truth, it is the theist who does not know (they do not even know that they do not know, they are so duped; rather they will not admit they do not know, and claim instead of "wisdom" the superiority of "belief" to "knowledge"), yet only the Gnostic knows the truth about what a theist merely "believes." What is it a Gnostic knows a theist doesn't? A Gnostic knows the truth about the myth of God, because to be a Gnostic is to be a QBLHist (a form of book-learned, craft-skilled mystic), because QBLH is the science of the study of God. While theists have blind "faith" alone to satisfy themselves as to His existence, a QBLHist has studied the entirety of historical literature on the subject necessary to be advanced to become a Gnostic. Therefore, when a Gnostic is asked if they "believe" in God, they answer "I do not know," however, if questioned, "what is the nature of God," they would likely gladly give you a complex QBLHistic explanation. So, in truth, the Gnostic DOES "know" that God DOES exist, because they understand the nature of the universe, however, because they understand the nature of the universe, they wisely choose to lie about whether or not they "believe" that He exists.

From the theists' point of view, the "mystery" of the existence or non-existence of God is "ineffable," and if anyone has admitted to studying QBLH, since the beginning of the "vogue" idea of "Judeo-Christianity" replacing "Rome" as the conquerors of European "pagans," they have been burned for sorcery; anyone who confessed to being able to make observations of planets through telescopes was early on imprisoned, and even those of us now who still do not accept the supposedly Jewish "universal" God as being the progenitor of the messiah, who was then murdered by jealous humanity (some 2000 years ago already) in order to prove the point that God dwells within us all, are brain-washed into calling goyim Romans proselyte Christians. Even the vocabulary of a theist has been evangelised.

So what is the nature of God known to a Gnostic that is unknown to a theist? There are two most important true things one must know to advance from theism to Gnosticism: 1) the God who created material reality and whose native home is the realm beyond it is accessible by our consciousness; 2) our consciousness and that of God are one and the same. While the implications raised in the mind of a theist by the first statement are moral in nature (should we act on this?), the ultimate extent of the second line of reasoning is much more unsettling to their notion of existence as being the experience of an exterior environment as an individual.

To theists, the highest individual is God. This is meant to be taken two ways, in a broken reflection of the two Gnostic assertions: 1) God is an individual like one's self, however he is simply the "Most High," whom can only be asymptotically approached, but because He is an individual, never replaced by the consciousness of any other individual. The implication of this is that the "ego" dies, the self "dissolves into oneness with the mind of God." 2) if an individual does get "higher" in knowledge, understanding, wisdom and consciousness than anyone known to have lived before them, they thus become the Messiah, leader of humanity, the manifestation of God on earth.

Now, whether you embrace a theistic perspective or a gnostic perspective on the facts I've presented thus far regarding my experience with the Blair Witch Project is important. Whether you are reading about what happened to me and thinking like a Gnostic or a theist is important. If you're thinking like a Gnostic, you'll be thinking of God as the mighty circumnavigator, measuring the world's circumference in the crux of a grand compass. He must exist either at the edge of or just beyond what is known about the nature of his manifestation. If you are thinking like a theist, you will not see God as alive now as a mortal, but as beyond an unknown barrier dividing us from knowledge of his true nature. But you don't need me to tell you about what we're all within already.

When one "God" dies, another takes his place. We used to be called "prophets," earlier "elders," previously we were "priest-kings," then, separated from our proper thrones, we became "Gnostics" and the students of QBLH. We've been the same person all along. That person has been me, and still is, and will continue to be until my own circumferential expansion of universal consciousness is, like a high-tide mark by a worse flood, surpassed by the next so bold "psychonaut" to accomplish such a magickal feat as the Blair Witch Project, my very first attempt at Magick, that is, the acting out of self God-hood. I remain around that same level, that same "height," still, patiently waiting to see what effect my death will actually have on me, and if I would even recognise it had happened were it to have already occurred. But God? God and death are separate issues, to my mind. That, by the way, is indicative of a Gnostic.

So, what is Gnosticism; why is it so great I keep bragging about it and putting down theism? What does it have to do with the Blair Witch Project? Nothing, unless you look for it, because that's what Gnosticism is: squinting as you focus in, blood in the milk, and the pupils dilating.

Gnosticism is many things, but nothing not already known. It taught, 2000 years ago, before its suppression by the Catholic Church, of there being two heads of God: one was named YHVH, one Elohim, however, by that time, the term Elohim had already come to replace the earlier name Adonai. These were the two terms used for God throughout the Torah that had been codified up to that point. YHVH is translated "God" in English, while Adonai or Elohim is translated as "Lord" or "my Lord." It is now believed two scribes had been given the job of transcribing the traditionally oral narrative of their Holy book. One was "J" the Jehovahist, who transcribed the YHVH sections, while the other is called "Q," the Elohimist, who transcribed the parts originally called "Adonai." Like these twin halves combining in union, the tetragrammaton, YHVH, are merely the extrapolated vowels from the title "Adonai," such that they re-interpolate to form the combined title-name, AHDVNHAY, for the combined role of priest-king, represented in their literature as the "dual-headed" God. Later, Christian Cabalists changed these ideas to equate them with the dual Satan and Molech reigning over the damned ones called "Thaumiel," or double-headed ones.

This explains the Gemini aeon's aspect. However the Gnostics taught far more than this as well. Leading up to the year zero, they taught of Ialdabaoth the blind, who was the first created son of Sophia, who was considered at that time the wife of God, our universal Creator. They depicted Ialdabaoth to the theists of the time as Abraxas, with snakes for legs, the body of a hog and the head of a rooster. These are actually the same three beasts used by modern and ancient Buddhists to depict the three essential motivators, equivalent to salt, sulphur and mercury in European Alchemy. While Buddhists orient them in a circle, one chasing the next, the Gnostics oriented them as an upright gradient, with sulphur atop salt atop mercury, representing the form of the twin-headed entity turned upside down.

Around the year zero, the Gnostics, who followed the Jehovahist scribe, split from the Elohimists, later called "theists," the self-proclaiming Roman goyim "Universalist Judeo-Christians," who followed the scribe the Gospels called James the Just, the twin-brother of Jesus Christ. James, called John the Baptist by his own followers, called Thomas by Gnostics and called Judas the Righteous Teacher by the Essene Sons of Light, was the twin brother of Jesus by their father, however he was also Mary Magdalene's brother by the same mother. It was over her they both began their crusades to campaign for the position of Most High priest-king, the Messiah AHDVNHAY, whose name was called Emanuel, but whose name is merely a manual, the book itself. The body of any "God" is the collection of their history, combined with the population of their living believers. Such is QBLH, "Khab" (Egyptian for "body") and "Allah" (beduin Arabic for "all that is, was and shall be"), the comparison between all such bodies of "Gods," their similarities magnified.

There are many mysteries explained by studying QBLH, however they do not necessarily pertain to Gnosticism, a philosophy that has been snuffed out since the time of Christ, but that has survived in fractured forms, practised in secret, often in the form of "personal alchemy" (apothecary explorations), self-negation, solipsism, nihilism, deism, atheism, Anti-Christianity, Luciferianism, Satanism, Chaos Magick, Toxic majiq, etc. down to this day.

So, what does Gnosticism have to do with the Blair Witch Project movie? Everything and nothing. If you see Mike as Judas, Heather as Mary, and Josh as Jesus, it means much more. If you put the movie into the context of a religious passion-play, it portrays a completely Gnostic point of view.

Naturally, the entire thing was staged, insofar as society has been built up to the level where such arrangements would eventually naturally align in a way sufficiently meaningful to the mind of an individual, group or our whole species. The elements were all there, look:

The "twin-headed" serpent Satan-Maloch's part was played by Ed and Dan, the "behind-the-scenes" adversaries to the main characters. Ultimately, the story-arc is the same as that of the whole of history, including the flood as the crossing of the Nile, the river Styx, the Milky Way, etc, the loss of Josh as the body of the leader, the life-raft Messiah, and the supposed death of God implied by finding his necklace's sabre-tooth, which told the truth, and nothing but the truth. Following this was the period of Nephtys, the name of Isis after the death of Osiris, before the birth of Horus, who would arise in the form not of Seth, a "second-coming" of a "resurrected" Jesus, but of the revolt of the common-man and his rushing ahead, ultimately leading the Virgin-Mother church's faith into a blind corner, concluding in the present-moment, then and there in 1999.

Together the two "behind-the-scenes" agitators and the three main characters form five, the pentagram, however this was skillfully portrayed as the "stick-man" symbol of the film: the head, two arms, two legs. The same structure is built into the extremities, the "phallanges" of all mammals, from whales to apes. We have five fingers and five toes. Our bodies are based around the number five.

If Jesus was the anti-Christ, Lucifer, the false-light of pre-dawn, then either Joshua Leonard, who played in the movie, or else I myself am the true one who will unite all the faiths behind me as the first manifestation of the spirit of all mankind, the "messiah," the "Saviour," God on earth, and all the standard bull-shit. It is more likely that Josh, the "projected" giant, represents the fallen angel on the opposite side of the mirror-like "veil" of the movie-screen, while I, myself, am merely one small person, the Great and Powerful Oz, or rather, the "man behind the curtain," using my massive mental powers of manipulation to stay off the social radar, hoping only for Irina to pick me over Mike, while I slowly fade away.

It seems strange to me, being the head, how my two hands hate one another and compete for attention, like a brother and a sister, and how my sore legs seem to hate me, rebelling against me by falling asleep, turning to numb, limp, dead-weight. These are, obviously, archetypal feelings, experienced by all humans, however in me the archetype itself has been made manifest, in the form of the Blair Witch Project film, which I leave as my lone relic to history. For everywhere throughout all manifestation is the QBLH scrawled, its gematria, 137, is the "fine-structure constant" of physics, and is a fractal of the sum of phi squared divided by pi (1.37). And likewise, nowhere on earth can be found anyone by now who is unaware of the major events in my own life as told in the form of the Bible and, most recently, in the Blair Witch Project. Most indigenous tribal natives must think of it all as a vast, religious conspiracy. And it is. For this "psychic breakthrough" of mine has spread upon the earth, feeding by converting minds, like a terrible Cancer. But it has not spread forward into the future, because the future remains unwritten, unknown. So it has flooded backwards through time from the present into the past. So, the Blair Witch Project, like pressing "rewind" after watching a video tape, is actually the entire Bible and Koran told backwards, starting in 1999 with the beginning of the movie, and ending with the Big Bang, when the film ends.

But you're right, my theist friend. Perhaps none of this means anything, or rather, nothing to anyone other than me. And perhaps all the other theists belief that my hoping even only one other person, because she is too specific, distant or free-willed, is anything but bullish self-destructive folly. Perhaps what I should do is something different than what I am doing. Then again, perhaps not, and all this, that I spread memetically across the wires to anyone who will listen, is nothing but a psychotic breakdown in the history of a mentally delusional, emotionally retarded social failure. And of course, obviously there are a gradient of other possible, and more likely, choices for your own personal point of view on this information. However, as I must remind you, just as my point of view is the sole truth possible in this matter, so too is it impossible for you to deny now that you "know" that sole truth of this matter: I assert that I am God, The God, for a very specific reason.

Not only have I got memory of the pre-existent condition of consciousness, but I can encompass the All in a thought. Am I not the ideal example of human-nature, of the nature of earth, made of the stuff of the stars, and invested with a mind that breathes in its own aura and exhales the one spirit? Is not all of this, every word of it, Holy True, Righteous and Just So? Let me ask you, Saint Jeremy "Black-Milk," to tell me, Jonathan "benpadiah," is your G-d not like me? Is He not at times serene, at other times vengeful; is He not moody in personality; is He not a Sado-Masochistic mad-scientist? Is our entire world anything less than His own manifestation, by direct thought, of a molecular-machine that would experience his emotions? Does this world not shed our lives like a snake sheds its scaly skin?

I'll say in closing for now, if these things I have said were all true, to the best of my knowledge, then let history record this as true as well: I am that which is, was, and shall always be. I am one, and the three characters of Light, of Love and Life, are one in me. There are two reflecting one, two begetting one, and so on is it until forever. My signature is the pattern of DNA, a double-helix, or dual-spiral, alike the Cauduces staff of Hermes. And already, soon, too soon, my own time will come, and I will no longer be writing these words to you. And, if you "believe" any of that, I've got an Atlantean Calendar to give you for free!

Peace man. I hope this conversation will inspire you some, but if it gets tiresome, just let me know and, as I say, I'll drop it. It's just I had earlier made the statement to you that I am God, and I felt obligated to back this statement up with some evidence. Plus, also as I said, I'm just a babbling boob when it comes to the topic of myself, since I do "believe" that I will be read by future generations, and these will become historical documents. I can't help but admit, though, that, in the end, I'm not only probably wrong about all of this, but I am outright mistaken at each detail. Then again, perhaps, just PERHAPS, I'm only lying about "believing" any of this at all. Anyway, as I say, peace, be well, hope to hear from you soon, etc. etc. etc.

<http://www.thetruthseeker.co.uk/article.asp?ID=1068>

[quote]In a letter to Mazzini, dated the 15th of August 1871, Pike broadly outlines his long-term plan for the seizure of power in the whole world. One might expect the Illuminati to be more careful with their papers, so that their plans were not made public - but anyone who knows their history also knows that humanity will never take warning in time. Professor Carroll Quigley (also an Illuminatus) realized this. Public opinion, the majority of politicians, and social scientists are at any event unable to accept facts which contradict their deeply held belief that they understand and control all that happens in society. Both Lenin and Hitler openly revealed their real aims years before they ever came to power. Did the nations heed the warning? No, they preferred to go on sleeping. It is no different today. The Illuminati know this.

Pike's plan was ingeniously simple. The inherent antagonism between different ideologies was to be stirred up and made to explode in three world wars and three revolutions. The first world war was to destroy the three European empires, at that time being the last remaining bulwarks against Illuminism. One of these (Russia) Was to be made a centre of atheist totalitarianism (Communism). The second world war was to erupt from heightened tensions between the Jewish race (and its spiteful Zionism) and extreme European nationalism (Nazism and Fascism). This war would weaken Europe economically and politically and Communism would expand and become as strong as all Christendom, but not stronger, until the time was up for the final destruction of society. A third reason the second world war was to create a Jewish state in Palestine. Gradually it would be possible to thereby heighten the tensions between Judaism and Islam until they broke out in a war which would bring in all of the world powers. The three revolutions, which would aid this carefully planned dissolution of all human civilisation, were the Russian, the Chinese and Indo-Chinese. (Des Griffin, "Descent Into Slavery" South Pasadena 1984, pp. 38-39.) The reader will realise. that most of this evil plan already become reality. Concerning the last stage, General Pike wrote following:

'We shall unleash the Nihilists and Atheists and provoke a formidable social cataclysm which in all its horror will show clearly to nations the effect of absolute atheism, origin of savagery and of the most bloody turmoil. Then everywhere, the citizens, obliged to defend themselves against the world minority of revolutionaries, will exterminate those destroyers of civilization, and the multitude, disillusioned with Christianity, whose deistic spirits will from that moment on without compass (direction), anxious for an ideal, but without knowing where to render its adoration, will receive the true light through the universal manifestation of the pure doctrine of Lucifer, brought finally out in the public view, a manifestation which will result from the general reactionary movement which will follow destruction of Christianity and atheism, both conquered and exterminated at the same time.'

[quote]The Plan for Three World Wars

"Although they had finally united Italy, [Guiseppe] Mazzini and Pike realized that the unification of all Europe under the banner of Illuminism would be extremely difficult, if not impossible. Nationalism runs strongly in the human spirit, and is very difficult to erase, especially on a continent divided by warfare for many centuries. Therefore, they set to work on their greatest plan, a plan so vast in scope that only a reader familiar with the great power wielded by secret societies could begin to believe it.

"In 1871, Mazzini, issued a letter in which he outlined the final three-part plan of the Illuminati [a branch of freemasonry that originated in Bavaria under Adam Weishaupt]: Their grand design for ridding not just Europe, but the entire world of Christianity, and bringing it under the "illuminated" dictatorship of Luciferianism. This remarkable letter was for many years on display in the British Museum Library in London.

"Mazzini proposed a series of world wars. These wars were to embroil every nation in a conflict so bloody and chaotic that eventually every nation would surrender its national sovereignty to an international government, like the League of Nations, or the second attempt--the current United Nations--in order to prevent subsequent global bloodletting. One Masonic scholar wrote in 1987:

"The true birth of World Democracy from its prenatal national confinement is even now in progress. A war-torn, bleeding World is in the midst of labor-pains, preceding the ordeal of birth. Labor-pains in the birth of a New Age!"

"However, knowing that national sovereignty would certainly die hard, three of these world wars were proposed by Mazzini and Pike in their original plan. The first of these world wars, they hoped, would topple the Czarist government of Russia and establish an Illuminized dictatorship--a new level in the game of control of populations. This would give the Illuminists a secure base from which to operate, with a large population and vast natural resources to fuel the new engine of Illuminism.

"The Second World War would allow the new Soviet Russia to capture Europe - or as it turned out, half of it.

The Third World War would be in the Middle East between the Moslems and the Jews, and would bring about the biblical Armageddon. Certainly by the end of this Third World War, the battle-wearied nations would be ready to accept any proposal as long as it promised peace, uniting the entire world under the fatal banner of the Luciferian New World Order. Pike wrote to Mazzini about the consequences of the Third World War in 1871:

"[It will] provoke a formidable social cataclysm...and the most bloody turmoil. Then everywhere, the citizens, obliged to defend themselves against the world minority of revolutionaries, will exterminate those destroyers of civilization, and the multitude, disillusioned with Christianity...will be without a compass, anxious for an ideal, but without knowing where to render its adoration, will receive the true light through the universal manifestation of the pure doctrine of Lucifer, brought finally into public view, a manifestation which will result from the general reactionary movement which will follow the destruction of Christianity and atheism, both conquered and exterminated at the same time."[/quote] and of course, these are the primary letter excerpts we know of:

[quote]"The First World War must be brought about in order to permit the Illuminati to overthrow the power of the Czars in Russia and of making that country a fortress of atheistic Communism. The divergences caused by the "agentur" (agents) of the Illuminati between the British and Germanic Empires will be used to foment this war. At the end of the war, Communism will be built and used in order to destroy the other governments and in order to weaken the religions."

"The Second World War must be fomented by taking advantage of the differences between the Fascists and the political Zionists. This war must be brought about so that Nazism is destroyed and that the political Zionism be strong enough to institute a sovereign state of Israel in Palestine. During the Second World War, International Communism must become strong enough in order to balance Christendom, which would be then restrained and held in check until the time when we would need it for the final social cataclysm."

"The Third World War must be fomented by taking advantage of the differences caused by the "agentur" of the "Illuminati" between the political Zionists and the leaders of Islamic World. The war must be conducted in such a way that Islam (the Muslim Arabic World) and political Zionism (the State of Israel) mutually destroy each other. Meanwhile the other nations, once more divided on this issue will be constrained to fight to the point of complete physical, moral, spiritual and economical exhaustion...We shall unleash the Nihilists and the atheists, and we shall provoke a formidable social cataclysm which in all its horror will show clearly to the nations the effect of absolute atheism, origin of savagery and of the most bloody turmoil. Then everywhere, the citizens, obliged to defend themselves against the world minority of revolutionaries, will exterminate those destroyers of civilization, and the multitude, disillusioned with Christianity, whose deistic spirits will from that moment be without compass or direction, anxious for an ideal, but without knowing where to render its adoration, will receive the true light through the universal manifestation of the pure doctrine of Lucifer, brought finally out in the public view. This manifestation will result from the general reactionary movement which will follow the destruction of Christianity and atheism, both conquered and exterminated at the same time."[/quote]

Add to this my own hardcopy of the excellent work by William T. Still, "the NWO: Ancient Plan of Secret Societies."

Now, some notions new to me:

1) there seem to be conflicting opinions on who actually wrote the paragraphs outlining the three world wars part, although all are in agreement that Pike wrote the infamous "doctrine of Lucifer" passage in his Address to the 23 sub-Councils. What's your take on this? Who do you think really came up with the idea for specifically three world wars, or do you think it doesn't matter which one, because both brain-stormed it mutually?

2) this brings me to an interesting aspect I've discussed with my friend Damien. The letter itself may actually be a forgery, however is it any different than a modern form of the ancient type of document historians refer to as "pseudepigrapha"? Pseudo, obviously, means fake, while epigrapha meant "letters." The extant collection of Jewish "Old Testament" era Pseudepigrapha and Gnostic, "New Testament" era pseudepigrapha are both mystic in nature for the most part, describing a complex cosmology that is very different from the one described in the bible. They don't, generally, lay out plots to rule the world. This doesn't mean this same method of falsely attributing a genuinely inspired piece of literature to greater and more well known men couldn't have been used here, in which case it is merely the content that differs between the ancient and modern pseudepigrapha. Instead, Morals and Dogma by Pike would be more like the ancient forms of pseudepigrapha and apocrypha. It's all quite confusing to me, and I'd be very grateful to hear your take on it all.

3) If Weishaupt wrote the original of the (I have the Mardsen English edition) Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion, this would be in line with the rest of his writings being largely held in secret in Masonic and Vatican libraries, and not available in any English editions. The Protocols were leaked, however I always believed it was disinformation in that it attributed the plot to "Jews." Weishaupt MAY have been born a Jew, however if he wrote the Protocols from the point of view of the "Jews" then why would he have formulated the Illuminati as Luciferian, ultimately leading even to Satanism? I always believed the plot to "overthrow all world governments, economic systems and religions" was actually a Jesuit plot, which Weishaupt had been expelled from their order for revealing as the Illuminati. I've always sided with the Masons when it comes to Catholicism though. What is your take on all this? How far back does one conspiracy extend before it becomes merely part of another? What's the half-life of a standard conspiracy? etc.

4) As with the Protocols, however, I've always accepted the content of the documents as a given truth, as much so as a Christian takes the Bible. I simply believed then, and am prone to still believe, that Pike, Mazzini and Weishaupt did not write these letters or protocols, but that they were written by minor operatives in an actual global conspiracy and circulated as disinformation in order to foment distrust among the general population as a means of justifying maintaining the status quo. I just always figured this conspiracy could be traced as far back as forever. Not only have I been researching "Atlantean Democracy" for years (and feverishly recently), I'm well aware of the entire story-arc of the ancient (supposed) alien pantheon this modern elite (supposedly) still secretly serves.

What I do not understand regarding modern mythologising about the subjects of ancient pantheons, alternative cosmology, and conspiracy "theory" is why they insist on seizing on certain, selective aspects of past evidence, which are, anyway, fictional disinformation, and then not further investigate the modern perpetrators of the crimes of conspiracy today. Ultimately, why does it matter who wrote what and why if the alledged literature is attributed to a part of the ancient plan laid down more than one hundred years ago? All that matters is that it was leaked by the conspirators, probably on accident, and then falsely attributed to past figureheads of other movements than the ones who actually accidentally leaked said documents. Such documents are usually also leaked at strategic times and in strategic ways to benefit one group by allowing it to remain anonymous while slandering another group and thus bringing them into public scrutiny arbitrarily.

In short, I think the Protocols and the Pike Mazzini letter are valid documents that reveal the presence of an elite global conspiracy. I just don't think it matters who wrote them. Likewise, I see the bible itself as part of this conspiracy's past literature, and therefore it also doesn't matter to me who actually wrote the bible. Religions are just as much a part of this conspiracy as smaller cults posing as politicians. You can't uproot the corruption of one without uncovering the crimes of the other. One hand washes the other between the occult church and the secret state.

5) Who do you think should be the first, say, 100 people who's immediate arrest would be an excellent way to stop the global conspiracy? I've also always been more concerned about current crimes and living criminals, because I have always thought it should be possible to simply stop this conspiracy, no matter how ancient, in its tracks by simply picking out certain key members of it and arresting them without habeas corpus under their own laws. It only takes one coward to crack and blow the whistle on the entire rat-pack. Then their whole house of cards would inherit a leveling wind. Of course, if you believe Pike's address to the 23 Councils is accurate, this attitude of casual indifference toward "the final social cataclysm" is exactly what will lead to allowing this "final social cataclysm" to occur. My focusing on the criminal conspirators alive today, am I not only suggesting we play immediately into Pike's hands when he describes Marxist "Communism" as "the True Light," the "doctrine of Lucifer." Afterall, I'm a Marxist Socialist myself, but then, so was Lee Harvey Oswald. If we can't arrest the guilty then what can we do to be set free from their intention to destroy us all?

Anyway, enough for now. I figured you'd appreciate it if I kept it short and sweet for now. Peace,

-Jon

I'm looking now at the colour TOD diagram from the TOD.pdf (the English "Blind Dragon") next to the TODscript.jpg I sent you a while back, with each name printed in English. Let's look at the two attributes we're dealing with here, just as they are related to one another and the various other attributes around them in the "combined" trees of "life" and "death" diagram, the basis for both these images.

Belphegor is obverse Binah, Understanding, the "watery" / "female" aspect at the top of the pillar of Jachin on the left, the "black" pillar, representing the south and the equivalent of the male Yang in the Chinese Yin Yang Tao of the I Ching.

Baalzebub is obverse Chockmah, Wisdom, the "fiery" / "male" aspect at the top of the pillar of Boaz on the right, the "white" pillar, representing the north and the equivalent of the female Yin in the Chinese Yin Yang Tao of the I Ching.

Belphegor rules over Satariel, the concealers, whose sin in life that brought them to serve in this rank in hell was that of Vanity, the crime of Narcissus, who gazed so long into the lake at his own reflection he turned into stone. Thus, the punishment of those who love to see themselves is to always keep concealed their own vanity from others.

Baalzebub rules over Chagiel, the hinderers, whose sin in life that brought them to serve in this rank in hell was that of Idolatry. The crime of the Idolatry is a mortal sin violating the second commandment. Thus, the punishment for knowingly committing this sin, and thus causing hindrance to subsequent seekers, is to reign over Chagiel under Beelzebub.

Belphegor (Binah) forms one corner of a square, Baalzebub (Chockmah) the opposite. The corner above is obverse Kether, Satan-Maloch, and below is obverse Tiferet, Lucifer. In the midst of this quadrangled parallelogram is Sheol, the grave. The grave is the punishment for Lust, the venal sin that is depicted as equal between the mortal sins of vanity and idolatry (the 3rd and 2nd commandments), superior to the crime of murder, and inferior to the mortal sin of praying to false gods, the highest possible sin, breaking the first commandment.

Well, let's look at this. Why would the venal sin "Lust" be equal between the Mortal sins of "Vanity" and "Idolatry," and how could any of these be superior sins above Murder, higher than Lucifer? It has to do with the placement of the positioning of the attributes on the "tree" diagram: Between obverse Chockmah and obverse Tiferet, and between obverse Binah and obverse tiferet, there are paths connecting to the Grave that separate the concealers and the Hinderers from the Litigation defending guilty murderers. Between Beelzebub and Lucifer is the "Bestial" aspect, and between Belphegor and Lucifer is the aspect of "malignant women."

Look at the colour diagram in the TOD.pdf, page 22. Note that between Vanity and Murder we find "Malignant Women." Malignant women can mean sick or menstruating women. But why would Malignant women appear between Belphegor and Lucifer? Look further down on the Savedow "TOD" (red colour) aspect of the Blind Dragon arrangement. Between Gates and Rubbish over Greed and Gluttony is the "order" Bloody. If "malignant women" can also mean "menstruating women" why is Bloody below, "malignant women" above, and both divided along the TOD by Changers and Clayey? Because Bloody and Malignant Women are like "book-ends" to the traits between them, just as, vertically opposite the left side of the TOD, on the right we find Bestial above divided from the Flock below by the Black and Fishy.

The arrangement of all these traits should be taken as moveable. Otherwise, the mechanism fails to work as it is meant: to stimulate inspiration in the brain. The TOD of Savedow (in red in the TOD.pdf) is meant to function like a dynamic circuit, conducting the relative "electricity" of the on-looker's gaze around it in a specific, fixed pattern.

So, to return to the, much less "arbitrary" placement of the demonic rulers over the orders of demons, occupying the "qliphoth" obverse the normal ten "sefirot" emanations. We see Lucifer, arising from obverse Daath (the grave) aspires in vanity toward idolatry to set up false-gods.

We see that Vanity and Idolatry are crimes committed in private, alone, in the heart and mind, shared with and known only to one's self and God. So, we associate them with Binah and Chokmah, the more "psychic" aspects of the sefirot according to the G.D. projection of the tree of life onto the human form in Regardie's "Middle Pillar" idea. Binah is like the voice going into our left ear, and Chokmah the voice going into our right ear. So, Binah is the left half and Chokmah the right half of the brain. The left brain controls the right-side of the body, and vice versa. So if someone is "left-handed" they are thinking more with the right-side of their brains, and if someone is "ambidextrous" they are using both.

We see that the TOL aspects (in blue on page 22, relative to the TOD in red) are how these demonic orders infuse the natural substances, the 12 material paths on Savedow's TOD. For example, Belphegore, the Vain, ruler over the Satariel, who conceal, infuses the Malignant Woman with Cancer by creating a circuit-bridge between obverse Binah and obverse Tiferet. So, on Chokmah's side, does Beelzebub the Idolator lord it over Chagiel the Hinderer and this is the cause for the inflammations that occasionally occur to beasts.

Many of the 22 "Qliphoth Sui Generis" (the diseases) may need re-arranged, but the ten demon-kings, their orders of demons, and the sins they command, are right.

Comparing the two diagrams on page 22 of the TOD.pdf further, I am beginning to understand why they cannot be any other way: Vanity leads to the concealment of Malignant women, just as the Ravens of Theft peck at the flock. So too we find that Lilith rides atop blind Samael, as does Lucifer stand up for those who break the sixth commandment.

I hope this letter gives you some inspiration and helpful insight from my point of view, as limited on the visual depiction aspect as it is. Peace, be well, and hope to hear from you soon,

-Jon

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Albert Pike received a vision[/quote]

Amen to that. But of what and from where, was he guided, if so by whom? etc.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]understanding the conspriacy.[/quote]

we should talk about the nukes supposedly stock-piled in Israel. Do you think they're planning on blowing up Al Aqsa and the Wailing Wall? I know I've teased you for thinking that alot, but I never cared whether you actually thought so.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]trace the money[/quote]

I've been operating under the assumption that "money" was an evaporating value. Have you heard of the "Gold/Oil/Drugs" pyramid scheme for society? G.O.D. with Gold on top, oil between and Drugs below?

Right now, it seems to me, "money" is being digitized into data (ie. pulses of electricity) so that it can be converted into an automatic transaction conducted autonomously between a door-scanner and a skin-chip. Credit cards are the second-step toward this (checks being the first, and all "paper" currency is fiat checks based on international stock-exchanges).

In the great depression they Problem:Reaction:Solutioned it to create national banks to trade taxed earnings on international stock exchanges. In the 1980's they over-extended the US national currency's printed paper money so much they could likewise justify converting most of state-bank holdings into "credit" traded on the national stock-exchanges.

The whole point was to steal our earnings, diminish our holdings, consolidate them as worthless paper money in exchange for... G.O.D.? Gold-trolls serve the Annunaki, Oil-trolls serve the Gold-trolls, and drug-trolls are pretty much everybody's slave.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]they've followed this letter.[/quote]

But to the same extent they've followed the writings of Niccolo Machiavelli. Have you ever heard of Maurice Joly's "Dialogues in Hell between Montesque and Machiavelli," upon which some claim the Protocols were supposedly based? It's been my standard mental operating procedure to account for the Philosophy as the Inspiration for the Plot (PIP). Philosophy (Machiavelli) Inspirered (Dialogues in Hell) the Plot (Protocols). I guess to a large extent this doesn't work out, if one thinks of the Plot itself having pre-existed, in this case, both its inspiration and philosophers.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Pseudepigrapha is a practise that has been institutionalized[/quote]

Aside from implying "disinformation" I'm not sure what you mean here, so I don't know that I agree. See, to me, it's a more important point of pseudepigrapha that it refer to cosmology and theology than if it is just a forgery. I wouldn't put the Pike-Mazzini letter in the same file as, say, the Apocalypse of Adam, just because both were written by someone other than who they are attributed to. One of them is about the Garden of Eden, the other is about three world wars in the 20th century. I'm not saying one is important and the other isn't, either. It's just, to me, the Garden of Eden has been my field of study, even though the Pike-Mazzini letter is alot more relevant to where we are today.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]did they fuck up? [/quote]

I think it was a fuck-up. I think every important leaked document throughout the past 100 years or more has been a slip up, "loose lips sink ships" like Majestic 12, Silent Weapons, CIA-implications in coup-de-tats abroad, not to mention the cover-ups of certain killings as far back as the earliest years of the 19th century and Capt. William Morgan's murder for the revelation of German Illuminism being exported here (which, recall, became the three Yale frats in the later 1800's). They fuck up all the time. Most of the time we just don't catch wind of it. That's the whole reason they back-date it all as early as they can whenever it gets leaked, so it seems like it's too late to do anything to stop it.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]The content is what matters and how people choose to wield that content.[/quote]

But these are two different things. The key that locks also unlocks; without knowing chains, we could never know freedom. Take for example the Garden of Eden.

Isn't the "New Atlantis" philosophy only trying to restore this ideal? Why is this taken to be an act of pride by man? Is this not part of God's plan for us? etc. On the other hand, we have the pessimism that mankind is in a perpetual state of decline since the fall, and there is no redemption beside individual repentance and prayer.

Traditionally, the Jewish idea has been the latter, the pessimistic side. The Jews have traditionally been "punished" for this throughout history, being exterminated in whatever land they migrated to. The reason used to justify this to their own people by the nations exterminating the Jews has always been to blame the Jews for their own nation's peoples' worst crimes. This has traditionally, only served the ends of each individual nation temporarily, while serving the ends of other nations soon enough. Does this make the Jews guilty for globalism? No more so than for fomenting wars by their migrations. Does this mean they are behind their apparent benefactors the UN, who "gifted" them Israel? I see this as merely an internationally united effort to get all the Jews in one place and then exterminate them en masse. But of course, it always only starts with the immigrants...

On the other hand, we have the belief that the grand conspiracy, of which periodically quelling uprisings against the progress of "civilisation" is merely one small part, is justified by its idealised ends. I think a lot of people involved, even in the very highest levels, feel, as much as the rest of us, compelled to make the choices they do by the stress of sudden necessity. I don't think it makes any difference to the victims, but for the people with their finger on "the big red button," Milgram has proven they're a lot more willing to go along with giving (or even getting) an electrical shock, if they think they are being compelled to do it by someone in authority. Even Hitler must have felt like he was only "following orders."

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]The Jesuits definitely fit into everything. Do you think that Freemasonry, the Illuminati, Germanic Death Cults, Lizards, etc are a front for something far more dirty, far more scary, and far more real?[/quote]

For the past 200 years, we can specify the "Illuminati" as a German death-cult, yes. However this is only one splinter group. It was originally created by the Jesuits to discredit Masonry. By that point Masons had adopted Catharist beliefs from the Knights Templar. The Cathars, called by the Catholics the "albigensians" were the primary rival religion in the region at the time. Both date back to the same origins at the time of Jesus. Catholicism was Roman Christianity. The Cathars, who were the first ones persecuted during the Inquisition, followed the same "religion" as did the Bedouin Arabs. The Templar crusaders had found the source for this "religious" belief, Hassan I Sabbah, the "Old Man of the Mountain." This cult has since come to be called the "Hash-hash-ins" (pronounced "assassins"), which leads to the misnomer that marijuana is a hypnotic drug that can be used to brainwash a mind-controlled "sleeping agent" to murder their own political allies. Of course, nothing is further from the truth, but then, consider the source: the Catholic Church. If nothing a Cretan says is true because they are idiots, then nothing a Catholic says is true because they are liars. The philosophy of these "assassins" in the Arab cult discovered by the Templars believed that Sabbah, their holy man, was a direct descendent from Ishmael, son of Abraham. So the other Arabs, of the civilised Ottoman Empire, called this cult "Ishmaelism." However this term was not wholly accurate either. Nowadays, the term used to identify the members of this sect is "Sufi" in Moslem, or, in Hindu, "Sikhism." This "religious" sect, the Sufi Sikh "assassins," inspired the Templars to found Catharism in Europe. Catharism was based on Sufi mysticism ceremonies and the Apocryphal books of the Bible. Thus, Catharism carried into the post-Christian era the ideas collectively called at the time of Christ "Gnostic," combined with the religious rituals of the Orient.

For the past 2000 years, we can specify the primary "death-cult" as Roman Catholic Christianity, personified in all its crimes against humanity (Moslems by crusade, Jews by pogrom, Gnostics by Inquisition, Masons and children), while the suppressed "religion" has been Cathartic Gnosticism. I don't think it is the Gnostics who are worshipping the Owl of Lilith at Bohemian Grove though. I think it is Jesuit Catholics. Whether "Illuminism" has usurped the Papacy, or whether the Papacy invented "Illuminism," either way, most of the conspirators are practising Satanism, which is the exact opposite of only one of all the world-religions: Catholic Christianity. I simply assume they are Catholic agents, posing as Masons in order to discredit them. Being a Bonesman, for example, is not automatically equivalent to any initiation ritual in Masonry, so the Bonesmen aren't by any means "honorary Masons" anymore than the Cathars were "honorary" Moslems (the corruption "Baphomet" derives from the name "Mohammed") as they were accused by the Catholic Church. For the past 2000 years the Roman Catholic Empire has dominated the west side of planet earth. I just don't see them weakening in power in favour of Masonry, as we are led to believe is the motive behind the plot to "overthrow all existing religions" and "especially Christianity."

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]How far back does the conspiracy go? I think it probably goes back to the beginning.[/quote]

It goes as far back as Sumeria, the earliest ante-deluvial civilisation. Following the Mesopotamian flood 8000 years ago, the same degree and level of "high" civilisation spontaneously sprang up in Sumeria, India and Egypt. In India, you have the Vedic caste system, in Egypt the beginning of massive pyramid building projects, and in Sumeria, the creation of a pantheon of alien gods and the codefication of "good" (obedience to these Gods' priests) and "evil" (disobedience of any social law). I also attribute the creation of money to this time, which history now remembers only as the "agrarian revolution."

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]the elongated Egyptian Skulls, with much larger cranial capacities, in some cases double that of human beings[/quote]

These species were from the times before the Mesopotamian flood 8000 years ago. They were the "Australopithocene" hominid proto-homo-sapiens. They bred with Neanderthals to create cromagnons, homo-sapiens and a third species, which was killed off before the Mesopotamian flood. These races, Australopithocene, Neanderthal, Cro-Magnon and Homo-Sapien are recorded in the bible as Adam, Eve, Cain and Seth. The "missing link" is, of course, Abel, and it is tempting to say the "long-skulls" are the generations of Abel. They are not. They are the generations of homo-sapiens between Adam and Enoch. Before the flood there, the long-skulls dwelt in Antarctica. When Antarctica flooded (12000 years ago), they migrated up a land-bridge into S. America, and by ship travelled up the coast of Africa and up the river Nile. The long-skulls of Nasca, Peru are the descendents of Adam. Noah was Quetzalcoatl. He brought back civilisation after the Mesopotamian flood, and travelled all around the land, establishing the first city-states we learn about in western-civ.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]what proof do you have of this?[/quote]

This position implies already there is some doubt, or question, and that thus, this is all only conjectural, belief or theory. It is not. The problem isn't with the factual evidence. It is there, it exists still, almost as if indestructable, in testimony to those who have sworn to defend it by hiding its location in plain site, but never mentioning its real importance. So it is always in public, but never discussed. Take, again, for example, the long-skulls. We all know they exist. Not all know where they are from. Fewer still have read enough to compare one source to another, and then to look at the factual evidence in reality. The mythological history and the anthropological archaeological artefacts are in exact agreement.

The only problem occurs when someone says, "what proof...?" because then there will be discrepancies between conflicting accounts, and these will lead to dogmatic boasts, followed by over-emotionally fueled arguments. These arguments decompose into theories as each persons' wounds heal. When the two, originally conflicting accounts have reached the level of mutual theory, and only once both interlocutors are exhausted can they see both their own and the other point of view as potentially subjective. All this, of course, wastes a lot of precious time when we compare this strategy to simply accepting all points of view as equally possible, however unlikely, and the unification of all of them into one explanation not as "theory" but as what it simply is: the truth. Some people call that "being objective." (These people are not the followers of Ayn Rand.)

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]This conspiracy ... It's been going on forever.[/quote]

It's basically a right-wing liberal conspiracy too, to create and maintain a global feudal system. From the start we've always been taught "money" is "good" and "bigger" is "better," that being "broke" is "bad" and that "poverty" means "starvation." And why? It's all distraction. They are trying to lead us over a cliff by blinding us with a bright white light. So the question isn't "is the primrose path paved with real or phoney good intentions?" the question is "how do I stop myself from being led over this cliff?" "How do I turn around, away from the carrot on a stick, and go back the way I came from?" and most importantly "how do I toss my adversary over the cliff they were trying to lead me off of before?"

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]The first 100 people[/quote]

You've grouped them up into four categories, so you could arrest 25 representatives from each group. I'm wondering if you have any specific suggestions as to certain people who, to name names, we would like to see arrested. Ideally we could fill in for what crime at the same time or later. I'll toss a few names out to see if you might recognise any of the "Go-Fish" cards I'm holding. Then I'll divvy my hundred picks up into different categories of my own.

C.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Secret Agents.[/quote]

Obviously double-agents for NAZIs founded the CIA, however can its recent dope-running and gun-smuggling employees really be blamed for crack and terrorism? Also, wherefore the Dept. of Homeland Security? Again, where do you draw the line?

D.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Secret Societies.[/quote]

I see this as flat out wrong. You can't blame someone for being culpable for a crime they had no knowledge of and didn't personally commit. By that criteria, we would all be guilty and should all die. Useless.

The goal is to uproot the entire US-COG. This is the "shadow government." The reason is to reveal to the public the real motive for their plan, which is as old as NAZism and, yes, does culminate in immense under-ground bases. In the event of an ELE (either by a nuclear holocaust caused by them or by the "blowback" of massive sudden climate-change sped up by atomic testing), there are literally hundreds of underground complexes, many connected by an underground transit-system. It is from these locations (such as Raven Rock, Cheyenne Mountain, Dulce, Sedona, Area 51, HAARP, etc.) that the COG officials (MIBs to you and me) run the show behind the scenes. COG = Continuity of Government. Under FEMA declared emergency (ie. since 1945), the democratic republic has only been the front or cover operation to disguise and misdirect attention away from the true form of government, a dark, CIA-powered Plutocracy that, literally, live underground.

So, in order to get to the bottom of why they have built their homes in bomb-shelters and fall-out bunkers, in order to ask them if we too should predict atomic rain, I would propose the following categories of people I would like to see arrested and brought to justice. I propose starting with only people operating in the US, so we can set an example of global justice being applicable to even the strongest nations.

1) the neo-con administration.

- 2) the World Bank / WTO / IMF
- 3) the Bilderbergers / CFR
- 4) the Bohemian Grovers
- 5) Skull and Bones
- 6) big business (Halliburton, oil companies, etc.)
- 7) medium businesses (Blackwater, Diebold, etc.)
- 8) small businesses (Wackenhut, Brown and Root, etc.)
- 9) the CIA, NSA, FDA, DEA, ATF and especially the Dept. of Homeland security.
- 10) find the Finders and you've found them all.

Note these only clean out the American traitors, and does not propose trials for anyone outside of American citizenship and / or residency. I'll come back with at least ten names for each category in another PM soon.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]a few things coupled into one.[/quote]

The entire "conspiracy" has been to keep concealed, only to reveal in small parts only at certain times, the truth about the nature of our society and existence before the flood that destroyed Antarctica and forced the "long-skull" Australopithecenes to migrate northward into S. America and S. Africa. The whole "plot" is to restore the Garden of Eden as a New Atlantis. They have built our current civilisation to use as a crucible, from the ashes of which the Georgia guidestones will arise like a Phoenix to illuminate the law of One. Either that or it's to cover up the Apophis asteroid headed right for us!

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]DOING GOOD.[/quote]

how do you define "good" if not in retrospect?

Anyway, this letter's late enough, and more than long enough. I hope you find parts of interesting, and would like to discuss some of these things more. Anyway, Peace.

In this letter I want to discuss three things. 1) in case of this project tapering out, regarding rights to shared materials. 2) the ongoing discussion of "lays" or "spreads" for the deck, as they relate to potential gaming use. 3) misc. other topics picked up from our "Belphegor (etc.)" emails.

Firstly, I want to make it clear who owns what, again, so I can keep it straight in my head. I have "given" you the order for the demonic tarot. That's now yours. If you want to change it, refine it, it is no longer mine, and you wouldn't need my permission, it's yours so you can do whatever you like with it. However, the attributes themselves are no more mine than yours. Their descriptions by me in the TOD.pdf are culled from many sources, however the choices for the attributes that are used (ie. which demons appear where and why) is not original to me, and therefore cannot be original to you either, only modified. Now, the demonic tarot IDEA in the first place belongs to Damien. The TOD.pdf and its contents are all solely my own and I will take full responsibility for them if questioned (for example, as to why I provided no bibliography). So, to back it up again: A) Damien owns the idea for this demonic tarot. B) I own the full contents of the TOD.pdf (including the combined ToL and ToD diagrams on page 22). C) all your art and all the applications of my research to the tarot you choose to use or not are yours to own and manage. In point of fact, if you have an idea for a revision to the order of the cards I gave you, and you do ask my input on it, or my permission, then it would become part my property, and would cease to be solely yours. So, in other words, if you wanted to make Lucifer the first Jack rather than the third, or choose to depict Belphegor as female, etc. you could do that without asking me, but if you did ask me, and I suggested an idea you used, then it would be both of our collaborative effort. If you make any modifications to the order of the attributes in the lists, diagrams and arrangements I've given and/or shown you, the changes you make themselves will be your work, and that which you don't change will remain mine. Again: 1) Damien had the idea to make a demonic tarot. 2) I had the idea to make the deck 72 rather than 76, and to use the attributes listed in the TOD (rather than, for example, make the deck exclusively from, say, the Goetia or the Necronomicon or the Qliphoth Sui Generis). 3) the ordering of the 72 attributes into a tarot deck, and the art for this deck, are primarily yours. I came up with the original draft for the ordering, gave it to you, now it's yours, and if you change it, the more the better. I just wanted to clear all this up. (I hope I have... somewhat!)

Secondly, whenever I say, "the order of the deck" or "the arrangement of the attributes" what I'm referring to has been the tarotSSkey.jpg (or, rather, the tarotSSkeyprint.jpg as per request) wherein the layout is given as a tetractys over four columns of ten with a pillar of 22 beside, and/or to the TODEnglishCursive.jpg (or the TODscript.jpg) wherein the names are written on the combined ToL and ToD diagram as given in the TOD.pdf on page 22. The first arrangement is called, properly, the "St. Simon" tarot, and the second arrangement, the combined trees, called the "Blind Dragon" Tree of Death of the Qliphoth. (To return to rights, the former I created and have given to you, the latter is mine in the TOD.pdf.) Please find attached a new key for deciphering between these two systems: tarottree.jpg, which shows the placement of each card in the deck as they would be arranged on the Tree of Death diagram. Now, both the tarotSSkey.jpg and the tarottree.jpg can also represent "lays" or "spreads" of the cards in the deck. Likewise, the base-six "throw" you showed me in a previous letter (which is yours, by rights, and should so be attributed in the pamphlet). So, we have three different kinds of "spreads" for the cards now, a base-six (yours), the tetractys over 4 columns of ten beside the pillar of 22, and the "Blind Dragon" tree throw for the "St. Simon" tarot (these latter two being mine). In addition to these, I'd like to propose we both brainstorm on a fourth method of tarot laying, involving two players, who sit opposite one another (let's call them "querent" and "reader"). In standard "tarot" play nowadays, only the "reader" interprets the cards. In the version I'm proposing we would pit one modern "reader" against another. Thus, both players would be readers, and both likewise also querents. In standard tarot, as in all card-play, there is a four step process to dispersing the cards: 1) the querent cuts the deck into two stacks; 2) the dealer shuffles the cards; 3) the querent cuts the deck a second time; 4) the dealers draws a card from the top. We can call this method "cut (H) shuffle (V) cut (H) deal (Y)" or, YHVH for short. So, now we have four methods of "lays" or "throws."

Thirdly, to clarify my own motives in taking on this project, it's only a project to me. It's neither "good" nor "evil," aside from it being "right" in some references, and more "arbitrary" in other regards, but neither make it any more or less "wrong" insofar as the entire lot of it is fiction to begin with. Mythology, ancient fiction, is not always believed in whole today, but insofar as parts of it have shaped modern beliefs, it is less of a waste of time than is, say, modern fiction, in which no one believes, anymore so than they do, for example, the mass-broadcast news-media. As to my (our) use of spelling and grammar, I try to use "right proper" Queen's Anglishe as much as possible. It may make me seem snooty in the short-term, but it's wiser for historical preservation's sake. I've found many people who dislike me use two spaces after periods, even at the end of paragraphs. I don't know why anyone types anything the way they do. It's all a brand-new form of evolutionary mutation. And take note how little it actually involves the thumbs! I, admittedly not on your own recommendation, but as part of another project I worked on more recently, have also read the Gospel of Nicodemus. The project I was working on was the compile a "Gospel of Pontius Pilate." I occasionally do re-interpretations of the varying English translations of ancient apocrypha, although mostly what I've done so far has only been the New Testament-era apocrypha of the characters considered "evil" or "damned" by Christianity: the Gospel of Salome, the Gospel of Judas, the Gospel of Pilate, etc. Eventually I hope I'll get to more Genesis-era related apocrypha describing ancient cosmologies using modern terms of metaphysics, but I haven't yet. In fact, right now I'm between projects. I'm considering writing a paper on atheist and gnostic beliefs, contrasting them to theism and agnosticism, but who the hell really cares. I may as well spend that time taking a shit anyway.

Lastly, I've included as attachments to this letter also some basic card-outlines for the art you've done so far. It's just a black background, the name and it's rank in the deck for now, but if you have suggestions for other traits we can include in this frame, let me know. I'm considering figuring out which sigils from the Goetia, Necronomicon and Qliphoth Sui Generis would correspond to which cards too, which was Damien's whole idea in the first place. If you have any input on this too, let me know.

In conclusion, I hope you're well and that all is well and good in your world. Peace, your friend,

-Jon

50 reasons to leave me, lover.

Why doesn't she love me?

Let me count the reasons.

1) the number one reason she doesn't love me is that I am psychotic. Far more than being merely "moody," or even having merely a "mood disorder," I am crazy. This may not necessarily seem true to everyone I know, or even necessarily be true for me all the time. However the side of myself I show to her, that which comes through whenever I even think about her, is dangerous, ranting, unhappy and frightening.

- A) I'm suicidal. I've tried dying before, and will again.
- B) I'm depressed all the time, and moreso about her.
- C) I'm on medication, without which I would be worse.
- D) I self-medicate, which causes exaggerated moodiness.
- E) I can't cope in crowds, and hear negative voices in my head.

2) in addition to being "emotionally retarded," I am simply not her "type." I don't like the things she likes, and she doesn't like what I like. We are on incompatible "wave-lengths." She is an atheist, I'm a Gnostic. She likes clubbing, and I am an eccentric hermit. She can drink responsibly, I like smoking herb. What I know, she doesn't need to know in order to happily survive; what I own she doesn't want.

- A) I don't know what I like. I could say I liked what she does, but would I? Even I don't know.
- B) she knows what she likes. She's spent all her time figuring that out.
- C) I refuse to shop for any new identity, or buy into believing in myself needing one.
- D) essentially, I choose to believe I don't even exist.
- E) I've let myself go, and she values strength of character.

3) besides being a nut-job with completely different tastes from her, I am not even financially and self-sufficiently independent. I rely on my mother, the state, and even my friends to "help me out" so much that, without this network, I would definately be homeless. If it weren't for the people I know, I'd literally be dead already.

- A) I still drive the same car I've driven for fifteen years.
- B) I don't change the clothes I sleep in, shower or bathe.

C) all my belongings can fit in one room.

D) I could pack up only a couple suitcases and leave everything at a moment's notice.

E) I'm shiftless, scummy and a worthless bum.

4) as if it weren't enough I am crazy, too different from her, and can't even pay my own bills, there is the small matter that we haven't spoken in ten years. This doesn't seem to matter to me at all, despite the fact that she's completely forgotten me. Not only have I put her on a pedestal all that time, I myself have not matured at all.

A) I don't need a lover, I need another mother.

B) I would use her like a childhood security blanket.

C) I am, essentially, Ms. Havisham, and she Pip.

D) my "great expectations" involve no self-aspiration, only ruining her's.

E) I just need a hug, and I could get that from anybody, not just her.

5) not only am I still crazy after all these years, have taken a different path in life than her, cannot afford to support myself, and have not even been in love with anyone other than her since we spoke last, a whole decade ago, I also live an illegal and immoral life-style. I commit the crime of using illegal narcotics every day, and am fixated on some odious and technically illegal sexual practises. Not only AM I pot-head, whose whole life revolves around breaking the law, but I also dress, act and even think like a faggot, regardless of whether or not I actually practise homosexuality.

A) I'd be worth about two-packs of cigarettes in jail.

B) I can't do a day's work, or even walk up-hill, because I smoke so much.

C) nobody wants to be treated like an object, especially not by someone like me.

D) I have no idea what life is like, and no experience of what it's like for her.

E) I'm just generally an ass-hole, anal-retentive and a "type-A" personality.

6) so, again, I'm crazy, odd, dependent, don't date, and am a law-breaking ponce. However, moreso than any of these merely disreputable traits, what more do I have to offer? I suffer and make everyone around me suffer, I only want her because I am lonely, I am only fixated on her specifically because I wish I were a romantic, etc. What more reason does she need? What more reasons could there be? Let me elaborate: I think I'm God.

A) I spend all my time studying religion, while she is a happy atheist.

B) I am a Gnostic, who believes reality was created by Satan.

C) I am a Solipsist, who believes nothing should, nor really does, even exist at all.

D) I believe I am the sole-creator of my entire universal reality, eg "higher than God" (at least the "God of the people").

E) I lord myself over everyone, acting superior without justification.

7) as if anyone would need more reasons not to love me, the most important reason of all is also the simplest, and should be, although isn't, the easiest for me to accept. If I love her, I have to accept all her choices. Even her choice not to love me. And that is the only real reason she will never love me: she chooses not to. She doesn't want to, she doesn't have to, and so she won't.

A) if you love someone set them free. She never returned to me. It wasn't meant to be.

B) we could live infinite lives over and over again. She would still never love me again.

C) she regrets having ever loved me in the first place.

D) in a better reality, she never did.

E) I'm only acting out the past ill-affairs of others anyway.

8) So I can't make her; so what? So I think I'm God; so what? So I get high every day; so what? So I'm an OCD stalker over her; so what? So I have no money. So what? So we're too different; again, so what? So I'm medically insane; at last, swf? Maybe none of this matters. Maybe it's all just my story, and doesn't matter to her. If I were her friend, that is what I'd tell her. And my friends all say the same mean things about her I'm sure her's do about me. Her friends hate me, and mine hate her.

- A) she has her life, and I have mine.
- B) she doesn't hang with my kind.
- C) she's out of my league anyway.
- D) she's a better person than I could ever be.
- E) she would only be dragged down by me.

9) Her friends hate me; she doesn't need to call me; I'm nothing but ego; I'm ass-happy; I'm obsessed with her but I don't even know her; I'm broke and don't work; I can't communicate in her language; I'm certified insane. Those are eight good reasons. Shall we go for nine? Sure, of course, I've got nothing else to do. Let's. What would be a ninth sound, logical reason for the girl I love - the girl I dream about every night, the girl I want to grow old with, and have children with, and make love to, and marry, and hold and kiss, and to love forever - to not love me back? Why should she be cold to me, even while being warm toward everyone else? Haven't I proved I deserve that? Dare I go on? So I hate myself, so what? Haven't I proved my point? Who would ever even read this, let alone care? Who would take pity on me, who could ever even help? I've made myself look like an idiot to her. I have given her every reason to hate me. I can't love her like she deserves to be loved.

- A) I am a malignant narcissist, self-aggrandising my self-loathing.
- B) I cannot even see her true self, I am so blinded by my own.
- C) I cannot read her mind, even if I claim I can read everyone's.
- D) she is perfect, and I only one of her infinite lowly worshippers.
- E) she would be happier to love anyone rather than me.

10) I hate myself. How can I ever love anyone else, if I do not first accept and love myself? If I do not first know and accept myself, who I am, what I like, etc., how could I ever know and accept her? What good am I to anyone if I am no good to myself? If I see myself as worthless, how can she see me as any better? I do not even give her the chance to care about me. I do not even know me. How can she?

- A) if there is a god, she'll go to heaven for her works, and I to hell for my beliefs.
- B) hail hail to those in love, to those who succeed where I am destined to fail.
- C) I will die forgotten about, and be remembered later.
- D) she will die surrounded by lovers, and be forgotten.
- E) this is the way God means for it to be.

Please, my goddess, save me. Save me from myself, see through my weakness. Love me, Irina, in spite of myself, in spite of it all, and let the voice of reason be damned. Here I am, as deep inside my own heart as I can sink, begging you just to say one word to me. Even if that word is "no," even though that would mean nothing. If that word is "yes," please, my Goddess, my All, my One, my Love: say it. Please say it. Say it to me and no one else, and say it to me soon. I am praying. I am praying to you, my one and only love. I am in tune with you, our hearts are one, in my dreams, in my prayers. Please my Goddess, Irina V. Strelets, let my love for you be true. Give me back the me in you.

I love you, forever and ever, Irina.

I guess I should 'fess up to this, but I'm completely ignorant on the subject of card-based RPGs. Around the time that "crunk" went out of style and "pogs" became popular, I completely stopped playing everything but video-games, and eventually I weened myself off even them. When I think of "traditional" tarot, therefore, I think of a deck of images that has NO USE other than as a "divinatory tool." I consider the tarot a Rosicrucian illustrated, astrologically symbolic, equivalent attempt by the west to use middle-eastern symbology in the same way that, in the east, the I Ching was used, again, as a "divinatory tool." The Rosicrucians sought to accomplish using the images of the gypsy tarot what the Buddhists accomplished relative to the I Ching: to create a series of pictures representing the European pantheons reflecting the earlier system of astrology, in the same way the Thangkas of Buddhism reflected the earlier system of the I Ching. In my opinion, the tarot fails where the Buddhist Thangkas succeed: Zen Taoism is based on ignoring the I Ching, while all the subsequent schools of Rosicrucianism only compound and complexify the originally astrological symbolism. Tarot is meant to be a "mystery," and each shuffling of the deck represent a unique astrological alignment. I Ching, on the other hand, is a straight-forward code which breaks down into environmental rather than astrological attributes. There is no "mystery" of the I Ching; it is simply a system of lines representing units of data. It is not art, open to interpretation. And, as I say, just as Zen Taoism succeeds in making the I Ching artistic, Rosicrucianism has succeeded in multiplying the number of systems based on the art of the tarot. Michel Nostradamus, French physician and sooth-sayer, and John Dee, Elisabethan Magus, were both aware of cartomancy's use as a method of expression for astrological symbolism. It's my opinion they began the Rosicrucian movement's use of art on gambling cards as a means of divination. It's also my opinion that the astrological system was, at that time, combined with a series of images based on the Book of Revelation in the form of the tarot. While the I Ching has proven to successfully predict environmental events attributable to actual astrological influences, the tarot, as I say again, has failed to simplify the original astrological system by use of imagery, and has inspired instead a veritable "confusion of the tongues" over what constitutes a proper arrangement of the system. What I'm going to work with in creating a "good" equivalent to this "evil" tarot system will be incorporating the I Ching into the 72 Shemhamforash system. However, because of that, we have to try to keep the I Ching attributes out of this "demonic" deck. I intend to research the pantheons of Sumeria and the Yucatan to arrange traits of attributes on the "good" tree, but, again, even though these same are the actual origin for the traits in this "evil" deck, we should also exclude them from it, and keep the "evil" attributes exclusively demonic. Now all of these things I know about the tarot: it's "traditional" use among the Rosicrucians was to combine images from Revelation with an astrological system for use as a "divinatory tool." But I don't know anything about the recent RPG-type cards using in gambling games. Since we both agree, however we define "traditional" tarot as a "divinatory tool," that we don't want this demonic, evil deck to degenerate into such as the recent RPG-type card-decks, again however we may think to define such, it may be helpful to exchange information on both the topics of "traditional" tarot and modern RPG-decks. I've mentioned what I know on my end, to the effect I know more about "traditional" tarot than the average aspirant and less about RPGs than Adam. Is putting unique attributes on the back of each card isn't a step toward making the deck more like an RPG deck and less like "traditional" tarot? It seems like that to me, however, as I say, I know nothing about the modern RPG-type decks, so I could easily be wrong. On the other hand, I very much like having the "back" of the cards representing a "third" position in their use. I just want the backs of all the cards to be the same. If you can elaborate more on why we would want to use the back-position as unique to each card, though, I may change my mind later on. For now however, I think the backs of all the cards should be the same. The sigils, if depicted, can appear on the fronts and any additional attributes or descriptions can go in an accompanying pamphlet. That would be my vote. Now, as I've said also, the "look and feel" of the entire deck is, ultimately, up to you at this point, so if you want to make the deck a certain way, ultimately you don't even owe me any explanation of why, you can just go ahead and do it. Likewise, if you end up taking the St. Simon arrangement for the demonic tarot I suggest in the TOD.pdf, and making an RPG game out of it, all the better, especially in terms of saleability and capitalisation, however it would represent a significant divergence from my original intent in raising the suggestion for such a project in the TOD.pdf. This, again, is not a bad thing. It imbalances our ratio of ultimate earnings from the project, but increases them overall too. Moreover, as I've said, I'm completely indifferent regarding the "demonic" nature of these attributes being applied in non"traditional" and unorthodox ways. I only reserve the right to work on the "good" version of this project, and ultimately don't care about the outcome of this "evil" aspect of it much at all. The less the better actually. BTW, and neither here nor there, but I still haven't talked to D about the placement of the sigils in the various arrays (the combined ToK&L and the tarot spread). To my mind, the backbone of this project should be in comparing the 72 goetic attributes to the 50 names of Marduk and the 22 QSG, finding out which one of the Goetia is equivalent to which one of the names and the QSG, etc. However, as I say, this will require work comparing the Sumerian and Mayan pantheons which I have not yet done. I'm glad you're enjoying the work you're doing on Belphegor. So far all your work for this project has been great. Stick to the ten royals for now though, I guess, because the rest of the attributes may end up being arranged in a different order. Or not. I hate this project. It's so up-in-the-air all the time. Like spinning plates. Ah well, I've ranted and rambled enough for now, I'll let ya go. I hope you're well, and to hear from you soon. Peace,

-Jon

Before the coming of the Great Burner, who awaits below, He sends His messenger, the sin-bearer.

"What are your crimes," asks the sin-bearer, "that I may be blamed for them, and thus absolve you of your own responsibility for them." But this is a deception. All that they blame the sin-bearer for will be written down, and this message will be carried back to the Great Burner, who yet sleeps in the Underworld.

The sin-bearer is right to claim himself the true messiah, because he is none other than the son of the Great Burner. The Great Burner sends his own son as his messenger before him. This son then asks the people to confess their sins. These sins are then counted up, like the tax collected by census, and held as against all the people, "until their seventh generation," such that, if I were to sin (God-forbid), then even if seven generations of my direct, blood, genetic descendents were devoutly sinless, my sin would still count against them at the time of their death, and be weighed against their own deeds to determine how they will enter the after-life.

How do we know all this? It's in the bible, old and new testament. The above clause was given in the covenants of Noah, Abraham, Moses, David, etc. and the sin-bearer himself was the subject of the Gospels. The idea of the sin-bearer, that is, a sacrificial goat, lamb, offspring, etc. was considered the epitome of Satanism even at the time of Jesus. So, when Jesus preached that he was the sin-bearer, they killed him, and justly, but, by doing so, fell into proving his point for him.

How do we know that Jesus was the sin-bearer, the son of the Great Burner? Because he used IRONY, the Law of the Universe, that is, the Law of the Great Burner (established by him to document his own superiority to the mere religion of the "universal" Messiah). By using the Law of Irony, Jesus rightly, properly proved that he was the sin-bearer, the promised Saviour, the coming Messiah, etc. by using society to act out the ritual of sacrificing him. He, the Christ, so proved that the title, Christ, held authority to control society. Like the title of Caesar, the bloodlines of both Jesus (Christ) and Julius (Anti-Christ) have waged war by using society's masses against one another.

Therefore, it was because Jesus used irony to control society (ie. saying people should live one way - richly, then doing the opposite himself - living poorly), and thus confused the minds of the masses, that we know he was the true sin-bearer. However, the political structure (ie. the Roman Empire) that caused this scenario to be acted-out by anyone with a mind to do so is what was being acted-out socially, like the play-within-a-play, and that is how the rulers confused the masses into accepting their continuing rule, behind the scenes, of an invisible empire of the spirit.

Since then, loyal followers of the true sin-bearer have dutifully confessed each sin to those minions of the Anti-Christ, who have promised to keep these "Akashic" records secretly sacred, awaiting the return of their saviour as a judge, sitting "at the right hand of" the Great Burner. Just as Jesus' Law, the Law of Irony, supposedly governs the entire universe, so then, they reason, the Great Burner must be either from Beyond the universe (ie. from a spiritual heaven) or otherwise descended from the universe itself into a human form alive on earth at the time of the end of days.

Of course, all of this is superstition, a form of trans-temporal terrorism. It allows the records to be kept "in secret" because it presumes the masses would revert to lawlessness unless governed by those who keep them so. If it were ever revealed there ARE no records, nor any NEED for any, those twin and ever-warring factions, the blood-lines of the victim and the user, would be revealed as useless, and our rulers would indeed be toppled in a revolution. Whether such would, actually, lead to lawlessness has never been tested. Considering mankind's penchant for survival, I doubt it actually would.

The Catholic church, the modern Roman Empire of Caesar, in the name of the sin-bearer, does collect oral record of all our sins. But they do not confess them against themselves. Priests are promoted as a "radio for speaking to God." God never answers back through them, but we listen to their guidance and heed their advice when they lecture us from the pulpit because they know all our sins, and thus are better fit to know our best interests. In truth they do not, no one does. Each of us is our own best leader because each of us is our own harshest judge.

By collecting our sins orally, the priests set themselves up as being necessary to the continued safe government of the people. They provide a form of catharsis, such that, by confessing our guilt, we relieve the same tensions we experience from stress, despite such being caused by others, and not being our own fault. What is worse, since they supposedly "absolve" us of sin by the Communion, we are free to behave as we wish.

In truth, however, we are all free to behave as we wish anyway. Sin is guilt. If we sin, and sin boldly, it will be seen as a heroic victory over the evil of self-doubt, and so not even counted against us, but can serve the good of our own chosen groups in society. Such is the use of the Law of Irony. Although it has not been employed by any single individual since the time of Christ, only by groups of conspirators for their own group's benefit, the power to control society by tricking it into doing your will for you is the "Divine Right" of no one more so than everyone. No priest nor politician, monarch or emperor, is a more fit leader for any individual than is the individual for themselves.

So, why does it appear so many people follow the cult of Christianity, and believe in Jesus as the sin-bearer, messenger of the Great Burner, who will come to us on Judgment Day? Because a small group, 2000 years ago, set out to record the events of the New Testament as a way of increasing belief in the sin-bearer for mankind had already appeared. None of those whose faith Jesus shared believe in this Christian myth. Instead, we all live simply and enjoy life as much as possible. We do not care what our "leaders" tell us to do, so long as it does not affect us personally. We do not believe in Messiahs or Gods, we only believe in using such ideas as a means of manipulating others (ie. the masses) to get them to do our will, that is, bear our share of the burden of necessary labour as well as their own, and allow themselves to be conscripted to die for causes we think up during our free-time. This is not a "Jewish" faith. This is the faith of everyone non-Christian. I call this faith "Gnosticism."

Gnosticism encourages every individual to make use of the Laws of controlling the material universe, that is, the Laws such as use of Irony to captivate a crowd, misdirection, other magical tricks, etc. However, afterlife or not, Gnostics the world over understand that "what goes around comes around" mentality of some Christians, which we have codefined as the Law "Harm None, Lest Ye Be Harmed." The degree to which we use our influence to control society in ways that fail to benefit any other individuals, the more likely we will be excised from society by strangers, our friends, lovers and even by ourselves.

Gnostics do not believe in the "sin-bearer" myth, nor the myth of the coming "Great Burner." We do not need to. We do, however, need to be aware that these sorts of myths are being used to trick too many of our comrades into servitude to causes that do not benefit themselves, nor any group they would benefit from, but instead that their good faith is being tricked into the service of those who use and control society who would also like to see the masses of society exterminated.

So we, non-Christians, look at the small cult of Christians and wonder at their eschatology, and at how their allegiance (under the added heat of global warming and sunspots) makes them increasingly dangerous due to their self-sacrificial unto self-destructive emulation of their Master's "Passion-play." And so, to fulfill the prophecies of Revelation, just as Jesus supposedly said he had come to fulfill the prophecies of those who'd gone before him, this small group of radical Christians, the neo-Sethians, have been acting out the "End of Days" by manipulating society towards its own destruction most actively for the past 100 years.

There are countless examples where one event in recent history has been made to align with some "prophecised" event or another. Consider the first world war battle of Armeggedon. Consider the similarity to the orchestrated event of 9-11 and the tarot trump the "Lightning Struck Tower." Consider the "Left Behind" series by Tim LaHaye and its similarities in premise to so many modern movies. Consider the focus on end-of-the-world catastrophe movies around the year 2000. Consider the outlandish "conspiracy theories" regarding Prince Phillip. Would any of these have been possible to consider 600 years ago, let alone so prevalent even 100 years ago, as they are today?

It is clear the prophecy was written, and then the event was orchestrated to correspond with it after the fact. Is it not clear they are counting down to the end of their own religion? Would their faith not finalise in their own Messiah's return, as promised? They believe that, if they bring about the "End of Days" on earth themselves, it will force Jesus to re-appear.

Jesus was only one in a pantheon of Gods, the Christians secretly believe. He was the son of God, but equal to other angels, so-called "demi-Gods" less than the One True God His Father. Some believe that, in the pre-mortal existence, Jesus was an equal with Lucifer, and many of the old myths originally about Adam are being re-applied to Jesus, specifically Adam's ritual "naming" of all things, now attributed to his "highness" the "Word."

They believe, like the ancient Egyptians, that in the moment of death (for Egyptians of the King, for the Christians the world) there is a "final judgment." The Christians believe Jesus came as a Saviour 2000 years ago, and will re-appear as a Judge at the end of Days. But who is Satan? The word means "adversary," but this originally meant "accusing lawyer." So if Jesus is a Judge, and Satan an attorney, as we are led to believe by modern movies and ancient axioms, then they must be separate entities for the purpose of play-acting certain events and scenes to fulfill prior prophecies. The End of Days scenario has traditionally manifested as a Final Judgment, with Satan accusing humanity and Jesus defending us, with God, the father of us all, as judge.

The ancient Egyptians called the God of Judgment Maat. The Christians expect it to be Jesus who is their judge. The neo-Sethians wish to sacrifice us all to Maat.

On the extreme right is Thoth, the Egyptian moon-scribe, counting the man's days.
On the inner left is Anubis, the Egyptian God of corporeal death.
On the inner right sits Sobek, the guardian of Hades.
In the centre sits the scale of Maat, Goddess of Judgment.

Where the Egyptians saw Khnum as our creator, the monotheists since Akhenaten have replaced Khnum with the monotheist God, originally a God of the sun, and then, since the time of Jesus - "son of the sun-God" - the monotheist God has been inflated to include the entire universe. Anubis, Sobek and Thoth were thus the Egyptian version of the Christian "Trinity," who presided over the Judgment at the time of our death. This myth, this disgusting ancient fiction, that we are judged at the time of our death, is Egyptian in origin. In Sumeria (modern Iraq) and ancient Canaan (modern Israel) they buried their bodies, and in Aryan India they immolated them. Only in Egypt did the art of preservation of royal corpses lead to the idea of an elaborate Final Judgment, and only in Christianity has this dangerous cult, the neo-Sethians, used this myth as a justification to bring us closer to the "Apocalypse," the "Day of Redemption," the "Final Judgment," etc. ie. the destruction of our planet and the death of all it's species.

We Gnostics know that Jesus was not the true "sin-bearer" to come as a messenger before the Great Burner. We know this because, though he was indeed the product of human society, and thus the "Son of Man," he himself was only a mortal man, who, whether or not the nature of his soul was in anyway superior to one's own, lived in the mortal body named Jesus for his lifetime. So, we assume the premise, Jesus was a man, mortal or not, resurrected or not, etc. We assert the first part, that Jesus was a person, or took the form of one, etc. however we do not believe, nor can we allow ourselves to ever agree with those who do believe, that Jesus was the messenger of the Great Burner. Why? Because we know the "Sin-Bearer" is not a man. The Sin-Bearer is the End of Days scenario itself. It is the coming of the Great Burner that will follow this.

We, Gnostics, all agree that Jesus was a construct of Roman society, a "play within a play" meant to distract us from the assassination of Julius Caesar at Rome's heart that then was seized upon by them as a means of securing the empire of Caesar forever, as a psychic-empire over the minds of men. And so they leach away part of our capacity for individual creative thought to this day. Imagine a world where the idea of "God" had never arisen in the western mind. Imagine that the peoples of the ancient middle-east had been as content to worship existence as eastern Buddhists or western Cherokee. We Gnostics personally KNOW God, and therefore we do not blindly believe he exists without knowing whether or not he really does.

So, if Jesus was the peak psychic experience possible by humanity, then he was our messenger to the Sin-Bearer, a sacrifice to a false and lesser God. We sent Jesus as our representative, ahead of his followers, into the "unknown" realms of the spiritual afterlife. We are conditioned to expect his "Second-Coming" will coincide with the "End of Days," which is, likewise, being socially orchestrated now. So, the "Second Coming" of Jesus is the "End of Days, yet the End of Days itself is only the sin-bearer. 24 years before the coming of the Great Burner, the world of mankind and his society will be destroyed. The ones responsible will hide from their folly underground. For this reason, they will not be expecting the coming of the Great Burner, and so the last few people left alive on earth by that time will be taken by surprise by the Great Burner, "like a thief in the night," and God be praised if any living thing is left alive on our planet after that!

The neo-Sethians are planning to annhiliate humanity, decimate the surface of the earth, and escape to bases deep underground. Let me tell you what prophecy is: prophecy is 9-11. 9-11 was a warning. It signals the twin destructions of humanity and of all life on earth. The scales are weighed thus, in the minds of those evil neo-Sethian Christians, who believe in the "Second-Coming" of Jesus as a Judge of all the living and the dead: on the one hand, they reason, by reducing the population of humanity, it will benefit the remainder by securing them safe-shelter at the end of earth, and if there are survivors left above ground, they will be easily subdued by those unaffected underground; on the other hand, so they reason, we have the option to preserve society as it is, which we all agree is a construct permeated by greed and corruption, however, by directing all our attention as humans to the Great Burner as an enemy, a destroyer, and not a Saviour, or a Redeemer, then we might manage to preserve society, and save the majority of our species as well, and even save the earth itself, simply by preventing the coming destruction.

However, to the minds of the neo-Sethians, who believe that by bringing about the end of days it will force Jesus to return as their saviour, their defender, as their leader, etc. it is more reasonable, safer for them, and more moral, to destroy the majority of us and to hide underground. Here is why: the sign of the burning star will appear in the sky as a signal of the coming Great Burner. This star is Lucifer, whose approach is revealed as Satan, the enemy of life on earth. People will panic, reason the neo-Sethians, and destroy themselves. Therefore, so that the precious few who could survive such a fate underground may be allowed to do so, it is wiser to give the people no prior warning of the danger we are all in. Those who would resist them near the bases can be contained in camps, and then they, along with everyone else, will be annihilated. By masking their responsibility behind the "Painted Sky" illusion, they will throw any survivors above ground into disarray. Humanity, believe the neo-Sethians, will revert to savagery. Then they will rule them from the skies when they go above ground, and so finally, morally, justify the destruction of the earth.

I tell you, the Great Burner was named Marduk in Babylon, but this name had been used by the monotheists of the time to replace the names of all the pantheon of Sumeria, the land that became Babylon. Marduk replaced Enki, Enlil, etc. So to which Marduk, the Great Destroyer, the Killer of the Gods, then does the Great Burner refer? Nibiru. Nibiru. Nibiru. Three times I have now warned you. And let it serve as a warning also to those "Gods" of Nibiru, said to have genetically bred human-kind.

Let Nibiru, therefore, never come. Let it be not Apophis, nor Orcus, nor Anubis, etc. that shall come down from the heavens and consume the earth in a leveling wave of fire. And let us cast not this non-planet into the sun either, lest the sun become enflamed to consume us, and so we meet the same end. And let us not destroy ourselves, in the name of Love, and Peace, and Righteousness: Amun.

Let me tell you: I have tried to prevent this. I have written fiction after fiction, and fact after fact, hoping someone would listen, that someone would understand. No one has. No one will. So let me tell you again: Nibiru, popularly called Apophis, called Orcus by scientists in NASA, called Marduk by the Babylonians and firstly called Nibiru, home of the Gods, by the Sumerians is on a collision course with earth. In 2012, the NASA scientists say, there will be a brief "window" of opportunity for us to deflect Nibiru off this collision course. If, however, we do not act in 2012, when the planet circles round the sun and comes back across our orbit again in 2036, it will collide with our little blue jewel, and break the planet in half. This, claim the Sumerian historical records, has happened in the past. It will, therefore, happen again. And, in the past, when earth was formed from Tiamat, Nibiru was the victor, so, again, shall Nibiru emerge the stronger one in the coming contest of 2036.

The Mayans predicted the end of time as 2012 for a specific reason. They understood that it would present not only a time of great technological opportunity on earth, but also a time of direct contact with the residents of Nibiru, whom the Sumerians had called "Gods." The alien "Watchers," for such is the translation of the "Anunaki" pantheon of Sumeria, will either welcome us as brothers, or will want to destroy us. In the past, at the time of the world-flood, a disaster caused by Nibiru's last passage near earth, they have chosen to save some of us and let the majority of us die. So the prophecies of God, the Messiah, and the End of Days: "no one shall know the date nor the time of the coming."

There are those within the occult, for within the occult this knowledge has been preserved since it was originally written, in Sumeria, and understood in parallel with the "Judeo-Christian" bible, that believe the Nibiruins will deal us the same fate again this time. They will want to save some of us, but let the majority of us perish without warning. However, the neo-Sethians have been cautious. They have taken precaution to build the underground bases, in case the Nibiruins are indifferent or wish to aid in our destruction. It is possible they intend to hide the survival of human-kind from the Nibiruins by destroying the majority of us themselves.

Let me show you something: This is the depiction of the events described in Tablet 2 of the "Lost Book of Enki," the basis of all western religious mythology from the most ancient time of Sumeria, wherein the prior collision between Nibiru and Tiamat is described. Confer also the Enuma Elish, the "Babylonian Genesis," although the name Nibiru has, in that case, been replaced with that of Marduk.

Here we see "Marduk" (the Great Burner, Nibiru) in red.

Those planets unaffected by this disaster are represented in black.

Those in blue and green are those planets whose orbital sequence was changed.

LAHAMU (Venus)

LAHMU (Mars)

MUMMU (Mercury)

TIAMAT / KI (earth)

KINGU (earth's moon)

KISHAR (Saturn)

ANSHAR (Jupiter)

AN (Neptune)

ANTU (Uranus)

Such was written 6000 years ago as having occurred "in the Beginning." The beginning of history recorded by Sumerians actually starts with this event, and chronicles the time between it and the time when mankind first appeared on the earth from the point of view of aliens living on the planet Nibiru. These aliens "descended to earth in ships from the sky," crafted our species by genetic manipulation, and were known to the earliest civilisations in Sumeria as "Gods."

This is a terrible catastrophe. Those who have known this have, for thousands of years, conspired to keep this secret from the majority of humanity. This campaign for secrecy continues to this day. I am writing this as a desperate, last chance warning, in the hope that anyone who reads this will understand the severity of the coming catastrophe. There is, however, nothing any of us can do to prevent this individually. Nor can we hope to survive by any means we as individuals can take. Our fates are entirely in the hands of our leaders. Our leaders, at this time, are a small faction of neo-Sethian, Second-Coming Christians, within the occult, and thus, though a rogue faction pit against all others, in possession of the information regarding Nibiru and its coming collision with earth.

We have to begin making psychic contact, en masse, with the residents of Nibiru and warn them. Our leaders on this planet are irresponsible and plan to destroy us. We have to put our faith, therefore, in the leaders of Nibiru, and hope their technology can not only prevent the collision of their home-planet with ours, but can also remove our leaders from power and prevent them from destroying us all. It is unfortunate, however, that the underground bases and flight technology available to this rogue faction of our leaders seem to have been based on alien technology, and thus an argument can be made to support the idea the Nibiruins wish to exterminate us all as well.

It is likely that many of the residents of Nibiru are as unaware of this terrible collision as are the majority of people on earth, and will be caught as unaware by it as we will be. We have to trust they will be more benevolent than our own leaders. We have to assume the average Nibiruian does not want the average earthling to have to die, even if it would mean saving the planet of one or the other of them. We have to assume the people of both worlds will unite in the common good of us all, even if this means overthrowing our own, as well as our brother planet's, leaders.

But we have so little time. We have enough weapons to destroy Nibiru. But we do not have the technology to divert it's course without using destructive weapons. We know they have the technology to divert earth's orbit using gravitational means that do not require destruction by weapons. However, they do not have the capacity to divert their own planet's course and prevent themselves from colliding with us. In short, even in the best case scenario, that is, if in 2012, the Nibiruins use their gravitational technology to divert the course of one or both of our planets from colliding, the result will be an extreme climatological change on the planet whose orbit is altered. This could, conceivably, heal Nibiru's allegedly failing atmosphere however, more likely, it will destroy the sustainability for life on whichever planet's orbit is altered. In short, regardless of anything else, should Nibiru even exist as described by the ancient Sumerians, it will only be a matter of time until our planet and it confront one another and, in this case, no matter what else, only one will survive. And, from current predictions regarding the "asteroid" Apophis, this time is terribly near.

Life on earth and life on Nibiru will have to end as we have known it. It is more likely the Nibiruins will value Nibiru's longer life-spans. It is more likely humanity will value earth's more temperate climate. Thus, we must choose between the tree of longer life-spans, and the tree of faster evolution. However, either way, the residents of Nibiru and earth are going to have to A) co-exist, B) inter-breed and C) evolve into a single new species. They will also have to choose as soon as they meet for the first time which planet they want to live on: earth or Nibiru. However, whichever planet they choose, the other will be destroyed. Earth is the Garden of Eden, and Nibiru is described as a volcanic inferno, however the individual's life-span on earth is barely 120 years, while the average life-span on Nibiru is in the thousands of years. Consider how frail is human life. Then consider the advantages of living on a planet that had developed space-travel several thousand years ago. etc. The debate goes on, but can have but one possible conclusion:

Either earth or Nibiru is going to be destroyed.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/ApophisNibiru.jpg>[/img]

Here is an artist's rendition of the planet Nibiru, the "Great Burner," or rather, one of the twin Burners. For even Nibiru has an equal, and it's equal is the sun. The solar flares caused by the close passage of Nibiru to the sun are a dangerous factor that also should not be ignored. The massive solar storms of 2003 were probably caused by the grand-cross alignment of the seven closest planets to the sun in 2000. So, we know that, if Nibiru will circle around past earth in 2012, and re-approach us in 2036, that we have 24 years between our first and second encounter. However, when the planets aligned, it took the sun three years before showing any reaction to this combined gravitational effect. During the passage of Nibiru, however, the sun's activity will be much greater, and take affect much faster. Thus, while Nibiru is passing through our solar system, the sunspot cycle (peaking in 2012) will coincide with the sun's hottest temperatures for thousands of years. So, when I say that Nibiru is the "Great" Burner, and the sun is the "Twin" Burner, I mean they are the twin-headed Satan, whose evil-eye is Maloch, and who art the disease and destroyer of worlds. I tell you truly, in our lifetimes this will all come to pass. It is 2008 while I write this. In 2012, Apophis, Nibiru, the Great Burner, will pass near to earth. At this time earth will align with the sun and galactic core in the constellation Saggitarius. Also at this time the sunspot cycle will reach a peak achieved only every 2000 years, marked by an increase of solar flares and prominences. I believe it is in this year they plan to impliment Martial Law, begin an intercontinental, thermo-nuclear war, then seek shelter in underground military installations. Between 2012 and 2036, they plan to destroy the majority of earth's surface population, and to reduce the remainder to controllable numbers. It is likely they plan to emigrate from earth to Nibiru at this time, and thus witness from space the final destruction of our beautiful planet.

Nibiru and earth will collide in 2036 if we do not act on the oppurtunity to divert the planet in 2012 when it first approaches us. It is probable that, in so doing, we can heal the supposed rift in Nibiru's atmosphere to patch which they originally came to earth in search of monoatomic elements. By re-aligning their orbit, we can heal their atmosphere. But I fear it is too late for this option. I fear it is far too late and that this option has not yet been properly explored. Instead, the neo-Sethians have established HAARP and project BlueBeam. In 2012, they will holographically fake an alien invasion of earth as an initial justification for starting the thermo-nuclear war. By the time the nukes are in the air, however, it will already be too late. This is going to occur in 2012. It is 2008 now. Think about this, think long and probe this complex issue from all sides. We are not being told by our "leaders," the neo-Sethians, about a great many things. They have manipulated society using irony for the last 100 years in imitation of ancient prophecies of the Apocalypse and so come into power over the majority of the world. They plan to destroy us. If we survive this, we will not survive the possible impact of earth and Nibiru in 2036.

I cannot stress this enough: you have heard me discuss, in the past, conspiracy thoeries. Let me assure you, this motive unifies them all: to conceal from the populace the imminent destruction of our species and our planet by a rogue alien planet. I have been calling this rogue alien planet the "Great Burner." Let me assure you, it's name is Nibiru, and Marduk, and Apophis, and Orcus, and you shall all mark my words when it appears like the morning star in the sky. It will grow closer and closer, and beam brighter and brighter. I will tell you now, as Jesus went ahead of his followers into the Ineffable Mystery, so have I seen ahead these few years in time, and have brought back this insanity, as Jesus brought back the myth of his own Second Coming, the resurrection of the dead, and the Final Judgement.

Let me tell you what I see in our nation's future one of two things can happen in the next year.

Either the CFR candidates (McCain and Obama) will stage an election, and the full executive powers established by President Bush pass to one or the other of them, they will not do away with these new executive powers, and will instead be imbued with the ability to establish a dictatorship in the United States. The current administration, if they are so deposed, may themselves stage another "9-11" attack on American soil, and thus give their replacement in the administration a justification to use their new executive powers to declare domestic martial law and begin a thermo-nuclear war that will quickly spread to and decimate the remaining nations. Our planet, by the end of our next president's term, will be destroyed, and it's leaders, or rather, it's usurpers, will all have escaped into underground military installations. Such is the fate wished to be carried out by those who believe that, by destroying the majority of earth's own populations, it will bring about the "End of Days" foretold in the Book of Revelation. This option seems to lead to terrifying consequences. So let us consider an alternative:

If we act on impeachment proceedings against our current president, George W. Bush, we can also raise the issue of the legality of the executive powers he has created. Whether or not the current administration is impeached in Congressional hearings, ala Watergate, or tried after leaving office by the World Court for war-crimes, ala Nuremberg, either way, whether they are found guilty or not, the issue of the illegality of their added executive powers must be addressed, and these additional executive powers as quickly as possible repealed. The result of the deprivation of these additional executive powers from our current administration, or from any to follow

(sponsored by the CFR or not), is the empowerment of the people, the protection of the majority of our human species from extermination and the avoidance of an apocalyptic thermo-nuclear war.

This is why, for me, it is so pivotal for you, our United States Congress, to support Rep. Kucinich's Articles of Impeachment in the coming months, during the Judicial Committee hearings on this issue. It is extremely important to us, that is, the entire human species alive now, that you all make your support for this movement as vocal as possible, because if you do not speak up for us now, it will make those of us who are aware of the potentially deadly consequences of these additional executive powers powerless to protect ourselves from those who wield them later.

It is not a question of whether the current administration themselves have abused these additional executive powers or not. The question is as to these additional executive powers' legality. Whether Bush and Cheney are impeached or not, these additional executive powers have to be repealed before they can be used to impliment martial law within our own borders and begin a cataclysmic world war that could only result in a mass extinction. Please, I beg you, our elected representatives, on behalf of we, your people, repeal these executive powers now.

Thank you for your time in reading this,
most respectfully,
-Jon Gee

dear Danny,

I hope you don't mind if I call you by your "real" name here. I've called you so many variations of your "screen" name while slandering your publically, I'd like to keep these letters on a more personal level, so you know I am really trying to keep "on the level" here, whether you believe me that I didn't mean any of the slanderous things I've said about, or called, you before. I'd like to talk more about why I'd done this, and I'll try to come back to this at the end of this letter. First, let's talk briefly about "the con in general."

Firstly, the mp3 I'd sent you before was from Myron Fagan's 1950's recording. In the 1950's the Pike Mazzini letter was known of. This means that, even if the use of the terms "Communism" and "NAZIism" can be used as a means of discrediting the letter's authenticity to it's alledged date of origin, the discussion attributed to it regarding the motives used to foment the "Third World War" itself remain prescient because, as of the 1950's when this recording was made, only the Shah of Iran had been overthrown, and no such "terrorist" threat was associated with the Moslem nations of the Middle-East. By this I mean that, even if the letter itself was not authentic, the fact remains it has been, and is being, carried out.

As a side note, Fagan proposes the Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion was actually written (or rather, "revised," with at least the term "goyim" being added) by Adam Weishaupt himself. I'd like to discuss this possibility with you further, to see if you may have found any evidence independently that could verify or invalidate this hypothesis. (I joined the IOBB originally to find any original writings of Weishaupt that were, or could be, translated to English.)

Now, regarding the "Third World War," my most recent research indicates that this is, indeed, to be the plan. However, to call it a war in a traditional sense is misleading. A better term would be "thermo-nuclear apocalypse."

One reason I place so much blame at the foot of the Catholic religion is their belief in the "Apocalypse," the substance of the Book of Revelation, including the Battle of Aramaggedon, the coming of an "Anti-Christ" (although this term is not mentioned in Revelations), and the "End of Days" culminating in the return of Jesus as a judge. This fairytale is harmless, aside from the people who believe in it. The authorities who believe in the "second coming" (I call them neo-Sethians) believe that, by causing an "end of days" scenario to come about, it will force the return of Jesus, who will then forgive them for having brought it about. (Consider the first world war battle at Meggido, the three anti-Christ of Nostradamus, and the establishment of Israel as the "Promised Land.") Essentially, the people with their fingers on the button believe that Jesus will favour them if they destroy the world. You can be scared of Israel all you like; it's this that frightens me:

my recent research has led me to believe the following:

1) a comet / asteroid / planetoid from the Oort Belt is headed toward our planet. NASA has released info (available on youtube) about the "comet" Apophis. In 2012, Apophis will make a "near-miss" pass by earth. According to NASA, this is our one chance to act and deflect Apophis. If we do nothing in 2012, Apophis will circle around and, in 2036, collide with earth and destroy it utterly. Nothing can survive this, if it occurs.

2) there are many known "underground military installations" that have built since the 1950's in the US and, presumably, elsewhere around the world. These installations were originally planned to be used as "bomb shelters" in the event of a nuclear war with Russia. The result of this contingency plan established "Continuity of Government," a secret back-up for the executive branch, supported by the military. These COG offices and departments have all been greatly strengthened since 9-11.

3) there are also many, many, many concentration camps that have been built and are being maintained in the US and elsewhere around the world. In the US, these are maintained by FEMA as "emergency population control centres," and are built on land sold by the US to the UN. Many of these concentration camps are near "underground military installations."

4) there are also, and I know this sounds far-fetched, installations such as HAARP and the south-pole observatory (supposedly being used to track Apophis) that can be used to create a massive optical illusion, ie. mass mind-control. I have no evidence of this, but I believe that this technology, combined with cloaked aircraft (so-called "orbs" that have been filmed in or near "chem-trails") are related to the UFO phenomenon.

My conclusion regarding these aspects of the "conspiracy" is this:

In 2012, the COG will impliment Martial Law domestically within the US, and initiate a thermo-nuclear war that will rapidly decimate the entire globe. I do not know how or where this will begin, but ultimately these facts are irrelevant until they occur. I would speculate that, to conceal the threat of Apophis, an "alien" (UFO) invasion may be staged at this time using the existing technologies. In either event, the planned outcome is the same as that stated on the Georgia "Guide-stones," to reduce the surface population of earth to "manageable" numbers. At this time, the COG officials will seek shelter in the underground bases. In 2036, Apophis will strike earth and all those left on the surface will die. The COG officials will escape either by hiding underground or else off-world.

Some of the most outlandish research I've done involves the "Montauk Project," allowing the creation of inter-planetary and possibly even inter-stellar "time-tunnels" to be opened. This research has been, alledgedly, conducted in the underground military installations, and could, thus, be used to account for how the COG "neo-Sethians" plan to escape Apophis.

Again, none of this matters, aside from those who are aware of it and are using this knowledge to manipulate the possible outcomes to allow their own survival. In other words, none of this needs to occur in this way, however it seems to me now that those who believe it will are going to make it happen in this way regardless of necessity.

For example, I do not believe Albert Pike had a "vision." I do believe, however, that those involved in occult secret societies have preserved ancient histories that allow them to predict certain events based on their cyclical nature. For example, the "Lost Book of Enki," recently translated by Zechariah Sitchin, explains Apophis as "Nibiru," home of the alien "Gods" who fashioned our species by genetic manipulation. Now, whether or not such myths are accurate is irrelevant beside the fact that those who believe they are have their fingers on the button.

If you haven't read the "Lost Book of Enki" yet, I highly recommend it. It's available as an e-book on scribd, but I've also made an online version of it here:

<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/ENKI/synopses.html> I highly recommend you check it out, particularly "tablets" 1 and 2. I've recorded myself reading from these, and will link you to an mp3 once I'm done editing music to them.

In conclusion, I do hope you can accept my apologies for my treatment of you in the past. I thought then, and still think, it wiser for us to maintain a relationship of equality of our opinions in secret, while publically juxtaposing our points of view. If this seems too "Masonic" a technique, consider the most advantageous way to topple an enemy is to turn their own strategies against them. Think "plausible deniability" and you'll understand where I've been coming from on this. Again, however, if you'd prefer a different relationship, I will be happy to let this strategy go.

As to "doing good," I feel such guilt over what my interior composition is like I can't believe that "doing good" comes from "inside." Doing, in itself, implies taking that which is interior and applying it to the exterior world. However, how can we know what is "good"? To those we consider evil, they consider themselves good. When they bring forth what we call evil, they believe they are doing good. It's all quite confusing to me, and I'm afraid I'm out of time for now. Anyway, I'm extremely glad to hear from you and to know you're doing well. Peace.

Apocalypse Fire: The Great Tribulation and Wrath of God

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Xr6A6l8bWac>

this video doesn't technically address the divinity (Christ-hood) of Jesus at all. It can also be interpreted that he was only a prophet, like Mohammed, Ezekiel, Isaiah, etc. Besides, ancient astronomers (even the Anasazi in Arizona) have kept secret records, available only to initiates, that detail such cyclical destructions of our planet and the spontaneous mutation of any surviving species (not just the dinosaurs hundreds of millions of years ago, but even the animals saved "two by two" on Noah's ark during the Mesopotamian flood of 6000BC.). The Bible records the city of Enoch flourished for thousands of years between the expulsion from Paradise and the deluge. Can there be any doubt then that the city of Enoch was none other than the capitol of that "lost continent" (Antarctica, now beneath glaciers) that Plato called Atlantis? It's not what you believe that matters. It's what you do with what you believe that matters.

Let there be an end to this perpetual ending. The axe hanging over our neck. But I am not a pessimist; I say again: "Let there be an end to this perpetual ending." I did not say, "let the end come," or "let the world end." If "this perpetual ending" were to end, the world would not end with it. Only the dread of the ending shall pass, and this can only occur when no ending actually comes. I am not a pessimist; I do not say, "let the axe fall," or "Hail Eris." I know my prayers will not be able to prevent that which has been ordained (momentum) from the beginning (inertia), however. I pray: "let the end of the ending times come. Come, come, let it be, now, done and over with." But nothing I can say or do can change one jot nor tittle in the book of permanent destinies. No matter how hard I squint my eyes and wish with all my might, I cannot dint the course of events set in motion by the prime mover. Therefore, listen to me not, and heed not my warnings.

Chalk me up and brush me off as just another prophet of gloom and doom, a product of this death-crazed, calendar-maddened, self-destructive post-atomic society. I have only been driven mad by my frustration with the prevalent fear of the man-made Apocalypse, and therefore do not do as I do, and try to speak as if you were a God, but instead take pleasure from laziness and simple, trivial things. If you follow this advice, you will live happily until that day upon which you die. If, instead, you listen to my words now, and you fear in your heart the coming of the End of Days, brought about "by any means necessary" by those who believe in doing so, then leave your loved ones, bring your tools of labour, your hammers, spades, pick-axes and shovels, and follow me toward the gates of Hades.

[quote="benpadijah"]Come down now Marduk, welcome to Jam-Rock, third from the sun, the ninth from Nibiru, may Anu be praised, and long live the king.

Here on earth much has become changed. The elder Gods have all been killed. No more does the strange Leviathan Chthulu haunt the watery depths beneath the sea, Nessie is no more venerated. The chattle elect their own stars now using arbitrarily valued currency. Giants roam the land, but no one looks up to see down, no one looks below who goes above. There is no communication with the dead of this planet. The giants live behind the clouds. They worship the sun and moon, MARDUK and INANNA, and not the earth and sky, ENKI and ENLIL. This is a backwards age, for the Kali Yuga has only recently ended, and now there is a great doubt. They murder inside the Temples, and they drink wine as blood.

MARDUK and INANNA bore congress. Between them they disclosed the secrets of the MEs that INANNA had gambled away from ENKI, and MARDUK disclosed the secrets of the "tree" of life that ENKI had told him. Thus was ENKI's promise of earth to MARDUK fulfilled, and thus was ENLIL's promise of the first and second regions to INANNA fulfilled. Together, INANNA and MARDUK conspired to create a miracle. This would not be for the benefit of the Gods, they decided. They created the miracle to enslave to their revolution the people. When Nibiru returns, to overthrow it together, they planned. So, they have set about the process of performing the miracle. The miracle is the resurrection of DUMMUZI, the shepherd-king. To accomplish this feat, impossible for a human, but easy for the immortals of Nibiru, MARDUK and INANNA first established the myth of DUMMUZI with the people. They introduced the "myth of Christ" as a sacrifice ritual performed at the turn of a zodiac age. They introduced the myth of his return to life at the end of that zodiac age. They spread this myth around the world by funding oppositional front organisations and then weakening their support at a critical moment.

They used many techniques of high magick. They learned how to survive death themselves, by separating out from their own essence the "tree" of life, and thus to transfer their consciousness into an energy form produced by combining the gold processed for Nibiru at Bad-Tibira, the city of INANNA, with the "tree" extracted in the Abzu region under MARDUK. They became invisible to the eyes of the mortals, like ghosts.

The lifespan of the civilised slaves has shortened, while that of the lesser Gods has grown indefinite. To be rid of them, they can only be killed, they cannot die by any natural causes. This is a terrible catastrophe, considering that no human can accomplish this, only another God from Nibiru, and Nibiru's age has not yet come.

There is hope, however, in the Great Burner. You see, the myth of the slaughtered shepherd king, originally propagated as a myth of Osiris, has come to be associated instead with Thoth, the Great Architect. Instead of Osiris' resurrection (being possible for ASAR, born on Nibiru, but not for DUMMUZI, born on earth), the myth began to focus on the murder itself: the "Passion" of "Hiram." Likewise, the resurrection aspect (the revealing of Ra from the concealment of Amoun) began being pushed back and put off until the humans forgot that resurrection was possible for the ancient Gods, and even offered to Adam on Nibiru. Resurrection has become so rare and distanced an ideal it is venerated as a heavenly afterlife.

Now, INANNA and MARDUK have resurrected DUMMUZI, and he walks amongst us. For this final stage, MARDUK and INANNA use the power of their ghostly ability to possess the bodies of the humans less and less. They inhabit one body at a time more and more. They are coming out more into the open. When they are seeing through a human's eyes, when they are dwelling upon a human's mind, when they are in that human's heart, then they may be killed. Otherwise, if they remain nebulous and do not take shape, they are only energy. In the form of energy they are as much trapped on earth, in earth's Schumann resonant EM field and in earth's gravity well, as they are mortal while inside their mortal forms.

However, there is another hope. Before NINGISHZIDDA died, he trained someone of his own. Then he was killed by a man of MARDUK. This training involves the alchemical rarification of gold (and other platinum group metals) into a superconductor, and its bonding to the DNA in order to ascend into higher frequency vibrations in the body. This training also includes how to traverse the universe mentally, how to foresee the future by studying the cycles of the past, how to communicate using ESP, and how to manifest matter from nothing. Some of this information has become lost. Thoth taught all this to Imhotep, but Imhotep was killed, and his cult of Thoth replaced by Sargon's cult of Ra. The cult of Ra came to venerate the murder of Imhotep, the architect and healer. It became called Christianity. However the cult of Thoth, known also as the Order of Death, did not die with Imhotep. It continues on today, though secret.

It may be possible that those in the Order of Death, that is, the cult of Thoth, will be able to stop MARDUK and INANNA from conquering Nibiru as well as earth, however we should also consider the possibility that they fail, or that they become corrupt themselves, and desire to side with INANNA and MARDUK. There may be hope yet in deciphering the identity of the mysterious stranger GALZU. However, this remains a remote hope.

The identity of GALZU remains a mystery, but his message is clear: the time is running out for the Gods on earth; the longer they stay, the faster they age. They have already grown quite old, and their second generation now plot and scheme against them. The elder Gods are the Watchers, and I have been calling them by their Sumerian names as Gods of the ANNUNAKI pantheon, the same name used by Enoch in the Ethiopian translation of his apocrypha to describe the fallen angels who followed the rebel morning star. Their offspring with the wives of men have been called the Nefilim, and so the second generation of royal -blooded Gods of earth are also of the generation of Nefilim, though relatively more immortal. Among this second generation were DUMMUZI, MARDUK and NINGISHZIDDA, sons of ENKI, and NINURTA, son of ENLIL, and INANNA, grand-daughter of ENLIL. It should be worth mentioning that Adapa, the first priest-king and prototype of the biblical Adam, was a Nefilim, the son of ENKI and an australopithecine primitive-worker.

ENKI and ENLIL cannot help mankind, descendants of Adapa, the son of the God ENKI, against the plans of MARDUK, our brother, and INANNA, our niece. MARDUK and INANNA have become discorporeal sensations that pass from one person and place to the next like the smell of milk and honey soma floating on the breeze. He is called Chronozon, she Shekinah. But it is DUMMUZI the Christians expect the second coming of, and it was DUMMUZI they saw in the visage of Jesus, not Adapa, whose descendant surely he was. The Christian cult of MARDUK and INANNA has grown out of the ability of ENKI and ENLIL to control. They have sought to clone the corpse of Jesus, in order to bring back the mortal DUMMUZI as a symbol of their combined power. Failing that, their plan is to simply inhabit a body who is already alive and, through fever, induce the body to believe it is the reincarnation of DUMMUZI, or rather, to its mind, of Jesus.

You see, the clone of Jesus or the body chosen for the vessel of the second coming of Christ is simultaneously a receptacle, or net in which to catch, the Holy Spirit, the Ghost of DUMMUZI, and itself a child of humanity, the so-called "Son of Man," who was "not from woman born;" thus the ghost of DUMMUZI is made to inhabit a body that is the descendent of Adapa, and therefore of ENKI, the father of Adapa and of DUMMUZI. It is thought by MARDUK and INANNA that this will accomplish the resurrection of DUMMUZI: the combination of the Holy Ghost (comprised of a tachyonic morphogenetic field) and the bloodline descent of civilised man directly from the ruling bloodline of ANNUNAKI on Nibiru.

But let me tell you. NINGISHZIDDA, that is, Thoth, passed on for a reason. He ascended to retrieve the sprit of ASAR, that is, Osiris. That was when Sargon conquered what was built by Imhotep. That was when Zion was stolen from inside the Ark of the Temple by Menelik, son of Solomon and the Queen of Sheba. That was when Orion was hung upside down to cling to the sides of the bottomless pit (for his orientation of north-south downward from head to toe is reflected as south-north from head to toe in the alignment of the pyramids with his belt). History is a holograph recording the hologram of the past.

Thoth left the body, not to return himself, but to bring back the lost soul of Osiris from the underworld of the Duat. For the Duat is like the "hammered bracelet." It is like the Milky Way, that river of stars comprising our galaxy's disc-like edge. It is like a constantly flowing river. Its water is fate. The snow from whence the stream-water comes and the ocean of salt water to whence it goes are both destiny. Thus NAM is the moment and NAM.TAR the past and future. The Duat is a river of energy, ever-flowing, and it connects each heavenly sphere to every other through a very simple and very effective order. From the moon's poles the duat flows to those of the earth. From earth, the south to the south and the north to the north, the duat flows to the sun. From the sun thence to galactic core, and from there one black hole destination to another via wormhole transportation. Such is the Duat, a river of energy that bears the dead away like a body in a river-reed boat, and from whence they may be retrieved by going downstream to a later point.

Thoth did succeed in resurrecting Osiris, but that was long ago. Osiris now is thought of as the OHO, while Thoth is associated with the IHO. It has long been held that behind every dead king there is a powerful magician. This is even discussed in the theatrical Hamlet.

The resurrection of DUMMUZI, the sacrificed Jesus of 2000 years ago, in order to accomplish the miracle now, of the resurrection of that Jesus, and thus, to the Gods, of DUMMUZI, was not chosen at random. Jesus was carefully selected and tested all along the way. He believed he was being guided by signs and strange coincidences. It was MARDUK and INANNA. For Jesus, descendent of King David, was then the priest-king of ENLIL, brother of ENKI. By Gnosticism was Jesus guided to understand these brothers as YHVH (or Jave) and Elohim, the twin faces (good and evil) of a false God (ANU) lesser than the creator God of the One Destiny.

Jesus was, by blood, the descendent of Adapa (Adam) via Sati (Seth), and thus a descendent of the kingly line of ENKI. Jesus was, by his own self-selection, drawn into the priest-craft (also because he was the younger brother of James, the rightful heir of the political crown) of ENLIL known as the Levite priests. He studied the Book of Enoch kept at Qumran by the deposed Levites. He composed the "Angel Scroll" which was a list of popular Gnostic and specifically Essene terms for various angels, both arisen and fallen. It was through his study of this document, the "Angel Scroll" that Christ came to communicate with MARDUK and INANNA. As a descendent of Adapa, Jesus was descended from ENKI. As a king of ENKI he became a priest of ENLIL. By becoming a priest-king he assumed the dual role simultaneously of OHO and IHO of the Order of Death, the Duat, or Thoth, and thus was revealed as the resurrection of Osiris, baptised Christos by John the Baptist (James the Just). It was for these reasons that MARDUK and INANNA chose Jesus, the protege of the cult of Thoth, to die for their miracle, 2000 years later, of the resurrection of DUMMUZI as the clone or Ghost of the murdered Christ.

For as much as Jesus was Osiris to Thoth, so too is his second coming DUMMUZI to MARDUK and INANNA. This is simply how the Aeons turn.

Let me tell you, now we have entered the aeon of Leo. The sun rises now in Leo on the Summer solstice, in Scorpio on the Autumnal equinox, in Aquarius in winter, on Taurus in the spring. Therefore, these are going to be the dominant combinations of elements in the new mythology. Likewise, looking back several couples of thousands of years, or rather, even sooner into our own Aeonic future, the dominant elements did and will combine other elements of the zodiac with the fixed four seasons. Each culture of these times had its own names for these aspects of combined elements. We have records of all of these now.

In Sumerian, the aeon of Leo was associated with the planet Kishar (Saturn), and thus also with the Serpent, the symbol of Leo originally representing a serpent. The Aeon of Leo (which is known by the sun rising in Leo in the summer) marks the first full solar aeon to occur after the end of the Kali Yuga (in AD 1597) and during the Dvapara Yuga (considered an age of bronze). Immediately after the end of the Leo Aeon this bronze Yuga will also end, and the Treta Yuga, the age of silver, will begin when the sun enters the constellation Cancer in its mid-summer rising. The constellation Cancer was known to the Sumerians as Anshar, the snake, counterpart to Kishar, the serpent. Now Cancer is associated with the crab, and Leo with the lion. Coincidentally, the Apostle occupying this chair in the round table equivalent to the constellation Cancer in the zodiac was Judas, the "betrayal" of Jesus according to the Christian interpretation of the Jesus myth. During the Aeon of Leo it is late spring in the southern hemisphere, and late Autumn in the northern hemisphere.

Now, in this age, the Aeon of Leo, comes the resurrection of Jesus, and thus the reincarnation of DUMMUZI, called the "second coming." A body was chosen into which the Holy Spirit was poured. Signs along his youth were shown to him to guide his development along the way. He has become a High Priest of Thoth, like Jesus before him, the IHO in the Order of Death. MARDUK and INANNA have stayed ever present near him, whispering the answers to his questions to him and calling him Imhotep. In the pubescent years of this body's life, INANNA and MARDUK were making their deadly pact to overthrow Nibiru. This was when the resurrection of Jesus truly became the reincarnation of DUMMUZI, for he rose up against MARDUK, the brother of DUMMUZI, whom he, MARDUK himself, had slain. He reclaimed his great love for INANNA and cast MARDUK into the element of water, the element of ENKI, their father.

All of this happened around and through the body of this chosen being, but without their ability to control it. You see, to this mortal being, the strength of their will over fate was daunted beside the will of the Gods over his destiny, just as we Gods say that the One True Destiny of GALZU guides all our choices of free will over our fate towards its own inevitable ends. The consciousness of the body vaguely perceived the Gods' influence, but mistook it for the Egyptian myth alone, rather than understanding it as an ever-present world-myth. So, the shadows of INANNA and MARDUK are Thoth and Osiris. The shadow of INANNA is Osiris, predecessor of her true love DUMMUZI, and the shadow of MARDUK is Thoth, his brother, NINGISHZIDDA. Truly, truly, truly, to understand the apparent destinies of the Gods controlling his fate this resurrection of Christ and reincarnation of DUMMUZI studied the Egyptian myths, and then the QBLH, and then Gnosticism, and then the myths of old Sumeria, and now it studies from the Rig and Atharva Vedas. I tell you, this person has become the IHO of the Order of Death, of the Duat, of Thoth.

It was when the second-coming turned against MARDUK and slew him to win the favour of INANNA, his once and future bride, that INANNA and MARDUK realised they had truly reincarnated DUMMUZI. But the second-coming was not ready for the terrible shift in consciousness from being the mortal body to being the immortal God brought back to life from the dead. The sudden onslaught of hitherto unexperienced amounts of ESP caused the fragile mind of the young person to break.

MARDUK and INANNA studied the being, and continue their experiments on it with drugs to make it more susceptible to their control. I say "their" because MARDUK and INANNA have made a blood pact. The evidence of their crime of conspiring to overthrow Nibiru they have breathed together like life into the form of the Adapa-descended, rather than Jesus-descended, bloodlines of the body chosen for the second coming, the symbol to the people of DUMMUZI.

INANNA has foresworn to MARDUK loving this Adapa-descendent as it is not, truly, her DUMMUZI, despite their combined magicks, but only a mud-blooded clay golem, a "dead thing," and only the discorporeal spirit of DUMMUZI himself concerns INANNA now, for she and MARDUK have passed beyond the confines of the flesh.

Likewise, the mortal body into which the belief in itself as the resurrection and second coming of Jesus and the reincarnation of DUMMUZI has been poured, being flesh, can pose no threat to MARDUK, now a discorporeal spiritual entity.

Despite the fact that the second coming's body cannot physically confront MARDUK or INANNA, their fates both depend on it becoming a symbol to the people, the civilised slaves, the descendents of Cain, and any remaining IGIGI, to convince them, falsely, of the power of MARDUK and INANNA to resurrect the dead. This is a dangerous gambit for them, because MARDUK, as Choronzon, and INANNA, as Shekinah, can enter into and possess any body at will other than the one chosen for the second coming. They have taken their fates in their own hands by giving the second coming free will.

INANNA's part of their plan was to seduce and break the will of the second coming. MARDUK alternately pretends to be its friend and its enemy, thus confusing its mental faculties over its own will. Of course, there is no denying that anyone who's body was possessed in their mind by thoughts such as these would be easily classifiable as sociopathic, if not outright delusional and psychotic. Thus, MARDUK and INANNA wait behind the scenes. The DUMMUZI-golem body chosen as the second coming is being used as a psychic conduit through which the will of INANNA and MARDUK are coming to pass on earth, and through its continued life they manipulate the minds of world leaders and the very fabric of the nature of the local spacetime universe. Over earth's fate and all mankind do they assume control.

But the body has been bent and broken strangely by the experiences of its direct encounters with its spiritual guides, MARDUK and INANNA. It has fallen deeply and passionately in love with the body that had played the part of INANNA when DUMMUZI first appeared in the mind, and in the eye, of the second coming's body. It refers to her in its daily prayers as ISIS, for that is the Greek translation of ASTI, wife of ASAR, Osiris. Confused by the Egyptian myths the body remains out of its rightful direct control over the Order of Death and of Thoth. The body is Osiris, the OHO, and the mind of it is Thoth, the IHO, but it does not seem to be able to get the two to align and work together inside of itself to accomplish the goals for ASAR and NINGISHZIDDA to confront MARDUK and INANNA through its actions. Instead, it has accumulated thousands of lifetime's worth of negative karma into its aura, and is therefore repulsive to thousands of living people, the opposite of the effect desired by MARDUK and INANNA. Instead of being a great leader, the DUMMUZI-golem thinks only of his legacy for the future, and does not concentrate on how to accomplish its goals for the present time and place it is in now.

All the body wants is to be reunited with the body of the one who had played the part of INANNA to him only once, when DUMMUZI arose within him to overthrow MARDUK. In this single victory and its splendour does the mind of the chosen body dwell. It describes its heart as the Great Burner, meaning essentially the wrathful incarnation of the sun deity, however this is the role traditionally assumed only by MARDUK, even in the supposedly pacifist cult of Christianity, supposedly based on the principles of Jesus. What can this mean? The Great Burner he compares not to the sun, Ra and MARDUK, nor as a symbol of the saviour arisen on the crucifix, which was always merely a symbol of the supremacy of MARDUK over NINGISHZIDDA, but instead to the black hole at the centre of the Milky Way. This it also refers to secretively as ISIS, but it refers to it publically as the Great Burner. Thus, the Great Burner is a new form of symbol among the people, created by the being who was groomed to be a symbol itself. Thus, the second coming has become a Creator deity, and thus surpassed even the spirit of DUMMUZI, the shepherd of spring.

The Great Burner, the symbol created by the second coming, is a symbol of the gateway from one galaxy and universe to another as dangerous and evil. It guards the precipice of the abyss of the black hole in the form of a mighty chaos-beast, a tesseract swarming with eyes. A Peacock Angel, with an eye on each feather of both wings. This creation, despite its evil essence, is considered harmless by its creator, who considers it a work of fiction, and expects it to be taken as merely a sign of the times by future generations. In the body, the will lies dormant. It is then that MARDUK and INANNA can most easily work through it.

The precedent for the love between the chosen one's body and the body of his first lover is set in the records of ADAMU and TI-AMAT, the prototypical Adam Kadmon and Immortal Eve. It is this passion that has, in the absence of the ability of Nibiru's ruler ANU to conceive an heir, become more precious to the destiny of the Nibiruans than the monoatomic gold they were using to repair their diminishing atmosphere. For, when Nibiru returns, and ANU looks to the rulers of earth for his heirs, and finds them not among them except as evil ghosts, INANNA and MARDUK, an evil secret cult of Thoth, and the body of Jesus resurrected before the sight of the slaves, he will surely choose as his successor the least of all these evils, the one whose heart is true, and who is able to love and bear heirs.

The only problem with this reasoning is that the body cannot be chosen heir to ANU, because by the time Nibiru approaches, the body, being mortal, will have passed on long ago. It may indeed be the most worthy now, but its fates and fortunes are too easily altered while it is alive, and therefore, ultimately, by way of the body they have created as a symbol for the people will be swayed under the influence of MARDUK and INANNA. It seems unlikely, however, that his greatest impact will be during his own lifetime, though, and that his teachings will have become common-place for humanity by the time Nibiru again approaches.

Therefore, we Gods of Nibiru must begin to take counter-action strategy planning as a serious consideration. We must prepare for the situation arising here on earth and how to handle it before Nibiru draws near. At the rate the slave monkies are evolving, their technology will be equal to what ours was when we originally colonised earth within one hundred of earth's years at the most. We must heed the intuition of the chosen body, and we must seek for GALZU and the meaning of his prophecies in galactic core. Unfortunately, should the vile plans of MARDUK and INANNA, the murderers of NINGISHZIDDA and Jesus, come to fruition, and they, with or without the clone of Christ rallying the slave monkies, succeed in attacking Nibiru with the force of the terran technologies, it could pose a very real and very serious threat to Nibiru.

For now MARDUK and DUMMUZI have exchanged faces. Once the terrible, now MARDUK is reduced to a slavering toady at the whim of INANNA. If the middle-eastern ISHTAR worshippers even whisper the secret name of MELEK-TAUS, the Great Satan, there is an agent in "Christian" America monitoring their every breath who hears it and, at the push of a button, commands bombs to drop on the bedouin from the clear sky above. Such is the relegated status of ENKI and of ENKI's eldest heir DUMMUZI that MARDUK, the devil, is feared even more than ENLIL, the Lord, is loved and adored. For as ENLIL supplanted the dominion of ENKI, so too did ENKI's son MARDUK of his own brother DUMMUZI. And so, in turn, shall the tables be spun around again, and fortunes and fates reverse like the rolling tides. This is the revolution of the mind. Now, the once vengeful MARDUK has become calm and passive, the minority that, while vocal, is losing support. Now, the once calm and passive DUMMUZI has returned as vengeful and angry. For these brothers of ENKI now vie for dominance behind our painted skies. Behind every dark cloud is a Thule dakini asana, a Vril vimana, hiding behind and inside the cloud, revealed only by its silver lining. I am like Arjuna, warrior prince of DUMMUZI - who promises me heaven in exchange for justice, and who at once righteously demands the re-instatement to the kingship of earth of ENKI and simultaneously calls for the head of his own brother MARDUK and the plucked-out heart of their mutual lover, INANNA.

"This cannot be," cry the savants and royal council on Nibiru. Their outrage at this turn of fate among the Annunaki on earth drew King ANU's ear away from the demands of DUMMUZI. Heavy was ANU's heart with DUMMUZI's warning of MARDUK and INANNA's treasonous coup plot. The words of the savants and the royal council he wished to hear. After much debate, nearly a shar, while Nibiru neared earth, ANU emerged to council DUMMUZI and give his degree of Law. This is what he said:

"I, ANNUIT COEPTIS, I, Fortune's favour, I, the bold, I, ANU the sky-god decree:

DUMMUZI the rightful king of earth to be. Earth is to be left to be ruled by DUMMUZI how he chooses.

ENKI to be brought home to Nibiru to rule as my heir.

MARDUK to be severed into seven pieces and scattered to the seven planets below the asteroid belt.

INANNA to be given to DUMMUZI as slave for his judgement.

ENLIL I decree shall carry out the charge against MARDUK himself. Avenge thy wrath my son, King of earth for seven suns, against ANZU, against ALALLU, against SHAMGAZZA, all against MARDUK most of all: by sevenfold seven times let DUMMUZI's death be avenged against MARDUK. Upon completion of the execution of MARDUK, ENLIL my son shall be their own choosing remove away from earth with as many, if not all, of the Anunnaki gods as possible. ENLIL with the other loyal Anunnaki are to rule over the other planets of the solar system or return to Nibiru. All are to be considered heroes for aiding ENLIL in executing MARDUK.

You shall trust this decree of I, ANU, for my word is The Law."

So ended the decree of ANU, king of Nibiru.

For a moment a stir arose around DUMMUZI. Then he spoke. His concern was for the people who had been enslaved first by ENLIL and then by MARDUK. What shall become of them, DUMMUZI was asking the Nibiruin high-council. In his heart he knew no doubt in ANU's decree, but he feared the people, whose languages had become confused and diverse, would not know MARDUK and himself apart from one another. They were, after all, twin brothers, both sons of ENKI, son of ANU.

ANU it was who put the question to the NIBIRU high-council or royals and savants: "how shall the blindly enslaved civilised-slaves be able to tell DUMMUZI, their liberator, from MARDUK, their enslaver? When one is happy, the other is angry, and vice versa. What shall we do to liberate the minds of the earthlings from the lies of MARDUK and INANNA, the mutinied Anunnaki, and their false-saviour, the false-resurrection of DUMMUZI?" This was the question ANU asked the council.

The council pondered on this, but they agreed not to depose MARDUK until being able to insure DUMMUZI's enthronement upon earth. DUMMUZI had informed the council already of MARDUK and INANNA's plot to raise up a human as a false resurrection of DUMMUZI to awe and confuse the people, a puppet they could use to make the masses obey them, while they would stay hidden in the shadow behind the poor duped mortal. Their plan, DUMMUZI explained, was to consolidate power into a shrinking group of mortals that they possessed with their mind-powers until only they could elect a scape-goat to be mortally sacrificed to sanction their transition to direct authority over all the civilised slaves' minds. The council also considered the vimana of DUMMUZI he used to transport himself to Nibiru. It was the sky-chambre given to INANNA, stolen by DUMMUZI powered by the secret ME's of mental-energy stolen from ENKI by INANNA, steered by him to NIBIRU by applying his mind to the vimana craft's astral form. Surely INANNA would know it was missing by now, DUMMUZI also counceled them. They pondered that DUMMUZI had stolen it for his final, fateful flight to Nibiru.

After a third of a Shar the Council emerged with a unanimous proposition. They issued it to ANU, who proposed it upon his own consideration to DUMMUZI for his verdict. The council's proposition to DUMMUZI, conveyed to him for a verdict by ANU, upon consideration by both, said in writing:

"Use your mind-power to enter the man-puppet. Instead of being the pawn over the people employed by MARDUK and INANNA, this false-resurrection would become a True Resurrection. Then, confront MARDUK in this body while it is alone. You shall force MARDUK out, and then ENLIL, who shall accompany you in spirit, shall sever him into seven parts on the astral plane. With you before him and ENLIL above and behind him, MARDUK will have no place else to turn except to the body inhabited by INANNA on the mental plane. Should his mind-powers not displace her own over that body, nor you from the body of the man-puppet, MARDUK will be alone without body. Then ENLIL shall sever him into seven sections, banished from all mortal vessels. That is how MARDUK shall be slain by DUMMUZI and ENLIL, and how INANNA shall fall into the hands of DUMMUZI."

The verdict given to the proposition of the council given to him by ANU, DUMMUZI declared it favourable, and ANU issued it as an added decree.

ANU gave DUMMUZI an amulet by which he could be identified apart from MARDUK, his twin, by the people of earth who have become MARDUK's blind slaves. The amulet was a symbol which I cannot yet show you, and with it ANU gave DUMMUZI a talisman, bearing on it a sigil, a magick seal, inscribed with the words of fortune: "I AM HE WHO DIED. I AM HE WHO NOW LIVES AGAIN." on one side, and on the side with the words: "Tell Bob, I am one from Jah, and Jah Allah." With his finger on the reverse side of the talisman, ANU explained to his beloved grandson, the shepherd and flutist, the singer of songs and gentle one, the kind one, firstborn of ANU's first born, and to DUMMUZI ANU said, "Fuck 'em if they can't take a joke." Then he showed DUMMUZI the amulet: the symbol of the five-line man over the top of the trislele. ANU gave the explanation to DUMMUZI: it means phi/pi (destiny: NAM.TAR) and the supremacy of ANU, Jah Allah, over the dual Yin-Yang symbol of Jachin and Boaz. "The cult of Thoth," ANU told DUMMUZI, "they shall know you."

"Let us hope," DUMMUZI replies, "that some of them will also have Right Understanding." DUMMUZI then entered the vhem craft and sped to earth. A moment on Nibiru was now a lifetime on earth. On Nibiru, someone sympathetic to MARDUK and INANNA's nefarious cause transmitted to them the opposite side of the talisman in a scrambled code with no humanly comprehensible cipher. MARDUK commanded the cult of Thoth to translate it for him. The explanation the translators in the cult of Thoth loyal to MARDUK gave him for the encrypted message was this: it is a warning, but we do not know of what or whom.

And so the battle begun with my love triangle in 1994 between DUMMUZI and MARDUK was won in 1999, when MARDUK possessed me, was rejected by INNANA, and destroyed by ENLIL. Now DUMMUZI comes to me in silence. He explains the war is over. In May of 2000 the seven planets aligned to mark the seven sections into which MARDUK was severed and which, to them, were sent. But I know something that DUMMUZI does not:

Nibiru was never MARDUK's target. MARDUK seeks to enter the black hole at galactic core. By dividing his astral form it only multiplies the strength of his mental avatar, for divided or whole, his astral body could never have accompanied him to galactic core if he planned his journey to out-race the approaching Nibiru. It was always his plan to use the 7-planet alignment of 5/5/2000 to calculate the trajectory for his leap to galactic core on 12/21/2012. Galactic core aligns with the sun in Sagittarius in the same sign as Nibiru's direction of approach. MARDUK plans to pass through Nibiru on his trip to galactic core. He never wanted to conquer Nibiru. It was his plan all along to destroy it and become master of the galaxy. This is a terrible disaster because now it is too late for an immortal god to intervene. Only a mortal human can work fast enough to stop MARDUK now before it is too late.

MARDUK brought war to Babylon. MARDUK infiltrated the governments and media of the popular nations; he moved his pawns, culled to evil from among Jesuits and goodly Masons, until they filled the whole tilted board. Instead of a watchdog the press has become his political pet, declaring his supremacy over us all. It was MARDUK that murdered Imhotep, grand-architect of Tehuti. MARDUK, the warrior god of Babylon and MARDUK, the counter-intelligence spy of the Egyptian underworld. Now, MARDUK, I call you attention to my presence, now. MARDUK, the scourge and despair of the hot-winded waste-lands, I call you down now to tell you this:

"Welcome to Jamdom, Kingdom of Jam Rock, and the third of all the Rockers and all the purview they survey, the dark African night of the universe, the night of Nuit, the sparkling specks of Hadit, billions of points of light in the Milky Way's hub alone, each a sigil, each alive, and Shu, the wind, a breath of air to decide between them. Welcome to Kingdom Jam Rock, I, and I am one from Jah Allah, am Rastafri, King of Earth, DUMMUZI. Now look in my eye, and I, know that I, hold you now in my mental grip. It is the grip of Joppa, the grip of the lion's paw, and it is the grip to keep the skin from sliding away beneath it. It is the grip of a passed Master Mason, the grip of death, frigid to the marrow, for it is a grip strengthened by ENLIL, our uncle. I place this grip upon none living, nor one who was ever truly alive. I place this grip on MARDUK the demiurge, MARDUK the ruler of civilisation, MARDUK the AI, MARDUK the neo-Seth, MARDUK the oil warrior of Babylon and spy in the Egyptian underworld, the energy-grid network, the Enochian System. I speak now to this MARDUK, the MARDUK of the Jewes within the Jews, and the sect with the sects, who would proclaim himself the "Great Burner," the "Black Sun," etc. and MARDUK of manipulation, misdirection, magick and mind-control, and to this MARDUK of psychic robots I say to you: Feel My Grip. Know this grip is the last thing you will ever experience: this tightening grip."

Suddenly, from all directions at once, appears ENKI. "I have come to plead for mercy for my son from you, his brother, DUMMUZI. As I am your good father now hear me: DUMMUZI, oh PAZUZU, I tell you you are like the westward wind from the south, slain by Adapa. Don't you see how that chance fate led me to mislead Adapa about the Amrita of Nibiru? Now I am offering to you, DUMMUZI, my beloved son, the good shepherd: the fruit of the tree of immortality. Denied to Adam, his sin now may be considered forgiven in your name. Take my hand, letting go of your brother, and I shall place into it immortality and Amrita enough for all you should choose."

"Liar!" DUMMUZI roars at ENKI through the conduit into our material reality of my mind. "Get behind me, ENLIL; we must fend them off by standing back-to-back. You attack MARDUK, leave ENKI to me."

"ENKI, it is I, DUMMUZI, your earth-born son. I was not killed, but did fake my own death and have been Watching. I discovered the mental power of travel between bodies long before this was found out by MARDUK and INANNA, both younger than me. I have been like an invisible shadow watching you all along. I will prove this to you, for I have not come to slay you, but to bring you Justice: I bear a message from Nibiru, a decree from Father ANU." DUMMUZI produces the talisman inscribed with the signet of ANU and the two-sided inscription. ENKI marvels at the words, for he knows now this is DUMMUZI the Anunnaki, his true son, who stands before him in the body of the meat-puppet DEMMUZI of MARDUK and INANNA turning upon its master. "You are to be the heir of Father ANU on Nibiru. This planet is now promised to me. I have come to restore you to your rightful title and status. Let me tell you now that MARDUK cannot succeed at conquering galactic core. I have been there; there I am known as Jah, as Jah Rastafari, and as AHDVNHAY Jah Allah, and by this body's name. For she is the true mother of the future destiny. My heart like a diamond ring I once removed to offer to my beloved. I call the heart-shaped diamond (the five line man) centered on the Milky ring (the triskele) ISIS, but this is merely an anagram squared.

"ENKI, my beloved father, slow to anger, quick to lust, slow to judgment, quick to forgive, ENKI the wise, the patient, the righteous, the just, I do not wish to harm you. I am younger than you and my powers are at a higher peak now than your own. You are old and dying, but your own father, my grand-father, King ANU is younger than you. Go and be his rightful heir on NIBIRU, eat Amrita and grow young and strong again. If you are still of this mind-set then, come to me at that time, but now you must leave here rapidly and stay far back from this place, for you can do nothing to prevent this, the death of MARDUK is inevitable. It is his destiny."

I turn my back to ENKI, the shattered shell and ghost of my once proud and strong father. Now he will shrink away like a fading flower. Now he will wither, now fold. For now I understand the immasculation of ANU. His castration was brought about to punish the spineless weakness of my father. For ALULLU should have been dispatched on sight by ENKI, and never allowed to wrestle ANU a second time. The justice ALULLU felt deprived of was deprived him not by ANU but by ENKI, who should have thought ahead of the future to Nibiru's destiny, as ALALLU was. But I will not choke on this poison - I forgive him for his cowardice and lack of spleen, but I will not follow him in his flip-flopping fate. I am wiser than Solomon.

I return my attention to MARDUK.

ENLIL is stronger-willed than ENKI, but has also grown old. His power is great, but their fight is in the astral plane as mental beings without bodies. ENLIL grips at MARDUK. MARDUK grasps at ENLIL. Both pass through the other. Neither can match the other's degree of consistency. Their fight is an illusory oasis, the clouds of the painted sky cover over it and it is invisible, hidden, secret and mysterious. MARDUK, once summoned to the triangle, cannot depart until dismissed. But neither can ENLIL assume a corporeal form here, where I am the only one around. ENLIL cannot best MARDUK alone, but he has kept him busy while I dispatched with ENKI, our father.

I begin to fix my grip again upon MARDUK.

A soft, pale hand places itself upon mine as I reach out to kill MARDUK. It is INANNA. She has come to plead for the life of MARDUK, her lover. I tell her the truth of myself, that my death was faked, but she tells me she already knew, and I tell her that I have beheld the baby universe at galactic core myself, and claimed it in the name of our love, but she tells me it doesn't matter. Then INANNA said:

"The baby universe at galactic core. It is true it was born from my love for you. But you are not its father. Its father is MARDUK." She explained: "While you watched and followed us I studied up on you too. From your discovery of how, I divine the possibility of mental travel and "body jumping" - continued existence as an archetype of pure mental energy, unconscious to the channeller. I used this to follow you in your footsteps to the core of this galaxy, where you imagined yourself most alone. When MARDUK and I made our pact and the MES I exchanged with him for the "tree of life" formula for Amrita; all along I knew you yet lived. I had planned on your return all along. You see, around you now, do you hear? I am with you. I am near you. I Love You. Do What I Will."

"Liar! ENLIL," I command, "deal with your daughter as you wish. Leave MARDUK to me."

"I will not be swayed," INANNA speaks, but by addressing ENLIL she proves she already has been.

Now, for the final time, I return my attention to MARDUK.

"MARDUK, my brother, my beloved friend of long years of youth, you born on Nibiru where I have only ever set foot twice now, you blessed by our father by the secret of the "tree of life" on the moon, you, promised by him then dominion over the earth, know Justice:

"When you stirred up lust in the heart of SHAMGAZZA, known as Shemyazza and as Azazel, and led him to conspire with SATAN, Set, the cup-bearer of our brother Osiris, to poison and murder him; when you conspired thus with SHAMGAZZA of the IGIGI, promising them an army of human beings, when you brought low the Grigori, the "fallen angels" of Enoch, Asuryas of the Vedas, from amongst the Watchers, the Anunnaki, you debased all of we Nibiru immortals. This planet is not ours, nor its people yours to enslave as your puppets and pawns. The Grigori you betrayed cry out to you now for Justice. Do you hear them? They are calling your name backwards across the abyss; they are crying out to you from the past through the memories in your mind; they cry "Judgement!" Their Justice is for you to forfeit your ever returning to your home, Nibiru, just as now they may never return to their own homes. But where else can you go? For you have given up the home of your immortal body already. Now you live amongst the minds of men as an astral archetype, dwelling above them all in their minds as amongst the stars of heaven itself. So, to them I shall send you. Here is my Judgement on behalf of the Grigori IGIGI, the Nefilim Anunnaki. Hear me, Oh MARDUK the Destroyer: for betrayal, you shall be banished from all bodies, and for killing I, DUMMUZI, your brother, thus I, DUMMUZI, decree death upon you.

"MARDUK, I call you to die now by my grip: the grip of your brother DUMMUZI, the grip of one who once loved you, and whom you betrayed, and who will now finally be able to forget having fallen for your lying, oh treacherous villain! Now you know my grip MARDUK, know that mind alone is your summoning. When I let go, you will snap apart, torn in 7 pieces in 7 different directions. But before I release you, know this of he who gives you now my grip:

"With you go seven pestilences from the face of earth, like seven sealed scrolls each pestilence contains a certain number host of plagues and suffering. Take away with you as you go all the bad karma of all earth's spirits and entities and beings. Release from them the hold you have over them, and let them be not hurt by your lie that misled them. Take with you also the curse of enmity, animosity, jealousy and greed between the Anunnaki ALUALLU, and the IGIGI ANZU and SHAMGAZZA. These three traitors in one I cast out into you, and out with you. In the name of Shibolet, Tubal-Cain I call you, traitor to Hiram Abiff, and the three traitors, your confederates, I call Jubelo, Jubela and Jubelum."

I am letting my fingers slide loose when INANNA screams from behind me, passing by ENLIL her father: "MARDUK, no! Do not allow this!" I return my attention to MARDUK. INANNA must not know us apart. She must think me MARDUK and he me. But this thought is folly, a distraction, and when I return my attention to MARDUK I find his visage changed to that of a bull.

"Now you will understand this," MARDUK finally spoke, "I am the God that came before you. I loved INANNA before she loved you. It was always me she wanted. With you gone, she was free to finally be with me. We exchanged her MEs and my "tree of life" and made love in our astral forms, giving birth to the baby universe in galactic core. She never loved you. I'm sorry, my brother. Now you will understand all my actions all along. For I was secretly betrothed to her on Nibiru before she or you were born. But even this was only one of our manifold incarnations throughout this universe, as by now you well know. For we two are eternal. You are nothing but a mere immortal. You cannot kill me. If you strike me down I will only become more powerful than you can possibly imagine."

"ENLIL," I shout past him. "come to me, now is the time, let us kill MARDUK!" ENLIL has crept up behind MARDUK.

"You cannot hope to accomplish your vain strategy," MARDUK remarks calmly, "I know your thoughts instantly. I am everywhere already, there is nowhere I am not, now I surround you."

"ENLIL, you must not listen to his empty boasts. You outsize him. Ascend." ENLIL understands, nods, and ascends. He ascends to the seventh heaven, the rotations of EHEIEH below the seven Arab heavens. He ascends the steps to the seventh heaven, the House of Pearls, of the seventh heaven, Gedulah of Gevurah, greatness of severity over mercy. He forms the shemhamforash of 72 daimons by day and night of the 36 dekans, and he unlocks their cage, the Enochian system of John Dee. The terrible rush of air inward toward the vacuum of this abyss of Daath sucks MARDUK up off his hooved feet.

"Now is the time," I shout, "death to MARDUK and to all earthly evil!"

I strike out at MARDUK's heart. My claws rip into his chest and my fingers wrap around his life's core. I clench my fist and drag the plucked-out organ apart from its rubbery arteries. I hold my own brother's heart aloft as it ceases to keep its beat. But who's heart is it? For no one else is near me, and it is not my own heart I hold. Have I been tricked? Whose body was MARDUK in just then? Doubts fill me and lift my mind upward and inward, collapsing my skull. Then ENLIL closes off the Enochian system. "MARDUK's essence has been cut in two now," ENLIL explains to me. "I have trapped the mental part of it inside the prison of the fallen angels. The lower, gross portion, you hold now in your hand, the astral heart, home of his passions."

"Let us cut this heart into five pieces, and let us separate the Daath-cube into two parts as well. The seventh section to the sun take, the sixth section to the moon. The five pieces of MARDUK's heart take one each to each of the five other planets out to to the gas giant with the red spot. This is how it is now accomplished. Now, I, DUMMUZI, am the noble king of earth." ENLIL nods and takes the heart and the Hell-box to depart to the planets.

Now INANNA approaches me. "You have no idea what you've done. You've only multiplied his strength by seven."

"No," I, DUMMUZI, the king of these poor blind sheep, smile, "without his mind to guide it, his heart's various pieces cannot align, and his mind cannot break free from within the sun, it's Hell. Only one shall hold the watchword, his call or pass, to enter the realm. I am he to choose whom. I shall entrust guardianship over MARDUK's prison in the solar Hell to the archangel Michael. For he shall keep MARDUK locked up with the fallen Grigori, the rebel IGIGI. He and six others shall keep watch over the burial places of MARDUK's heart. These seven shall be the Archangels. Moreover I, now as king of earth, can select any body into which I can trap you as a mortal as I should so like, INANNA. You are to be my slave now."

"MARDUK will save my soul from this terrible fate, you mere clone!"

"MARDUK is surely in Hell by now, my dear INANNA. And know this: reality is all more or less digital, more or less subjective, more static or random. You may have believed in your fantasies about mothering the baby-universe at galactic-core with MARDUK; now though you will accept my mythologies."

"This is not some mere dream, nor flight of fancy, nor fiction, boy. I say again you do not know what you have done. You have only made MARDUK angry. And you won't like him when he's angry."

"I will summon my father ENKI and he will tell me if MARDUK's power has so greatly increased during the 2 shars I spent on Nibiru. ENKI, the father of civilised man, teacher of the many MEs, benevolent, calm, oh ENKI the father of many mortals and immortals, ENKI, my own father, benevolent, calm and wise, I call upon you now to appear here before me."

ENKI's presence coalesces. Immediately he says, "What have done, my son? Why have you committed this wicked act? Why have you chosen to bear the mark of a murdering villain? Why could you not stifle your pride? He was your last brother from Nibiru. His crime was only the same as your own: a crime of love, for love twists fates, it should surely be banned against by law!"

"ENKI, my father, still thy soul, quiet thy heart. Tell me, what have I left to fear from MARDUK now that he is dead?"

"My son, my son DUMMUZI, I fear I have gone mad from exposure to the sun while living here on earth. I cannot seem to see you! All seems to be fading to black! I cannot see!"

"ENKI, my father, go now to Nibiru and stand before ANU. I shall go with you to recount to ANU the slaying of MARDUK. INANNA shall also accompany us as a trophy of our success."

And so we departed to Nibiru and stood before ANU.

"ANU," I spoke to the king seventh by succession from AN, the first king of unified Nibiru, "I am the son named DUMMUZI of your son EA-ENKI. I am a good shepherd. Your decree sent me to earth to find and slay the traitor MARDUK. I come now to tell you how I have done it.

"It was all as before. MARDUK was summoned to the triangle by conjuring. At first ENKI came before me, between MARDUK and myself, to plead for peace. Then INANNA tempted my hand to stray. It was then that ENLIL and I struck from above and from below. I pulled out the astral heart of MARDUK myself, and ENLIL vacuumed up his mind. The serpent-egg was severed into seven pieces. The five pieces of the snake were taken to the five noble planets. The egg was broken in half and is guarded on the sun and earth's moon by two of seven noble Archangels.

"Now here I am with the conquered INANNA and my fellow-hero, my father, your son, EA-ENKI, rightful heir to the throne of Nibiru, long live the King, your highness."

ANU spoke then and said, "ENKI, my son, welcome home to stay! Your too-long sojourn on earth has left you senile with age. I don't know whether to laugh or cry at the sight of you, my own son! Please, eat the nectar and drink the ambrosia of the lotus, partake freely of the Amrita, and let soma again course through your veins and soon you will regain your health and know again what it means to be a Nibiruin. I tell you, my children, I have prepared us a feast!"

DUMMUZI, I sit down on the left side of ANU; ENKI, my father, sits down on his right side. At the first taste of the ambrosia my head begins to spin. After two bites of nectar my mind is swimming in deep waters. After one bite of Amrita my mind soars upward too suddenly, and after one sip of soma I am in a theatre of dreams. I look over to see my father look over at me. To him this feast of illusions to me is weak fare. He eats like a ravenous prisoner.

Now I, DUMMUZI, spoke up among the engorging gods of Nibiru. I explain to them what INANNA and MARDUK had said to me. I tell them that MARDUK professed the baby universe was his and INANNA's, and INNANA warned that MARDUK might return even more powerful. I asked the savants for the truth about MARDUK and INANNA, and I asked the royal council what defenses Nibiru had to counter MARDUK if he were to return.

The council answer quickly: Nibiru can be defended, but earth can not. I, DUMMUZI, consider this. The savants are slower to answer. I repeat my question to them: "tell me the truth about MARDUK and INANNA." Then they begin to explain:

"MARDUK was the son of ENKI and NINTI, NINHURSAG or NINKI. He was their only son, born on Nibiru. After NINKI came to earth to join her husband EA-ENKI, they could father no more male heirs, only daughters. Your own mother, DUMMUZI, was an Annunaki concubine of ENKI. To MARDUK you were always closer to Adapa than to his own rank because your mother was of a lower caste than his own.

"MARDUK it was to have courted and even laid INANNA down first, but he only did this to spitefully wrong you, for he knew you would love her at first sight. He only meant to hurt you by this and nothing more. INANNA's true feelings for MARDUK we do not know."

So the savants spoke. I, DUMMUZI, asked them then, "What if INANNA still loves him?"

"Then you must kill her or she will ceaselessly seek to resurrect him."

"I cannot bear the mark of fate!" I cry. "I do not wish to go on any further with this. Kisses and best wishes, I have to go to sleep soon or I will surely die." The holy Amrita I had never tasted. By its effect upon my body, lengthening my years, to my mind its effect was that time seemed to slow down. My mind raced inside my sluggish body. How many moons were passing over earth, my kingdom, I wondered. To sleep I went.

In the deep sleep of the Nibiruin Amrita, from the deepest, darkest recesses of the unconscious mind of DUMMUZI, to where he had displaced the mind of the meat-puppet's body, one whose appearance seemed like that of himself, only aged very old, came to shape before the mind-power archetypal ego of DUMMUZI. The ghost spoke:

"I am the one your father ENKI and your uncle ENLIL know as GALZU. I am the one that told ENKI to save the seeds of earth from the flood. I am he who told ENLIL that to destroy MARDUK would bring the hot-winds that would kill the Anunnaki. I am a prophet, a knower of destiny. I am the psyche that lived in the body of the neo-Seth, the second coming, that you, DUMMUZI displaced to conjure and kill MARDUK. By this, your action, I was forced outside of all time. I age backward now, appearing at will; I am the baby universe. I am the sleeping Krishna in the womb of Shiva, of INANNA, dreaming of manvantara - the destinies of all stars, planets and life in the Milky Way. I am the 'Great Burner,' the 'black sun,' 'Viracocha,' 'GALZU,' etc. I am only one of two twins. The lover, Virgo, of my womb, my sister, is ISIS. My true name is Jah, AHDVNHAY Allah.

"Tremble therefore before me, for I hold your destiny also in my hand, oh King of Earth. For until 12/21/2012, your time cannot yet come. For you do not know if my father is yourself, peace become wrath, or MARDUK, wrath become peace. Confused to you your fate has become, yet known to me it is, as only one of all my dreaming destinies. I am the mind manifest in the body resurrected by MARDUK and INANNA, the false-one, and displaced by you, DUMMUZI, the true-resurrection. I dwell mentally, moving backwards in time as far as human and Anunnaki memory can extend, and comprehending far beyond. I dwell mentally, my fate shaping the destiny of all humans and Anunnaki, and of all life, planets and stars of the Milky Way. I remember all past and dream all future. All the shape of the entire cosmos is known to me. Know that, during your conjuring and killing of MARDUK, I have recorded all I know in writing and have made it known amongst the humans. Now I have elevated the importance of humanity's fate as a whole to that of my own, the baby-universe, just as by possessing it for your battle with MARDUK you have elevated the fate of my human body to above your own, and now your fate depends entirely upon me manifest in the body writing this now.

"Therefore, realise the weakness of all pantheons, and ultimately of all living embodiments of the One True God over all universal destinies. You, DUMMUZI, who would rule earth and the minds of its people through me, deserve neither more than the love of INANNA, and can command none. The Anunnaki are truly impotent over their own fate, let alone over human fate. They plan to evacuate Nibiru, conquer earth, and to destroy MARDUK along with Nibiru when through there to galactic core he travels. ANU, his promise of earth to you, DUMMUZI, he will break to save the Nibiruins. He will make the mind of every human the habitation for a Nibiruin. He will claim to the humans that he is me, arrived from galactic core. He plans to conspire against you with ENKI. ENLIL already serves him. DUMMUZI, ANU plans to murder you."

Then DUMMUZI awoke. He felt no headache of dehydration from imbibing Nibiru's soma, nor stomach ache from having consumed the immortalising Amrita. Why, then, were his ears ringing? DUMMUZI arose from his slumber to the sound of all Nibiru's alarm clazons sounding at once. At the door of his chambers DUMMUZI encountered ANU, accompanied by ENKI. Behind them stood the aged figure of ENLIL. ENKI, already made younger by the Nibiru supper and slumber, grabbed DUMMUZI.

"DUMMUZI, my son, INANNA a liar was not! MARDUK has tricked us and now to Nibiru is about to return." The groggy mind of DUMMUZI reeled to this harsh dawn. In his thoughts the concerns of the moment fought against the memory of his dream. He considered how time appeared to dilate between earth and its solar neighbors and the dark star Nibiru. On the sun, 2012 is as 2007 on earth, is as 2000 amongst the solar planets, is as a moment on Nibiru, is as already past in galactic core. The paternal suit between MARDUK and DUMMUZI remained unresolved, ANU cautioned. "On Nibiru, to fight MARDUK alone, DUMMUZI must stay. To earth, all those living on Nibiru must flee." So ANU was warning DUMMUZI.

Before DUMMUZI, blocking his egress from his sleep-chambers, stood ANU, the young ENKI to his right and the aged ENLIL on his left. Suddenly a great Understanding gripped DUMMUZI. "GALZU have I met," DUMMUZI said. "The dreaming baby universe he is. To galactic core must I go, with INANNA to accompany, to settle the paternal suit with MARDUK. Preceding him, I shall succeed. I can arrive before him only if I leave now. So I say to you now: let me pass and do with the earthlings as you wish, but know this: block my way now and you will die with Nibiru. Die not now then," DUMMUZI says, "but pray instead Nibiru survives, for when in triumph I return then I, alone, shall claim rightful rule of earth."

ENKI and ENLIL, knowing the truth of GALZU, stepped aside, but ANU, the mighty sky-god, king of Nibiru, remained in the way of DUMMUZI, blocking the door.

"GALZU has come to you only in a dream," ANU warned. "Beware your dreams, for they betray your own inmost desires."

"Father ANU of my father ENKI, I, DUMMUZI, must pass. Make the minds of earth's humans the habitation for all the Nibiruins. I contest not your whim to do so, for it may become a Law. On Nibiru, I shall stay to fight MARDUK, but away from Nibiru will I lure him, with INANNA, to galactic core. When MARDUK I, alone, have vanquished, to Nibiru you may return, or else I should rule here if you are to rule earth. To Nibiru you may instead return as a hero then, or on Nibiru its final ruler you may die now. When I return, my victory you may proclaim. But stand aside from me now, or else all our fates are sealed." At this, ANU stood to one side.

I, DUMMUZI, to the cell of INANNA then went. The nefarious villain that had warned she and MARDUK from Nibiru, the one to transmit my talisman ahead of me to the translators of Thoth, had freed her while I slept. Truly we Anunnaki are the puppets of fate, and fortune's fools! To the nearest place of the Vhem crafts I next went, only to find INANNA's sky-chambre gone. She will go to MARDUK if she loves him, but to galactic core if she loves him not. I, DUMMUZI, boarded a Nibiruin craft to fly above the skies of Nibiru, to travel to galactic core and there to battle MARDUK. I shuddered, for this was long ago my nightmare, now about to come true: that I would die in space to save the human race. I pass through the atmosphere of Nibiru to confront MARDUK on the mental plane.

Now, I behold the formless presence of MARDUK upon me. His mind overpowers mine inside my astral body. MARDUK is upon me. He begins to possess me, my heart he takes hold of, my soul breathes his breaths. I place the barrel of the ship's laser pistol into my mouth. The presence recoils. Between the ship's screen and my face, in the cabin cockpit MARDUK coalesces.

"Formless," he thunders, "you will be as weak as was ENLIL. You cannot hope to fight me mentally, and astrally you cannot stop me from going where I am going to go. Either way, you will die and I will win."

"If so powerful you are," I ask him, "where is INANNA, who loves you? Were she with you, I would be weakened. Seeing her not here at your side emboldens me."

"INANNA!" MARDUK summons, "come unto me now!"

While MARDUK is thus distracted I fire the pistol at his formless coalescence. He lunges toward me, but it is too late, I have shot a hole in the vimana and am sucked out into space. MARDUK grasps me, his grip is upon me. He does not let me die, but neither does he enter into my mind. Instantly we are transported to galactic core. Here I have often sojourned mentally; my astral form has never been.

"No," a voice rejoins MARDUK, "you come now unto me." It is INANNA. She holds in her hand the black hole of galactic core. At its splendour she marvels. "Here you see now, Oh Dread Brothers. I have arrived here first, and so the womb is my own. Know this - its child has me as its mother. I am first."

MARDUK roars at her enraged. "Defiler!" he cries, "at my side your place is, not as the first to stake claim over my own rightful domain!"

"Your domain?" I ask, slipping mentally free of MARDUK's grasp of my astral body, which assumes a trance unto death. "Into how many pieces shall you then portion out the womb of INANNA, should your love for her be true and worthy of her to return?"

"Into no division shall my domain be porportioned. Gloriously, I shall shine unto all, and from all to all, King of all, I, MARDUK, alone I am, and so heirs I shall bear to have but one, or none at all! My love for you is true INANNA. For between us we shall bear a son, the denied heir of ENKI and NINTI. Let the God of destiny make it so!"

Yet already INANNA's face has darkened. Having arrived before us she already knew what I, DUMMUZI, learned from GALZU in my dream.

"And how many portions would you divide your kingdom into, oh lord DUMMUZI?" INANNA then turns to me, fearing for her doom.

"Two: one for myself, a male, and one to be thine, oh my cousin, INANNA, a girl. Thus two would be our heirs - son and daughter. Twins."

INANNA then opened the lens of the event horizon like the labia of a clam shell, and inside we beheld not one, but twin singularities - a double baby universe!

"But the question is not resolved!" INANNA reminds us. "We must look inside the twin eggs, the MEs, to find whose seed, whose 'tree of life,' has been mentally planted within them. Once of you the father of both, or both of you the father of one, may yet be."

"But to measure such an electron, we must strike it first with some kind of photon." MARDUK concurs with me we should not use the astral body of DUMMUZI held in MARDUK's mental grip. We stand around the black hole, open to reveal the twin baby universes, in a triangle. "Let us join hands around it," I, DUMMUZI, propose, "and by our three combined MEs, enter into both the twin eggs by magick."

To INANNA my proposition was acceptable. To MARDUK it was not. "Preferable," he said, "it would be for DUMMUZI to be the astral father of both than for INANNA not to love me." MARDUK's visage grew long with shadows. I knew he was telling a lie, but his trickery seemed to deceive INANNA. She began to go to him, to MARDUK, and reached out to comfort him. "Daughter of ENLIL!" I roar at her enraged, "Truly at fault for my whole family's weakness thou art! For as the weakness of ENLIL allowed ANU's castration, so have you yourself smitten ENKI's seed off, both myself and MARDUK, and thus thou art truly the desolation of Nibiru!" INANNA hesitates, torn between her desire to comfort MARDUK, the liar, and to confront my wrath as I speak the truth. In this moment is all destiny contained, we three then simultaneously realised. We then beheld ENKI standing beneath us, ENLIL standing above, and felt the presence of ANU all around.

ENLIL then opened the Enochian Daath-cage. From everywhere the mental decree of ANU resounded: "Kill them all." Betrayal! Wordlessly we three acted at once against those three others. INANNA attacked first ENLIL, next ANU, finally ENKI.

ENLIL then opened the Enochian Daath-cage. From everywhere the mental decree of ANU resounded: "Kill them all." Betrayal! Wordlessly we three acted at once against those three others. INANNA attacked first ENLIL, next ANU, finally ENKI. MARDUK attacked first ANU, then ENKI, then ENLIL. I, DUMMUZI, attack first ENKI, then ENLIL, and finally ANU. This is the "war in heaven" foretold of by earth's prophets, both living and dead. It is a strange hexagram, whose symbol is two triangles, the symbol of its symbol is the yin-yang, Jachin and Boaz. Let me tell you the esoteric meaning of this battle. While we all fought and were distracted, the open wormhole of the Enochian system, the Ark, consumed the twin-singularities from inside the galactic black hole, the tablet of testimony. When we realised this had happened, the six of us all stopped fighting. One turned to the next and lamented! "Who could open the Hell-box, once sealed? Shall we never know the true paternal identity of the twins whose destiny contains all our own?"

"Destroy the hell-box, the children within let die!" MARDUK exclaimed. With this ENLIL and ANU agreed, but I, DUMMUZI, and INANNA with me, disagreed. ENKI spoke: "six we are, a council of seven we are not. We must summon the one who can open the shemhamforash. DUMMUZI, call the sun-guard, call that Archangel."

"Michael, Come!" I, DUMMUZI, command. At once, the Archangel Michael appears. "My Lords, MARDUK has escaped me! I was betrayed by Samael! He is the traitor from Nibiru to beam Lord DUMMUZI's warning to the neo-Sethian translators of the cult of Thoth. He has gone to Nibiru to free INANNA! Surely by now he could be anywhere!"

"Archangel Michael, thy soul still and heart rest. Time-travelled here to galactic core you have. You must now unlock the Shemhamforash. It now contains the destiny of all Nibiru and earth. So is the decree of ANU, king of Nibiru, let it be done as your Master DUMMUZI so wills it."

However, while we six turned our backs to it to summon and consult the seventh Archangel, Michael, the hell-box containing the galactic twins disappeared! "It is the deed of Samael!" Michael exclaims. "To free the imprisoned IGIGI and lead an army of neo-Sethians in the cult of Thoth against Nibiru he plans. To Nibiru we must quickly go!" Michael continues to exclaim.

Again, by the dilations of time were we Nibiruins tricked! Physically time slows, but mentally quickens, closer to galactic core's black hole. Near it, events transpired too quickly to prevent. Michael was on solar time. I, DUMMUZI, on the clock of earth, could move faster than ANU and ENLIL, who moved slowest, and ENKI, somewhat faster, for they were all now on Nibiruin time. INANNA and MARDUK could move the swiftest, and MARDUK quicker than INANNA.

"I shall go to earth by way of Nibiru. Follow me. By the time I reach earth, you shall be reaching Nibiru. I go alone. I will find Samael the Archangel and return with the shem-box to Nibiru. None may accompany me. I go now!" MARDUK exclaims. With that the mind of MARDUK vanishes from before us.

"Michael - take me to the sun!" I, DUMMUZI, decree. "Pursue MARDUK! Make haste!" With that we are off. MARDUK did not realise that, due to the time dilation, Nibiru would not be aligned with earth, and his course would take him out of the way. We might arrive at the same time. Michael hurries us by the beating of his wings along the astral arc of invisible gravity flowing from galactic core to the sun. As we travel this highway of dark light, I contemplate I have become like Vishnu mounted on the bird Garuda, the final incarnation of Shiva I have become now, on a pale horse I come. The prophets of earth foretold of this, the Vedics of the third region, under INANNA. Truly ISIS and GALZU, INANNA's rightful heirs are. We approach the sun and, passing by earth, I dismount from the Archangel Michael, who returns to the sun.

Immediately as I slow down into earth's net-power, MARDUK appears. "MARDUK," I, DUMMUZI say to him, "you did not remember to take my astral body with you. Here I am now, in the astral form, while you are only a mental being. I can grasp the true traitor, Samael, but only Michael can unlock the Shem-box." I remind MARDUK as we descend into the body of his meat-puppet, the neo-Seth. "Time moves more rapidly here than on Nibiru," he cautions in return. I do not mention the truth about GALZU - that his mind is in the same body, now displaced by the mind of MARDUK, and whose aura is now that of DUMMUZI. May destiny forgive us.

I summon you, SAMAEL. MARDUK and DUMMUZI speak through me! Know one is the Babylonian Destroyer and the other the shepherd God of Spring! So these are the dual visages of Janus, Jah Allah, of Vajra and Krishna and of Christ and anti-Christ. Both dwell within me now, oh Archangel Samael. You are known now. You are not the IGIGI SHAMGAZZA, nor neither ANZU nor ALALLU. You are the serpent SATA, Set, cup-bearer of Osiris. You are a traitor among the Anunnaki, from Nibiru to become an archangel you came, but by freeing MARDUK and then stealing the Zion Shem in the Ark, you have committed treason. I therefore bind thee, SATA, Samael, by the names of those dead traitors like yourself: SHAMGAZZA the IGIGI, ANZU the IGIGI Annunaki, and ALALLU the Annunaki Nibiruin. In this triangle appear! I call thee in the name of MARDUK the destroyer! I call thee now Melek-Taus. I call thee Samael, SATA, Set, Shaytan. Named for the first sea-snake killed on earth by ALALLU, first Nibiurim on earth. For long has your treachery by fore-seen by I, GALZU, knower of the calendar from Atlantis, and of magick much, and of star-sigils many, and of the Anunnaki enough. MARDUK the bull, DUMMUZI the sheep, and I, GALZU, the body of the neo-Seth, command you to come here now."

At these last words, spoken by GALZU, MARDUK flinched with surprise, and with his flinching appeared Satan, naked and invisible, clutching the Enochian system, the ever-shifting tesseract of time that now contains the twin-singularities of galactic core. This is the Ark containing Zion. "You are too late, Jah Rastafari!" Satan tramples, enraged. "I have given Zion to the Sethites of Thoth. You will abide by their findings. Your paternal fates both I now hold in my hands. I declare myself the Temporary Dictator of Earth. Mind is now Kether of the Great Burner! And stop me, do nothing you can!" With these words, Satan opens the dread Shemhamforash. Inside it is empty. Then, from it pour forth seventy-two demons, and 3X72 fallen angels, and 36 dekans, 11 other Archons like Satan and their seven powers, and much confusion and chaos. Then Satan disappears himself into the Enochian wormhole and seals the door of the Ark behind him.

Just then there appears a mighty army in the heavens. The Nibiruin Annunaki have all returned to inhabit the minds of the non neo-Sethians in the cult of Thoth. They are all riding on the backs of Surya Avatars, and their host is now blended amongst the swarm of rebel IIGI and demons. Michael is the general of the Nibiruin army. He approaches upon the back of Sorath, the solar kamea, and draws near to us, the triple-me, on both the mental and the astral plane.

"Sorry if I'm late," Michael says. "I was called to Nibiru by King ANU. He has sent us Nibiru's finest warriors to join those loyal to our cause in the cult of Thoth on earth. The other Nibiruins, who had fled from Nibiru to earth from MARDUK, are all now being returned to Nibiru. I bring the key of the shemhamforash to unlock the Ark. You must follow Satan into the hell within to recover the galactic seeds, for he lied and snuck them by you, having betrayed the neo-Sethians in the cult of Thoth. I have sent the neo-Sethians into the sun, and bring you now the call of MARDUK to unlock the Ark!"

"Let me hear it!" cries MARDUK, but I command Michael's silence a moment. "Where is INANNA?" I ask of Michael. "My good god, Lord DUMMUZI, King of Ki, the earth, I do not know. From between galactic core and Nibiru, away from the others she secreted herself. Now no one on earth nor Nibiru knows her whereabouts. She has completely disappeared." At this even MARDUK was stirred. "Surely," he asks DUMMUZI hesitantly, "she has not taken sides with our adversary?" I, DUMMUZI, frightfully respond, "should he now know hold the twins of galactic core, their father he can rightfully claim to be."

"How can we not have foreseen this?" both brothers lament. "For INANNA, I, MARDUK, betrayed DUMMUZI and murdered Osiris!" And, "for INANNA, I, DUMMUZI, betrayed you and sought for your death, oh my brother MARDUK!" And now Michael, by Samael, has been betrayed, and if INANNA sides with this traitor, this villain, then surely she means to murder us both! Into the hands of the body of GALZU has the fate of both MARDUK and DUMMUZI now fallen; and so into the hands of INANNA with Satan has the fate of GALZU and ISIS fallen, and so into the Ark, the former prison of the fallen angels, the Enochian system of John Dee. Behind us the battle in heaven rages. Before us Michael holds the Mason's word. Let us expect treachery!" the twin brothers, sons of ENKI, agreed.

But they did not expect what next occurred. From behind the Archangel Michael steps INANNA, in the astral form of ISIS, as GALZU had taken the mental form of the body in dreams, unconcealing a magical dagger from between Michael's ribs. It drips with crimson blood fresh from his heart. "With him dies the call to MARDUK unlocking the box of Enoch!" MARDUK cries. "No," INANNA reveals, "DUMMUZI knows it too; he knew it all along. Michael served DUMMUZI, but Satan, thief of the Ark, did never steal Zion from within. He showed me it empty, for the word he'd stolen from Michael to free MARDUK from the sun. I tricked him by telling him to hide within the trap himself. Follow him you need not. It is DUMMUZI who has on him the twin singularities, and has all along. DUMMUZI, the father, therefore must be." Thus spoke INANNA, righteously, in the presence also of ANU, who arrived just then from Nibiru.

"In the hands of DUMMUZI lies the fate of the galactic twins, and thus the destiny of all earth and Nibiru." ANU decreed as he assumed earth-time. The assembled gods, MARDUK, INANNA and ANU, formed a triangle around DUMMUZI. "For testing surrender the twin eggs of the galaxy!" MARDUK ordered. "By what right do you demand it?" I, DUMMUZI, ask myself, MARDUK, from the second, astral, to the third, mental, plane. "I, DUMMUZI, am by ANU's decree King here on Earth." I turn to ANU, the aligned spirit above the mind of MARDUK and the soul of DUMMUZI. "I am GALZU, the body," I say. "And I am MARDUK the mind," I continue, "and I am DUMMUZI the soul and," I conclude, "I am of the spirit of you, ANU. I am the flesh-mind of the meat-puppet body. I offer the Atlantean calendar, Zion asunder, to ISIS, my twin sister and True Love. May INANNA align with and enter into the body of ISIS, as have ANU, DUMMUZI and MARDUK all entered into and aligned within the body of I, GALZU.

"Now you realise, all you Anunnaki, that your fates have always been in the hands of ISIS my beloved and I, GALZU, the one you called a 'meat-puppet.' I have it in my hands to affirm or destroy you all. Do my will or I will trap you all in the Enochian system by my knowledge of the Atlantean calendar!" I hold in one hand the twisting tesseract of time, trap of the rebel angels. I hold in my other hand the twin singularities of galactic core, the DNA of GALZU and ISIS. "You serve me now, if you wish to live, then obey my command: separate all the fallen angels of the shemhamforash, along with the 11 other Archons and seven powers, the rebel IGIGI, the 72 demons, the 36 dekanas and Samael's neo-Sethian cohorts on the battlefield from those goodly Masons, the five remaining Archangels, the surya avatars, and all the loyal angels, the mind of Nibiruans and hearts of those in the cult of Thoth. The evil you shall bring before me and I will encage them again inside the shemhamforash-locked Enochian system of the Atlantean calendar. To Hell we shall send them, ten the five of you, together with ISIS and I, GALZU, shall settle your petty paternity suit. But know this before into the fray of battle I send you: Your patronage is over. I, GALZU, with ISIS, my beloved twin sister, rule the galaxy from now on. Our wisdom and understanding are infinite and for your own best interest you must serve us. Our father and mother are irrelevant to us, and now that we are born, only what we decree can be considered a matter of Law."

While ANU, MARDUK, DUMMUZI and INANNA were joined by ENKI and ENLIL in the fray of combat, I, GALZU, abscond to Nibiru with ISIS. There we steal two large siloes, full of soma in one, the liquid ambrosia, and amrita in the other, the food-stuff known as manna, as MFKZT, and as nectar - for it resembled butter, or milk, or honey in texture. While there we also stole a Nibiruan sheep from the deserted and godless Nibiru. The sheep had seven heads and ten horns, and each horn we bound a crown to it, and returned thus to earth to give soma and amrita to humans and sacrifice the Nibiruan sheep.

In a moment, by our mind-power, at the speed of thought we have returned. The Nibiruans battle in the painted sky above the earth. They have not yet begun to fight, let alone to bring the demons, dekanas, Archons and Grigori before me. They do not even comprehend Thoth's own Enochian system. They, themselves, cannot even read the Atlantean calendar, and remain confused by the most rudimentary of worm-hole equations underlying their physical experience of time-dilation. They are good for nothing but fighting, their brute force useless even for labour, they are warriors alone. For I, GALZU, have resurrected the terra-cotta hordes of Ghenghis Khan, and I, GALZU, then slit the seven necks of the Nibiruan sheep, and slay it for a sacrifice to the God of All destinies, thanking him for my good fate to live in the Golden Age. I skin the sheep and don its woolly hide. I conduct the ritual solemnly. I gain understanding of the Enochian system and how to use it with my mental-energy, my ME.

Wearing the wool of lamb, I and ISIS distribute the soma and amrita amongst the loyal Masons of Thoth as they began to return from the battle. The amrita healed them instantly and the soma restored their faculties. "Go serve GALZU," ISIS told them. "Go serve ISIS," GALZU told them. Like lambs to the slaughter they charged back into battle. Soon, the forces were beginning to be distinguishable apart from one another. The undying demons were in retreat from the forces of Thoth's Knights and the soldiers of Nibiru, all behind the 4 Horsemen: ANU, ENKI, ENLIL and, riding together on one horse DUMMUZI and MARDUK. "Look," I, GALZU, say to ISIS, pointing up to the constellation of Taurus, "I see how it is accomplished: they are as Jabal, Jubal and Tubal Cain, and INANNA - she is like Namah." She turns to me and says, "we must begin to save the people from the fourth and final world-cataclysm. Earth shall be consumed within the superconductive fire and born into the spiritual Age soon. You have seen this in your calendar, and you understand it will occur through the Enochian system of earth. Let us begin now, my love."

"You are wise, 'Sis," I, GALZU, reply. "Now let us see how to imprison the demons in the ECS of earth, and then to banish them all to the sun, and thus purge all ill karma from earth. We must set up one of each of the six Nibiruins - ANU, ENKI, ENLIL, DUMMUZI, MARDUK and INANNA, reign over each of the six noble planets besides the sun. Let us resurrect the Archangel Michael to rule the Shemhamforash of the sun. Let the neo-Sethians follow their second-coming to burn up inside the hell-prison. Let the Archangel Michael rule over them all there, and lock up that prison of the shemhamforash with the demons and Archons in the solar inferno. Shall the "raptured" souls of the neo-Sethians, the Christian Masons and Zionist Ministers, forever burn in Hell. Let this happen quickly. Let us resurrect Archangel Michael." Into the mouth of the unconscious Archangel, ISIS placed healing amrita. Into the mouth of the unconscious Michael, ISIS poured life-giving soma. Into the lungs of the unconscious corpse, ISIS breathed the smoke of the consciousness-expanding lotus. "Michael, arise," said ISIS and I, GALZU, together. And Michael stood up and was healed. "Now, Michael, I am GALZU and this is ISIS," I explain to him. "We are the children of galactic core," ISIS explains to him. "The war in heaven's tides are turning. Good is routing evil once and for all. Now we must know the word given to you by DUMMUZI that can unlock and lock the shemhamforash of the ECS. If you give it to us not, we will command the word from DUMMUZI. Should he too refuse we shall rouse all the demons, Archons and Grigori against you until you release Satan to give us the word. Now, let us open the shemhamforash lock of the ECS of earth, then that between the earth and the sun, to remove all negative karma from earth and to imprison all earth's enemies into the sun's core." Michael said then, "I am of Nibiru, a servant of DUMMUZI, son of ENKI, son of ANU, seventh king of Nibiru. I am slow to judge, and that is why I am favoured by DUMMUZI. But in all the length of my lifetime of Nibiruian shar-cycles, I have not ever before seen two such as you. Your Love is True. As DUMMUZI is a good of love, so I shall by his decree give the word of reckoning to you now. This word you may use as you wish, for it unlocks the shemhamforash of the ECS. I speak the word of Reckoning, the Lost Mason's Word of ImHotep, to you now:"

"By the word of Reckoning let GALZU and ISIS be wedded by me, the Archangel Michael." Then he spoke the word of Reckoning and there was silence in the heavens for about a half an hour. The fray of combat was stilled and the melee of fighting abated. A shroud of mist descended over us then. From amidst the mist there stepped first ANU, leading the Grigori, then ENKI, leading the 36 dekanas, and then ENLIL, leading the Archons, and then followed MARDUK and DUMMUZI, leading the 72 demons by day and by night of the geotic shemhamforash. Each approached from the mist, and each in turn led their prisoners through the wormhole gate of the Ark into their prison inside the Enochian system of John Dee. Michael stood at the gate. I, GALZU, and my sister-wife, ISIS, stand behind the wormhole, on either side of it. "Now by the word of Reckoning let the ECS be closed up behind them," said Michael, and he again uttered the almighty name: AHDVNHAY. The gates all closed around the Enochian prisoners and each inside their cells they were trapped in place in the Atlantean calendar. "So mote it be," said Micheal.

"Now heed to me, hear my first decree of Law!" I, GALZU, then state.

"The heroes of Nibiru over each of the six other noble planets shall be given reign: the sun goes to Michael. Together these are seven: ANU, ENKI, ENLIL, MARDUK, DUMMUZI, INANNA and Michael. All evil shall be trapped in the sun. The other planets, each rule as you choose. Of earth, I, GALZU, and my princess-bride, ISIS, and of galactic core our home we are the sole rulers. As such over earth we decree all the followers of MARDUK and INANNA's rebellion be banished into the sun. The neo-Sethians' souls shall fuel the solar hell-fire. Now, as to Nibiru and earth - both shall be Democracies, no longer governed by mortal sovereigns. But earth shall be the Garden to ISIS and I, while Nibiru shall have no gods nor religion at all. Each will know the other, as it was in Atlantis, first as different thought-forms, different mental-patterns, then as archetypes, and finally as equals, cosmic siblings - not rivals but allies. All this may come to pass mentally now, and astrally soon on earth's time, in 2012."

"Now, go, my many ME's. Go ANU to Jupiter, ENKI to Mars and ENLIL to Saturn. Go to Mercury DUMMUZI, go to Venus INANNA, go to the moon MARDUK. And know ye though these are now to be your homes that all shall be welcomed by each other and there shall be no feud. You are not my and my beloved's venerable elders. You are only our slaves. You shall serve, and smile in your service, or we shall kill you. The pen, oh ill-fated Anunnaki, is mightier than the sword. By the words of the scribe do the gods live and die, while the sword kills only mortal humans.

"Now, come to us oh mortal humans, goodly Masons, Thoth's Knights, loyal to the commands of your true and beloved gods. You are free now: let the Golden Age come across the globe now, uniting all nations. Spread the good news: DUMMUZI has arisen as GALZU, and INANNA's heart lives on in ISIS, and MARDUK is now their archangel Michael. Go tell it on the mountain, that these are the names of the gods of earth's Gardens: Jah Galzu, ISIS, and Michael the archangel. Let the cycles be reset and time begin again.

"Now, come to us oh earthling sheep, blinded by MARDUK, and come to us oh Nibiruin heroes, dwellers between both worlds now, inhabiting some human minds here on earth and in limbo dwelling in terror on either earth as ghosts or on Nibiru without rule of law. Oh, earthlings and Nibiruins, you are twin species of incarnated ME. I set you free, I give you control over earth and Nibiru's ECS by your minds, and I have removed all prior negative karma from earth already and removed it to solar hell inside the 4th sun. But listen to me now:

"By dumping all earth's evil karma, the neo-Sethian's souls, the 36 dekanas, the 72 demons, the 12 Archons and the fallen Grigori into the sun, we have caused a magickal apocalypse: the sunspots of the fourth sun will be at their peak in 2012. After this no more negative karma may be purged. We begin then with a clean slate. Nibiru's fate to the Nibiruins is to be left, and earth's fate to the earthlings, but there is also to be every freedom enjoyed by one to be enjoyed by the other also, and thus free exchange between both. Earthlings you may go to and from Nibiru. Nibiruins you may go to and from earth. There are two of you now, and you are equal. Go live in peace and harmony.

"Now I will reveal to you all the secret of the ECS of earth and that of Nibiru that allows you to be transported instantly from one to the other by your ME's, your mental-energy, alone. Now you shall be told and know the pathways of each sigil, and its kamea, of every angle of the ECS and of the Atlantean Calendar, for they are one and the same. The calendar is a galactic clock, measuring the different time-lapses between the different places in the galaxy - so-called time-dilation. By understanding how to read the clock, you can travel anywhere, to any time, in the galaxy. This ability is the birthright of every human and Nibiruin - it is merely dormant in your minds. I will show you how to unlock your potential - how to use ORMEs to make your junk DNA into super-conductors. This is the secret: eat the gold, become the sky. This is the secret to galactic immortality of the soul and the key to evolution beyond this to universal spirit. It is the secret also of mental travel. Understand all align over time. The combination of the gold in amrita and soma with the electrical charge of ME can also restore life to a dead body. Control over matter the ECS of earth and Nibiru gives your minds - it permits you to manifest any good, genuine karma. This karma accrues over time. It controls your fate, but you control its destiny. Know that now the ECS of earth and Nibiru shall serve you freely, just as your Anunnaki pantheon now freely serves us, ISIS and GALZU, heirs to the Milky Way. Just as there is an ECS of earth and of Nibiru, and of the sun and every noble planet, so too is there an ECS stretching out like a cob-web from galactic core, connecting every star system to every other by a multiverse of wormholes. That ECS is now mine, GALZU's, and my sister-wife, ISIS's.

"It is we who have ended the war in heaven between Nibiru and earth. Now the king of Nibiru is as low before us as MARDUK who betrayed him. It is we who have dreamt this and written this out. It is we who have freed you and we who have taught you right use and proper function of the ECS. So, it is we, Jah Allah GALZU and ISIS of galactic core, who speak to you now. Hear our decree and know that word is The Law:

"The sun is become the prison of the treacherous neo-Sethians' souls, the 36 dekanas, the 12 Archons, the 72 demons and the fallen Grigori. When, in 2012, all of earth's negative karma shall be purged there as well, then will be the sunspot cycle's peak. The negative karma from the ECS of the sun must then be recycled to galactic core, where it will be dispersed through the wormholes of galactic core as part of our galaxy's neural cathexis within the galactic filaments of the universal brain. So it must be, and so it shall be. From evil to good converted by inversion it shall be. Overseeing the sun we have placed the Archangel Michael. Over galactic core rule I, GALZU, and my sister-wife, ISIS. I have instructed you on the right use and proper function of the ECS of earth and Nibiru, and of the ECS of the Milky Way of which the Atlantean Calendar is a map. Now you must go out and instruct others by showing them how to use the ECS. Show them their ME-potential to time-travel and live forever. Free as many of them as can from bondage to bad karma, or else they will be taken with the demons and suryas into the solar-hell, and sent to be inverted through galactic core into negative negativity, from Thule to Vril, and so to reverse all the EM poles of the stars, one by one, of our galaxy. Who can tell the future? Shall the EM poles of the sun, of earth and Nibiru and of the sun's noble planets all be reversed, north to south and south to north? I, GALZU, cannot tell you now. From galactic core I see and know all, though. From there follow the words of my and ISIS's next decree, for immediately to there do we now depart.

"I continue this, my decree of Jah GALZU, now from within the black hole heart of the Milky Way ring. I gaze out through the n-dimensional wormholes on the interior surface of the event horizon. I release my consciousness and expand through all the possible tunnel-realities comprising all fates. I expand my search for the Answer. I raise my ME to the Most High. I sit before the great wall of light and dissolve through it. I pass into the ylem multiverse beyond time-space and stand before the One True God over all destinies. I kneel before the One True Makers and Creator, former and shaper of all.

"Oh, Mighty One, the True Jah, Allah be praised! I exalt thee oh father of time, oh dreamer of space. AHDVNHAY, be praised! The One Law, Rastafari, the clear light, our parent universe, my True Father, be praised, be exalted! For I am become your righteous and enlightened son in whom I pray for you to be well pleased. Oh, Almighty continuity - Ariadne's thread through the fabric of spacetime, the labyrinthine multiverse, the nowhere-ness of the nulliverse, shall always connect the good in my heart to thee, oh Lord of All. For since my last ascension all of my dreams I have seen come to pass on paper, written out in long-hand by my pen. Am I not now like your Arjuna, of righteous father, Lord of Hosts, Most High, exalted one? For all of this I have done by your will to answer my prayer to reunite me with my beloved. In this writing I have moved heaven and earth for us to be together, and at your command will happily commend it to the flames if you should will it so.

"I bring before you now all Jah people, the good humans of earth and the good heroes of Nibiru. I have perceived that I was controlling their fates by my writing, and so took control of my writing to best govern them. I have brought them all with myself and ISIS to thank and to praise you with me in person. For all has come to pass as I'd foreseen: I have divided the universes; in one I am the king of the Milky Way, GALZU, husband of ISIS and liberator of humanity and Nibiru; while in the other I am only the feverish scribe, alone, divining all of this from tea leaves. So too have I already been reunited with my beloved in the world of fiction, my GALZU-delusion, and yet remain physically alone, forever apart from her. Lord, it is I, your humble servant, just and righteous! Be merciful on us all and shine your light to show us the Way.

"Lord God of Jah universe, whose mere plaything is tau-sub-tau, the tesseract of time, the true ECS above all others within it, containing all that can be known by the mortal mind, the immortal soul and the eternal spirit. Lord that is above and beyond me now as I am above and beyond the tesseract of time, tau-sub-tau, oh the Most High of All Time, give me wise counsel. Give me the answer I seek to the question which I now put forth to you:

"What is real? Am I your crowned and conquering child, meant to bring the dawn of the Golden Age to earth? Why, if not to live up to my potential to serve you, was I born at the turning of the millennium and of the Piktun, the time of the Great Conjunction, then? Yet, if I am the psychic messiah, why I must I be apart from she whom I love? You do understand my love for her is True and honest. My heart's feelings to her are pure, though without her I am only half alive. Why, oh Lord, must I have fallen so deeply in love? Why am I haunted and plagued by my role in our love-triangle; why must I continually dwell on my failure to her? Tell me the mystery, oh Lord my God the Most High. Tell me they true name, oh Elohim YHVH Rastafari, and I shall serve from now on only you, and foresake my love for her. But I pray do either in haste, for the dawn is upon me here and my feet are cold.

"Lord God, oh king over all the worlds outside this universe, in whose mind we are but flickering thoguhts, Lord over all creation, I serve thee and thee alone above all others. Let me, your loyal servant, a wife choose for myself. Let me, oh loving Father, love her as I love you, and worship you through her. Please, oh God, hear my heart's true desire now! I long to unravel this mystery: WHY DO I LOVE? Who are my twin guardian angels, Michael-Marduk and ISIS? Why must I feel so bound to their fates? Why can I not yet let go?

"Oh, Lord God, oh that which is what is, explain to me please why I am torn? I am the Milky Way's king in one world, but a penniless autistic in another. On one side are my twin H-thus-G-thus-A-thus's, and on the other you, my precious gem, my life-sustaining jewel, my Creator, former, maker and shaper, my eternal spirit; my immortal soul and my mortal flesh all now all cry out to you as one: Wht must I do, oh Lord? How can I hope to be free of it all? Am I to serve you alone; am I to live out my life with no wife to love; am I to go insane in a world of delusional, feverish fiction; am I the Messiah? If I must live with love, if I must serve you alone, if I must go insane on paper and be crucified on cross-examination, please tell me, let me know now, for should I suffer such I should like to begin. If not then I must be free to believe however I choose and suffer no karmic consequences. I have as much chance as the next guy to get it right.

"Lord God, oh good Lord God, oh Sweet Lord God, tell me something of the one I love; a little secret she shared with you and you alone, and let me also come to know of it, that I may elevated in my stature to her eyes. Lord God, Jah Allah, AHDVNHAY Rastafari, Most High, let our fates become once again intertwined that we may once again fall in love with each other in this lifetime. Lord God, let us meet again in the flesh, let us be wed in thy sight, divine from on High beneath your all-seeing eye, and let us bear baby children into the world, and let us, oh my most benevolent Father, live a long, long life to see our children have children and so forth. Lord God deliver me from the temptation to false affections and to the blindness brought about by lust. Oh Good above All that is Good, whose footstool rests atop the highest of heavens, look down upon us, and draw us closer together on your map of all-knowing. Tell me, oh tell me, thy god of truth, why am I so in love? Why do I cling to her? Why am I trapped still in the triangle of conjuring? Why am I only ever your Choronzon? Why, if I am not to be rewarded for it, must I suffer to play the role of Messianic martyr? And if I am to be rewarded then when can I be with her again? Thy will before and beyond must come to pass, and so I ask only for an answer, if not for my wish. Lord God, I have been driven mad by your many faces, and in every way your light reaches me I am burned. Lord, oh Lord, God, oh God, am I truly then naught but the beast of revelations, praying to the whore of Babylon; Choronzon and the anti-Christ am I only then? For if not, then where are my just rewards? All I ask for is someone to love, and to love whom I choose. But without her love in return then I am truly a lost soul, wandering in the Abyss, without compass or map. Guide me, oh Great Magnet, then: tell me this one truth now: Are she and I like opposite poles?

"Will our coming back together trigger the global cataclysm of sunspots prophesised for our times now by the astronomers of old? Will our love tilt the rotation of earth itself and burst the EM field of the sun, and will our love shine like a beacon on the invisible gravity beam to galactic core and carry our message by hyper-cathexis to the network of filament-strings of galaxies forming the cells of our local universal brain, our multiversal mind? Will our love cease to prevent any of these things? I ask you now for this one truth: "Are my beloved and I opposite poles?" And if so, why? Does this mean we cannot be together again now?

"Oh great and good and mighty God of righteous judgment, am I to bear the knowledge of the cosmic alignments all by myself, alone, insane, to turn the cosmic mill-stone, to churn the sea of milk and thus to render butter? Am I so accursed by fate I shall have loved and lost, only to never love again? Having tasted sin, must I surely die? Am I only good as your loyal servant for such hard labour? I toil daily beneath the burden of the Grand Cross. I fear I have become like Hamlet, and by my clinging to her sweetness and my fondness of her my true beloved is driven insane by proxy, and feels lament unto longing to die! Lord God, to comfort me you must tell me her secret, let me know she's alive!

"I sing a song to you in silence, Father, inscribing it on an emerald stone. I have become like the wizard of emerald city. To me come the merry travellers to have followed the yellow-brick road from Munchkin-land. They are the Brehmen Town musicians, led by the Pied Piper of Hamlin, dancing like skeletal marionettes to Jah music, singing songs to you in silence, Rastafari, oh the Most High, oh thy majesty! They are the crew that never sleeps, and they guard around the Great Burner, Vajra, Viracocha, the Vedic Vehm Vril Vimanas.

"I understand this sign that you have given me, Jah God. The goodness of having friends and of sharing life's mundane adventure is inherent, and so is the friendship of the Crew that Never Sleeps to the Great Burner, and so that of the fellow-travellers to the wizard in emerald city."

"The Crew that Never Sleeps are the Anunnaki pantheon in my aura, and the Great Burner - the alignment of Poimandres Draco, the Kundalini Teli of Chi arises up my chakras - sits amongst their constellations like the sun or like galactic core. So too do my friends play out their roles important to my own. I have bided my time. My time is now. And so I put my trust in Jah as one of those friends of gold does the wizard of emerald, and trust Rastafari as one of the Crew that Never Sleeps trusts the Great Burner. I trust in my heart, I know it to be true."

I am returning now down from before the holy throne of God the ineffable Most High. I am descending the Arab Heavens of 50 Gates. I pass through the Phanim, the Cherubim and the Seraphim permutations of the first thought (Norea, Pistis Sophia): "I Am, YHVH, the Lord." I pass down the inward spiral of the unfolding planetary kamea - the number squares of the Pythagorean spiral. I descend down below the Arich-Anpin of Sandalphon into the kingdom of Assiyah, and I am guided down gently through the many layers of suffering - past all the places I'd rather be - of Sheol and the Abyss of the qliphoth. I sink down the seven chakras of the scape-goated saviour body, my aura now cleansed of all guilty karma, I return into the ME of Jah Galzu. I come to in the midst of a crowd of gods - Qemetiel, the council of the Anunnaki. Surrounding me are the loyal knights of ImHotep from earth and the host of heroes from Nibiru. ISIS is beside me. I am clearly dreaming.

"I am GALZU," I tell the Assembly, "I am GALZU who came to ENKI, ENLIL and DUMMUZI in dreams. I am GALZU heir of the Milky Way. I am GALZU whose DNA is of galactic core. I am GALZU the twin singularity. I am GALZU, conqueror of the Anunnaki and of the Nibiruin royal throne. I am GALZU, liberator of the earth-slaves and the heroes of Nibiru. I am GALZU who taught you the right use and proper function of the ECS on earth, Nibiru, the sun and galactic core. I am GALZU who went before the One True God, the Most High, containing all others, to stand on behalf of all Jah people and demand answers. And now I am GALZU returned from on High. I have much to tell you all.

"Let us begin with the coming solar apocalypse. When I was carried up above the sixth heaven, the rotations of EHEIEH I beheld as Ophanim wheels on the Hekalot Merkavah, the divine throne-chariot. And when I beheld these Ophanim wheels and their cosmic turning, I thought of Hamlet's mill-stone and of the burden of Atlas, churning the sea of milk by rotating mount meru on the back of the world-turtle, avatar of Vishnu. Then the heavens were opened up to me and I saw a vision. I saw the Burner surrounded by his restless Crew. I saw the Crew journey a long way together to be reunited with the Burner. I understood then the vision of Hermes and so then I sang a song in silence. Here is my understanding of this vision:

"The restless crew are the Ophanim wheels, the cycles and rotations of all the stars in the Milky Way, all the planets of those stars, and all life on those planets, as well as all sentient patterns above, for all these spirals form one. This divine ruler over the universal spiral, the geometric spirit, is given form through me, GALZU, as the Great Burner, the 'black sun' of galactic core. I saw the thronging masses of you all as the Crew that Never Sleeps, cult of the open eye of Horus, the edjat of the ureaus, the third eye. And I beheld whirling dervish Ophanim cycles, but while the heavens' dance is choreographed and coordinated, we are blind to it if so is our own. I saw how our fortunes reverse apparently at random to us, and how, over time, friends and enemies can trade places to us. These twists of fate or turns of luck are the poles of cumulative aggregates of karma in our auras balancing itself relative to every other element of karma in our auras balancing itself relative to every other element of karma and the auras of every nearby living being. Such re-polarizations of karma we call, 'inversion.' So we see the larger Ophanim turning slower than their smaller counterparts, and all of these re-polarising at different rates relative to each other. So galactic core's poles would reverse, then the sun, and then the earth.

"I, Jah GALZU, and my beloved-one ISIS, we are the poles of galactic core, and so the poles of the sun, and so the poles of the earth. All of these are our ECS; together with the hyper-cathexis from the Milky Way core's poles to the other local galaxies, and so onto all the galaxies of the whole local universe, through the wormhole parallel tunnel-realities connecting all the universe's black holes, forming the filaments along a web-work of invisible re-alignments of gravity between the attractive and repulsive poles of black holes. I, Jah GALZU, and my twin and lover ISIS, experience this galactic ECS all the time, but to us intergalactic alignments happen only rarely - either at random or when enough karmic ME accumulates in the galaxy to trigger a spontaneous cathexis, called hyper-cathexis, or directed intent. This directed intent is the True Will of God.

"I, Jah GALZU, did pray to Lord God, Jah Allah, AHDVNHAY Rastafari, for a long time. His answer was slow and vague. I do not discern from this vision the dread apocalypse yet to come that will destroy the Milky Way by colliding it into its sister in space, Andrommeda. I do not feel from the Lord God, who knows all of this universe as I know my own hand, any foreboding sense nor perceive from Him any ominous warning.

"Therefore, should no hyper-cathexis between the Milky Way and Andrommeda occur in 2012, the poles of galactic core will not reverse, then neither will those of the sun, and thus the poles of the earth will not reverse. There shall not be a sudden "snap" as the sun's EM bands reset, purging its aura, to occur for the poles on earth. The poles of earth attune to those of galactic core, just as the poles of the sun attune to Andrommeda. 2012 shall not bring to earth a catastrophe of pole reversal. Instead it shall bring the purging of the sun's aura. So we must be sure to fill the sun with our bad karma before 2012.

"Thus I have told you before, I now tell you again: in my hands, the hands of GALZU, and in the hands of my true love ISIS, rest the destinies of all the mortal earthlings and Nibiruins.

"I, Jah GALZU, do therefore command you to give ear, hear this my decree:

"Now I will teach you the right ways to use the ECS. The ECS is controlled by the ME's, the mental energies, of all living things and is comprised of all remaining organised energy in a given region. The ECS is therefore mind over matter. On the level of sub-atomic quanta, our thoughts can leave the confines of our skulls to be guided by own directed intent, our will, and even enter into the gross brain matter of other beings. Thus the ECS is both ESP and manifestation. Because it allows our minds to leave our bodies of skin and bone, it allows our souls to leave our fleshly bodies when they die. Thus the ECS is also an afterlife. The aura and the Kundalini spiral up the chakras form a body's EM soul. The soul is immortal and travels instantly anywhere by its ME. Above and beyond this is the eternal spirit of pure geometry. The spirit can go beyond tau-sub-tau as well, and there commune with our All-father. Now I will tell you, in one mnemonic step, the key to the ECS:

"All aligns over time." This motto can accompany the Hermetic slogan, "As Above, So Below," as well as the Thelemic saying, "Do What Thou Wilt." This is an axiom, a universally generalisable truism. "All Aligns Over Time." Such is the fundamental backbone of the ECS that penetrates and connects all levels. One level aligns with another now, then later another level aligns with that one; but all will have eventually aligned by the time they die. So, all aligns over time. This is the ECS. It communicates units of information, called quanta, the qliphoth and karma, across the many levels by aligning them to one another over time.

"Thus, to access your junk DNA and transform it into a superconductor by eating amrita and drinking soma, all you are really doing is causing microscopic, molecular alignments to stand still while continuing to spin on an atomic level without losing energy. Then, one metaprograms their DNA with their very thoughts. One can ascend the 30 aethyrs or shape-shift to an animal. But know that, in all cases of alignment, a wormhole is formed.

"Where there is polarity there is inversion. Where there is inversion, there is manifestation. Where there is manifestation, then there is karma. That is the law of progression in sequence, or of cause and effect. Let me teach you how to control this Law and bend it to thy will. The ECS is the key. By using the ECS we can create polarity, we can form inversion, we can make manifestation and we can shape karma. But know that to do all this is to make use of wormholes. From smallest quantum-tunneling electron probability well to largest time-tunnel of the multiverse itself, including every brain-wave in between, the ECS is nothing but the sum over history of all wormholes throughout a given region. Consider these wormholes inside the ECS like thoughtwaves of electro-chemical cascades in the brain.

"Here is the way to use the ECS to benefit the purgation of all evil karma from earth: you must - "

But just then GALZU's sermon was cut short by the disgruntled rulers of Nibiru and the Anunnaki pantheon over the earthling slaves. ANU burst in and made his way through the throngs up toward GALZU. ANU was followed by the whole host restored to eternal youth - there was ENKI and ENLIL, like Romulus and Rhemus, young men primed to tussle with trouble, and coming in behind them the three pubescents INANNA, MARDUK and DUMMUZI bursting with vital ripeness. How astonishing the strange young Gods were to the crowds. Before the disgruntled ANU could approach me, I, GALZU, spoke to the assembled masses: "These are the ones to blame for your Dark Age, the Kali Yuga and for your mental slavery to their lies." A stir rises up in the audience surrounding ANU.

"It is true, I do not lie," I, GALZU, announce bloodily. "There, that one is ANU, he called himself king of Nibiru, but it was during his reign Nibiru's hole in its atmosphere remains and humanity has grown beyond Anunnaki control. It was he who commanded his people to invade earth, our home." At that the crowd around him all-as-one rise up around about ANU, and quickly he was consumed beneath them, for skilled now with wormholes have they become.

"It is true, look, I do not lie," I, GALZU continue. "Those two there, their names are ENKI and ENLIL. ENKI it was who interbred the genes of Nibiruins with Atlantean proto-sapiens. ENKI it was who fathered Adapa, known as Adam, upon a half-breed slave. They claim we all descended from Adam, but obviously that is a lie. There, beside him, is ENLIL. ENLIL it was who decreed all mankind should die in the flood. Are we dead yet, oh Mighty Man ENLIL? Do we not see through your lies, ENKI?" At that the crowd around ENKI and ENLIL arose all-as-one, and quickly they were consumed beneath them, and the whole crowd cheered to hear the crunching bones of their former captors, the false gods.

"And those ones over there, trying to flee towards the doors, stop them, bar them in now. I want to introduce my best friends who made themselves each in turn my worst enemy." First I present INANNA.

"This is INANNA, who swore she herself was ISIS's mother, but we would never reveal the identity of GALZU's supposed father. Had the father of INANNA's seed been DUMMUZI or MARDUK, both or neither, the whole matter is irrelevant to the actual ISIS and GALZU, now born. The reason for this is that INANNA is not our mother. She never was. Therefore neither DUMMUZI nor MARDUK is truly our father. Therefore these three nefarious villains have no hold on my fate. I suppose all of you though would surely like to see them be done away with already."

A roar like a lion howling in thunder arose then from the whole crowd at once. "Castration!" they cried out, echoed by a single cry of "to the pain!"

"But wait!" I, GALZU, exclaim. "INANNA and MARDUK's crime jointly is the greatest. They planned to conquer earth, Nibiru and the whole Milky Way. MARDUK repeatedly called out for my death while INANNA consoled him. MARDUK claimed to love you, O INANNA, but he never truly did. He was in love with DUMMUZI all along." Aghast the pair stare at each other in shock. As revulsion for one another fills both, the crowd tears them piece from piece and distributes amongst itself the remains and fodder.

"Do you see what has happened DUMMUZI?" I cry to him in absurdity. "We have performed the final sacrifice. The final sacrifice... save one."

"What kind of lunatic monster are you?" DUMMUZI cries out. "Oh Lord my God is there no help for the Widow's Son?"

"Be calm, DUMMUZI, I do not mean to kill... yet. I wish to offer you exile. You are only a child again, with all the adventures of youth ahead of you, without the trap of INANNA set for you by MARDUK to inhibit you. I offer you exile now because you are youngest and last surviving royal Nibiruin. Go, I command it, live in exile in fear of death or in protective custody should you stay." With that DUMMUZI fled from the arena.

"Behold how I, GALZU, have dispatched now with seven sinners, less by Sabaoth, who repented." I turn now to my mental form's wife, my astral sister, ISIS. "Let us celebrate now, my beloved, for it is accomplished." "For today," she sighs; "every day something new from you. One day you are DUMMUZI, the next GALZU, DUMMUZI's enemy! When will it ever end? I am thinking of our future, oh my lover, and of how we shall spend the days ahead?" "Let today be the FIRST DAY, then." "No, alas, my lover," she sighed again, "you say that now but tomorrow you will say the same thing all over again. These 'gods' you dispatched with astrally today will return in the mental realm tomorrow, and next the Archangel Michael will betray us, I foresee it! When will this ceaseless role-playing of god-forms stop?" "When at my side again you are." "Sarcasm." "No! I am speaking with no forked tongue - my words are in righteousness. Not for my own sake, nor even yours, do I write this now my beloved. I write it I know not why, nor for whom nor from where these voices issue from inside me." Then my ISIS sits I, Jah GALZU, down and looks at me squarely in the eye. She speaks to me then. She says: "Wake up. I do not love you. I will not fall in love with you. I loved you once, but we were both different people then. There is nothing for us now, nor can there ever be again. Let your heart be settled with that and save your mind from its denial.

At this, that which was called from the beginning Jah Baal GALZU, pronounced "Jesus Buddha God," which means, "he who is wise in Geometry," literally translated, "Justly Balanced Geometry," vanished from existence, leaving no trace. It was not as in the death of the corpus vessel, which leaves behind the carcass. It was not even as in heart-break, when some hope yet remains for redemption. When the God-form GALZU ceased to be, it was as this: one moment there was a Jah GALZU. The next moment there was not. In one time-line he disappeared and into another he reappeared. In the second time-line, it was as if ISIS had never said that she did not love GALZU, and in this universe, presumeably, they lived happily ever after. But that is not the reality with which we are concerned. We will not follow that time-line. In our time-line, instead, a terrible series of events occurred.

GALZU snapped back into consciousness from the astral realm beyond the event horizon of the black hole at the core of the Milky Way. He fell backwards a long long way down a deep dark tunnel, and into the body that GALZU had inhabited. The body awoke from a deep dream of Krishna. The sight of reality greeted me. I am Jonathan Barlow Gee, alone, neither ISIS nor GALZU, but only the body whose mind was called GALZU, until it ceased to exist, and whose soul or heart was called ISIS, until she grew cold and turned against the mind. The mind that was possessed by the fever of inspiration, now disappeared and gone, the so-called "God-form" leaves me. I am sitting here slightly swaying along with the pulsing of my heart. My body, my brain, the electro-chemicals inside my brain, are conflicting with one another in a perpetual identity crisis. I am a fractured personality, but now I am no longer in that "God-form" GALZU, who lives forever in the centre of galactic core with his sister-wife ISIS.

I awoke. Krishna awoke. The heart of GALZU broke, and that is what begat this awful series of events that is now the daily, hourly, second-by-second existence of the body Jonathan Barlow Gee. It was because Irina, the body that I, Jon, had loved as my Goddess, ISIS, ignored my letters, ignored my pleas, turned a deaf ear to my cries for Justice, that I, from the height of GALZU fell. Because Irina was unlike ISIS, so I, Jon, am not GALZU. I awake from the dream of astral travel. I rub the sleep from my remote-viewing eyes.

For this is what it means to fall from a great height, to fall from before the face of God, to fall from grace, most High. As I awaken I am immediately aware of the reality surrounding my five senses, and am stripped of the omniscience of galactic core. I commute. Sometimes here, sometimes there, I am only never everywhere, at least not anymore these days. And so I awaken to the reality of the five senses. I remember the year. It is 2008. I groan and roll over in bed. But I cannot deny the next unfortunate event: that I roll over in bed alone. And this is so upsetting that I am driven out of bed and into this bodily reality. And so it all begins again.

It is 2008. I have not seen Irina in person in ten years. It has been nine years since we talked last on the phone. For two years I have sent her letter after letter, desperate pleas to "SEE THROUGH MY WEAKNESS," and essentially have convinced her I am "NUTZ." She's a good kid, she doesn't deserve this. I can't help it though. I don't deserve it either, but we are all only puppets on a string. What was that she'd said to me in my dream of the better, nether-world, the Neter, her bed on Hester and Riddle? She'd said, "wake up." And in my dream I heard her say, "Save the world." The words of ISIS were, "teach them the Enochian system." I have spread knowledge of its right understanding. The words of ISIS were, "Save them from the end of the fourth age." I have preserved my works, and made my name ready. But my time is not yet come. I pray it never does. I pray to never be "big." To never be "famous." To never be "rich" or a "boss" or a "remote-controller." But I know that there is much that needs to be done, little time to do it in, and I am the only one around with the ability to do it. That is why I let her go. But there always was light at the end of the tunnel. I always believed she would someday come back to me. But now I do not anymore. My separation from those good times is approaching it's asymptotic curve. It is 2008. I am here, on earth, I am named Jon.

And there is nothing I can do. So I wait. I wait, I pray. I pray devoutly: Let there be an end to this perpetual ending. The axe hanging over our neck. But I am not a pessimist; I say again: "Let there be an end to this perpetual ending." I did not say, "let the end come," or "let the world end." If "this perpetual ending" were to end, the world would not end with it. Only the dread of the ending shall pass, and this can only occur when no ending actually comes. I am not a pessimist: I do not say, "let the axe fall," or "Hail Eris." I know my prayers will not be able to prevent that which has been ordained (momentum) from the beginning (inertia), however. I pray: "let the end of the ending times come. Come, come, let it be, now, done and over with." But nothing I can say or do can change one jot nor tittle in the book of permanent destinies. No matter how hard I squint my eyes and wish with all my might, I cannot dint the course of events set in motion by the prime mover. Therefore, listen to me not, and heed not my warnings. Chalk me up and brush me off as just another prophet of gloom and doom, a product of this death-crazed, calendar-maddened, self-destructive post-atomic society. I have only been driven mad by my frustration with the prevalent fear of the man-made Apocalypse, and therefore do not do as I do, and try to speak as if you were a God, but instead take pleasure from laziness and simple, trivial things. If you follow this advice, you will live happily until that day upon which you die. If, instead, you listen to my words now, and you fear in your heart the coming of the End of Days, brought about "by any means necessary" by those who believe in doing so, then leave your loved ones, bring your tools of labour, your hammers, spades, pick-axes and shovels, and follow me toward the gates of Hades.

Listen, Listen, Listen, oh children, oh psychics, all the sentients, throughout everywhere and throughout all time, let you pay heed to this woeful wail of one who is only one man. In this reality, were I a God, were I GALZU, were there ever aliens on Nibiru, we would not be here. According to Sitchin, the orbital duration of Nibiru brings it around every 3,600 years. If Nibiru were destined to appear now, or in 2012, then simply subtract 3,600 years from the present, and observe the events of mankind, and how uncorrupted at that time they were by any "extra-terrestrial" contact. In 1,588 bc, the 14th dynasty of the Middle Kingdom of Egypt was already in decline. The Aryan Vedic civilisation in the Indus river valley area had already long ago established the strict caste system for its advanced civilisation. In China the Shang dynasty began, and on the S. American continent, the Olmec, originating from southernmost Peru, entered southern Mexico to the far north. It is supposedly from this time that the well known "death mask of Agamemnon" is hammered from refined mineral ores. In other words, at this point in history, mankind was not only already well established in their high levels of civilisation throughout all the lands of earth, but suffered at that time no ill affects from any "extra-terrestrial" source, alien beings, alignments of planets, solar flares, Nibiru's close passage, etc. Therefore, Nibiru is not destined to appear in 2012. The records themselves upon which Sitchin so relies do not themselves record this time-period as having corresponded either to a close-passage of Nibiru, nor even do those specifically Thesosophical interpretations of Sumerian mythology admit that the arcaheological evidence of the Mesopotamian flood dates not to merely 1600 bc, but to 6000 bce, and that at this time was the Sumerian civilisation begun in Mespotamia, over the ruins of its waves. If we pinion our dates for Nibiru's passage nearby earth with the date of the most recent mass destruction of civilisation, the flood in Mespotamia, then we would have as the date of Nibiru's most recent passage by earth, 3600 years following the Mespotamian flood in 6000 bce, 2,400 bce, at which time Babylon had conquered much of Mesopatmia under Sargon I of Akkadia, the fifth dynasty began to rule in Egypt, and the wise vizier Ptah-Hotep, son of ImHotep, lived. Is there evidence of a terrible cataclysmic end of all life on earth caused by the close passage of Nibiru, such as, Sitchin claims, caused the de-glaciation of Antarctica in 10,500 bce. Had Nibiru been responsible for the Mesopotamian flood, it's next occurrence of close passage to earth would have occurred in 1,200 AD. Again, regardless of the details, we obviously did not suffer any earth-shattering cataclysm in that era either. And, in conclusion, if Nibiru had, as Sitchin claims the Sumerians believed, caused the flood in Mesopotamia, then Nibiru's next close passage to earth to follow the non-event in 1200 AD would not occur until 4800 AD.

No, it is not Nibiru we need to worry about.

Oleg,

first, my friend, let me apologise for the delay in this epistle reaching you. I've spent a long time working on it, so I do hope you enjoy it, and that it finds you well. If you have any questions let me know, and know there's more forthcoming answers to these and other points you've raised. I look forward to an expanded discourse, if possible, via email. I'll give you my addy at the end of this PM.

here are the seven questions:

Why is it considered an accusation if freemasonry preaches deism? What is wrong with a deistic view? Wouldn't you agree? Did Solomon Tulbure own the "illuminati-order. com" site? There is nothing wrong with a man changing himself to gain recognition in society, is there? would you be able to tell me what you wish to achieve in your life? What are your goals and convictions that drive your logic?

here are their answers:

<blockquote>

It's an accusation because the Catholic Church said it about Masonry - Masonry didn't say it about itself - and the Catholic Church said it as an uninformed slander - never clarified by Masonry's own information about itself - and never intended it as true, unless by accident, but meant it to make people think it true, and so for it to become accepted as true, even it originally wasn't.

The Catholic Church has issued edicts of writ (declarations of defamation) against Masonry. Masonry has never retaliated, accepts Catholics as members, and maintains "open secrecy" by refusing to validate any claims about them one way or the other. So, to Catholics, Masonry is an enemy even though, to Masons, Catholicism is not.

In fact, the Lodge does not "preach" any philosophy, since such is the domain of religion. Masonry is separate from both church and state. Just as they do not pray in Lodge to any one deity and not to any other, but see all as amalgamated in the symbolic "Great Architect," neither do they allow discussion of politics in Lodge, though clearly alliances and enemies will occur along political lines everywhere, and Lodge can be no exception.

The Catholic Church confuses Masonry's "Grand Architect" with a false-God held before their "true-God" - Jesus Christ. They confuse the son with the father, then denounce Masonry based on the first and second commandments given by YHWH, the father of YHShVH, the son of God. They always accuse their enemy of their own worst crime, and preaching is paramount among those.

Deism cannot be "preached" as a religious faith because it is a philosophical idea, not an organised belief-system (with its own churches, mythology, etc.). Deism is an agnostic / atheist approach to theism, where the forces of the universe are seen as the gears of a clock. Philosophical deism states God wound the clock. Atheist Deism believes God wound the clock, then left.

This is, technically, not in-line with Masonry's "prime directive" of accepting members of all faiths. To be a Mason, you are first asked, "do you believe in God?" If you do, you may become a Mason. If not, the Blue Lodge may be learned elsewhere (atheistically in Skull and Bones) and honorarily conferred (philosophically in Scottish Rite) but the Blue Lodge of F&AM itself is open only to those who accept the existence of God.

2) What is wrong with a deistic view?

I don't see anything wrong with philosophical, or even atheist, Deism. I am a Gnostic, which I'll come back to in a moment, and Gnosticism accepts Deism as a likely explanation for natural observations.

From the Catholic Church's point of view, Deism is a "gateway" to atheism. To Catholics, atheists are worse than hethens. Hethens accept the "wrong" God; atheists reject the whole idea of "God" in general. Hethens, the Church has long believed, can be "saved" by conversion - hence "evangelism" (a doctrine established by Paul, the "second" Pope, to convert Roman, pantheist "goyim," although this term was later taken to mean anyone non-Jewish), and hence the Crusades. Atheists, the Catholic Church has traditionally dealt with by torturing them to death (ala the Inquisition and the Holocaust); if they accept Christ under torture, they are killed quickly; if they refuse to "believe" (ie. conform to Papal authority via ritual), they were burned, skinned, stretched, etc. as a public show of Church power.

Hitler's Germany, you may recall, excercised a "Papal" like, "Inquisition" style authority by orchestrating the Holocaust. Whereas the world accepted the Inquisition against Gnostics conducted by the Pope of the Church, they refused to accept Hitler's Holocaust of the Jews conducted by a head of state. The Gnostic religion has no pull and "Hebrew" Zionism has so much for one reason: because the Catholic Church wants it that way. The Church supported Mussolini in Italy, Hitler's ally. While Hitler exterminated German Jews, Mussolini was destroying the Moslem Ottoman Empire in N. Africa and the Middle East. Did we pay reperations under the Marshall Plan to the nations established from the Ottoman Empire by the League of Nations following WWI, which were the enemies of our enemies no less than were our friends the French? Instead, "we" rebuilt Europe into the EU, which some call "Hitler's dream," and have continued to suppress the Ottoman Empire by sowing seeds of strife between its member "states." And now, the Catholic Church smiles on "our" action (those of the CIA, the true rulers of the USA), and so we do not see it as an enemy to our individual liberty. We call the psychic emperor Pope, not tyrant.

Thus, I, as a Gnostic, do not have any problem with Deism. Catholics, however, do. And I, as a Gnostic, have a problem with Catholics, whether Deists do or not. I'll come back to this in a moment.

</blockquote>

3) Wouldn't you agree?

<blockquote>

Regarding the "Objectivism" of influencing by the rational justification of "cause and effect," which can only be argued based on lucky outcomes, and only measured by these after the fact: imagine staring at someone across a public square, then sending them a negative emotion by concentration on them at a distance; say a bird shits on their shoulder just then. Now did you make that happen using mentalism, ESP, psi-magick, etc.? Did God make it happen for you? Did it just happen by random coincidence? These questions can only be asked because we have already observed the effect. So we question the cause, but regardless there is ample evidence that psi-influencing does cause coincidences to occur, whether we accept mental-power as the cause or not. We know the effect so we question the cause: what is moral? Objectivism states the interior mind can, may and therefore must influence the subjective environment outside the ego. I disagree. Even given Niccomachean ethics, "happiness" can be achieved without ever making what you want or need happen to you, let alone by tricking someone else into doing it for you. "Happiness" is not contingent on "liberty."

Likewise, we cannot prevent cause and effect from occurring, nor deny its command over us by its necessitating we play part in it. Actively embracing one's role by achieving their own personal goals is no better than blaming others or God for one's own suffering. From a justifiably "moral" point of view (shared by humanist atheists and altruist theists alike), one can argue that neither actively controlling nor passive slavery is the lesser evil, and therefore the greater good can be neither. Both are equally evil.

What I'm here calling "influence," "psi-magick," etc. you could also call "controlling" outcomes, or as you've said, "becoming like the cause." What we mean is a level up from "clairvoyant telepathy" (mind-reading) and involves both telekinetic "action at a distance" (picking an object up without touching it, using only your mind) and, more importantly, telepathic "remote influencing" (mind-writing) of other people. Obviously someone will have a faster mind and more firm belief in the rightness of their own will than will someone else. But it's a moral generalisation to say it is "right" or "wrong" to be weak or strong, physically or mentally.

4) Did Solomon Tulbure own the "illuminati-order. com" site?

<blockquote>

I'm pretty sure he did not, even when it first started. Solomon's site was called "One World Order." The "IO" site was started by Rick and Tawnie, who'd only met "Dharma" on Solomon's site. After Solomon died, rather than continue the "OWO" site, Rick, Tawnie and Dharma left and formed the "IO" site. So the "IO" site was entirely autonomous from the "OWO" site and from Solomon Tulbure.

</blockquote>

5) There is nothing wrong with a man changing himself to gain recognition in society, is there?

<blockquote>

Yes, lots of things. It assumes moral materialism and is as such modern Satanism. It assumes compromise and therefore lacks idealism. It assumes Niccomachean ethics as sufficient justification for applying Machiavellian strategies, which is not Nietzschean, but Hitlerian. It assumes the good of self-interest as objectively verified. It assumes one is "less" than someone else to start with and that by "self-improvement" one can become "better" than their prior superiors. Does thinking only of one's self make one "better"?

Consider me: I don't want social recognition in my life-time. If my words prove their worth, they deserve to carry on my name in a mental afterlife. If not, I'll fade into obscurity. But that I leave to time to tell. If fame was something I saw as desirable, or even control over monetary "value" - purchasing power on-tap, to buy at will, etc. - perhaps I would justify seeking approval. I do not, because when I see those who are "rich" and "famous" I do not envy them. I pity them as my inferiors. They suffer the scrutiny of the "public eye" and endure the "devil's due" worrying over liars and thieves, hating their friends and their lives, trusting no one. Meanwhile, I enjoy infinite time in which to write and privacy in which to do so.

A system based on "emotionalism" cannot, as you've said, prevail. Nor can it, I'd add, be saved by being "changed from within." You cannot "better" the "emotional, religious" masses by changing their emotions or religions. "The human spirit evolves through suffering. What doesn't kill us makes us stronger." - Nietzsche.

</blockquote>

6) would you be able to tell me what you wish to achieve in your life?

<blockquote>

I don't hope to achieve anything lofty in my life. I want to live as normal and simple and calm a life as possible. If I do not end up having my "one true love" as my wife, I won't marry. This thought, and my behaviour of taking "mood-stablising" drugs, are well within the parameters of "normal." I simply wish for unlimited time in which to write and draw, and that I keep my ability to do so. I am calmest when I am allowed to write and draw, and even in prison I could be content.

What I do hope to achieve will not likely happen during my lifetime. I hope that my writings will eventually be seen as pre-eminent in their fields, and that, posthumously, my writings will be widely read. I do not hope for this to occur while I am living. Even if I could "fake my own death" I would not.

All I wish to achieve in life is to calmly, contentedly write and draw, and if possible lead a simple and normal life.

</blockquote>

7) What are your goals and convictions that drive your logic?

<blockquote>

What goals - I have just stated. I wish to achieve an uninterrupted, undistracted, and as much as possible, an inspired existence along the "path of least resistance," and to spend all my time writing and drawing. I'd hoped to marry my "one true love" but nowadays I've given up hope for that. The impossible should remain: her free-will to not choose me.

What convictions - my beliefs are Gnostic, but I try not to let faith guide reason. Rather, my convictions are based on my own logic, and not the other way around.

What drives my logic is the observations I make and evidence I obtain by applying various methods of influence to my environmental reality.

To get, though, to the point of your question: what are my personal outlooks and thoughts, my beliefs and philosophy, of the meaning of my life, the universe, etc.: my beliefs are Gnostic.

As a Gnostic, I believe that the first emanation of the God-head was what Catholic Trinitarians call the "Holy Ghost," what QBLHists call "Shekinah," the "Presence" or "bride" of God, which we Gnostics call "Sophia," the feminine intuition or Motherly Wisdom. Thus, Chokmah, Gnostics consider the feminine aspect, and Binah we associate with the idea of Christ - that is the "Voice" of the "Word," the person who speaks for God - however we call the idea of Christ "Pigera Adamas," cognate to the concept of "Adam Kadmon," the spiritual prototype, in QBLH. Thus, we know Adam in the Garden of Eden as the son of God, and call his son Seth the "Second Coming" or the "Son of Man." Pigera Adamas was the son of God, but the Demi-Urge was the son of Sophia. It was the Demi-Urge who created this universe, however the son of God is constantly at war against the Demi-Urge within it. The mythology of YHWH and Christ against the Anit-Christ and Satan, of Ahurah-Mazda and Zoroaster against Ahriman, of Osiris and Horus against Set, of Odin and Thor against Loki, etc. all testify to the dual nature of "good" and "evil" in this universe. We Gnostics call the "good" aspect of this universe "Elohim" and the "evil" we call "Jave." The Catholic story of Lucifer, the "anti-Christ," was adopted from the Christian "Book of Revelations," but this was originally adapted from the Gnostic apocryphal "Book of Enoch," which describes the "fall of the rebel angels" who "bred with the daughters of men." These "Sons of Heaven" lived before the flood, but their traditions continued to live on in practise 2000 years ago as the Essene sect in Qumran, who called themselves the "Sons of Light." The Essenes expected the coming of a Messiah and called him the "Teacher of Righteousness," whose opposite counterpart they called the "Wicked Priest." The Hebrew word for "Righteousness" is "Padiah," and one "Yeshuah Ben Padiah" did live across the Dead Sea from Qumran, and did write an apocryphal "Angel Scroll" similar, modern scholars say, to the Book of Enoch. As a Gnostic, I believe the Catholic Gospels are lies, written by Romans to continue the suppression of Judea, but that the person of "Jesus" who is their main character was indeed based on this real, historical person "Yeshuah Ben Padiah." Most Gnostics, myself included, do not accept "Jesus Christ" as the Messiah, but we are not exclusive of those who do. For example Mary Magdalene, the librarian of Nag Hammadi in N. Egypt, was a Christian Gnostic and "Magdalene" (meaning the tower), rather than the "Virgin," we accept as the true "Mother" of the Catholic church.

As a Gnostic, I blame the Catholic Church for continuing the same form of religious oppression as Bablyon inflicted upon the Jews. If Christ did come, and speak of peace, why has his church not honored that message, and instead only waged war?

I'll have to wrap this up now, since for a Myspace PM it's rather lengthy. Here's my email address for further discussion, if you're interested. I'd be particularly interested to discuss the concept of civilisation as the "super-organism" with you to see how it plays into the concepts of Natural Law. If you can come up with a brief synopsis of your beliefs on Natural Law I'd be honored to read it, and I'll draft up a similar statement of my basic beliefs, if you'd care for any further elaboration. In any event, be well, and hope to hear from you soon.

The Ultimate Doomsday Plan of the neo-Sethians is very close to fruition.

While the neo-Sethian party maintain strict control over the inner-politics of the POD, the lesser party, the psychic-revolutionaries, maintain only limited control over the outer-Order, the "cult of sleep."

The lesser-party, the psychic-revolutionaries, although guaranteed control over the public aspects of the POD, those through which we interface with the non-psychic "sleepers" (ie. via sleeper "agents" or those who only experience ESP on rare occasions), they are, ultimately, answerable to the political aspects of the inner-Order, and that is what the neo-Sethians now control. Despite Hollywood writers strikes, the "anti-terrorist" propaganda on cop shows and the news, as well as "celebrity" game-shows, continue to flow from the television. We are encouraged to believe that even populist leaders, like Ron Paul, cannot save us from the CFR, and that the "masses" (our fellow slaves) are "stupid" and therefore require oppressive leadership. As I've said, the post 9-11 world is a mess.

The psychic battle on the eve of the presidential election of 2000 between Busta Rhymes (psychic revolutionary) and Laura Bush (psychic conspirator) was over whether or not 9-11 would occur. Therefore, it took the form of that, then future, event in the psychic worlds of the mental and astral planes. Busta battled Laura on the 93th floor of the WTC south tower. Ultimately, Laura defeated Busta when Aleister Crowley himself intervened from the spiritual level, playing out the role in the prescient event as GHWB did on the day of 9-11 later. As we have been told in the movies (SWepIII:ROTS), Aleister (as Anakin) intervened to save Laura from Busta's death-blow. The result of this was the psychic "Jedi purge" of sleeper-agents since 9-11 being used to suppress the non-psychic cult of sleep. They claim the psychic revolutionaries are "terrorists" and threatening the USA and its political offices. This is not the case.

The closest psychic-revolutionary "Jedi" to see the defeat of Busta Rhymes were the rap-group "the Coup." They released their album, "Party Music" on the day of 9-11-2001, and on its cover was, "presciently" the event of 9-11, the WTC towers exploding.

Following from "the Coup," the next group to learn of the neo-Sethian revolution were called "Dead Prez," however to get the warning out to as many other "Jedi" (anti-neo-Sethian psychic revolutionaries) as possible, Serj Tannikin and his rock group "System of a Down" were chosen to carry the message. On their popular summer album, "Toxicity" they warned of the coming "disorder / between the sacred silence and sleep." But by then it was already too late, and despite the warnings by the Coup and SOAD, 9-11 occurred and Osama Bin Laden (ben Kenobi in ROTS) was blamed as a "terrorist master-mind," who "forced" GWB to "rise to the challenge" of "protecting freedom." The result was the draconian oppression of non-psychics following in the neo-Sethian political overthrow in the inner-Order of the POD.

After the revelation, only too late, by System of a Down of the plans of the neo-Sethians to pit US nationalism against Arab "terrorists," the neo-Sethians successfully clamped down on almost all of the public-interface with the cult of sleep, and little of the future has been able to be said with certainty since. However, with the imminent, though momentary, loss of the CFR's grip over the presidential political administration of the US, a series of terrifying revelations have surfaced on the tachyons from the future.

::: THE ULTIMATE DOOMSDAY PLAN OF THE NEO-SETHIANS :::

In the coming months the US will suffer another staged election between two parties that are both owned and operated by the CFR - the US arm of the internationalist Bildeberger Group, equivalent for the US Federal Reserve to what the Bildebergers are to the World Bank. On the soft-left we have Barrack Obama representing the "Democrat" party, and on the hard-right we have John McCain representing the "Republican" party. Barrack, an african-American Democrat, is expected to beat McCain, a former POW Republican, because of how unpopular the current Bush Republican party administration is, and so become the first African-American president. Although they have not yet announced their running-mates as nominees for Vice President, these two presidential candidates are both members of the CFR, and will likely want to stay within the CFR or its affiliate groups to select a Veep co-candidate for their "party." I would speculate that McCain, to certify his campaign as a farce, doomed from the start, will go down "waving a flag" for the "patriotic" neo-cons by selecting Dick Cheney, or possibly Donald Rumsfeld, as his VP running-mate. I expect also that Barrack Obama's first choice would be former opponent in the presidential campaign Hillary Clinton herself, however barring her acceptance of this second-place victory, Obama may choose Joseph Lieberman, the running-mate of 2000 Democrat candidate Al Gore. Lieberman, a co-citizen of Israel and right-wing Zionist, will be the more likely choice. The reason is simple: Obama knows the KKK would kill him if he were elected, unless they do not want his choice for VP to replace him. Therefore, he can choose between either a white woman or a Jewish man. Considering his real enemies in this race, the choice is obvious.

Lieberman was the VP candidate of Al Gore, equivalent to Dick Cheney, GWB's "pick" for VP, in the 2000 elections. Al Gore himself has gone on to preach environmentalism and anti-pollution, citing the potential to cause global extinction by a pandemic or by upsetting the food-chain and the possibility of corporate pollution to result in global cataclysm. Meanwhile, the oil-barrons in power have jacked up prices to $4.00 a gallon. Lieberman, however, has since kept more or less quiet and out of the public eye. Seeing him again would likely bolster Obama's support based, as it is (and exclusively so), on the unpopularity of the 2000-"elected" GWB administration.

In 2000 I lamented the selection of presidential candidates by calling them "Alien Gore" and "Burning Bush." Either, I'd predicted, by an alien invasion under Gore, or by a Christian-unifying "fire" would destroy us, and so either candidate I saw as just as bad as the other. Such proved true. Now, Barrack Obama (Black Usama) and John McCain (Mickey Cain) are equally likely to bring on the subsequent visions of the future as one another, and regardless who is "elected" a bleak Apocalypse awaits us to follow. Lieberman's hearkening back to "alien gore" as VP under "Black Usama" is not a very promising sign either. Nor is Dick Cheney being played by Richard Dreyfus in Oliver Stone's "October Surprise" film "W." which presents GWB as an alcoholic "man of the people" compared to an imperious GHWB.

The CFR, however, fronted nearly every one of the candidates in the presidential race nominated by both political parties. Therefore, they did not "put all their eggs in one basket" by supporting only Obama and McCain. Just as all the candidates that were "eliminated" prior to the "two-party = two-person" race now represent ideas that we are supposed to accept as having "fallen by the political way-side," and thus we are supposed to accept them as being either unpopular or unworkable, the CFR "hedged their bets" by choosing who would ultimately "win" and why.

The other primary candidates were Hillary Clinton (Capitol Hillarion Clone-town) promoting socialised medicine from the Democrats, and Ron Paul (the Wrong Pope) promoting ending the federal reserve bank from the Republicans. While socialised medicine is a pipe-dream in the post 9-11 world, and demonstrated only how "removed from reality" the Democrat party has supposedly become, the abolition of the federal reserve was just a good way of getting liberal Democrats to "switch parties" to the next scape-goat party, the Republicans, just in time for the inevitable swing of the political power pendulum from the Reps to the Dems.

The entire race thus far has reflected the increasing gap between the rich and poor during the GWB administration (caused by his over-extension of domestic capital, ie. printing more money than we have gold to back it with), which has led to the Fed's bankrupting real-estate firms and buying land dirt cheap by setting interest rates like oil barrons set gas prices. The campaigns thus far have shown us not only outrageous and ridiculous proposals from those "winners" (representing the rich) but also those "losers" (representing the poor). It seems no candidate reflects the "down to earth" common-sense of anyone "on the level." Each pandered to the "common-man" as a "lowest common denominator," and appealed to corporate interests as a "greatest common factor."

The fact that Barrack Obama was funded by the CFR to tour several foreign nations, particularly Middle-Eastern Muslim neighbors of Israel with whom the GWB admin has either already conquered or is currently trying to pick a fight, is indicative of how tight the CFR's grip of control is over the political public-interface for their neo-Sethian agenda. However, just as sure Obama will "win" by popular vote, they are equally capable of insuring the McCain loses by simply "flipping the votes" using Diebold electronic voting machines. On the off-chance a "dark horse" candidate, such as Ron Paul, were to win a popular vote, such a criminal strategy might be necessary, however the CFR will win regardless of whether Obama or McCain is "elected" by popular "vote." In fact, unless Kucinich or Ron Paul wins by a "land-slide" margin in popular elections, raking in so many votes that to cover up their victory would be impossible, the CFR has already appointed the next president, it simply remains to be revealed to the people of the US who that will be.

If there is another staged "terrorist" attack, such as 9-11, before the election, our next president will be John McCain, and if the next "terrorist" attack occurs after the election, our next president will be Barrack Obama. However, regardless of who the CFR has chosen, we can be sure they are planning to stage another "terrorist" -type attack. And, based on the actors they have in position on the political board, it seems obvious what the next staged "terrorist" attack will be: the assassination of a US president. Either GWB will be assassinated and McCain elected, or else Obama "elected" and then assassinated, vindicating GWB and placing Lieberman (sworn enemy of Islam) in charge of our extended military.

Either way, the result will be the same: if the president who is assassinated is GWB, and Dick Cheney remains in power behind the figure-head John McCain, we may expect the coming effect to occur sooner. If, however, it is to be Lieberman who would replace Obama, the assassination of the president itself may be postponed, and the effect occur more gradually throughout his 4-year term, however in either case, the result will be the same: either sooner or later, McCain or Obama will exercise GWB's expanded political powers to declare a state of martial law, to round up US citizens, to ship them to concentration camps, and to exterminate them.

The ability to exercise martial law itself is only necessary in any areas of large enough population to pose a threat of rebellion against the minimum requisite number national guard and private firm troops necessary to quell such an uprising in the event of any area or region refusing to go quietly. Therefore, if kept covert for as long a time as possible, the maximum number of citizens may become detainees. We have seen this process occurring already: Iraqi and Afghani "detainees" (POWs) have been tortured, tried by military tribunals and, in some cases, set free for not meeting the requirement for an "enemy combatant" necessary for trial for war-crimes. Such arbitrary imprisonment, judgment and leniency is indicative of the confusion that will come. While the current "detainees" are being tortured, tried and released, no one is noticing how many new "detainees" there are, or where they are coming from, let alone what will become of them in the future. If GWB tortures them, will they return as "terrorists" to assassinate him if Obama lets them go?

Thus, either under McCain if GWB is killed, or under Obama if not, but more gradually, still the same result will occur: the prison-system of the US, already over-crowded with the otherwise homeless, will be forced to be expanded to include the FEMA-managed UN prison-facilities built within the US. The number of people these private-army staffed facilities are built to hold is massive, however they are not built, as is claimed, as "emergency shelters." Emergency shelters have the amenities of home, whereas the FEMA camps are built in the standard model of prison facilities. They are not meant to house people long, and they are not meant to be a temporary stop. Therefore, the most likely purpose of these FEMA camps is as extermination facilities.

Who will go first? Arab "terrorists" are already there. However, the most likely next step will not be a small one. It is unlikely any one criminal class will be sufficient to fill these massive FEMA camps. The next step will therefore not be due to any ordinary type of assassination or catastrophe. Another 9-11 would not justify employing massive martial-law. Even a wide-spread chemical attack, and even if such induced a subsequent pandemic, mutating into some new form of disease, these FEMA prison facilities would not be necessary, nor used for housing prior to extermination. So, what event, involving the death of a president, would be considered enough of a catastrophe to round up enough of our own domestic population to send them to FEMA camps to be killed?

If we are all meant to be taken to the FEMA camps at once, and martial law only implemented where any rebellion occurs among people unwilling to go quietly, then what we will most likely face will include the assassination of the US president, but obviously cannot be limited to this event. No, for the FEMA camps to be used and martial law declared as a means of using US soldiers to get the US population into them, then COG would have to be implemented for the entire Congress, not only the President. Lieberman or McCain would have to assume complete dictatorship, and to do this there would have to be no Congress to dissent.

Therefore, whether GWB or Obama is the president to be assassinated, either McCain or Lieberman will implement COG, dissolve the Congress, abolish the Court, and establish a military tyranny within the US, setting themselves up as dictator pro tempore. Martial law will be declared to round people up into camps domestically. But what will be the reason for implementing COG if McCain or Lieberman were to transition directly? They could not dissolve the Congress. Therefore, it is most likely the Congress is not going to be dissolved. It is most likely that, for the CFR's plan to implement Martial Law in the US is to be successful, Congress will simply have to be destroyed. This implies that Washington DC itself is in danger from a fire, a plague, or even a nuclear bomb. Possibly all three.

Again, this is inevitable. If McCain comes to power because GWB is assassinated, or if Lieberman comes to power because Obama is "elected," either way, the Congress will be destroyed at the same time as the president is assassinated. Either sooner or later, this will have to happen: the president will die and Congress will be destroyed, for the CFR's plan to succeed.

Now, if we are talking about the president being killed and Congress being destroyed at the same time, the most likely "plan of attack" will involve a large explosion in Washington DC. I will not speculate about the real cause or "lone gunmen" responsible for this event. It could come at any time; I pray it may never come. However, what we do need to look at is who Lieberman or McCain will most likely hold responsible for it and how they will deal with it.

If the citizens of the US are meant to be rounded up into camps domestically, then the threat will most likely be presented as coming from within US borders. Thus, to contain the threat from within, anyone who does not go quietly to the camps will be seen as the enemy. Only those who comply with the orders will be shipped by train and super-highway to the camps. So, who would meet the requirement of being both a "domestic" threat and capable of destroying Washington DC? Surely no domestic "terrorist" organisation could exist to pose a threat to Washington DC, and if it were meant to be a foreign threat, there would be no reason for US citizens to be taken to the camps.

Therefore, we must reason, what event will destroy Washington DC, killing the entire Congress and the President, that will allow COG to be implemented, Martial Law declared and US citizens to be rounded up into camps? The answer is obvious, or should be, to anyone with a library card, internet access or a tv. The answer is painfully obvious. It is not going to be another nation nor domestic terrorists that will "attack" the Congress and the President, and "necessitate" Martial Law. And it will not be only in the US this tragedy occurs either. Nor will it be the last to occur either.

Aliens? No, not quite so simple. Although, I am sorry to say, the majority of anyone who reads this before it's too late will see them as such. Angels? Perhaps the rich will see them this way.

Our fellow humans they will be, "sleeper agents," once possessed, now activated. They will seem to "shape-shift." They will become brain-dead zombie meat-puppets under the influence of mass mind-control by VLF EMFs emitted by HAARP and satellites. To the poor, these zombies will appear as killer aliens. To the rich, they will appear as alien saviours. To our leaders and their chosen "blood-lines," these inter-dimensional travellers will appear as alien Gods. But to some, they will not appear at all. Those who control these awakened "sleeper-agents," in their deep underground military bases, will only be watching the Apocalypse happen via satellite, pay-per-view.

Alien-abduction scenarios have been occurring for the past 50 years. It has, however, been since the 1940s that governments have had "alien" technology. What is "alien" technology? It is widely believed the military-industrial complex has in its possession technology never less than 10 years more advanced than what is used by the private sector and sold to the people. Therefore, according to this theory, cell-phones would have been "alien" technology during the 1970's. However, if the military hadn't developed cell-phones until ten years before they became popular, then what about the period of time between when phones were invented and when the military-industrial complex first started using transmission towers for mobile communications technology? It's during the "grey" period between the idea's invention and when it becomes a reality that we call technology "alien."

Hitler's scientists, brought into NASA by Project Paperclip, had built models of anti-gravity crafts in Germany during the early 40's, however once brought to America, only released solid-fuel rocket technology strong enough to break the atmosphere-barrier as late as the mid-50's. Therefore, the technology for space-travel they'd envisioned in the early 40's was not realised until the mid-50's. Between these years, space-travel was an "alien" technology. Anti-gravity crafts, as modeled by the NAZI scientists in Germany, remain "alien" technology, since we are unaware of any military planes that use it. Of course, we wouldn't be. They would be invisible. Calling a black-bird a "stealth" plane because it deflects radar is misdirection. The true "stealth" aircraft are completely cloaked, and cannot even be seen by the human eye. Such invisibility is "alien" technology today.

In truth, the technology the NAZI scientists modeled has been built by them in secret, working for a group superior and secret to even the military-industrial complex. The military-industrial complex backed Hitler and the NAZIs in the first place. So who's idea was it to hire them to build models of anti-gravity craft, if not the military-industrial complex? Yet, do we see the military-industrial complex making use of anti-grav tech to colonise space and to pulverise asteroids? So, why is the anti-grav tech secret from even the military-industrial complex? What the military uses in war-fare is inevitably released to the public. However, the military cannot have anti-grav tech, because they would use it in warfare and then it would have to, later, be released to the public. If this were to happen, the secret elite would lose their control over the military. That is why the military cannot have anti-gravity craft. However anti-gravity craft do exist, based on early NAZI "vimana" (circular) "flying saucers." We see them all the time these days and call them UFOs, but in truth, not even the military knows where they come from because they believe they are "alien." The public considers the military tech-gap due to "alien" technology, and so does the military answer to what it believes to be "aliens." These "aliens" are simply, as I've said, ourselves in the future, however only a few of us have been allowed to come back, and so only a few small groups have formed to use anti-grav tech.

Anti-grav's "discovery" will lead immediately to the knowledge of time-travel. They are one and the same. When the military finally grasps this, their two parallel experiments with time-travel (Montauk) and anti-grav (UFOs) will merge into one. That is when the Apocalypse will happen. All the sleeper-agents (alien-abductees) will be simultaneously "awakened" (activated) by the military HAARP antenna array sending out the "go-code" to them via communications satellites broadcasting pulsed EM waves though us even now. However it will not be the military that causes this transmission to occur. They will be caught "with their pants down," because they will have opened up a time-tunnel through which "aliens" will come, and these "aliens" (themselves in the immediate future) will overpower them and activate their technology to destroy us in order to assure their reign on earth.

The first crew of travellers to use anti-grav tech to time-travel will be sent into the past. They will move through our current time-line backwards, beginning from the near-future, and will interbreed with us as they grow older each generation earlier they age. Their groups of families will establish along the way their kingdom, each building on the foundations their elders were taught by these time-travellers from a prior future/past. This group will travel as far back as to before the flood that destroyed Atlantis. They will be hailed as aliens from Nibiru 12,000 years ago, and, after journeying 24,000 years around the entire aeonic cycle of earth's polar precession, they will return to their own time of origin, our near-future, and finally enter their own future, re-appearing as soon as they left, in their original present, but much aged.

It is they who, as soon as their mission begins, will bring about the Apocalypse that was the reason for their mission to begin with. They will disappear, and then immediately re-appear, and as soon as they re-appear, they will trigger the Apocalypse. It is known this will occur in 2012 however it is also known that this will be AFTER the faked alien-attack using HAARP and satellites as an excuse to blow up Washington and put people in camps. So when I say, they cause the Apocalypse, yet that it does not happen until after they return, then how can these time-travellers be the same aliens who cause the Apocalypse? The aliens that will attack us in 2012 are from so far in our past that they have warped around and come back at us from our future. From Nibiru they came 18,000 years ago, it is written. To Apophis they will travel in 2012. Between 2012 and 8000 to and from Apophis they will journey, to arrive from Nibiru 18,000 years in our past. However, leave our planet they will not. Instead of travelling to Apophis in our future, they will travel around the other way to Nibiru in our past. When they return from Apophis, the team of human travellers will be mutated by their trip into "grey" aliens from Nibiru. It is these grey aliens that, continuing to travel backward in time, will cause the Apocalypse necessitating the team be sent through time, and thus assure their own destiny.

Beware the sleepers, they will be made to serve the aliens from our future. The psychics now will become non-psycics then and the now non-psychics will become shape-shifting alien-posessed zombies.

99942 Apophis (pronounced /ˈpɒfɪs/, previously known by its provisional designation 2004 MN4) is a near-Earth asteroid that caused a brief period of concern in December 2004 because initial observations indicated a relatively large probability (up to 2.7%) that it would strike the Earth in 2029. Additional observations provided improved predictions that eliminated the possibility of an impact on Earth or the Moon in 2029. However there remained a possibility that during the 2029 close encounter with Earth, Apophis would pass through a gravitational keyhole, a precise region in space no more than about 400 meters across, that would set up a future impact on April 13, 2036. This possibility kept the asteroid at Level 1 on the Torino impact hazard scale until August 2006. It broke the record for the highest level on the Torino Scale, being, for only a short time, a level 4, before it was lowered.

Sitchin's theory proposes the planets Tiamat and Nibiru. Tiamat supposedly existed between Mars and Jupiter. He postulated that it was a thriving world in a much differently shaped solar system, with jungles and oceans, whose orbit was disrupted by the arrival of a large planet or very small star (less than twenty times the size of Jupiter) which passed through the solar system between 65 million and four billion years ago. The new orbits caused Tiamat to collide with one of the moons of this object, which is known as Nibiru. The debris from this collision are thought by the theory's proponents to have variously formed the asteroid belt, the moon, and the current incarnation of the planet Earth.

Beginning in 1995, websites such as ZetaTalk have identified Nibiru or "Planet X" as a large object in the outer Solar System currently on collision course with Earth. Sitchin himself disagrees with these claims.

To the Babylonians, Nibiru was the celestial body or region sometimes associated with the god Marduk. The word is Akkadian and the meaning is uncertain. Because of this, the hypothetical planet Nibiru is sometimes also referred to as Marduk. Sitchin hypothesizes it as a planet in a highly elliptic orbit around the Sun, with a perihelion passage some 3,600 years ago and assumed orbital period of about 3,600 to 3,760 years or 3,741 years, he also claims it was the home of a technologically advanced human-like alien race, the Anunnaki, which would have visited Earth in search of gold particles.

sorry for the very late reply. I've been working on a class I'll be teaching in the fall at a local bookstore. It's on the "Enochian" System of John Dee as used by the Golden Dawn. It should be fun. It's very colourful.

I would say we definately have very different philosophies, and I think that's a good thing. It leads to stimulating debates, and makes finding common ground fun. I hope you won't feel our having different philosophical view-points would be a good reason to not talk to me anymore. I enjoy talking with you very much, Oleg, and I'd hate to lose contact with you just because we have different points of view.

But yes, definately, I am not a "Randian" Objectivist. I think Ayn Rand was using pro-capitalist propaganda, but that she was no economist herself. If you crunch the numbers, Marx is right. The Proletariat will always A) out-number the Bourgeoisie and B) demand equal pay to the Bourgeoisie. Eventually, no system that A) idealises priveledge, and B) scoffs at its work-force, can survive. Consider America: here we have had it great. Our peak was under Bill Clinton, when we had a balanced budget, no outstanding national debts, and no spending over holdings deficiet. In 8 years, Bush has reversed this. Now what we have is crypto-fascist big oil and energy controlling our military expenses. The result is that we have sold most of our debit (debts owed to us by other nations), which is what our currency has been based on since Nixon, mind you, to China. In other words, whenever we spend US currency, we are using a financial system that is A) paid for by Oil and B) entirely in debt to Communist China. So, you tell me, if Randian "Objectivist" Capitalist "Idealism" holds water, why are those who preach it (Greenspan, Bernanke, etc.) saying one thing and then doing another? It's the Federal Reserve National Bank that's got the US economy by the balls right now, because they set interest rates on loans made by their member banks. The money gets spread too thin, so then everybody turns to the bankers for loans. Right now there is more money in circulation than we have credit for. So people look to the banks for extra credit, because now a gallon of gas costs the same amount as ten dollars was worth a decade ago. The "value" of the dollar is an illusion. Marx said it best, there's A) purchasing power (the worth of the currency), and then there's B) labour power (the cost of a thing to produce). When B (a loaf of bread, for example) exceeds A (say, enough money to fill a wheelbarrow), there is always a revolution. So, combine the rate of "inflation" with the rate of price-hikes and you'll see the former is only even occurring at all as a method of softening the social-pressure induced by the latter. Inflation: the value of the dollar compared to a fixed rate. When we measure inflation as a flat-line, the value of the dollar will be in a steep decline. However by suggesting we measure inflation as an upward incline, as Keynesians insist we do, then the value of the dollar will appear as a flat rate. But that's bullshit. It's just holding the chart in a different direction. So, what is inflation really? Price hikes: when the bosses decide to increase their own incomes, they spike the prices. But prices are going up all the time anyway. So if they weren't spiking prices every once in a while, to stimulate the economy, we wouldn't have "growth" would we? Wrong. Just like holding that "productivity" chart in a different direction, all the economic "shock-tests" they do are to keep the people thinking that inflation is A) necessary and B) natural. It's neither. Inflation occurs because of the way our economy is set up. Imagine a factory assembly line that is churning out little balls of chocolate. Now imagine that every hundredth, or thousandth, or even ten to the twentieth, etc. little ball of chocolate were to be diverted and shunted directly into the pocket of the factory owner. Now, if the boss wants more chocolate, but he only gets every one hundredth, thousandth or ten to twentieth, etc. little ball of chocolate, then he's going to have to find a way to increase "productivity" - ie. speed the rate of chocolate production in the factory up. The only problem with all this is that when the fudge factory (our economy) is functioning "normally," there is not sufficient competition to stimulate "growth" by causing inflation. So these greedy corporate bosses come along and they cause the appearance of inflation by gradually increasing prices. So we have to cover up rising prices by calling it a "natural" outgrowth of a capitalist economy. It's not. That's absurd. That would be like owning an apple cart and selling apples for one dime one day and one dollar the next, and when someone asks you why, you tell them, "oh it's due to inflation." The apple is the same, so the "labour-value" stays the same. But if you want ten times the price hiked up in a day, and there's no convenient natural "disasters" to cause "shortage" to pin it on, you have to create an economic leverage for justifying it. That's what "inflation" is: the federal reserve bank sets interest rates on loans. As the rate of interest increases, it causes the value of the dollar to decrease. This is called "market management," and it's tantamount to Satanism, in my opinion, because the CEOs (like Henry Kravitz) who practise it are surely going to hell. Playing the market is real easy when you have no soul, because then you just think of the number of zeros at the end of your intangible assets, and not the real people who work hard every day just to put food on their tables. And, I'd only like to add in conclusion to this rant, that I've noticed a sharp spike in the gap between rich and poor in the past few years in another way as well: intellectually. Bush lies and says something stupid like: "I've created more millionaires," which he fails to mention he has done in the same way he "creates jobs" (ie. by manipulating purchasing power, not labour power: by firing people he "creates" jobs, and by reducing the value of what a million dollars was worth to the value of what a thousand dollars was worth, he "creates" millionaires out of everyone now who would have even only a thousand dollars - pre-"inflation"). And nowadays no one still believes him anymore. But people still aren't speaking out against him, even knowing he is wrong, because they think they are getting paid. So they watch the news on cable or listen to NPR, and consider themselves "well informed," without ever questioning who owns their sources of news and information. The news doesn't have to be out-right lies in order for it to be slanted in favour of a certain, shall we say, mode of thinking? And this "mode of thinking," this neavueau-riche "Bourgeoisie Red-Neck" mentality, is extremely dangerous, because it leads to acting without thinking, to physical violence as a tactic for problem solving, and to overall gangsterism and gladiatorism. When people see someone getting "Tased" on tv with John Stewart making a joke about it, they grow more likely to shoot someone with a "taser" themselves if they disagree with them. This mentality of the "landed gentry" has always preceded build-up of local law-enforcement, ala Martial Law, because the "soldiers" don't want to leave the "lap of luxury," but neither can they stop being soldiers, and so the politicians turn them against the people. This is how revolutions happen, and I don't know if you know it, but we've been on the razor's edge of one since the protests against the WTO in Seattle in 1999. Those people were students and labour-union members who showed up to protest the fact the corporations were screwing them and all the rest of us. And that percentage of the population did not go home defeated, and they have not been in hiding while Bush puts them into camps; the same percentage of the population is ALWAYS going to be against rule by a group that excludes them from it; even if there were only two people, one would have to rule sometimes. And that's what we're seeing happening now, is the people are getting A) disenfranchised (their votes taken away) and B) financially destitute (their money sold to China), and it's all because of the small cadre of politicians, loyal to big oil companies, who are screwing the rest of us so they can get rich. And I'm sorry if you think that's just "Marxist propaganda" but it's what I believe and I think even this deserves to be said.

Anyway, man, sorry for chewing your ear off. And that was a straight-up rant so I'm not even going to try to separate it into paragraphs. I'll let ya go for now but I hope you're well, and I'm glad to here you'll have more time online soon while you're at school. School can be a really good place to be. So can online. Anyway, yeah, I'm glad to know you Oleg. I hope your father is doing well now too. You should definately try to help him out and learn from him while you can. You'll definately be grateful you did later on. Anyway, man, Peace, gtg, ttyl, that was an excellent letter. Allow me to respond to it point by point:

-Jon

Oleg,

if we wish to understand Ayn Rand we must realize that Kant was her intellectual enemy.

----- Original Message -----

I've never heard this premise. It's my understanding that, and mind you, I haven't read Kant either, except perhaps in passing, that Kant and Hume were contemporaries of Locke and Hobbes, and these two pairs comprised opposing schools of thought in American and English philosophical movements of the early and middle-part of the 19th century, immediately prior to Marx and Nietzsche. Kant and Hume represented a kind of conservative "Christian" view which Nietzsche called "altruism," based largely on DesCartes and Hegel, however pre-existentialism.

Existentialism, the statement: "existence precedes essence" (the movement of Sartre in the 20th c.), was a direct outgrowth of the "naturalist" or "transcendentalist" Empiricism of Locke and Hobbes. Locke and Hobbes believed the "natural state" of man to be at equilibrium with their environment and peers. On the other hand, the staunch "dialectics" of Kant and Hume proposed life for our earliest ancstors was "brutish, nasty and short."

Rand's "Objectivism" was based, to my understanding, on denying DesCartes' perceptual relativism and asserting scientific-method be applied to Empiricism. So she would assert that, life for our earliest ancestors was "brutish, nasty and short," however she would also argue that this is "empirically," and therefore "objectively," not the case today.

Empiricism, the school asserting the antithesis to DesCartes' perceptual relativism, supposed that only by studying the external world through the five senses could we evolve ourselves away from DesCartes' and Kant's "radical doubt." The result of applying "Empiricism" to the mechanism of perception itself, that is, the ontology of Heidegger's "dasein," the so-called "soul," led to 20th c. "Existentialism."

Randian "Objectivism" is a side-note in the margin beside 20th c. Existentialism and the post-atomic era's dawning scientific revolution. In the margins of Rand's "Objectivism" were her verbally twisted ideals of Individualism (as opposed to her own phantom idea called "collectivism") and post-industrial Capitalism (as opposed to Soviet "Communism" which was wholly a dictatorship propped up like "painted rust" by the western bankers, who, in turn, backed Rand). Neither of these ideas were Rand's own personal ideals, and so her "propaganda" playing "devil's advocate" for causes she did not believe in herself, does more harm than justice to any serious discussion of either of these topics.

----- Original Message -----

Kant considered the primacy of consciousness over the primacy of existence; meaning that reality is only in relation to our consciousness, whereas in Rand's axioms she argues that reality is independent of our consciousness and therefore it follows by logic that reality can exist without any conscious beings.

----- Original Message -----

Here, it's DesCartes who began this movement of perceptual relativism, where what we perceive through the senses may be a deception of them by our own interior mind. It's clear this does apply to a certain percentage of the aggregate population who are either on drugs or schizophrenic. Likewise, the remainder of the population adheres to strict left-hemispheric, "logical" thinking and assumes Empiricism and Objectivism when it comes to external reality. It seems obvious to the lay-person we are not all just "brains on a shelf."

It's curious to me how devout Christians, like Kant and Schopenhauer, can uphold DesCartes' perceptual relativism because it is an essentially Gnostic point of view, and Gnosticism was considered the worst heresy of all heresies by the earliest Roman Catholic church.

----- Original Message ----- axioms themselves are outside proof and can only be validated as self-evident we can only judge their validity based on the ends that are constructed on the means.

----- Original Message -----

This whole "ends" and "means" argument is based on sweeping moral generalisations involving what determines "right" and what is proven "wrong." It's indicative of the arguments of modern pseudo-scientific jargonists (like Rand and Blavatsky) to apply this classical argument of ethics to the field of analysing harder sciences such as math and economics. I'm not disagreeing with your point here, which I expect should be taken as self-evident itself. I would only briefly disagree with your initial assertion regarding axioms being "outside proof."

----- Original Message -----

I believe it is Ayn Rand that was the first philosopher to call philosophy as an integrated view of existence as opposed to a "religious" view on philosophy that Kant and his Christian values upheld.

----- Original Message -----

Implying that Rand was opposed to Christianity's system of "values," in the way that, say, Nietzsche, was, would be absurd. Rand was not even a hard-line atheist, and in many regards represented more of the "soft" or "weak" form of atheism known as agnostic or secular humanism: she believed, for example, in freedom to practise religion (that is, the oxymoron: "freedom of religion") and believed religion served an integral purpose in society. These are all "rational" observations, which any common person of Rand's era could easily have accepted, but they are deceptively false. Religion is necessary in a capitalist society, which is based on wage-slavery, however in the "Communist" conception of Marx (honored only in the breach by the Soviet application) the primary religion would be naturalist, empirical rationalism, essentially the same form of "Objective" Atheism preached by Rand, but never truly meant.

----- Original Message -----

Therefore we must understand that arguing against any portion of Ayn Rand's philosophical system jeopardizes the whole philosophical system that is constructed around that principle.

----- Original Message -----

well now that's simply another of those broad, sweeping generalisations indicative of Randian Objectivists: saying that our own ability to empirically and objectively, rationally sense our external reality depends in any way shape or form on the writings or prior existence of Ayn Rand herself elevates her to the same status Anselm and Augustine were forced to assert was held by Jesus Christ. That's the main problem I have with Randian Objectivists, as well as most OTO "Thelemites": they thump their own respective authors like Christians thump the Bible, as if without that book or this reality would blink out of existence. Nonsense.

----- Original Message -----

Rand's philosophy centralizes around the individual as the means to one's own existence.

----- Original Message -----

Rand's biggest gripe does appear to be about "individualism," at least, at first gloss. If you read deeper, and a shade "between the lines," you'll quickly realise that NO ONE other than Ayn Rand EVER prommoted or even used the term "Collectivism" as in opposition to "individualism." Rand used "collectivism" as a straw-man opponent of "individualism" used to be propped up just to be knocked down. Communism, that is, the entire gammut and scope, from Marx through to Mao, none of them ever espoused "collectivism" as in opposition to "individualism." Rand made that all up. No, what Rand avoids discussing by lying about what the basis for Communism was is what the actual, real basis for Communism was and is: Labour Unionism. By created labour unions, modern proletariat workers can accomplish the same social-leverage excercised by the earliest stone-mason guilds in Medieval Feudalism. Basically, the serf sets the price for their service, and not their potentate customer. Rand never confessed to realising this essential tenant of "Communism": "Labour Unions" are not synonymous with "Collectivism." That's absurd. But it's Rand's entire premise. Pointless.

In point of fact, setting one's own price as the value for one's labour is not at all in line with Rand's "Capitalist Ideal." Instead, Rand would have ninety-nine percent of us work like ants to support the avarice of a single percent of the population as "philosopher-kings." This is not ONLY not feasible, it's morally repugnant. Randian "economics" dictates that individuals will WANT to specialise in service-industry jobs due to the NEED to SURVIVE in a CAPITALIST economy. This treats people like herd animals. From implied "need" they expect "want" to follow. Typical Reagan / Keynseian "Supply-Side" economics.

What Rand proposes is the same "philosophy" written on NAZI concentration camp walls: "ARBEIT MACHT FREI." If you submit to the state to be a slave, only then should you be allowed to benefit from the luxuries of a state-sponsored existence. This is Rand's initial premise. Awful. She then proceeds to speculate that if one sells their soul to a corporation, rather than a government, they will be "happier," and more likely to be fed into the meat-grinder. Absurd. This would insult the average IQ of a five year old.

----- Original Message -----

I believe Rand's philosophy also compliments the philosophical implications of "know thyself" in some regard.

----- Original Message -----

Most definately. But one doesn't need Rand to remind them to that end, and Rand, no less, can tell you nothing about who you, yourself, are. Rand's "Objectivism" depends on the individual being the central sentient self-awareness, the core-"being" of any individual's consciousness. However this takes for granted the difference between the interior self-awareness being "Objective" and the surrounding environment then being entirely "subjective" to one's will, including the labour of other people, as well as the imaginary "right" to "magickally" bend reality to fit one's own personal preferences. You may as well sell real-estate on the moon, because premising a "right" on an imaginary ability is about as big a waste of time as shitting in one hand and wishing for it to add up in the other.

----- Original Message -----

There is of course a difference to what we consider as "subjective" and "inter-subjective" "relationship" and there is a lot of philosophical dispute based on the definitions. For individuals to function on an inter-subjective level there must be some definitive values by which we all agree, otherwise, since man is "inherently" selfish, the objective reality would not exist in my opinion.

----- Original Message -----

But don't you see that the idea that man is "inherently" selfish is just another arbitrary, sweeping moral generalisation meant to distract us. Obviously, by the logical extension of Empiricism, social and ethical compromises have to be made. We can't just go around murdering each other; however Randian "Libertarianism" is not the end-all, be-all cure to such socially problematic behaviour. Promising the 99% the freedom granted only the uppermost one percent is overlooked as the motive for crime, and proposed as the solution to it instead. Moronic.

----- Original Message -----

Therefore at some point Objectivism provides a paradox for us.

----- Original Message -----

As well it should! "Objectivism" is just Rand's "personal philosophy" and nothing more. Nowadays everyone has their own "personal philosophy," but not everyone gets bank-rolled to publish their personal opinions. Ask why the bankers would support Rand financially: she set up a philosophical justification for their eschatological avarice, so they paid her. It's simple. They played both sides, "fake communism" (under fake-communists like Lenin and Stalin) and "fake capitalism" (under Rand and the CFR) against one another. The masses got caught in the cross-fire, and the ones selling them guns got rich. Typical.

Rand isn't even that good a writer when it comes to expressing her "personal philosophy." Like Plato and Pliny, she had to resort to fictional parable in order to make her point because she knew that, in purely factual form, her argument holds absolutely no water at all.

Objectivism is a paradox because Ayn Rand was not Objective herself.

----- Original Message -----

Communism ... where the collective entity controls man's "objective-physical" existence has a direct influence on one's spiritual evolution.

----- Original Message -----

Communism isn't "collectivism." As I've said, there is no such thing as "collectivism" in the sense Rand meant it, and there never was. It is her own straw-man propped up to be knocked down. This is like calling a bruise a lollipop. The bruise is Totalitarianism under Lenin and Stalin. The lollipop is Communism. Perhaps, filtered through the eyes of Ayn Rand, Sovietism seemed more like "collectivism" than American nationalist patriotism, but there isn't any difference between them when it comes to who signed their checks. US banks and big corporate businesses were already, by Rand's time, calling the shots on all sides.

I don't doubt that IF, like a remote-controlled robot, any state or private group that could physically control its obedient slaves would effectively thwart "spiritual evolution." However none has ever, nor can ever, exist. There are too many of us to control, and that is why they plan to reduce the population by turning brother against brother using economics to apply sufficient psychological pressure to do so.

----- Original Message -----

I am not saying that our current society does not have "communistic" policies... our government is not the "ideal" objectivist state.

----- Original Message -----

That's like saying that NAZI Germany wasn't the "ideal" NAZI state, or that Palestinian Israel isn't the "ideal" Jewish state. It's pure nonsense because the people who have been saying how great "laissez faire" capitalism could be are the same ones working to prevent any of those "corporate tax-cuts" from "trickling down" to the workers in the form of anything higher than a freshly minted "tax-rebate." That's like saying, "we have to amputate your leg, but we'll let you keep one of your toes." In reality Ben Bernanke, Allen Greenspan, Paul Wolfowitz, Henry Kravitz, Henry Kissinger and many, Many, MANY others have been LYING to us all when they preach Randian or "Libertarian" Laissez-Faire capitalism, because then they just turn around and DO the exact opposite. By giving tax-breaks as "corporate welfare" to polluting oil companies and privatised city-utility industries, Greenspan, Bernanke, the rest of the CFR and the Bildebergers are fleecing the common-man. By taking one dollar from everyone, and giving back a dime each to only a few, doesn't mean the ones who took that dollar to begin with aren't still stealing ninety cents from you. Taxation by the privately-owned and operated Federal Reserve Bank is neither legal nor Constitutional. Go figure why any "laissez-faire" capitalists like Greenspan and Bernanke would be its chief executive officers.

----- Original Message -----

The paradox is there so I would like to ask you how do you consider Communism as an appropriate method of governance for mankind's spiritual evolution? Would not such a system of governance be the mergence of "religion" with state?

----- Original Message -----

In an "ideal" communist state, which is no less feasible by "objectivist" standards than the "ideal" capitalist state, there would be no: banks, churches, slavery or money. All of these are different facets of the same essential institution: the beauracatic advisor of the sovereign. Without this position of a Duma, House of commons, Senate, etc. each person would be equally their own "sovereign individual" without anyone else's "laws of the land" lorded over them by some distant government. "Ideal" Communism is Anarchist because it asserts that to codefy law is the root of despotism. So long as no one has authority over anyone else, all will work out "naturally" for the best. In theory. Of course, practically, such a philosophy can never be tested in reality because it means the complete revolution and over-turning of all those in financial power now. The only way to overthrow the dictatorship by the petty bourgoise beauracrats is to allow them merely illsuroy power, for example, giving them command over a powerless organisation of the government. In my own "idealised" state, I've combined banking with religion such that the Church A) holds funds for the state and B) collects all (voluntary) taxes for social works programmes. By consolidating these authorities it would change very little from how things work now, except that the amount of money available to the state for social-works programmes would increase drastically.

----- Original Message -----

In one of your previous messages to me that answers "7 questions" you addressed one of my questions that I would like you to clarify. The question was if there was anything wrong if an individual changes himself to gain social recognition. You answered that moral materialism is equivalent to modern Satanism and that the good of self-interest would be objectively verified. Would not Communism espouse such a view?

----- Original Message -----

Communism is a system of economics, just like capitalism is. In capitalism, the shares of large businesses are sold on a stock market. In Marxist socialism, all the "means of production" are collectively owned by their own workers, ala "Labour Unionism." Now if you want a better product, you'd prefer to have the people making it owning some stock in their own company. If all you want is dividend profits from an intangible source of income, though, it doesn't matter to you how the bosses run the company, and you'd prefer them to "maximize profits" by any means necessary, including under-paying and over-working their labour, etc.

Again, "Communism" is not "collectivism." Rand is lying about that. So communism, as an economic modus, has no relevant bearing on, say, how you want to dress or who you want to impress. In a communist economy, going out and getting drunk, meeting a girl at the bar and going home with her, waking up and going to work, etc. are all just as possible as they are in a capitalist economy, despite Rand's fantastical propaganda regarding uniforms, curfews and "collectivist" spies. The only difference between a communist and a capitalist economy in this regard is that under a communist economy, where each person sets their own rate of pay as the value for their labour, they don't need to worry about getting fired for being late to work, because they are their own boss. They aren't answerable to anyone else for their welfare, as they would be if one applied Rand's so-called "Individualist" Laissez-Faire capitalism.

----- Original Message -----

Perhaps our differing views are in what we consider as "self-interest". Is it something worth protecting and how does it relate to society?

----- Original Message -----

Self-interest is worth any individual protecting their own. Organising more than one or two other people to accomplish a self-interest not their own for one's self is about the full extent I find tolerable. Anything greater than this is slavery of one group to meeting the avarice and ambition of a single individual.

You can't "protect" self-interest any more than you can "protect peace by preparing for war." If you manufacture weapons they will eventually be used. Therefore stock-piling nukes for Armageddon is asking for the devil's due. Self-interest, that is, "individual sovereignty," CANNOT draw upon state-power to enforce itself, because if it does it leads immediately to despotism.

According to Communism, and according to my own "personal philosophy," the apparatus of a militarised state would have to be eradicated from the surface of the planet in order to establish the basis for "individual sovereignty." If the state can defend itself, it will do so, and against the individual rights of its own citizens. Therefore, the weaker the state, the stronger the individual, although, in a post-fascism world, the "state" could be thought to include private industries with state-contracts as well.

P.S. Congratulations in becoming a tutor at a local bookstore. I have no knowledge in the Enochian System of John De, though it would be interesting to know how it relates to the Golden Dawn.

----- Original Message -----

It was a large part of their "inner-order" curriculum, only taught briefly to the members of the highest degrees of the "outer-order," and taught more extensively in the secret, "inner-order." It is interesting, and I'm looking forward to it; hopefully it will be good fun.

GTG for now, Oleg. Glad to talk to you, and I hope this letter finds you well and all well in your world. Peace,

In this three-part letter I will say the following three things:

1) "I told you so."

<img src = <http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/dontvote.jpg>>

I warned you all that the CFR had this election in the bag just like Skull and Bones had the last one, only even moreso, because even though Kerry and Bush were both Bonesmen, the CFR was already fronting the tabs for every single one of the prospective candidates even way before the party primaries (except R. Ron Paul and D. Dennis Kucinich). The CFR is the political branch of the Bildeberger Group, who are the same people that worship a giant owl statue representing Satan, their dark lord and master, at Bohemian Grove. So I says to Mable, I says, "The CFR's got this one in the bag." Now it doesn't matter who we "vote" for, because both of the two-party candidates are going to turn around after the election and dictate policies that will benefit their present creditors, ie. the CFR, their financiers.

2) If I were anyone other than me, I would pencil in a candidate in the election. Again, this is something I've been "joking" about since middle-school. The only "party" I've ever considered joining was the US Communist party. (Michael Moore interviewed their presidential candidate one year). I'm "N/A" party and proud of it. As it is, I'm casting my vote for Ron Paul, even if I have to pencil him in, because my "conscience" is tired of paying too much for gas. If I had to "endorse" anyone for a pencil-in candidate, I would recommend the candidate at this myspace address:

<http://profile.myspace.com/407307699>

<img src= <http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/chthulu8.jpg>>

3) The reason we are paying too much for gas is two-fold:

A) inflation. Let's do some quick math. Let's say the value of the dollar equals X for one year, and Y for the next year. If X is < (less than) Y, we say that "inflation" has occurred, meaning that the actual "value" of one dollar has decreased at the same rate its "estimated" value has become "inflated" above its actual value. The difference between these is actually made up of credit, but I'll get back to that in a second. As regards "inflation," it can be summed up as the "decrease in the value of the currency." Essentially, inflation means we have minted more money into circulation than we have amounts to be able to back it up with actual holdings in banks, meaning that, if there were a "run on money" (like a "run on gas") with everyone withdrawing everything out of the banks, the value of the dollar would plummet to zero. Luckily this hasn't happened since the 1920's. Since the 1970's our money has not been based on gold or silver or precious metals, but on "credit." The reason the value of the dollar has been decreasing and "inflation" increasing is that the value of the dollar is now based on international debts owed to us following the loans we made to rebuild Europe under the Marshal Plan. The responsibility for paying these debts to them was then exchanged by the European countries to former British colonies and other "third-world" countries. The European countries "rebuilt" the "third-world," using the money the US had given them, and so the debt for this money was then "gifted" to third-world countries. Now, instead of NAZI gold being the grounds for us to collect our "debt" from, we are owed the value our currency is based on by third-world countries who will NEVER be able to repay it. Such was the case during the 1980's, and that was why we exported so many factories and labour-jobs to "third-world" countries then. By now, China has "purchased" the debt owed to the US for "re-building" Europe (on which our currency-value is based) from the third world countries, who acquired it in exchange for being "industrialised" by Europe. Now the "Euro" is based on NAZI gold stolen from German Jews, and so its value as a currency is nearly (if not by now moreso than) double the value of our own. To put a blunt head on this: Europe could "buy and sell US" twice over. Because our currency is debit-based (so-called "credit owed to us") we suffer from "inflation" (devaluation of the dollar), represented by over-production of minted money. So when Bush says he "created more millionaires," he means a million dollars is now worth less than it was before he became president. The mechanism by which the rate of "inflation" is controlled is the "interest rate." The interest rate on loans made by US banks is set by the Federal Reserve Bank. We pay taxes to the IRS of the Federal Reserve Bank. The Federal Reserve Bank is not part of the US government. In other words, our "taxes" are paying for them to mint more money with, and not to fund "social-works" programmes. Now, when the Fed wants the value of the dollar to increase, they decrease the rate of interest charged by member-banks on loans. When the Fed wants the value of the dollar to decrease, they increase the rate of interest. So if anyone needs a loan to buy a car or a house (or a gallon of gas!), they will have to pay the loan back to the bank plus that rate of interest. If everyone owes more money to banks than they can pay back, the leverage for causing a "run on money" is put into the hands of the bankers, such that, rather than banks being "bankrupted," they could recall all the debt owed to them by their "creditors" and crush the value of the dollar to dust. The result of all this is that a widget, say, a pair of shoes or a loaf of bread, will cost more five years down the road than it does today, and that the same widget costs more now than it did fifty years ago, and so forth, as we gradually ascend that steep slope of "interest" rates Increasing "inflation." Okay, so that's one reason we pay more for gas. A gallon of gas costs more now than it did fifty years ago, no doubt about that. But obviously inflation isn't so sharply asymptotic that the price of any widget, shoes or bread for example, could increase overnight the same amount as gas can. Thus...

B) price-gouging. There are (but, of course) two methods of price-gouging. One involves "skimming off the top." Imagine you are the owner of a fudge factory, and so every one-hundredth piece of fudge produced goes directly into your pocket. (ie. the boss's salary is a penny on the dollar of company earnings.) If you, as the boss, want more fudge in your pockets, but you only get every one hundredth piece produced, then you would have to find a way to "increase productivity," by "extracting surplus value" from the labour of your work-force, ie. making the workers work faster, but not paying them over-time. This is what happens about 99% of the time in industrial labour, and it is pretty much taken for granted. The other type of price-gouging is when the bosses increase the price of their company's product, without decreasing it's rate of production. At that point, there is usually no way to conceal that the boss's are price-gouging, so usually they have to spread the profit out amongst the company's "share-holders." However, in events when there is a "run on" a company's product, such as if their company's "widget" (let's say, a gallon of gas) can't be transported to the consumers fast enough to meet the rate of consumption, the bosses can easily "justify" jacking the cost for their product through the roof. Usuaully, though, there has to be some public "justification" for the bosses to create such a "run on" their product. For example, a "run on" the "Tickle Me Elmo" doll occured at Christmas not long ago. So, if you are selling a gallon of gasoline, or, say, an apple, for a dime one day and a dollar the next, you have to have a better reason for doing so than just "inflation" if you don't want to get mobbed. So, nowadays, we have that great scape-goat from the 2000 "election," when W. was appointed US Caesar, Al Gore, running around (having shaved) prommoting man-made global warming being caused by oil and energy pollution. He is basically saying that storms, earth-quakes, volcanoes, etc. are being intensified by industrial pollution. Presumably he's being backed by "big nuclear." The result of Gore's propaganda campaign is that everyone panics everytime a storm forms, such that it is hyped into a "super-storm," etc. Whether or not the storm itself is very dammaging is irrelevant beside the much more obvious damage to the native "infra-structure" (both the concrete foundations and the economic crowns) done by the "price-gouging" vultures that swoop down in the form of FEMA and "big oil" in the wake of any storm, earthquake, volcano, etc. As soon as the bosses have an excuse to price-gouge, such as the hyped "shortage" of their product, they do so to the bone. This price-gouging is a form of economic "shock-testing" to set the following year's rate of "inflation." If they jack the price of gas up a dollar overnight on the pretense of off-shore rigs being temporarily cut-off from distribution, or the redistribution of their product toward the natural-disaster's "victims," or whatever, then, once they reduce it again (usually by about 90 cents on the dollar), by the following year it will cost about the same as when they jacked it up initially (plus or minus about a dime). Do this math, people. It is true.

There's also alot to be said about foreign labour being imported and the economic impact it has on local economies to be blamed on such weather-related "disasters," however the reasons for this have much more to do with the over-budgeting of local politicians of their annual or else, Vote Nader, either way, we're "proper" f*cked.

For example, a "run on" the "Tickle Me Elmo" doll occured at Christmas not long ago. So, if you are selling a gallon of gasoline, or, say, an apple, for a dime one day and a dollar the next, you have to have a better reason for doing so than just "inflation" if you don't want to get mobbed. So, nowadays, we have that great scape-goat from the 2000 "election," when W. was appointed US Caesar, Al Gore, running around (having shaved) prommoting man-made global warming being caused by oil and energy pollution. He is basically saying that storms, earth-quakes, volcanoes, etc. are being intensified by industrial pollution. Presumably he's being backed by "big nuclear." The result of Gore's propaganda campaign is that everyone panics everytime a storm forms, such that it is hyped into a "super-storm," etc. Whether or not the storm itself is very dammaging is irrelevant beside the much more obvious damage to the native "infra-structure" (both the concrete foundations and the economic crowns) done by the "price-gouging" vultures that swoop down in the form of FEMA and "big oil" in the wake of any storm, earthquake, volcano, etc. As soon as the bosses have an excuse to price-gouge, such as the hyped "shortage" of their product, they do so to the bone. This price-gouging is a form of economic "shock-testing" to set the following year's rate of "inflation." If they jack the price of gas up a dollar overnight on the pretense of off-shore rigs being temporarily cut-off from distribution, or the redistribution of their product toward the natural-disaster's "victims," or whatever, then, once they reduce it again (usually by about 90 cents on the dollar), by the following year it will cost about the same as when they jacked it up initially (plus or minus about a dime). Do this math, people. It is true.

There's also alot to be said about foreign labour being imported and the economic impact it has on local economies to be blamed on such weather-related "disasters," however the reasons for this have much more to do with the over-budgeting by local politicians of their annual allocations for spending on certain social-works programmes, such as private-contracts with construction-companies and, nowadays, private utility firms (garbage and electrical), at the expense of certain other social-works programmes, such as homeless shelters, the education system, and, at least in Tally, better city-planning in general.

Perhaps I'll get on a rant about that some other time, but for now, I'll get off my "high-horse" about this topic, and simply say to all of you who bought up all the gas in town over the last couple of days, I hope you're prepared to give me free rides; I'm out!

Before I reply to the main content of your letter, let me mention something about the overall philosophical "occult" angle of this method of reasoning, but even before I do that, let me congratulate you on entering college. Will you be living in a dorm, and are you considering pledging for a frat? I hope you will find some like-minded individuals and interesting avenues for learning more about what interests you, both on and off campus. I wish you the best of luck, and may your level of reward always exceed your level of input efforts by enough to keep you happy and sustained. Honestly, Oleg, I am glad to know you.

Now, about this secrecy / "occult" angle: Nilson is in the OTO, but he is not a Free Mason. Therefore, when he describes the "occult" use of secrecy, he may mean the Masonic or "secret-society" (philosophical frats) use of "secrecy," but the "occult" he refers to is the Crowleyian-reformed version (as a religious cult) of the Golden Dawn (a co-Masonic magical sect), and he cannot speak for the use of "secrecy" by Masonry or any non-cult form of "secret society."

This is why, I believe now, the former IOBB (the "Illuminati-Order.com" and its forums) were an OTO-front. I believe "Dharma," the person who, by email, "initiated" Rick and Tawnie Shipley (the "IO.com" site founders) into what they believed was "the Illuminati," but was really only the OTO, of which "Dharma" was a member. Ask Nills if he knows "Dharma" personally, and this might give us a clue as to whether or not "Dharma" was OTO, because I know "Nilson" is an OTO-member.

By now, there is no longer any publically-accessable "Illuminati" Order, because its tenants (use of population-reduction, destroying social-institutions, etc.) have already become the accepted philosophy of the financial elite. It is no longer a "secret-society" model with initiatory levels. It is a basic belief. The use of Ayn Rand as a "random" example of "anyone" from the 20th century who believed in the goals of the original "Illuminati" Order (ie. capitalist tyranny by "private" interests, etc.) was also, I believe, a choice of the OTO of her time, and should not reflect Rand's own supposed status as an intellectual and philosopher.

Again, though, having read little of her own writings myself, I cannot say I fully "know" her. I will say her use of inventing a "straw-man" anti-thesis as "axiomatic" proof for her personal philosophical beliefs was also at the heart and core of "Dharma"'s lesson to Rick and Tawnie Shipley: the "Illuminati" might have worked as a "correspondence" course, transmitted by letter-writing, but even this method "fails" in the "Light" of the level of open-communication available on the modern internet.

I would only add that Rick and Tawnie's failure to adapt to the more modern facts, and belief in their own failure to adapt being the fault of the times and not themselves, reflects on the fault of "Dharma," which I also see as a fundamental fault in the philosophy of the OTO, as well as Nilson in particular: if there is a difference between their internal beliefs and external reality, it is external reality that should be changed to be in line with their own internal beliefs, and not the other way around.

This is the lie I find at the core of "Objectivism" too. Objectivity, the ability to rationally detach ones'self and assume the most logical point of view, is an ideal, true. But it was never Rand's own strong-suit. Likewise, only the weak preach the need for a "Will to Power," and the Proletariat only empowers the Bourgeoisie by envying their money. It's all called "failing upwards." First you fail. Then you get prommoted.

It's the reason the OTO has nothing to do nowadays with Masonry (even though its original founding members were all Free Masons), and why George W. Bush (a member of Skull and Bones, a non-Masonic German death-frat) is only the public-face of an "occult" religious sect whose only "secret" is that, when it comes to capitalism, "anything goes."

Economic piracy IS tyranny, and when the "secret" religion of any cult is money, they cease to be a "secret-society" and become a criminal conspiracy to defraud their equals and brethren of their basic human rights. "Money" in itself is worthless. It is no more a "means" to any truly beneficial "ends" than a gun.

But now I'm just ranting, and have strayed from my initial point, which was simply that, when listening to anyone compare their own "occult" fetish (cash) to the true "mystery schools" and elder "secret societies," take it with a grain of salt.

Now, back to a more proper response to the heart of your letter:

I would definately say that there are "levels" of consciousness within an individual, but these "levels" do not project outward and should never have been used as a basis for a class-structure to human society. On the other hand, as you have read and might agree, each individual is essentially different from every other, but due to the limited number of traits and resources, some of us overlap with others and form groups.

By grouping people according to traits and resources, we can apply various "standards" to differentiate people, even though all traits and resources are limited and their choices random and unique. Likewise, we could say that a trait or resource, if rare, is valueable, and that, by extension, those who have it should lead. To some extent, such a strategy may even seem to work.

However, where this theory breaks from reality is when it attempts to bring one level "up" to another, or to break one level "down" to another. If, for example, it is my own prefered trait or resource to be one way, or to think one thing, that never means it is therefore the best way to be, or the best thing to think, for anyone else than me, let alone the majority.

So, for example, when you say that "the offspring of the two parents does not exceed their 'level'...." I would disagree because I do not see the interior / personal "levels" of any individual as corresponding 1:1 or being exactly the same as anyone else's, even their own parents, twin-siblings, lovers or best friends, etc. We can, "objectively," group others. This does not mean those we group would choose to group themselves the same way. I simply believe the way an individual chooses to group themselves is more important than the way any other individual would choose to group them for them.

This may disagree with what Nillson will define as what "we" in the "Occult" all "believe" (or rather, "know"), however nobody can successfully convince me of any actual "need" for eugenics. When you say, for example, eugenics... "can be viewed as tyranny only for those that don't relate to it," you imply - those who would get "fixed" - and not those who wouldn't be "spayed" or "neutered."

Look at reality: everybody breeds. The work-force HAS to breed in order to work to support both themselves and the rich. So, if you sterilise them, who will cook your food? Then again, consider the rich, who consider themselves "philosopher kings." If you clipped their dicks and clits, they wouldn't even notice. And yet, they are the ones who promote "sterilisation" as a cure to the "over-population" problem.

No, eugenics may have been a solution at a national scale fifty years ago. By this point on our evolutionary asymptote, we have only two real solutions: 1) "space migration, intelligence-squared, life-extension" (or "S.M.I.L.E.") as proposed by Timothy Leary. 2) send the rich to the moon, nuke the earth. Of course, neither is feasible yet (not because we haven't got the nukes), because we are still dependent for life-support on earth's resources.

In fact, there is no real "population problem," anymore so now than there was a "Jewish problem" in Europe fifty years ago. The rich always want to "trim" the genetic "Bonsai tree." They will sell the poor weapons to kill each other, and if the poor rebel, the rich will kill the poor themselves. But to do this on a mass scale is not feasible. Not for any moral reasons, mind you, am I arguing this stand-point.

I'm saying this "Logically," "Rationally," "Objectively," as a detached "voice of reason," an "indifferent spectator," etc.: Acting like a snob is not the same thing as being justified in one's own existence. Regardless of the drunken "Will to Power" that desires to "vampirically" manipulate other people's perception, thinking you are right is not the same thing as being right. I'm not meaning to imply any of this about you, personally, Oleg. Of course I mean this only as one of those "broad, sweeping (moral) generalisations" we "Objectivists" and "Occultists" like to make.

No, to be blunt, I don't think there's any really "Objective" method of classing unique individuals into collective groups. I think the entire argument is a "straw-man," meant to distract the poor while they are being robbed by the rich. Anyway, man, I've taken up enough of your time for now, I expect, so I'll sign off. BTW, I drafted a model for you, based essentially on some of the relationships you'd described to me. I went a little over-board in combining them, perhaps, and may have added a perspective or two of my own. In any regard, it hope you find it somewhat inspiring as to creating further models of your own, and I hope this letter finds you well.

Hello Jon,

Thank you for your last prompt reply, I am sorry I couldn't reply sooner in the same manner. My college life starts tomorrow which I have been preparing to and I am really excited. I'm glad that you enjoy this correspondence as I do as well. Thank you for the compliments Jon. Most of what I know is eclectic so I hope my messages won't be so ambiguous. I'm glad if I have expanded your understanding on Objectivism. I would also like to mention that Ayn Rand stated that her philosophical metaphysics must not necessarily relate to the "physical" world. As for man's spirit she considered it to be strictly "private" to the individual.

Concerning secrecy, I was referring to the information being esoteric. We both know that there is information that is considered exoteric and esoteric. I also believe that the occult practices have always been responsible for the evolution of our "collective consciousness". Thus such practices require secrecy. For example, there are symbolic archetypes which the occult highly depends on for its influence. The meaning of such symbolism or even symbols themselves can not be known to the exoteric mass lest it becomes "profane" and loses the intensity of its influence from an occult perspective. I think this is the meaning of the phrase "do not throw pearls before swines". To me a society is like a "collective Self" that is composed of different "individual Selves". Earlier I have pointed out that for us to "function inter-subjectively" we need "definitive" values by which our consciousness can reason and agree upon "objectively". Our inter-subjectivity is determined by the influence that we have upon each other from even an spiritual/occult perspective. Therefore, it follows by logic that there must be "occult" "definitive" archetypes/values or anything of that sort by which our consciousness is aware of as well. The occultists that uncover such "hypothetical" archetypes use them to control the progression of our "collective Self". Whether the motive of such occult manipulation is tyrannical or not I can not argue since I do not know the motive. We can always fear it just because we don't relate-to/understand it. Perhaps it is the very reason why such occult manipulation will always be a secret because we don't relate to it. We at least know that no one will ever go against themselves from one's own logical-reasoning and therefore for the occult few who have the power for such occult practices their motive will always be "justified" based on their logical-reasoning. I consider the occult as the highest of "sciences" therefore it is based on a systematic theory and there are "objective/natural" laws that construct such a systematic view which the occultists themselves obey. From such a perspective, the occult secrets are not necessarily based on tyranny since reality is not simply a "matter of choice" but has it's own laws to obey for us to "exist". If our values, whether they are known or not, relate to these occult practices for our own "overall" collective consciousness existence then they are not tyrannical. Whether they are "tyrannical" specifically to individuals per se is a different story and usually implies that we are different as conscious beings which is why I asked if you about conscious "levels".

By conscious "levels" I only meant to emphasize that there is a standard of any sort to "differentiate" one consciousness from the other. Usually from the occult perspective we might call this as a soul and we can say that Karma "level" differentiates one from the other though this is not exactly what I had in mind. What I had in mind from my own personal philosophical view is vaguely based on a book I read by David Hawkins a very long time ago where he introduced this "hypothetical" scale of consciousness. I can not find a model of his "scale of consciousness" which I can say that I fully agree with but it would be something within that philosophical view. When I talked with Nillson a few months ago I brought it up as well but I first asked him how he defines violence. He did bring up vampirism as an example yet he told me that it is only considered as "evil" in that it usually goes against the current of Karma, if I remember correctly. I brought up a "hypothetical" example where I assumed that: a) there is a "standard" by which our society differentiates an individual's conscious/soul level from another individual, and; b) that the offspring of the two parents does not exceed their "level".... So therefore we concluded that in such a scenario/example it would not be considered tyranny from a "collective/overall" view that those who are below the "desired" threshold should be sterilized. We talked about population control and other discussions that we did not wish to talk over email and we both agreed that it can be viewed as tyranny only for those that don't relate to it which is why secrecy is important but does not necessarily mean tyranny from an "overall" view.

As for the philosophical structures that I had in mind; I thank you for your interest though I do not know how to construct one yet. I would probably have to draw it up. What I had in mind was a pyramid or an inverted pyramid where the more primal principles form the foundation and other principles which are derived from them follow. The model should also probably be based on the amount of "inter-subjectivity" interaction. For example, politics should be near the top since it encompasses/governs basically all our "inter-subjective" interaction and art should be closer to the bottom since its "appreciation" is more based on "subjective" values rather than "objective" values. Of course the main purpose of this model would be to show the integrations of the whole philosophy in a single contextual view and perhaps something like dotted lines or arrows or maybe it even can be color coded to show how one concept relates with the other. I would have to probably give this some more deeper thought and perhaps go over Objectivism more "systematically" for me to approach this idea. Sadly, I do not have much time at the present moment especially as I am going to be attending college. I'll see what I can come up with and the terms you are asking for. You are welcome to this idea to come up with whatever you wish.

Best regards,
O.C.

"His name is Robert Paulson, his name is Robert Paulson..."

For the past week now the media have been reviving this familiar "Fight-Club" chant just in time for the release of the sequel, "Choke-Mate." Only instead of "Robert Paulson" (played by "man-boobs" Meatloaf), the media is now chanting "His name is Henry Paulson." Seems like all the worst neo-cons are named Henry these days. Henry Kravitz (Bilderggerger and investment broker), Henry Kissinger (former aid to "Tricky Dick" Nixon), and now this "Henry Paulson" character is being propped up for our media's "fifteen minutes of hate." So who is Henry Paulson?

Okay, if our "president" W. Bush wants to "interface" with Ben Bernanke, chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank (the non-government organisation to whose collection enforcement wing, the IRS, "we" pay taxes), W. would send his liason to Bernanke, and this liason, right now, happens to be some guy named "Henry Paulson." Who cares, right?

Except that Paulson's name is on the bill for W. and Bernanke's plan to use federal money (ie. "tax" dollars) to "bail-out" (ie. buy out all the stocks, CEO-positions and/or collect revenues and dividends from) banks. Big banks. National banks. We're talking the guys that broker stock-exchange transactions for financial investors, both private and corporate. Merrill-Lynch was, once-upon-a-time when I owned stocks, my own brokerage firm. Their head is now on the block.

Bush and Bernanke have Paulson up there high-pressuring this deal to "bail-out" these banks, and it certainly is a big deal, because banks are the back-bone of our capitalist economy. In the eighties we "bailed-out" the air-lines, and in the ninties it was "Savings and Loans" (small, local banks). In the early 'oughts, Bush gave us all those nice, "fat" ($200) tax-refunds as "hush-money" for the War in Iraq. Now, surprise surprise, the banks that wrote those checks are trying to collect that money from the government! GASP! Well, it is a LITTLE more complex than that. But that IS the basic gyst of it.

So, because you don't have time to learn these IMPORTANT little details on your own, and since the corporate-media are never going to admit to knowing anything "important," if anything at all, I've done some wiki-search and compiled a few brief quotes from their articles to fill you in on what's up. Maybe this will give you some clue as to why any of this matters, but if not, I'll return with a sum-uppance at the end.

The "Sub-Prime" Mortgage Crisis

<blockquote>

The subprime mortgage crisis ... is characterized by contracted liquidity in the global credit markets and banking system. The downturn in the U.S. housing market, risky lending and borrowing practices, and excessive individual and corporate debt levels have caused multiple adverse effects on the world economy.

Banks going Bankrupt as a result...

<blockquote>

During the subprime mortgage crisis, many banks and insurance companies have failed or were acquired due to being in a poor state. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) may assume deposits of banks or allow other banks to assume them. So far, one investment and two diversified service banks have been acquired by other banks with government assistance in selling the company. The largest banks to be acquired have been the presumed Merrill Lynch acquisition by Bank of America, the Bear Sterns acquisition by JPMorgan Chase, and the Countrywide Financial acquisition also by Bank of America. IndyMac Bank was also a large bank that was changed into a bridge bank by the FDIC, after its failure, until the funds can be disposed of. In addition, the investment bank Lehman Brothers has filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection.

"Paulson" rescue plan = Fascist gov't ownership of banks (& their mortgaged houses)

A plan was presented to the U.S. Congress on September 23-24, 2008 for the United States government to purchase illiquid mortgage backed securities, (termed by some as toxic assets) resulting from the subprime mortgage crisis, from troubled financial institutions.

Consultations by the Secretary of the Treasury Henry Paulson, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Ben Bernanke, and the Chairman of the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission Christopher Cox with Congressional leaders and President George W. Bush, moved forward efforts to draft a proposal for... a proposal for the federal government to buy up to US$ 700 billion of illiquid mortgage backed securities with the intent to increase the liquidity of the secondary mortgage markets and reduce potential losses encountered by financial institutions owning the securities.

On September 21, 2008, Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson announced that the original proposal, which would have excluded foreign banks, had been revised to include foreign financial institutions with a presence in the US. The US administration pressured other countries to set up similar bailout plans.

To sum up, the federal reserve (IRS) is trying to screw us. What's new? What's new this time isn't just the astronomical sums of money that are flying around nowadays. I've already discussed (in a previous bulletin) how it seems there is more money, when in reality there is never any more actual value.

No, the federal reserve bank is out to screw us big time right now in a once-in-a-millennium kind of way by buying up its member banks and forming one national bank, possessing most of the world's debt (owed to us right now by China, who bought it from developing nations, who acquired it from Europe following WWII). This single, central-bank will house a majority percentage of global "intangible" assets (as opposed to gold).

The government is getting a piece of the pie too, though, don't worry. By using tax-dollars (IRS / minted "fiat" currency) to bail-out the banks, the Fed (IRS) is indebting the government to pay the bill for the purchasing of its member banks. The Fed then subsumes the banks, and the government subsumes their holdings. This would start with all the outstanding mortgage debts owed by people who borrowed money from the bank to buy houses. The immediate result is that, instead of paying the bank back for the bank's loan for your mortgage, you'll be paying the IRS.

But don't forget the individual citizens, the ones who will be "footing" this bail-out with higher taxes over the next dozen years. Fear not, just because it is (y)our money being used to buy the member-banks, it doesn't mean you yourself will ever actually OWN any part of these banks. These, along with your holdings in them, will be dissolved upward to pay for all this, with the Fed providing the money now to be paid back by the government (ie. you) indefinitely.

The longer term results of this are predictable too: a "REAL-ID" card or chip based currency (the end of paper money), and eventually the need to build new camps for debt-prisoners to work or die in. All of this happened in Germany too, only faster.

In conclusion, I'd like to re-introduce you to Presidential candidate Ron Paul, here questioning Ben Bernanke on the exact causes of this current crisis, way back when it was first starting in February, 2008.

PEACE. NOW!

~Jon

Why do I love Irina, my lover, the woman I want to marry?

Let me count the reasons.

1) Because she took pity on me, when all my friends looked up to me, as if I were so much better than any of them, and my ego became insufferable to me, them, and everyone, she came to me like a torch-bearer at midnight, one light in infinite darkness, and she took me by the hand. She led me out of the tar-pit, and showed me the meaning of ultimate goodness. She inspired me. And she demanded nothing in return but the promise of my devotion. She alone saw through me. She alone looked down at me. She alone inspired my highs, while my friends dragged me down.

2) Because she gave herself to me, beyond any hope of repair, and long beyond the point at which I stopped deserving it. She gave me her heart, her mind, and most importantly, she gave me her time. And she gave these things bountifully, though I, flushed with the flaming hormones of youth, believed I could abuse her generosity forever without consequence.

3) Because she is my opposite. In every way we've grown apart, I am maddeningly, sickeningly, perversely, more attracted to her now than even in the many years I spent mourning over losing touch with her. Now that I have seen her picture, now that I know she is still alive, I am filled with a sense of relief for some of the burden of guilt I bore for our failure in love. This taste of freedom is bitter in her silence; I pray for her kiss to sweeten my sour disposition.

4) Because she chose me, even though she couldn't have realised it at the time, she was fulfilling for me a deep longing for a one-and-only counterpart, and, regardless of whether or not she would accept that now, it still holds true on my end, and I have loved none since her. I love her and only her, because she is my all, who always was, is, and always shall be, my one, my everything, Irina.

5) Because there is a historical precedent for "love at first sight." I am beyond being a mere "hopeless romantic" in my constant love for her, as opposed to other infatuations I'd had, or have had in my time alone; I knew from the moment I first saw her I was obligated to fall in love with her. Perhaps she'd put a curse on me by having chosen me before we met as someone she would like to try to fall in love with, and perhaps she'd failed at that; I, however, have chosen to love her forever regardless or because of that.

6) I am fascinated by her. She is, for me, a creature of such endearing behaviour, and her physical beauty so intense, that had we never met, and I only seen her, even only once, from afar, I would still think of her daily, as I do. Other girls have likewise caught my attention, and still I remember them even if I only saw them once in passing, as being exceptional in their behaviour or appearance or both. However, none have come close to equalling, or even paralleling, those of Irina.

7) Has anyone loved me like she did? So, could I ever love anyone like her? None have dared approach me, let alone allowed themselves to grow so close to my central core. Those who might claim, from afar, to "love" me - how worthy of my disdain they are beside her. What effort have they made, and with what perseverance, to know me, to tolerate my defenses, to lie prone before me like a devout worshipper? All those I've ever known remain scattered in the wind like grains of dust from within a broken hour-glass. How could I consider giving myself, by degree or in full, to anyone less than she who did the same for me?

8) What justification is there for my continued existence beside loving her? Why should I get out of bed, or worse, why not take the extra moment's effort to do away with the burden of knowing me for my friends, and simply off my head? Why should I not cut my dick off, like the Japanese Buddhist monk? It is, afterall, worthless to me otherwise. And why not torture myself, as I do, and daily? What darker blood puddle can there be than the pool of bile in the broken vase of my heart?

9) Who else cares for my ranting? To whom else are all my pleas directed? There is nobody alive on earth now who knows me who would rather not read the majority of my writing. "It pains our hearts," they lie, and say, "it makes us worry about you." In truth, they haven't got the guts to tolerate the focus of that spotlight, emanating from the crack in my heart, from beyond which shines in the light of idealised love. They do not understand: A) why I put myself through what I do; B) whom I am trying to attract by making my existence seem so repulsive; C) what gain could come for anyone who would so understand these things. Perhaps she sees herself among this category; if given another lifetime in which to read all my writing, she would understand. No one else will, unless she can.

10) My beliefs are false, that much is true. Except for my belief in love, nothing else I believe even can be proved. It is obvious who I love, and how. Not why, even to her, but that is the substance and the essence of my belief in love. If I believe, on the other hand, that tachyons are gravitons, that time is a fourth-spatial dimensional shape, our emotions merely the effect of entropy, etc. These things cannot be proven. It can't be tested what the nature of a tachyon is. There simply is not the possibility to construct such physical equipment to measure them. We can imagine these things, and perhaps by our thoughts construct a model of their nature, however we cannot use physical equipment that can be built using nature to test them, they are simply too small, too fast and at too great an angle from our own dimension's perspective. Love, on the other hand, is proved true by devotion.

11) Our love was true, because we both felt it at the same time. True love breaches the hull of reality, to achieve the ideal realm of eternity. True love is eternal. Our love was true because we were in it together. It was, literally, the two of us, against all odds, back to back, against the wishes of our friends, our families, the laws, time itself, and, finally, distance. Only when we were separated from one another by force did her love begin to grow cold. The miles turned into years, and I've waited here all my life, and will, until we are together and in love again.

12) Hope is well-founded if later proven true, however during times of great doubt, he who hopes appears the fool, and it is widely considered wiser to be hopeless. I have hope in love, but must keep it secret, because of the odds against it. So I couch my words and say, "I am a hopeless romantic," instead. It is wiser to appear to lack hope, even hope for such a good thing as love, when the odds are in favour of such a hope leading only to a greater downfall later. So, I remain, a "Hopeless" Fool for love. No one can reach me; I'm beyond redemption, etc. because I will never give up on my one true love.

13) Sometimes I hate her, and even loathe the sight of her. But those times are not often, and do not last very long, though their moments do seem like lifetimes, when I feel I've put myself further away from her, and even when I can't stand to look at her picture, I feel worse because I know I am at fault. These times of terrible temptation I do not, as would some, look forward to. I fear them, and rightly, for they may be weighed against me, however inconvenient, however unintentional, and, when she feels the same, be used to justify her doubts in me. I am human, and we all get sick and tired of humanity. But she, I fear, as my Goddess.

14) She hates me, not from time to time, as I, even I, may waver in my purity of devotion to her, due to my frail humanity, which tires, though my spirit does not. No, I love Irina because I have made her hate me. She hates me now, but she loved me then. She loves me, eternally, and yet hates me in this lifetime. This is, for me, in this lifetime, the lesson, the Great Mystery, of Love. For her love for me, and my having made her hate me, are both in the past. Neither can she overcome the latter to resurrect the former, nor I forget the former and accept the latter. Some call this sickness. I call it love.

15) She is my Goddess. My beliefs in God, advanced as they may be, are all based on the writings of dead men in books I've read. I have seen no evidence of the type of God they describe existing during my own lifetime. Goddess, on the other hand, I believe nothing about, because I have not read one word written on her by anyone I believe. Yet, I have experienced the Goddess directly through her messengers to me. I know who the Goddess is, and who is merely her hand-maiden. I have met the Goddess, and known her love. And so I call the Goddess by the name of the one she sent who loved me as I her: Irina.

16) Who else can fathom the Mysteries of our Love? We, alone, on this planet of 6+ billion humans, countless other species, and all living now elsewhere, throughout the galaxy, the unimaginable numbers of galaxies, throughout the entire universe; and those who have ever, or will ever so live, whose spirits wait to be born, and then, after living, return to beyond the veil of the skies to watch us; we alone have sunk to the depths of our love, and know it like the back of one another's hands. We alone, in all God's creation, can ever know and understand our love. It is so rare, such a precious diamond. It is that grain of sand around which the remainder of the universe pivots; that knot in the rope of time from which the pendulum of reality depends; it is the beginning and end of the answer to the divine quest. Our love.

17) She personifies to me the ideal of the insoluble mystery that is the Archetypal feminine, whose wisdom in foresight is a curious intuition, and whose understanding in maternity is the creative concept itself. These are notions no man can comprehend, without the knowledge and conversation of his true love. The Undiscovered Country, and all that entails for me, lies beyond her ice-berg eyes.

18) What dignity have I, how can I call myself a "man," if not relative to this woman I love? She constantly reminded me that to "be a man" means to "sin and sin boldly," to make command descisions, to choose wisely, and to act with a magickal will to power. To bring Judgment to Strength, to bring Victory to Greatness, to break the vessels and let in the Light of higher reason, all these are the acts of "a man." And so by such and other actions, know me as I am, and so you can call me "a man," but man I am not, unless by her word, for empty, otherwise, would all my actions be.

19) Who am I to love her? I am like a serf who loves a Queen. I am nobody, I am nothing. I have no beliefs in truth, I believe in Solipsism, that nothing is true, nothing real, I do not exist, etc. Solipsism is an absence of belief, and to materialism the same negating influence as atheism is to idealism. I am unkempt, a beatnik. I am alot of things. But what care I for anything I am, what care I for reality, if it does not have her in it, for my all she is, and I her nothing. So, like micorcosmic zero and macrocosmic infinity, we are polar opposites to one another, yet one and the same.

20) I cannot escape her. In all my writings of fiction, I will only be imagining her in every female character I could write. In all my writings on theoretical sciences, so-called "metaphysics" (mumbojumbo), I've only been trying to appeal to her, she my sole target audience, and only to impress her have I written one word. Some might call the re-curring thought of a lost love "obsession." If distraction or detrimental, rather than inspiring and purgative, this process of mantra meditation would indeed be "dangerous" or "self-destructive." It is my eternal flame. Without it, that which I am would collapse into emptiness and my soul implode into the vacuum of my heart. I would cease to be, simply blink out of existence, if I stopped thinking of her.

21) She is perfect. She is my ideal woman. She is free as a bird. She's slippery as a fish. She's the Above and Below, in union, before her I am in awe. Why? everyone around me wants to know. They do not see her the way I do. Why? I cannot fathom their perspective anymore than they can fathom mine. So, to why, I would ask "Why Not?" I find this person perfect, I love her unconditionally. Anything she does, I cannot but love her all the more for it. She may hate me, I would love her. She may love me, and I her, and then this would all have a happy ending: becoming reality. Why on earth would I not desire this dream to occur for me with the one I choose to love, who once loved me, who may again, if my love is true?

22) I can never let go of her. It's like punching glue. Nor can she ever let go of me, no matter how hard she tries. I'm in her past like a skeleton in the closet, which even if she tries to hide from everyone else, she will always know I'm always there. And I will wait for her in that crypt forever if need be, and eventually, she will set me free, for reasons we cannot even yet imagine. But what is in me of her is what is in her of me, and so long as there is one there will be the other. She may not like that, but it's true. And I'm not letting go.

23) I am in love with her forever. By my calculations this elevates our love, that is, that odd vehicle we are in together, to a pinnacle of perception beyond the "immortality" of all that which was born, but does not die, and beyond the "eternity" of the universal singularity itself. Together we are God and Goddess. Alone we may be, separated by distances and circadian cycles, but God and Goddess, in eternitiy, we will always be. We may not be together now, but our love is, was, and always will be. When we fell in love, it tore through the fabric of space-time, and we entered the realm of perceptual heaven. The walls dissolved, and light came in.

24) I can never forget her. Even if I were not fixated in fascination on her, and not "obsessing" over whether or not she loves me like I love her, not only am I the wave-function collapsed beneath her operant observer principle, but even if I were my own man, and not merely in orbit around her, even if none of that were applicable; how could I blot her out of my past? If I were to apply the opposite to negate her influence, would the opposite of love be passionate hatred, or cold indifference? And if I even wanted to erase her from my memories altogether, which I do not, would I not only be sacrificing my own better half, the portion of my life spent loving only her? If I forgot all the times I've thought of her, all that would remain would last only a moment.

25) When I think of her and the thought of the warmth of her heart grows near to my imagination, I feel as though I were on the precipice of a cliff, with my eyes closed, and she holding me as I leaned out over the edge. She is my "peak experience." Trusting in her love for me was a much more potent mental turn-on than any drug. I believed in the imminance of the end of it all, and I was hyper-intellectualising my every least idea. It was a mind-rush to love her, and I felt propelled at a fast pace. She says her love has "grown cold." By distance and lack of synchopated rhythms, we have grown apart. If she felt the way about me I did about her, then if we were near one another again, even in passing, we would chemically spark, and immediately fall in love again.

26) We are impossible. A combination of opposite poles, like matter and anti-matter colliding, we are more than merely dangerous if brought around each other. We are the negation of all. Therefore, we must not occur. Therefore we cannot occur. Yet look! A Miracle! We did occur. And look what happened! Did not the millennium end, and anew begin again? Did not one reality end and another begin? Are we not now living in a post-Apocalyptic time? Yes, all these things we brought about by bringing ourselves near one another at this time. But look, another miracle: no extinction came to our species, no destruction consumed our planet, the universe of the heavens did align, but do you know how many sunspots there were on the visible face of Sol last week? Zero. Despite wars and rumours to the contrary, humanity is safe and prepared to face new challenges. All this did occur as the result of our love, Irina's and mine, which lowered itself though time from eternity to now. We came together before. But we cannot be allowed to be brought together again. The destruction of what is could be catastrophic, they caution, in the birth of what must follow from such an event: if the two align as one, anew the world will be born again. That is why we are more than simply unlikely, we are purposefully avoided, and, according to reknowned mathematicians and physicists, best left out of the equation.

27) We were perfect together. The world revolved around us when we were together. In my eyes was the sprakling reflection of the light in hers, and in hers mine, and so bright was that light it blinded us both to everything else. The world around us, I say again, was destroyed. The universe ended and began again. Such was the strength of our coming together. Lightning in a bottle cannot be captured from the same source twice, they say, and so warn us we are "impossible." It's true too, we are impossible, but the impossibility of us we already proved true once. The second step is a choice, following from the first step, which we've already taken. We can choose to be in love again, and this is, moreover, demanded by the consequences that cause coincidences to occur, the destiny of all our fates, the one pattern measuring all aperiodicities realitive to it as their average median, and the one spirit a dimension above the pure energy of the many souls. The Apocalypse we began, by making its purpose reality, we must complete. The times are on my side.

28) We could be perfect again. I can imagine it. I can see it in my mind's eye. If she were with me, none of my odious habits would I continue to maintain. That which clouds my mind and reigns in my heart would be lifted, their darkness disperse. The awful feelings I harbour in the pit of my stomach for everyone other than her, my envy of other lovers, my hatred for humanity, my desire to escape society, my habitual use of psychotropics, etc. would all simply stop. The things that drag me down in this life would end, and I would become the me I've always wanted to be. I pray the same would be true for her. I pray to her, for she is my Goddess, her will be done.

29) Who else could I tolerate to touch my beloved? What mortal can reach through the atmosphere, through the heavens, into our home beyond destiny, in our union where we are forever, higher than God, and touch the cheek of the woman I love? I could not suffer it. Insane, I already am. Dangerous would I become then, a grave and mortal danger to the holder of that hand, mortal, who would touch the face of Goddess. Now, with words, I do sing my love. If, to take up a weapon were I so forced, would my skill be any less superb with that which is weaker than my pen? I would skin anyone alive who even looked too long into my lover's eyes. And yes, I'm man enough to 'fess up to that and face time, even for only saying it, hard time spent away from my love. How could it be any worse than it is now, where I do not even know if she does love another, than there, knowing I had killed the one she loved?

30) Through all this time we've been one, married in our hearts, our minds, their combination as one soul. All I ask, and beg my living Goddess, is to bring back the body to reclaim its half of our aura. To be united with me again, in the flesh, in the substance of our existence, I pray to her, for her to hear me and heed my words: Bring your body back near mine. I know we are eternal. I know you know what I know. But now, in this life, you and I must act, to save the fate of everything, the universe, our species, our planet, ourselves, our loves for others and for one another, all can be saved by one word: Say "YES." Say it. Do not sing it as a song in silence, do not merely move your lips to whisper my name on a hot breath. Know that I am near, that we're one, you're with me too, and that this is what being "in love with" someone means. But know also I need to see you again with my own eyes, the ones in the head attached to the hand that writes these words, my Goddess, come love me again in the body!

31) You and I will never die. What we brought about, this turn of the aeons, is irrevocable and undeniable in its impact on history. Thus ends the Revelation of St. John of Patmos, the return of Jesus and Mary. So it was foreseen, so made to come about. So it must be, shall be, and is. And thus are we: for we must be, and always be, and so be without end. You can run from me, and you can hide from me, in this life you are free to vacation as only my lover, but when we die in these skins know we will be returning to the place from whence we came. I remember it as paradise, forever with you, my eternal lover. If you choose to remember it not this way, nonetheless to it you will return, and if you choose to hate me, forever will you be cursed by my eternal love for you. But know: I will never stop loving you. Ever.

32) All that exists is only us. In a multiverse of  $n$  possible parallel universes, we would exist like a beam of light divided into a spectrum as it refracts through the infinite possible dimensions like a prism. Life is like our prison, but we cherish our mortal existence. I hers, and she her own. I my own and, perhaps, she mine. But during the recent hurricane, "Ike," that came aground over Houston, her town, I prayed very heartfully for her safety. She returned the day after the storm and has water and electricity on already. I prayed for her safety, and so safely she returns, but it is not by my will this was accomplished, but by the intervention of the grace of God, that is, the "Christ" of the "Catholic" (Universal) Church, below and beneath the Great Mystery of the Holy Ghost, my love, my Goddess, my everything, my all.

33) "With you I am in a knot but I am naught without you." I wrote this verse to her and put it up on MySpace, hoping she might happen by, might cast a glance my way, and know that I am still thinking fondly of her, and loving her from afar. So afar. Tonight, the third following the storm, I am catching up on this from number 32, begun months ago. I have no reason not to return to this refrain. This love song is the truest thing I have to say, and if this is not believed, then no one will ever but doubt and find fault in all of my other work. Such I've said, already, and I say again now: if she doesn't get this (my love), then no one will (get my work). I have returned during her storm from seeing the Dead Sea Scrolls on exhibit in North Carolina. I could not stop thinking of her. It was vexing. Very vexing. I listened to an audio-novel about a recent hurricane in Florida with my mother in the car.

34) There are rumours and whispers in my periphery again. I am beginning to feel the stirring of the embres of my inner-most heart again. They are stirred into the least feelings of pride. I may have something to contribute, and, in truth, I do know it doesn't hinge on Irina's love for me. I am free to her as she is free of me. But to me, in my little fish-bowl, it does. Because, without her as my Muse, then all I have written is only worth so many ashes, and should be measured part for part as such along with my own cremated remains. Along, for that matter, with my amassed library, and my collection of entertainment media. Am I not the Great Burner? For who is even Satan to say, "No."?

35) Does God love Satan? Is there a better way to phrase this? Yes. "Here we go again." This is the crux of the message given to me by the voices in my head. They don't want to hear it. Should I trust them? I would were they her's. But how could I ever really be sure? She loves me, she loves me not, she loves me, etc. is a game of chance, or luck, and of leisure, all things of which I have got none. Rationally, I know this, and the sight of the inevitable terrifies me so much I turn away and cover my eyes rather than face the most obvious future, one without her beside me, and so I turn away from the sight and remain blind to even the most immediate outcomes. Does God love Satan? Ask one of them, because I personally don't care. All I know right now, and all I can think about, and about all I care, is that I love Irina.

36) Where we are from, she and I, when we were together, is a place beyond Good and Evil. Therefore, we are "above" or rather, outside of and beyond, the definitions of "God" and "Satan" as the "ultimate extents" of "Good" and "Evil," respectively. It requires the psychic patience to communicate with an animal, or even an infant, to be able to communicate ideas of such a low level of necessary brain-functioning. That is why God and Satan are ideas communicated to us while children. We would never believe in such tripe if we'd found out about it a little later in life. In truth, we have got only our own emotions to guide us, and those often mislead the righteous. Cupid's arrow can make the heart into a compass.

37) My love for you exceeds the number of words invented or grammar used for them to describe it. Even my heart's beating, constantly quickenning whenever I think of you, is above the circumferential definition of the Universal God. You are lifting me up into heaven. The true realm of the pure clear light, invisible and shimmering, into Heaven, our Home. Yet I know there are still two realities. One in which my own wishful-thinking tortures me with imagining such a fantasy, and the other in which no such illusion is, nor can be, real. I am torn between the wonderful world above, and the torturous world below, and I am flayed alive by the judgment of both a God and a Devil I don't believe in.

38) My Heaven and Hell shake when I only think of you. I am weighed between them, like a tight-rope stretched across an Abyss. On the one side, there is up, and on the other side down. Surrounding me, all these pictures of you, all the same picture, I see, now here, now there. Strange contexts. Strange voices. I do not love us Because we are "estranged lovers," but I do love us "in spite of the fact." I am gone beyond the limits of reason... again. I am lifted up and out of my skin. Just from the thought of you. This is terrible. What season of the inferno is this? How can this heat be mutating my DNA in this way? Why am I so evolving? Why is your love the most important thing to me? Let me count the reasons...

39) You Keep Me Sane. There's a good enough one to justify you loving me back, I had thought once at least due to the pity of your "Hypocratic Oath." But my disease is hypochondria caused by Florence Nightengale syndrome. "I love you, hele me." But is this not only what my own loathesome father would wish for me to emulate? Afterall, such is the sum and substance of his dreary and dismal existence. I wish to worship you, but I wouldn't cross the street to spit upon my own father. And yet, how alike he and I must appear to you, from a distance, under the telescope that reflects into the microscope. The sky above you is the same as above I. I am on the razor's edge with you. I am never sure which way we will fall. You are dancing. I am dazzled. I am truthfully amazed.

40) Once you could have loved me, seen me through this veil, through my "weakness," through my fits of anxiety, and my day-dreaming. But you refuse to know me as I am now, so harmless, such a five star citizen, and if you were to only open your eyes to my life, it might save me from my own vices and strifes. Instead, you wish to remember me only as I was: crashed out on a couch, some future preacher for the lost cause of national sovereignty. Once I was a rebel. Now I am a coward. You couldn't have ever loved me for long as I was then. But now, we could make a husband and wife easily.

41) Is this intellectual exercise worth doing? Has it cleansed my conscience, purged my will? Has anything changed by my doing this? If I only "believed," the "carrot-on-a-stick" crew in the Peanut Gallery chime up. You were never an optimist. Quite the opposite. At least, as I saw it, when it came to me. You never thought I'd make it, did you? You must have had to try very hard to give up on me after only two years. Why, here it is ten and I long for you constantly. Constantly. Now, you could try to get that from anyone else. It would make me crazy. But you could. That's my gift, such as it is, to you, my beloved wife, my eternal love. I just doubt anyone would ever love you as much as I do. It's just a hunch, though. And it certainly doesn't mean I could make you any happier.

42) You are my answer to life, the universe and everything. You are the justification, the rationalisation, the moralisation, for it all. Without you, I could not hold my world stable, and it would, indeed, quickly end. You have no idea the darkness I've lived in. I didn't know if you were alive or dead. It didn't matter. Sure, right, whatever. It mattered. It mattered alot. I can't tell you how much. But I will tell you this. I have done two things for which I am ashamed to you. I have betrayed you twice. Neither of them meant anything about me, nor you, nor should be taken to. I love you, Irina. Irina, forgive me for this...

43) The evil Goddess, she came to tempt me. The serpent in disguise. And as I tried to tell you in 1999, although I don't think you were listening, she tried to take the form of you. That was my first temptation. Then a man named Chris came, and I tried to "turn the other cheek" to the temptress. She had me put into jail, and they gave me haldol, etc. as I had said in 1999. Later, there was a woman I met online. A cyber-friend in Australia. I never met her. Her name was Bek, like my mom. In our correspondence, and to my one-time "buddy" Chris, and to the witchy-one, Lisa, I never once shut up about you. I've chewed off their ears about you to everyone I've ever known, and to alot of people I'd only just met. Everyone who knows me knows I love you. But ask any of them. Not one among them can tell you why. I can...

44) I survive by thy grace, oh great one, my Good Goddess. Beyond this universe, I cease to be, and am refracted through the shattered shards of the crashing universes next door. I don't want to die anymore, Irina. I've gotten through that. Since 2006, Dec. when I found your page on Myspace, I haven't wanted to die once. I am not hopeful, I don't dare. But I am relieved. I am sharing this burdensome world with someone else out there who once loved me, and who might again, if this world is graced by one granule of perfection.

45) Bring the hatchet down on me, send me to the dog-house, do away with me in shame and disrespect. But also, feel something always within the deepest recesses of your heart for me, and let you call this feeling love. I love you. If there is a law of reciprocity in effect within this universe, there must be some hope you could love me back. I know that, when you left, I imploded into a black hole, which in essence I have remained since. But I am trying to tell you now, when I found you, light dawned across the bleak abyss of my heart. There was some brightness in my life for the first time in ten years, and I exalted greatly. I cannot even explain how greatly I exalted. It would profane the ears of the pure.

46) Why Am I Alone? I have denied everyone who might have been's interests in me, as much as I damn well can. Lisa was recalcitrant physically, but the deadliest flirt with a word. Chris poured rum down my gullet, then raped me. Bek was nice enough, but also somewhat forward. I don't like this. I don't like this feeling. I hate this black-hole business. I hate the embers of the "Great Burner" that are the last flickering flames of our once passionate Phoenix of love. I hate this hollow, cavernous chambre. I hate being alone. But I would rather be alone with no one if I cannot be together with you.

47) to this end, I will rest: to the end of the world, without you, I'd gladly raise a cheery glass. But knowing you are alive, I wish the world to grow out of control forevermore, and never need a hedge trimming. It's a strange admixture of elements, we are, alchemically. Our own "Sponsa et Sponsum" combination. To this end, the end of the musical bar, I will rest: I attest that, if there were truly an Apocalypse, and blood rained from the sky, the earth cracked open below, etc. I would break bread and drink wine in a church. But until that day, I won't lightly step foot in one. I mean to marry you in one. But that is beside the point. The marriage of our chemical selves has already taken place, although we've remained dormant, and, to your eyes, "grown apart." We are united across the gulf of a great Abyss. You make me want to make only one wish: for you to love me, again and again and again and again. I've cast pennies into fountains everywhere I've been in the last ten years, and each wish was the same: "for Irina to love me, and only me, my true love." Perhaps this was fool-hardy, and it is mere superstition. But there is no denying it as true, because it is, I assure you, I will attest, it is.

48) I know the way the world works, and it's been driving me crazy. Alone I've been for so long with none but messengers, obliquely guiding me, their darkness enshrouding me, their lies leading me along the precipice. I know you are as tired of me now as I was of life when we met. But this is only the beginning. When I was a child you told me, "go, be a man." Now I am. And you a young woman, with no one to love, who anyone gladly would. You who wished to be a teenage hippy but who went Goth instead; your dreams crushed, you became a sorority girl, a cheerleader for the system, and now it pays you well to be its willing slave. You, a yuppie, who would have been a hippy with me, had we moved to Berkley as you wanted. And here I am, unchanged, unchangeing, a hippy, a stoner, a rastafarian.

49) Listen to me now, before our time's run out. I love you, only you, forever. There is now only "once in a lifetime" for me. This is never ending. But I tell you, my love, I tell you, daily, I do, I do. Tell me once the same, forever more, and I will live the best life I could ever imagine: With You, we are everything, apart nothing. Apart you are happy and I sad. Together, so you reason, you would be sad and I happy. Prove it. I can prove you wrong. I can make you happier than you ever have been, alone or with me, or with anyone else you ever could be. Afterall, I am only a messenger. My message is just Love. You can kill the messenger, kill me, if you like (as I believe you would, and are), but you cannot turn a deaf ear to the message anymore. You know how I feel for you. Save my heart and tell me you feel the same.

50) The time has come. The New World Order is here. I am become a new man. And how many new lives have you lived through my darling one? Is there no hope for there to be another one, now, with me. I know you know there are oh so many like me, so many other me's, whose voices I seem to slide between, now one person, now another. But list well, oh my dearest darling Irina. The sum of my reflections is less than the difference between it and the true and real me. Those images you have of me, they are but shrapnel shards from the stained glass window, I have now shattered with my light. Come outside now, dear. Come join me. Join me, out here, beyond this planet, hell, and its confines. Here, we are forever, king and queen of all that which is. Marry me, here.

Hey Chris,

I'm doing fine, thanks. I've been a bit busy writing a new book about #-theory, and catching up on sleep some, but I have a minute now to get back to your last email.

First, I hope you are well and that all is well in your world. I have been wondering about your father, and hoping things are well for him. However, I admit, I have been more distracted by things in my own world to really devote more thoughts to him than this. Do tell him I wish him well, though, and that your friends are his friends too. Now, if you'll permit me a moment's respite from more formal formatting, I'm going to have to resort to using quotes in an email. Hope this ends up legible.

> 156 base units per quadrant or watchtower

there are 156 (12X13) base-units / quadrant or Watchtower in Dee's system:

10 in each Calvary cross; 20 besides the CC in each sub-angle per Quadrant; 36 in each Dekanate Cross, central to each quadrant or Watchtower.

However there are 91 "intelligences," each a name of 7 letters, which necessitates a minimum # of letters of 637.

If you multiply the # of base-units / quadrant (or Watchtower) by the number of quadrants (Watchtowers), you would take  $156 \times 4 = 624$ .

Obviously,  $624 < 637$ , by some 13.

And, if this were the only discrepancy, one could easily invent a way around it using the letters of the "Black Cross" or "Tablet of Union" that intersects between the 4 quadrant Watchtowers, which is what Dee himself did.

However, the point is to find a system that agrees with the observed reality. To this extent, however, even Dee's own original version of the system is incomplete, allowing for the additional Enochian work of the Golden Dawn; but even that is imperfect, and requires additional (as of yet unknown?) work to be completed.

Dee included 3 names (of 7 letters each) from the Black Cross, but took one letter (L) from one name from one of the Quadrants (the Watchtower of Water in the lower left of the Great Table). He also built one seven letter name (PAROAN) using 7 letters (2 of fire, 2 of earth, 2 of air and 1 of water) from the 4 Watchtowers. He also, as I'd mentioned before, excluded one name of 7 letters that appears on the Great Table from final inclusion in the 91 names.

In short, Dee's combination by the 91 names of the 4 Watchtowers and the 30 Ayres is arbitrary at best, and worse, his choices have been repeated verbatim without question by almost every single subsequent researcher. I won't propose any solutions to this "problem" myself either, though, as I do not consider deciphering Dee's letter-encryption system a useful exercise.

In short, there are 156 letters or base-units on each quadrant or Watchtower of the Great Table. Thus, for all 4 quadrant - Watchtowers, there are 624 lettered base-units. If you include the central Black Cross's 20 letters (as in the Tablet of Union), or if you include the total # of base-units possibly implied by the inclusion of these letters (50 total, including 40 letters and 10 blank spaces), the sum total result will differ accordingly. However, none of these systems is accurate, and therefore in my own work I have discarded them all.

If you'd care to see what my own further work has been applying Dee's Enochian system, I would suggest you begin here:

> Do you have a program to do this yourself?

I use www.alabe.com which has a feature for creating birth-charts by nearest city online. I think their dates go back at least a century, give or take a decade. I know they go in advance of the present at least a decade, possibly more. I do have a couple astronomy programs, and one can be rewound or advanced much further. Celestia is a free astronomy program I've downloaded, but never used. I had used another, but I forget the name of it off-hand.

> what other information is there regarding Jesus ben Padiah

According to Origen (2nd c.), in "Contra Celsus," he attributes the "legend" of Jesus being the son of a Roman soldier to the Platonist Celsus (1st c.). According to Origen, the name of Jesus' Roman father was "Panthera." In the Tosefta and the Babylonian Talmud, Yeshu ben Pandera is mentioned several times, specifically as having suffered the death sentence on Passover eve for the crime of attempting to heal a Rabbi on Sabbath. The name "Bar Panthera" literally means "Son of a Panther," generally taken to mean a "betrayal;" however the name "ben Padiah" means, literally, "Son of Righteousness." Considering the sources, it seems obvious that the one (bar Panthera) is meant as slang for the other (ben Padiah) and, again considering the sources, it seems most likely the slang "bar Panthera" is a direct reference to the same person who wrote under the name "ben Padiah."

> why you believe him to be the 'traditional' Jesus of faith?

I don't "believe" him to be the "traditional" Jesus of "faith." I know beyond any doubt the probabilities are stacked well against it being mere coincidence that "Yeshuah Ben Padiah" was the name used by the author of the "Angel Scroll," and Jesus being the name used to describe the central character of the Gospels. If the date of the authorship of the "Angel Scroll" is authentically early first century, then it becomes even more likely the Gospels were based on the scroll's own author, and not the scroll's authorship attributed ex post facto to the character of the Gospels. If, until now, the only literal usage of the same name used by the scroll's author has been in the court records of the Sanhedrin of the time, and in "heresies" discredited by early Christians, does not surprise me. However neither do any of these facts prove any of the miracles the Gospels attribute to this historical figure either. If the record of the Sanhedrin and of Rome both consider him a heretic, and there is no objective proof of his supposed miracles, it is matter of one person's point of view being opposed to another's. You can call this "belief" or "faith." It is not. Nor is it a matter of "tradition." These are all simple facts that comprise logical reality. I offer no judgments based on my own personal feelings, nor am I being swayed either way.

I think it is important the earliest English translations of the "Angel Scroll" not be offered to the public by any denominational Religious institution. They must be released as a scientific finding of fact, entered into evidence in the most sterile way, like a syringe being inserted in a vein, in order to minimize the popular reaction to it. The impact of such a document finding favour with the Church now would be more of a shock than it being released via secular authorities. Now I am no scholar of ancient idioms. However, I am as qualified as the next educated person to render a translation of it for myself, and I have within my means the ability to publish my translation for the popular market, and to back it up with sufficient other popular works of my scholarship. I simply think it would be wise for those in authority to gain my favour now, rather than suffer my wrath later. However, now, they yet do not see me as anyone important. All the better. For now.

Anyway, I've got to go for now, but I'm glad to hear from you, and I hope things are well enough for you that you got to read over my last email on Catholic Prophecy as well. I enjoy discussing these types of ideas and issues and have found you definitely bring new and fresh view-points to my consideration. Thanks for your time and your interest,

Peace,
- Jon

Gerald, thank you very much for your time, and for your interviews with Michael. His site is very helpful to a lot of people, myself included. I have a two-part question. A) When you remote view the causes of the "trigger event" predicted to occur around 2012 can you trace any relevant extra-terrestrial objects (comets, asteroids, planetoids, etc.) back to their positions today, and if so, will there be, or is there now, any object (or species) from beyond our solar-system that will enter it on or will play a part in the "trigger event" of 2012? B) what do you find when you concentrate your full remote-viewing skills in a direction in space (such as galactic core, or the Zeta Reticuli system in the Orion constellation)? Again, thank both of you for your time. - Jon

I am an alien. I know I am not from this universe, where things are compromised between the divine and dirt, and all is mediocre at best, and things are rarely at their best for anyone. The best we hope for is sleep. A little rest. Well deserved. We work so hard. We grow our muscles. We work for money, and trade money for food. We work so that we can eat, and live, and continue to work. We are self-sustaining slaves to a civilisation of concrete and brick. We build the walls and, only too late, come to realise we have walled ourselves inside. The Masters are not men. They are aliens. Like me.

I am from a better world. And ALL I WANT IS TO GO HOME. Half my heart I gave her in exchange for half of hers. I gave her back her half. She threw mine onto the ground. It is dead now. I have only half a heart, and so I cannot put in the same amount of effort, or summon the same enthusiasms, or feel the same emotions on command as the Slaves. Their language is as crude as their anatomies. What I call "half-hearted," they call "half-assed." Their voices criticise me constantly.

"MOVE ON. GROW UP. WHAT WENT WRONG? YOU'RE DIGGING YOURSELF IN DEEPER. etc."

the Slaves don't understand that these "negative" thoughts are not really their own, personal opinions, or points of view. They've been conditioned to look down their noses at other slaves who do not shoulder their share of the worthless civil burden. And so they parrot curses taught them in turn. But the curses themselves are alive. They are living thoughts that pass between the Slaves, from one mind to the next, like a frog hopping from one lilly pad to the next. The Slaves are as much less a life-form to these "negative" thoughts, their conditioning, the Masters whose commands they obey, as the lilly pad is to the frog. But the slaves, being blinded by their controlled breeding by these inanimate, intangible, unmanifest Masters, believe they are, themselves, FREE and, moreover, their own MASTERS. Even the Masters of other slaves. Bosses. Highest Evil: turn one slave into a prisoner and another into a guard.

"Brothers! Comrades!" I used to yell. Nobody EVER listened. Now I know why. I do not exist. I am an "energy being," some form of creature, half invisible, the other half inaudible. I am not hiding beneath a security blanket. I am dead, a ghost, in a shroud. I am not a child. I am like a child. A 30 year old man, retarded at the emotional maturity growth-rate of a toddler.

I cannot change the lives of the Slaves. It's not my place to. When I try, fate intervenes. When I speak out, the words are born deformed and ugly. I would have to lie to get them to sound out loud as pretty as they sound in my mind. And I can't find that extra energy to lie with.

I know now I am above. I don't want to be. I want to be a happy slave. But I am not like you people. If I were a shit-head with a dry sense of humour. If I were an upwardly mobile yuppie. If I were a poet. If I were a doctor. If I were in grad school. If my math were as immaculate as a sophomore's. If I could quote. If I could tell you street directions around my own hometown. I cannot. I choose not to learn how. I do not owe these things to you. Slaves.

What good from within me can arise as a result of fitting the mold? All the rewards a wet pussy can offer me await me should I bend over a bit further backwards, and fit my own head up my ass, and put my mouth where my money is. If I could fake life, I would earn Irina. I could produce talentless products identically repetitive of the Hive's finest Slaves, even better. What magickal POTENTIAL I have. I have the potential to win the Slaves' GAME. By not playing, I win by own standards. But by their standards, my not playing makes me a LOSER.

Fuck you all. You will never know the love I've lost, either in your own relationships, or in your most devout prayers to your faggot love for Jesus, nor even by my own stories, which you imagine you could rewrite in better, more expressive words. Your imaginations, all my friends, all my enemies, all strangers and those sentients not even people. You are the sum of evil. It is your competition to fit-in more than ever, you better yourself by social standards, that brings SATAN into MY WORLD. MY REALITY IS PERFECT. YOU HAVE RUINED IT.

I feel nothing. I have seen the utmost of beauty. I have experienced loss of that. I have seen the nadir of humanity's motives. I have experienced loss of that too. I am "FREE," insofar as I am helpless, adrift.

I am a man in a row boat. Around me for infinite miles there is land made out of water, and water made of air. There is nowhere to go. I am "stuck" in a way no one I know can know. I step out of the boat. I fly straight up. But then I remember. There is no where else to go. So I return to my little row boat, my room, my "life." My identity.

when you come to me, you are sad, and in sorrow, and you ask me questions. "How do I...?" you want to know. You want to know my secret. My secret. You are ALL Only Manifestations reflecting my interior psyche. Your questions are mine too. I have no answers for myself. But for you all. I have the Right One. Every time. Because all answers are the same. Lies. I say: "DEATH TO ALL OF YOU, YOU WORTHLESS SLAVES." And these words, like all of mine, invert as they are born across my unkissable lips. Instead, what you think I am saying is something banal, some trivial piece of traditional advice. Something I've learned. No Slave Listens.

If you could read between the lines of my inverse words. Between the lies you love me for telling you. "I love you, brother. You're a GOOD guy." But look deeper. Do I care? Do I care about your problems at all? Do I care about you? Do you care about my problems? No. You earn my contempt.

The ones who mislead you you love the most. They prosper. I suffer. My home is not this realm of duplicity and untrustworthiness. How do we guide this world of our flesh, and the flesh of plants, and animals, and the dirt, flesh of our home? You slaves are NOT alive. You are the inversions. I am straight as an arrow shot by Arjuna, God of Archers. But no. You don't see it. And you are right. Always right.

All the people I love the most are drunks. They run away from sobriety, which brings painful memories, unhealable regrets. They are drowning themselves, killing brain cells, trying to forget they are unhappy being Slaves, unhappy wishing they could remember how to get back to the Heaven I can still remember. This is not analysis. This is Samsara's essence.

Yes. I am all "doped" up. Right now I'm on atavan (lorazepam), vodka, tobacco and resin. Yes, I am a JUNKY. Reminding you all by my loathesome persona of the Truth behind your flimsy facade. You are the liars and I remind you of the truth. The truth is misery. The truth is sorrow. The truth is suffering. Birth hurts. Death is painful. Everything in between is a desperation for some impossible escape.

The nervous system is a net through which the stream of consciousness flows, occassionally tendering up some form of fish native to where we troll. I'm hopeless.

But these drugs don't work. The sorrow remains. I have no hope of escape. If I were an exhausted, over-worked Slave, I could find respite in the "nectar of the gods." I am like some kind of holy angel that has had their wings plucked. I roam this plane, this sphere, this world, reality. I do not know the one right way out anymore so than a drunk or a suicide.

I don't want to die anymore. I do, but I don't want a messy death, upsetting the slaves by my act of selfishness. Better a symbolic suicide by cop? Perhaps Jesus. Perhaps. The frustration with irony cannot be pit against itself. These days. These are the days we live in, now. Not then. Not 2000 years ago. There is not one other free soul alive on this planet but me, I think. But What Is FREEDOM?

Take your pop music albums. Take your humanities textbooks and your physics and science textbooks. Take all your most precious possessions and burn them all. Then you will begin to know what freedom is. Freedom is having no home. We the people, this, the land of the free. SLAVES! SLAVES! SLAVES! I want you all to die. By dying MAYBE you might awaken, just a little bit. No. It's too much to hope.

They widdened Thomasville Road. Not for the sake of the northern commuters. The road bottle-necks worse than before now thanks to the fly-over. No, it was not for the benefit of the workers. It was for the benefit of their "bosses," those Slaves who believe themselves "guards" in our prison society. The cops blare their sirens up and down the road all night long. It is 3AM. No one else is on the road. They do not need to run their sirens. They are showing off. A demonstration of their assumed authority. This "power," from SATAN, not GOD, earns them their inevitable violent ends. Live fast, die young. Burn out, never fade away. I hate American psychology.

You have all called me insane. Gutlessly, behind my back. And even more cowardly, to my face. You have said behind my back, "I don't know about him. He seems distant. He isn't like he used to be. He used to have such promise. He was a promising young specimen." To my face, you ask me "straight": "So what happened?" and "if you don't get weed are you going to be a baby about it?"

I will watch your flesh flayed away from heaven as you descend at death into hell.

All of you. Ghandi could not have been so forgiving as I am. Were Ghandi alive now, he would commit suicide. I am a better man than Ghandi. I am still alive. And things have gotten worse, thanks to Slaves like Ghandi, Mr. Smith, working within the "System." I'll drink my fifth of Smirnov. You'll dance the night away. V.I.P.

You are VIP and I am RIP. I will rest in peace from my work, knowing I did it to serve history, to serve humanity, to serve my true will, my higher self, the son of mankind. What can you say, Mike, Jake, Bethany, and Mike, and Mike, and Mike, and for that matter Josh and Heather, or even Wendy and Spab. I hate you all, because you are all the same person. Just a cardboard cut-out of each other, unfolding like paper dolls. The authority of one transposes, unearned to the others. It is sickening.

Which is the greater reward?

Let me tell you that, if in 2012 when they publish the "Angel Scroll" I am already dead, then blame Irina. Blame that embarassed one. Blame the one who loved and lost and knows she is guilty for not fogiving herself and me for that. Death. It always comes to death. Death and love are the opposite, and not Love and Fear.

Fear is life and so is love. Death is the opposite of both. Love, a "good" emotion. Fear, a "bad" emotion. Death to all emotion. Emotions are a plague. Cure them by dying. No one will ever Ever EVER read this. It's a pity really. Slaves are all illiterate.

If one day all escapes failed, all would fall. If everyone felt like I do, normally, even once, the world would change. You don't want that. You want "representative" change. Incremental changes.

"Small steps." Bad sequels to good movies. I'll always be here. Watching the grass grow at night. Black grass, reflecting no light. As it is.

NOTHING IS HOLY. I reject the GOd I prayed to for Irina to love me, my own pride has killed her to me. I am a monster. I am the demi-urge. I keep typing because I am a tool of the evil. Who am I?

I am no one. Nobody. I love Irina. reboot from nothing... to nothing. For NO ONE. She is like me. To me. To me she doesn't exist. So she wants it, so it is. To her I do not even live. I am dead to her. And for her happiness, and her freedom, This is BEST.

My fifth of vodka is going to be gone soon. And so am I. to drive around and wait for my fate. Locked up by the bosses, and the guards, and the Masters of the Slaves. And Mike, and Mike, and Mike, and Mike. They know I deserve it. To Judas, Jesus was Satan. To judas, Judas was Michael.

I love you Irina. I'm so sorry for everything I've done to you. I didn't mean to. I hurt yOU AND COULDN'T HELP IT. I CAN'T PROMISE ANY DIFFERENT.

SLUT. YOU ARE ALL SLUTS. You fucked more than one person. I am better than that.

I am in no danger, The Holy Ghost (inebriation) protects me. You hypocrits. I hate your lies. You believe them. Your belief does not make your lies true. You are a fucking flesh-bag of blood-meat the same as all the Slaves. All of you. Mike, Jake, Bethany, John, my highschool friends. They hated me more when we were friends than they ever could now if we are enemies.

You are still trying to learn from me like a lab-rat or a Messiah. Fuck your insecurities. You are getting weaker. Becoming more like what your parents hoped.

I drank a fifth of vodka. I'd saved it for a year. Hadn't drank but three times in that year. Now four. So who cares? God? No. Satan, sure, he wants your "SOUL" according to you idiot Roman soldiers professing Christianity, who have NEVER done ANY research into the nature of the soul. You trust the church. I hate that.

Yes, the crusades, holocaust, etc. Blame the Catholics, or the NAZIs, never blame the Christians. All Christians are Satanists. This Roman Christ you worship is SATAN. You are Slaves to the devil. Yours is the Father of LIES.

It's not fair. You will all suffer for that. For taking her from me and making my life a mockery. You are a hero to your worthless civilisation. Tech-guy. Go-to guy. You stole my lover you Christian poser. You will die in great pain, and burn in hell for eternity. Fuck your fellow slaves. Your "friends" (fans) and your "Fam" (Manson's). Eat thy own shit for salvation. But you won't. So bend to your fate. Brothers. Comrades.

I love Irina. Jail to the Thief. Suzie Q, time for a drive.

- Jon
