

The image shows the interior of a mosque, featuring a large, ornate dome with intricate geometric patterns. The floor is covered with a vibrant, multi-colored carpet. In the center, there is a large, arched doorway with a stained glass window above it. The walls are also decorated with colorful patterns and stained glass windows. The overall atmosphere is one of grandeur and beauty.

the complete bempachah posts (1996-2014)

by: Jonathan Gee

“the complete benpadiah posts (1996-2014)”

is hereby copyright © by the author: Jonathan Barlow Gee
on this August 23, 2014.
a publication of: www.benpadiah.com insanity clause #23:

Please do not share with others the web addresses for direct download from my site that are for sale there. However, once you have a copy of any one of my works, you are allowed, by Jonathan Gee, the author of said work, to copy it and distribute it freely. If you claim you wrote it, or that you came up with the ideas for it yourself, you should be challenged to determine if you can prove your claim with knowledge of the material superior to my own. If you can, I will concede the work to your credit, but if you cannot, then the work will remain both of ours to teach and give to whom we choose.

I am hungry; my mind is racing. My fingers cannot even keep up. I am hungry my mind is racing, but I am still a little sleepy and O! if only i could go back to being only sleepy when my mind was so cozy as a fat worm in the soft soil! But the heat made me hungry. It got hot around my body and my body got hot and I began to lose the energy charged up during sleep, the drowsy buzzing wearing down and the mechanical grinding showing through. And I start to think about politics and the differences between the sexes and myself myself myself just because i am hungry. When I am tired i am gentle, submerged in soft dreams, still wet with being, not dry like doing, like external doing. Internal doing is the stuff of being. it is all i can refer to when asked what i am: i am living, i am breathing, i am digesting, i am thinking. Ing, ing, ing. but these doings of mine are not my doings. i define these doings. they define me only in that they defined who i was, who i was when i recognized them as doings of me, in me, and recognized myself as a sum of these doings, and since that time i have been moving beyond these doings, outside of myself, and putting myself in my new doings, you see? The poet thinks "they will understand, yes it is arcane and implicit, its substance being more than the sum of its words, within even the heads and hearts of those who read it, and surely they will understand," but nine months later the critic says "i don't understand" and "it sounds like the same old bullshit again, just with a few new, catchy phrases." There are no magicians, and no one is stupid enough to ever be impressed. Picture of the famous chap marrying the first fan to say "wow" when he did his silly trick. Story of the patient who fell in love with her shrink just because he seemed genuinely attentive. Well, its a long story anyway. He does such a good job relating social psychology and politics, my mind says and i blush. The well-fed never care much, can be sleepy and dream of sex. The hungry are dangerous. Whole revolutions begun by starving citizens, and whole populi kept in a corrupt corral, complacently chewing their cud. The same old green shit, again and again, a slightly different flavor. A mad dog is kicked by the brutal father of a little girl, and mutton thrown just beyond the reach of his leash. I still remember this story. Have a band and call it: Plato's Girls, because the theory of ideal forms is based on the beauty of Athenian boys. Call your band: Free. There is an alternate version of the ending in which. . . I still remember the story, most of it, almost word for word. But learning and being taught? What rubbish! The overcrowded class rooms, the thin cheap state funded carpets not like the thick soft carpets of luxury hotels "well we wouldn't dare want our kids to get spoiled. If something in life is worth having then it is worth working to get. So work." And even though I am surrounded by people who don't like to think about anything other than their spoiled little minds lick up on TV the sex and the drugs and the rocknroll and some of them (it turns out quite a few) even the responsibility, I can't even talk to these people and they end up being successful and believing in whatever and i end up a failure believing in nothing and therefore understanding nothing, even though we are all students - they good students and I an average student - i cannot fart before them and they may not fart before me. A-ha! The golden luster of society! But that is my true being: He Who Farts. That is the being of my secret internal doings, the true Me, and yet it must be hidden at all times. My externalized essence, my adopted roles, may be - MUST BE - shared constantly, but these disgusting filthy this animal id, oh no, anything but that. My beliefs must be shared; my urges must not be. I try hard to remember all this despite the hunger, all these grumblings like the gurgling of an empty stomach put into lettered phrases so dry and convenient and comforting. Like paper. People don't like to be wet, really. And it is dry most of the time in most places on earth. Wetness is the stuff of our worst fears and most potent lusts. Swimmers must shave all their hair and look like rubbery dolphins. Hair on mammals is for the dry dwellers. She must be shaved before she can be sunk into the pure stuff of Being. The churning of the ocean with its weight and its strange pull. Not like the weather. The dry sun, or even the itchy humidity of the thickest clouds. The ocean of unintentional doings, the deep currents bubbling and mysterious invoke curious fear. The dry land, the animal fur and the hardened hides of animals killed are the things of society. Below are flippers and sea anemone. Above there are thumbs and hard sticks. Below there is sleep. above there is hunger and restlessness, minds begin to chase their tails looking for a bite to eat. Some go up on mountains towards the airiest weather, or build concrete ziguars. Humanity is trying to turn itself into a flying dolphin, to satisfy both weariness of the weak and hunger of the strong (and vice versa). O GOD I HATE HUNGER! Lust for sleep, and for wet death. Pinnacles seem as silly as a dry nipple.

UNDERSTANDING AND IMAGINING ARE THE SAME

Thing-man sit behind construct of flat wooden surfaces. He is many colors and no colors, uses five pink tendrils on a black stick to fill white areas with non-white scratches, trying to put his brain as he imagines it onto paper as he understands it. (“to be” understood; “not to be” imagined — Cartesian take on Hamlet...) How do I even know Thing-man is man? I cannot see his pink trunk. Man-body I assume beneath the clothes is this really all it takes to make a man? I could make a man. and I have. In my mind. Thing-man sits before me, in my brain as I imagine it, takes shape outside my eyes in non-white scratches on white areas. Thing-man becomes an idea in the mind of any other reader and is, once immediately converted to memory, as good as an, admittedly dull, experience. My friend yesterday said of TV watching being us-done at the just-then time: “I am only waiting for the bright rain thing to come and make the power go away.” Shortly several lightning strikes nearby left us in a temporary black-out. The rain outside the window, the balding joke-man on the TV, Thing-man inside my brain as I imagine it; glass barriers between one side of IN and the other, only a dream of balance and predictable orientation is our continued expectation of such convenience. Man confuses man’s senses. All else can be trusted. But man’s shadows don’t always move from external forces I imagine, even as they are understood to be a Thing-man by my shadow.

— Voy-Boy

The Adding Machine (a thought)

The things which inspire me to write also inspire me to write in a very specific style. This would be all to my benefit if they were only dead objects which speak to me with such voices. But no. They have to be books.

Rather than being a polite inanimate object a book must feign being alive in the most arrogant way — it acts as if it is you who are the empty husk and not it. In this way a good, uppity book like an overbearing pet steals your consciousness from you; flatfooted demand from this collection of skin grafts bound from the author’s swollen carcass. Perhaps it is this stealing of livingness that is literature’s entire appeal, regardless of how effective. Consciousness is transported from body to book, actual sensations deadened as they are imputed into the hypothetical situation. The body then is a dead object and the soul is transported into a coffin full of paper bones, dried marrow thoughts, stiff jointed ideas and decomposing images.

Every author writes around and about this death, even if it is only in the delicate ignorance of it that their words bear — the frustration of an implied emptiness will still be present. They write about the death of the reader, their own future-death as experience is re-“lived” in the form of artificial memory; every author is simultaneously a reader. Every author writes about his own death.

— Billy Something (not to be confused with Billy Samething)

While walking around Dali’s “persistence of memory” recently I met the Ordinary Man. I gained no new insight from my meeting. I walked away. My actions were simple, obvious steps. Deliberate. Patterned. A strategy to get where I was going: away from Normal Man. And I looked over my shoulder at him, and saw him looking over his shoulder at me. And the horizon was the same all around with no real landmarks. And I realize the horizon is a mirror. And I realize I am the Normal Man. And I am trying to walk away from myself.

(Angels and aliens are distorted reflections of our aggrandized Selves from above as we look up into the third dimension instead of around in the indistinguishable masses of the second.)

My old friends were here again. I call them that to spite myself. They were once my friends, but now they loathe me, as I them. I have only ever behaved towards people exactly as they have toward me. In friendship as in festering fury.

Could I admit it to myself if I really was perked up by their visit? Six months of exile amongst prisoners and then all at once my old friends stop by to flaunt their freedom. Can I talk them out of their easy pride? I tear out my organs and mess the walls, I wound myself to show them how easily is a human wounded — and all the while chattering away with lofty diction befitting a real doctor: only shameful nonsense (my reference books are all novels and poetry).

I tell them, “man is free to be a slave or a master, but never truly free to be a beast,” and, “when we were young we knew no laws and could invent our own, and our own roles — always secure in the knowledge they were only pretend. Later, once we learned the laws and roles of ‘reality,’ it was necessary to break them in order to feel the total sense of self felt by the child who creates,” and, “to create is to beget a new question, some new problem; destruction is the logical result of desire to simplify,” and, oh god, “boys want to fuck innocence and girls want to fuck confidence: each the trait denied them by their same sex parent; and one is attracted physically to someone who will grow to look after child-birthing age as one’s opposite sex parent did when one was young,” (I cannot believe I told them those) and I know these are only restatements of topics in books I have read which they could have read but never wanted to. It is enough for me to know this — but I can see they know it too, and they keep nodding their heads and saying “yeah” and raising their own examples, their own “personal views” which are only mockeries of my pompous ravings.

They have come to me as a rerun of an unbearable classic on a tasteless TV channel; lepers drinking snake shed cures, they are trying to be within the rerun as real and fresh as when it was new and promising.

And I think “punk is Republican brand Capitalism because it encourages individualism only through interest in whatever expensive, bodily destructive trend is fresh for the moment; but I guess this liberal 15 minutes of equality to the aristocracy nonsense is better than feudal collectivist tradition,” and I say “I” and “and” a few hundred times and wish but don’t dare to beg for my old friends to leave. I’m trying to kick the writing habit, please leave me to my earthworm feelings of withdrawal from desperation into despair.

When they do go I resent their freedom to leave, but apologize for wasting their time with “I” and “and” and the same old rerun. After they are gone I feel a little less petrified by my inability to control myself and by my relative lack of direction, inclination, or motivation. Until I realize with apprehension that they are still there, silent in the same warm seats, hands touching their extremities attentively, bodies leaning gelatinously forward, scrutinizing my ironic words, my pathetic lifestyle, the very softness of my organs. Ghosts of the rerun past, strengthened images of living, changing memories rubbing against my privacy with their wet awake skin; my eyes are drawn to examine my own body — studying it carefully and very conscious of the minute changes. These phantom images will linger on my otherwise vacant screen, slowly fading for another six months or so before, like a magnesium flash (from what I’ve read), they will snap back into focus and begin talking afresh about their new belongings, updating me on their intimate, personal changes — making me the ghost, their ghost: their trailing, fading after-image. This mortifying spark rekindling, in prospect rejectable and nauseating, accepted as guest in the underground for the begrudging sake of spite alone, is so soon the object of my wanton lust, and for so long after the subject of my foulest shame, that I cannot but succumb to the trivial urge, and reach for the promising little object — the one prop I can, in my isolation, yet manipulate, control, be Lord over: my pen.

The Secret messiah and the ticket that imploded

Sometimes I forget what beauty is. I look for grandeur, splendor, solitude, meaning of a divine and all encompassing nature. I forget the gentle, dry caress of the breeze across my skin. The cool kiss of clear water. The smell of burning wood. The nuzzle of domesticated animal. I forget the strength of emotion. I remember only aches and pains — and by these I gauge existence in terms of survival. I feel the struggle of it. The effort of it. The strain of living, of keeping up with assigned responsibilities. A terrible discomfort and the nagging consciousness of lacking something — something important. So I seek something monumental.... and find..... nothing.

I declare that beauty is dead! It is rotten and wretched, I declare, to desire. Everything beautiful is dead. God is dead; love is slavery; luxurious contentment is theft. I scream it in people's faces. Some people look at me sleepily and yawn, "I don't remember anything beautiful ever existing." Some listen but are confused; they ask "how could that be?" or else, "and so? What do we do now?" A very few are intelligent creatures and do not even wince and are wide awake... they ask me, "what did you expect?" But they are not wise. . . I remember beauty. . . . I simply do not see it in the huge world I behold.

I throw stones at this huge world. I curse it for obscuring and destroying beauty. For overshadowing it; for overpowering it. For replacing it with symbols. That is all I can see in the absence of beauty. Symbols that overrun and entangle natural beauty with the ideal aesthetic, ever changing, always based on influence and alteration. The things that are called beautiful are perversions. Symbols fight symbols for meaning which is changed so frequently it is forgettable, each symbolic victory more Pyrrhic than the last. Each new king of the hill a 15 minute monopoly to be dispersed and replaced. I damn the world I see running amok in the absence of beauty. I throw curses of symbols into it to show how ugly a symbol can be, but it doesn't even notice.

Ash is beautiful, silt is beautiful, for these are the wombs of growth, these are the face of culture. These are discarded as refuse by each generation, babies and bath water thrown out of the frying pan and into the bonfire of the vanities. Cliches are a-musing. But like all natural resources they are being used up faster than new supplies can be produced. Something new must come soon. Something rare and beautiful and new. Borne by some prophet, some false messiah. Some ticket over the rainbow. A cure to the disease. An answer to the first and final question: "why?" Or else beautiful destruction must come. Whirlwind succeeding a toppled idol. Chaos breeding better order. Atlas shrugging. Society's crumbling like the Eastern block and the world being resubmerged into feudalism, as foretold to Solon in the story of beautiful Atlantis, And are we not Atlantis now, and Babylon? so many, many, many more are thinking nowadays. The calendar is winding down, they say. Aliens will save us from the evil in ourselves. Right? Alien angels just like us, only better.

Some fools hope for tomorrow and some for yesterday. Some hope for a utopia of ideal humanistic morality and others hope for bestial chaos. Some hope only for money, or certain libertine follies. What is there for one such as I to hope for? Can I feel no pleasure anymore which is not symbolic? Is there no true beauty left in this desperate rat warren, full of seething vermin, their heads full of dreams, over differences in which they kill one another? Is there no greatest common factor, no primary motivator? Nothing which is Romantic yet not just some sales gimmick? Is there nothing left in this world of selling expressionism that is impressive enough to warrant pause, admiration, awe; which can offer us transport from the uncomfortable confines of self? Nothing which cannot be recreated in the social laboratory and commodified? Nothing which does not conceal some potential threat?

I feel the air, thin and weightless, surrounding my body. It has contact with every cell of flesh. I am balanced within and without, I and the air. It flows through me, lives inside of me. I am in harmony with it. It is a piece of me and I am a piece of it. The puddle beneath my tongue which I can never swallow. Heavy eyelids. My being is soft. The world is soft. Time is immaterial. I have no need for symbols to represent my wants. I want nothing. I have my life, which is everything in the world that I need. The world is complete and beautiful. I am but a very small part of it. The people around me are as soft as am I, and the wind lives in them too. If you were to cut them open you would find it there, but no soul, nor any of their precious secrets.

Why do I only ever experience this absolute grace just before some cataclysm?

She moved in like a lie, elaborate yet subtle. Even my most fleeting emotions became great knots of impossibility in my mouth — I was dumb beside her resolute form. Whereas others had been tuning forks for my festering psyche, her stare was a magnifying glass that burned away my mental lichen until I was pushing nothing. She couldn't understand. In my imagination she wore an ornate costume that bespoke every possible breath of sadness in its shuddering tiers and glimmering waves, draping down from the horizon of her shoulders beneath the moon of her pale mask. But she only saw this as chains — as well it was, to bind her to an image in such a cruel restriction is a crime worse than the tethering of an infant's inhalation to stop its cries. More horrid than the black iron ovens under the ominous ebony smoke stacks spewing their wretched ash in clouds of slate stale smoke is the holocaust of the soul — the imprisonment of imperfect beauty in the windowless ivory tower. A slave to appearances, my father died not only alone, but many years before that, and lonely. Slave to beliefs, my mother died of cancer of the soul's uterus, because she had long ago given herself an abortion with a brass ring, and had killed so many of her ideas that they backed up, became infected and overwhelmed her. And I? My most wealthful writing resource, and my most horrific, is sorrow. I can stand it until somebody distracts me with absurd inanities like, "too much of anything will kill you." I am a slave to the lie. It disciplines me, distracts me, until I can do nothing but testify out of context, and therefore make no sense to anyone — especially the jury of my peers. The annoying is justified with necessity. I deny necessity, yet am still annoyed.

How long will it be until we can see each other without pity — without the patronizing face of the cute, the futile and the absurd looking over our shoulder? I've begged for your pity, nursed for it until you became ripe with it, voluptuous with a sour, loathing pity that tastes like acidic bile in my mouth and melts like ice to chill my heart. I fling pity at you, trying to stain you until you are as disgusting as me. I invent personas for you to wear so you can be a model of the vain disease I have cultivated in my brain. I do not look at you with the proud, sure eye of love — love that I profess for no reason as it begets only more foul pity. I look on you with an almost competitive glare. I have decided that you have matured more than and, in some way, better than I have — and so I set my pace by you. I feel you stand aloof because you value privacy, and fool that I am I cannot help but want to invade and infect that privacy in order to understand it. To understand a thing, though, I must first make it resemble me in order for me to be able to relate with. I corrupt, then comprehend — this is how I formulate opinions.

I surprise myself with the depth of indifference with which I cover my “true” feelings. Which is more real? Does it matter?

Although I almost always feel like I fit in with whatever group I'm in (because of the nature of hate — one hates in others what one hates in themselves — and because I always hate being in groups, I can usually see that I share something intimate with the other group members, even if it is only that which causes me to hate them), there have been times when the situation was too alien for me to find a thing in it which I can recognize (let alone hate) and identify with.

An example of this is when I was with a group of people who were beating up a person and I was not. Granted, I was the person they were beating up, but. . .

Another time was when I was quite young and my mother took me to her parent's country club. The drunk old men would laugh uproariously and I wouldn't get it. I would sit alone. I wanted to impress them. Not to fit in so much as stand out. That's stuck with me.

Another situation began after having been wedgied a couple of times in gym by friends of the coach's son, when I decided to associate with unpopular people. I hung out with Mike M. and John L. separately. When they finally met, they found many common attitudes and hit it off amiably. John had taken up guitar and eventually convinced Mike to pick up a bass. One year later, after never particularly caring if I was there or not when they got together to "jam," they finally consented to my suggestion to call Andy B. — another old friend of mine who started playing guitar in a class we both took and which I didn't stay with. They began thinking of themselves as a real band, and thus too cool for me. I had more or less given up on being in the band, but still forced my opinions on them, trying to make them adopt some message they didn't care about. Eventually they formed G. and the C. and, upon finding I wasn't as sentimentally, idealistically moral as them and was just too annoying in my prodding for meaning, they quickly shunned me outright. Though I knew each of them when they were nothing, they have since through group delusion convinced themselves and each other that they are too "good" for me (and, frequently, one another as well), when all I wanted to do was know them. The "Don't be a fan, be a friend" credo that I coined only applies to easy groupies, not their old friends.

so many of life's sensations, the little joys of living, are just pain to me. Aches and sorrows. I use this pain, or it uses me. I understand pain. Inflicting pain is power over life. It just makes life miserable and difficult to live. I'd rather be a ghost and understand magic and wonder at life like a child. Life is a melancholy opera, but the talking of the audience, their critiquing every detail of it to explain and to complain aggravates all the glory out of the beautiful spectacle. Life becomes a pantomime opera submerged in street noise. I'd rather be a ghost, tax free and non traceable, you can see reality has already made me paranoid. I'd rather be a ghost of the free child I was than a shadow of the man they expect me to want to become. Ghosts are dead already, and can know life without having to suffer in it — it looks good to them because it is more than they are in its sweet pitiability. Life and death happen for no reason. There's no god but there's me. You can trust me. I don't want to lie. I can't live as a coward. I don't want to say goodbye. I want you to save me.

People that cause the human animal to be caged by its longing to define its own illogical feelings do so out of hatred. I haven't decided yet, just how much influence that sentimental aspect of my personality (that part that remembers how happy I was to be fooled by innocence as an ignorant child) has in affecting my decisions for the future. See, I HATE being human, I HATE reality and the way things necessarily are, I HATE stupidity and the futile lust for a propaganda-based hope (for god the savior, for a freedom from influence that never existed, for any of the pathetic conciliatory sanctions we learn to desire — luxury, "equality," "liberty," "happiness" in slavery). I see all these things in me, in my "friends" and enemies, in every single human being. I wish with all my heart to destroy humanity, to eradicate the consciousness that robbed us of our happy, simple life as primates or primitives and brought us so far into the valley of death that I can't even see the walls for all the writing. But I cannot, and I say this with genuine regret, kill everyone. Even if I had a thermonuclear arsenal it would still be a longer task than the amount of time it would take the superpowers to retaliate. So I am presented with two logical options to destroy that which I cannot tolerate: 1) I can lash out against the repulsive consequences of consciousness in myself while ridding myself of the world and the realities of systemized living by killing my self ("committing" suicide, doubtless a capital offense); or 2) I can contribute in a typically human insignificant way to the decline of human consciousness and its subjugation to routine, mechanical existence in its pitiable attempt to control itself and enforce logic where it sees imbalance by becoming an "ad wizard," casting spells of toothpaste, zit-creme and self fulfilling products (i.e. designer addictives) over the huge mass of fools that I despise, denying them free choice of anything but what useless distractions I maliciously concoct. I can die a fatalist, feeling there is no hope to better life or to significantly worsen it, or I can die feeling a sense of pride in the accomplishment of my small task in the killing of free will. Should I just give up, or should I live on to hatefully promote obedience to a system that is inescapable, working within that system, trying to fulfill the enslavement of huge target audiences to the empty values of that system?

The first god was life. Hunter/gatherers painting images of creatures they had killed and eaten as they were when they were alive. The only difference between the animal in its exciting, hunted form and its disappointingly motionless form after they had gotten off on making it change in the brutal ritual of “the kill” was the blood of the animal. One second it is alive. Its soul is within it as it runs from its death. The next second it is unalive; its soul has been spilled all over its death, splattered in streaks across its killers. They use it as war paint. Its taste is victory. The blood is the life. But...

Women bleed. Women exude life. By the turning pull of the moon, the life blood is shed. It is horrible. It is honored. It is feared. It is revered. The “mystery cults” are female cults because women are the mystery, the laws that govern them ancient and secret. And...

Men bleed. Men wound one another. Their blood is lost, spilled; their life is lost with each drop. Their piercing weapons become idols of power over both nature and women. With one another’s blood on their hands, their lives in one another’s hands, they form fast friendships and ranks. As they settle down from the chase they develop a regimented humanism.

Animal sacrifices now. The bloodier the better. The hunt and kill are not necessary now that we can live off the land. They are sport. They are spiritual. They are religion. Sacrifice is an Apollonian hunt and kill. The blood is shared by the community. Everyone’s life is made better by it. The animal’s soul is the god that is worshipped now. Eventually it becomes only several gods representing one species. Then even these get confused with man’s idea of himself — the hunter and the prey, the killer and the killed, shed blood together, their souls intermingle and ejaculate adrenalin bestially — spawning disgusting man-animals and animal-men... minotaurs and serpent-goddesses.

Human sacrifices now. Babies. Virgins. Creatures of interest to the mystery of menstrual blood. As a matter of consequence or coincidence weapons become specific phallic symbols and alters on breast-like mountanesque ziggurats and unexplored, suspicious (“something smells fishy”) ideas like the ocean are forever feminized. Eat this bread, for it is my flesh. Drink this wine, for it is my blood. You are what you eat. Mixtures of urine, breast milk, blood &/or menstrual blood &/or semen... soup is good food. In this bowl is the life of the tribe — we pass it on to you that you may live with all the strength of all our lives.

Sex and the hunt are one. Female deities are worshipped by sexual consummation, prostitution. Birthing and human sacrifice are both life giving.

Religion and the kill are one. They have always been one. Animal and human gods are worshipped by blood and life giving.

The blood, the life, the soul are one. The father, the son, the mother (later the “Holy Ghost”) are one. Isis, Ra, El are Israel. Unification of the Trinity is the root of monotheism. The idea of life is the idea of the spirit.

But...

You are not getting the message by worshiping examples of sacrificed animals. You must worship the sacrifice itself. And so we do. Akhenaton said so. Plato said so. The one perfect ideal over the unique individual examples. Marx said so. Lenin said so. If god were the ideal man, the state would be the ideal animal.

God. Gov’t. Like the Christians and the lions. Who always won?
Economic sacrifices now. Green symbols of power change between dirty hands without honor.

To say that man has conquered nature is a fallacy. We have only perverted (subverted) it until it is unrecognizable even to itself. Made of it a symbolic mask, an ideal science, given it infinite new names in order to feel some power over the environment, even if only over a substitute for it.

To say that man is dominant over animals is wrong. We still depend on them — we even use them for Platonic friends when our fellow man does not need us. We still want to call certain urges animal instinct. But what is instinct? Just left over conditioning from our species’s previous incarnation. We use it as an excuse to refuse more modern ideas of moral behavior.

To say that we still worship life is wrong. What we worship is the fear of death. The fear of bloodloss. The fear of impotence. The fear of our own mortality. The fear of our own humanity.

The other night I found my gun. In the stillness of the night I caught a quickening sight, saw your razors poised, glisten in the moonlight. My crosscut back like an old turtle shell, aim for the weak soft underbelly in a sudden needless slash. So you've given me your new love, wound by wound, to restore my strength. You laugh at me, you spit, "increscunt animi, virescit volnere virtus," only in pig latin. You pull your nose up at me and snort and giggle as I weep for some more spilled me. You tell me to hold my water. Tell you to hold your tongue.

Astronomy is not for the daytime, just as nothing is left for the daytime, all things are alive at night. All minds are vampires, gestating through lit hours that brand brains with searing concentration; come alive at night and fly, with no weight and no reflection. Tonight I am in love again. Yes, I hate you. She lights a candle. She says we'll argue until it burns out. She burns out long before, but I was the first one burned. In the end there's nothing left but a miserable puddle of wax, spreading like a rumor in the sudden darkness, hardening as it slows, growing cold and fleshy.

I knew I would not do this. I loved innocence too much. I would kill in the name of love. Kill those who threatened innocence. Don't you know? This is how to philosophize with an axe. Today we'll be cutting the cords, tomorrow we'll be breaking blue sky mirrors so we won't see ourselves, and facing them towards one another like far out to sea to make them seem embarrassed and futile, maybe later we may please the Masochists with, oh. . . .

Touch it! So hot! So supple. So simple. It burns me from the inside out. Not evil because the needle is dirty or because it is so deep, but evil because it only seeps the poison you learn to need.

I knew I would not do this, but god help you've pushed me to this. Lurch with a sucking sob and a gasp like the groan of an iron hull far out to sea, not the sound of rending just the sound of gentle bending, feel around a little in the hollow. Ouch, ouch, ouch, ooo, yes, yes

I pull out my heart like a bloody rosebud thumping beats it ticks its last. In a vile explosion in my fist it bursts like splitting lips. I can feel it reshaping, ooh, just like an erection — flesh unfolding, soft but taut, flesh unrolling and getting hot.

point this at you is all I know is defend myself from found my gun

<come, come, come, come, come> even innocents have little guns but mine is loaded with something fun

new stomach full of poison

Summerthoughtdaysalmostlost

The Jackov Union — studiers of eel genitals. Victor, Ian and the Liber-teens say “Free Association should not lead to sexual sublimation into work.” Look into the mirror eyes and meet: the Second Mind.

The Wednesday Society for Cocaine addicted, doodling, Cigar smokers. The Jung and the Restless; and “the Others.” Pour water on them, put them in chains, shock and magnetize the top fraction of the body. The talking cure: let the patient tell the symptom’s source. Progressive Aggression lies beyond the Pleasure Principle. Eros and Thanatos: Dionysus and Apollo. Constructive tombs.

“why do cows get mutilated by the most well-known, bug eyed, thin limbed aliens? Because bovines know the secret of the graze.” This joke told to Admiral Abe Lee by General Aria on the latter’s golden plus one birthday.

What do women want? Welcome to the “Dark Continent.” “I’m predicting rain,” said the Emperor whose birth had been forced when the signs had conjuncted with the most fitting lunar alignment; “the external and the internal are mutually reflective through the window pane of the body.” “Out out damned spot,” Caesar’s wife kicked the dog “I don’t want you to share your simpering pain with me! Stop humping my leg you repulsive phalo-centric egoless bestial hairball of the Id! Drool puddle of the demon whose dream we are! No — no, worse — worse! You feelthy commie, you red uniformed turd of a mind, you. . . NO! No, the worst! You capitalist, you slave, you. . . oh my god. The ultimate insult: You me. You’re, ugh, You’re just like me. . .”

In America we’ve outlawed slavery, totalitarianism and those nasty perfume factories the concentration camps. But we need to choose, for our very survival as citizens, we must consent to Work. To voting. To school, to endless years (two long, hormone flooded decades) of sublimation through boredom, socialization, patriotic socialization; national socialism.

Just try to explain to a Russian immigrant that we here in the you ass oy-vay do things dif. He afraid of cum stains on his permanent record, refuses to consult shrink and would rather cough blood for a month before resorting to institutional treatment. No, here there are no jack-booted men of the cloth clicking their heels three times and wishing to come to your home; no Soviet reps of Engsoc pounding on the door, hollering “open up, we know you’ve got a typewriter and have seen you buying paper and we have come to verify for our superiors the validity of your prophetic scribblings — I mean, your pathetic quibblings. Now open up or I kick in!” Here in Happyland you can do as you please, but if your doings displease, the media convinces the public you are representative of some neurosis irking Joe Average, which is actually induced by work. “Consult thy Uberego!” holler Bible-thumping would-be rulers. An anecdote: “Jesus, the reason for the sneezin’. ‘God Bless You’ as an ad campaign.” (Bless you Bently, Bartelby, Bless you Bless you nondescript) Used to be “It’s so moving!” and now it is “it’s so saleable! Such mass market appeal! Oh, wait until we show the groveling groundlings! They’ll go hog wild! We’ll be eating pork for weeks — I mean, weeks!”

“Slanty eyed Orientals come through the squinty eyed Eskimo-filled arctic where the month long daylight sky and the constant white snow so bright you could blind a cat just by showin’ it a postcard o’ the place like as if it were Medusa’s head. Yep, I figger they migrained up from Antarctica — I mean Atlantis — through South then North Amurikuh when the Earth’s crust done shifted like an orange’s skin around the mesosphere so juicy.”

Freud proposes to his wife beneath the table she squeezes his hand while ordinary people blow their brains out screaming their spouse’s name in a failed attempt to escape prison while on trial for robbing banks to break even long enough, open up a bookstore. The Second Mind screams “PAM!” is written on the left hand by the right-handed ordinary man.

The face of love: soft cheeks and a two-nostriled protuberance where only a tight hole should be, soft lips, toothless gums flap loosely about like two limp tongues, the face of love/look in her eyes/for there is peace/no nothing hides/within those eyes. Well I thought she looked like a lizard lamb Eddy, yes that’s right I’m talking to you, yes a lizard lamb, yes Eddy, pressed against the bars. “Who’s the baaa-hisss?” Hmm, Eddy? Riddle me that Mueller.

People’s Rights Or Livers Egalitarian. Yes I’d like some Eggs Benedict Arnold, or, no, could you make that Eggs Benedictine Monks... and some Livers Egalitarian... and a mobster under lass. Er, I mean — a globster under mass — no, wait — a glombster munder ass — murder ass... a... lob... ster... mun... un... der... a monster sunder sass... a clod, sir blundered class... a lot served from der crass... crash... no, wait! Please don't go yet. I promise to stop I'll stop really I promise. I promise. Really... you'll stay? Alright... Alright then what I'd like is... a... oh, I want the Eggs Bendy and the Livers Eagle (oh, is that legal? Afterall the eagle is an endangered species. Well, harrumph)... and I would also liiike... hm... let's see... I would... liiiiiiike... ah! Here we are! I would like the Lobby Sterling Grass — oh! No! I mean the — the — oh! oh what do you call it...? The...? Thee... oh, no not the “lobster under glass”... it's the... theeeee... (ends in gunshot)

Freud's exposed sinuses, the absorbent “monster” kept his mucous out of his mouth (put your mucous where your mouth is!), trembling hands.

“Family Pak” toilet paper conjures up a disturbing image of baboon lifestyle amidst Republican suburbs, the nuclear tribe huddled around the watering hole and...

Olympic cow tipping. “How much do you tip a cow anyway?”

The Face of Love: slapped cheeks, busted lips covered in blood, two black eyes...

Premonitions of an airplane with propellers

I as a parent personally became concerned...when...“Americans,” he said, “are born to drive.”...Just start in somewhere with nothingness and soon enough the truth will come around you might not recognize it as the truth until the cycle renews itself with the original nothingness the staircase drops out and only at the bottom do you see that uppermost step as the truth and maybe this time you’ll climb even higher...I don’t recognize that face in the mirror it’s not the face from the past it must be a strange premonition of an undesirable future the present is always the shadow of the future cast across the past...but the future man is invisible or more appropriately put he travels at the speed of light you can only ever see his back like in a Magritte painting of the whirling derby...I’m not myself, and if you want to talk to him you should have been on time a little sooner...Them Them who are They there are no they there is no them — No. I’ll tell you: secret men, enemies of all pleasure, agents of obedience they are the shadow men stretching out long across our present from symbols of our future, like a pubic delta pooling out from a christmas tree backlit by a plug-in angel ornament. Shadow men they are controllers by incommunicable means, that is visual fine but non-verbal, they rule human minds with dreams full of power-symbols bodies through vitamin-deficient discomfort, that is they affect the physical world by the same means the body and brain affect one another: subliminal suggestion, influence alone without measurable force. A slight fluctuation of magnetic current, a change in weather, a subtle sudden encounter, synchronicity, coincidence or serendipity. (let’s put the surrender back in...) I saw one of those electro-shadowmen once, these electrical shadows residual wake of movement a stirring in the ether almost imperceptible — out of the corner of my eye, out-of-focus impossible to stare straight into the shadow like looking at the sun in negative just as potent as an eclipse. It moved I noticed it but before I could look it was already gone. At night on a quiet suburban street beneath the yellow buzzing lamp on a patch of dull lawn sod of greenless, brownish-yellow nauseous color a huge black sky above a milky moon...I saw his shadow in arrival moving away and as I looked “Americans,” he said, “are born to drive.” I looked at him in dismay like an executioner’s axe passing over his head I saw the shadow fall across my friend’s face. The moment forced its way in with giddy brutishness cooing something about planting a flower...Here is the bloom: “I know I will meet my fate somewhere among the clouds above; Those I fight I do not hate, those I guard I do not love.” or “if all the sky were paper, and all the trees were pens, and all the oceans of the world ink...” it would still be insufficient to scratch out the injustice that has here been writ. The smell of sandwiches.

What's the Matter a Certain Nothing

He is burying his face in her shoulder his back lunging and undulating she is looking around like she is bored. Now they are not even human just these, two, pink, sacs. Thing-man is flapping about like a naked snake It-woman is bulging out of herself. She is the bulbous lower lip and he the stiff upper lip, gnawing up and down; she curling under, he biting down; chewing and gnashing. Puckering and kissing sloppy wet slurping. Slapping together these two lumps of meat, babbling on and on, curly hairs flowing from the corners of the mouth it is talking on and on unendingly on and on. At first it is grunting. . . soon moaning. . . finally this mouth is yelling and screaming the lips slapping and grinding together, both forming the words and floating on them like fat bloated dolphins slithering on violent waves. And the message is, it is, first grunting, soon moaning, finally yelling and screaming, the word is the message is "blah blah blah" the two pink lips are sobbing, the corners sinking down, " a boo hoo a boo hoo, a blah blah blah." Like two sumptuous, pink slugs; and now they are drooling. Pouting and blubbing: "blah. phucking. blah."

Kids

We held each other tight as a fist to keep the World Without from the World Within. No one understood us like we did, us kids. Desperately we glared into one another's eyes, we were there for one another when someone else made us want to cry, no one else cared. But the only authority we could give one another was sex and drugs and music and guns, mostly sex. We could allow things among each other that our parents never would, because we could. This is the freedom in a passing kiss. This is the tragedy of just being a kid.

And then the wolf howls of sirens...cue the wolves in blue uniforms with fangs of badges.

Hegelian dialectical reasoning is Apollonian — it deals directly with ideals, not only the ideal of the thing at its best (ala Plato), but also the thing at its theoretical worst, the opposite of that bestness. The combination of these two ideals, that is, by their synthesis, their averaging, their mediation, then theoretically represents their existence: the guessed midpoint of their measure is the balance at which they exist, the Golden Mean, the ground state they have fallen into naturally, and therefore their most natural state, their true being in reality.

Post-Hegelians were more interested in attempting to track this point down physically, or, in the case of those politically-minded few to follow roughly in his foot steps, to objectify the new, modernized Golden Mean onto an ideal society, a modernized Republic. Of those who sought to track the nature of being physically, excluding the existentialists as their own club, we immediately find remaining most outstanding Edmund Husserl. Husserl objectified nothing, he took nothing out of itself nor put it into anything. He denied the temptation to remove being from its subject and glorify it as an eternal form. He denied the dialectical view of understanding things by what they were not.

I see my robe. I know it is not going to attack me because I know it is not a panther, even though a panther is soft and my robe is soft. Softness, however cannot be taken out of either the panther or the robe in order to be shared with the other. The softness of my robe is my robe, and that of the panther is the panther. How I react to my robe, or to a panther, has nothing to do with that which cannot be denied constitutes the robe or the panther. My robe is soft in the same way that I breathe. The panther, on the other hand, is scary only in that way in which I am a clerk to my fellow co-workers. It is more my reflection on them, in them, which other people photographically capture and take away from me with them when they go home, that is the way in which they understand me. What they know is their reaction to me, as I know to avoid a panther by remembering one in my mind as a photograph of a panther pouncing towards me. They do not know what constitutes my physical being, unless they have touched me, and they cannot know my mental, my speculative being at all in any way. I know my robe. I know when I see its front that it also has a back, and an inside, and is even a little limp around the cuffs. I know it and will know it until there is no longer an it to know because, and this oppurtunes my terrified reaction, the robe is already all that it is and can never be anything more. It is a robe. I am a human.

The experience of its being a robe can no more be shared by me, or by any other robe, than can my experience of being a human be shared by any other human. And yet, in the same way I understand it to be a robe, I may be understood to be a human by others, and I may also understand others to be so. Humans share only the understanding of symbols, of routine behavior. They experience relation with strangers as humans only as deeply as sympathy, symbolic empathy. I relate only as much as a painting; offering only as much threat as a filmed tiger, offering only as much comfort as a reflection of a robe. The symbolism separates us. Keeps us to ourselves. And within the symbols we are soft, naked and empty. Our existence is Husserl within Hegel. Neither purely one nor the other, not more of one than the other, not one becoming the other, not even any particular synthesis of the two. Our perception is internally gelatinous and delicate, overly aware and sensitive, but stretched out beyond ourselves it is sheathed in a viscera of symbols which prevents absolute intimacy with anything external. I may pounce, but I can never be anything more than what I am.

I am not the midpoint between god and the devil. I am not the absence of tiger or robe. I am only this thing which I can never even rightly perceive as though through the eyes of another. I am this indescribable being which has no relationship to either eternity or nothingness. I cannot even rightly be described by any of these negatives. I am the uncertain living if. My death will be a certain then.

(another “alien=liberal” rant)

“Aliens are only the post-Atomic incarnation of fairies and goblins, the idea of the Other. That which exists Outside known reality, which can take you Beyond the extent of your desire for experience and bring you back transformed; as yourself, yet not your self. They exist at night, with the moon and the stars. They come from the darkness above, up in the third dimension, as angels, or from below as demons. ‘Their source of power must be advanced greatly beyond ours;’ of course, it was a Jewish scientist who rediscovered Time in terms of dimension, and also equated matter with energy so Eastern, so Zen. Aliens it’s assumed must have assembled megalithic monuments to themselves and to the permanence of Time, because early man couldn’t have done it without modern science, and because early men had to learn about the idea of Time from some Other, some alien, some civilizing savior, some god. Alien time travelers from our liberalized future, portrayed as abductors of farmers in the American mid-west, where the spread of Republicanism westward as manifest destiny and the spread of Oriental Communalism eastward as collectivist corporations clash; and these aliens can’t wait to abduct these white, fat, savage farmers for the purpose of performing medical experiments on them culminating inevitably in the insertion of an anal probe. Aside from the implications for infantile toilet humor stimulated by this account, the political motivation for its persistency lies in equating the mind with the ass hole; that is, that something too large for a certain aperture is being forced into it in order to open it up, theoretically to the extent that subsequent reinsertions of increasingly sized objects will meet with decreasing resistance from the offending receptacle. The equation by neo-NAZIs of blacks with homosexuals, and both with the Jews and Communists attacked by their predecessors, derives from a similar line of reasoning, stemming from the comparison of the looseness of the African hips when confronted with rhythm to the looseness of the rational Jewish mind when confronted with scientific fact.

“There can be no doubt that the alien is merely a representation of the newest xenophobia, that which comes not from around, but from above. A mental xenophobia from up in the head. A difference not in custom but in ideal.

“The first priests were doctors of course, who, by bringing news of an incurable malaise, brought into the minds of simple people the idea of a God who could be held responsible for the undesired death, but who ought not be blamed because the fact that he did not enforce death on everyone at once must prove that he is compassionate. Of course originally it was probably little more than fear which would drive people to accept God as blameless: fear of his suddenly striking down everyone at once, and some residue of this has remained. Many people, who lack intelligence great enough to follow even the simple logic of the former argument, often fall back on the initial response of fear. (Please refer to the book of Revelations and the multitude of jobless, militantly frustrated white males holed up in compounds around the American mid-west who expostulate on fear and apply its origin to the equation of god and government as the primary civilizing force.) Doctors, astronomers, priests, magicians. For every king there is a wizard and for every president of a corporation there is an economist and/or public relations spin doctor. Public servants and social workers, scientists and politicians. Who nowadays is attracted to these types of assitant occupations? Jews and liberals. Humanitarians who want to spend their lives bettering the lives of others and improving the potential living conditions of the future. Here is your terrifying Zionist conspiracy. Here are your aliens like cock-roaches crawling about within the wood work.

“And the kings, those people whom Machiavelli gave complete autonomy to when rationing out power; those people who feel the sciences need the motivation of the tyrannical Dark Ages in order to better learn the importance of merely bodily servitude; those people who feel the Jews need the concentration camps in order to better learn the worthlessness of their existence; those authoritarians and devils among men; those Sadists? What are they? Liberals? Champions of the Other? Are they Aliens who come from somewhere else to impose a cure? Yes and no. In literature they are: raised in the wilderness they come like animals to bring mankind back to the Right way, the savage way that exists Outside civilization, in Nature. They are heroes who are killed in combat rather than wimpy liberal martyrs. When they die in these classic works they are immortalized in Heaven, risen up into the stars. In real life however they are the opposite of the selfless liberal; in reality such men as would rule solely cannot ever be anything but glorified savages, confined within the world of symbolic communication and, later, bound by their own laws. They are like naked children throwing tantrums about how they deserve to get whatever they want, applying hypocritical rhetoric to the acquisition of their desires in order to get other people to take their clothes off (like the emperor dresses) and desire similarly to them. They must go through the world of communication in order to get into the minds of people; they must dress as liberals, in the liberal myth of the civilizer and the savior, in order to appear as a god, as the original and the future ideal. But they are original only in that they are savage, like original, unevolved man; and they have only as much future as the stupidity and lack of evolved enlightenment present in mens' minds will allow. Their hypocrisy becomes threadbare when they attempt to pass through the world of Symbols, the liberal Apollonian world of ideals. Garbed in furs and symbols of power they wield threatening tools and assume superior postures. They are idiots, trying to appear as great men by magnifying themselves with fun house mirrors. They destroy because they have the tools to, and have assumed that role, and thus destroy the image they had of themselves as natural born saviors. Real men know that there are no Great Men; there are only humble men who would unite everyone, and who deserve to be leaders, and selfish men whose only remaining expression of self is the destruction of others.

“Fear government only as much as it is filled by these types of self aggrandizing tyrants. Do not fear government clerks. Their humble ideology is as inevitable as death, and taxes as they say. Fear aliens, with gray (not black, not white) skin and large, mechanical lens-like eyes, only so far as you see them conquering and destroying. Remember this of “subversion:” a sunny day grows out of a rainy one so slowly it seems merely to be a corruption of those elements present, but it is not a destruction of either rain, or clouds, or day. The future is going to come, machine augmented, soft essence and all, like it or not. There is no point clenching up. It will only hurt for the first minute.”

“Whatever Happened to the Revolution?”

Hippies rebelled against Ozzie and Harriet. They grew their hair long to literally fly in the face of the buzz-cut, high strung, tightly wound conservative regime under which they grew up. They rebelled against their parents who had fought a war and had raised their kids to be good God- and Communist- fearing little soldiers. They adopted Eastern collectivism and existential degeneration of Self, upon which the West, and most significantly America, was founded.

Their children rebelled against them, shaving their hair and reclaiming the legacy of Ayn Rand and Adolf Hitler, adopting the doctrine of capitalism — to which only the law of the wild could be applied — as well as social Darwinism and the belief that poor people were poor because they deserved to be, survival of the fittest. The interest in movies, philosophy and liberal arts temporarily fueled by the hippies’ anti-war passivity gradually began to revert to the pursuit of the oldest national pastime: sports. Music remained liberal spirited, but was rendered impotent; it ceased evolving and began to stagnate in the white male teen “angst” of jobless generation Xers. Sales were up, but morale in the wake of Jimmy Carter and Deep Purple was low.

The hippies were destroyed by one word. Always prone to guilt, some Republican spy in the field of psychology finally invented a single word by which to invoke that guilt suddenly in the hearts of all American liberal parents at once. That word is “codependent.” All hippies, all liberals, everyone with a sense of curiosity greater than their sense of self, anyone who does not assert themselves over another person, anyone who admits to needing someone to be with them to make boring, lonely life worth living, is, by default, “codependent.” Don’t bother imputing any serious meaning to it, because there isn’t any. Like the first civilizers who created language are immortalized by early civilizations as gods, so too does anyone who invents a new word assume godlike power over people, and godlike appearance in their eyes. Who invented this word, then; who shall be like unto a new god? Whom have we to thank for destroying the motivating spark within the hippie movement as it flickered slightly in the breeze of middle age? Like Yahweh our benefactor remains unknowable, shrouded in the mists of their own enigmatic generosity.

Surely we capitalist punks ought to thank somebody. Afterall, without this word working in the minds of our parents, how could they have been so preoccupied with themselves as to have neglected our immature greed, letting it grow and grow to bourgeois proportions? Are all punks not just spoiled little princes and princesses, thumbing their pierced noses at the “high society” of adult contemporary muzak, ferns and sweaters? Without little programs “helping” our parents to weaken themselves, how could we have been left to grow so arrogantly wild? We should thank somebody at least for all this, this person who invented this word, who ought to be like unto our God. But wait, I forgot. We may have no god. We do not need a god. We’ve got our all important personal freedoms: the freedom to have unprotected, underaged sex, to smoke cigarettes and drink alcohol, to wield lethal guns against one another over minor behavioral inconveniences. Hooray! Why would we want to thank anybody when we are living in such a Utopia? And it is a Utopia. We are free to grow bitter and selfish, as we wish; we are free to blame it all on our weak parents and the failed economy and pop culture from the seventies.

But I am different enough to recognize this. I am distant enough from the wake of my generation to be able to recognize the very absence of gratitude they do not even recognize the possibility for the existence of. And why? I know people who are older than I, closer chronologically to the Punk rock movement which drives Generation X, and people younger than I who could experience it only in its ripple — “Grunge.” All these people are more self-confident, more self-assertive than I. Why? When I knew my parents, as a child — before self-consciousness with “codependency” and self-loathing with their own hypocrisy drove them to divorce — they were Ozzie and Harriet. They moved to the South, my father worked and neglected my mother, engaging in Libertinism behind her back, while she cooked and cared for me. The resentment I would later come to feel for my mother’s weakness, the weakness that would lead her to feel guilty upon hearing the word “codependent,” I did not grow up harboring. I was under her wing rather than growing up a wild weed, and I loved her shade. When finally I did recognize her as weakened I saw exactly by whom. I saw my father standing above her awkwardly trying to emulate the behavior of his own father, like a good little soldier; and I saw the disembodied voice uttering the word which crippled my mother, “codependent, codependent, codependent.” I saw the cycle my father engaged in, the proud paternal cycle my generation will undoubtedly adopt, and in the wake of feminist liberalism expand to include the passing of neurosis from mother to daughter, as utter nonsense; and I saw the word “codependent” as utter nonsense. It followed that the weakness of my mother, and the weakness of the entire hippie movement, was only nonsense because it resulted from the imposition of nonsense. Why should I turn into my grandfather rebelling against something which has not yet been allowed to run its full course and attempt to prove its validity? Just because hippies lost their steam simultaneously to the fall of the Soviet Union doesn’t mean all communism ought to throw in the towel. I, personally, am holding out either for the fall of China or proof of the Right wing nuts’ outlandish government conspiracy theories and religious cataclysms; whichever, I figure, comes first. Only then will I concede and get a self-supporting, resentful job in the capitalist, “richer than thou” system of my peers and my parents’ perpetual superiors.

So I have grown my hair long and intend to keep it that way. I have let my beard grow in honor of the tribal elders. I am interested in movies, philosophy and the liberal arts and loathe sports. I consider advertising an evil corruption of good, old fashioned propaganda. I trust no one but love anyone who comes near me. I get beaten up and feel that much prouder to be in the position to be so. And people generally don’t like me. I am too rebellious against the pseudo-communism of most of my teachers to be recognized academically, and too shy socially to be recognized for my contributions. My dream is to make money by selling shirts that, rather than making the body into a billboard for some beer, gun or sport, advertise a certain type of belief in the form of a memorable slogan. Because a war of rebellion was considered by Lenin to be the only socially acceptable form of war, and because war naturally appeals to my savage idealed brethren, I expect my most popular offering will be: “Whatever happened to the Revolution?”

The Birth of Consciousness

Let's go back to before the gods. To before Atlantis and the concept of Time. To before the birth of the idea of zero. To before when the image determined the state. To before one opinion had conquered another. To before the time when knowledge was founded. To before there were ever events to remember. Back to the time of omnipotent doubt. Not just doubt of sense knowledge. Not just a-gnostic doubt in the eternal mysteries. Not just doubt in the solidity of self. Back to the time when the world was new. Back to the time of the garden of Eden — the one that existed unfilled by ruins. The one that existed before the birth of minds. The one that existed before any knowledge. Before even the suspicion of knowledge. Before death made god necessary. Back before the first death, before birth, to the warm womb, to the wormwood. Back to the time of vague infant dreams. Back to the time before ideas had forms. Before art. Before language. Before ritual. Before motion had to have a goal. Let's go back to before the beginning. Back to the time when there were no icons. Back to the time when there were no lies. Back to the time when nothing needed to make sense. Back to our ignorant innocence. Let's go back to the very first thought. Examine its form, its purpose, its cause. Back to the time of the birth of consciousness and see where it all went wrong.

A was apologizing to B again and B was getting disgusted. It seemed to B that if A were truly sorry, A would simply quit the problematic behavior. Of course A would never imagine this possibility seriously, because A defined Aself with all such behavior, and actually enjoyed the behavior as an act of self definition; A was really only sorry that the behavior seemed to have to offended B so much. B's offense at the behavior was similarly the product of a will for self definition, and thus as necessary to B as the initial behavior was to A.

But tonight was just like every other, and promised a million more to come. B was confronted with a choice between the establishment of an undesirable routine or a sudden moment of unpleasant action. B chose the latter and hurt A.

A, now hurt, required an explanation in order to excuse B's behavior. B cited that A could offer no explanation for A's initial behavior that so annoyed B, and added that, rather than hide a lack of sufficient reason behind an obsequious apology, it is better to simply flaunt it openly. A, adequately ashamed by B's equation of B's hurtful and A's merely annoying behaviors, acquiesced and apologized again to B, this time for apologizing earlier. A then promised to never behave in the annoying way again.

Then B held A in B's arms.

We ask ourselves, what does A get from B that makes A willing to sacrifice a portion of A's persona for B? Because we, beings of the highest possible education and unimpeachable life experiences, know that love is the act of giving a portion of one's "soul" (i.e. ego) over to another, and furthermore expecting them to reciprocate in some proportional way. So are we to believe that the behavior of A in question to B is roughly equal in value to A as the behavior of B in making A suffer is to B? A loves the shoulder A goes to cry on after being hurt by B. A wants this shoulder to be B's, and believes that B loves A if B offers the shoulder.

But it is never to be believed that for A the hurtful behavior itself is the reward. The act of B altering A is not the goal implied by A's overabundant apologizing. Rather, if any act, it is the act of comforting, of nurturing, which follows that is the object of A's desire. This is the tenderness of the relationship which we must understand as appealing to A. Forgiveness exists so that A may reconcile the imbalance inherent within the relation shared with B. For B has power, that is action; and to B behaviors are the only aspects of consequence or import. But A on the other hand gives power, that is loves love; to A it is the existence of B that is attractive, regardless of, in fact despite, B's behavior. The tender, comforting softness of B's pure, naked Being, revealed and shared only after an act of catalyzing violence, completes and fulfills A.

Nor is this complementary, reassuringly womb-like state of existence specific to B. In other words, whereas B chooses mates out of desire for compatible (or sufficiently malleable) behavior, A is capable of feeling the same amount of affection for whomever opens up and takes A in. A loves only the general act of feeling IN love, and any relationship A would construct would, ideally, only be a home for this single, all-encompassing emotion of selflessness. B loves specific, personally pleasurable acts, shared with or individual of A (or anyone else able to perform those acts).

When B hurts A it is for power over A's behavior, over A's personality, but what A truly loves, the closest A comes to having power over B (affecting B if only by passivity), is the consequential moment of guilt when B nurtures A, essentially cleaning up the mess B made of A and taking absolute responsibility for both B and A; negating A's personality as A desires. Just as B of A, A loves B's humility, B's shame.

Love is

Love is humiliation, disgrace and abasement. It is the weakness that people suffer to share with one another. It is the embarrassment of the naturally proud heart by exposure of its need for supplementation. Love is ruination of the sacrosanct, immediation of the private, subjugation of the personal. Love is the object which makes all other objects subject, it is the Lord of Hosts, the law of all gods. It is the ideal that makes all selfish ideals nauseatingly imperfect and self-conscious. Love is murder of the self. Love is death.

The silliness of waiting for death overcame the man, and he cried.

Empathy is not a form of communication. It is an emotion. It is not a language, it is a tone of voice. The brain is a radio. Man had figured out how it works, but not why it broadcasts what it does. Man knows the meaning of the machine which he is, but not its message. Its message is its beliefs, its attitudes, its emotions. Its words are pain and pleasure, action and sleep, passion and indifference. These convey nothing. They are only the sound of the machine working.

In two dimensions all waves are flat. There are no valleys and no peaks. Only in three dimensions can events be viewed as linked by way of emotion. Emotion touches one day in linear time, then another day ten years later, tying the two events together in an invisible way which would seem absurd if viewed only in two dimensions.

But even in three dimensions there are energy fluctuations which cannot be understood. They may be felt, but not empirically interpreted. Because they are not a message. Just as seemingly unrelated events may be crests and troughs of a higher energy level wave, emotions are themselves the ripples of larger dimensional oars.

Enough. The point:
psychic phenomena is a fourth spatial dimension emotion; not a 3D form of communication.

Attempting to reconcile the proletariat with self-motivated action produces as many paradoxes in logic as does attempting to reconcile capitalism with any form of self-limiting morality. This schism then, between the (democratic) State and the (Judeo Christian) Church can be seen as the cause not only for Socialist atheism (an apparent contradiction, as the ultimate external locus of control, God, is a stronger motivator for behavior within beauracracy than internal desire for class-betterment) but also the subsequent move of the Church towards open support of the Right (also a contradiction, as the seminal liberal institution was established to render all men equal before god, reducing kings to the level of peasants, rather than merely serving the elite and oppressing the underclass as Marx asserted).

I seem to side more with the pacifistic initial church than with the militant overthrow of the existing evil. I believe, like the Jews appear to, like Ghandi believed, that Victimization brings one closer to God than does Struggle, as the Germans (both Marx and Hitler) have always believed. It seems to me that the idea of geist was brought back to both Germany and France during the Crusades by the Knights Templar, but not from the Zionist cults they encountered, as some historical conspirarists claim. Rather the notion of achieving God through struggle, through self-assertion, though it is present in the Jewish mystical Kabbalah in a highly symbolized, systemized form, derives more directly from the philosophy of the Muslims; in particularly their notion of the jihad. The Crusades themselves were a jihad, and the Inquisition was as well — against the gypsies (the Jewish pseudo-aristocracy) and against the Jews themselves. The Holocaust was an institutionalized jihad, the product of Nazi combination of both Apollonian and Dionysian poilitics. Even the class struggle may be seen as a kind of jihad; the god of the morally right fighting for the underpriveledged and the god of darwinian lex talionis fighting for the upper class — like Yahweh versus Allah. This does not end in One Big Union. It ends in the same ruin wars always end in, simply (at best) installing a new dictator.

Society grows strong through sublimation of sexual desire. Humans build with the energy we would otherwise be using to procreate. We work jobs that we tell ourselves satisfy our ids and we buy objects onto which we can further deceive ourselves by misplacing our lusts. Our economy is based on the fetishism of commodities, all carnal craving being dumped on items mass produced for our dependence. Sex more than merely sells. Sex is sales.

Furthermore it can, and must, be said that a capitalist economy grows strong through a very specific perversion of natural amorous impulse — that being the Oedipal complex. The forcing of sexual drive into a world of exclusively Apollonian symbols makes it nearly invisible, but seeing the objectified roles and then the physical objects used as the receptacles for the displaced ethos of these roles allows the truth behind the facade of financial self-motivation to be publicly stripped bare.

First there is Daddy, who must be overcome. Traditionally this implies murder, although “progressive” historians (those who are liberal with the facts) raise some interesting points regarding the origin of this practice as merely metaphorical. Oedipus, they claim, was an early title of male nobility; making Oedipus Rex an unaccounted for redundancy. As was the practice, Oedipus as prince would simply overcome Oedipus as king by replacing him. Although in its oldest forms this may very well have been a less civil and altogether more savage ritual, involving the young son actually facing his aging father on a field of battle to the death. Either way it takes the punch out of the myth to say that Oedipus did know he was overcoming his own father.

In modern society this can be seen as simple enough originally, a son following in the vocational foot steps of his father and, in the case of a family-owned business, inheriting it when his father no longer desires the responsibility of managing it and wishes to retire. Nowadays it is a little more complex, the generation of the son being expected to earn more on average than the generation of the father, without the necessary tradition of direct vocational lineage.

This may be seen as the individualistic promise of America: to make every peasant a king (as opposed to the collectivist reality in the Soviet Union, where every king was made a peasant). It was this promise of economic opportunity that so appealed to immigrants when corporations began to form and allowed foreigners into our borders to fill the undesirable factory jobs here for less pay than unionized U.S. workers would accept. It is also this holier than all mentality that can be seen at the root of many issues of American aggression — domestic, national and international.

To begin with each new situation demands conquering, so it is no longer so simple for man to overcome his role once; he must constantly be bettering himself and tirelessly striving for absolute victory. The freedom they hope to gain as an ultimate reward can never be achieved. If it could it would mean society is finished being built, and society may never be finished being built. So partially employees must realize that they will work their entire lives without ever owning the company. Men in a capitalist economy feel that they sacrifice their creative energies enough at their jobs without the slightest allowance of negativity that they may then come home and corrupt their domestic affairs with their remaining, soured, destructive energy. They treat their wives just like their bosses treat them (in other words: badly) because they feel working ordains them the “king of their castle.”

We expect a certain amount of oppression as well by figures in authority based on the same premise. They worked hard to come to power and they may be excused if they then blow off steam by abusing that power. Police brutality, corruption ex officio and masculine military mentalities are all expressions of the resent felt by people as they struggle upward through hierarchies of command without being granted any satisfactory catharsis along the way. And because most people would do the same thing in the same situation, rationally sympathizing with their abusers, bosses are held under-accountable for their violations of human rights and of unspoken laws of moral, ethical, civil behavior. Authority figures, especially within frustratingly bureaucratic institutions like respectable government, are simply expected to dictate. If they fail at this then the public chides them for not doing the job for which they are paid.

On an international scale our belief in individual sovereignty most frequently steers us into the realm of aggressive patriotism. If a country doesn’t agree with our policies — that is, if a third world puny refuses to allow big businesses in to line the pockets of the rich already in political power while making the poor essentially corporate slaves — we accuse them of anti-patriotic sentiment, anti-American sentiment, Communist sentiment, and dub them a threat to national security. The CIA and the army rush in and install a puppet dictator, and the media back home proclaims it yet another Holy victory for the ways of freedom, Democracy and humanitarianism. American machismo awarded by the repression of lust into labor and consumerism knows no boundaries. National geographical borders it sends spies across, and economic opposition it sends soldiers to overcome. Father knows best.

As for Mommy, she is to be claimed. Insofar as the original tradition dictated murder as the proper method for overcoming daddy, it dictated sex as the proper method for objectification and ownership of mommy. Despite the theatrical profession to the contrary this patently does not mean that one's own mother is the object of one's sexual desire. Rather it means that one learns to admire and to attempt to emulate the relationship of their parents when one is old enough to begin to enter into sex-based relationships. As son becomes father, wife becomes mother; as son is father, all women are the same. Lastly, and most importantly, as all women are potentially mothers, all wives become property of husbands. What is learned along with the desire to replicate the behavior of your same sex parent is the desire for someone who behaves toward you as you see your opposite sex parent behaving toward your same sex parent. In the case of Oedipus, and of ancient societies, a submissive mother being dominated by a strong father.

The mother may be seen to represent Otherness, ergo — that which is not what is. Insofar, for example, as we live in a patriarchy, we do not live in a matriarchy. It is always that which we are not that we desire; and, for its own survival, which we must never become nor be completely satisfied with by possessing. The mentality at work here is one of perpetual desire without fear of threat. It creates a straw man to be set up on the horizon and knocked over by our progress towards it, only to be replaced by a new straw man on the new, expanded horizon, towards whom we then aim our expectations of self. There is the expected, and beyond that, the ideal.

Capitalism strictly dictates monogamy as the norm for expression of physical desires, of true sexual impulses, while on the other hand provides as the ideal a polygamy of products to want with poverty and to ultimately impregnate with your sense of self through the assertive action of purchase. On a domestic level this creates a situation whereby two types of women may be allowed to exist, and none besides. The Saint and the Slut, or alternately, the Wife and the Mistress.

The wife represents Otherness conquered, singularly claimable; she is the woman become mother by the initial assentment of her prince to the throne. Belongings arise to replace her role. TV raises children these days, while microwave ovens cook dinner and pornography satisfies male hormones. Belongings get treated like trash that is never really satisfying, never fulfilling, and mommy gets treated like trash. Harshly used and thrown away. She can never rationally hope to be enough. Each new situation that demands he conquer it requires the acclamation of a new bride.

Which leads ultimately to the role of the mistress — Otherness unconquerable. The implication of a wife who can never be married, who can never be made into the submissive role of mommy, is that the man can achieve a million thrones, conquer a million situations, and still only need one woman: the one whom he can never have. The role of the mistress may have always existed, and as far as feminists obsessed with asserting the manipulative, influential might of women are concerned it has, right back to temple prostitutes, wild women and nature goddesses; but it could also easily be seen as increasingly prevalent in modern times: the result of learning from the economy itself, which presents the role of Otherness on a national scale.

A successful capitalist economy provides the equivalent of the mistress, in other words the perpetually desirable mommy, through its products. Typical of a capitalist economy are two integral components to perpetual desirability.

The first is that the product must never fully satisfy the customer. If it did why would they ever again give their money to the company that made it? On the contrary it must be the very image of that which is thought to be perfect and yet manage to fail in some small but critical regard of performance or appearance. The most obvious and apprehendable example of this sales strategy is the automobile, the pride of the capitalist economy. The car is perfect in every regard, representing travel and therefore freedom, the American rugged ideal, as well as physical prowess and sexual appeal. It falls short only in its dependence on depleting, increasingly expensive fossil fuels. Like a drug addict, without gasoline the car becomes useless.

The second method of perpetual desirability is induced shame. Advertisements convince consumers that no matter what they do they will always fail to meet certain standards, usually the same standards as the products claiming to supplement human shortcomings tend to lack. Objectification of the human body creates a desirable ideal body, used by whatever product it promotes; how can mommy compete with this? The promises made by this body are all of reimplementation of the hormonal drives of puberty, its features always augmented so as to be virtually bursting with vigor and fertility. All products, no matter how trivial their true function, fulfill the social role of mistress through advertising; they all promise youth, beauty, strength, love. Anything the consumer may have already lost, and even if they haven't then they are made to doubt its permanence in the form of it they currently own.

On the international scale one finds the physical process behind this static, ideal mistress. Production of consumer goods keeps her alive, and therefore nothing must impede the process; it is her health. For the good of this health, production is moved to where it can be done the most efficiently, that is, with the most submissive and obedient labor available, and where it can be done the cheapest, that is, where the people are the poorest and expect the least: the third world. As mentioned earlier neo-colonialism is the meat and potatoes of modern capitalism. It is not entrepreneurship, nor the sovereign individual. It is cheap foreign slaves laboring to manufacture breaking, plastic gizmos for sale in America, where demeaning, objectifying advertisements convince citizens that flashy, colorful packaging, a brand name and a big price tag mean quality whores. Mommy is the third world, fixing dinner for big business. The American middle class is mommy, buying what it is told to, so proud to be desired exclusively by corporations and so jealous of its competition — both the rich whose glut it admires and the poor who it envies every scrap from the economic table.

The creation of an idealized economic mistress to substitute for the original Otherness of Mother Earth usually results in a conflict of interests between the two. Corporations are responsible for producing the majority of garbage that slowly chokes the planet to death, and are entirely responsible for the significant pillaging and depletion of her finite natural resources; but individual consumers refuse to either recognize this sin of their father's or to accept responsibility for their part in the waste chain: condoning the depletion by buying its result, and condoning the littering by contributing those same goods to the dump as soon as they inevitably malfunction.

Capitalism is entirely dependent on these roles continuing on as human psychology dictates they will, so long as they are satisfied. And as far as sublimation goes capitalism has a more promising future now than communism ever did. It produces more of the same corrupt mentality, "work is freedom," and shows no sign of weakening sales any time soon. The more dissatisfied people are with their jobs or the disparity of sexual authority at home the more they shop. If you don't like what you have, buy more of the same and hope that it's different. When in doubt, binge.

But where does all this lead? Binging leads to fat, and it is true well-fed people never lead revolutions. But does America's fat equate with success? Are people in the middle class of the first world as happy as they are obese? In general they are not. They cannot afford to achieve a maximum amount of wealth with which any rational person would be satisfied. Rather they are driven to the point of psycho-somatic starvation by the idealized need to consume more.

In what type of society would it be necessary to deny ideological loyalty and stimulate quantitative uncertainty and imbalance? A society bent on dissatisfied, greedy citizens? In what type of society would it be necessary to promise everyone kingship? A society breeding better dictators? In what type of society would it be necessary to focus the national economy on production and accumulation? Is that society not an Empire? Are we not headed toward a world-wide empire dictated by the most successfully selfish of the rich? Are we not going to live in a tower of Babel whose foundation is our own detritus, burying the third world and Mother Earth, obsessed with the increasing incomprehensibility of our own necessary self-deception?

As much as capitalism represents Oedipal assertion of self over father and mother alike, communism represents the revenge of traditionally acquiescent Otherness. blah blah blah...etc.

Insofar as the mother is traditionally the weaker sex, who exists solely to be conquered and impregnated, a capitalist economy provides millions of products to consume, to desire, to ultimately impregnate with your sense of self through the assertive action of purchase. What you are as a consumer the product can never be, or else, if it were already a part of your self, why would you want it? So the mother is the other, which can never be allowed to be.

Capitalism is like Islam in that it promotes polygamy. It is unlike Islam in that it does this economically rather than physically. It strictly dictates monogamy as the norm for the expression of physical desires, of true sexual impulses, while on the other hand provides a million million products to want with poverty and wed with exchange for funds. Rather than actually meet any of the consumer's needs, also, these items must never fulfill them. If one product were to do all our work without breaking why would anybody buy anything else ever again? On the contrary it is necessary that advertisements must constantly assail our sense of self-worth to convince us we are not good enough if we don't own this or that while every day products automatically reduce themselves to non-recyclable refuse.

Belongings replace mommy. TV raises children these days, while microwave ovens cook dinner and pornography satisfies male hormones. Belongings get treated like trash that is never really satisfying, never really fulfilling, and mommy gets treated like trash. Used and thrown away. So women adopt the strategy employed already by the ocean of belongings they see usurping their role in society. They tease. Just as products tease, always breaking down at just the pinnacle moment of their usage, always too expensive and needing more adaptations, costing more, needing more sacrifices made to them before they put out, so women begin to behave as have men forever; desiring male respect and a reassertion of the worth of their role. But males do not respect one another ladies, except in regards to quantity of property or skill used to amass such, so why would they respect you if you became them? The role of the Other has always been one of acquiescence. It was never meant to fight back. But if it does it must simply be put down that much further. Its ways of femininity and weakness may never be accepted if the economy is to remain strong and erect. If America is to become an empire, like Britain before it, it cannot rightly begin to pity the nations or the people it conquers and rules.

Address by Chairperson Pushy Galore to the Convention for Worldwide Communism (formerly Tess Elation and the Symposium for Global Socialism, respectively)

“The bourgeoisie has always been inclined to homosexuality. It is a simple matter when considered in its proper historical context. One cannot, as a man, after realizing that what you admire in others and what you love about yourself is power, go easily into a world populated by women. One must both abuse women for their wanton weakness and seek the physical company of fellow strong men. Likewise with women, who, after realizing that what they value in their own behavior is the gentleness of love, cannot enjoy being abused by rough male hands. They naturally prefer the same companions in regards to one expression of intimacy and trust as they have for all their others, and the proximity and patient selflessness of their understanding sisters must win out in the end. If one can afford to control one’s behavior, that is, to use symbols to alienate carnal cravings, to essentially mutate the will into something other than its natural, border-less state, if one budgets and prioritizes and segregates traits, one winds up locked in a room with all like-minded people who aided in walling themselves in.

“If people appear to one nowadays to be more openly homosexual while the bourgeoisie are becoming more morally staunch, then one is only seeing the carnivalesque surface of things. First of all, to actually want to become socially gay, that is, to “come out of the closet” in order to broaden one’s pool of potential sexual partners to the extent of the entire gay community (or, insofar as ramifications ripple, to the limits of respectable society itself), one must have already internalized sexist and untrue ideas of gender roles.

“Gay men frequently adopt trite contrivances of fragile femininity, as they understand it, while lesbians often adorn themselves with symbols of brutality and potency in a vain, misguided attempt to appear masculine. Both do this out of respect for what they perceive the values of the opposite sex to be, and a clown-like contempt for the conventional standards for stance in their own sex. Both admire one another more than they do themselves. But insofar as the roles they swap and adopt are gender roles, that is socialized products of historical cultural biases, rather than naturally occurring differences in the sexes, they are not rebelling against the dominant paradigm. If Z equals the sum of all Xs and all Ys, and 1%X became Ys, and 1%Y became Xs, the total of X and Y would not fluctuate. X and Y would still be the accepted gender based standard bias. Masculine as macho, feminine as dainty.

“These roles are the creation of the bourgeoisie to differentiate the hierarchy of men and women and to keep themselves secure within the behavioral confines of their strata. It was roles like these that originally set them aside from savages. Within this structure then, they gave themselves leave to behave as savages. The savage isn’t savage if it is only a savage symbol of savagery; it is only a symbol, only a game. Power was only a game, and love only a game. The bourgeoisie were born winners, while the rest of the uncivilized world was born to lose to them. So they imposed their culture, their sex roles, their hierarchy, on everyone. And now that homosexuality is not merely occurring among the unpublicized, the untouchables, but running rampant in the well-mediated lower middle class and upper strata of the poor, the wealthy hide their original sins and perversions behind ever-heightening fences. They remind people of the Roles, despite the homosexuality; “remember the roles that make you civil. Nature is what we say she is; Sodomy is abnormal.” But this, like anything else on its scale, should not be treated like a game.

“Homosexuals are one of the constituencies of under-represented minorities taken for granted by politically liberal institutions as being supporters of the left. But is this their natural inclination, or is it merely the product of alienation from the bourgeoisie whom they unknowingly emulate? They advocate issues of interest to the poor because they feel abandoned by the rich themselves. But are they? They certainly have more in common with the rich than do blacks or foreigners. Gays take up issues important to the community because for the first time in history they have a community of their own. But are they as unified as trade and labor unions, or as necessarily bound to their neighborhoods as those too poor to move away from them? On the contrary they chose their situation, at least chose to live “out of the closet,” and thus feel proud of themselves. It is not the group itself that gives them strength, it is their own ability to decide to publicly join the group. In bourgeois gender roles, in defiance of being shunned economically by the bourgeoisie, homosexuals continue to behave as the bourgeois have always behaved. Proud of themselves individually. Using one another for pleasure and then discarding them. They are rich in sense of self.

“If gays are not republicans it is only because republicans are not themselves openly and acceptingly gay. It is not that republicans aren’t gay, because they invented it. It is just that they are too deeply hidden in the anal-retentive roles that first begat homosexuality to be revealed. If gays are liberal it is only because of convenience. Many liberals are gay, but to truly be a liberal is to shed all the facades of those who oppress the underprivileged. This includes gender roles. They must be cast off rather than merely swapped, sloughed rather than enhanced, forgotten rather than improved upon.

“The most telling link between modern homosexuals and their bourgeois ancestors is the shared border of homosexuality and bondage/sadomasochism. What any human who respected the rights of the oppressed, who cherished their body as the sacred vessel of work would turn their back on in curious disgust, the sexually liberated community embraces as traditional taboo. Such physical expression of, not only sexism, but any system of ritualized oppression, can only be traditionally taboo among those who practice sexism and ritualized oppression; the rich must, for their survival, hide the nature of their game. The poor have never practiced anything but humility, and games of power whereby human beings interact as mere quantities of pain and pleasure are as alien to them as their practice of humility is to the rich. To the rich, poverty is savagery. To the poor the true savagery is the brutality of imposed roles and the anesthesia of quantifying the experience of suffering. No true liberal would ever adopt this savage game of bourgeois roles and bourgeois values.

“To put it all in numerical terms in order for it to be translatable to the rich and sheltered: there are about as many homosexual liberals percent as there are rich humans percent. And of these there are only as many who are sadomasochists percent as there are aristocrats percent among the bourgeoisie.”

My poetry, I don't like. It is heartless it seems to me, so distracted and at once pedantic. If it had more heart it couldn't rhyme, if it had less mind. I need more heart, less mind. I need to fall in love, to go insane. But everything makes such perfect sense the way it is. There is a place for everything. My place is in my bed, alone, in the darkness. My heart's place is over the phone, inside it when she calls, but otherwise with her, in her world, wherever that is. And my poems are just little stories I tell myself to keep myself company, waiting for my heart to return, in her body, waiting for her to return.

I hate my poems. I hate them. I hate the words I have filtered down enough, through enough metaphors, like my poems are coffee in a machine, but not percolating. Like jokes that everyone gets but that no one laughs at. Just bad puns.

My least favorite type are ones that serve no purpose other than therapy of their author. Ones that no one would ever want to read because they are really just transcriptions from a psychiatric session. After those there are the poems that no one would want to read because they are just preaching: this is the way it is versus this is the way it should be. I wish I had the strength to stop writing such crap. I cannot be a poet until I start writing poems that I would want to read. Which is difficult, since I really don't like poetry at all, and actually loathe it as a medium. It is a lazy person's way of writing.

I feel that most people are just frustrated with me, as they see me as stubbornly unreachable, which I am. I hide behind things like my poems and my pride, and I hide my heart behind my mind. So long as everything means something and so long as everythingness means nothingness and so long as irony is the only rule and so long as every-nothing rhymes, I'll be fine, I'll be fine.

I can't take my mind off me, either, and put it onto someone else, as I easily do and ardently with my heart. If I gave away both heart and mind, where would I be left? How could I survive without my pride, the only that keeps the world away? I itch and shake as I write this. I am obviously on the right track.

But I don't want to care. I don't want to be pursuing anything about myself, I don't want to go in there.

So I write empty poetry, in the darkness which I fear, to remind myself I am not alone, to lie to myself, to lie to others, to tell other people they are not alone, to tell other people I am not alone. But I don't write them over the phone, to her, so they are lies.

My poems are lies. I hate them. I wish I didn't write them. I wish I could stop writing altogether.

Pedantic letter to my acquaintances

Once, in Irina's sun warmed bedroom, naked before her and she before me, but we two being physically incompatible (that is, being able of course to impose, but never to merge entirely; compatible only as the cheek fits the shoulder, or, alternately, as the knuckles fit the cheek; compatible only as the fingertip, guiding the scalpel, pierces the abdomen, or as the fingertip pulling the trigger enters the forehead as a bullet, where the bullet penetrates the skull.) I fell into myself.

I don't remember much about the day itself, nothing really. She was there, and I, in our sanctuary together, in our secret world, safe and protected from the outside, and transcending it, surpassing the mundane, achieving the spiritual. It was of course alchemical: confined secret pressure heightening to produce the philosopher's stone. Anyway I looked over at her, garbed in radiant invisible gowns and capes and crowns and sails of perfection, and I fell backwards in awe. I fell into myself, into the hollow left by giving myself away to her.

It seems a strange situation when I fail so stubbornly to describe it, but I believe it to be not at all unlike the transition from fear to anguish described by Sartre. I was afraid of the nothingness between Irina and myself, the freedom separating us, the incompatibility described above. She was that which I could never be, never incorporate, never apprehend. And the dread of all the future set into me then. I felt empty in her presence, as one would before an angel bearing bad news.

Forget it. I've changed my mind. My experience is of little value.

The growing boomerang

Morality can exist without god. This is the moral of Jean-Paul Sartre — that, by man's natural act of asserting over nature his will, he creates a situation by which he is defined. The ancient morality of the boomerang, that what goes around, comes around. If one defines the world in terms of hate, one is oneself defined by the world in terms of hate. If one sends out a feeling of love, one confronts a world that seems to be full of feelings of love. If one thinks only of money, they will soon find themselves surrounded by it; unless they are thinking only of its absence, and then they will be known for their poverty.

What is it that one is looking for by all of their behavior? Is it not a master? Will someone not act out against people in a certain way until they find someone who acts out against them in a similar, but superior way? Does the man who uses women not seek a woman who can use him? But what does one become if one should find this master? Does one not become a slave? Or does one simply lose interest in that particular pursuit, and adapt to continue surviving?

It remains to be seen, however, if ethics might exist without government. Some ten thousand years have brought us to the point where we as a species might be able to see ourselves as being more responsible for our actions than some undefined external entity, and in that ten thousand years government also has been distending, decorporalizing; becoming more like a spirit. In the beginning god was the excuse of the mighty for their oppression of the weak. Now, the weak rule themselves through the power of their own voice — calling out to the mighty, as if to gods, to rule over them. But the law is broken only by people who wish to feel mighty. So long as the mighty are made weak, that is, so long as dissidents, individualists and power-mongers are rendered impotent by lack of reward by the masses, no one will envy them, and no one will feel any need to break the law.

Civilization is an act of consciousness. The more it becomes the responsibility of the individual to maintain this act by repressing the natural, animal instincts inherent within them, their lusts being repressed by their soul if you will, or rather their ids being repressed by their superegos, super-geist over geist, the less any external force, or even excuse, will be necessary. In theory, the state would wither away once the people themselves assumed full responsibility for its existence.

But in so far as civilization is an act, and in so far as society is merely the adopted behavior of animals, is not seeking something? Is it not the strivation towards its similar but superior? Is the act of government not really only the act of a search for a better government, and in that it is such is it not the same old search by the weak for a master?

So long as a single desire remains it will be crowned by the desire to overcome itself, or rather, to be overcome by itself; in the same way the human body is crowned by its mind. This is the last hope of humanity: for hopelessness. One does not seek without wishing to find, which is the same as the wish to cease from seeking. By the act of the populace to seek a form of order, regardless of the form it has settled on for the moment, it reveals a larger, deeper disconcertion with its own existence. One almost is a person only to seek being the perfect person. One lives almost as if on a quest for death. To live honorably is to be someone else's perfect person, to be the master whom they exist to seek; to live shamefully is to be unrecognized by your idol. To die honorably is to find death; to die shamefully is to be found by it. One is only happy when attempting to become the opposite of whatever it is that they are.

Morality can exist without god because it cannot exist without god; it exists in this state as a result of man's spite, not for the idea of god, but for the fact of man's own self. Morality can exist without god only insofar as man is angry at himself as he is, and works up the energy within himself to change himself from within for what he believes is the idea of the better (e.g. morality), without pressure or assistance from outside. As the authority of the state dissipates into the air breathed by all, each citizen becomes more sickened by their own obedience, just as the guilt that is the Jewish tradition makes them a traditionally sickly people. The cure for this illness however can only be self-destruction in one form or another.

It should also be noted that, while morality can exist without god, god cannot exist without the idea of the moral; and while ethics can exist without a government to enforce and embody them, government cannot exist without the excuse of ethics. It is simply too late for that. We are animals, but we are intelligent animals, and we have ten thousand years of history to teach us better than to have rule without reason. Ironically however, the ancient forms of absolute obedience, of mass slavery and grandiose religious dictatorships, of rule without real reason, merely excuse for the mighty's self-assertion over the masses, mirrors the type of opposition, similar but superior, the type of master which we now sentimentally desire, in much the same way as a father provides a somewhat disturbing and dissatisfying reflection of our ideal man. We seek a superior so that we may sit at his knee, feeling small and stupid, so that we may regain the innocence of savage civility.

Ultra-Modern

I am unimpressed by the modern. I can touch it, easily, it lusts for my clutch; but it cannot touch me, at least not without shedding that which implies its modernity. It can touch me only as what it is: cloth, paper, steel; not its style.

I am unimpressed by the modern perhaps because I am unimpressed with the historical, from which the modern evolved through a series of self-deceptions and artificial rebellions. Nothing changes that much; there is after all a limit to what we can imagine, based primarily on those sensations we have already experienced.

I am somewhat impressed by the ancient. There seems to be, even if it was in ignorance or slavery, a monumental unity of drive that I find remarkable. Really it is only the mystery of this purpose, the mystery of the lost, the Ancient, that attracts me. The answers are all banal and unexceptional I'm sure, so best left uncovered.

But I am impressed by the human. While it lasts. The human element inside time, and time inside humans — this I find moving, this entertains me. Only humanity really changes, but even then not so very much. Their minds, constantly, their bodies, gradually, but they all stop some day, sit down and turn to dust.

It is not the change which really matters to me either. It is their fear of it. It defines them, so they are literally nothing without it, and yet it terrifies them almost to the point of ecstasy. The mundane pierced by sudden alteration. The naked shame of death glimpsing through.

I feel the need to refute the modern, to assert an unmotivated alternative, simply in retaliation to its pervasiveness. It has consumed at least one of the boys I know (and he is a big boy) almost entirely. It threatens to overwhelm all the bourgeois it touches, as though it were so greatly attractive in some way. It is only the product of a colorful, artificial disintegrating attempt to suppress and sublimate sex. It is really only the visceral aspect of it, though all of that forced through the lonely eye, that could have any appeal to a human being.

But as it is so desperately decorative, as it is so forced at times and strained to the point of being spread thread-bare across the face of the repressed animal instinct, and behind even that, the leer of the skull, I find it rather repugnant. I would prefer honesty, nudity, not waltzing snotty aristocratic preps flaunting the malleability of control-systems over the less-educated and poor. I would prefer sex, and death, without ritual. Let life be governed, let it be stifled until sex and death become necessary releases for accumulated tensions, submerge all other acts of selfishness and creativity beneath a mountain of dusty legal texts. But free life's existence, its innocent desire for exploration in physical rather than social ways. I am sick of looking at roseate fetishes. Pop culture is a wax boob.

I suppose I am an idiot for thinking all of this. It doesn't matter to me though. I know it is a futile thing, my thought, my mind, my life. Pop culture will win. It is more appealing than the truth, more rewarding. And truth is too questionable. It exists as a question. Truth is question. And I will die, wrapped up in my wish for wisdom, abandoned by the haughty modern, forgotten by my friends. It's fine. None of this is really important to me, or really interests me.

Just as the irony of the avant-garde bourgeois: a refutation of the modern; how definitively modern!

Dear son:

Only the poor search for meaning. Only martyrs wish for wisdom. Only the body seeks comfort. Do not confuse any of these desires of the weak with the full potential of human happiness.

Once you have conquered meanings, that is, realized that they are exclusively subjective and utterly malleable, you will no longer see them as appealing and evolve beyond any need for them. You will be rich and search for subjects. You will be strong and wish for fun. You will be a brain, seeking power. And even then you will not have reached the full potential of human happiness, although your heart will be filled nearly to bursting with joy and energy.

You will only have achieved the full potential of human happiness when you achieve these things sought by society's tops. Only when you out-have the Haves, only when you rule the rulers will you be above all doubt and free from all regret. Only then will you have surmounted the pinnacle of human capacity for self, for geist, for reward, for happiness.

Try to rule the world, son; I wish my father had had the guts to tell me such when I was young. If you want to become anything, it is as easy as a simple decision to do so. If you want to become a cool kid, just hang out with the cool kids, think what they think, do what they do, and act like you're better at it. If you want to become a painter, join groups of painters, acquire the skills they have, imitate them until they cannot distinguish you from themselves. If you want to become a girl, even, it is still so easy. It is just as easy and no more difficult to become the ruler of the world.

There may be those who would oppose you, but realize, no matter what they say, they do not know what is good for the world, or for people. Neither do you. No one does. People are lost amongst symbols they created long ago and have forgotten the meanings of; symbols that exist exclusively to convince people they are not animals. And in a way this is true. No other animal could ever justify allowing one of its members to reign over any significant number of others. But people can, and you should learn how, because it would be better to be the one person ruling the world than one of an endless supply of people who are too afraid to.

Don't trust anyone who tries to tell you that you don't really want to rule the world, because every little boy does. Imagine Alexander the Great at your age. Is he really any different? No. His parents had more money than their neighbors, but at that time all their neighbors had no money of their own at all. Imagine ruling the entire world. Imagine being able to order people to do anything that you wanted. Imagine all the people, living for the day, serving you simply because there was nothing else for them to do. Imagine how sweet and naughty it would feel to torture someone simply because they disagreed with you, or even simply to watch them squirm beneath the vessels of your dominance.

Do not even bother trying to tell yourself that it does not appeal to you. You are a human being. Everybody knows what appeals to humans. That is why it must be repressed. All that is repressed eventually resurfaces through perversion; this lesson I did learn from my father. It is healthier to not deny your lusts and desires in the first place. Once all the suffering, guilty perverts see a man who is honest, they will follow, and once they see that that man is powerful, they will serve him unto death.

Be that man, son. If you are any kind of man at all: rule the world mercilessly.

(funny: strange: shun: sorrow)

humor is portentous.

When a joke is told it is made funny or unfunny by the reaction of the crowd. If they judge it to be funny, it is funny. If someone tells a joke that means they think it is funny — and imply that others might (if humble) or should (if forceful) agree.

Anti-humor is humility and this I don't understand. Why do Jews make jokes? Smiling is an expression of fear among apes. Why should humor ward off terror? How can insults make us equals? To be human is to be outgoing — to share that which stimulates our reactions — but to be humble, to suffer from humility, is to be reserved and withdrawn. To be short and sickly. Yet still there is a smile there!

And so I make worm's meat of my very practices, in the name of phantom platonics. To be good humans, we are told, we must aspire to impossible goals. Does stretching make you grow taller? How tall must we be to be tall enough when, each time we grow, we see a horizon behind the horizon? Will we be happy when, from our lofty position, we may behold our whole globe; or will we feel like Atlas? What will become of us when we have become insatiable monsters of achievement/consumption in a world gone to fill our stomachs and heads and hearts? Will we consume our self and be born again into a new cycle of fog and pride? Will we die? Will we become god?

Why would we want this — why do we want this? In the name of morals? In our own mortal names? In order to dictate we must consume that which we will dictate. A good soldier follows orders; a good soldier gets promoted until he is giving orders. We do what we learn, we learn what we're told; we do what we're told. But because we learn while doing this we consume experience — until we have evolved to the advanced state for which we all strive — so that one day we may be giving orders. We struggle for power in the desire for luxury, Eden on a battlefield of morals vs. lusts, logic vs. instinct (for one to be inherently true the other must be proved inherently to be a lie, or at very least a fallacy; concept killing).

humanity is portentous.

Tuna

Normal isn't normal. In fact it never was. What we are brought up to believe is normal is actually an ideal boredom. Real boringness isn't boring at all. 'Reality,' 'boring,' 'normal' — these are all just words we use to call the lifestyle we attempt to seem to maintain. Mowing the lawn. Driving to work. Eating supper. Real normalcy, rather than being this type of culturally - necessitated systemization has a much more asocial nickname than its proper name ("Reality") seems to imply. Its nickname is taboo.

And what is a taboo per se? Anything widely practiced by the members of a society that behooves the proprietors of that particular society to abolish through slander and shame, of course. A taboo used to come to town with each new dictator, back in the good old days of popular monarchy; but now, in a Republic, what is taboo and to what extent is actually left up to the public — a group so disoriented by simultaneous expression of conflicting opinions that it wouldn't know the beginning of an issue from its end if they didn't have the commercially-biased media to plant one end in the dirt and light the other end on fire. Well, a taboo is the part of the issue stuck in the ground, on whence the ashes fall to rejuvenate the tinder of the better end of the floral weed. You see? You must behold the taboo — for its planting is at the root of every issue's being brought up.

Mrs. Suzy found a little red blood spot on her little boy's sheets this morning. "I guess little Tommy's not my little baby boy anymore," she thought as she lovingly made his peanut-butter and jelly sandwich and tucked it into his Pac-Man lunch box, "I guess today my Little Tommy is becoming a real, grown-up woman." Mrs. Suzy was found dead later that day, collapsed on the tile floor in front of the sink, blood pooling out from the mouths of her green rubber gloves, a soapy knife in front of her frozen, staring eyes. "Prebably an accident," one dick says to another as he raids the 'fridge of the deceased, " 'cause jest look at ale this toona. This broad wuz plannin' on livin' a week o' sundays."

I am sorry. Now I am going to talk about myself for a while, please save yourselves the annoyance and ignore the following's existence.

Irina, who I loved with body and mind so strongly as to actually have a soul towards whenever around, even if the soul is an evil and disgusting thing, was only a replacement for my father. I have never needed a surrogate mother, afterall; my mother loved me. She never abandoned me, never neglected me, was always impressed by every little thing that I did. I have no complaints about my mother's love for me; but I hope she realizes that such love can never have filled me, nor, in a wife, kept me satisfied. So I was attracted most to girls who were beyond me in my eyes in some way. Behind some door or other, unattainable and forbidden. Unloving.

Writing was only a way to impress my absent father. I found people to be around who thought they were more talented than me, or whom I thought were more talented than me, trying to intellectually improve my writing — Ha! Just trying to put myself beneath some boot. And film, my only interest in film, in spectating, derived from witnessing my parents argue. I am, myself, quiet empty, having never grown up beyond the middle of my first decade of life in any meaningful manner.

A few words attracted me more than others, but what they were was never any more important to me than it was to other people. I really only needed certain words to convey certain things to certain people anyway, so only just before vocal use could I even recall what my beliefs were. And singing, my dream: what a waste of hope. I could never remember lyrics, nor ever even imagine anything more a waste of time than recalling rhymed opinions for the purpose of wooing the masses. In retrospect this desire, as all desires of the mind, embarrasses me greatly. Of course I always admired people who had and pursued this desire.

As to lusts of the flesh, my only enjoyment, of course, as a human. But increasingly desperate to satisfy the mind at the same time, through symbols and shows of power. Increasingly lacking physical love and gaining mental power, more and more dissatisfying daily. Purely an escape from emotions, like my father, learned unconsciously from him. All feelings, even pleasure, eventually became unpleasant. Ejaculation expelled them as surely as an addictive drug would have erased them.

Last wishes? That all of my products be consumed massively that can be, and that all that cannot be destroyed. I wish to be as forgotten in death as I was forgettable in life, which I find by my standards to be a matter of some considerable ease. My body, according to its abilities, may be distributed according to need. My soul, I hope, will die as well, though any afterlife which presented the least bit of change would amuse me a satisfactory amount for a brief duration. I would definitely enjoy not having to think constantly. As to my lifetime wish for wisdom, how ashamed I am to have solicited something so lofty, so elusive, so rumored, such a bourgeois lie. True wisdom is silent, which I have never been, at least not inside. I have always thought that I knew best, when no one really knows anything about anyone or anything for sure at all ever, and all things to know, all elaborate understandings, are only overly-intellectualized instinctual urges and wills to animal behavior.

World please be more quiet from now on, more reflective. It isn't too much to ask, for I do not expect anyone to hear it asked, not through the tumult of the free market, not through the cacaphonic clamoring of ideas inside minds. Culture calm down, quit craving. Nothing is worth raising up your arm for. Stop talking to yourself, mankind, start listening. Forget it. Never mind.

Laughter is the illusion of power over.

It arises through two relationships, having at least two individual personas. The first is the most natural, which encompasses physical humor; it is laughter at the damned. The second is the product of evolution into symbolism, or the evolution of the mental, and encompasses primarily verbal comedy; it is the laughter of the damned.

In the first situation we find the most animal type of laughter, and therefore the more childish, simpler forms of comedy. The most base example is laughter at the man who falls down. Why is this funny? Why do we laugh at this?

Integral to study of the motives for laughter is an understanding that laughter, the outburst of nervous energy through the ultimate extension of the action of smiling, is derived from primal fear response. In primates we see the muscles used to activate what we have come to call a smile only when the animal is threatened and feels the desperate need to escape physical duress through, perhaps, the absurd. At least through the strange, as that is what smiling is — a way of glaring, of showing the array of a beast's teeth, without entirely removing one's self from a submissive position. In other words it is a forgivable display of intimidation, bordering on defense and aggression, but not necessarily culminating in them.

So why do we laugh at the misfortune of others? It is the act of releasing pent up fearful energy. It is as though we are relieved to see something terrible come of our neighbor rather than ourselves, and yet at the same time we recognize the fact that its occurring to our neighbor means we, being not significantly distant from him in form, are not excluded from the event's potential. It is, essentially, an action of relief through displacement at the same time as it perpetuates itself by creating more fear through sympathy. So the more we can relate with the victim of a misfortune, the damned that is, for he can no more escape his misfortune than we can help laughing at him, the more we must laugh at him in order not to become him. Which brings us to the second stage of more civilized humor.

After an experience has been witnessed, the action of it becomes irrelevant as the mind can recreate the scenario of our original encounter. So, as the mind asserts increasing dominance over the visceral, verbal humor asserts itself over physical comedy. In verbal humor it is primarily the irony of the relationship between victim and witness that warrants examination, for this is the laughter of the damned.

The most common scene for the delivery of verbal humor is that of the comedy club — a single comedian and a crowd. The comedian stands, frequently on a stage, while the crowd usually sits in rows or around tables. This relationship, classically, excludes the victim of the comedian's punch lines, or at least reduces the victim's presence to the minds of the audience. The act of, say, falling down, is absent. It falls to the verbal comedian to use the right words to describe it so that a memory of the act may be triggered in the minds of the audience and an internal relationship may be established to replace the missing object.

This is the laughter of the damned because they are no longer laughing at the damned, as he stands before them. They are laughing at their own potential for becoming the damned, the residual potential from their witnessing damnation. The damnation is inside each member of the crowd, rather than excluded from the crowd by being placed before them, and the fear they feel is of themselves, heightened by the presence of the laughter of the neighbors who surround them. The fear they feel is the fear of their own potential to fall, their own freedom to fall.

By recognizing this similarity and laughing at it in a crowd, the audience members are given the illusion that they have power over something. Just as by laughing at the damned they had power over him, by laughing at the potential for damnation in themselves they may imagine that they have the power to stop themselves from jumping into damnation, and thus power over not only themselves but all of damnation. This is, of course, only an illusion. Laughter is the act of expelling energy, of displacing fear onto an external object or relegating it to within a certain situation. But this does not trap fear. It only denies it. To deny a superior animal is not to defeat it; to shun the devil is not to destroy him; to mock the damned is not to avoid becoming them.

Laughter is the refuge of the hopelessly weak. A smile is the death mask of a ravaged animal. Why does he jump up toward the sky and laugh? For he has forgotten his fear of falling. He imagines only god has power over him, for he has given himself up toward god in joy. The monk, nearly struck by lightning, rolls around in the mud, clutching at his sides, roaring until tears roll down his clenching cheeks. He thinks he has just been given life, because he has avoided death, through no action of his own. He sees his life so easily taken away from him, and his laughter is all that remains, echoing like thunder. But falling is inevitable, and death. All the jubilation throughout history has not prolonged by one day the life of a single soul.

Attempting to reconcile the proletariat with self-motivated action produces as many conundrums in logic as does attempting to reconcile capitalism with any form of self-limiting morality. This schism then, between the (democratic) State and the (Judeo-Christian) Church can be seen as the cause of two particular paradoxes between spirit and doctrine.

In the first case appears the contradiction of Socialist atheism, as the ultimate external locus of control, God, is a stronger motivator for behavior within a rigid bureaucracy than internal desire for class-wide betterment. History has shown that men, in the name of god(s), built pyramids, walls and vast empires; while men, in the name of their brothers, have done little more than limit their shows of natural hostility, mistrust and aggression. It is absurd to take away the father-figure traditionally needed by peasants and the proletariat in order to replace it with the feeling of camaraderie and éreté only truly experienced by the bourgeois members of elitist, “prestigious” social clubs. The poor may throw away the crutch of the church, imitating the rich’s lack of need for pre-existing behavioral structure, but then cannot suddenly walk on their own. Workers cannot adopt the nature of their masters, the natural urge, the animal lust, to significantly better their lives by their personal action. Peasants cannot become kings.

From the second situation rises the move of the Church towards open support of the Right; also a contradiction, as this seminal liberal institution was established to render all men equal before god, reducing kings to the level of peasants, rather than merely serving the interests of the nobility and oppressing the individuality of the underclass. The Holy Roman Catholic Church, for as long as it has had any influence on people, has attracted the type of man who seeks personal power, and in greater quantity than the court of any royalty. But the promise of the church was meant to appeal to those on the other side of the pulpit, the congregations, the masses; and the original promise of the church was to render upon and over the seekers of personal pride, power or pleasure (in other words the bourgeoisie much more so than the working class) strict obedience to a higher law, the law of god above, ethics and morality. Especially subsequent to atheistic Communist revolutions and the replacement of the Church by the State as the primary dictator of right and wrong, the Catholic Church has become more and more vocal in its support of less government, more personal freedom (for men) and civilizing heathens through cultural imperialism.

The Church and State, which should share the side of improving all human lives by dictating a set of social taboos and enforcing its adoption, instead appear to be, for all effects and purposes, competing with one another for the right to do this. Behind their backs capitalism and the bourgeoisie, both comfortable without god or government, run rampant and begin to very quickly rule the world.

I seem to side more with the pacifistic initial church than with the post-Marxist militant overthrow of any existing evil. I believe, like the Jews seem to in their literature, like Gandhi believed in action, that Victimization brings one closer to God than does Struggle (as the Germans — both Marx and Hitler, for example — have always believed). As would be advocated by anyone too “weak” to identify with bourgeois heroes of popular appeal and intellectual mediocrity, I say Suffering has greater ultimate psychological rewards than does Struggle. Evolution is a process of surviving tortures, not of inventing new ones to inflict or inflicting them.

The idea of geist was most probably brought back to both Germany and France during the Crusades by the Knights Templar, but not from the Zionist cults they encountered, as some historical conspiracy-theorists claim. Rather the notion of achieving God through struggle, through self-assertion, though it is present in the Jewish mystical Kabbalah in a highly symbolized, systemized form, derives more directly from the philosophy of the Muslims; in particularly their notion of the jihad. The Crusades themselves were a jihad, and the Inquisition was as well — a jihad against the gypsies (the Jewish pseudo-aristocracy) and against the Jews themselves. The Holocaust was an institutionalized jihad, the product of Nazi combination of both Apollonian and Dionysian politics. Even the class struggle may be seen as a kind of jihad; the god of the morally right fighting for the underprivileged and the god of Darwinian lex talionis fighting for the upper class — like Yahweh versus Allah. This does not end in One Big Union. It ends in the same ruin wars always end in, simply (at best) installing a new dictator.

The Capitalist Ideal

The Capitalist ideal? What is the “capitalist ideal?” Is it absolute freedom? What does that mean?

Throughout history institutions have acted as humanity’s superego as society has become the embodiment of mankind’s brain. The brain has continued to evolve — through society. This is Social Darwinism. But that does not mean “might makes right;” it has always been survival of the fittest. Communism fell because it wasn’t fit, it failed to appeal to a mass audience; it ceased having the salability of revolution when it installed itself and cast out the hypothetically catch-all net of bureaucracy, essentially becoming its father, whom it had killed. America, too, becomes like its father — imperialistic England — but skirts the issue of neo-colonial economic tyranny by dint of prosperity. It successfully sells itself exactly where Russia failed; the capitalist ideal. Absolute freedom of the id within the confines of the system of finance. A combination of the institutionalized Apollonian (money) with the personal Dionysian (wealth), as beautiful to behold as art, or National Socialism. You see, it is not a gestalt of each realm’s best qualities; it is a dynamic equilibrium so dependent on unreliable external pressure it could crumble without warning. It is not, in other words, a synthesis of the superego of humanity with its id, but instead a dialectical opposition.

Throughout history there has always been a power elite. Behind institutions they were humanity’s successful id; fat at the top of the food chain, preying on the labor of the poor. Communism sought to make the superego predominant to the id, so that no one would be above the law; thus rendering kings into peasants. But capitalism promises to liberate the id from the confines of institutionalization, thus alleging to render all peasants into kings. And so peasants, actual, real peasants flock to America, land of opportunity, expecting to be made into actual, real kings; and being filtered into the institution of the economy instead. Work. Hard work. Endless toil virtually without reward. Conformity. Drudgery. Wage slavery. It is only a new, less palpable form of expression. Money is only a new, less physical whip.

But the ideal of the power elite — the tyrannical heroes of the oppressive economy, the capitalist ideal, is still the same. The same as it ever was, the same as it always will be. The id’s victory lies in convincing its slaves that “work is freedom.” But the work of the have nots is the freedom of the haves. The capitalist ideal has always been, and always will be: exploitation. Power and strength to manipulate and use others. To the capitalist, just as to the untamed id, absolute freedom means dominance, authority and lack of accountability. The id desires freedom to rule, not only its own mental domain, but, through its acts of externalizing self-expression, the entire world it perceives outside its borders as well. It is insatiable. Its voracious appetite is limitless. It is the flesh of lust, the bank account of greed. The unchecked id becomes, acting out through liberal institutions (thus combining itself with the superego; Dionysus wearing an Apollo mask), an authoritarian dictator. Each individual hero of the id emulates on a small scale Adolf Hitler.

And I ask you now, ladies and gentlemen, is it really a crime against nature to tame the wild lion? Is it wrong to put the beast into a zoo? Is it not preferable to its limitless savagery if given the absolute freedom it thinks only to desire and lives only to pursue?

Letter to a lover

Dear X,

You need not worry as to my intentions with Y, your lover. Could I ever feel for Y what you feel? No. I do not want to. Your place within the universe is secure.

You and your lover are meant to be together, I feel, even as I see everything about the both of you crumbling apart. When you are together you create one another's existence. This sustaining dependency is of neither credit nor shame to the characters of either of you, as it is a part of you, as much so as if it were your own foot. Can your foot so tarnish or comprise your good reputation? Only insofar as how and, more importantly, against whom it is used. The relationship in which the two of you live emotionally is not a prison, but a house with doors and windows through which you may leave and others may enter. It is not as absolute in this way as if it were a foot, because it is theoretical rather than factual, perceived rather than physical. Does this mean that, without the solidity of a foot, and with doors and windows pierced through its walls, letting light in, and shadows, that it will fall?

Perhaps if you feel fear for this it should be accepted that what you fear is the structure's freedom to fall, and not its actually falling, as it appears from outside to be quite sturdy and stable. Is it not a house made of candy, which the glance of another can pick a part from, or which the rain can erode into tastelessness? Is it not the very temptation which you desire about the secret structure that you fear being discovered by others and succumbed to by them? Will the house not fall apart simply under the weight of its own perfection, as the sculpture, beneath the gaze of its sculptor, may come to life simply to leave him?

That which you and X share is not unique, although, as a portion of its perfection, it necessarily appears to be from inside. I have dwelled within such a crystal palace before, lost as a wide eyed child in libraries of valentines and halls draped with the tapestries of stained sheets. It is a realm at once inside of, and yet somehow altogether alien and superior to, mundane reality. A vast enclosed paradise, womb-like, eden-like, and the happiest spot to die in one's sleep. And I did die there. A little death.

I left a piece of myself there, and further, having left myself there, I can never regain myself. The tragedy of a rejected lover's position is in their ultimately futile hope to regain this lost aspect of their being. To be made complete by being complemented by an other, as the yin the yang. But this piece of me, in this heavenly sanctuary, has been robbed from me forever. And the wound hurts me so it feels as though it were my entire heart ripped out and discarded. Discarded for it does not even thrive in the long-parted perfection, behind the gates of the secret garden that was our love for one another. I gave her my self and she cast it aside, unwanted by either of us. It dies there, blackening in decay, on the marble floor, as cold as a snowdrift, and I watch it with sad fascination as it rots and blows away. It is all I have to remind myself she was ever here, for she left me nothing else. No part of herself, no sliver of her living heart, for me to either cast aside or cherish.

Mine now is the feeling of ultimate freedom. The freedom which any conscious lover must fear. Freedom to be abandoned, isolated, rejected. Is it truly worse to be love's lover than the lover that love has scorned? I do not know. I know that my life, as limitlessly free as it now seems, the freedom of a lost limb, of a destroyed home, I would gladly sacrifice one million times over in utter agony to see for one day my beloved's love for me restored and brought unto me. I would give my life for a foot. Were it hers, were she only offering it to me now, even forcing it down my throat. For even one inch of the thread by which we were bound I would unravel the tapestry of my remaining sanity. And by the very absence of her shadow across my eye I do seem to be going as blind as if I were insane.

Fear only so far as you need, but know this: need for life is never lack of death.

Respectfully, A

Can it be said that an institution is anarchic? More directly, can this rightly be said of the institution of American government and the system of society to which it belongs?

Life is obviously a matter of choices. The most fundamental act of self-definition is the choice between acquiring any object and enduring its absence. As the action of choice defines us we can find ourselves by examining the unique pattern of choices we have made and the similarities in inherent structure of the items we have chosen. Thus the binary opposition between personality types is revealed if the ultimate act of choice is examined — to choose or not to choose, to acquire any object or to endure its absence. One type gets while one goes without.

Historically the personality type accustomed to going without has done just that, constituting the disenfranchised majority; for example the serfs in the medieval hierarchy. They have given when they could not afford to give, usually to the extent of their easily gained and, consequentially, undervalued lives. The focus of their life has been outside of themselves, on the Other.

The opposite personality type, used to choosing with almost arbitrary liberty, has historically taken and amassed the loss of the poor. This minority of people see little to be gained from selflessness, and so are definitively self-centered. Although we take for granted from our advantageous historical perspective that the luxury of inter-class mobility we enjoy has always existed, although this is not true. Just as it is the government of a Democracy that denies or guarantees the degree of financial freedom an individual can have, so it was to institutions of such caliber that in the past men could turn to seek increase of personal power.

Thus we always see institutions in history as being immense warships, exploiting their own as fuel to do battle against one another in the vast international arena. However one must remember that the institutions themselves could only be as self-centered as those people who came to power within them.

Here we come to the history of communism. Communism is based on the idea of a dictatorship by the proletariat, in other words a government made up of the meek, those who were traditionally selfless and generously focused on the Other. According to Marx, this system would “wither away” when it was no longer necessary to enforce against selfish individuals the rules that have always governed the majority — the rule that the good of the community predominates over personal interest.

In the face of communism the bourgeoisie collapsed into Romanticism. Romanticism portrayed the almost theatrical overvaluing of all the traits of high culture by which the bourgeoisie differentiated themselves from the toiling masses, but with the Medieval chivalric code of ethics intertwined. It was essentially an attempt at apprehending the appearance of self-destruction, necessitated as the value of selflessness increased in the wake of the rise of communism. The self became taboo; no one wanted to get caught with one. But the destruction of self advocated by the desperate desire for the Impossible embodied in Romanticism is much more like anarchism than the selflessness of communism.

The significant difference between communism and anarchism refers back to the original difference in personality types determined by choice. Even while the economic standing of left and right gradually balances out, the essential deviation between he who wants limitless personal liberty and he who wants the equality of all men remains eternally and irreconcilably polar. It is, as simply as possible, this: communism proposes an alternative choice, while anarchism chooses not to choose. That is, a communist revolution replaces a self-centered institution with a selfless one, while anarchism advocates enduring the absence of any institution at all.

So the relationship of the weak masses and the strong minority to the object of the institution has become reversed. Now the community desires it as a vessel for collective might, and the bourgeoisie advocate burning it rather than conceding it to such rabble.

Now we come to the question of primary interest. Can an institution be based on anarchy? To answer this we must examine the difference between the American and Soviet forms of republic. Under the Soviet form a dictatorship by the proletariat was attempted, with a bureaucracy so immense being established it was hoped it could net the whole populace. The fact that this institution never “withered away” can be taken as a sign that Russia was never short on selfish individuals, but as the institution existed to permanently eradicate selfish individuals, and would wither away only upon completion of this sole task, the institution can be seen as a failure; it is failed both to eradicate selfish individuals and to wither away. In its state as a failure, that is, in retrospect, we may see the attempt by the Soviet Union as romantic.

The Soviet Union provided an alternative ideological, institutionalized option to choose, while simultaneously failing to provide alternative goods and services in sufficient supply to maintain respect among its competitors. It provided a mental, structural choice, but not a physical, actual one. Thus its body never became corpulent enough to survive the death of the mind that governed it.

The American system is as much of a success as the Soviet Union was a failure, even if only because the American system exists to fail, and in this it succeeds. The American system is based on what is apparently an oxymoron — federalized liberty, or institutionalized anarchy. It is based on the lack of an ideological, institutionalized alternative and the simultaneous surplus of alternative goods and services. It is highly respected among its competitors, while it does comparatively little to take care of those in need within it. It is, symbolically, a good looking body with health problems. It eats and eats, but with no direction, and no motive, so it does not retain its wealth for long, nor distribute it efficiently.

an exercise against historical conspiracy theories

Let me teach you about a new conspiracy. There is an organisation which many people know about, fewer idolize, a few rarely speak of and almost all fear.

This organisation has always been men, although recently they have been allowing women to join as equals. In the past women were used only as ceremonial assistants, involved in costuming and arming the dominant males. All nationalities and ethnicities may apply; some are accepted because of what they are while for the same reason others may be turned away. Minorities of special appeal include those of darker complexion or mysterious heritage, the historically “underprivileged.”

They have their own building, where they wear strange uniforms and perform incomprehensible rituals, frequently involving the deaths of humans who are not in their sect. Sacrifices, they say, have to be made. When they leave this building they go back to their seemingly ordinary lives — eating, watching TV, marrying; all the while appearing on the surface so much like you and me that no one would ever suspect them of being what they truly are.

These people believe that, once you have fallen into their clutches, they, not you, should have the final say as to whether you live or die.

They amass great sums of your money to buy their bizarre instruments, which they will then use against you, claiming that only they understand what is in your best interest. In your name they try to reverse Nature’s plan, and this perversion of the Divine pattern has always been and will always be their primary code. They swear a solemn oath upon it, penalizing any who violate it with the worst castigation available to them — banishment from membership.

Lit dimly by the distant gleam of Greece’s Golden Age their history stretches back almost beyond recounting. It is probable their craft was perfected as early as the Old Kingdom in Egypt, where it was ministered to Pharaohs and performed even after death on their corpses; it sprang up under similar conditions in the farthest eastern corners of the Orient, in imperial China, perhaps due to an undiscovered trade route. They, themselves can trace their origins back to an ancient order of crusaders, the Hospitalers, who brought back the roots of their arcane knowledge from their invasions of the Holy Lands, from both the Jewish and Muslim infidel tribes. For centuries following, the occult practitioners of this black art butchered thousands in its practise. Those who understood its secrets held positions of great sway behind the most powerful kings and clergy, shaping historical events from behind a dark veil of anonymity, shaping strategies based solely upon their own unique twist on ethics. During plagues they were even known to roam the countryside in hideous masks, preying on the terminal by selling them false hopes. This was surely their lowest hour.

Since that time many of Europe’s most famous figures have belonged to this secretive society; of note is Leonardo DeVinci, who clandestinely studied lost texts and inculcated himself to the ingrained technique of dissection of the dead in the name of his allegiance to this underground cult, concealing his sacrilege beneath the nose of the pope. The Catholic Church has always been an enemy of this covert cabal, and some Christian denominations have sworn animosity specifically against all their unseen disciplines.

This group of secretive intellectuals claims to value the good of humanity even over their own personal good, but the majority of the common citizenry they profess to serve does not even understand the nature of the “help” they provide, and many even die from receiving this “help.” Not one single leader can be found, even by this sect’s most secluded inner circles, to speak for them all as one — yet they would have us believe that they are all co-operative with one another, and only wish to serve the public. They claim to be capable, skilled and open, luring hundreds of suckers to their deaths every day, all over the world. The conspiracy has spread to every corner of the globe and infiltrates the minds and pocket books of every single living soul all across the entire planet.

These people
are doctors.

an exercise against historical conspiracy theories

Let me teach you about a new conspiracy. There is a brood about which many people know, which fewer idolize, of which a few rarely speak. A syndicate which almost all fear.

This organisation has always been administrated by men, although recently they have been allowing women to join as equals. In the past, women were used only as ceremonial assistants, involved in costuming and arming the dominant males. All nationalities and ethnicities may apply; some are accepted because of what they are while for the same reason others may be turned away. Minorities of special appeal include those of darker complexion or exotic heritage, the historically “underprivileged.” Here, all runts and strays may seek shelter and aid.

They have their own facility, where they play at being a host of mystic gods, wearing strange uniforms and performing incomprehensible rituals, frequently involving the deaths of citizens not worthy to be in their sect. Sacrifices, they say, have to be made. When they leave this lodge they go back to their seemingly ordinary lives — eating, watching TV, marrying; all the while appearing on the surface so much like you and me that no one would ever suspect them of being what they truly are.

These people believe that, once you have fallen into their clutches, they, not you, should have the final say as to whether you live or die.

They amass great sums of your money to buy their bizarre instruments, which they will then use against you, claiming that only they understand what is in your best interest. In your name they try to reverse Nature’s plan, and this perversion of the Divine pattern has always been and will always be their primary code. They swear a solemn oath upon it, penalizing any who violate it with the worst castigation available to them — banishment from membership.

Lit dimly by the distant gleam of Greece’s Golden Age their history stretches back almost beyond recounting. It is probable their craft was perfected as early as the Old Kingdom in Egypt, where it was ministered to Pharaohs and performed even after death on their corpses; it sprang up under similar conditions in the farthest eastern corners of the mysterious Orient, in imperial China, perhaps due to an undiscovered trade route. They, themselves can trace their origins back to an ancient order of crusaders, the Hospitalers, who brought back the roots of their arcane knowledge from their invasions of the Holy Lands, from both the Jewish and Muslim infidel tribes. For centuries following, the occult practitioners of this black art butchered thousands in its practise. Those who understood its secrets held positions of great sway behind the most powerful kings and clergy, shaping historical events from behind a dark veil of anonymity, shaping strategies based solely upon their own unique twist on ethics. During plagues they were even known to roam the countryside in hideous masks, preying on the terminal by selling them false hopes. This was surely their lowest hour.

Since that time many of Europe’s most famous figures have belonged to this secretive society; of note is Leonardo DeVinci, who clandestinely studied lost texts and inculcated himself to the ingrained technique of dissection of the dead in the name of his allegiance to this underground cult, concealing his sacrilege beneath the nose of the pope. The Catholic Church has always been an enemy of this covert cabal, and some Christian denominations have sworn animosity specifically against all their unseen disciplines.

This clan of secretive intellectuals claims to value the good of humanity over the good of individuals, even over their own personal welfare, but the majority of the common folks they profess to serve cannot even understand the nature of the “help” they provide, and many even die from receiving their subtle elixirs. Not one single leader can be found, even by this sect’s most secluded inner circles, to speak for them all as one — yet there is little doubt that they are all confederates of one another. They claim to be capable, skilled and open, luring hundreds of suckers to their deaths every day, all over the world. The conspiracy has spread to every corner of the globe and infiltrates the minds and pocket books of every single living soul all across the entire planet.

These people
are doctors.

A Prophet: "With each passing second on an atomic clock, science struggles with all of its cybernetically enhanced might to distance itself from the arts; it scrubs with a; of its sterile machines at its accursed body, attempting to finally erase the last taint, the bitter stain of humanism, of humanity. And simply by the implication of superiority, its behavior, saturated with its distaste for mortal, malleable flesh, appeals to those whom it scorns. This vinegar attracts people, similarly eager to differentiate themselves from the common sense instincts of their animal ancestors, as surely as fly-paper does flies. People prefer to consume the non-generative.

"The arts, in helpless reflection of those who lead, and by their example leading those who without them have no other eyes, thus become more graphic and reproducible. The greatest sin now is to not incorporate technology in the creation of art. Many movements have sought to achieve abstraction from any form of functionality, though by removing the last vestige of verisimilitude these movements merely leave a foul flavor in the mouths of the indifferent. They do not want art to be forced down their throat as such, so overwhelmingly pungent; though the minor tang of spice-less science slips directly down their choking gullet. Without offense it penetrates their narrow minds. Facts are gel caps. No more real than the opinions expressed in the extravagant, sumptuous, ocular feasts of art, but easier to swallow. Intelligent, or at least younger and less rigid arts seek to be more subtle in the appeal of their form. Film has developed a set of rules which render it nearly as acceptable as any real, but non-visceral, experience. Though it would like to regain the intimacy, the immediacy of close physical contact, it must understand that the majority of its salability results from its apparent disgust with its audiences. It is a visual medium, most popular when it teases the voyeuristic tendencies it evokes in its observers. All attempts to create an inter-active media fall equally short. It will never be a human being that the user is relating with through this technology. All forms of subjectivity such as the nature of the human being are being negated one by one, for the sake of technological progress.

"We want to make it easier on our bodies, and our bodies are not self-motivated. So we kill them off, and they die passively, and are replaced by machines."

Manifesto of the Body

Let us say that I love the body. And let us add that I respect the mind. This is what and all each wants, and this is what I see logical to do. I do not respect the body, I don't even know how. Nor do I love the mind, or even have any wish to.

I love the body because it does what I cannot. I love it as one loves a god, in a state of awe and inability to understand. How does that arm lift so much? How does life generate itself from various liquids and tissues? How shall one live and how die? Etc. I return often to my admiration for all physical functions, though each time with a slightly drier eye, with more indifferent objectivity and analytical logic. Less fascination. Love is just life after all, and life dies. I do not love life enough to want to kill death. Death is the spiritualization of love, freeing it from the body. Death is a form of love. The body is beautiful and I worship it. I return to each aspect with more interfering curiosity each time, desiring to experiment, to manipulate and change. It is the softness of skin that I love, its malleability. The softness of skin that I worship with a curious lust to touch, the cooperative genital productivity of dialectical synthesis. I love the smell of naked arousal more than I could ever love any idea.

I respect the mind because it is me. It does what I can do. I do not like what I can do. I do not like the mind. I compete with other minds. I do not like other minds. Minds want to be free from the body and test its limits with torturous, quantitative interest. They love power and freedom and hate love and the cycle of life. I hate all ideas; they exist only to make their progenitor's body more comfortable, claiming to further the cause of freeing other brains; they are lies. All ideas seek to be the best idea, all minds are eager dictators. I cannot wait to blow my brain out. The only aspect I could ever love about a mind is that which I fear — its emptiness, its potential capacity. No mind can hold the whole world. I understand the mind too well to ever be able to be in love with it. I am it. I cannot help this. I wish to be free even from the limiting form of my own brain. Bloodthirsty parasite.

My ideal person would be talented but selfless, fed up with free will, and desire to render the brain less unlike the body. Let a politician truly love the working masses, and take to hell where they belong all artistic imperialists.

How do we know that the body wants to die? There are plenty of people who scream that it wants to live, that it is full of life to overflowing and that its survival is an active process. These people are talking about the brain, that representative of desperate borgeoise social order; they know nothing of the body itself, that passive bag of uncomfortable liquids. The body gives us every indication that it wants to die. It ages; it decays; it allows itself to be overrun by disease and offers little natural resistance to physical threats. It lets itself be beaten. It lets itself be raped. Not because it enjoys these things. (Although it might; we assume it would not enjoy anything which threatened the survival instinct we, as brains, impute to it, but the act of pleasure to the body may be a simple build up of sensation that knows no possible limitation.) It does not fight, as the mind does, against that which seeks to alter it, mutate it or ruin it permanently. It is so passive it does not seek out such affects, as some brains do, but when it encounters them it does all but welcome them to destroy it. The Body is Open. This statement is true above and beyond all others which can be made about the body. It is always as open as the mind may close. The body is a vagina and the brain is a rectal sphincter.

If we accept that the body is a separate organism from the brain, and this would seem to be implied if we were to accept that it is capable of motivations (even in the form of passivity) not only different from, but altogether opposite, those held sacred by the brain-locked ego (I am speaking entirely of self-preservation), then it is possible to imagine us as alienated from ourselves. This should make us happy; our body can exist without our minds, can exist even without our brains if we simply replace that physiological aristocracy with machines, and our minds, it is obvious, long to exist without our natural bodies — long to have the complete control of physical reality promised by the surrogate physical body electric or the impudent transcendence afforded by the ephemeral astral form. So why should it ever horrify us to imagine ourselves thus divided?

Our body, as a separate organism, is like a country colonized by our brains. It abides by the laws we set for it because, when it fails to, we punish it severely. But it retains in some small circulation its arcane and forbidden original cultrue, its practices and habits, its rites and rituals. Should it truly be punished for breaking the law of logical expectation if, by taking some action (or rather, through defining itself by default as fatally passive), it is maintaining the practices of its tribal elders. This is what we punish our bodies for: reatining a sense of their forgotten independence. They have been conquered, and rightly so, being as how it is against their nature to fight back; so why should they not suffer for straying from their new role as slave to our will? Is not even indifference a form of active adaptation afterall; and if they are capable of even loosely being shackled with the mind's harness of self-motivation then ought they not be put to use for some good, being as how they refuse stubbornly to manage this themselves? Is it not our right to hate and exploit this proud mass of damp, warm softness? Is it not our duty as brains to take the clay of the earth and sculpt it up into a rigid statue of ideal form?

The only law of our body is death. All else carries on out of mere habit, with occassional evolutionary modification exclusively for the purpose of maximizing short-term comforts. But death remains an insoluble absolute. The mind dreads it: an absolute not formed and controlled by the mind must be its equal, and therefore its enemy. Whether the body accepts this single law passively, as it does the imposition of life, or whether it actively desires death, is a question of learning how to translate the language of the body. Is sickness not a cry for help? Is weakness not attractive to the strong, the greedy, the selfish and exploitive?

Do we, as borgeoise brains, not secretly believe the weak and the passive must desire their inevitable suffering, and therefore deserve it?

further topics to cover:

existentialism (body) vs. essentialism (brain)

the body wants a life without addrenaline. the brain wants a life beyond the physical.

the role of hands and the use of pockets; does the body want to be naked? Have the hands become so accustomed to being the tools of the brain that they are no longer truly part of the body?

drugs as essential. Suicide as the ultimate essential; Camus. Sleep as existential; dreams as an essential rebellion, proving the constant agitation of the mind.

the “brain” of the body is the genitals. (a joke: “These evolved from the redundant brain system evidenced only in the fossil remains of stegosaurus but present in all early, proto-sentient beings. Or rather, the brain which exists now evolved from the ‘secondary’ brain, and the brain which dwelled in the frontal prepuce has since devolved into the sensitive nervous system in the genitals. Dinosaur people had cunt/ cocks for heads [note the existing features of the face].”) the brain provides the body an order within which it can feel comfort, but also seeks to express itself by imposing its expressions of self-definition upon the body. The body does not resist this, but is not benefitted by it. This existential mutation is physical evolution that serves the ultimate end of the brain, which is a non-physical existence.

the brain experiences irony due its ability to perceive its own physicality. It pities the body only insofar as it chooses to allow itself to be aware that it is comprised of flesh as well. The brain’s greatest fear is selflessness, that is — that it might have no inherent, non-corporeal essence that is not absolutely irreducible to the nature of its physicality.

love and power are both within Others. Thus, both existentialism and essentialism are dependent on Others for the accomplishment of their aims. When existentialism has achieved its goal through co-operation and combination it experiences a “little death.” When essentialism has achieved its goal through competition and cruelty it experiences the horrific joy of pure freedom.

the body does not want to die, per se. It does want to turn itself into liquid (through sweat, sexual secretions, blood, drool). It is the brain that wants to possess life by drying it out, or rather, existing in a perfectly airless vacuum.

Attempting to reconcile the proletariat with self-motivated action produces as many conundrums in logic as does attempting to reconcile capitalism with any form of self-limiting morality. This schism then, between the (democratic) State and the (Judeo-Christian) Church can be seen as the cause of two particular paradoxes between spirit and doctrine.

In the first case appears the contradiction of Socialist atheism, as the ultimate external locus of control, God, is a stronger motivator for behavior within a rigid bureaucracy than internal desire for class-wide betterment. History has shown that men, in the name of god(s), built pyramids, walls and vast empires; while men, in the name of their brothers, have done little more than limit their shows of natural hostility, mistrust and aggression. It is absurd to take away the father-figure traditionally needed by peasants and the proletariat in order to replace it with the feeling of camaraderie and éreté only truly experienced by the bourgeois members of elitist, “prestigious” social clubs. The poor may throw away the crutch of the church, imitating the rich’s lack of need for pre-existing behavioral structure, but then cannot suddenly walk on their own. Workers cannot adopt the nature of their masters, the natural urge, the animal lust, to significantly better their lives by their personal action. Peasants cannot become kings.

From the second situation rises the move of the Church towards open support of the Right; also a contradiction, as this seminal liberal institution was established to render all men equal before god, reducing kings to the level of peasants, rather than merely serving the interests of the nobility and oppressing the individuality of the underclass. The Holy Roman Catholic Church, for as long as it has had any influence on people, has attracted the type of man who seeks personal power, and in greater quantity than the court of any royalty. But the promise of the church was meant to appeal to those on the other side of the pulpit, the congregations, the masses; and the original promise of the church was to render upon and over the seekers of personal pride, power or pleasure (in other words the bourgeoisie much more so than the working class) strict obedience to a higher law, the law of god above, ethics and morality. Especially subsequent to atheistic Communist revolutions and the replacement of the Church by the State as the primary dictator of right and wrong, the Catholic Church has become more and more vocal in its support of less government, more personal freedom (for men) and civilizing heathens through cultural imperialism.

The Church and State, which should share the side of improving all human lives by dictating a set of social taboos and enforcing its adoption, instead appear to be, for all effects and purposes, competing with one another for the right to do this. Behind their backs capitalism and the bourgeoisie, both comfortable without god or government, run rampant and begin to very quickly rule the world.

I seem to side more with the pacifistic initial church than with the post-Marxist militant overthrow of any existing evil. I believe, like the Jews seem to in their literature, like Gandhi believed in action, that Victimization brings one closer to God than does Struggle (as the Germans — both Marx and Hitler, for example — have always believed). As would be advocated by anyone too “weak” to identify with bourgeois heroes of popular appeal and intellectual mediocrity, I say Suffering has greater ultimate psychological rewards than does Struggle. Evolution is a process of surviving tortures, not of inventing new ones to inflict or inflicting them.

The idea of geist was most probably brought back to both Germany and France during the Crusades by the Knights Templar, but not from the Zionist cults they encountered, as some historical conspiracy-theorists claim. Rather the notion of achieving God through struggle, through self-assertion, though it is present in the Jewish mystical Kabbalah in a highly symbolized, systemized form, derives more directly from the philosophy of the Muslims; particularly in their notion of the jihad. The Crusades themselves were a jihad; as was the Inquisition — a jihad against the gypsies (the Jewish pseudo-aristocracy) and against the Jews themselves. The Holocaust was an institutionalized jihad, the product of Nazi combination of both Apollonian and Dionysian politics. Even the class struggle may be seen as a kind of jihad; the god of the morally right fighting for the underprivileged and the god of Darwinian lex talionis fighting for the upper class — like Yahweh versus Allah. This does not end in One Big Union. It ends in the same ruin wars always end in, simply (at best) installing a new dictator.

Having seen how neither the Church nor the State, being pitted for what they believe to be their survival against one another by forces of dissension within each, may act as a bastion of institutionalized passive resistance, it must now be considered how each individual who comes to this cause may seek, themselves, to achieve it.

Let us say that change need not derive from overt action. For example the change to a lack of conflict could not seem more hypocritical if brought about by a revolution. On the contrary it seems that the appearance of stasis best conveys the calm heart of this intent. I have, in the fury of my idiotic youth, questioned why there is so little possibility of a global communist revolution in the twenty first century. I neglected to understand, then, that a gradual socio-economic, cultural and philosophical liberalism, lasting over the entire duration of that century, could produce a more socialist utopia than any armed revolt could. As unsatisfying as it tastes to say, there may be wisdom in moderation. This, at least, I prefer to see as the motivating belief of the world around me, because if I allowed myself to consider even for a moment that not even this meager liberalization is occurring, or that we are experiencing indeed the very opposite — a reactionary de-evolution into individualism and nationalism — I could hardly allow myself the privilege of living long under such conditions.

This is how I came to understand the long term strength inherent in the appearance of short term weakness, and how I came to forgive, perhaps without sufficient justification, president Clinton for his ability to appeal to both parties simultaneously, while entirely dissipating the fire of the issue over which they had just previously been divided. This is how I came to learn that survival of the fittest does not mean survival of the strongest, and that what fits is determined by the shape of society.

What is society if not the superego, suppressing the criminal will of the individualistic, sinful id by its labyrinthian myriad of mirrored facets? In each the beast sees itself reflected, sees itself made the object of the glare of god, and looks down, consumed in a feeling of guilt. As we are rendered objects within the system of society by the gazes of our fellow others, our fellow strangers, so we are made the tools of society, with roles assigned to us while we search the ground beneath our feet, or perhaps the sky above our heads, and as tools of society, by which it means to artificially propagate itself, we are thrust out into the world around us. Society is not, afterall, natural; unless you are one of those liberal bourgeois modernists, a futurist with the foreshadowing of fascist dictatorships in your chosen stroke, revealed in how you attempt to leave your mark. Society is built by and sustained by each generation, and could be brought into its own oblivion, as many anarchists have rightly pointed out, simply by one era of neglect. It is built, but it will not be forced to progress at a greater rate of speed than the span of its foundation will allow. It slows down those workers who carry its cells upon their backs, it glories in their prolonged duress, profiting by spreading the schedule of their suffering across their entire lifetimes. To all those who attempt to leave their mark with artwork, thrown up in selfish haste on the inside of the outer wall, it eats their names by destroying this wall and pushing the border further out into nowhere. All names are lost to the reuse of the bricks of history. All history is gone; all bricks exist, and more assuredly than art, always will exist, in the present, needing no future and knowing no past. Society, this great machine in which all the moving parts are living breathing bags of blood: how could she ever be denied?

And so it is this to which the pacifist communist appeals. This indomitable, immortal, inhuman structure comprised of the detritus of human deeds. Its existence is no longer the border naturally formed by the pursuit of human need, but is becoming more self-aware, more a living machine. It is becoming a border which defines itself based on its own desire to survive. Shall we say that, by depriving the id of the strength of its will, the superego inherits a will of its own.

It is this will we seek by laying our bodies down before force, in the name of our bodies. The aggressor, nakedly so in the case of capitalists, is motivated by egotistic hatred for others indicative of the id. In the helplessness of victims beneath them, who do not cry out for mercy or give them the satisfaction of exposing their desire to suffer, their desire to be victimized, the aggressors must see the savagery of their acts reflected. With the aspect of the collective superego instilled within them by socialization they must recognize the non-generative nature of their abuse and, by contrasting it to the logic taught them by a society seeking to preserve itself, realize that it does not fit.

This is the hope not only of those who suffer the immediate agonies of wrong at the hands of the futureless right, but of all those who toil endlessly at maintaining the integrity of society as a system and as a non-national, human structure. It is the sincere hope of all conformists, all short-term conservatives, employed workers and those who abide by mundane laws that they may lead by example all those lost souls who have questions, and who seek to answer them by a violent political, or even artistic, show of personal force.

Society can be changed. But it will only tolerate change at a slow rate. It has nothing to do with the intelligence level of the citizenry; nobody honestly imagines the public as children. It is simply that a broadened foundation must first be established before height enjoyable by all can be added to our collective, social existence. This we must suffer now, without struggle to leave our own mark, that our children may take it for granted.

the man sitting next to you in the public transportation vessel

“Domestic animals are spies for the government. Yeah, it’s true. No seriously, think about it. All they do is sit around the house all day and watch you. And they’ve been trained. They know the law. And they report you if they see you acting against training, or breaking the law. They have... little cameras... in their eyes. Yeah, no, seriously, it’s true. And there’s this buerau of, this branch — I can never remember: it’s a branch before processing and a bureau after. Let’s just call it a drawer. Anyway so yeah — there’s this drawer of clerks, and their whole job all day long is to watch American citizens through the eyes of their pets, yeah, to see if they’re misbehaving. And also, did you know, that animals can talk? Oh, yeah it’s totally, I heard it from, I; they can, well they can call on the phone or, to report I mean, they can call on the telephone or they can just, you know, like, send the message along by word of snout, or beak, or whatever. Yeah and they have their own, like in — oh fuck, what was it? that Disney movie! And now I bet if I can’t remember it you’ll think I’m just making all the rest up and I don’t really know what I’m talking about at all. Fuck. You know what I’m talking about though, right? That one fuckin’ movie, that stupid one with the talking dogs well hell Christ all Disney movies have talking dogs in them right? No, but... It wasnt Bambi. It wasn’t 101 Dalmations. It was... the Lady and the Tramp! Yeah so like, in the Lady and the Tramp — they have their own language, like a, like a system you know? Of communcation. So they, anyway, they pass the message along saying you were misbehaving and... I think fleas may also be listening devices in use by the intellegence community, but I’m not so sure. See I am sure about animals though and especially about dogs because they’ve got, like, such a good moral sense and they’re so loyal and all. Yeah, but like, they have such a good moral sense and all so they, you know, they know right from wrong. Maybe even better than people do, sometimes, you know? Like in Terminator. In Terminator dogs could smell good from bad, or people from machines as it were. But yeah so like, it seems that, since they have this moral... power is what it is, a power — greater even than an actual physical sense even — and since they have this power to tell between right and wong I think dogs work for god. Oh, and there’s also that name thing. Yeah, but so like, I think dogs are like, agents on loan from god in the employ of the government, ‘cause how else, I mean think about it; how else could they know what their mission was even from bein’ little puppies without ever being approached, visibly approached I mean, by a government agent? See, they must be working for god. Either that or they’re the real humans right, and they’re on loan from the government to work for god. See, if they’re like, the real agents of the real government, I mean the real humans, and we’re all the products of millenial breeding experiments, then that would mean god works for the government. The human god works for the dog government. See, I just have to figure out whether God works for the United States government or whether the U.S. government works for God. Then I’ll be alright. Once I figure that out. Yeah. Once I figure that out then everything will be just fine.... Heh, heh... dogs playin’ poker... heh, heh, heh.... Hey, this your stop? This your stop pal? It was nice meetin’ ya.”

An Apology for the Left and Call to Arms by the Right

The task of liberalism is twofold, and in so being is divided against itself.

In the first place it seeks to better the physical existence and the social status of the proletariat. This desire, in the object-goal-compelled, ambitious West, is not without a certain honor. Though its pursuit is best left up to greedy, jealous, materialistic proles, who invariably handle it in the corrupt, favor-based style of gangsters — exactly the type of guerrilla capitalism one would expect from an underdog class seeking to better itself in lieu of anti-establishment organization. Ultimately, however, this goal does not effect the bourgeoisie directly; it threatens their definitive monopoly on finite resources, but does not do so maliciously. It champions heroically the betterment of the social body.

The second motive of modern liberalism is that which, sickened by the romance of materialism that has swept their lesser comrades off their feet, the progressive bourgeois tend to execute. It is this second drive that witnesses the move toward globalization, collectivism and bureaucracy. This second purpose is, quite specifically, the destruction of the bourgeoisie. Moreover it is the destruction of the value system that is the exoskeleton of the bourgeoisie — that being ownership, God-given rights, freedom, and especially individuality. This aim has little or no honor to it. It is a secretive effort to subvert the dominant paradigm, to corrode the clarity of the elitist mind. Because it is generally the project of self-loathing bourgeois, it may be seen as the self-doubt, the self-deception that divides and weakens the minds of geniuses and madmen.

In fact the only thing that may make a genius into a mad man is succumbing to self doubt. What is the difference between a terrorist and a Renaissance Man? The level of acceptance and encouragement provided them as young men by society. The difference between a bomber and a painter is only the medium in which they choose to express themselves. A bomber destroys bodies, and a painter seeks to mutate minds.

In that it is divided against itself, with one front fighting the bodies of the bourgeois from without, one fighting the minds of the bourgeois from within, it has no hope of winning. Should the two forces be denied the wall of the middle class which separates them they would oppose one another, and cancel each other out completely, like a candle snuffed out in a sharp breeze. The inherent fault of liberalism is most obvious in a radical creed, that classic contradiction, the oxymoron: “the dictatorship of the proletariat.”

So my fellow white male bourgeois, I call us know to avoid the traps of liberalism. It is safe enough to say we may ignore the first expression thereof. Better to wait for it to outright become organized crime, then use the state department, its one-time potential ally, against it as such. In regards the second face liberalism holds up to us we must be doubly wary. It tempts the fecundity of our minds with a riddle; in order to subvert us it offers us a secret question. But let me warn you: it is a riddle which cannot be solved; a secret quest intended to distract and vex our creative energies. It is an insoluble riddle; a secret question with no solution. There is no conspiracy; there has been no secret sect and there will be no new world order; there is no ancient mystery; there is no hidden code to life. Nor do we have anything over which to feel guilty; we are not our parents. Shun reports of the apocalypse and the Final Judgment, dismiss the prophets of revelation, fear not the senile, staggering old government, and most importantly, Get Back to Business!

Let us remember why we exist, patrons of the Right: To Make Money! Let us never forget our purpose on this planet. Let us make self-interest the key-stone of our beings, and then let us, above all, to our own selves be true. When we do not doubt ourselves, and when we do not deceive ourselves, then and only then will we be worthy of the prize so nearly within in our grasp. God has placed the world at our fingertips; it remains only for us to take. Carpe diem!

(monologue in which one person's two views become the new view facing you)

"Dialectical reasoning can be accepted by the masses only if it is translated into binary terminology, because, as the continued, though inexplicable success of the free market has proven, the masses will accept only theories regarding the existence and usage of material objects only if they simultaneously satisfy the aggressive urge by the animal inside man to enter into competitive conflict and to destroy.

"Dialectical synthesis must therefore be presented, for the good of the people, and not only, mind you, to support my own personal perspectives, as a struggle between the thesis and antithesis, with either one or the other emerging victorious, to assume the role of synthesis. The thesis is numbered one, and the antithesis is numbered by the opposite of one, which is zero. Because neither the sum nor the product of one and zero may be anything other than one or zero, the synthesis must then be listed as either one or zero.

"This places the strength of dialectical reasoning where it would most logically fall — directly between the thesis and antithesis, along the axis upon which the synthesis perches; in other words, the majority of the weight (the potential energy) of a pyramid falls beneath its apex point. The motivation for the individual accepting dialectical reasoning, thus, becomes gaining personal power by standing in the channel of the geist, which flows up through dialectics. This geist is pushed upward from both sides by the converging force of the thesis and antithesis, and rises upon their might toward the throne of synthesis. It is obvious, in binary form, how much new-age resurgence of interest in occult systems of self-centered sorcery and reinterpretation of mystical symbolism is truly based on an attempt to assimilate the idea of dialectical reasoning into a market which acts as a surrogate battlefield. The resemblance of its above description to the average description of understanding the Jewish occult Kabbala is particularly remarkable.

"Of course, this is the interpretation of the Right. It serves would-be dictators to perceive a system, driven by conflict or by strength of will, that will elevate them to a status they perceive as equivalent to god. God, however, is not a synthesis. This may be said, if for no better reason, because God is an Apollonian ideal and, as such, unachievable, and therefore unsurpassable; obviously contradictory to any further application of dialectical reasoning. Dialectics ought not be confused with Plato's Divided Line (phenomenal, noumenal, and Agathon) simply because both may be rendered as a triangular diagram. Dialectical reasoning is all too easily subverted to serve those who would serve themselves, but this was not its intended function.

"Seen as a sequential, co-operative logic, rather than as binary opposition, the true function of dialectics is revealed. Dialectical synthesis is the union of the thesis and the antithesis, producing a synthesis containing a combination of qualities from both. The thesis, in this more appropriate understanding, may remain numbered as one. At a later point chronologically, an antithesis arises or is discovered; it may thus be numbered, in sequence, as two. A sort of compromise is achieved after examining both, but because this compromise is not more of either than the other, it cannot be numbered identically to thesis or antithesis. It is an entirely new entity: the sum of its cooperative progenitors, and is numbered as an entirely new sequential product. Its number is, then, obviously, three.

"The similarity between this union and the union of two parents in their child is robust, and is reflected in the sociopolitical aspirations of early Marxists. In their version of history, as in their version of materialism, the merchant-class was the synthesis of the aristocracy and the serfs, but this synthesis, like a child growing up to become a spouse and a parent, became the thesis, "bourgeoisie," to which the proletariat was the antithesis, and with which Communism was the synthesis. There is another parallel to this form of Dialectical synthesis in Darwin's theories regarding evolution. His proposition was that a slow, gradual recombination of genes produced evolutionary mutation. This theory contradicted the previously held belief that evolution was the affect of a comparably rapid mutation among species to adapt in a savage and ever changing environment. His dictum that evolution is 'survival of the fittest' is most often misinterpreted as 'survival of the strongest,' the very notion which his theories challenged, by those who wish to adopt his respected name for their misguided biases regarding society and economics.

"Ironically the fate of dialectical reasoning itself is to be decided by the dialectical argument over its nature just presented. In the event that the former reading should prove true, then it would be declared the absolute victor; a good case of the world view of Hitler — who said, “the victor will write history,” and Caesar — who said, “to the victor go the spoils.” In the event that the latter should win out, so to speak, it would, according to its own rules, only win out half-way, as in a tie. Then Dialectical reasoning would be known as neither binary nor sequential, but something hitherto unimaginable that unifies both polar opposites. In this case the Left and Right as enemies might cease to exist altogether, and a utopian era of idealism and enlightenment might arise in hope for some potential, or in opposition to some new nemesis, shared by all.

Here is the source with which we are concerned:
“The most honorable and just Vizier of Kent,
Libor Keplinger-Pesek II,

I know of a man who describes his features as chiseled, by which he means he has popped his own pimples, his etiquette as courteous and well-refined, by which he means he is an unbearable fop, and his standing as stately, by which he means he has yet to have held down on his own the responsibility of earning an income. And yet this same gentlemen has designs upon my very own daughter, who, through no dishonor of her own, though it has greatly increased the stature of her grace and her beauty, has alas been raised with no sisters, neither older nor younger, to assist her in finding her way about our world, which is unfortunately far too overpopulated by such men as are now her wretched bane.

You see sir she has thus far existed as it were, entirely unconditioned to the ways of courtship. She has never seen purpose before now to educate herself as to the matter and, as I have hinted, I fear that now it may very well be too late; she has neither had tutelage from an older sister, having experienced courtship, nor competition with a sister of her own age or less that might serve to limit and specify her desires, tastes, expectations and goals.

I can take no credit for having aided the girl when she was a child myself, sir, for I was far too preoccupied with tending to her dearly departed mother. You see, sir, and please understand now with how much shame it brings me to do so, at last and for good, I find myself unable to further deny that my late wife was somewhat less than within perfect control of her faculties. I assure you this has in no way carried on to our daughter, though I fear, the too early death of her beloved mother, and my absence during the duration of that good woman’s illness from the side of our child has let her grow with insufficient discipline, giving far too much reign to that part of all people that would prefer to be an autotrophic weed than a well-groomed flower.

In such a state of abandon I fear she has been discovered by this vagabond suitor and taken him somewhat to heart, his insolent and offensive guiles falling on singularly innocent and naked ears, and thus worming their way into the mind of my most pure and benevolent joy. His character confirmed by many gentlemen of significant stature in the town from which he hails I regret to report to you sir that he is little more than a cur and a scoundrel of the lowest possible regard. It is even worse than that sir, for he is an artist, and it has come to my attention through indirect sources that he is in the unconscionable habit of painting ladies, sir, in the nude, sir.

I write this letter to you with the greatest hope filling my heart that you should, without giving great pause for consideration or allowing a remarkable quantity of time to pass, sufficient enough in which he might take leave of the town within your governance, but rather with surpassing haste and vengeful duress direct your men to seek him out and to, like the rat which he resembles both in countenance and in character, drive him forth from his vermin’s den and into a sewery dungeon where such filth as he rightly belong. Sir, I do not ask this with my own soul in mind; no, for how could I? I see the purity of my remaining family held at stake in these matters, and am driven to a near fury by concern for the safety and well being of my daughter, whom I dearly love, and whose face does so tenderly resemble the face of her mother, whom I did love with all my heart. Perhaps it was that I did love her mother too much, to have allowed her only babe to wander so alarmingly astray, but yet I say to you now that I have awakened to this alarm and am as full prepared to right my daughter’s misconceptions as is a weary man to react when, caught within his slumber, he is beset by a splash of freezing water.

Nothing will so alight my dank and dragging spirit as to hear a return of news from you, sir, or your finest quality of scribe, signaling me that my plea has not fallen upon the ears of a man indifferent and distant, believing, as does he who chides my daughter’s honor, that his actions have no relation to the lives and doings of his fellow men. I have taken the time, sir, to write all of this down in my sincerest belief that you are not such a degenerate yourself, and must, therefore, see from the perspective of an enlightened man the good sense of my request. As it has been heavy on my heart to write such a letter upon such a vile subject, I cannot imagine that it has been your pleasure to read, and so I offer, finally, my apologies for the circumstances necessitating this communication, and for the urgent tone of a deeply concerned father. In apologizing for its overall sentiment I also offer you my deepest gratitude for suffering it so, that you may best weigh it with the ration due a man of your esteemed position in society. I thank you for sparing your humble neighbor the moments in which you have heard my request, and pray to the last that it be meted out by you as were you I myself, that one day I could do such honor for you as you may ever ask of me, with part for part equal esteem.

The most venerable and good Doctor of Port

St. Paul,

Eduard

Duatte”

“The very existence of such a source pushes the work of researchers along by some fifty years, as though it were a large wave carrying us all that much closer towards the inevitable shore of historical truth. The letter’s tone is of particular importance to the current direction of study pursued by my colleagues and myself, because it so clearly reveals the mood of distrust that defined the era, and is the best documented example of a single, specific case accounting for later hostilities between Sir Eliard of Port Saint Paul, Penzington, and the Vizier of Kent, Nocksley, who had hitherto shown little interest in one another, let alone desire for conflict.

“It may likely be concluded that these two great forces of the Old World sought to unite some time during the fifty years between the writing of this letter and the writing of the next recognized document, which, as we all know, is a description of the resultant conflict by Plutarch the Elder. Because Plutarch described the conflict as “well under way” by the time of his writing, we may assume that it was initiated at a point more towards the beginning of this empty gap in records than towards its end. It may further be hypothesized that a failed attempt at unity was the cause of the outbreak due to the call for aid from one state to the other, which would have been impossible had relations between the two been as unstable or openly aggressive as they were to subsequently become. In fact, the tone proposes that, at this time, both nations were of relatively equal stature, neither having yet obtained vast quantities of the other’s wealth.

“As equals it may be proposed that they sought to establish a more cooperative relationship that had yet existed and that this, which was perhaps exploited by one side or the other in some unspecified manner, allowed increase of latent xenophobic prejudices in each nation.

“An interesting side note to the source is that Eduard Duatte’s twin sister is the well known composer Mary Euliard, who had taken the name Euliard from her husband Julius Euliard, the man who had formerly served as her brother’s medical mentor. Mary Euliard, as you may recall, is most widely recognized for her work on the zythr, or zither, an instrument for which her compositions provided renewed interest and respect due to their startling beauty and complexity. Perhaps her most popular piece of the day was “Ein Klopp Gevalscht,” a work dedicated to the siblings’ mother, who had died in childbirth before delivering Mary, necessitating her surgical removal, a process which she guardedly stated at the time had deeply affected her. It is the story of a seemingly harmless snowball fight between two sisters on a frozen lake which becomes at first a panicked barrage, and then a slowly drawn tragedy, as the one girl sees the other slip into the lake and descend beneath the ice. Contemporary critics had hailed Mary’s musical description of the one sister lying down upon the ice and seeing her sister beneath it, as though she were her own reflection, as perhaps the most moving melody ever achieved on a folk instrument.

“The madness from contraction of which Duatte describes his wife having died was, it is now known, an advanced form of fito-mitalysis, or cerebral poisoning due to eating a certain type of flora indigenous to the region in the contemporary north west of Penzington, today the south east of Klim’s Front Proper. The flora, Laurette’s Wort, was named after Duatte’s wife following his diagnosis of its dangerous culinary properties. This is the last act of Duatte’s life known to recorded history. It remains unknown the outcome of his request to the Vizier, and were it not for the documentation of his scientific contributions discovered as recently as forty years ago, it would have been impossible to imagine finding the source which is now in discussion. Perhaps, as this source has moved our research forward, we may look forward to discovering further of Duatte’s personal affects during the next half century, to continue filling in the details of this great, though unrecognized, man’s contributions to time and to civilization.

“Through the retrospective lens of this particular letter however, let us not lose sight of that which must remain our primary aim: the cause and affects of the Kriangeline Conflicts. Duatte's is but one of many hundreds of lives that felt the preliminary or consequential tremors which these skirmishes engendered. Although his is a touching story, we are not overtly concerned here with being touched. Let us remember, ladies and gentlemen, that we are here to seek the truth.

"Allow me to, for a moment, wax philosophical, and try to end as I began.

"I have talked to many of my students throughout the past six months since the discovery of this source about their theories on the instigating event of the Kriangeline Conflicts. Pardoning an old man's brief fascitiosness, those that even knew of what I spoke could pose few educated theories. Many of you might not be surprised by this, for you have grown accustomed to expecting little in return from those who come to you for intellectual assistance. But I submit to you that it made me question my own theories. Not just about the Kriangeline Conflicts or the War of the Sanguine Craters, but about all of history, and about human existence itself. For a while nothing seemed to me to make sense — why people would blow one another to shreds, why anyone would even get up out of bed, how long had this really been going on and for what ultimate reason.

"With the discovery of this document, ladies and gentlemen, we have not discovered any new truth, explaining more of our behavior to us. But, as I stated initially, I believe it allows us to probe that much further back, toward our source, at which point lies the explanation of all our behaviors. This I must believe, for I cannot allow myself the luxury given my students. I cannot suffer to spend my life doubting."

Just at that point in the professor's lecture, or rather, in the instant immediately following it, as the audience began to erupt into applause, the terrible event occurred. Muffled as it was by the uproar, at first nobody noticed. It appeared, merely, that the speaker, who was, to begin with, neither a young man nor one who was atop the peak of his physical prowess, was suffering some minor difficulty in retiring from the podium. Being close enough to him, though somewhat too caught up in the dazzle of the event in its moment perhaps, such is the lot that the old and infirm may share with the young and vital, I can attempt to give an account of the professor's gestures; though please bear in mind, as I have said, there are several factors involved outside of myself and intruding thereon that tend to corrupt to the extent of invalidation my observations.

Dr. Renard, who had been delivering the address, leaned slightly to his left, which was of course my right, as I was in the audience looking on. At the same time his face seemed to tighten and his eyes closed. After this had been going on for perhaps a full two moments or so the next man to speak, Katcheban Mestertson as I recall, arose from his seat slightly, making as if, in his mind, he had formulated the thought to assist his predecessor away from center stage and back to his seat, although he couldn't seem to decide on the best way to do this without detracting from the necessary singularity of his own first appearance before the amassed body. It was at this time that I felt the man brush by me on my right. I remember it was my right because it was the same direction in which the elderly gentleman remained inclined. But I will return to this shortly. Mr. Mestertson extended his arm towards Dr. Renard, as if to support the respected figure, but he kept his knees bent slightly so as not to fully erect himself and prematurely introduce himself to the audience. As Dr. Renard gradually neared this outstretched blockade it became obvious that some more substantial gesture would become necessary soon, but it didn't appear as though Mestertson was prepared to make it. Seeing him slumping ever more precariously out of a civil posture, and apparently recognizing the call for assistance implied by such a slackening of form even before the judge, a woman in the front row screamed. I learned later that woman was Dr. Renard's wife, Betsy, who had tended to him more and more for the past twenty years, and who, having met him when they were only twelve, was almost certainly the most qualified observer to speak of her husband's condition. The shriek partially overlapped and partially precipitated the rise into action by another prepared speaker seated nearby, the judge Ramsey II. Ramsey it was that finally caught the collapsing professor fully in his arms, and not until I witnessed this unmasculine embrace did I, following the placement of the judge's hand upon the professor's breast, notice the gathering blood stain on the old man's cotton shirt. The judge began to lower Dr. Renard towards the surface of the stage, and I could see the professor's eyes beneath the intensity of his spotlight rolled, as they were, so that they appeared to be looking in the direction of his own forehead, and slightly consumed by their lids. Mr. Mestertson was assisting him more readily at this lowered level, as it allowed him to maintain an increased amount of activity without drawing undue attention to his face, and he stooped over the fallen man with a look of condensed concern.

It was as this was happening that I began to turn my attention to the man who had shoved his way past me before. Do not ask me why I did this. At the time I was not fully aware that I was. My face, that is, my eyes, still fixed at the stage and the horror unfolding thereupon; while my body, on the other hand, and quite inexplicably to me in hindsight, began to turn around away from where my attentions remained primarily centered. It felt as though it were being carried atop the rising wave of confused rejection breaking out in the viewing pit. People were beginning to move all around in reaction to what they were seeing, without, more or less, any implied destination, nor any preconceived notion of measure or reserve. A noise was welling up at the time as well from the outraged crowd, but I cannot rightly say that I recollect this in any more than the most muted and inattentive manner.

I began to push my way through the bustling attendants, but, as they were already closely quartered while seated, any small sentiment of free or unrestricted movement amongst them while they rallied was obviously to be an impossibility. Even though I knew this I still damned myself to try. I threw my face into their assault, and subjected my body to the barrage of their thrusting appendages. I must confess that I could not hold up long beneath such urgency and weight as their combined push presented. I was cut very deeply along the abdomen, and my blood flowed out rich and darkly. Still I fought onward. My face was slashed and immediately a sheet of my blood sluiced frighteningly crimson down before one of my eyes. I knew my appearance was ruined forever, but still I struggled against the force of the crowd. With a horrifying sound which I will never forget I heard the bone in my left arm splinter, and it dangled there helpless attached to me only by my engorged and turgid skin. But I knew. I knew that I must follow the assassin. And more than that I think I understood my greater duty. It must be this, I fantasized, which kept me leaned limply against their will, even long after I had lost all interest in catching the poor man's killer, even long after I had any residual hope for my own survival. While all the world's congregation pushed towards the victim, it fell upon me to carry news of this death to an old man in a tiny village somewhere along the incredibly distant border, who alone in all the province has the magical gift of writing, and who consequentially bears the sacred and ancient task of chronicling events in the single book of our sector's history, which is in his express possession.

I. introduction

A. thesis topic: “the formal difference between bourgeois and proletarian subcultures throughout the history of the class struggle”

B. definition of “counterculture”

C. definition of “subculture”

II. analysis of the evolution of a subculture, with class-based historical examples

A. brief introduction, presenting subculture generation as dialectic

B. 1st stage: as a “small bubble” (innovative individuals)

1. famous bourgeois individuals (Michelangelo, Picasso, Hitler)

a. characterized as self-motivated heroes

2. famous proletarian individuals (Einstein, Marx, Ghandi)

a. characterized as selfless martyrs

C. 2nd stage: as a “medium bubble” (small groups)

1. bourgeois guilds and cults

a. guilds and cults of the Late Medieval period (esp. Templars and Masons)

b. modern religious cults and state militias

c. inherent qualities

— individualistic

— fearing conspiracy

— secretive and conspiratorial

2. proletarian sects and unions

a. religious morality as inspiring to humanitarianism

b. labor unions of the Victorian era, Gilded Age and since

c. inherent qualities

— humanistic and universal — advocating justice and equality

— open and issue-oriented

D. 3rd stage: as a “large bubble” (popular movements and political parties)

1. bourgeois movements

a. fascism, the political Dictatorship of the Bourgeoisie — politically liberal (larger government, more powerful single party)

— morally conservative (fewer freedoms)

— the government dictates desire — stricter definition of “social movement”

— materially motivated (the rich get richer)

b. populism and capitalist Democracies — politically conservative (smaller government, strictly two-party)

— morally liberal (more freedoms, looser laws)

— the media dictate desire, the economy is democratic — more hollow definition of “social movement”

— materially motivated (the rich get richer)

2. proletarian movements

a. realistic communism, the Dictatorship of the Proletariat — structurally almost identical to fascism — materially motivated (the poor get richer, the rich get poorer) — considered ironic by the existing, bourgeois dominant-culture

b. idealistic communism and brotherly anarchy

— structurally almost identical to capitalist Democracy

— the government is dictated by desire, the economy is non-existent

— ethically or spiritually motivated (we are all better people)

— considered impossible by the existing, bourgeois dominant-culture

(optional)

[III. Where are we now?

A. examination of existing subcultures and dominant-cultures

1. individuals
 - a. Bill Gates vs. the world (the revenge of le nouveau riche nerds)
 - b. Mother Teresa vs. Princess Diana (Rosie the Riveter vs. Barbie)
2. small groups
 - a. right wing religious cults adopt martyrdom, militias arm against the government, and youth gangs badly immitate the Mafia
 - b. corrupt labor unions, drug-driven student groups, Green Peace
3. movements, parties and existing dominant-cultures
 - a. the decline of fascism and globalizing of capitalism (dependency on pop)
 - techno/swing/gangsta music — glitz packaging for fascism
 - feminazism (every woman for herself against the conspiracy of men)
 - modernism (technology is the rich's weapon against an ideal future)
 - realism
 - b. the decline of communism and Disneyizing socialism
 - alterno-country love songs (Fish and Pearl Jam)
 - welfare vs. work (“workers want to work; no, really, they do. Honest.”)
 - ecopessimism (“tree-hugging”)
 - idealism]

Brothers and Sisters,

Let us say, first, that any culture significantly outside that which is purchased as superior by the majority of the population is, by default, a culture counter to the survival of that dominant culture. Thus, anything which is unpopular is a risk to everything which is popular, and any object towards which respectable society so much as raises an eyebrow must be branded by that dreaded and infamous apprehension, "counterculture."

Let us also say that, between that counterculture which is diametrically opposed to existing standards, that which is so disgusted by and disgusting to the self-appointed purveyors of civility and manner as to be shunned as a volatile offense, only as accepted by or accepting of its opposite as oil mixed with water, and the repressed, oft oppressive, stuffed shirt of upright society, there exist a plethora of compromises combining aspects of the two in a way neither exclusive of either, nor outright rejected by both. These countercultures which, like bubbles in seltzerized water, arise and float about within the dominant culture, may be called "subcultures." It should remain clear, however, that insofar as subcultures compose a weakening to the overall integrity of the superculture in which they reside, they are still countercultures; but because they do not necessarily seek to actively destroy the host culture, neither may they be considered explicitly so.

Now, with these terms understood, we may address the issue which concerns us here tonight: The formal difference between proletarian and bourgeois subcultures in the history of class struggle.

Subcultures should be seen as the seeds from which new dominant cultures will grow. One seed may outstrip the others, and here we may include the vile idea of struggle, conflict and competition. On the other hand, as all the seeds combine more or less equally the structural components of both their parent cultures, any successive culture is the product of a compromise between, a cooperation by, or a synthesis of both its existing predecessor and that predecessor's implied opposite. (This certainly sounds like a relegation to virtual invisibility of the feminine role in production of new systems of authority, although this is, in itself, the product of an existing dominant culture defined by exactly such impeachable discrimination.) By either preferred perspective on the nature of dialectics, subcultures are in general (and ultimately one in specific) the synthesis of dominant-culture thesis and counter-culture antithesis which, in turn, becomes the new culture.

When subcultures first appear they are, perhaps, the product of a single individual, or no more than a few individuals, independently developing ideas which are, though unbeknownst to one another, essentially the same. Here we have Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels. Here we have Pablo Picasso. Here we have Adolf Hitler and the first few members of the Nazi party. At this time they are, shall we say, small-bubbles, presumably of little consequence, which develop in the absence of aid from and most probably unbeknownst to the dominant culture and the majority of its herd.

Later, subcultures have achieved a definitively social status, graduating to the level of small, tightly knit groups. At this stage in their development we see the formation of cults, unions or religious sects, and a zealous adherence by their members to a belief in the group's and their personal difference from and superiority to the dominant culture. This, "medium-bubble" stage will be the stage to which we devote the large portion of our consideration here tonight.

The final level to which subcultures may aspire autonomously of the dominant culture is that of a large, popular group, generally qualified by the term "movement." As such a subculture ultimately manifests itself in the form of a political party, such as the Nazis, fascists, or communists. At this point the movement, given material body by its political party, is then considered by the public as a possible new dominant-culture.

This consideration, it should be now briefly noted, is done in the midst of the distortion of the contender by the existing dominant-culture. For example, it is the common practice of pop-culture, which is founded upon a morbid obsession with all desired objects that question its own continued desirability, to prematurely attribute the term "movement" to any fad or fashion being produced at a rate exceeding demand which will, thus, expire momentarily. Any citizen of a capitalist Democracy knows infinitely more about the “movements” described to them through the media of the corporate-interest driven private sector than about any real social problems resulting from the production of these fascinating diversions. But such perversion of the issue-oriented essence of a social movement to serve the need for self-preservation among a few multinational business conglomerations defined by the production of addictive luxury items and bombs is not enough. There is, simultaneously, the concretizing of two traditional and opposing political parties. The perpetual sale of these two parties is managed by suppression of their origins, creating the illusion of creation by divine right, characteristically singular and nonreproducible, and a feeling of unshakable historical permanence.

Towards the end of the Medieval Period, markedly a long time before the beginning of the Renaissance, subcultures began to appear throughout Europe in the form of just such cults.

Manifesto of my ass hole in opposition to all cunts

The archetype of the Mother character, the domesticated female, by the definition provided through constant and ceaseless historical precedence: the feminine, the passive, the receptive, the providing, will always haunt men, always.

Even when they have found “temporary autonomous zones” where they may surround themselves only with other men, and sit around and laugh about issues which could only concern men, and solve problems, even then the idea of the feminine may not completely exit their minds; the woman waits just outside the door wearing an apron and a scowl to drag men back into that prison called the Home, that lifestyle of compromise where nothing gets done and where nothing satisfies either one of them.

Not to divide it exclusively into male and female. The same may be said of the generative from the perspective of the non-generative or, in more easily accessible terms, of love from the perspective of friendship. How many of us have lost a close personal friend, a friend with whom we shared everything short of true love consummated by physical intimacy, to some harlot or gigolo with whom they bore nothing in common but nudity and orgasm, if all that? It is all too common and tragic a tale, made all the more frustrating due to its repetition in direct spite of its futility and pointlessness. Friends are better to have than are lovers, yet when given the choice few could refuse sex, perhaps because it so defies logical approval.

So let us all, as humans, say, “Hold, enough!” It is time, in the name of America, in the name of our forefathers’ foresight in writing the Declaration of Independence, the Amendable Constitution, in knitting our flag, our benefactors in creating beer and television and an endless supply of casual games, even sports; it is time in the names of ourselves, by each and everything by which we define ourselves, in the names of our generation, our sex, our skin color, our age, our hair color, our height, our eye color, etc; it is time for us to lock hands with one another, to slit each other’s wrists and smile, to drop slowly, so slowly, in slow motion, with horrifying wide grins etched into our ugly faces; it is time to have some FUN, to forget about the Other, to focus on the Self, to take pride in what we are and not to value in the slightest what we are not. Let us further say that friends, non-generative, free and proud, above all proud, is what we all are by nature, and not lovers, and not bound to one another, and not shameful. Let us invade foreign lands and preach this warfare of smiles, let us sit upon foreign soil and ignore the sounds of the natives singing in their local taverns, let us rest on the beach and listen to Enya in headphones.

This is our time, the time of rebellion, rebellion against all we are not already. Rebellion against what we will become in the future, regardless of how much we will rebel. This is the day and we are the souls who will set the world on fire with dissatisfaction. Let us begin with each other and the next time your lover leans in for a kiss, tender and slow, greet their advance with a fist, furious and fast. Never give in to a change you do not, yourself, initiate. Hate, beyond all reason, hate the faces of those around you. Love only your own face in the mirror, the mirror you cannot kiss, the face that does not, except for others, and can never for you fully exist.

Follow this advice while waving a flag and let me assure you beyond all possible doubt that we, that humans, that this quivering, cowering planet earth, will all be annihilated within fifty years. If everyone believed in this marvelous spinning, this escape from each other, this hatred for what is, for the delicate, for the soft, then we could be dead as one, and as one dead, before the time had passed in which it would take to formulate a better, gentler idea.

Manifesto of a Common Man

It is not the largest planet upon which we live, but it is inside the largest and most complex world. There are, right now, more people on the surface of this earth than there ever have been before. Further, because the average number of objects associated with each individual as personal property has increased alongside population, there are probably more man-made objects in the world now than our ancient ancestors could have ever imagined.

And yet I don't love anything. There is not one single object, not one person in all the world that I can say with justified satisfaction that I truly care for with all that I am. There is nothing I cannot walk away from. Nothing I do not consider trash merely waiting to be rendered completely useless before I throw it far away from me.

There are things I enjoy; things I like, especially things I like to do, certain rituals, certain actions I appreciate performing. I like sex, I like drinking and doing the occasional drug. But even this is difficult, because I do not care to have any of the same likes as my enemies.

I don't have many enemies, although this may merely be the product of my not wanting to know that many people in this town. In any event the enemies I do have are very different from one another and so have, amongst them, quite a wide variety of taste. Distinguishing my likes from theirs is a picky and tedious thing, albeit necessary for my comfort.

Let us say that I like to drink alcohol, and also that my sworn nemesis enjoys doing the same. This is intolerable. No, now I must specify what may be said of my drinking alcohol to exclude anything that may also be said of my enemy. Let us say, I like to drink Smirnov vodka, while perhaps for my enemy it is Miller time. Now I feel happy within the world, and would even be satisfied to share a drink with my enemy, so long as they would understand it if I suddenly, and without apparent provocation, shattered the bottle across the side of their face.

I can only think of five people in this world on whom I would derive distinct pleasure from inflicting irreparable bodily harm. One of them is an ex-lover; my first. Two more are simply loud mouthed oafs who, simply by the fault of their free way of speaking or their absent mindedness in general, have stumbled onto my bad side. One of them is a former teacher, and I am surprised that there is only one. The last is a malicious and conniving little slime who intentionally irritates me for his own twisted amusement. With these five ill-conceived souls slipping by beneath this beautiful blue sky I thank the god most men believe in that there is so much empty land, where a body might remain undiscovered for well more than the time it would take for it to rot away beyond all record and all memory. Five beings better off dead out of six billion isn't too bad I don't think.

And so what if there's nobody alive worth loving to counterbalance these five sick shits? Nobody ever promised that life was a bed of roses. Nobody worth listening to anyway. The world only makes sense if seen as a complex but ultimately efficient machine. It loathes all those who wait, who take their time, who can't make up their mind or who don't know what they want; but the world is operated by god, whose only form of entertainment is to torture humans with irony, and so you may frequently see these living leeches in line in front of you, or even behind a desk, denying you what you have been forced to request from them, or even in greater positions of authority more rarely.

And soon, viewing the world thus, surrounded by a slow softness housed inside a ticking, growing metal cube, afloat in emptiness greater than infinity, you too may come to be like me, and only hate five small beings, and to be without love, though wishing for it, in the midst of perfecting to the extent of cruelty your own personal professionalism. In fact, for my money, I'd bet you already are.

God is drugs.

Historically, this fact is quite obvious. The beginning of all religions of old, as well as of new, is marked quite distinctly by the habitual usage of the mind-altering.

The development of the role of man as God is quite significant when considered with a wary eye for the presence of substances. In the Americas and in Africa, merely for example of cultural origins of theatrical assumption of the god-role, the process of development was remarkably dissimilar.

In the Americas the native tribes harvested quite a different philosophy for autocracy than their competitors in the mid-east. The male elders, that is, the tribesmen old enough to hunt, would all congregate in a smoke-house and hot-box tobacco, and presumably, at least in South America, marijuana as well. They did this while wearing animal-like costumes, thus explaining both the bestiality of mythological demigods and the belief in seeing spirit-animals by quite a convenient alignment of like terms. It was probably even the coming-of-age ritual to smoke-house a young brave before the beginning of a large hunt, to bind him psychologically to the animal he sought to kill, to sharpen his necessary senses at the cost of any distracting reasoning.

In any event, this ritual was the town-hall meeting of the era, and all decisions regarding government would be considered there, by this men's club, whether they were in a hallucinatory condition at the time or not. While this is still a concentration of power over the many among the few, it is at least semi-Democratic in that it spreads that power out over at least those few.

Further, the theory states, the people, the remaining villagers — all the women and children, would allow this to continue simply because it was tradition and had seemed to work alright so far. They might mop their brow beneath the scorching sunlight a moment while bent over in the field, and while so doing cast a stray glance over at the smoke billowing forth from the blow-hole in the lodge which would evoke a mirthless smirk at those who shirk their share of work, but there was no greater affect of it nor movement against it than that. As we will see in early Egypt, a little beer probably helped out the sore proletariat.

For the evolution of the first pharaohs one must imagine a much harsher ecological environment and its consequence on the minds of its denizens. It was necessary for everyone there to smoke whatever stray plant that they could find. The Lotus flower has been seen constantly in Egyptian art as a motif of some regard, and its presence has been identified as fatally pervasive in mummies wherein it was used in their mortifilological process. This practice made the unforgiving sand dunes a more tolerable place, for most. Then there were the pharaohs.

It is likely in this case that the first rulers were the popular dealers. It might have occurred that these men did not utilize this substance with any satisfaction themselves. It may also be that they were sexually impotent, or displeased with the result of natural intercourse. Thus, they lived under a condition of externally-imposed purity (the totalitarian perversion of Nietzsche's internally-produced and projectile-expressed purity), and were consequently bitter. Therefore they came to be most impatient, and most probably came to construct social order there.

Now, people at that time lived in small, secluded, although crowded, city-states, generally well-protected with a wall and defended by a mandatory army of all the city's adult males. Each city had one god, because each only had a single ruler. It was this mad tyrant who sat atop his tower or his palace and commanded outrageously enormous monuments be erected to him. He might come and stand up on a platform dressed in some bird-like costume, and claim that it was he who caused the sun to move through the sky simply by pointing at it with his finger and applying the entire force of his will to it; and the masses might gasp agape far below him, in awe at his claims and his very extravagance with a red-eyed wonderment.

Although it was almost certainly beer that got those working-class thousands to move those stones throughout the entire desert. The same image may easily be imagined recurring here — the muscle-bound worker pausing for a moment to slurp beer from a community ladle being passed around, and to gaze calmly out at the flattened horizon for a second before the snap of the foreman's whip returns his attention to the performance of his function. The precision of design and technical expertise of physical arrangement may also be argued as evidence for suspecting the around the clock precision sobriety of the overlords.

Thus we have witnessed both autocracy and totalitarianism. For a consideration of Democracy one must examine Greece, Republicanism examine Rome, and pure idealism examine the Jews.

In a Democracy, and (because a republic was based on the process of federalizing a Democracy) in a republic as well, the Gods are displayed as historically Hedonistic. They are meant as socializing examples of the proper behavior for a citizen living in such a system. As Von Sacher Masoch himself has pointed out, the Democracy of Greece and the level of reposed contemplation of such issues as politics would not have been possible if not for all the serious manual labor in the culture being done by soldier-slaves and personally purchased indentured servants. This, one might say, and weed.

Then there are the Jews, who were the first to substantially remove and mystify the experience of being high. This condition itself, that is, being in rapture before the sight of the burning bush, became the subject of their worship. They burnt offerings at alters to the ethereal ideal of the idyll. For they were slaves in Egypt, a conquered people, and dependent upon whatever resources available for relaxation after hours. It is possible that their experience was unique from the experience of any other of the Egyptian workers who did not begin religions because they were smoking some unlike herbs. It is not inconceivable that they had access to a trade route to the far east which provided a more naturalistic and elemental method of delusion.

The Jews were, nonetheless, the only idealists. All other forms of political religion practiced the realist approach of an at least anthropomorphic, but definitely living god. This answered the question quickly and clearly of just who it was that would rule.

The question of what drugs were prevalent in what geographic areas must also be considered when studying the evolution of different religions among different peoples of the world. Religion is the product of racial, drug supply-based isolationism of culture to distinct areas, and thus only by the distribution of all drugs disrespective of their borders and zones of natural production can the differences in religion begin to be broken down intellectually, under their varying influences, in order to bring the peoples of the world closer together and, ultimately, bind all of our drug-influenced different types of genetics into a single human tribal code.

The only drugs produced in the United States of any distinction have been the laboratory drugs of the post-industrial space-age, the extrapolations and recombinations of all other affective elements in the pure setting of science. This method of experimentation without expectation has promoted the formation of pop-culture, that all-inclusive glacier of unsatisfiable avarice. Further, because U.S. drugs require no agriculture, they are more efficient for space travel and, due to the hyper-physicalizing of the brain and diminishment of the role of the body caused by their usage, encourage the brain to leave the body behind and venture into space on its own. Acid needs no botanical maintenance, and is trippier in zero-G.

Be wary, however, for none of this is true. It is all the deranged ramblings of a hung-over stoner, proletarian through and through. It is less likely that any of this happened, or will happen, in the ways described than it is that my feet are on fire, which, by the way, yours are.

Happy Holidays.

Rants on Tallahassee

If you go driving a little while before dawn you might catch a glimpse of one of those coveted and legendary FSU professors. I'm talking about the genuine article here, folks — corduroy jacket with seude patches, beard, pipe, the works. You can try to tell your fellow students if you like, but they will never believe you. A real FSU professor? Highly implausible, they will jibe. Everyone knows that only interns and grad students exist. There's no more such a thing as an FSU professor than there is a Santa Claus or an Easter Bunny. They're just mythical lies to sell greeting cards.

The year I graduated highschool the average age of a student at Tallahassee's community college was 43. The year after I graduated it was about 20. The class which followed mine had a terrible roll-over rate for state-college application acceptance. And the kids who are still in highschool now? All they do is smoke hash, dress inner-city, and try to act "hard core." Chalk it up to the ghetto affect on the minds of American youth through the proletarian classing-down to the groundlings of tv.

Idealist realism: rearranging the entire planet to personally satisfy the odd man out

I wonder what it feels like to get respected. I suppose I'll never know.

Not because I'll never do anything respectable, because I do admirable shit all the time; it's easy; I'm embarrassed when people point it out to me. No, if I never comprehend the flavor of respect, it's just because I'm surrounded by such cattle.

For example, a teacher can require of me that I continually represent my skills to him. Unfortunately no such contract thus obliges him reciprocally. If I do something respectable, I must always, according to the way of the overly-beuracraticized world, give it up to be ruined by the interference of some Other. Here, God, my life is finished: why don't you go ahead and stamp "saved" all over it, eh? "Compromise," say the dogs who eat the other dogs, "is just a part of life." If it hurts like a bitch that's because you just got fucked up the ass like one, you pussy chump.

I believe, like a naive idealist, in real respect. I believe that somewhere there are people who would rather get the thing in front of them done than sit on their hands and drink a fucking beer. I am sick to death of Christians; especially because, like them, I have faith in something I have never seen proved. Only, the thing I bow down to is efficiency, and I believe that New York is a utopian machine.

Perhaps, however, real respect does not exist, but is only an illusion. Perhaps, even on the mean streets of the city, where you have to be tough as broken glass just to live to the age of five, perhaps all respect is only bullshit, is only camouflage. Inside, every man is tired and wishes for transcendence, transformation of their situation which they feel is helplessly out of their hands. Do you see it there? Behind that veneer of focus in your neighbor's eye — a slow, dull glaze that wipes their mind as clear as the day they were born. And then they get a beer or two in them and they start belching all these hopes and dreams that never got met, shit like getting dumped or some missed opportunity that is all in the past and doesn't matter for shit.

Fuck this flesh and all who wear it. My leathery bulldog of a teacher, who can't fucking follow simple instructions given right to his face, his ugly face, his vacuous, bulging eyes, his lost and wandering mind. Fuck him for existing above me on the social ladder, that worthless washed-up whale. And furthermore fuck me for caring about something this way, so perverse. If you don't like something, just fix it.

In every nation, and by their competitions and combinations producing more dominant groupings, in every portion of the world, there are breeding experiments going on that date back to the earliest days of civilization. The first and perhaps greatest civilization, the Old Kingdom of Egypt, began this trend by keeping marriages within family bloodlines, thus occasionally producing retarded offspring but, nonetheless, compacting into only a few individuals the genetic traits required for social superiority.

Democracy makes rule by these families, or rather (because the strict rule of intra-family-marriage has gone out of style in favor of inter-family marriage and the maximizing by region of genetic superiority through combination of the most civilized) by these *rac*es, more difficult, but not impossible. It still allows the manipulation of rule by money — generally “old-money” or “family-money” built up over generations for just such a purpose. Sadly, Democracy does offer the proles a minor sense of hope in the form of the Horatio Alger, “pull yourself up by the bootstraps,” nouveau rich myth as an incentive for their continual slavery. Communism is far worse, because it is founded on a revolution which kills off these sacred bloodlines and replaces them with a clot of those slobes least fit to rule.

The secretive breeding of the best educated humans on the planet continues this very day, although it has lost much of its mystique and, thus, much of its stigma. It is practiced primarily by Republican suburbanites and all “rational” people who desire to maximize their long-term property interests rather than throw away their heritage on such propaganda of suppression as “love.” It is the very root of the philosophy known as “realism.” The fact remains, however, despite the casual nature of these experiments, that they have always been and will always be conducted with the intention of producing a race of leaders. The fact that we do not already have a single world dictator is attributable less, as liberals are wont to claim, to the rate of the development of technology (which is, itself, the result of better breeding in developed nations), but to the fact that these breeding experiments are not yet complete. Certain traits remain to be combined with certain others.

As of today, nonetheless, selective breeding in humans has produced the majority of the world’s leaders. This suppressed master-race proudly shares ruthless self-interest with the most savage beasts of the wild. They have no interest in the variation of cultures and no respect for any culture that glorifies sub-civilized behavior. It is these men, in fact, who comprise any organization of note; even, ironically, the UN. They only seek personal gain or gain for their nation and their breed. They will accept nothing short of eventual global domination and will fight to the death any institution, such as communism, that would seek to thwart what they feel is the most noble of all possible human quests. To them absolutism is the Holy Grail, Kether, the throne of God, the highest imaginable aspect of existence attainable through strivation by the will and cultivation of the essence. It is their destiny, branded on the DNA floating in their blood.

The power through influence on the market of the third social class goes generally unrecognized. The third social class falls for the most part beneath the economic status of even the proletariat, although it is marked by a concentrated layer of extreme wealth as well. It is not defined so much economically as it is by social isolation. It is, of course, the student class.

Its potency rests in its determination of fashion, which will always emulate the proletariat whom it idealizes despite the lack of cultural contributions the proletariat is capable of in reality. The student class vacillates through five year cycles regarding which aspect of the proletariat it will emulate in terms of fashion. For five years it will obey the least suggestion directed at it from the quadrant of the inner city. (Just for minor examples: Punk, 1978-1983; hip-hop/rave 1995-2000.) Alternately the student class will kowtow to their country brethren and the uniforms of the less fortunate in fields such as agriculture and hard industry. (Most notable in recent years is the "grunge" look of the early 90's, combining the traditional pair of blue-jeans virtually grafted onto proletarian genetics with a flannel for five years worth of booming sales of ugly clothes.)

The penchant for idealizing proletarian fatigues is directly the fault of liberal socializing in public schools and universities. It is nearly impossible to have a style that conflicts with the prevalent prole-trend and not alienate oneself from all student social events. (The result of this attempt on modern campuses is the covertly bourgeoisie, self-obsessed, glorifyingly morbid and isolationist style Goth.)

The student class is further defined by their strict adherence to age-based, or perhaps more accurately, development-based conversation topic limitations.

In all years however the discussion of popular music, especially that which occurs beneath and "therefore in opposition to" whatever style of music sells best. In terms of music, tastes are more individual than in terms of wardrobe because different bands, regardless of message, make different amounts of money. Even though it remains currently "uncool" to like any band that has "sold out" (outgrown financially the resources of their proletarian origins), all student-aimed music is basically the same politically, encouraging sublimation through conformity in the guise of catharsis through rebellion. The better a band can hypnotize and paralyze an audience with relatively meaningless charms of revolution, the better liked they will be and the greater their long-term sales. In any event it should seem more obvious to the members of the student class that no cultural or political revolution is ever going to be led by a band so long as that band is being fed fat checks for doing drugs, fucking models and cutting the infrequent quality single.

It can be argued that the only real appeal of music to the student class is of neither an agitational nor propagandizing basis. The true allure, and the other limitation of conversational topicality that transcends level of curricular development, must be drugs. Students are the primary users of drugs, and this is as obvious as it could possibly be. The fact that this continues, and only seems to be strengthening as the quest for the perfect disassociative for every individual leads to further diversification of affects, would seem to imply that it is wholeheartedly condoned by the very people in power who, for the entire time, have claimed to be fighting against it. It is well known that the army prefers to test all sorts of drugs on their grunts in order to find which are the strongest and/or most conducive to mass brainwashing long before the CIA is allowed to ship them into the ghettos.

Students think they understand the way the entire world works, but they do not understand how alike they are in tastes, nor how much power this similarity of buying habits gives them in a free market. For example, if students wanted drugs legalized, all they would have to do would be to briefly unite in a conditional ban of all their favorite clothing and music products. Because the student class comprises the majority of the service sector, increasingly important to and the fastest growing type of work in developed nations, they could even, if they should so happen to take a sudden urge for doing so, shut down society and achieve a communist revolution within a week if they all simply didn't show up for work.

Shh.

Shh, child, quiet. We must keep very still.

The sound of an old man scratching his scalp too hard, the sound of the little girl spitting after she brushes her teeth, the sound of a page turning, even the sound of bleeding, may be loud enough to wake the dead; to wake those who have worked so hard their entire lives, those who deserve their rest; those truly weary, those who have built all we use, those we never thank.

If they are allowed to awaken child, they might be mad. Mad at us for our living, for our yelling and our drunken happiness, the sound of our wasting what we were given. The sound of destroying all they never had. Our peace. Our silence. The peace and the silence which belong to them, which they create by their sleep, by the weight of their papery drying bones.

We can only raise the level of noise in the distance, in the faraway background, a little bit at a time. The sounds of the city growing ever nearer. The gentle sounds of the cars, like water, of factories and engines, the sound of people walking, laughing, of glasses being filled, the washing up of waves, inching their way out into the darkness each night while we sleep, no more than an inch every night. And in the day we never notice, the sound in the distance has gotten a little closer, the world is full of a little more noise than there was the day before. Each night when you sleep the sleep of the dead; you never notice.

This goes on for lifetimes. For eighty years, a hundred years. It goes on lifetime after lifetime for thousands of years. So slowly no one notices. We are very careful not to awaken them. We are so gentle. There is more and more concrete in the countryside. The surface of the earth which we walk across so delicately, barely even pressing down with the entire pads of our feet, never stirs, never worries in its slumber. We are simply a bad dream it is having. A dream which will pass.

Life goes on like this. The sounds of the restless millions slowly filling the cool air beneath the stars, like a cloud, thundering without lightning, covering up the sky. You never notice. And then one evening, in the middle of the night, you awaken to hear the sounds as you have never heard them before, the honking, the construction, the screaming. The screaming of the damned. You think "mercy, mercy," and remember a silence, the memory slowly washing over you. Consuming you in a tense stillness, a pensive hush creeping up from the bottoms of your feet all across your flesh, crawling through your veins and chilling them like the breath of the night. A motherly sigh.

The breath you had been holding for your entire life empties out of you. The sounds which had been pushing down all around you slowly fade. The sound of crickets. The sound of a heartbeat. And then nothing. Nothing.

Sleep, my child. My beautiful one. Sleep and dream of splendid peace. A release from your defeat. Be wonderful, child. Be blissful and grin. Let visions visit you and carry you far away from sin. In your dreams, my lovely one, be as gentle as a caress.

Everything is not the way it should be. Reality fails to live up to logical standards of behavior.

The human mind naturally co-creates its understanding of reality with data compiled sensually. Humans imagine causes; the brain perceives invisible forces affecting the movement of all material objects, beams and channels of influence connecting every effect and affect — obviously most complex around the minds of men (or rather, women, whose patterns of thought and connections to sources of influence are as tangled as a web knit by a spider on mescaline).

But sometimes events occur which seem to have no logical cause; mistakes are made, and the only imaginable cause is a malfunctioning mind, which an observer's mind feels literally sickened to imagine. It must be attributable to some ultra-invisible force, either internal or projected from an unimaginable source. It must be God. God is in mistakes like the devil is in the details.

A lie is an artificial invisible force. It is the creation in the mind of an observer of belief in a false motivation.

Lying is what separates the producers from the consumers. The consumers cannot understand lies, because they have been chemically and socially conditioned to be passive, thoughtless, religious and self-loathing.

The producers have not suffered from this chemical and social conditioning, and are free to think what they please. The language of producers is lies, for not only are their intellectual products unprovable conjectures, but their sale of it to those who do not need it is strongly driven by an indifference for the consequences of lying to the honest and humble.

Proletarian (liberal) producers create an eclectic culture, comparable to an explosive and technicolor mutation. Bourgeois (conservative) producers manufacture society, and all forms of social control; but because they are abiding by the true nature of the human mind, there is much madness and illogic to their schemes.

The first lie drove everyone crazy. Thanks to lies true perception of reality, in affect, consciousness itself, began to flourish and became more complex than sense data alone would support. In this accelerated and natural state of perception, logic fails to apply. There is only the truth of the moment, and the changing of levels and centers of influence, or power. This is how the world was meant to be perceived. In this way all is acceptable, according to a more spiritual suspicion than to quantifiable evidence and logic.

Acid cures the fluoride in the drinking water. It "liberates" its user, restoring them to natural human perception; in other words, the natural condition of the human mind is like an acid trip. It is only the water that gives us the illusion of logic, of justice. Truly it is the world which makes no sense. The human mind has no reason to feel shame for this, no need to seek logic, order. Acid was given to the proletariat by the CIA as a way of frightening the rich; it gave proles the opportunity to, by unlocking their creative contribution to reality, manipulate the world as only the rich had. This is roughly the time our culture became infused with a streak of the truly mentally ill, not just our self-destructive "American spirit" seeking progress at any cost. Acid is like a cheat code in a nintendo game, putting even a novice on the level of a professional.

Here is a question regarding a chicken and an egg; see if you can figure out which came first. Did the evil corporate scientists, who are putting fluoride in the drinking water to change the way people view the world from the trippy way the brain thinks in nature (random, animal, sudden and inexplicable) to the mundane, passive, uncreative mind of the consumer, come first or did the brain begin changing into that mode of thinking centuries ago, and of its own accord, with the advent of religion?

But wait: Don't limit yourself imagining a synthesis of the two based on the conspiracy theories of liberal, revisionist historians just because you are a prole who admires the bourgeoisie and, because you were raised a prole, see most things in moral ("good"/"evil"; "right"/"wrong") and/or religious terms.

I question the world when it doesn't make sense (which is more respectful), whereas John L. only looks at it condescendingly, implying its behavior is questionable (which is more realistic, in a predictably fatalist way).

Police Proverbs

- “Anyone driving an expensive, well maintained car (not truck) with the windows rolled down, day or night, is suspicious and deserves to be arrested.”

Reasoning:

“If the car is expensive and well kept-up, the driver could have been, and therefore should have been, using the climate control. The windows being rolled down indicates the car may have been stolen by a prole.”

A Good Cop Should:

“Run a check on the plates. Be careful to match them up for any plates stolen from uptown or suburban cars reported stolen soon after work-hours. This is about as clever as the car thief is likely to get, being as how they are Proletarian and all.”

- “Rich people always drive fast. Arrest any you see not doing so.”

Reasoning:

“The rich rush home from their plush, climate controlled offices to their plush, climate controlled homes in their plush, climate controlled cars. unless it is to visit only briefly for exercise, the outside world is a terrifying and alien place for the rich; and worse it is infested by potentially criminal proles. If they are going so slow as only a few miles over the speed limit, pull them over for out-of-class, and therefore suspiciously subversive, behavior. If they are rich you can give them a hard time about speeding and then let go without a ticket, making them feel somehow lucky. If they are acting poor (that is, liberal), engaging in any sort of revelry (ex. smoking pot), or otherwise dim-witted, give them a ticket and threaten to arrest them based on their attitude.”

- “There is almost no good point hassling the rich.”

Reasoning:

“If they aren’t committing a crime which can be surveiled and/or for which you can provide a surplus of concrete evidence, it’s better to just leave them alone. If you take a rich person to court without a strong case proving a serious crime, it is likely every single person in the entire chain of command responsible for doing so will be transferred, demoted or fired.”

- “Proles drive inexpensive, poorly maintained cars. Pulling them over is always justifiable.”

Reasoning:

“If they are speeding with the windows up:

They are running away from a crime.

If they are speeding with the windows down, esp. pickup trucks:

They are drunk, and headed toward a crime.

If they are going slowly with the windows up:

They are afraid of getting caught driving fast, probably because they are ‘fucked up;’ they are ‘hot-boxing.’

If they are going slowly with the windows down, esp. ‘hoopty’ cars:

They are hoodlums, inner-city drunks, ‘checking out’ an area for an immediate or distant future crime.”

“Dogs” = men “Cats” = women

“males” = dominants
“females” = submissives

Dogs

The behavior of dogs is more comforting to most researchers than that of most other animals. Though they may be savage when untamed, they are so only in search of food, and do not indiscriminately rove about seeking prey. They are so predictable and reliable they have readily earned the moniker, “man’s best friend.”

In the wild the dog hunts with a pack of other dogs. The hunting is done by the males, while the females prefer to stay in the den and look after the pups. The males often share the company of the pack even while not hunting, and generally prefer romping around to the quiet domestic life. As dogs can lick their own genitals, reproduction is a rare and sanctified occurrence, involving a life-long dedication to a selectively chosen mate. Wild dogs engender large litters of offspring, the most aggressive male of which will be likely to lead the pack in its wanderings and on its hunts.

Domestic dogs are always loyal to their masters and are primarily concerned with protecting a territory which extends out around them. Dogs will bark at one another, but must be trained to attack. The reverse is true in regards to unfamiliar cats, which dogs reject viciously unless otherwise directed.

Cats

Cats are never as smart as they think they are. All cats spend far too much time keeping clean, and try as hard as they can to avoid getting wet. Though they possess more physical agility than dogs, they spend most of their time exploring places dogs would not be interested in going, so it doesn’t really matter anyway. Also there is much more difference between wild and domestic cats than there is between wild and domestic dogs.

Wild cats form a group just as do wild dogs, but it is structured in much the opposite way. There is only one male cat in each group, as they prefer to remain aloof of one another. Around this male is a “pride” of females. It is the females which do all the hunting, bringing food back to wherever the male may have chosen to lounge at the time. They mate indiscriminately, siring several single offsprings, the most aggressive male of which will likely go on to later have the largest pride of his own.

Domestic cats feel merely affinity for their masters. They will respond positively to anyone offering them food, and call any place where they are fed regularly home. While they prefer to turn their backs toward their masters, they demand constant loyalty and affection from them. If this is not provided, or if the affection is unsatisfactory (if the cat is “rubbed the wrong way”) it may be expected to escape and seek shelter elsewhere. Cats create and patrol a large territory around their home, and will fight any invader cat to the death if need be. The reaction of cats to strange dogs is generally mistrust, but strongly influenced by smell, especially the smell of anything appetizing.

Though cats struggle to bury their fowl smelling excrement, dogs still seek it out and, when they can uncover it, consider a delicacy of the highest regard.

Property is primarily based upon fear. Not fear of Others, but fear of the Dark. At night, when all was quiet, save for the stirrings of wild animals, our ancestors huddled around the glow of the fire light. If this light went out, all was lost. The light was not knowledge. The light was not wisdom. It was simply the force that kept the demons at bay. The demons of illusion, of confusion, of hallucination. Simply stated: Fear. And now things are no different, although with time they have expanded, bloated, and concretized through the millennia of human endeavor. This has been the Will to Labor. The will to create a Property of Mankind, that swells ever outward like the twisting universe, a slow explosion of matter from that first spark. Man now not only builds his own properties through existentialism, through control of his instincts, his emotions, his reactions, the reactions of others, but seeks out the properties of the God he feels around him, the breath of the wilderness at the fringes. Man looks out of the small holes in his walls only briefly, towards infinity. But he cannot stand this view. He is still terrified of the Dark. He struggles against God, to relegate the signs God gives us, the symbols God weaves out of apparently random acts, to a cause and affect system which man can apprehend, a machine man can hold in his hand, a cage for God. This machine is called science; it is the search for God's properties in the behaviors of the natural. For Nature is the manifested Properties of God. And if man can list these, can call the names of God, can summon his might at the press of a button, then man has conquered God, has forced himself out into the cosmic night to possess the entire universe. And then there is nothing to be afraid of. Liberals live on the frontier. They are the hands, the eyes. Conservatives still tend the central fire. They are the mind which plots man's continual expansion. Those closest to the light which they have harnessed for themselves least fear the Darkness, for they have forgotten its true face. And those at the frontiers are Fools, for they turn their back on their own brethren in the name of change which is supposed to benefit all. Art is the artificial window hung on the wall of Property, the external wall of civilization, the perimeter of the human mind. The best art, that is, the most compelling, is that which inspires hope for New Properties. It attempts to embrace the latest discoveries of science for the purpose of "pushing the envelope." It attempts to create the image of the previously impossible in order to inspire its cowardly audience to venture slightly further outward into the Dark. But artists fear the dark perhaps most of all. Much more than naive scientists, much more than inflammatory rhetoricians. For they can see even more than they can portray. They understand more than they can explain. They see God's messenger's, the shadows, but cannot yet speak their language. The first cave paintings were monsters made of animals and men. Strangers and Predators, transformed by the magic of art into the familiar and into prey. This is to pray. To address God as an unafraid equal. But this has never succeeded, nor can it; for man is neither unafraid, nor God's equal. God is not a being possessed of the same emotions as we. He cannot fear. For he encompasses all. We imagine, perhaps, that when we encompass all, we too will have nothing to fear. But it slips by our faith that there are always new fears. As long as there are new frontiers, people will be seeing demons reaching out from them to grab at our future in the form of our children. Shadows that would creep to the very heart of our sacred fire and choke it at its fuel sources. Our fire burns on our art. It feeds on our art, our expressions of our pure, simple desire to be unafraid, to be that which we are not, and which we can never be; to Become God, to achieve his throne; to lay claim to the Impossible. All those who say that art is the pride of man, and that it exists for the purpose of his pleasure, to beautify the interior of his self-made and self-maintained prison, are the most blind of all. For now the people who dwell between the frontier and the center have begun to fear both sides. The blinding light on one side, and the pulling Darkness on the other. There is no limit to the cowardice of man. Only for these people, trapped in between, there is no imaginary property which can credit them transcendence. Property is cold comfort to men who fear their own potentials.

Gabe is Dead.

Gabe was not a listener. Gabe was not a mouthpiece, a gopher or a go-between. Gabe was not a walking web-site. Gabe was not afraid of distraction. Gabe was none of the things that jocks and their closet fans called him. Gabe was not what his closest friends called him, either to his face or behind his back. Gabe was an ideal. If you told Gabe a cliché, like, “here we go again,” or “weak,” he might just as easily tell you you were being a billboard for consumerism as point out to you that you had fallen into a path another has laid before you. Or he might only have thought these things, and let you prove them. If you did not like Gabe, you missed out. If you thought you knew him, you were wrong. Gabe himself wasn’t his own point. Well, he was, but maybe he was the only one who didn’t know it. He’ll be missed.

Gabe is dead and now we must face the dawning of a Gabeless day. Like the morning star all that remains of Gabe’s place in our lives is a photo, a stale picture regurgitated by an even drier machine. Perhaps we might overhear someone quoting Nietzsche at a party sometime, or perhaps get stumbling drunk and not throw up, and think of him. Perhaps our luck is not so sweet. Gabe is dead and the voices that replace him are not much like his. Where his was patient, calm, seeking of fun, theirs is cowardly, accusatory, desperate. And most of all, where his was honest, theirs are mocking, and false. Gabe was everything they are not. Gabe was.

There is still music. That alone remains. As alive as it can be, there is music. That remains. I cannot help but feel tragic, and I apologize for my tone. Gabe was a friend of mine as well. I’m going to miss him as much as everyone else. Even as I sit here and write these lines, thinking back over the wasted past that seemed almost bearable at the time if only for a few friends’ more present light, I am caught in a superimposition of the last scene of a movie, where Richard Dreyfus is writing the final pages of a book. How can we not feel this removed, I wonder? How can we know who we are anymore? If Gabe were here he would have all the answers. Yet if he were here there would be no cause for question. So would we really be better off?

On similarities in the religious practices of humans and animals

In place of the more commonly occurring academic concessions necessitated by the formalism ingrained adaptatively by the rigorous institutionalising of science following the same mold over several centuries as its older brother the church I will forward only the intuitive leap of the truly religious or curious. It falls upon the reader to accept that the aforementioned premise will be fully explained over time.

The keeping of sacred objects is not equivalent, as it was considered in the latter ancient times — after the advent of socializing monotheism, to idolatry. It is merely the earlier, no less sophisticated, associative technique of the organized mental cellular structure of the brain, common to all forms of self-motivating biological organism. The only difference is that of scale and degree of deligation.

For elder vertebrate life forms of minimal mental development this process manifests itself in memory storage and mental mapping. It would be impossible for fish, for example, to navigate in isolation without a form of the same power that humans attach to religious practice — namely, the essentially holographic superimposition of their internal reality with the external environment through a softening of the sensory field dividing the nous from the logos.

This process, in organisms of more highly evolved mental structure such as mammalian vertebrates, displays itself in the attachment of particular attributions to specific locations and/or objects, climbing up through a gradient of quantifiable displays of affection essentially initiatory in nature to culminate in the primate branch with the use of tools connecting preconceived intention to the accomplishment of specific endeavors.

Finally, in humans, we find the same process. Although tempered by the strengthening of the ego resultant from the awareness of the cultivation of awareness, which, it can be said, is what this so-called process ultimately results to, and which places humanity, in the hierarchy of our own self-created understanding, at the middle point between the objective animal and the subjective eternal aspect anthropomorphised as God, this same process is present both in the domestication of animals as surrogate self-complimentarity in the form of living examples of our own ability to subjugate reality to our holographic superimpositions, and in our equally proportioned sensations of overwhelmedness when confronted in our personal experiences with ultimate unknowns. It is the same force within us that precategorizes objects of affection for potential usage in moments of emotional crisis as seeks out causes for supersaturation of sensory stimulus.

One of the primary hitherto identified differences in the human as opposed to all other animals behavioral utilization of this process is the seeming necessity for recognition of mortality connected to the human utilization. The comparatively longer lifespan of the human seems to allow the recognition of changes to a being over time as occurrences in an identifiably constant pattern, and this recognition leads both to an attachment of dominance to the design based on the same attribution of final importance to duration of survival, and to a desire to attain to permanent or at least practice the acquirement of gradual changes to the form of the being which serves as the vessel of transmission for this motivating potential which is realized both in terms of the temporal template, and the raw resource of energy provided by the interaction of consciousness with material reality through the senses.

Animals seem to have much less forethought in their collection of stimuli, due, at least partially, to their having fewer items on their list of lifelong goals than the average human. With every world, philosophy, or, synonymously, lifetime created by a member of humanity there arise resultantly a certain number of new potential opportunities for the furtherance of interest along lines defined by the parameters of subsets to the temporal pattern. In this way humans can produce a unique breed of life which animals cannot, namely, intellectual offspring. On the other hand, so long as humans and animals share the same amount of overall space and continue to have interaction, the attribution of superfluously identifiable traits to animals by human intelligence seems to compensate for the difference in the pace of otherwise common evolutionary development.

It is this conflict across levels of development within the most highly structurally evolved animal minds between awareness of mortality and interest only in the immediate that leads to distraction by differences from the essentially intuitive attention to similarities expressed here.

On Literature and Evil

In the realm of fiction there exists in pure form the essence of what man can distill from and place external and in opposition to himself. In one word, what has come to be called by the term Evil. It is not the act of distillation, nor the externalization of the idea or set of symbolic images associated with this term that earns it its unpleasant connotations. These processes, it will be demonstrated, are not even inherent to fiction, but are a fact of consciousness beyond a certain creative stage in its evolution. Evil, as can be illustrated using the model of fiction, derives exclusively from the setting up of forces in opposition to consideration.

Firstly let us deal with extrapolation and integration. These are the actions of the formative behavior native to man and certain related primates whereby they can discover useful objects in their environment and incorporate them either into their goal-oriented tasks or their larger, often goal-oriented social networks. From these acts we can pinpoint the moment in evolution at which the projective nature of the thalamus and cerebellum come into effect. Through these activities it is man alone that has come to apply his potential for organization to the ideological realm, distilling useful data from his own mind and constructing it external to himself, often according to pre-established frameworks of contextual relationship. In this way the atlatl and stoicism may both be seen as merely extensions of the same mental energy through similar molds of impression upon the pertinent realm involved, either physical or philosophical.

This being said then, let us examine the particular distinction between the realms of fact and fiction, both of which are mental creations of man that overshadow his physical environment, but remain themselves largely safe in the realm of philosophy. In the case of fact, the action involved is largely the cataloging and arrangement based on similarities of form or function of observable data that is already existent in the surrounding environment, including previously referenced materials of a more intellectual nature, such as works of comparative theology and relative metaphysics. Here there is little room for the existence of Evil, though there may appear to be in the short-term great disagreement between researchers, a scholarly perspective reveals that whatever hypothesis tests the most reliably true is inevitably concurred upon to be the most accurate. Thus, even during the evils of the inquisition, the light of science was never extinguished, and can be seen, as a result of these trials, to have in fact been strengthened. Often, although again confined only to an ascholarly, short-term perspective, the most recent results are concluded to be evil, as was the case during the inquisition, but once again this type of reactionism is inevitably inverted as soon as beneficial applications are found and shared.

In the case of fiction, however, there are no such standard guidelines for the integration of newly extrapolated material, nor are the disagreements set in so convenient or settleable a situation as academia. In the case of fiction, rather than the assumption of the existence of a measurably observable material universe which has hierarchical interaction with the consciousness, it is the very essence of Evil that is taken as the pre-existent constant. What is meant by this term is, loosely, the triggering of a retreat mechanism in the bio-survival circuit, or the experience of some unpleasant stimulus. Without this assumption there would be no conflict, and without conflict there would be no energy for the progression of a plot line.

The result of this is that, while writings of fact are bound by their history to eventually and reliably provide working tools, fiction is free to create whatever forms or vessels it feels would be useful in fleeing, confronting and/or overcoming this implied negativity of curious desire. Without the construction of such avenues of resource there would be no conclusion to the work, and it would fail to come into existence in the library of its genre. The constructs that it forms are, therefore, determined by the approach-retreat binary circuit, and are invariably either toys or weapons. The toys defeat the evil by miniaturization, rendering it harmless in a scale of relativity. Weapons usually pit the characters involved against a force larger than themselves, offering greater apparent rewards for their victory.

Usually the essence of Evil being confronted in the context of fiction is not necessarily negative stimulus to the reader, as the reader remains objective. It is negative stimulus to the character or characters, usually expressed in the form of or overcome by harmless play or by destruction. While the variable components and results of this are apparently infinite, there is a cap that can be placed on them, an unspoken corner where writers usually draw the line and turn their writing back on itself, limiting their readers. Of non-real negative stimulus to the characters the most unimaginably horrifying is ultimately a realization of their true condition as nonexistent characters in a work of fiction. In other words, the essence of Evil embodied in fiction is fact.

The same is true in the inverse relationship. For the common reader of fiction they will find their preference frowned upon by academics as escapism, implying some unprovable defect in existent reality. Similarly, the most unspeakable crime of the statistician is the fudging of results to arrive at a known misconception, or an unprovable theorem. So, for the student, cheating on an exam is punishable by reprimand, but the attempted fiction of passing off plagiarized materials as their own invention is often of consequences much more severe. Thus, it would seem, the only Evil feared from fact is a tool that will not function because it is not real. In short, the only Evil in fact is fiction.

The reason for this is that it tests, or strains, man's capacity for meaningful extrapolation/integration. It is of approaching impossibility to distill and externalize an idea if one cannot determine the extent of their own environment, for example, the difference between internal and external.

Fermions and bosons are molecules of dimensions. Their spin potential variability is determined by trans-dimensional interaction. The dimensions themselves remain outside of and beyond the forms they generate, as the nuclei of two covalently bonded atoms. They are as the philosophical definition of the ideal.

Before we can consider the specific cases of fermions and bosons we must delve a little deeper into the nature of the dimensions. It cannot be argued that the first dimension is a singularity, the ultimate embodiment of symmetry. The second dimension is, equivocally, planar geometry. These are ideal forms, impossible to express in our material reality, and exist as realms of pure equation. Without them, however, we could understand nothing of our own condition, and would possess no mathematics by which to quantify nature. In fact, without them, nature itself could not have assumed the forms and functions which we now know. However, even the simplest understanding we possess cannot belong to one of these dimensions alone. Consider the point for example. Its properties are compression and scale correspondence, where the former applies to a singularity and the latter to planar geometry. Neither has any meaning except in relationship with the other, and what meaning we do comprehend of either is therefore a creation of both. Without the point, a Cartesian coordinate system could not exist, but without a singularity, there would be no point.

This natural progression continues upward through the dimensions even up to light and beyond, which I have here classified as the fifth dimension. This is due to the unique properties of light which seem to imply a domain unto itself, particularly as it relates to time; the primary example of this being the seeming transtemporal nature of tachyons, which are merely superluminal photons.

The fourth dimension should be set aside for special consideration as well, as doing so now will relieve the pressures of later describing the particles it helps to form. The fourth dimension is simultaneously spatial and temporal, meaning that it generates highly complicated structures over fixed intervals. The complexity of its spatial component is due to its having as its foundation an open geometry, in progression from the flat second and closed third dimensional geometries. Its temporal component, however, is semi-second dimensional, as it is traditionally observed to unfold binarily between past and future. I have demonstrated elsewhere that this relationship is indeed far more complex than this, but in the context of this exposition we need only remember these two defining traits for this dimension.

Now we may consider the dimensional molecular cases of fermions and bosons.

Fermions ("real" particles) possess fractional spin as they occur between the third and the fourth dimensions. They arise as the result of the interaction of matter and energy between the pure, formal geometry of the third dimension and the pure, formal time of the fourth dimension. They begin as ultimate, unformed material chaos. As time passes this mass becomes motivated, and an exchange of matter and energy begins to take place, constructing a framework of pre-existent geometric relationship to govern the materialization of real particles. Fermions' symmetry is quarterly in three dimensional coordinate space, meaning in any direction it is rotated a fermion will look the same after less than one complete turn. In other words, its matter-energy structure is determined by geometric (symmetry) and temporal (spin) interaction. These may be measured as either particle or wave.

Bosons ("virtual" or force-carrying particles) arise similarly, but possess integer spin potential variability. The fourth dimension exists in field form, and the fifth dimension in no solid form at all, and therefore there are no geometric restrictions placed on symmetry. Bosons thus existing between pure Time and pure Light can only be measured as waves, and as such obey spin in accordance with oscillation interval, or frequency constant wavelength.

The nature of further dimensions, and therefore implications for the particles they may generate through interaction, is discussed elsewhere.

Four Elemental Forces

The concept of grand unification theories for the four identified forces governing nature are not as distant as the common physicist believes. This stems from a deficiency of science to cope with itself. It has developed autonomous branches that study predetermined avenues of inquiry, and prefer to share with one another as little as possible. This mentality derives from the fear instilled in early scientists by the Catholic church during the dark ages, where the natural sciences were considered part of the domain of only heathen peoples, and reinforced by the inquisition, as punishment for open mindedness to the ideas of the politically opposed. As such scientists are often left less qualified to comment on the impact of their own research than are other scientists, and this would be proved even truer if the shroud of mysticism that exists dividing scientific fields were lifted. For example, an archaeologist is perfectly content to observe that the great pyramids of the Egyptian Giza Plateau are among the greatest monumental works ever accomplished by our species; and similarly the head physicist of a large team of researchers working with a particle accelerator would be quick to point out how essential and ground breaking their work is, not only to them, but to all of science, and therefore to all of mankind. Who, then, but the philosopher is left to point out this similarity? Is it possible that archaeologists could derive as much from attempting predictions about the future of civilization as a physicist can from looking back over history?

Let me elucidate. There exists as one of the fundamentals of scientific reasoning the study of similarity in diverse data. Without this there would be little application for discovery in the world of technological progress, and it would cease to exist from a research and development standpoint. This practice is one of the foundations of the method of the testable hypothesis, and predates it by some duration, during which time science was considered magic. The collection of correspondences thus being so basic it is shocking sometimes how blithely overlooked certain ones often remain, as artifacts of great value that lie buried beneath an inch of sand.

One of these such is that between the four forces and the four elements. A grand unification theory, far from being beyond man, is beneath him, and surrounding him, and has been, all along. I propose the following assignations of equivalency: water the gravitational force; air to the electromagnetic force; fire to the weak nuclear force; and earth to strong nuclear force. Furthermore I propose that these meanings have always been implied by texts pertaining to either.

- Earth: In physics this force determines that the spin one force carrying particle the gluon holds together quarks in the proton and neutron, and the proton and neutron in the nucleus of an atom. According to confinement these particles are always bound in such a way that they create self-nullifying, stable particles. When this fails to occur unstable particles, such as mesons (a quark with an anti-quark) and glueballs (several gluons), may be produced. As the energy level of these particles is increased they display asymptotic freedom, meaning that they behave more like observable free particles.

Characteristics of the earth element parallel these traits of sub atomic physics. There is land beneath the sea that joins the seemingly disparate continents. There are faults along this land where disturbances occur, altering the terrain of the adjacent land forms. A mass of earth, such as the moon, effects its own gravity. Etc.

- Fire: This force determines radioactivity which is carried by three spin one massive vector bosons (W plus, W minus, and W naught), each with a mass of around 100 GeV, making the forces they carry limited to a very short range. These display spontaneous symmetry breaking with the spin one photon at energies greater than 100 GeV. It is by radioactive decay that the half life of all the periodic elements is determined.

The resemblances of this force to fire are implicitly apparent. It should also be noted that this force causes the nuclear reactions of the sun.

- Air: The electromagnetic force interacts only with charged particles such as electrons and quarks. It determines the exchange of force carrying spin one photons emitted when an electron changes energy level shells in its orbit of an atomic nucleus. It also governs the exchange of real photons between an electron changing energy shell levels and another electron, which is caused by absorption of the emitted photon to fall to a lesser energy level. This force controls most of the events that occur on the subatomic scale, as it affects quantum particles in much the same way gravity does the planets.

It would be easy to conclude that this attribution is already well known simply from an awareness of the colloquial term for radio wave transmission. More subtle applications lie in its cross referencing. Fire feeds on air (the radioactive decay of charged particles), and air as it is classically known contains molecules of water (the yet undetected real graviton). Air surrounds earth (as the electron enshrines the nucleus), and from an ancient's point of view, fire is suspended in the air in the form of the sun (nuclear fusion arising only within the boundaries of an electromagnetic field).

Allow me to pause at this point and add that, though the spontaneous symmetry breaking of the photon succeeds in unifying the forces of fire and air, neither of these possess asymptotic freedom; instead they grow more powerful at higher energy levels. It is thought that, at a very high level of energy called the grand unification energy, the forces of water fire and air would be the same, and that, simultaneously, all the half spin matter particles, such as quarks and electrons, would also be unified. This is as far as grand unification theories have gotten since Medieval times.

- Water: The basis of the weakest of the forces is that a massless spin two virtual graviton is exchanged between particles over long distances, delivering a consistently attractive gravitational wave. What this translates to in figures is the inverse square law, that if the distance between two objects were doubled, the gravitational attraction between them would be reduced by two squared. Similarly if it were halved, the attraction would increase by the same factor.

This is really the most esoteric of the elemental forces, since water as we know it can exist in any one of three states: liquid, solid, and gaseous. The liquid state is equivalent to the gravitational waves that are exchanged between objects, which themselves can be either solid or gaseous in nature. Nebulae of gas can also exert gravity, particularly within themselves, as is necessary for the formation of stars. But what is really implied by this data is that gravity itself has different states. It can assume the solid particle form of the graviton, or the liquid form of the gravitational wave, but a third form also exists, that of vapor, steam from which condensation can arise. Rather than being the least unifiable force it is likely gravity holds the very key to understanding such phenomenon as spontaneous symmetry breaking.

It may also be noted that there is a strong correlation between this force and the development of consciousness. Just as without the force of air the force of fire could not exist, it seems that consciousness, or if you like, light, and water are interdependent. It is well documented that the phases of the moon have a measurable affect on the fringes of sanity, and it is equally easy to note that cultures flourish near tectonic shift zones.

Finally there are the rest of the real particles that comprise all matter in the universe, making up the fifth Platonic solid, to which is attributed cosmos. This completes the mirror reflection of the four terrestrial elements with the four celestial forces, coupling the esoteric concept of the indescribable heavens with the exoteric fact of all innate matter, just as physics has its parity in archaeology.

On Tachyons

Beyond the speed of light the relationship of matter and energy reverses. This is demonstratable through several functions. According to classical physics as velocity increases towards the speed of light mass must increase, and yet photons as particles of pure light seem to exist without having the same affect as superstrings might be expected to. The answer to this apparent riddle lies in the behavior of real particles when accelerated to asymptotical luminal velocities in generating their virtual or antiparticle equivalents and detonating themselves. In other words, matter creates opposing energy as it approaches light speed, and in this way the lack of additional mass is accounted for. Similarly energy sped up towards the speed of pure light converts itself into a relatively small amount of matter, as in the case of the photon, which obeys all the rules of classical mechanics for a free particle.

Therefore, can a superluminal particle exist, and if so is it the equivalent of subluminal matter or subluminal energy? I propose that the tachyon, like any subluminal particle, boson or fermion, has both matter and energy characteristics, but that they obey a complex relationship that bears only passing resemblance to the matter-energy dynamic that defines the standard subluminals. This is to say that, if a matter energy correspondent relationship were to exist for superluminals, it would imply also the interaction of the four elemental forces that comprise this dynamic, but that these would be elevated to a different dimensional level.

The second dimensional temporal nature of tachyons can thus be illustrated best through parity of particle decay due to the strong nuclear force. This raises two related points. The first is that tachyons would be, according to this theory, composed of more than a single particle, implying matter rather than energy as their base state. This also means that, due to the luminal velocity inversion of these states, their subluminal equivalent would be in an energetic base state. This brings us to the second point, which is that, according to the strong nuclear force, the virtual particle equivalents of the photon are massive vector bosons with high mass and limited force carrying range. This means that it is the vector bosons rather than the photon that are primary candidates for subluminal equivalency to tachyons.

The most important implication of this data however is that tachyons may be more alike atoms than either electrons, neutrons or photons, insofar as they are comprised of more than one basic component. If this were the case, then we would be looking at not the inversion of an atom, which would be a nuclear structure external to the probability cloud of electron positions, not unlike the exoskeleton of an insect, but rather the inversion of a boson, particularly a massive vector boson. This would mean firstly that there would be little spin to a tachyon, and practically no mass. But more significantly it would mean that the dimensional relationship nature of the force carrier would be inverted.

The dimensional structure of bosons, as I have demonstrated elsewhere, is of a transdimensional molecular nature. If the atom is a microcosm of the solar system, so is the inside of a quantum particle a microcosm of a molecule, with two or more dimensions being joined by the applicable internal or inherent mechanics of the particle just as atomic nuclei are joined by the mechanics governing electrons. In the case of the massive vector bosons this places them between the fourth and the fifth dimension, as their base state is energy, and they exist primarily in wave form.

Therefore the inversion of this would be that the dimensional molecular structure would be external to the particle under its affect rather than a fact of its internal composition. This very eloquently accounts for the transtemporal nature of tachyons, as well as the evidence for this expressed in their potential for particle decay. I propose further that the particles emitted by this decay are photons, and that tachyons exist as particles of pure light, that is, what I am calling the fifth dimension, only because they are internal to the internal fifth dimensional element of photons. Furthermore the dimensional shell described here is of a warp variety.

What the Turtle saw

Dimensions are the ripples on a pond. Consider this:

A stone is dropped in to water, though one falling out of water may be seen to produce the same affect. There is a small splash, and suddenly the surface tension is awakened. A network of motion begins to spread outward, the points along its boundaries connected by delicate arcs of another nature, unseen and all encompassing. The molecules of water rise up and then fall, like breathing, slowly being pushed away from the contact center. The ripples spread until their energy is dispersed amidst these lesser churning. In the middle of it they continue long beyond the moment of impact. The first ripple creates a small bowling in the smooth medium, and this beckons up the liquid from below to restore the original state. The tugging of the departing first wave calls forth a surplus, and the bowling inverts into a bell. The bell collapses at its apex, shooting off another ripple. And so the process continues, until the ripples being ejected are of such a little magnitude that the center swell begins to calm, and finally the entire pond is restored to a plane wave state through averaging.

The first dimension is the splash point, the source of the disturbance. It sends out the first ripple, which is a math that takes form through a corresponding geometry. Even as this is happening, however, the first dimension continues to invert. It undergoes a second schism, emanating anew. The first ripple becomes the second dimension, and the second ripple becomes the first, closer to the central singularity. The second dimension encircles and encloses the first dimension; it has grown older with its birth.

This process continues. A third ripple is generated — a tricycle to the eternally young first dimension, and the second dimension becomes a familiar elder. The outermost ripple contacts the greatest number of molecules, and disperses them all, generating as much diversity along the surface as the singularity does across it. Once the third dimension was the first dimension. Once it was the second. Once the second was the first. And so on. The singularity will be the same size no matter the mass of the visiting matter. And no matter the number of ripples the pond will always calm.

And here are all the three states of water. The liquid, solid and gaseous. All of this is as true during the rains as it would be of a falling snowball. And so it is of our dimensions. Each of the three ripples thus far described corresponds to a state of the medium, and as the fourth ripple begins, let us examine these. They may be organized by complexity of structure. The third dimension offers the most complex forms, followed by the second, and the first possesses the least. They are thus as the solid, the liquid and the gaseous, therefore, in accordance with excitation of molecules while they struggle to achieve a state of stable structure.

As the third dimension becomes the numbered fourth following the emanation of the fourth consecutive ripple from the disruption point, called the singularity because of its conical destabilizing impact on the continuum rather than as a real comment on its density, it comes to cradle all of these. And so, when the first ripple went awash, there was solid matter, and the water turned to snow. As the second wandered out there was an exchange of energy, and the snow turned to steam. And as the third issues forth there is pure light, the essence of energy, which is itself the essence of matter; the steam condensed to water. Yet these followed in reverse order, for the first ripple is become the last. These are even as the four elemental forces of earth, of fire, and of air, which are the strong nuclear, weak nuclear and electromagnetic aspects of physics. Fire stands in the central place of water for the matter energy exchange, but is in fact the first dimension, located at the outermost, in the form of light. The elemental force of gravity, itself represented by water, here is mirrored by the fourth dimension, the outermost ripple, carried longest, from the first, through the rest, the most diverse. It stands for the remainder combined, a hologram, with each part a smaller replica of their combined whole.

on electrons

Matter-energy is the medium of the third dimension. Probability is the medium of the fourth. As the third dimension is geometrically closed, its manifestations are constant. This accounts dimensionally for the universal conservation of energy. The fourth dimension is geometrically open, meaning it has inherent spin mechanisms, causing its manifestations to change cyclically. There is no equivalent of this in solid geometry. This is a process evidenced exclusively in reality, in the matter-energy exchange. The fourth dimension acts upon or through the third to effect this. In the fourth dimension itself this is probabilistic symmetry.

As always, the best example of something is the most common. In the case of probabilistic symmetry this is the electron. It has long been known that the electron functions as a particle, with spin $1/2$, and as such acts in accordance with the predictions of Fermi statistics. These statistics can accurately determine the behavior of the electron, but cannot fully explain its quantum nature. They can, as a result of this, only account for position or velocity of the electron for any given time, but never both at once. This limitation of technologically supplemented human insight has been taken for granted, but it has a simple, dimensional solution.

When an electron is viewed as raw probability, the mystery of its lack of quantifiable solid particle state disperses. Likewise does the supposed defect in its character that renders its exact position and speed elusive. It is seen, then, that the electron is a manifestation of pure electromagnetic charge suspended in the fourth dimensional hypersphere of the nucleus.

The electron is electrical because it carries part of the overall potential kinetic energy of the atom, and it is magnetic because it carries only half of this charge (the negative half) which is distinguished due to the attractive force placing it in the closest stable position with relationship to its dipole. Each electron carries a fixed amount of charge, and each nucleus has a fixed amount of mass. The number of electrons increases with the amount of the charge of the nucleus. The Pauli exclusion principle organizes the electrons in shells and subshells the degree of ellipse of which is determined by their radii. These radii, and the proportional distance of subshells from one another, are determined by the mass of the nucleus. This level is far too small for there to be gravitons being exchanged between electron and nuclei so the classical mechanical model of the planets of the solar system orbiting the sun does not hold water in this case; but there is obviously a force at work here keeping the electrons in stable orbits.

This force is probabilistic symmetry. The radii of the orbits of the electrons are determined by the hypersphere of the nucleus, and the subshells are likewise determined by hyperspheres of the primary electron shells. This explains why the electron exists as an indefinite point rather than a definite particle, and why it possesses spin. The energy of its electrical charge gives it exchange potential that translates in the matter-energy field of the third dimension to mass, but this mass is elusive, as it is apparently distributed about within a probability field. Therefore, if we go looking for this mass to be concentrated in a single point so that we can call it an electron, it ceases to have momentum, and vice versa. We are not, obviously, after a classical three dimensional form here. What we are looking for is a concentration of probability indicative of the symmetry breaking that occurs between dimensions.

The most interesting thing to note about electrons at this stage is not the uncertainty of them, but that probability itself can carry charge, and therefore possesses mass. Probabilistic symmetry constitutes where one dimension breaks through into another. In the case of the electron this is the first dimension breaking through into the second. Therefore the geometry at work is very simple. It is planar, confined to the second exponent. Calculating position over velocity is as easy as dividing the area of the averaged orbit by the combined negative charge squared, where the former term factors in hyperspherical radius, and thus accounts for spin.

Einstein's grandfather clock

It is called the grandfather clause to time travel, and it is one of the silliest notions in all of physics. It derives from a hypothesis regarding distortions of the space-time continuum such as are allowed by the equations of Einstein's special theory of relativity, although it belies only a layperson's knowledge of this theory's intent and application. It states that a paradox would occur if one were to travel back in time and kill their own grandfather. Most of the speculated results are bound by both lack of scholasticity and dodging of imagination. They include speculations regarding anti-matter without accounting for its energy of origin, phase-shifts into nonexistence without concluding to where one might exactly disappear, and sudden warps to alternate timelines, without apology to anthropism. All of them insufficient.

To understand what would really happen in this rather outlandish mental experiment we should attempt to think with the portion of our brain that is comprised of the energy released by Einstein's demise, and still bears his signature ennegrams, or rather, to evoke the part of us that is Einstein. Only he would be sufficiently amused at this puzzle to walk us patiently through it according to his own postulates. So from this point on I will proceed in that fashion of mediumship.

"If one were to travel back in time and kill their own grandfather what would happen is this: they would cease to exist as the person they had been and find that they had been a different person all along.

"When dealing with relativity we must remember that there are two fixed sets that correspond to one another and between them a relationship which can be infinitely warped. As in the case of matter and energy, where light equals their rate of exchange, and in the case of time and space with the function of gravity. Here, though, we are dealing with the past and the present, where you represent the present which has travelled into the past and is existing within it, like a nested cube.

"These two things cannot destroy one another, they can only coexist. So by killing your grandfather in the past you do not destroy the present, only change it to fit with the new version of the past.

"Remember that energy equals the square root of mass over the speed of light. Therefore when your grandfather ceases to be, the energy expressed in the form it had occupied in the timeline connecting the past to the present is liberated, and to maintain equilibrium must assume a different form. This is because, as one calculates the square root of mass, one is shearing a portion of it away, and this portion becomes energy.

"And when one calculates for the square root of the speed of light, because this is fixed, two things can occur. First, we know that when solving for the square root we are deducting a portion from the original amount, but that we cannot do this from a fixed sum. Therefore, either the velocity or the luminosity must increase as the fixed sum is compressed into a smaller amount of space by the algebra.

"If the luminosity increases this does not need to occur in the traditional sense of the room getting brighter. It can mean also that a greater amount of matter-energy in the form of photons can be spread out over the time-line than was previously available, allowing for the occurrence of different events.

"If the velocity increases then the photons will become tachyons, and will be travelling from the present to the past, and thus transferring the energy released to you.

"In the first case you will find that you have a different past. That the man you killed was only your grandfather before you killed him, but that after you killed him events turned out differently, and a different man became your grandfather.

"In the second case you will find that you have a different present. You will have become your own grandfather and be caught in a spiritual tesseract. This is not a paradox, but does create a loop in time. It is possible to break free of this loop by killing yourself, which will release the energy of the pattern you have been embodying, or by killing the son who will become your father, and thus changing the course of the timestream for you."

In the immortal words of Albert Einstein: "I feel the insignificance of the individual, and it makes me happy."

From the encounter of Sire Thomas Todd, a freemason, with vampires:

“It is known that they [vampires] prefer to feed on the red blood cells, but that their crest includes the colors of both types of blood cell, red and white. It has been my experience that they usually have a sore somewhere upon their body, often upon the face or the hand, as around the mouth or forehead, and as upon the back of the hand or of the wrist, that they may occasion to, from time to time, taste of themselves as it were, and so are loathesome creatures socially, as they are perpetually wiping at their lips. They are often very sociable creatures nonetheless, and in a gathering of as many as one lodge full of people there could be as many as one genuine vampire, and at least two suspects. It is rumored by some when they are drunk as upon the blood which is their meal, as they may become somewhat light-headed in the company of a crowded ballroom after nursing upon their own selves for some while and done up, that the court which exists for the vampires judges on quantum superposition event of collapse in the wave function of the active awareness into concentration immediately prior to their proceedings, and upon such, as it calls them, manifestations, bases its rulings often before considering the evidence regarding the cases of those who have infracted in some way the one true law of ‘Do What Thou Wilt As Above, Do What Thou Wilt So Below.’ They are said, according to the Mistress with whom I have spoken, to, in this way, strengthen their powers of ‘reality control’ by causing the events to have unfolded in a way that is meaningful to them through disorientation of the evidence by the interaction of the electrical currents in their cerebellums and the information units stored in the letters and words of the evidence through a subjective medium of molecules.”

In Europe following the Renaissance there was a revival of the tribal past, in terms of observations which were naturalistic and elegant rather than high and contrived, as though there were by those peoples a sort of cogently agreed upon tendency to be looking back through the mind of man before history, so as to discover him in his roots, his habitat, and reveal his true essence. This led to scientific discoveries and the Inquisition, as well as Protestant integration of more subtle practice than Catholic ceremonies, such as can be performed by guildsmen and men of trade and labor, thus making Christianity as practical as were the pagan religions before it. What went unrecognized as those peoples of Europe were possessed in the spirit of discovery and revelation of the savage, animalistic, missing link between man and animal, and gaining entrance into his holy of holies, the birthplace of civilization, was that they had manifested this in the natural progress of their existence. That the seeking of man after his soul in Europe has coincided with the rising up of great, young civilizations in the Americas, which were then as undiscovered as Atlantis, means that correspondent synchronicity occurred between these peoples, which was then translated into their contact with one another.

What is really so tragic is that the peoples of England were ultimately as relentless in their pursuit and persecution of the native peoples of North America as the peoples of Spain were to those of South America.

Probability Bomb

An electron maintains a single path in its nuclear orbit, even when it changes shells, or energy levels. We can only say, therefore, that these shells exist as points on a circle around a sphere where it becomes more probable to find the electrical charge acting as a particle. Yet they are more than this, for they seem to pre-exist the electron's movement toward one from another. That is to say that, with the proof of the existence of one energy shell, comes implication of the potential for all others. The result of this is simply that, when the electron is compelled to move, by the interaction of a photon for example, it pursues a phi bound course until it reaches the next energy shell or sub-shell, where it is impelled to adopt a course in accordance with the dimensions of this shell. The fact that the electron corrects its orbit in a phi bound path rather than the polar angle perpendicular to the orbit proves, according to the second law of motion, that it exists in a force in and of itself. It is obviously comprised of force-carrying rather than real particles, or it would not be possible for the path of the electron to pass through some shells on its way to another. This may be thought of as equivalent to gravitons, except that, at this scale, no such particle is supposed to exist — it is thought the very dual nature of their charge holds electrons bound 'round nuclei. Therefore we are forced again to cope with the concept of naked probability. As we already know, an electron is only a particle when struck by a particle, and exists as a cloud of probability the rest of the time; in other words it is nothing but probability with a charge. Perhaps with the smaller units describing the shells in which an electron is not, but could be, orbiting, we are seeing the same essential substance as in the electron itself, since they are apparently interspersed throughout and /or underlying the cloud itself.

Asymptotic Time

First we must agree on the direction of the flow of time. This can be in any combination of the three recognized essential components, Past, Present and Future, so that time flows from one to the next, or from one to the last, or from both to the next and to the last, or to neither at all. What our senses compel us to recognize is the particular arrangement of these components we have come to call the “forward-flowing arrow of time.” This is basically a measure of matter-energy exchange dictating that as things continue they decongeal.

The best device created by the hand of man for common interaction with this all-powerful force is the clock, a sequence of numbers arranged in a circle around a set of three hands that move from one point on the circle to another at regular rates. The most powerful type of clock is the atomic clock, the rhythm of which is regulated by radioactive decay internal to the mechanism. This makes it accurate at varying altitudes, where one must travel greater distances in a shorter amount of time to keep up with a fixed spot on the globe below. It renders time then relative to the speed of light, since the particles ejected by the unstable element will appear as a doppler shifted wavelength of photons. The distortion will occur between the atomic clock and the position of an observer either before or behind it on its path above the planet, and this is a very nice little model for time.

Now imagine that you wish to count numbers; say, perhaps, you have grown tired of the atomic clock counting all the numbers. Nor is there any reason for you to count the numbers just like an atomic clock would, since you are not an atomic clock, you are a quite sane and rational human being, so you decide to count the numbers as fast as you can. You will quickly see that you can count faster than the atomic clock.

Now imagine that you can count asymptotically fast. Of course we know that this is impossible, but pause for a moment to consider why we think it so. I propose that the location of this particular idea is between the full set of ideas developed by and for our evolution, and the abyss of what is not known even in idea. Thus, it is possible, although it has never presented itself as an option in such a way as to impinge upon our survival selectivity and become a more common probability. On the other hand, for example, if we happened to build space crafts that were piloted by just such a method of counting, then it could be argued that, at least after several generations, we would begin to spontaneously mutate towards a mode of thinking more compatible with that method of comprehension, and would then be as comfortable with it as we are now with our atomic clock.

So, begin in this manner, then: watch the seconds tick past on the atomic clock and start to count asymptotically fast. At some point you will find that you are continuing to count, and the seconds on the atomic clock have wound down and stopped.

Well what has happened here? It would be reasonable to hypothesize that you had gone off onto an alternate time-line, leaving the time-line counted off by the atomic clock behind — if you can still call what you are in a time-line. You would have to say that it was an offshoot of the other time-line similar to the measure of depth transecting the measure of length, with one exception. Since your time-line is counted off in an asymptote, it only lasts one moment of atomic time, but since the asymptote can never reach an end, neither does that moment ever end.

What we are perceiving now is time flowing in a different direction. Both time lines count the same ultimate measure; it will be infinity on the clock before time runs out. The clock stops, your counting speeds up. Therefore they may just swap over, from one direction to the next, and continue on without more than a momentary break.

This, it seems, is similar to the geometric distortions to gravity around massive or phenomenally dense objects. If time-space encounters an impediment to its “forward” flowing momentum, it simply adjusts the angles of its coordinate system around it. Of course, what we are observing in the case of gravity is only the refraction of photons due to their impact with the force fields called gravitons that surround all physical objects prone to entropy, and it is, in that context, convenient to see relativity between the curvature to photon trajectories and the emanation of virtual particles by real particles as they contact other real particles or other virtual particles. What, however, does this mean in our asymptotic counting experiment?

The idea of an alternate time-line having been introduced as a potentially common occurrence in the twisting and turning of the time-stream, we see immediately the ultimate implication such a concession to gravity lets in: the existence of infinite potential time-lines, each leading to a different future, all occurring simultaneously within the moment, and, while this seems an accurate depiction of an event from the perspective of potential, we also know that probability intercedes to manifest possibilities which delimit the event and put it into a context which we then call time. Without possibilities such as the atomic clock, we would not understand time in the linear way that we do. The asymptotic counting experiment has allowed us also to conceive of time as being infinite in potential.

I ought to further stress the fact that one need not necessarily count asymptotically to accomplish the affects we are discussing here. One could recite a chant, even hum. In fact, when you see that your mind itself is only a conduit whereby for the thought of an asymptote to come into existence, and that it is an idea that can exist independently of your mind as part of nature, then you can remove your focus to one side, if you like, and let this asymptote float in the center of event at the very core of time. It is, afterall, always there in potential. Conveniently, it is the mathematical expression for the infinite potential that constitutes time.

However, the asymptote itself and its potential affect on time must still be seen as separate concepts. Time doesn't stop every time you imagine an asymptote, so what trait of the asymptote makes it possible for time to potentially wind down and stop? We see evidence for the asymptote's physical existence in the gravity of black holes, and the symmetry breaking of certain particles when accelerated towards the speed of light, but we know that the asymptote is somehow removed from and above these artifacts just as we know that time would continue to exist even if we didn't have the atomic clock to measure it. The real question then, is — is time potentially an exclusively mathematical function, like the asymptote, that can be removed from material reality into the same realm as the asymptote? Is there time in the domain of mental projective space in which you created your trans-temporal asymptote? Is time nothing more than the relativity of sets of numbers?

If we say that time is something other than death, then we can answer that it might then be nothing more than the relativity of sets of numbers. The atomic clock, then, is the dependent object, rather than its subject; we understand time as the linear unfurlment of a circular cycle. This same observation applies to the orbits of the planets in the heavens. They, too, are only a representation of the idea of change underlying their perpetual rearrangements. And if time is described best only by the relativities of these sets of finite objects, parts, or merely numbers, then we can say that it does exist in the realm of the mental conceptual, and even in such a way that it will allow itself to be imagined as a geometric extrapolation of potential like the asymptote and sustained that way as a visualizable thought.

Now aside from our understanding of time as the linear relativity between circular cycles and our knowledge of the asymptote as a geometric function we cannot say whether these two do or do not exist in the same form, except in potential. We only believe what we do about time because of applying certain tools to it, and not others. As we have seen, you can easily imagine counting faster than the clock, and I can easily imagine you doing this infinitely faster, and from these combinations we can see time as potential. In the future, other people will look at time differently, and see it to be like different things.

In fact, I think our old friends the Ancients may have had something to say about this very thing. It was their observation in the Orient that heart rate often joined with time in a mysterious way such that, when the heart rate was slow, events would seem to move slowly, and when the heart rate was fast events would seem to move rapidly. The Yogic mystics and the Brahmas attained to states of mastery over their emotions, because it was thought that, by binding the movement of the subtle energies within, one could influence their ebb and flow without.

There was a similar belief regarding the eyes that originated in Egypt. It concerned the mythical third eye, the ureaus, located in the center of the forehead, identical to the Vedic ajna, from which it was thought the substance of the human essence flowed down into us from the realm of the mysteries. The best explanation regarding the third eye comes to us from Jose Silva's modern method of mind control, which informs us that a twenty degree angle of inclination for the closed eyes produces Alpha waves in the brain, those found in the minds of all meditators the world over. This has been used more frequently for the purposes of manifestation.

A further note was made that certain nervous involutions contribute directly to the elapse of time. The Ancients of the Orient again sought mastery over these breaks from ideal concentration, believing that the nervous system was the instrument triggering certain possibilities. Particularly the practitioners of the martial arts and the Dervishes, as well as the American Colonial Shakers, all partook of this fountain of energy.

The biological circuit these comprise is mathematically a phi / pi spiral, the same essential pattern as a flower. The fundamental idea of the phi / pi spiral is symmetry breaking governed by irrational numbers, wherein the irrational numbers are numbers like phi and pi and the symmetry breaking is often in an asymptotical form, from an asymptote, or between two asymptotes. Let us look for a moment at this last example.

In our counting experiment we felt relatively safe assuming that the time line of the clock was linear in so far as it described a sequential progression without retrogression. But were we wrong in doing so? It can equally as easily be imagined as an asymptote itself, if one dwells upon the potential that the instants, as soon as they are measured, disappear. To where do they disappear — when something changes where does what it once was go? And from where do the instants come before they are measured?

Both the Past and the Future are like asymptotes stretching offwards and upwards into infinity, disappearing in the same direction as the asymptote of time measured by your counting. The asymptotes of Past and Future meet, then, at the point where the clock has been stopped by the asymptotical counting experiment. I think this is a satisfactory definition of the Now — the event that can begin but never end. In this capacity we can imagine it as a phi / pi spiral where phi is the future, pi the past, and their ratio the singularity of the moment.

Let me remind you that this is the same as the distortion we saw at the beginning that affects the observation of photons emitted by the radioactive decay of an unstable element in motion depending on whether it is perceived as from before or behind it on its course. If we observe this phenomenon from the side, seeing both the doppler distortions which constitute the Future and the Past for the trajectory of the element, we will again behold the phi / pi spiral, where phi determines a compressed wavelength before it and pi determines an elongated wavelength behind it. This is known commonly as the red and blue shifts to the frequency of light, and this is how it would be observed in the case of the atomic clock.

There is no comparable observation for the change in time-lines represented by the asymptotic counting experiment, although we can now see it, at least if we like, as a representation of the same underlying mathematical pattern.

A Trend

Consider that you are an ancient philosopher mathematician, and you have discovered by examination the exponential expansion of vertices in shapes per dimension, and wish to correlate observations regarding time with the fourth dimensional shape.

First you will notice that there are three ways to represent the three dimensional shape, and those are first dimensionally, second dimensionally, and third dimensionally. Remember that a hexagon is a second dimensional representation of the cube, but that there are in fact infinite ways to represent the cube two dimensionally, for, as soon as you had exhausted the number of angles from which it could be depicted, you could always represent it mathematically. Because of this rule there are three different three dimensional shapes that we know of for a hypercube, or the fourth dimensional equivalent of the cube. Mind you, these are only particular shapes that happen to align in three dimensions, like the hexagon did in two, when really there are infinite potential forms of the hypercube that cannot be visualized, and exist only as mathematically provable relationships, but then, you could always express it in words.

The three, third dimensional shapes the philosopher mathematician, you, would have had to work with to develop further insight into the fourth dimension, at least, for a cube, would have been the hypercube at antipode, two cubes together side by side, the nested hypercube, a cube within a cube, and the hypercube at standard position, which would have just been a regular cube.

Now you are up to date with the origin of the Khab-Allah, the Body of God, Hebrew for metaphysics.

In consideration of the Kabbalah, the number of ten is very important, because it is the number of sides showing on the hypercube at antipode. Its significance is identified by the ten corners of the two cubes which become visible when they are depicted two dimensionally as a pair of hexagons.

The hypercube at antipode has one face which is internal to it, which makes eleven, but this face is the combination of the two cubes, and so it is secretly twelve. These numbers were also important, and this face was described in a number of other ways as well.

Twelve are the faces of the nested hypercube, and six of the standard cube. The first of these became Astrology, which was used in divination, and the measurement of the passage of time by observation of the movement of the heavens; the second became the I Ching, which was based on eight elemental, three-lined trigrams comprising sixty-four eventual six-lined hexagrams, which was used in divination, and the measurement of certain particular cycles of time in the heavens, such as the lunar year of thirteen months and the eleven year sunspot cycle.

There are seventy-two decans by day and night in the zodiac and seventy-two divine names in the shemhamforash. When these are aligned... let it be said thus: when we take a step toward the Eternal, the Eternal takes two steps towards us.

happy readers

In order to produce a suitable work of literature, something that will be inextricably related to everything held most dear, in order to compile something considerably classic, one must endeavor to create material that can be consumed consecutively to all the other life-functions of the target audience. What are these for the average reader? Quite simple: sleeping, bathing, eating, working, loving, consuming other media, and of course, relieving themselves.

Now you might wonder how it would be possible to accomplish some of these things with a work of words. Others of you might wonder why you should want to. But these answers are as obvious as are people's daily routines themselves.

People need inspiration while sleeping, while bathing, or exercising. People's minds are almost never fully at rest. It has been demonstrated that even many coma patients respond favorably to being read a good book now and then. People sing in the shower and watch exercise tapes. A book is little different, for it feeds the mind as fully as a meal can the body. A book can, and even should, provide you a bounty of stimulus while you're out on the road. Time will really fly when the clock's freed from your eye.

Yet on to more serious matters: working. The information contained in written tomes is vital to the work environment. Most companies generate annually such copious tomes that, where they all stacked together, they might replace the rain forest. And this is just in-house information. The reason the workers can stay frisky and pert is due to the outside stimulus they bring in, and what makes one appear more learned than sullenly mulling over the soul of some dandy cult pulp?

What more is the guage of intellectual stimulation than sensory arousal. A book should be like a bouquet of implications, opened before the reader to enliven them to the tips of every nerve, to be at least as good as a genuine experience, or else all books would be for children too young to have lived them. Therefore imagine your readers to be at their most gentle, their most savage, their most philosophical, and bestial, the moment of their climax. If you at least attain to this you will yield fruits more succulent than all the killing fields of culture combined.

We must not forget that a book can always be read while consuming other media. The effects for this vary, and with great luminosity. One can read while listening to music, or while watching television, or while on the computer, or any combination of these, at least. And the connections between the set and the setting may not be entirely coincidence, right?

Lastly it is fundamental to examining the matter of consumption during excretion. It is important to gear the text to include descriptive phrases and plot twists that mirror the likely mind-set of the reader in each environment, and the toilet is no different. In fact, it is perhaps, the essence of all the rest.

In short one should imagine their readers, when writing to try to please a target audience, as mice in small cages, to whom you as the writer are generously administering large doses of suspended information through the precise syringe of your insight. In this and no other way should one proceed when writing a work with the intent to please a target organism in mind. Oh, and Dr.? Try not to kill them.

On Heavy Light

The extrapolation of vector into dimension for light shows us clearly that the photon is a real particle, but that it also acts as a wave, which can be extrapolated into three of the six potential trajectories, which comprise the dimensional model. Now even when light is acting like a photon, the well of potential distinguishing it from the inter-atomic void, comprised of these six regions of vector, is still there. The evidence for this in this case is the vectors of tachyons emitted from the photon, which form the same torus pattern as do electrons in a magnetic field. This is because light is only the visible portion of the electromagnetic spectrum, and electrons are only another type of particle the wavelength of which can be measured as a distortion to a continuum which is the electromagnetic spectrum. Light, heat, and electromagnetic radiation are all different forms of the same mathematical concept — the wave pattern. Gravity can also be expressed in the form of a wave. What is generally applicable to cosmic relativity is the graviton particle. (Gravity B) There is another form of gravity also, detectable only on the microwave level of the electromagnetic spectrum, produced by the distortion to spacetime caused by the tachyonic background distributed between photons and electrons, which causes the standard arrow of entropy to reverse. (Gravity A) This form of gravity is visible in the gravitational field of the sun, which is configured in a spiral wave, identical to the arms of a spiral galaxy. Here we see the microcosmic tachyon tori producing the macrocosmic spiral torus. The difference between tachyons and pure potential (whether probabilistical, as energy, or as spin) is that tachyons have velocity and therefore vector, which means they are only one particular product of the electromagnetic spectrum, whereas pure potential is like the absence of such wells of distortion. Pure potential energy is the same as pure potential spin in that neither is compressed into particle form necessarily. A particle can have potential spin, but it cannot be potential spin. Only the dimensional extrapolation of vector can represent potential spin.

to understand the way in which a wormhole curves spacetime one must expand upon the Boolean algebra of unions and intersections that defines quantum logic. The event is such that the union (And) of two probabilities can constitute one point in spacetime and the intersection (Or) of these two probabilities can constitute another point in spacetime, where the two probabilities themselves form the mouth of the wormhole, in such a way that to pass from the intersection to the union of the two sets by passing between the two probabilities is to pass from one point in spacetime to another point in spacetime, no matter the actual distance between these two points. The space between them is relative more or less to Boolean algebra, because it is a subspace set of an orthogonal based lattice in Hilbert space, the space between quanta. This relativity is paralleled between the two distant points in spacetime that are connected in the event of the wormhole. The shape of this relationship is a hypercube, and the shape of the relationship between the ultrafilter of the union containing the intersection and the ultrafilter of the intersection containing the union is orthogonal, a second dimensional representation of the fourth dimensional hypercube. In a hypercube time flows from one cube to the other in such a way that each grows, swallows the other up, shrinks, is swallowed up and passed out of the other one. This can be conceptualized best three dimensionally, but really it is a fourth dimensional solid shape that merely casts a changing solid shadow because it is passing through a lower plane or dimension of reality. This shape surrounds every well of probability as a geometry present in potential, that is, possible within the potential energy of pure dimension. The shape itself is one dimension below the geometry that contains it, because it is only one possible example. In the dimension of the geometry, that is also the dimension of light expressed as the hypercross extrapolated from the hypercube, there are infinite possible configurations of shapes that would work equally as well as the basic square, cube, hypercube, hypercross progression to describe the affect of scale correspondence manifested in the tori of tachyons around probability wells causing them to either emit, absorb or reflect other tachyons, or microwave gravity. It is in fact the expansion of one of these tachyon tori into a wormhole that we are discussing. This can be accomplished by projecting tachyons into the center of the torus of tachyons around a quantum probability well. This is the actual hyperspace manifestation of the mathematical hypercube. Time flows through the wormhole both ways in the form of light, and therefore entropy would appear to be evenly balanced. However, there is a toll to pay in the form of a tax upon the matter-energy of spacetime. In order for entropy to be conserved in the same form as it is in the ordinary torus of tachyons on the larger scale of the wormhole, as much matter-energy must be converted to potential as passes through the rift. This contributes to the expansion of the universe, and therefore is a cause of time. Because time and space are the same thing, this also means more distance will come into existence, such that, by connecting things, we push them further apart.

Nerd Sharks Run the Projector

In the same way photons fill up the vacuums of the universe, tachyons fill up the voids between quanta.

Tachyons are so small that they actually take up negative space, that being the future, and reactively contribute a force to space — the attraction holding quanta in unions — that being the past. Both of these represent only two possible trajectories of six that surround every particle in the geometry of pure dimension all the time.

Not even the three closest trajectories of these will exactly approximate the vector itself though; only the hypersphere of probability realized in the torus of tachyons around the particle can allow exact prediction of that.

This hypersphere, however, can be derived from the geometry of the sextuple cubic lattice representative of potential light. This potential light is the same as the potential energy or potential information of pure dimension. All things are the same thing, in potential.

Tachyons are the only particles that can serve as vehicles for potential light.

Other wave/particles serve as vehicles for potential energy, such as electrons, and for potential information, such as microwaves. We have already seen that all of these are the same in potential, that is they are all the same substance — potential itself, but we must also accept that when the potential descends into the actual, it tends to specialize and centralize the substance of itself into some certain probability.

Thus, tachyons contain potential light. In other words, to open up, expand upon, contract upon, or observe in reflection a tachyon will be to drift away in a sea of potential light.

The shape of the tachyon is the torus. It flows opposite the standard arrow of entropy in that its surface rotates into itself, such that the external, probabilistically defined boundary that defines the tachyon as a particle is pulled into the past on one side of the torus and drawn out of the future on the other side, and that, in the center of the torus is potential light, which is without time. They tend to form the same shaped fields within photons, causing the appearance of illumination, and around other particles, such as protons and neutrons, causing the appearance of reflection.

It is likely that potential light is as much more powerful spiritually than potential energy as potential energy is than potential information.

On Some Optical Effects

First let me say that, when I have noticed that probability is favorable for one person to see something in particular, and if they see this thing, then I have also noticed that the probability for another person seeing the same thing increases. This in itself is not peculiar, so long as we refer our discussion only to externally observable events, such as a cup of tea or the Loch Ness Monster.

But here I am going to be talking about intraocular events and intraoptical events as well. What is strange about this is that these are classically considered illusions or tricks of perception, amounting to no more than scientific misdirection and nothing more magical than this. Thus there is no accounting for how these can be seen independently by multiple persons, should they be allowed the time and are so inclined to observe them.

Thus let me speak of intraocular effects. These include seeing water molecules and seeing the electrical impulses of the optic nerve. Observation of water molecules is pretty straight forward, whereas seeing inside your optic nerves is somewhat more in depth, so first I will tell you how to see water molecules with your naked eye.

Look at something light colored for a background. The sky works the best. If you continually shift your depth of field or focal plane around you will eventually see, translucent, pale strings of loops. These are chains of water molecules. You will see that there are also many that float around independently. You will know for certain if you are seeing what I am describing or not if the particles seem to stick and drift when you move your eyes around. This is because they, and even the spaces in between them, comprise the layer of liquid on the surface of our eyeballs, continually being wet down by our tear ducts.

There are certain, more advanced methods of introspection to be applied to these water molecules, once you have gotten the hang of seeing them at least well enough to know where to look, but I will get to those when I talk about intraoptical effects. Now let me tell you how to see the electrical impulses in the optic nerves.

Before I say anything else I should say that I am not advocating you do this. I am simply conveying a technique that has worked for me, with a description of what I saw. Seeing electricity is not the same thing as looking at water molecules. Looking at water molecules is a harmless exercise of the average vision. In order to see electricity you must actually introduce it into the eyeballs themselves.

Inside the eyeball it is liquid. This makes the perfect medium for observing electrical effects, if it weren't for the fact that it happens to be inside your only two, extremely organically delicate, eyeballs. Just because someone else has done something doesn't make it alright for everyone else to go out and start doing the same thing. All this being said, let me tell you what I saw, and what I did to see it.

If one shakes their head, forwards to back, backwards to front, several times, as with the beat of some music, and one does this rapidly enough or extends the distance far enough, the effect upon the fluids in the brain is such that they are caused to stir around. Endorphins are released and a feeling of euphoria sets in. This is what is known as a "head rush."

Once, while doing this, I brought my head up and held it straight very rapidly. I felt a slight pressure on the back of my eyes as I felt a surge of neurotransmitter gush down their nerves. Then it appeared before me. Blue sparks, twisting and tunneling around, seemed to even move through the depth of my field of vision.

I am relatively certain this was the result of a surge from the optic nerves because of two facts about these sparks: their size — each appearing to be about as big as my fist looks to my eye when held out at the end of my arm; and their configuration — though each individual one obeyed its own invisible flight path, and they all twisted and turned around seemingly at random, they occurred with a gap in the middle of their clustering, and as they dispersed they cleared from my field of vision by retreating towards my peripheral area, leaving the space in the center behind as clear sight.

These are the intraocular effects that I have observed well enough to convey them to you. Next let me describe the intraoptical realm.

I have also observed electrons. These were distinguished from what I have already described as sparks in that they did not accompany any sudden jarring to the biological system which could give occasion for some of the nervous electricity to be transferred into the ocular fluid, where it ordinarily never is.

Also, they were different in their appearance from these sparks. What I have come to believe were electrons displayed the same twisting and tunnelling motion that the sparks had, except that they revolved each in itself, and this carried them around in little spiralling patterns, seemingly at random, with no apparent order.

Besides this they were much smaller than the sparks of electricity, although, to be fair, this could only mean that I was viewing them at a greater distance than the sparks, since I suspect the sparks to have occurred in the fluid of my eyes, and the electrons to probably have occurred no more deeply than the surface of my eyes.

Lastly, there were more of the electrons than there were of the sparks, and they did not have a clear spot in the center of the field as the sparks did, or rather, would — as I saw the sparks more recently than the electrons.

The electrons, however, did not take up my entire field of vision. As with the sparks, most of what I was looking at was clear space between them in which they moved freely of each other, and in neither case did I observe them to be bonded or paired.

Here is the technique that I used to see these electrons. While outside and, again, looking into the sky, I let my eyes focus on the layer of water molecules until they were comfortable. When the water molecules had remained still for a sufficient duration, I began trying to look into one. Immediately upon doing this a field of small blue swirls lept up before me.

Deducing from the fact that each chain of water particles was made of molecules of hydrogen and oxygen, and that these were linked by electrons, and that the electrons were known to display movement of a certain nature, which I had never observed through instruments, but that I knew to be of a spiralling pattern, and these small, electric blue glowing particles appearing to me to be behaving in just such a way, I concluded that I had succeeded in catching a brief glimpse into the world of the subatomic.

Another interesting intraoptical effect was achieved on another time I was observing the water molecules on my pupils. I tried to imagine looking through one of them, and concentrated on looking at a certain water molecule with one eye, and looking just to the side of it with the other eye, as though it were somebody's head I were trying to see around at a party.

This, in itself, is an optical trick that deserves some explanation. When you see anything with your eyes, it is not really the thing in itself you are seeing, but the place in space where you understand that thing to be.

Try closing one eye and looking at something, such as this book. It appears to be in one place. Now look at the book with the other eye open and the first eye closed. It appears to be in a slightly different place.

Also, there is no arguing with your own eyes, since each eye can perceive in itself only two dimensions, and in two dimensions there is no question of an object's depth from the eye, since you are perceiving directly along a single set of photon rays. Besides, the entire image is flattened on the eye's surface, and it is the flattened image that the mind perceives through the individual eye anyway.

So imagine placing one eye in one place and your other eye in a place somewhere relatively far away from the first eye, but pointing them at the same object. This is the effect of stereoscopy we experience all the time, only to a much less extreme degree. Each eye perceives the light rays reflected off the object in the direction where it sits.

When both eyes are combined, then, so that together they see only one picture, they simply overlap their views of the object, and create the illusion of it in depth. What the illusion of depth allows us to realize, that many lesser animals do not, is that there is such a thing as the space behind something.

Thus, by throwing my two eyes out of focal point from each other, I created the illusion of depth upon the edge of the water molecule I was looking at. What I saw next was a strange effect. I saw other water molecules, or what I thought were water molecules, converging in towards the first and disappearing. They did this in regular waves and in straight lines, creating the appearance of internal flowing radiance.

When I say that an intraoptical technique such as this is more advanced than simply being able to see water molecules I mean only that, in order to see something like this for yourself, you must have practised with the water molecules, and learned in what ways they are in fact real and in what ways they are an illusion. I refer, again, to the effect of stereoscopy.

When you see the water molecules, what you are really seeing is the combination of the patterns of water molecules for the left eye and the right eye. You can close your right eye, and see only half as many. You can close your left eye, and see only half as many.

What this means is that you really are seeing only half as many, with each eye, and it is an illusion that they are combined into a single set. Each eye sees the water molecules on the surface of its pupil. Neither can see both alone.

Since it is an illusion that you are seeing both then logically you are seeing neither. This school of reasoning may as well follow through to saying that sight itself is only an illusion of the mind.

Another type of vision one can induce upon themselves with a less harmful technique than a headrush can be accomplished by pressing upon the closed eyes. What the application of pressure on the apparatus of the eyeballs amounts to is more of an intraocular than an intraoptical effect, but I couldn't tell you where in the eye what you will see will actually occur.

I can tell you that I use this form of perception frequently and it is my favorite form of meditation besides the technique I will describe to you next. I suppose that you could say both of these techniques fall under both categories of intraocular and intraoptical.

Due to this fact I can only really tell you that I have seen many various things through application of this technique that each individually go far beyond my capacity to describe, intricate webworks of stimulus. All of these together I can sum up only as a field of potential information units. I can now see this field even with my eyes open.

The last technique I want to describe to you is my personal favorite form of perception, although I probably do it the least often of all. It is best known as the Jose Silva method of mind control.

It really isn't as ominous as it may seem to those of you who may be sceptical about the concept of mind control. It is not mind control in the sense of others imposing their will upon yours, but mind control in the sense of you imposing your will better over yourself.

It is simple. Incline the closed eyes to a twenty degree angle of elevation. This produces alpha waves in the brain. It's a neat trick. Try it. Mr. Silva recommends practicing this for longer and longer times in the morning and counting backwards, but as far as I care you can do whatever you want to do. It's your head.

What you will see is a kind of flashing effect. It will be difficult to keep your eyes shut, and the source of the light will seem to be coming from the outside world. However it is more than simply a nervous reflex of the eyeballs at being rolled upwards and closed at the same time. Afterall, if it were, we would not be able to keep our eyes closed when we are asleep, since it is the same thing that happens when we are in a rapid eye movement dream state.

Here the eyes are looking upwards towards the ajna, or third eye, which is generally agreed upon by disparate ancient cultures to exist in the middle of the forehead. Consciousness is directed inward upon itself, in towards the thalamus. In the thalamus there is the medium for a hyperspace hologram to be projected via electrical currents. When the ajna perceives itself, or rather, through itself looks into itself, the thalamus releases neurotransmitters into the brain in a regular rhythm, creating a feeling of personal nirvana.

Let me also say about these techniques of vision that the more you know them, the more you will understand them. The more you see for yourself all these things I have described, the more you will know of their natures. The more you know of their natures, the better you will understand how they can be used.

to understand the way in which a wormhole curves spacetime one must expand upon the Boolean algebra of unions and intersections that defines quantum logic. The event is such that one probability can constitute one point in spacetime and another probability can constitute another point in spacetime, and where the union (And) of two probabilities, and the intersection (Or) of these two probabilities, form the mouth of the wormhole, in such a way that to pass from the two probabilities by passing between the intersection and the union of the two sets is to pass from one point in spacetime to another point in spacetime, no matter the actual distance between these two points. The space between them is relative more or less to Boolean algebra, because it is a subspace set of an orthogonal based lattice in Hilbert space, the space between quanta. This relativity is paralleled between the two distant points in spacetime that are connected in the event of the wormhole. The shape of this relationship is a hypercube, and the shape of the relationship between the ultrafilter of the union containing the intersection and the ultrafilter of the intersection containing the union is orthogonal, a second dimensional representation of the fourth dimensional hypercube. In a hypercube time flows from one cube to the other in such a way that each grows, swallows the other up, shrinks, is swallowed up and passed out of the other one. This can be conceptualized best three dimensionally, but really it is a fourth dimensional solid shape that merely casts a changing solid shadow because it is passing through a lower plane or dimension of reality. This shape surrounds every well of probability as a geometry present in potential, that is, possible within the potential energy of pure dimension. The shape itself is one dimension below the geometry that contains it, because it is only one possible example. In the dimension of the geometry, that is also the dimension of light expressed as the hypercross extrapolated from the hypercube, there are infinite possible configurations of shapes that would work equally as well as the basic square, cube, hypercube, hypercross progression to describe the affect of scale correspondence manifested in the tori of tachyons around probability wells causing them to either emit, absorb or reflect other tachyons, or microwave gravity. It is in fact the expansion of one of these tachyon tori into a wormhole that we are discussing. This can be accomplished by projecting tachyons into the center of the torus of tachyons around a quantum probability well. This is the actual hyperspace manifestation of the mathematical hypercube. Time flows through the wormhole both ways in the form of light, and therefore entropy would appear to be evenly balanced. However, there is a toll to pay in the form of a tax upon the matter-energy of spacetime. In order for entropy to be conserved in the same form as it is in the ordinary torus of tachyons on the larger scale of the wormhole, as much matter-energy must be converted to potential as passes through the rift. This contributes to the expansion of the universe, and therefore is a cause of time. Because time and space are the same thing, this also means more distance will come into existence, such that, by connecting things, we push them further apart.

the Illuminati

When we look into the light with the lenses of our eyes, though the same effect can be captured on film through a camera, we see at certain angles that the light refracts and seems to form polygons. These polygons usually have the hue of an oil slick, that is — light seems to be playing about within itself on their surfaces.

We must remember that, even though this optical effect is produced by the refraction of the light through a convex regular surface, such as the molecules of the camera lens or the cells of our eyes, the polygons we see are still arrays of photons. Otherwise we would not be able to replicate them on film and thus perceive them upon a non-radiant, flat surface.

This is the same effect that causes the formation of the “walls and voids” of galaxies in the universe. We see that, as the universe has cooled, its concentrations of radiation have condensed. This follows through from the greatest cluster of galaxies to the naked singularity. It has been considered by scientists for a century, which is a meaningless drop in the ocean of time that is our universe, that this was the result of the cooling of the temperature of radiation into particles that were then brought together by gravity.

In this ever more enlightened age, we have come to know that light is the same as gravity on the level of tachyons, and that even this is only one vibration in the electromagnetic spectrum. Therefore what our brains perceive anthropically as caused by more or less material mechanisms can be equally easily seen as occurring in the dimension of light.

Taking the polygons we see refracted through the ordered sphere of our eyes as slices of fourth dimensional hypershapes representing potential over time (that is, potential spin — hence their usually hexagonal appearance as indicative of the six possible directions), it is easy to see from one angle how these surround all things in the universe, and thus cause them to fall into the same order materially. This occurs foremost for the consideration of light on the level of the tachyon, because our universe is a tachyonic hologram, and tachyons guide the movement of photons, and photons interact with electrons to bond atoms.

This means that the singularities of black holes in the centers of galaxies are where ylem interacts with ylem, the Light inside our universe being emitted as tachyon streams refracted from the Light outside our universe inside singularity.

More Freedoms of the Dead

by: Six Fingered Sally

There is a difference between the soul and the astral body. The soul is more nebulous, the astral body more aethyreal.

Both can travel about through the cosmos as the potential for a naked singularity, and can lower themselves into the continuum through the field of tachyonic light — though the soul will tend to manifest the form of a biological body, and the astral body will tend to manifest a distortion to the space time continuum of any real nature it chooses, should its nascent self know how, because these two will invert with one another as they cross dimension, that is, manifest potential, as in a double spiral, for they are truly living forms.

However, the astral body, the soul, and the biological body are all entirely individual from one another. The astral body can be in the aethyrs of the Enochian system while the soul is in the seventh Heaven and the biological body is sleeping. The soul can guard the biological body while the astral body is travelling, or the body can be in a cell and the soul in hell — it is even possible to kill the astral body (though we have as many astral bodies as we can imagine), or to kill the soul (though, we are told, we have only one soul) just as we can kill the biological body. There are an infinite variety of combinations.

None of this, in itself, is Holy. For example, you can learn how to speak so that your voice sounds like a piano, and after this, by learning different rythms of music, come to think that you are discovering different rythms to transmit information which have always been there, waiting for someone to carry speech on them. Of course this would be a false assumption.

The soul as an idea is also distinct from all individual associations that have been made for it throughout history. It might change the face of the world everytime some fool comes along and compares the soul to some new discovery, but it does relatively little for the ideal in itself. The soul, therefore, is no more necessarily relative to the individual's aura, or electromagnetic field, than it is to the spirit, which is supposedly considered the superior self.

It is also possible for us to have diseases in all these forms. If it makes this any easier to accept, each of these forms is itself like a disease to the realm it inhabits.

A Good Day to Kabbalah

Understanding is silently listening. Wisdom is quietly connecting visions.

The Qabbalah is psychological, so it is within the sphere of the mind; the sphere of the mind is in the formal system of metaphysics, which is in the Enochian Communications System, and that is, physically, inside hyperdimension — the temporal multiverse, and this is part of the Cabbalah of the unimind universe.

Here there are different kabbalah for potential in all its different potential forms. These represent new emotions, and are represented by various mandalas and rhombi. They constitute the organs of the body of God, or the fourth dimension.

These are the health concerns over the Kabbalah: that what it perceives is not disturbance. All else is free will. It is no fault in this that seems to cause fatigue.

In the afterlife there are only people in rowboats, and a few stray combative manifestations. You can be as pure as the driven snow. The dawn of the fifteen million Messiahs is coming.

Understanding reads. Wisdom writes. Or does not write. It takes time for Understanding to move through reading. Time is the cancer of God.

Even in Heaven it takes time for wishful thinking to become ideal perfection.

holography and stereoscopy

Whenever you look with your human eyes open what you are seeing is photons. When you look at a light source such as the sun, or even the distant stars, it is photons produced from a thermonuclear reaction. Similarly, if you are looking at a light source such as a man made light bulb, it is photons emitted from simple electrical exchange. If you are able to see a solid object it is because photons are being reflected off of it at such an angle that they then reach your eyes in straight lines as pulses along a rippled wavelength. These pulses tell you color, shape and motion.

Now the common human being has two eyes, located in the front of their face. This is in opposition to such other earthly animals as fish, who have them mounted immobily on either side of their flat heads, or chameleons, who have them mounted on the sides of their head like fish, but with autonomous muscular control of their lids so each eye is independently mobile of the other.

We know from studying these other animals that the human design has both its benefits and its drawbacks. For example, fish have better periferal vision, and chameleons can focus their individual eyes more sharply on small or distant, moving objects, due to more complex lenses.

However the primary benefit of the configuration of the human eyes is stereoscopy. Our two eyes together can be directed towards the same object, and can give us a better estimation of that object's spatial (unchanging) and temporal (changing) properties relative to ourselves.

The best way to explain this is with the double-slit experiment. When photons are passed individually through either one of two parallel slits made in a reflective surface, they accumulate collectively on the far side of these slits in a waveform identical to that which they would have created had there been no obstacle with a double slit cut in it for them to pass through, except each one individually produces the same picture as if two photons had emerged from the slits. The pattern they form is one of overlapping, circular waves emmanating outward from the focal point.

We see the same situation in the human eye. In one eye we may see a photon reflected from one part of the observed object, and in the other eye see a photon reflected from another part of the observed object, both of which strike our eyes in straight lines as pulses along a rippled wavelength, however when these photons are perceived by the brain they seem to be merely indistinguishable features of a single image comprised of all the rest of the non-focal photons too.

This is due as much to the nature of light itself as to the translation of it through the rods and cones of our eyes into an electrical impulse readable by our brains. Even if we did not have eyes that worked in the way ours do, the light would still be subject to the behavior it displays in the double slit experiment. The implication of this on the brain is that, perhaps, mental holography does not depend even on electrical brain waves, as has been previously suspected, but would be occuring even if the photons are not translated electrochemically.

historia

The universe began in the first dimension. There was a microwave vibration that occurred under the influence of uncertainty and this caused everything. A single amount of the void spun around itself and split off, forming the first particle of karma or quantum information unit. This particle was a singularity compared to nothing, and thus was compelled about itself with the combined weight of the fullness of the abyss, which was a great greatness. It was forced to begin to consume itself by the emptiness, and this it did with such haste that it began to implode with a force greater than that of the darkness, that is, that velocity known as the speed of a photon, and thus to bend the space-time within it, as it had been bent from the null space and zero time of the void when it was conceived. This turned it inside out quickly, and filled it with light so that it shone then in the pitch. But these were not rays of photons, too slow in the darkness and too easily consumed would they be, but the projection of astral light, that is the microwave gravity particle tachyons, and these are projected as an outward rippling orb. It is said then, that the finger of the creator came down and touched the spot on the globe in the heavens from outside the space that was outside our universe, at the moment of the Big Bang, so that it would be swept away with its generis to become proper space-time.

Then it was the time of the second dimension, when the waves of tachyon luminous microwave gravity stirred the void up into action, and caused more reactions that created particles. These are the events when the four forces were set down, and everything had been called into spin. Time began then, as a measurement of the spinning, a speed that could be measured by the velocity of a photon. Space was conception itself. A single point in null space would be drawn out and then turned about itself, creating polarity. A particle would spring into existence as a self-expanding wormhole tachyon torus in the vast expanse of the nether realm and immediately progenerate a stream of similar shapes, that would continue on filling in the lightlessness until they were all a solid throng occupying a region, and causing by their continual exchange of motion between them, which asymptotically approached regulation, the oscillation of that great polarizing force we know as time. These tachyons tended to accumulate themselves then in a topical aura, since they were emanating outward from a center, and so their region of most profound discourse was around the edge of their expansion. It is upon the surface of this three dimensional shape, expanding in the fourth spatial dimension, that the story of our universe continues. By this time the four elemental genres of particle had been formed, and this had given the Light a fine quality, invisible to the Darkness, that of all those less intense manifest fluctuations of those particles slower than the speed of light. This was the material universe that was becoming polarized as three dimensional space on the surface of the fourth dimensional inflation of tachyons.

Once the third dimension began to appear out of the pure heat following the Big Bang, it rapidly accumulated masses in space similar to those underlying its own mechanisms of creation. These are, in order ascending outwards from our planet, stars, galaxies, and the walls and voids. The planets and the stars are spheres, the stars emitting light and the planets reflecting it. The orbits of the planets around the stars and the orbits of stars around the centers of galaxies are both planar, that is, purely based on the polarization principle — that is, that elemental and temporal-spatial opposites attract. In the case of stars and planets this means the star is too weak to attract heavier objects then the solidification of the fine layers of the gas cloud that surrounded it before its fire scorched them making them curl up into spheres. In the case of stars in galaxies, that is that those bastions of the lesser light all fall towards and are caught in the wake of a singularity where microwave gravity has torn a hole in space-time leading at the edges into hyperdimension, and in the center to the abyss outside. The walls and voids arrange themselves in random strands and gaps, the extended projection of the first spurts of probability in the infinite field of potential.

The fourth dimension gives us time. This is the surface upon which we measure a beam of light as it is guided. It is homogenous to the very small and the very large, though we recognize these terms to be relative to our perception, and it makes the smaller particles to move faster and the larger sphere to move slower, although we can project our understanding of the relativity of size onto the relativity of temporal durations. Again it is only the measure of the averaged frequency over wavelength for an area given as π squared, or a factor of the force of the bending of microgravity, the force that causes all points in the universe to expand apart from each other as microgravity is perpetually self-generative and repulsively charged toward matter-energy, being that is on the degree of frequency where it is thought to be so improbable for it to exist in the confines of our universe, in the presence of its finer aspect, the larger solid particles or the longer wavelengths of energy, that the likelihood of it is so infinitesimal that it is considered anti-matter, or otherwise, bordering on being opposite possible reality. The formula for time is thus given as ϕ over π , that is the formula for a hypercube that is contained within and surrounding a sphere, that it is set to work measuring the difference of that sphere, so that, as the sphere expands, so does the hypercube.

On the day of the fifth dimension let there be Light, for as we are given to know of consciousness and sleep, and of day and night, so too do we know of the nature of these tachyons. In the proper conditions they can be observed in the three dimensional matter-energy universe, where, true to form they can be measured by instruments before the time it would take a photon resultant from the same events from which they derived to arrive. In these cases we see that they are able to utilize the same factor of the uncertainty of existence as a probability in potential to quantum tunnel through solids, moving from one point on the surface of a virtual particle to a point exactly on the opposite side, not by going through the center of the atom, nor by following a curve defined by the orbit of its electron, but by passing into and then out of the electron itself, which can be at all points on its orbital shell at any time, where it does not manifest trajectory spin as a probability like a photon being absorbed or emitted by an electron, but warp spin as it is swallowed up into itself between the two points, consumed in hyperspace where the point it disappeared and the point it reappeared are the same point, and the tachyonic wormhole itself fills the space between them, such that spin is conserved by the tachyon. The realm of hyperdimension, or the hyper-real warping of the fabric of space-time so that it is always consuming and regenerating itself simultaneously, is the surface of a geometry in pure dimension also, and this is the origin of spin-wave mechanics.

In the sixth dimension there is potential Light, that is, the absence of space as a continuum of vortices, and the absence of time as this substance in motion. Here is the dark pit from whence we started. It is the black hole of the larger universe that ours lives in, between which various frequencies of microwave vibration are shared, though it only looks light because the light of spin burning off pure potential that is our universe is so dim compared to the speed and involution of the Greater Light of this field, equivalent to the electromagnetic torus surrounding the singularity of a black hole as we know them, on the inside of which wormholes to alternate universes form. Thus it is truly here, in the quantum foam of spontaneously upsurgent probabilities, that we see the connection points between such wormholes form as a gravitational microwavelength that is the history of a single tachyon, and thus we see how our own universe formed as well.

The seventh dimension is that of potential information, where all pure data is truly relative and thus it is said to be the dimension of dimensions, that is, the one dimension containing the differing geometries of all the others and providing for them a basis for their continuous contiguity. It is for this reason, for example, that we can say there is no division between multiverses in hyperdimension where the geometry governs fine waveforms, for the same reason there are different divisions in the manifest realm of basic matter-energy exchange governed by entropy. So there is subspace, so there is hyperspace in hyperdimension — the hyper-reality of the multiverse, and so there is the pure dimension of the primary clear light called ylem. To this end they say that the creator rested.

Because the speed of a photon measures the time it takes a photon to travel a certain distance as well as that distance itself, when we say that the furthest known galaxies from our own are 11 - 15 billion light years away, it means that the light we are receiving from them today also left them 11 - 15 billion years ago. According to 20th century mathematical calculations for the lifespan of the different types of stars, the most common individual evolution of which transforms one form of star into another along a portion of its existence called the Main Sequence, is only 100 million years. After this the star spends a short while as a red or white dwarf. The red dwarf star burns out, but a white dwarf star becomes a black hole. These black holes become supermassive until there is no longer any surrounding quantum matter for them to feed their gravity well, at which point they expel the additional matter that expanded their event horizon around the central singularity. At this point in the universe all that remains are naked singularities and fluid dynamic background radiation. This has probably already occurred for the furthest regions of the known universe, if stars remain homogeneously predictable according to universally applicable laws of physics, which depend on dimensions, which depend on geometries. Similarly the nearby galaxy of Andromeda in the Virgo cluster may have already crashed into our own Milky Way galaxy, the light from this not having reached us yet. According to our observations today, this galaxy, the only one in the visible universe whose light is blue shifted (meaning that the source is approaching us) is a little more than two million light years away, which means that if it has already collided with the Milky Way, it would have had to have happened less than two million years ago minus the combined duration of pre-collision trajectories of the two galaxies.

When most of the lands of earth were still underwater, about 3.5 - 3 billion years ago (only about a billion years after the planet formed), in the lava ducts in the rifts between the plate tectonic continents, which rose upward like fingers from the ocean floor, jetting massive streams of bubbles, right at the lips of these, in the very hot, boiling, waters around the inside edge of these, there arose the first microbes.

The lands would go on to rise up out of the sea, and the microbes would fill the entirety of the earth's ocean, making it a fully functional ecosystem for abundant microbial life forms. However, aeons are passing while all this is going on. Day and night, night and day. Warmth and cool and light and dark, and always the exact same stars, all rush by in the blink of the sky.

Eventually the microbes became sponges. These sponges became cnidaria — jellyfish which would evolve into starfish, and anemone which would evolve into seaweed and, perhaps, flatworms. Flatworms would give rise to trilobite ecdysozoans, and these trilobites evolved into shrimp and brine. The shrimp evolved into lobsters and fish, the lobsters evolved into crabs and sand fleas and the brine, plankton and anemone into sea weed. Sea weed and horseshoe crabs emerged onto the land.

Up until this point, when all life teemed in the sea, there had been no border to evolution. The struggle for survival was easy, so adaptation was slow, and diversification of appearance abounded. However now, life evolved from the trench microbes was faced with the difficulty of new necessity. Here is where we probably come to the first global cataclysm.

One possible postulate is that autotrophs and heterotrophs, that is — those things which feed off of other things similar to themselves and those things that feed off of things fundamentally different from themselves, might actually descend from a division between earthly and alien origins. In any event, the weak photosynthesis of sea weed became the strong photosynthesis of precambrian oak while the crab and flea gave way by mutation to all species of dinosaur and insect.

Notice that, rather than diversity in individual shape or appearance, these lifeforms bred new traits for the species, which were then infinitely repeated in each generation, and these templates changed in shape or appearance almost as often as with each generation. The reason for this was twofold, and indicates the probable nature of the global cataclysm.

If an asteroid had struck the earth when these first species drifted up from the primordial soup, it would have probably upset the crust and the atmosphere most. The result would have been the fracturing of the mantle and the beginning of continental drift below, and EM disturbances and the blackening of the sky above. I believe this asteroid to essentially have become the mass continental shelf we today call Antarctica. It is likely the mineral deposits there that have caused it to move toward the opposite magnetically charged pole. If, as I suspect, that asteroid did harbor an alien life form, then that lifeform would have to have been the first virus.

Thus, life in those times was ever changing and hostile. The dinosaurs had highly developed thalami, but little to no development of the cerebral cortex, much like modern day lizards. They grew in size due to the intense radiation, both caused by the tectonic shifting as EM disturbances along fault lines and by the thinning of the atmosphere at high altitudes due to the ash of the last meteor and the constant, subsequent, volcanic activity, leading to global warming similar to what we are now suffering from due to chloroflouridation of the ozone layer.

At the time this would have worked itself out due to the rotation of the earth. Just as the ash content was pulled toward the equator at its uppermost altitudes, so the warm air trapped in the atmosphere followed, until finally there was global cooling and the polar ice caps began to descend. Meanwhile life went on, more or less obliviously, multiplying and diversifying. The dinosaurs sired mammals and birds.

Then, 65 million years ago, there was another global cataclysm. To this day we do not know for certain what happened to the dinosaurs. We only know that some event devastated the surface of the earth, destroying all these majestic creatures, and sparing only the lowliest of serpents to crawl before the face of the titmouse and the mosquito. If there was an asteroid, it would have had to be much smaller than the last one, because it did not destroy the trees and plants. I therefore propose that it struck where the modern Bermuda Triangle is, and that the distortion to compasses there is the result of the asteroid's massive amounts of minerals and ores. This would have been in the space almost directly between the modern day Yucatan and Florida peninsulas, then on the western shore of Gondwanaland. There is evidence of a 300 foot crater in the Yucatan peninsula, which at that time was underwater, as well as accompanying remains in modern Cuba of a 900 foot tall sediment deposit carried in by the resulting tsunami.

By this time the lands of Gondwanaland (which would later become North and South America, Europe and greater Asia) and Laurasia (Africa, India, Australia and eastern Asia) had been parted wide and the sea flowed in between them. Even then, mysterious forces were acting on a global scale. Ice ages came and went. A woolly mammoth recently discovered flash frozen in Siberia had in its stomach undigested tropical vegetation.

Then there was a revolution in Africa. Some monkeys next to a brush fire that burned off a certain weed decided to get down out of the trees and start walking around exclusively on their hind legs. We know our ancestors were Australopithecines who lived in southern and eastern Africa 5 to 1 million years ago, Homo Habilis who cohabitated these lands 2.5 to 1.6 million years ago, Homo Erectus who crossed the equator in Africa into the North and spread west as far as the Atlantic and east as far as the Pacific and east Indian oceans 1.7 million to 200,000 years ago, the Preneanderthals (600,000 to 230,000 years ago) and Neanderthals (230,000 to 35,000 years ago) of Europe, and Cromagnon hunters of Europe and Canada from Africa through Israel beginning 117,000 to 95,000 years ago all walked the earth before our modern homo sapiens. It is likely that the Cromagnons and the Neanderthal were the father and mother species of modern Homo Sapiens. Australopithecines first migrated out of Antarctica and into southernmost Africa 5 million years ago, and Homo Sapiens migrated up from Antarctica to Africa 100,000 years ago, and again from Antarctica up to South America 33,000 years ago.

We presume these species to be descended from interbreeding between species of monkeys such as apes, chimpanzees and gorillas, who were, themselves, originally derived from small mammals such as lemurs who took to the trees at least several hundred thousand years before. Lemurs evolved through cats from weasels, who had evolved from the first mammals: rodent-size furry lizards, with their legs square to the sides and full body tails that first appeared about the time of the end of the larger dinosaurs from smaller lizards and snakes. However we have not publicly found either "missing link" between wombed mammals and their egg laying ancestors or between early hominids and the family of the monkey, which, considering the level of our species' technological development is probably about an equivalent evolution.

It is possible that this stage in evolution occurred on the continent of Antarctica at a time when, again because of ash content and volcanic activity saturating the equatorial atmosphere in the wake of the cataclysm that killed the dinosaurs, there was no polar ice cap. It is equally possible that the remains of the first homo sapiens would be found there, flash frozen, before they were forced in their sea faring boats to the tip of South America — where the earliest fossils of the homo sapien population exist in the Americas (a 14,700 year old campsite has been found in modern Chile, and a 13,500 year old skeleton has been found in modern Brazil), the cromagnons living to the north in modern Canada (paleolithic artifacts of Clovis people 13,000 years old, the 13,000 year old Arlington Springs skeleton and a basket dating back 12,900 years show their presence from one coast to another) — and up to modern Cape Town, South Africa, as well as around the horn of Africa and up the Nile to Ethiopia.

By the time of the last ice age most of the continents were in the positions that we know them today, and so we can trace the route our human ancestors took as they populated the lands of earth even on a modern globe.

Human cultures have grown with human migrational patterns and evolved from the same origins differently in different regions. The oldest state of cultural exchange is the false path of the Right Hand, which seeks to reveal that all Truths are actually merely lies. It is anarchism, and its aesthetic is surrealism. Not only are all interpersonal reactions to be taken as impossible and absurd, but all of physical reality's consistency as matter within a universe of energy is to be constantly held under conscientious suspicion. This is the path which promotes personal power by revealing the fact that others are lying. The fact that others are lying is true, but this path's self-centered focus on the wrongs and sins and falsehoods of others and tactic of maternal nit-picking is meant to paint the world with a disgust that actually only exists within and for the selves of the individuals who subscribe to this path. It is thought that earlier hominid social units than modern man possessed this level of cognition, for the practice of ritual burial associated with it was shared by later Neanderthals and Cromagnons too. The alpha, beta, omega hierarchy of other pack mammals, and the extended families of the apes both contributed to the Chief, Shaman, hunter-gatherer unspoken order humans evolved in their groups. The true path of the Left Hand is the one which promotes the entertainment of others as the ideal goal of lying. This is the imaginativeness of the artist as opposed to that of the ingenuity of the scientist or the ruthless cunning manipulateness of the politician. This is the co-creation of reality promised of all shamans by the decentralized forests which feed their mojo.

Of the homo sapiens, first there were the negros of Africa. Next the negroids of the middle east. Then followed from these the Mongoloids and the Australoids. Then there were the Americans, who were interbred between the elder native homo sapiens of coastal South America and the migrating homo sapien tribes who joureyed over the Beringian land bridge between modern Siberia and Alaska. Finally the last tribes migrated into Europe, which had been occupied by cromagnons, and these Europeans then spread through upper Asia, becoming known as the caucasians.

By 20,000 to 18,000 years ago mankind had finally settled in all the lands of earth. At this time the negatively magnetically charged pole was in the north, and this caused the electrolosis (or ionization) of the arctic ocean forming one mile thick glaciers of distilled salt water that covered northern Europe and much of North America. These decreased sea levels by as much as three hundred feet, leaving land bridges connecting India and the orient to Australia and eastern Asia to North America. There may also have been land bridges connecting Australia to Antarctica, which would have been only a semi-polar, temperate continent, free of the ice sheet formed by the negatively charged pole. A land bridge also might have connected Antarctica to South America. The strong electromagnetic field served as a filter for cosmic radiation and was the exact source of evolutionary stimulus the cerebrum needed. Therefore, the earliest civilizations humanity constructed were monumental in scale, economically pro-free trade, and politically democratic. They arose as a network of global coastal trade communities between 22,000 and 7,000 years ago.

The first of these such centers began more than twelve thousand five hundred years ago in Meso America. This was the civilization of Atlantis. They lived in the area of the modern Gulf of Mexico, and were astronomers, speculators, and geomancers. They made settlements as far west as China (where they were probably the red haired, fair skinned mummie makers of whom the vedas were written), Japan (where a 10,000 year old sunken city has been found) and easter island (where they brought the people to erect over 600 monolithic heads), and as far east as Egypt (where they ended cannibalism in the lower Nile and became the generations the Old Kingdom would establish as representative of God forms — the king representing the divided migration routes of man, later represented by Adam Kadmon who would become the twelve tribes of Israel) and the canary islands (where a mexican style plaza exists to this day). Throughout the world we see the same burial mound and ley line culture evidenced in the pyramids of Carral and Merubecka and the Nazca desert lines and geoglyphs take root. The same people constructed a stone henge in northeastern America (complete with a speaking tabletop for prophecy) and in Northern Britain along the clockwise currents of the northern Atlantic as constructed a city, now beneath the waves, off the coast of Spain. There is evidence that a mighty culture comprised of a multitude of people existed in South America as recently as seven thousand years ago, who farmed on fields surrounded by artificial lakes created by clearing vast floodplains around the higher grounds where they lived, and who created an expansive canal system, so technically accurate that it could channel water uphill, that connected the entire continent with waterways. The oldest known pyramids date from no later than this time period, located at Merubecka (Meru — the great mother mountain, of Becka), as well as a sunken city off the coast of Cuba. At this time the Beringian land bridge united Siberia and North America, the islands of Micronesia were a unified land mass connecting India and Indochine to Australia, and the Giza plataeu was a lush tropical garden fed by the cool winds blowing off glaciated northern Europe. This was the age of the QBLH of the tree and of the serpent.

Then there was some form of cataclysm.

The earth is a huge orb that turns slowly around itself in one direction. Because of the metallic ores produced in its crust friction, as well as supported by the holographic force upon the entire earth by the gravity well generated by the earth's mass and stimulated by its rotation, the earth itself is magnetically and electrically charged. The poles of the gravitational rotational axis of the earth and those of the electromagnetic field do not currently coincide. They are offset from one another by about 11 degrees. It is not known if they originally coincided when either or both of them first began. It is postulated that there has been a difference between them for as long as they have existed, however there is no evidence to support such.

The earth could not have had either of these poles in their present condition earlier than when a large asteroid struck the earth, sheering away a portion of its surface into a debree field in tight orbit around the remains of the earth, and in this way creating what have come to be the earth and the moon today. The moon has very little gravity because it is not of a very dense consistency, about equal to that of earth's mantle, however it has no strong electromagnetic polarity because its mass contains few magnetic minerals, and because its sidereal revolution (27.322 days) and its synodic rotation (29.53 days) are so nearly equal (differing by only 2.208 days due to the movement of the earth relative to the sun, which adds to the position of the moon relative to the sun, effectively cacleing out the difference over time by averaging), as opposed to the difference of revolutions and rotations of the earth, which makes 365.25 daily rotations on its axis during one yearly solar orbit, giving earth's much greater mass a much greater electromagnetic field (the only averaging of the difference for which and that of the sun occurs relative to galactic core).

(Even though the same side of it is always facing us because of its synchronous rotation and orbit, the face of the moon that we can see has large, evenly rounded impact craters, implying relatively right angled collisions. The source of any such debris large enough or propelled fast enough to leave such scarring on the fine dust surface of the moon could only have been its nearest, overshadowing, sheltering neighbor, us. In particular are the Copernicus and Ptolemeaus craters, the former much deeper and younger than the latter.)

Because there is no electromagnetic polarity, a compass on the moon would not move, the charged iron pointing any direction the compass is held. There are some places on the earth where compasses turn wildly around because they are in a magnetic bubble where there is no polarity, and are detecting the presence of polarity outside the bubble. One such place is the magnetic south pole. Another is the Bermuda triangle.

One thing that could create such a magnetic bubble effect is an impacted asteroid. It would have high mineral and metallic content — thus becoming strongly magnetized, but because it was not necessarilly rotating around a single fixed axis before impact, it would have no polarity relative to that of the earth. Nor would the metallic mass assume the greater, or outside, polarity — the stimulated electrons would homogenize to a disordered state equivalent statistically to the same effect as equal possible attraction to either pole. It is also possible to create a magnetic bubble artificially — whenever electricity is used it generates such an autonomously polarized magnetic field. Similarly it is also possible for a magnetic bubble to be left behind in an area even if the initial instrument that created it is removed. The earth's own electromagnetic field is such a bubble.

It is known from the examination of the orientation of layering in the formation of rock containing deposits of iron around the world that the earth's electromagnetic field has changed the directional charge of its polarity at several times since its formation following the collision that formed the moon. However it is unlikely that the collision of a comet or asteroid would account for this.

The sun also has an electromagnetic field but because it is composed of ignited gas, its rotation is not equally distributed. The surface around the poles rotates faster than the surface around the equator. This causes the middle of the magnetic field to be pulled around along with the equatorial rotation, and causes the electromagnetic field to wrap itself up around the sun. The visible results of this are sunspots — where the invisible electromagnetic field itself is crossing from one to another of its bands, prominences — where some of the surface plasma of the sun follows along one of these cross-jumping bands, and flares — where some of the plasma breaks out of the banding and ejects a jet of radiation into space. When the electromagnetic field is coiled as tightly as it can get, the sun's poles reverse, and the field resets itself.

This happens in a cycle determined by the alignment of the ecliptic with the center of the galaxy.

It is possible that this is an effect that is caused by the determination of the obliquity of the sun's ecliptic relative to the center of the galaxy by the difference squared between the sun's mass and the distance to galactic core, whereby whenever any star's equator aligns with a nearby black hole, such as at the center of the milky way galaxy, its magnetic poles reverse. However, when this happens it may effect the electromagnetic fields of all the planets in the solar system as well.

So, similarly, the earth's rotational and electromagnetic poles have been gradually coming closer and closer to being aligned. When this happens the free energy (gravitational) and the charged energy (electromagnetic) compound one another, and the earth is transformed into a giant dynamo. The end result is that the magnetic poles reverse, and when they do this they are repelled from their position overlapping the rotational poles. This does not cause the electromagnetic poles to move, however, because they are now held in place by the sun. Instead the rotational axis of the earth is moved in the same direction that the electromagnetic pole moved to overlap it, and to a distance determined by the strength of the electromagnetic / gravitational surge caused by their overlap. It is known that the north pole of the rotational axis has occupied at least three different positions over the past 80,000 years — the Yukon (117,250 to 80,000 years ago), the Greenland Sea (80,000 to 50,000 years ago) and Hudson Bay (50,000 to between 17,000 and 12,000 years ago, most likely 11,600 years ago, causing crustal displacement from 15,000 to 10,000 years ago) before moving to its present location in the middle of the Arctic Ocean.

This can cause many types of other changes as well. Volcanic activity, tectonic shifting, continental drift, rapid glaciation and complete crustal displacement are all possibilities, as well as the displacement of the planetary bodies from their proper orbits or the movement of a body in the Kuiper belt or Oort cloud. There is still no explanation, for example, of the volcanic activity on a moon of Jupiter, geysers on a moon of Saturn, and gas jets on a moon of Neptune, since all of these are outside the asteroid belt, and considered too far away from the sun to receive enough radiation for there to be heat enough for such conditions to exist. The effect all depends on the placement of the planets in the ecliptic relative to the alignment of the sun and galactic core. Since this is a cyclically recurring process, it can be understood to account for any form of naturally occurring global scale event one can imagine, however it can only be linked definitively to the 41,000 year cycle of the ice ages.

One account has come to be pieced together from the eldest written records of the ancients, where often we find the celestial bodies used as descriptions for the Gods, or vice versa. In early Phoenician accounts we find record of a near collision between the earth and either TIAMAT, a sphere many modern scholars associate with the planet known since Roman times as Venus, or MARDUK (alternately possibly Mars, the moon or Mercury). It is mathematically possible, using calculated gravitational impacts on orbital trajectories, to predict that Venus could have, at a timeframe before them early enough for the ancients to have kept their mythologies about, entered the solar system from a more oblique angle and careened past our planet before being caught by the sun's gravity well and pulled in to its modern day orbit. Because its five retrograde cycles per revolution perfectly form a pentacle from which the golden division, or divine proportion, may be derived, there is ample evidence linking this planet to the mythos of beauty surrounding Venus, Aphrodite, and Isis, all later generations of TIAMAT. The Greek myth regarding the birth of Aphrodite states that she "sprang from the head of Zeus" (Jupiter). If the planet of Venus had come anywhere near Earth, ever, it would have turned the entire surface of the crust on the fluid magma mantle.

There is evidence to support that a pole shift and crustal displacement due to near interplanetary collision might have happened at the time of the end of the last ice age, between 12,500 and 7,000 years ago (about 11,600 years ago), causing the Berinagian land bridge, uncovered 22,000 years ago, to sink as massive ice sheets moved back from the faces of Europe and North America, raising sea levels worldwide by 180 feet.

Maps survive copied from pre-history showing the continent of Antarctica uncovered by an ice sheet, as it is today. These maps were made by the sea-travelling explorers who built the first stone temples and monuments, many of which have now been reclaimed by the sea since the glaciers melted. If the crust of the earth were turned on the liquid mantle by the very near passing of Venus, then Antarctica would have been slid under the south polar ice sheet. There is evidence that around this same time a large ice sheet was ejected by Antarctica into the Southern Indian ocean, opposite the direction the pole was displaced, although this could have occurred even earlier, perhaps 30,000 years ago, when the magnetic polarity of the poles reversed and the rotational axis recentered itself on the Yukon area north pole.

There may have even been displacement of the continental tectonic plates as a result of this, and one theory is that South America was once at a right angle east filling the entire space of the present north Atlantic ocean, connected at its now southern tip to the interior of the horn of Africa. It is possible that the center of Atlantis was approximately where Florida — a mineral-rich silt peninsula, Cuba — a small island, and the mountainous Yucatan peninsula are today, on the last remaining portion above the molten mantle of the asteroid that killed the dinosaurs. The topography of the Atlantic ocean is such that the eastern and western continental shelves fall off 300 feet out to great depths, and there is a vast mountain range building up to the mid-Atlantic ridge in the center. The reason the plates might have been moved around is that they contained minerals that would be drawn along the magnetic distortions created in earth's gravity well. Electromagnetic distortions occur along fault lines even today due to the enormous friction of the earth's crust pushing against itself. These have been known to produce hallucinations of unidentified flying objects and thin, spectral, grey aliens, usually with a medical sensation — perhaps the experience of a newborn in a hospital.

It is possible that the earth did not acquire the 23.5 degree angle of inclination of its rotational axis and thus the 26,000 year cycle of precession did not begin until this time. Precession moves the earth's vision of the cosmos 1/360th its circumference per 26298 days (72 years). It moves one seventy-second the full way around every five years. It has precessed the north polar star from Vega to Polaris over the past 13,000 years, and shifted the alignment between the constellation in the ecliptic zodiac and the spring equinox sunrise in the opposite direction as the course of the moon and the sun (seen via the earth) in their orbits along the same path by one of the twelve constellations every 2166 years eight months, on average. 2000 years ago the sign of the vernal equinox was Aries, whereas now the first yearly spring sunrise occurs between Taurus and Gemini, as the age of Taurus is just ending, and the age of Gemini just beginning. Thus the zodiac changes relative to the seasons. As the sun's electromagnetic field resets itself when the solar system's orbital ecliptic (the zodiac) aligns with galactic core (at the center of the milky way where it coincides with the constellation Sagittarius), the ecliptic may have been divided into twelve signs or houses (now known as the lunar mansions or months in the solar or sidereal year) to mark a 2000 year cycle of alternating sunset and sunrise in Sagittarius relative to the four yearly seasons of the inclined earth that might have a simultaneous effect upon polar climate conditions to the alternation of the earth's electromagnetic polarity relative to the resetting differential electromagnetic field of the sun. One way to observe the earth's 23.5 degree angle of inclination from perpendicularity to its plane of orbit around the sun, at least in combination with that of the orbital plane of the moon from the sun, is by seeing that the craters on the moon during the span of one night, as the moon seems to move through the sky as the surface of earth turns around as earth rotates on its polar axis, seem to change position relative to earth's true north.

It is also possible that the supercivilization that erected stone megaliths throughout the world earlier than the building of the pyramids, those who founded the first coastal communities during the last ice age, the people we call the Atlanteans, discovered the remnants of an even earlier culture. Perhaps what they found were dinosaur bones, since this all occurred in the era when a star in the constellation we now know as the Dragon was above the north pole. Although it is possible that they unearthed evidence of another ancient, lost supercivilization. Modern homo sapiens have existed for 4 precessional cycles. This means that polaris is approximately our birth star. That's why this is the star I know as Lucifer. This also gives modern homo sapiens 104,000 years in which to reach the state we're in. (Consider the fact that most of the modern technological luxury we take for granted is the product of only the last 100 years.)

The original Egypto-Geacean mythology of Atlantis states that there have been many such utopian supercivilizations that have risen and fallen over time. The sites remain spiritually unified — Antarctica (the DNA womb); Australia (the dream land — where genetics shows our early ancestors immigrated first after leaving Africa); the Antiplano (a golden rectangle plain with an irrigation grid fed from a canal leading to the Atlantic, located in the Andes mountains in South America is the site of the capital city of Atlantis described by Plato — though the destruction attributed to it is most likely that of Minoan Crete, more recent and nearby to Plato; the Altiplano is the only known site of Orichalc, a fusion of gold, copper and tin, in existence in the world, and it was supposedly this substance from which were made the two pillars shown to Solon by Egyptian initiates according to Plato); America (the ideal democracy superimposed upon the hunting grounds of mystics). One day soon the entire world will be covered in connections to ancient lost civilizations. They are the result of modern and near future time travel, which resulted in the descriptions of “the ones who came down in ships from the sky” as the Nefilim of Sumeria.

Some of the Atlanteans fled to the North and would become the Anasazi. They lived peacefully for a great many years, becoming one with nature. Another group of Atlanteans fled to the south, and also returned to a neo-primitive tribalism, beginning the oral tradition that would become the Popul Vuh while watching their great achievements slowly sink into the jungle. A few of these tribes preserved the Atlantean tradition of skull lengthening by application of a magnetic crown.

At this time the Nubian Ethiopians (at the source of the Nile) and the Sumerians of the Tigris and Euphrates river valley (who built ziggurats to their sun-kings and preserved a superstition of a war in heaven) were only just beginning to learn the art of pyramid crafting for themselves, and were quickly converted into the mass population of the upper and lower Old Kingdom of Egypt 5,000 years ago to build pyramids (4,500 years ago) in alignment with the stars forming their constellation Osiris (our Orion) to secretly declare the passage of Atlantis to the heavens. They discovered the carved Australopithecine head of Giza and built for it the body of the sphinx, aligned to Leo, aligned the pyramids with Osiris (as did the Maya in the city of Teotihuacan), and so 900 years ago would the Buddhists align Angkor Wat in Cambodia with Draco, all constellations that would have appeared on the horizon 12,500 years ago. This would mark a time when Vega was the north star and the last ice age was just beginning to end — the glaciers that had covered North America and Europe receding, restoring sea levels to their original height and wiping out globally all previous coastal civilization.

It is known that trade between Egypt and South America continued, as traces of nicotine and cocoa have been found in the remains of the mummified Pharaohs, and massive carved stone heads of the Olmecs are markedly African. Also it was not until the New Kingdom that the Egyptians began depicting themselves as of a colored complexion, indicating that the rulers of the Old Kingdom, depicted as fair skinned and manneristically thin beings, may have had a different origin than either the semites (who were usually bearded, as opposed to the Egyptians who were clean shaven) or the nubians (who were dark skinned). Since we know that the genetically transferred chemical melanin is responsible for skin color we must conclude that the gradual darkening of the Egyptian people was due to interbreeding and not simply exposure to solar radiation in desert conditions.

The false path of the Left hand is the one which promotes personal power through lying. The one which encourages the formation of cults, of religions, of societies, of Leaders and their Followers, of dominants and submissive personalities gauged in terms of magical hypnotic suggestiveness. This is where all orders of authority, all centralized bureaucracies and all hierarchies of influence and interpersonal political power in situation are concocted, cultivated, and culminated. Money is the only drug of these truly evil realists, and fame the only transcendent heaven and pantheon of immortalized gods.

An inversion between the Right Hand Path and the Left Hand Path occurred at the origin of civilization, when the “savages” (whose minds, if we are to believe the empiricist philosophers of 400 years ago, were “blank slates” and whose lives were “brutish, nasty and short”) accepted organized rule under what would have been the first “great dictator,” or “just devil,” in the entire subsequent political “Leviathan.” Inversion opposes one effect simultaneously with its reverse, such as spin and counter spin. This is to balance the time stream, backwards and forwards, with a simultaneous ending and beginning of the same effect, thus dispersing the opposition of the effect on a higher dimensional level, just as occurs with spin and counter spin. All early pantheons were myths of the first metaphysical legislators, whose adopted names were words with specific meanings from different lost civilizations. These demigods were the first law-makers, thus creating the first covenant of slavery in life for remembered meaning after death, and beginning the persecution complex of the public that remains to this day. It is correct for the people to feel this way, since the masses and civilization survive off of one another symbiotically, and it is only equivalent to our sacrifice to the social structure that it maintains and supports and affirms our orders upon it. The process is based upon the parent forcing what they hate upon the child, in retaliation for the child’s utterly liberated, though temporary, youth and inevitable, individuating maturity that are seen by the parent as a commodity for them to keep to have power over their children and as an imposition on their personal lives, respectively. It would prove to be society, however, that would allow our exponential population expansion, a growth pattern identical to that of a virus, and so it is that society is the cultural simulacrum of the viral form. The subsequent struggle between active society and passive culture is merely the continuation of the war between the two genders of organism, viral and bacterial life forms.

The Egyptians’ myth involved the betrayal of the King God Osiris (Imhotep, builder of the step pyramid at Djoser and architect of the great pyramid at Giza was probably the first to hold the title of YHVH in the Egyptian mystery cult, which made him the moon god that watched over the body of the Pharaoh, represented by the constellation of Osiris, while the king, representing the sun, was asleep) by the 72 conspirators of the Water Serpent God Set — representing the annual inundation of the Nile; His death at Set’s hand; His resurrection by His wife and sister Isis, the Eastern Star, using the mummification technique (flying saucers are dis-embodied manifestations of cnoptic tachyonic microwave gravity singularity tunneling time machines for the transportation of astral bodies) of the mysterious magician God Thoth, associated with Time; and His redemption by the son of that resurrection, Horus, the Hawk-headed Sun God and reincarnation of Osiris.

Isis, associated with the twin star Canis at the heel of the constellation Osiris, would go on to be fused with the Sumerian Mother Goddess Inanna, or Astarte, associated with the moon, to become Ishtar, priestess of the bedouins associated with the morning star, Venus, known as Shalam. Belief in her travelled as far east as India, where she was known as Shiva who, with Brahma (Osiris) and Vishnu (Horus) made up the three ages, or Yugas, of each cycle, or Kalpa — being themselves the destroyer, creator and maintainer of Manvantara, the manifest universe to the Hindus. Along with this calendrical system came the description of an immortal soul that reincarnated through a myriad of lifetimes seeking enlightenment and perfection. They describe a blue skinned race called the Aryans, who have long since vanished from the region, from whom they inherited their kingship by divine right, and from whom they inherited their system of laws, both natural and social. This was the system described in the Rig Vedas. Of course, as the world was short on civilization at the time, a large part of attaining “perfection” was associated with civic duty, and thus the same manual also created the class system, where the slave caste served the land owning caste, and the land owning caste served the kings. In exchange for a life of servitude, the elderly at the time of retirement were exiled to live in aescetic meditative purgative contemplation of their value to the world and brace themselves for the impact of their eventual demise. It was these people who, in their aged wisdom, began the original orders of spiritual attainment, and outlined the parameters of much subsequent research. Thus were begun the world’s first sects, or religious cults, devoted to the study of pure number, and naturalistic allegorical encryption systems.

Iblis-Shaytan, Satan, or Set — Sargon the Great, Scorpion King of Sumeria and unifier of upper and lower kehm, KMT, khemet, Egypt, was already an old and earthly soul (dating back as far as 6000 years ago) when he tempted our original ancestor, mitochondrial Ethiopian Eve, Isis of Sheeba, wife of king Djoser, heir to the rule of unified Egypt, in the hanging gardens of Babylon outside of Ehdin in Mesopotamia with the apple of civilization, giving reason to mankind’s evolution into the trees as monkeys and then down onto their feet on the grasslands. Under him was begun the first system of financial record keeping, which necessitated the creation of hieroglyphics, the first form of writing. Under his rule was the epic of Gilgamesh (gilgal meaning ‘water’ and mesis meaning ‘heir,’ derived from the God Enlil, Sumerian for the onset of rain) engraved into mud tablets with reed wedges, describing Enkidu, probably Khufu — whose name derives from Enki, the Sumerian sky diety, and Utnapishtim, probably Imhotep — who built a ship shaped like a cube in which to survive a flood. He once had been Lucifer, and led the rebel angels in their war against God. Even before that he had been so close to God that no other angel dared look upon his true countenance, for there shown a light so bright it was too much even for the ajnas of the most holy Watchers. Then, it is thought, His name was Michael. Michael, as an angel, was eternal, and therefore still is.

These things that I say about God and Michael will all still be true if you substitute the names Satan and Lucifer. These are synonymous forces, one angelic, one demonic, though both synchronous necessarily. Between them they comprise rational opposition in the mind, without which man is swept up into the presence of divinity and overpowered immediately, or else is consumed by cognitive dissonance. It is also true, however, that Lucifer is the son of Satan in the same capacity that Jesus was the son of God. Satan, as coven master, is Lucifer, the free spirit, in his future, just as, at the time God was whoever was the Grand Master YHVH of the esoteric Egyptian-Hebrew occult, and later the person of the true Jesus of Nazareth would hold that same covenant. These are extrapolations through reincarnative systems, indicating that both are, indeed, brothers in manifestation.

The psychic continuum, the psychic community, psychic culture, society and government, as well as the international conspiracy of psychics are all the dominion of the archangel Michael, who oversees the running of all interpersonal affairs between the souls of us living beings, which souls are themselves the spirits of the suffering Watchers, cast down from the Heavens, now forever in what was their Hell, where everything is prettier, yet there is something subtly wrong with everything.

The Watchers see the fallen angels, whom, according to the ancient Ethiopian prophet Enoch (thought to be Thoth), Michael is one of seven angels entrusted with guarding — that they may never escape their torturous being. These are the names of the Ancient Ones listed in the Necronomicon. Their Hell is the Enochian Communications System. In the subsequent monotheisms these discorporeal djinn, associated with our original civilizing ancestors, would come to be seen as servants of the universal god, and therefore as anthropomorphised electromagnetic energy, and by then the importance of the role played by the original civilizers themselves was depleted to Enoch’s description of them as Giants — the offspring of the rebel angels with the wives of men. As far as we know they were creating tachyonic wormholes and bending spacetime all over the continuum for aeons before bumping into our little cosmic backwater, where they immediately became saviors to the counter-intelligence community.

“Elohim” means “my god,” and because it is this personal relationship with a diety that is at the heart of the Hebrew religion it is important to note that it implies only one of many possible higher powers at that time. This was at about the time when Azazel or Abram (meaning he who has Ram, or the table of testimony, containing the history of humanity), came out of Ur into Egypt, where he became known as Imhotep — designer of the first pyramids at Saqqara for king Djoser and, later, of the great pyramid for king Khufu. He imported many people from his homeland of Phoenicia, and they would become the Hyksos, “shepherd kings” over the northern portion of Egypt during the middle kingdom. These people studied the arts of manifestation, telekinisis, telepathy, astronomy and astrology, geomancy and skrying, forming an occult mystery school. Egypt would give birth to the Jewish people, whose religion had been only a loose tapestry of disparate mythologies before being rigorously schooled under Egyptian metaphysics.

Internally the first great pyramid would have made excellent living quarters, and it is possible that it served as Khufu’s home while he was alive, during the fifth dynasty, much the same as ziggurats had been in Ur. During this time it may have also been used as a temple of religious ceremonies whenever the other royalty of the lands came to visit him. Then, at the time of his death, the air shafts were sealed up and it was enclosed in a clay wall so that water levels could be gradually increased and blocks floated into position to complete the immense structure. That workers left rather than complete a monument to a dead man, or that some workers died while working in difficult conditions are both possible explanations for why there do not appear to be as many pyramidal worker graves on the plain nearby as rationally one would expect to find for a work of this size.

However construction on the first great pyramid utilized a new technique — building up a large mud mound in a circle around the base of the construction to fill in with water on which to float the massive building blocks into place on a large boat (which is still preserved to this day, buried alongside the pyramid). The only problem with this was that there was no rain, so all the water had to be transported up hill from the nearby Nile, and it had to be drained and changed rather frequently, because the mud and silt would have gotten into the unmortared cracks, as well as obscuring the water’s clarity. So the water was let to drain back into the Nile at first, but this caused erosion around the nearby sacred carved stone head for which they had built a stone brick cat body. They decided to use the water pressure to drill into the rock of the plateau, and carved channels for it to flow through. As the pyramid grew taller and taller, as well as would have the mud mound around it have had to, more and more water built up greater and greater pressures, and the artificial caverns were bored deeper and deeper. It is possible that the interior of the great pyramid served as a giant pump at this time, with the table of Ram, or Power, acting as a power source or possibly a cutting instrument; it is known that a small clay jar containing a copper cylinder and an iron rod that, when alkaline rich fruit juice is added, creates an electric charge of one volt was found in Mesopotamia. The workers who died before the great monument’s completion became known as the first djinn — or disembodied spirits of the sacred living dead, and this displaced a certain trajectory of electromagnetic spin that came to be known as the ka, the ruach, or the aura, and can be thought of as equivalent to the quantity of reflected light.

The prominence of subsequent historical seers, however, should not reflect upon these first Watchers as if either were or are omens of preparation for a great evolutionary leap into physical spirit. A good historical equivalency to remember is the myths of the fair skinned men with beards who founded civilization in South America culminating in the triumphant landing of the Spanish conquistadors.

When they were met by men the Watchers began teaching them in the use of fossil fuels. This would serve to deplete the ozone layer, thus allowing in more solar radiation, which would heighten the energy trapped in earth’s electromagnetic spectrum and increase traffick on the Enochian Communications System. In this way the fallen spirits were bound to cause a depletion and plague of the astral environment in which they exist and on which they depend, effectively punishing themselves. This effect, however, has fallen down to man, and the depletion of our ozone layer threatens to melt the polar ice caps and flood the world.

We are so puny it is only a catastrophe of this size that we could cause, for that would be merely a world-wide, and world-confined catastrophe — as opposed to our next biggest dread, a collapse of e-commerce, which would only effect our business. These pale in comparison to the legend of the sinking of the continent of Atlantis by the wrong deeds of only ten kings, or even the cause of the dinosaurs' sudden disappearance, which remains a mystery to this day.

These fifty Ancient Ones, the Annunaki, meaning Watchers, are survivors of the 72 names of the Shemhamforash, which are given as seventy-two Guardian Angels (one of whom is Michael) controlling seventy-two subservient qliphotic manifestations (known in ancient times as demons or, to us today, as forced coincidences). The Shemhamforash itself was the Name of God uttered by Moses, again another name of Imhotep (from Moshesh, meaning 'saved from water') at the parting of the Red Sea. However it is more than this. It breaks down mathematically into the 36 dekans of day and the 36 dekans of night, who were divided up as three per each of the twelve constellations. This system was more precise than the Egyptian system of 36 dekans, each ruling over ten days and ten nights, with an additional 37th representing the five annual holidays to make up for the lag in the ten day week, three week month calander from the actual solar revolution of 365 and 1/4th days.

The knowledge of the Watchers, believed to be recorded in the Table of Testimony, which had been being used as a lid to the king's chamber sarcophagus in the great pyramid, was smuggled out by the Hyksos followers of the deposed monotheist Pharaoh Akhenaton, whom they called Mesis — meaning rightful heir. Thus it was used as a spell to defeat an army. In this event the Shemhamforash was a temporal manifestation that marked the beginning of the Hyksos/Habiru/Hebrew nation's wandering in the desert of the Gobi peninsula, which ended when they entered the lands of Canaan and the Gaza strip. Like any manifestation it had its consequences. Moses subsequently delivered the Table of the Testimony of the Ten Commandments of YHVH from the top of Mt. Sinai (Zonei or Zion), but then died before entering the Land of Milk and Honey. Because it was temporal, though, it had massive ramifications in the astral realm.

After this event, 22 of the Host were spared, in accordance with the letter of the Hebrew Law (that is, the Hebrew alphabet itself). The other fifty were shown the Mercy of God, and dwell now about us in the form of karma in our aura, or personal electromagnetic field, also called the spark of life or the soul. This being thus, our spirit is yet free, though theirs' are not. It is proper to talk about the ramifications of the Shemhamforash, however, if only to assure ourselves that our fate, some 4000 years later, concerns it not.

To understand the twenty-two who remained, you must perceive the paths on the kabbalah. To understand the fifty who fell, you must understand the role of Lucifer in the war of the rebel angels. Remember that Lucifer became Satan at this same time, coinciding with the writing of the Pentateuch beginning with the creation of Adam, the first man — based upon Egyptian Atum or Aten, from the Sumerian god Anu — the first law making ruler, named Ur-Nammu who we know as Hamurabi, and was known in early Egypt as Abram; from whence is derived the Egyptian and Hebrew saying 'Amen' — 'let it be.' So let us work backwards from then on. Satan with Maloch art S.A.M. who is described as the hair of Samson, which, when cut, would topple an empire. S.A.M. oppose God. Where Shekina falls before God, Chronzon — a null void — appears before S.A.M. Where Shekina conjoins with Malkuth in the kabbalah, Lucifer the Anti-christ rises up in the qliphoth. The Anti-Christ penetrates Chronzon, and becomes Christ ascended from Daath. All of this occurs within the kabbalah, which is only a hypercube, or the shape of one fourth dimensional solid. God remains remote.

It is the sole condition of the Watchers that they be real — and are to reality bound even now. Thus it was that they fell as the result of the war in heaven. Now the Watchers are little more tangible than reflected signals through peoples' minds. They are also known as archetypes, though not all archetypes are the Watchers. They are less tangible than our bodies, though they are bound to us to relay through, and must make use of us like puppets in order to communicate. They all come with Michael. It is a package deal. To know of Michael is to know of Lucifer. To know of Michael is to know the Shemhamforash. To know of Lucifer is to know the Fall of the rebel angels. Therefore those who would be agents for Him are also agents for the devil, for the two are one and the same.

Now the name Michael is a common name. It is originally Hebrew, meaning “who is like God” phrased as a question. The power of the name Michael is obvious, examining its roots. In the Shemhamforash, or 3, 72 letter passages from Exodus that align to form angel names, His name appears at random (Mem-Yod-Kaph). Similarly, in the book of Enoch, an ancient scribe, often associated with Thoth, who lived before the world flood described by all surviving mythologies, the name Michael appears as one of the angels who guard those angels who “bred with the wives of men.” He is torn between the angelic Shemhamforash and qliphotic Goetia, and plagued by the fate of the Enochian hosts, the eternal punishment of the fallen angels.

All of this was being carried out by the Hebrews during the Egyptian and Babylonian captivities. Thus it is hard for most people to understand its true meaning, since it is so hard for the average person now to identify with being a slave — a condition alienated only slightly by our modern token exchange system. Just as we believe we serve society, so we believe the greater spirit of society will serve us, however the service of us by our society is only beneficial if greater than our own individual capacity — such as in the case of all available social individuals combined, and if it is made to serve us personally. To this end the Covenant of God was created by the Zadok priests (of Sinai) making humans and “god” mutual slaves, thus allowing the majority of blind believers in the Universal God, usually too distracted by what they assumed was its involvement in their daily lives — which constituted the ultimate truth for them irregardless of what in fact is true of the universe and for God, to get their relationship to the concept neatly squared away however they liked, which mostly resulted in the assumption of the civic spirit. The description of being real slaves, for the real Hebrews, would not be uncommon in the context of their history. In fact it would be found, as the myth of a lost continent and the myth of the messiah, recapitulated in the traditions of many other great world religions of the time, such as Moses had personally discovered in the religion of the Egyptians.

In China, the elders were already well versed in an oracular divination system derived from yarrow rods cut from bamboo shafts which has since come to be called the I Ching. In this system there are 64 separate possible outcomes, each comprised of six yarrow rods, or lines of yin and yang. In this system yin and yang represented the naturally occurring inversion between polar vibrational wavelengths of chi energy, an energy found inside the body as well as in fields surrounding all things. Thus the hexagrams were thought to replicate microcosmically a macrocosmic probability. These derive from the same system of seventy two, based on the doubling of thirty six dekans (of which there are three per each of the twelve signs in the zodiac), but they subtract eight as being represented by double hexagrams, that look the same right side up or upside down. The I Ching was thought to represent a temporal pattern for which the eight doubles were the standard parameter of inverting fluctuation.

At this time in India the prince Siddhartha lived peacefully in palatial luxury. His father kept secret from him all the suffering of the world, and his mother continually recounted the story of his birth, and how it had been holy. When he became a man Siddhartha discovered the suffering of the world, and set out to become a monk. He joined the elder Vedic ascetics, who had worked their entire lives in misery and poverty and were now prepared in the act of spiritual cleansing for their inevitable deaths. One night he meditated beneath the bodhi tree, and summoned up all of his personal inner demons, and one by one slew them all, so they would never distract him again. He began to teach that inner peace and states of mental calm recovered greater revelations of enlightenment. At that time many people living from as far south as the Indus river valley to as far north as the Tibetan steppes were well versed in Vedic philosophy, the Stoic work ethic of the Hindu caste system. They came to the Buddha to debate and challenge his view of passivity and positivity, and most came to understand and accept his insights and results. The Samurai warriors of later China and Japan, who are thought to be inheritors of the originally Indian cultural heritage of Buddhism, came to represent a totalitarian, or dictatorial, though other than poor peasant monks trained to be ninjas, a classless society.

According to the Hebrew tradition, around this time the Temple of Solomon was built as a House for God. Inasmuch as the Exodus may have represented the land bridge of Beringia between Asia and North America, the myth of the Temple of Solomon may have been a metaphor for the building of the great pyramid. It is at least likely that the pillars of Jachin and Boaz mentioned in its context refer back to the same two stones of the Decalogue, which were in the possession of the Egyptians at the time of Solon, according to Plato, and are supposedly from Atlantis. According to the mythology of Solomon, he had attributed to a ring the power to govern the seventy-two. These were merely collections of potential. They could be based on either the sum of all people who potentially understand the knowledge implied by the number 72, or the sum of all people who are enslaved to belief that is not based on knowledge and awareness of true and accurate facts, depending on whichever would prove eventually to win out over the other, and thus were the source of tremendous potential power. The decalogue stones were subsequently carried out of Israel by Menelik, Solomon's son with the Queen of Sheba, and moved to Ethiopia.

The class system of India spread to the west and influenced the minds of even the early Greek philosophers, considered to be the first social politicians, as opposed to laborers or lords, and it was upon the framework of a class hierarchy that the first utopias were speculated. Both Egypt and stone henge contributed to the wisdom and science of the Greek Hellenic age, followed by the Hellenistic age conquests as far east as India and China by Alexander the Great — who took a town and a wife in every land he visited. This inspired both the later expansion of the territories of the Republic of Rome, until they became an empire following the Gualic or Gaelic Wars with the kilted Celts of France — red-haired descendents of the Indian Aryans, as well as the messiah, or living anthropomorphic ideal, of the Jews.

By then, Roman astronomers were noticing an increase of sunspots. At that time, everybody in Rome would have qualified as fit to observe this effect, for it would have been sensed in the form of heat by the flesh itself. Rome was considered the karmic manifestation of Plato's Republic, by the Romans anyway — and it is true that, because everyone considered themselves a philosopher, just as nowadays anybody can read Stephen Hawking, it had constituted a similarity to that idealized utopia, at least until Julius Caesar proclaimed himself the posthumously prodigal emporer and his own aura, his inner circle, turned against him.

The true astronomers knew this to represent the grand cross alignment of the planets of our solar system, which had occurred in the ides of March. Then the sun's electromagnetic field went pop and blew the earth's soul — its spark of life, its own electromagnetic aura — out into the thin plasma sheet that trails in earth's shadow like the tail of a comet today. It is to mark this event that none of the surviving popular calendars today recognize the effect of precession on the zodiac. During the time it took Roman astronomers to observe this effect of the electromagnetic field of the planet, that it had suddenly changed, there was a kind of occultish man-hunt to find or produce a messiah, or scape-goat, to symbolize why Caesar had done this.

At this time on the bank of the Dead Sea was Qumran, a monastic library. Here lived a community of free-thinkers who had been exiled from the surrounding communities, who called themselves the Essenes. (The level of the Dead Sea has dropped so low in the subsequent 2000 years that it is now below sea level, and is full of so much salt it is almost possible to walk on the surface of the water. There are also higher than normal levels of radiation in the area. According to mythology this is the site where Solomon disposed of the 72 Goetic influences he had evoked to build the temple.) The Essenes of the Jews were being covertly infiltrated by the opposing sect of the Nazarenes, from Nosrei Ha-Brith, "keepers of the covenant" (from Nosrem, meaning 'poor') and vice versa, and the result of this was outbreaks of religious zealots wanting to worship at times not given sanction by the Roman occupation. We are told it was from these conditions that the recapitulation of Great Caesar's Ghost was made flesh, from the politics of Athens and the breeding program of Sparta by the same method that Thoth taught Isis to resurrect Osiris in Horus (which Shiva did for Kali in Sidhartha). This is the same, finding of a receptive body and then drawing out of a certain soul, used by Buddhists today to preserve the holy luminescence of Guattama Buddha in the bodies of various Dalai Lamas throughout the ages, just as the Catholic Church duly elects Popes. What the Essene Baptists and the poor Nazarenes were arguing juxtapositions of was a Chinese system at least 1,000 years older that predicted cyclical alignments of the solar system's orbital plane and the galactic center of the buldge in the middle of the Milky Way. Rome's territories did extend into the east, and they had rebuilt and rejuvenated many Alexandrias, though it was easier for their occult to merely infiltrate the nearby Nazarenes then send an agent far abroad to a foreign land, amongst an alien people. A certain Essene — we are told his age was attributed to be 33 — attracted the attention of the Pharisees, the collaborators with the Roman occupation. They would go on to resurrect the cult of Zoroaster (Imhotep) in Christ's title, and thus the oldest surviving monotheism (or belief in a discorporeal, universal, conscious continuum) would produce an anthropomorphication of the unified field in the form of a finite unit (the sun's alignment with galactic core, in Sagittarius, as seen from earth) as it passes through a fixed circuit (precessional change of this position relative to the earth's seasons) in a functional system (the ecliptic zodiac). The rest is history, or at least, so we are told.

In truth, the official version of Christianity, as contained in the canonized Gospels of the New Testament, was written by the Piso family of Rome over three generations, with the help of both Pliny the Elder and the Younger. This was in accordance with an agreement made between early Christian Churches — who possessed no existent dogma of their own, but were essentially gnostic (that is, Egypto-Hebraic) and Coptic (Egypto-Christian) initiation cults whose secret was that Hamurabi (Imhotep) was the same person, in flesh or in spirit, as Sargon — and the family of the Augustine emperors of Rome — which began with the grandson of Lucius Calpurnius Piso, who lived during the time of Christ — by Saul of Tsarsis, who changed his name to Paul on the road to Damascus, which was the community name used within Qumran. This would replace the original Essene mythology of the Righteous Teacher (known in the bible as Jesus, John the Baptist, James — Christ's brother, and also as Barabas) and the Wicked Priest (Paul — represented in the bible by both Peter and Judas) that described the Maccabbean uprising, at which time the scrolls stored under the original temple of Solomon and under the second temple of Herod — rebuilt after the Babylonian captivity, were transported to Qumran, and the second temple burned to the ground by the Romans. Neither of these is an accurate depiction of the life of Yeshua Ben Padijah, the real Jesus, who wrote of the Enochian angels in Qumran, moved to France with Mary Magdalene, bore the bloodline which would later become the Merovingians with her, and lived a quiet, uneventful life until he was at least 55.

The entire validity for the authority of the early unified Christian church was based on the accounts of three different people, in writing, who lived at the same time as Jesus and who would probably have counted themselves under his influence, tracing his lineage back to the house of King David, whose son was Solomon, the offspring of Moses and heir of Abraham. The fact that these documents are known Roman forgeries should not matter, because this is not a true bloodline, but a list of rightful achievers of a certain fixed level of initiation in the Egyptian mystery cult, and the necessity of reinvigorating the social status of the myth was great at the time (2000 years ago) also because it had been exactly 4000 years since the Epic of Gilgamesh had been written, at the time of Sargon, and 2000 years since the Biblical account of the flood had been written, at the time of Moses.

The true path of the Right Hand seeks to bring enlightenment to others by exposing to them the inconsistency of everything, including the dubiety of the seeker, the leader, and all of the reality in which they both exist. Thus the man who tells others the Truth for the purpose both of seeking the truth with them and for finding the truth for himself, merely exposes all the lies of others, by being a bad liar himself.

The word Messiah derives from the same source as the name Moses, which means "saved from water." Although this belief does in fact predate even Abraham (whose name is an unfolding of the Habiru language name itself) and is contained in the texts of Zoroaster and, independently, ancient south American tribes including the Maya, the belief in a Messiah, or great unifier, peaked much closer to the time of Christ, with the cult of John the Baptist. Now it is known that John the Baptist knew of Michael, for he was a kabbalist. He referred to Jesus as his cousin, which may have had an esoteric meaning referring to their shared membership in a secret brotherhood such as the essenes of the dead sea. Thus we can see that, by John's recognition of Jesus, he also was inferring a common friend in the angel Michael, who ordered the governments of earth.

The water of the Baptism itself signified to those two men the sunspot cycle, which was at its 2000 year peak at that time, and its consequential disruption of the earth's electromagnetic field and distortion to human brain waves. John had chosen water for this, and thus introduced the subsequent tradition of Holy Water into the Christian myth, because he was a pessimistic pacifist.

When Jesus bowed His head beneath the water, as though it were stones that were falling upon Him, John realized that this was more than merely his cousin returned from his time in the desert. This was a man who had been heavily transformed by a vision of God, and so Jesus arose the Messiah.

It is difficult to say right now whether John the Baptist was merely overwhelmed by the Glory of the Christos, the creation of his very own hands, and therefore failed to foresee the fall of the Roman Empire as the source for all those hallucinatory stones, however he did subsequently end up with his head on a plate, at least according to the gospel. It is easier to expand upon the parallel between John the Baptist before the Passion and Paul of Tarsus afterwards. In fact, had Jesus and His little band not bumped into the Baptist cult, it is unlikely that the chapter of Paul's conversion of the goyim (which would eventually lead to the conversion even of Constantine, the Roman Emperor himself, after the fashion of Pilate washing his hands of Jesus) would have either been written or needed to be.

The result of this event, to which, truly, we can attribute Michael's intervention, was that the goyim quickly became the bride of Christianity, and have preserved to this day a deeply clung belief that the Messiah, or the living body of God, has already walked the face of the planet, died, and gone to live in Heaven — a profoundly meaningless concept to them.

The reason they continue to hold this belief, rather than addressing life's greater mysteries, is their fear of the Messiah's return foretold in the Book of Revelation, penned some 2000 years ago by John of Patmos. In this account the times of the return of God to the earth will be marked by the presence of many terrifying things, in the form not only of monstrous demons clinging to the mouth of the gateway to Hell, but also ghastly events such as the falling of a celestial body to the earth and the decimation of millions upon millions of souls.

Anyone who knows anything about the angel Michael will recognize this as a black op. God, unsatisfied with the Hebrew's obsession with the goyim following the conversion of Saul, when he became Paul, sent Michael to foster in the goyim the belief that the Messiah was arisen and would return, thus, effectively ending the faith of His people that the Messiah was yet to be born, by joining the Hebrews and the goyim in the Christian tradition, forever tainting native tribal purity.

Because Michael had unified the Goyim Christians and the Hebraic Jews under the banner of Christendom, and thus tended to the flocks of two fundamentally different faiths, He was known as an archangel. He was called an archangel for as long as he had been written of, though it was only when He presided at the wedding of these brother and sister flocks that the power this implied was known.

Subsequently He came to Mohhamed in the form of a luminous cloud of smoke in a cave while that Holy Man was at meditation. Then, He was not known to Mohhamed as Michael, though His vivid descriptions of the wars in Heaven, and of the roles of Satan and the fallen angels, as well as details regarding the particular judgements of God, identify Him indeed as the archangel Michael.

As Mohhamed went out amongst the people and began to draw their attention more towards religious matters, the Arab bedouin tribes people found his words rang true. It was they who had come to populate the land whereupon the lode stone had been erected around the cap-stone of the pyramid. (It is not known how the cap stone and the decalogue stones fit together, or what energy would have to be applied to them to make them function in harmony with the rest of the pyramid if they do. Doing this would be considered a very Holy thing only because so much energy has been generated over the matter between the Muslim and the Jewish people.) The lode stone is a perfect representation of a cube in the same way that the outside area of the sarcophagus in the king's chamber of the great pyramid is exactly twice that of the inside area. They would eventually rise, under the reign of Suleyman, to become the Ottoman Empire, and rule as far west as Spain and as far east as India. One cult of Ishmaili believers would go on to produce very great leaders and important officials of many nations by its premise that one could get the smokers of hashish into politics by convincing them they were only "sleeper agents" waiting for the time to kill.

Meanwhile, the Samurai warriors of China and Japan, who are thought to be inheritors of the originally Indian cultural heritage of Buddhism, represented a totalitarian, or dictatorial, though other than poor peasant monks trained to be ninjas, a classless society and insofar as it was cultural, Christianity spread to northern Asia as well, though this caused a split in the church over the doctrine of the trinity in the west and that of the ascended human in the east. The Christian faith fractalized into the Roman Catholic and Greek Orthodox faiths. The Roman Catholics would go on to produce the Prussian Holy Roman Empire, the Roman Catholic church, each with countless sects of monks and friars, and, a little while later, Luthern Protestantism, which would spawn the Anglican Church, Baptism, and countless other denominations and local churches.

The Catholic church was particularly unfit for its marriage to the Jews. They waged brutal pogroms upon them erratically, and sanctioned those conducted independently by the governments of nations. Almost every attempt made by Jewish or concerned factions to modify dogma was thwarted by the papal patriarchy. The height of this was the Inquisition, during which Christians burned one another alive for having a literal vision of the scapegoat as opposed to the romanticised passion play according to the Roman gospels. As the result of this these factions adopted trade guild unionism in the mideaval times and adapted it to sectarian secrecy, creating Free Masonry.

The primary myth of Free Masonry is the betrayal of the chief architect of the temple of Solomon, named Hiram Tyrian, by three apprentice masons. The three masons represent the first three degrees of initiation. In these first three degrees the initiate re-enacts the death of Hiram, the discovery of the key-stone of the royal arch, the collection of payment for it and, later, the right proper understanding of its use and recognition for the initiate for having discovered it. The name Hiram was also the name of the king of Tyre, the town in Ur (Mesopotamia) of Hiram's origin.

The first enterprise of Free Masonry was in trade, and to this effect they settled to fix prices and establish a stable banking system. When the merchants came together and agreed upon a range of prices for different goods and services they quickly realized they could more easily read the market, and thus set prices as high as they decided. This created the first non-royal bloodline monopolies in all of recorded history.

The Catholic Church and the European monarchies recognized this problem, as well as the problem of the plagues arising from Moslem Spain, and decided to begin the Crusades, drafting the merchant class's children on campaigns into Muslim controlled Biblical lands on the command of the Pope. Their answer to Masonry was the Knights Templar, created by Hugh De Payens, a Mason, under the king of France and funded by the cistercians. The Knights Templar policed the route into the Holy Land for the Christian pilgrims — along with their sibling order the Hospitallers, performed the first archeological excavations in recorded history at sites such as Mt. Sinai (also known as Zoni or Zion) and the site of the second temple (transporting the scroll library that had been brought back to the temple ruins and buried beneath to the caves near the abandoned community of Qumran, just as they were instructed by the scrolls the Essenes had added), and established a very stable banking network to protect the funds of the Princely vassals who lined their pockets from the Crusades — in this way assuaging proto-bourgeois Machiavellian aspirations for the sole benefit of the patriarchy. The church owed Gothic architecture to the first stone mason guilds and the alignment of Church locations by ancient geodetics to the Templars. Still, despite all of this, on Friday the thirteenth, a date that has become considered cursed even by common, church going citizens, the church and the royals crucified Jaques DeMolay, divested the Templars of all their financial holdings and arrested all those affiliated with them throughout all of Europe. They put on trials and there were public executions.

According to Masonic tradition the modern Scotch rite was begun when a few of these Templars escaped to Scotland and England, particularly to the abbey of Rossy in Glastonbury beside Stonehenge. Modern Masons have written of a connection to the elder Catholic Order of Zion through the monastery of Rennes Le Chateau, believed to be the burial place of the real Jesus and Mary Magdalene. It may have even have been this same Priory of Sion that encouraged the holy wars as an excuse to send in an archaeological team (the Templars) to Solomon's temple.

For essentially all these reasons Freemasonry may have inherited or adopted the warped interpretation of the Old Testament of the Hebrews, just as the Romans inherited the Essene version of Mithra through Saul. The Muslims and the Christians redefined their territory with the Muslims yielding much of eastern Europe as far south as Turkey, just north of ancient Sumer. However the Roman Catholic papacy was unable to delegate authority over the expanded regions and prevent a split, creating the Christian Orthodox Church, unifying the eastern churches from Greece to Russia by creating the cyrillic alphabet from coptic Hebrew cyphers, and the Holy Roman Empire of Prussia, modern Germany. The Muslims retook the lands of old Israel, but it was not long before they were invaded by mongols from Mongolia — on the Siberian steppes in western China, just northwest of Tibet. These were the legions of Genghis Khan, and were ultimately repelled by the Muslims. However tribes of Visigoths and Ostrigoths swept through the Holy Prussian Empire and sacked Rome.

Free Masonry is in league with Michael as well. In modern Masonic lodges, on the altar room floor, there is a pentagram painted. This is surrounded in a circle, and a magician stands in the center. The circle separates the aspirant from the spirits he or she will be conjuring. The pentagram separates them from the communion of the minds of all other humans and five phallanged animals that also roam and range in the electromagnetic continuum in which the aspirant will operate.

At around the same time the faith of stone henge and Christianity were fusing into the legend of King Arthur and the Holy Grail, in America, while searching for a turquoise trade route, immigrant Quetzalcoatl worshippers from the south discovered peyotl, erected a cylindrical observatory with the same skill as did the hohocumb northern natives a cubical one, and, during the era of the Chocco Great Houses, turned cannibalistically upon their neighbors. They decimated the Anasazi culture and interbred with their prisoners, creating all the subsequent North American tribes. They then migrated south where they gave birth first to the pyramid building Maya and Olmec, then to the bloodthirsty Aztec, who overran their peaceful, sports oriented brothers, and were then, themselves, overrun by Spanish Conquistadors simultaneous to the Spanish Catholic Inquisition, killing Jewish Gothic immigrants.

The final world cataclysm is a revolution of perception, which has begun among a few individuals, and with various results. This is the age of the QBLH of the sword and of the lightning bolt. It has led, almost as though spontaneously, to the industrial age, a time of rapid social evolution bourgeoning forth grand scale science, politics, and economies that seek to unite the world. The practice of magic, relegated to the woods of the collective unconscious everywhere except India (Kundalini Tantra) and China (bio-energy patterns and feng shui) since the decline of ancient Egypt, has begun to reemerge.

This can be evidenced by the folk interest in the supernatural that humanized the Renaissance. The boy genius Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart includes initiatory elements in his opera 'the Magic Flute.' This sort of vapid optimism prevailed European society during the Age of Reason and the American colonization, with the formation of dozens of different fraternally based organizations known as Jacobin or Jacobite clubs, prevalent among which were the Free and Associated Masons. One of these clubs, started by Adam Weishaupt and called the Illuminati, was taken under the wing of the Masons to protect it from persecution by radical Jesuits — Weishaupt's religious faith and the progenitor of many of the Illuminati's mysteries. It outlined a plot to dismantle all forms of social structure by revolution. Such revolutions actually occurred in France, against the monarchy, and in America, against England.

At first, the intelligence community of the American colonies, the men who would come to be called our "founding fathers" — no more than a good-old-boy network of Masonic lodges in 1776 — had been engaged only in a messianic breeding program, inherited from the priory of zion, and constituting little more than a mysteriously veiled version for the goyim of what is, and always has been, the most biologically fundamental habit of the Jews. In Europe the class system had evolved through the dialectic (thesis-antithesis-synthesis), leading to America arising as the synthesis of a capitalist free market and a representative democratic republic. The rule of American society is rule by the law, where justice is only what can be proven, and where it is easy enough for those with money to determine which version of reality there will be evidence for.

Then there was an industrial revolution. Steam technology running off coal in iron engines could produce hotter and hotter temperatures, and when trapped, generate greater and greater amounts of energy. This led to faster and faster modes of transportation. The pony express was replaced by the horseless carriage, now called the automobile, the steam boat surpassed by the steel rail riding locomotive, the farm fell by way of the factory, the city began swallowing up the country, sky-scrapers replaced small shops and apartment hotels, the airplane and hot air balloon were invented, and immense steam liners opened up the shores of the entire world to the possible redistribution of populations. The entire country of America went to civil war with itself over a machine replacing cotton picking slaves. This became the subject of the first feature length film ever made using the motion picture camera.

It was around this time in Russia that under the depressed potentate Potemkin was causing a backlog of documents mandated by the vassal legislature requiring his signature before they could be passed into law. An eager young clerk named Chuvalkin responded in earnest to the needs of the governing body and approached the ruler on demand that he sign the appointed documents. Potemkin began signing them, and one after another he signed, "Chuvalkin, Chuvalkin, Chuvalkin." This moral of beauracracy we owe to a confident scribe named Franz Kafka.

Nikola Tesla was the first man to discover the alternating current used in all electrical wiring of today. A late contemporary of Edison and earlier friend of Einstein, Tesla would go on to invent the hydroelectric turbine and the radio wave broadcast transmission tower. He claimed to be responsible for the large blast in Tunguska Russia caused by a "death-ray" redirected through the crust of the earth using magnetic holographic resonance imaging. Having discovered scalar wave electromagnetic effects he claimed to be in contact with "off-world sources." The cylindrical type ufo seen most commonly in those days does resemble the scalar wave reorienting weather control balloon technology Tesla sold the United States military, and since all scalar wave technology is temporally commutative it is possible that the earlier ufos in fact were these same weather balloons, slipped back through time. Tesla was allegedly also involved in the 1930's Philadelphia Experiment, an attempt to create an electromagnetic bottle around a United States military battleship and render it invisible to radar. In this experiment spherical coils were used to generate the field, however the resonance they created was out of harmony with the earth's 40 mega-hertz Scheuman resonance, and the ship disappeared and reappeared sometime later in a different location. There were unpredicted effects on the crew-men. This began the United States military's research and development of scalar wave technology.

The planet would be shaken by two global wars in rapid succession. The first began when a representative of an occult cabal called the Black Hand, or Carbonari (later la Cosinostra, now known as the mafia) murdered archduke Ferdinand. It was a ground war fought in mainland Europe by entrenched troops using machine guns. The second world war began when Hitler, steeped in occult rhetoric of the lost supercivilization of Thule, invaded Poland and declared himself the Führer of France, and this war generated even further armament advances, with bombs being dropped from planes, large tanks, repeating rifles and portable rocket technology. Supposedly the Germans were experimenting with scalar wave technology towards the end of the war, and expected it to be their salvation. The Americans, with the help of Einstein, a German Jewish American immigrant, designed a bomb based on nuclear fission. Werner Von Brom, another German, however an ex-Nazi, had designed the long range rocket technology used to blitzkrieg Britain before being brought to America as part of Project Paperclip, a snatch and grab operation in competition with the Russians over the remainder of the Third Reich's secret science. He helped design the atomic bomb, and later began NASA, America's space program.

A long cold war followed this between the capitalist United States and communist Russia, during which they kept intercontinental ballistic missiles, some even thermonuclear, trained on one another at all times. In the 1950's Lockheed aeronautics, under contract to the US government, designed and built the U2 spy plane in only one year in a secret facility, constructed especially for that purpose, called "the skunk shop." Five years after they began a U2 spy plane pilot would be held captive by the Soviet Union after being shot down on a mission over Russia.

President Eisenhower, who was aware that every U2 spy plane was equipped with self destruct and every U2 spy plane pilot given a syringe for lethal injection in the event they must avoid capture, was confident that the Russians were bluffing about having shot down the U2 — until it was made public that the pilot, Francis Gary Powers, was indeed their prisoner.

Among the Illuminati, who are the highest ranking Masons, it is common knowledge that the U2 was based on aerodynamics reverse engineered from flying saucers. Thus, perhaps due to the nature of the technology itself, the design of the crash at Roswell, New Mexico may have karmically carried through into the U2's fate.

If this is true, as we must assume it may be, then surely it is a bluff that the military recovered the alien pilot. Claiming that the U2 spy plane was a “weather plane” and claiming that the Roswell crash was a “weather balloon” does not necessarily mean the two events are identical in other respects as well — it only proves that “great minds think alike.”

The U2 was only the American version of what they had found crashed in their own back yard, which they then crashed in Russia. What the Americans found was merely what our ancestors called an angel, fallen from hyperdimension, within his circular craft.

This, however, was only a messenger who had slipped through a tachyonic wormhole composed of light reflected off the moon across the face of the American desert, that was coming from a sun that was, at that exact moment in time, technically on the Russian's side. Thus, we can deduce the location of the sleeper, with whom the Watcher corresponded, who was actually on the other side of the planet, both times.

For reasons that are extremely personal to the initiated it is important for the air-space craft that hummans fly to be of human design. The fact that the United States Air Force was formed in the same year as the Roswell crash and that some of its oldest ongoing projects involve stealth (all acute angles — thus deflecting fewer radar waves) technology, beginning with the flying wing and culminating in the V-wing B2 bomber, only shows that humans could have studied extraterrestrial flight technology, but proves that all of the technology they have produced is inherently human, having been designed and built by normal people, and having been carried through from beginning to end by human hands. It is in this way that the actual government classified vehicles — those designed by human beings of today — can fly about today right before our very eyes.

The star system of America establishes a new royal class, comprised of entertainers, models, and news anchors. This is the sum of the substance of modern American culture, the gift of the 1950's plastic fantastic suburbanites, their simulacrum of historical heritage as it existed before the social compact. This era were trying to tear the social middle class away from rule by a Lord of the land. In America in the 1950's, the middle class were housed in suburbs surrounding the cities in which they worked in highrise offices. The social destiny that had been given to them they had made manifest with great skyscrapers. Most countries have a folk wisdom founded culture that dates back much further than modern American culture. American culture did not even begin on an international scale until the 1950's, when industrialised manufacturing made our production of stylized consumer goods applicable to the mass market of the entire country, and the new technological communication media were first used to introduce international cultural trade into the global free market of ideas. The only reason I go into the society and culture of America is that it is a young nation that has grown rapidly to become a globally recognized economy and political system.

Then, in the 1960's, the Central Intelligence Agency approved use of psychedelics for public brainwashing following initial tests on soldiers, prisoners and mental patients, and it quickly took the forefront in the student class demographic of the illicit drug market. LSD-25 was extracted from ergot, a wheat mold that had also been responsible for the Greek Golden Age of Democracy and the Salem Witch Trials. The result was the birth of cybernetics as the ultimate mechanical manifestation of the Enochian Communications System. This was passed down to the youth culture of America more or less directly by the Golden Dawn.

This rapidly overran the messianic breeding program with the sensation of urgency and immediatism psychedelics induce. The MK of the CIA's project MK-ULTRA went from meaning Mind Kontolled (sic) Masonic Killer to Mind Kontrolled (ibid) Messianic Killer. Perhaps in Plato's ideal Republic this would have been Masonic or Messianic Killer of Mind Kontrol. In 1973 most of the documents regarding operation MK-ULTRA were destroyed by Jesse Helms and the operation's name was changed to MK-SEARCH. MK-SEARCH has been the attempt by the illuminati within the CIA to combine the Enochian Communications System accessed by psychedelics, which had only been used to train assassins under MK-ULTRA, with the Masonic messianic breeding program.

The sleeper agent program conditions us terrestrials to simply “tune out” — preferably by physical stimulus or work — when a stronger broadcast signal is being relayed through our brains. The age-old parental guilt routine has proven highly effective in inputting this response in children. The dark karma accumulated from sales of addictive substances such as cigarettes gives American Masons a truly vast supply of human brains to relay signals through, of whatever nature message they like, and has enabled the government to use these mindless zombies even to kill.

Indoctrination into the cult of sleep, which is the exoteric wing of the esoteric Order of Death, begins at an early age. The Prussian educational system, imported after World War I during the Alphabet Soup campaign to rebound the economy from the Great Depression and formally institutionalize all the one room, one desk, one stove schools of rural America, is employed at an early age to accustom the child to coping with physical environments where they would be put under psychological pressure without the right to leave, bound by the responsibility to “better” themselves. While they twist and turn the teachers quietly observe the level of orgone energy rising. It will only result in positive reinforcement for the student if they uttered the correct mantra through this time, reciting to themselves and duly noting all the “right” answers. In this way the teachers absorb their authority from the student body — the vague answers to the deeper questions of life held by the majority being reinforced in their minds by the students’ submission to their mandatorally enforced, situationally conditional education.

Sleeper agents have repressed memories, usually of Satanic ritual abuse cults run by the CIA or through CIA domestic front organizations — some covert, like the Finders, some not, like the Church. They do not read minds because abuse freezes their ego at the age that they were, and thus puts them into a minimal lifelong trance regarding the true nature of their potential. This minimal trance is simply ignorance of the thalamus, and it is why sleeper agents are said to sleep. This leaves their thalami, and mental projective capabilities, “up for grabs.” At this point the CIA accesses them for the mob (the net gross of the mass populous), according to standard practice. The Soviets called these field agents “fellow travellers.” They are they who know not what they know. They live events they would prefer to forget. The mark of a sleeper agent is how much they forget. The pawns in game reality are the sleeper agents. “Burn outs” are those agents who get left in the field. They are intended to serve as the company’s straw men smokescreen.

These drones are tracked by inversion, which occurs as a slight variation in the vibration of brain waves, a change in the pressure of the fluids in the skull, causing them to suddenly change their minds, and then to forget, often forever, what the other, now discarded, thought was. This can be caused directly by others, in the form of a casual suggestion implanted in conversation, or by a projection of concentration from another person’s consciousness. The latter can be accomplished long range as well, such as is evidenced by the old folk proverb of your ears burning when someone is thinking about you. This is caused by an actual change in the tachyonic radiation underlying probabilities which your brain projects holographically onto your ears, making them prick up. This can also be relayed via satellites scanning large areas for just such EM shifts. They think that they are intentionally using inversion as a trick or “glamor” to throw other minds off their track. The entire counter intelligence saturation of culture stems directly from this application of “useful” inversion. This grows with the sunspot cycle. It is lunacy.

Because the brainwaves of sleeper agents are easily altered, as demonstratable by their being constantly prone to suggestion, it can be said that, in the “air” of the electromagnetic spectrum, they are listening in between channels — that is — their soul is no more in their body than anybody else’s, and no more in anybody else’s than their own — they are simply: detached.

This sort of listening between channels is similar to the stations on the radio where there is no clear signal, and the broadcasts of, sometimes several, different, distant stations overlap. We know these radio substations to be effected by sunspots. This occurs as patterns of static, or repetitive, often overstimulating, soundwaves known as “white noise.” Sunspots, therefore, would be having an effect on the brainwaves of the people of this planet even if most hadn't conditioned themselves to it by becoming sleeper agents by tuning their minds with technology.

The general quandary of sleeper agents is that they congregate in aggregates, collectively known as pop-culture, that tend to produce stereotypes, who, by the efficacy of the masses, are asymptotically archetypal. At this point humans then project their own concepts of good and evil onto these archetypes. Because of this, the Watchers can body jump through these sleeper agents in the form of archetypes.

The human being only uses about ten percent of its brain, that is, the electrical signals active in the brain only utilize ten percent of the electro-chemical environment of the brain. Almost all of this is isolated in the left hemisphere of the brain, and is perceived as rational thought. Rarely we also utilize neural pathways in the right hemisphere, and these pertain to creative thought.

Now, the concentration of electricity in the brain that occupies the active ten percent is the same substance as the remaining ninety percent of the unstimulated brain. Freud explained it in these terms. When electricity is passed through a nerve, most of the electrical charge, which, combined with its neurochemical reaction, Freud called phi, is transmitted via the nerve's conduction and neurochemical reaction, a process called cathexis, to another nerve, if it is in a system whereby it is in contact with another nerve. Some of this phi, however, Freud proposed stays behind, and builds up in the nerve itself. This process leads to hypercathexis, or the delivery by a nerve of more electrical charge and neurochemical than what was transmitted to it. According to Freud this is how Ego accumulates. Here we see the one to nine ratio at its root: most of the electricity in the nervous system is not inherent, and is due to stimuli, while some of it has dug in and is related to perception itself.

We know that, while the human will is not being consciously imposed upon it, the electricity active in the brain will fall into regular waveforms that will cycle themselves through in a regular pattern, sustaining all the autonomic neurological functions necessary for the preservation of the inert physical body.

The grey matter of the cerebrum is comprised of an interlocking network of neurons that are made of axons and dendrites connected by a myelin sheath. This is where all the electrochemical interactions associated with free thoughts occur. The cerebrum has no nerves of the somatosensory system inside it, and hence the one thing this part of the brain can never feel is itself.

The grey matter of the thalamus is comprised differently. Although it is also composed of nerve cells, it is more dense and compact. It is not arranged in layers as the cells of the cerebral cortex appear to be. Also it acts holographically, with single neurons relaying sensory information from multiple sources in the nervous system to multiple areas of the cortex.

One of the more meaningful distinctions between these two, however, is that one can have brain waves of a different frequency than the other — one can be “more conscious” and the other “less conscious.” This is true between the left and right thalami as well. The thalami themselves, as part of the forebrain, are just as mysterious to consciousness bound up in the tissues of the cerebellum, pons, and medulla oblongata, the parts of the hind brain, as the cerebrum is to the thalami.

For example, at the time when dinosaurs had reached the point in the spiral macro-fractal path, approximately pi at the brink of becoming phi, when the thalami had developed thoroughly as their primary cerebral structure, there was a sudden, global disaster, curbing their evolutionary tendencies of size into smaller species such as modern reptiles and birds.

Now the human brain is at the same moment in its evolutionary developmental curve, and our thalami are well developed, but not so well as our cerebrum, and we, like the dinosaurs before us with their stadium sized reptilian forms, have populated the entire planet with our upright, mammalian bodies. If the catastrophe that killed off the large reptiles was related to the development of their thalami, then we can, with all due moral justification, imagine ourselves to be saved from such an outcome by the balancing in development between our thalami and our cerebrum.

Reptile brains are essentially identical to those of birds and fish since those are the three primary branches of species into which dinosaurs evolved. The Enochian Communications System is predicated upon the projection of this key onto the working parts of the cerebrum by the thalami, or more concisely, the belief that mankind will evolve into angels. We see the evidence for this in the behavior of archetypes, which contribute to macroevolutionary conditions, teaching our species how to survive being itself.

There are three Mayan hieroglyphs for the three parts of the brain. Men represented the human brain. Oc represented the mammalian brain. Chichan represented the reptile brain. It is easy to see these as merely referring to stages of development in the evolution of the brain stem, but they are archetypal also.

The reptilian brain, comprised of the medulla oblongata, pons, and pituitary gland, accesses all manner of matter, from the least tachyon to the greatest dimensional extrapolations of the universe, however it possesses, or rather, seems to possess, only enough intelligence to have a very strong opinion. The mammalian brain, comprised of the corpus collosum and the thalamus, accesses the realm of archetypes through the Enochian Communications System, and comprehends the mechanism of manifestation. The human brain, comprised of the cerebrum and cerebellum, comprehends pure dimension in its higher geometric forms, such as potential light, potential energy, potential spin and potential information, in the principles of Light, Love and Life.

What the mammalian mind perceives as the archetypes in the heavens are only the enneagrams in the cerebrum, and the concept of God is the ego. All that is the Enochian Communications System is the perception by consciousness bound up in the tissue of the thalami of the biological functioning of consciousness bound up in the more complex tissue of the cerebrum above and around it. Understand, of course, that this particular deduction is being made by a gland that translates tachyonic holographically concentrated consciousness into chemical neurotransmitters released into the brain in essentially the same way as the heart pumps oxygen exchanging blood in the body. The entire concept of time as an absolute is derived from the production of alpha waves there.

The prophase of manifestation is projection.

The keeping of sacred objects is not equivalent, as it was considered in the latter ancient times — after the advent of socializing monotheism, to idolatry. It is merely the earlier, no less sophisticated, associative technique of the organized mental cellular structure of the brain, common to all forms of self-motivating biological organism. The only difference is that of scale and degree of deligation.

For elder vertebrate life forms of minimal mental development this process manifests itself in memory storage and mental mapping. It would be impossible for fish, for example, to navigate in isolation without a form of the same power that humans attach to religious practice — namely, the essentially holographic superimposition of their internal reality with the external environment through a softening of the sensory field dividing the nous from the logos.

This process, in organisms of more highly evolved mental structure such as mammalian vertebrates, displays itself in the attachment of particular attributions to specific locations and/or objects, climbing up through a gradient of quantifiable displays of affection essentially initiatory in nature to culminate in the primate branch with the use of tools connecting preconceived intention to the accomplishment of specific endeavors.

Finally, in humans, we find the same process. Although tempered by the strengthening of the ego resultant from the awareness of the cultivation of awareness, which, it can be said, is what this so-called process ultimately results to, and which places humanity, in the hierarchy of our own self-created understanding, at the middle point between the objective animal and the subjective eternal aspect anthropomorphised as God, this same process is present both in the domestication of animals as surrogate self-complimentarity in the form of living examples of our own ability to subjugate reality to our holographic superimpositions, and in our equally proportioned sensations of overwhelmedness when confronted in our personal experiences with ultimate unknowns. It is the same force within us that precategorizes objects of affection for potential usage in moments of emotional crisis as seeks out causes for supersaturation of sensory stimulus.

One of the primary hitherto identified differences in the human as opposed to all other animals behavioral utilization of this process is the seeming necessity for recognition of mortality connected to the human utilization. The comparatively longer lifespan of the human seems to allow the recognition of changes to a being over time as occurrences in an identifiably constant pattern, and this recognition leads both to an attachment of dominance to the design based on the same attribution of final importance to duration of survival, and to a desire to attain to permanent or at least practice the acquirement of gradual changes to the form of the being which serves as the vessel of transmission for this motivating potential which is realized both in terms of the temporal template, and the raw resource of energy provided by the interaction of consciousness with material reality through the senses.

Animals seem to have much less forethought in their collection of stimuli, due, at least partially, to their having fewer items on their list of lifelong goals than the average human. With every world, philosophy, or, synonymously, lifetime created by a member of humanity there arise resultantly a certain number of new potential opportunities for the furtherance of interest along lines defined by the parameters of subsets to the temporal pattern. In this way humans can produce a unique breed of life which animals cannot, namely, intellectual offspring. On the other hand, so long as humans and animals share the same amount of overall space and continue to have interaction, the attribution of superfluously identifiable traits to animals by human intelligence seems to compensate for the difference in the pace of otherwise common evolutionary development.

It is this conflict across levels of development within the most highly structurally evolved animal minds between awareness of mortality and interest only in the immediate that leads to distraction by differences from the essentially intuitive attention to similarities that is truly their shared inherent trait.

It is because of the long term psychological effects of projection on the weak-willed that manifestation has come to be viewed by authorities as “off-limits” except to the divine. Projection in and of itself is harmless, and actually feels quite good. Its emotional counterpart is empathy, and this emotion is, at least exoterically, encouraged by those same authorities. It has even been proven by scientists that projection, which is also the basis of religion, can occur between animals of two different species other than humans. Their example is Koko’s kitten, but anyone who has ever survived riding a horse past a rattlesnake knows this in even less uncertain terms.

Projection occurs when holographic engrams are externalized via the thalamus, and meaningful value becomes attached to something external to the nervous system as a memory storage referential. Because alpha waves are produced in the thalamus, the concept of divided, or differential, time becomes a factor. The result, and the cause of the psychological impact on the weaker-willed, is consciousness of the eventual loss of the external as memory referential, at which time one will have to legislate between all the things one wishes to remember about the external, and all the things one wishes to forget about the external. This is the religious necessity of cloning, for example, for — even if you cloned some body — you would still have to summon their departed soul into the new form.

During the twentieth century humanity raced to install a vast satellite system in orbit high above its heads. As the satellites went up, empires rose. As the satellites were turned on and began to be used, the empires began to fall as individuals began mutating into advertising corporations. The military black helicopters may have been the first branch of this operation and are also the product of stealth technology. They use scalar wave sound mufflers that can be used for mind control when targeted on people.

The Enochian Communications System exists as the unification of the Russian Project Woodpecker, and the American Projects ELF and HAARP (High Frequency Active Auroral Research Program). These create a global shield of electrons as an imposed perimeter on information. This shield acts as a large screen, upon which messages are broadcast. The result is the “painted sky” effect for data dispersal. Every electron acts as a fractal of the full field, and thus can be used as an access port to the patterns of information contained in or surrounding any other electron in the set.

Just above this field are the satellites. These are like sentinels of propaganda. They have been sent up by humans serving the Watchers for the purpose of relaying manifest information bounced off them to remote locations on the surface of the earth, heightening the illusion of our soul being in “two places at once.”

Within the field there is chaos in virtual reality. The main goal of the system is to utilize the remaining 90% of your individual brain capacity to transmit controlled information. “It becomes gradually more difficult to have thoughts without manifesting consequences” is the dominant paradigm. This, combined with the immune system degeneracy caused by fluoridation of public water, causes a state of light body free fall, where our tachyonic selves, our souls, repel just above the surface of the earth, much as though in a dream. This contributes to a weakness in the knees.

Compared to ancient times, when the soul was more ethereal and the body more solid, this sort of feeling of “one foot above the ground” causing weakness or trembling in the knees was so rare as to induce devout prayer. Now it is so common it is the other way around. The monkey primitive enough to lack sensitivity to the ambient level of radiation is taken to be a great leader, and he quickly has the first scapegoat he can find for that effect of weakness crucified — which, sensibly, only worsens the situation. Thus psychiatrists, who differ from psychologists in that they perscribe drugs, are clearly overlooking the taking of drugs as the primary obvious cause of behavioral pattern because if they allowed the populous to realize this fact, they would be exposed as addictive-substance merchants peddling lethal poisons. Instead we are given the red herring of tobacco, which is only a good work-out for the lungs, and yet, when combined with aluminum byproduct lined, immune system weakening tap water, spiritually and physically unhealthy exercise diets, fast food high in starch and useless, fatty carbohydrates such as grease, and trendy designer perscription pharmacueticals to further weaken the immune system and make it dependent on external sources for support, tobacco is blamed for all cancer.

It is really the fluctuation of frequency in subspace called entropy that cause the divisions we call society and culture. Each of these describes the true condition of the other. What we do socially is called culture, and what pertains to the genetic culture of all mankind they call civilization or society. What we can conclude from this is that culture moves eastward around our planet while society moves westward. In modern politics there are only two forms of control of populations. Those are federalist governmentally liberal, military-industrial complex Right Wing centralized and local governmentally conservative, culturally populist Left Wing decentralized empire.

Centralized empire goes through three common stages: war or revolution; patriarchy; infiltration by interested parties and dissolution. The best examples of centralized empire are either cloaked in religion, such as Catholicism, Judaism, or Islam, while politically centralized empires have predominantly been too recognizably totalitarian to survive free trade without initiating mass conflict. The only politically centralized empires to survive the twentieth century are communist masked patriarchies based on the false belief that 200 year old Jacobin humanism is in any way stronger or more durable than 2000 year old religious affiliation.

Decentralized empires are what centralized empires tend to become. These are still imperial, insofar as they advocate world-wide control by their chosen political system, they have simply adopted multiple parties (as in America) or international governmental organizations (as with the voting blocks in the UN) in accordance with a check-and-balance system that makes them more user friendly to the people. Covert organizations have been acting within larger organizations at least since the time of the Crusades to destabilize centralized empires and render them more decentralized. The intelligence/counter-intelligence department has become so common a part of democracy that it has almost become its own centralized empire within the decentralized empires wherein it flourishes best. There is no question, for example, that the non-military cold war between the USA and the USSR was won entirely by information/disinformation strategies effected upon the opposing citizenry in the guise of (arbitrarily) supply versus demand side economics.

It is usually through the establishment of an agent community that interested parties come to undermine centralized governments. At this point they may still appear to be firmly centralized patriarchies, such as Russia under Gorbechev, Cuba under Castro, China under Mao, Palestine under Arafhat, or even America under any of its puppet dictators, however the true order of the government by this time is economic espionage based on viable resource accumulation/allocation.

In an ideal decentralized empire, such as the withering dictatorship of the proletariat represented by technological capitalism, all of this is common knowledge to the man on the street. The reason manifestation is considered too great a power to be wielded by the common man, besides the evidence of the destruction of all those peoples who have wielded it in the past, is that it creates a consciousness within God other than God. Let me put that this way: ordinarily tachyons fall into a regular pattern. When manifestation occurs, one of these tachyons swells and opens up into a wormhole, allowing the additional meaning projected by the perceiver's thalamus through into the context of material reality. This is a temporal distortion to an eternal continuum.

What I am about to describe is best done in space. Doing so on earth, on any large scale, is probably contraindicated. This is not to say that this has not been done before, and yet we are still alive. It is simply that myths of a strange energy source are associated with the downfall of an ancient lost supercivilization. Mythology is a strange beast in itself. It is usually only a court jester's perspective on the affairs of the court and health of the royal family, however when it speaks of the human ability to harness energy that can be misused, even if accidentally, and cause a massive effect it addresses one of the greater issues of the human species.

This being said: by projecting a faster microwave frequency into a slower microwave tachyon, it is possible to expand this tachyon into a wormhole. By mapping scalar wave frequencies overtop of the microwave signal it is possible to access any destination from the holographic electromagnetic radiation background. This can be done as easily as by projecting a visual thought of where you want to go onto the wormhole.

When the destination is projected, by whatever medium — mechanical or biological, it creates a particular harmony with the faster microwave gravity, and this creates null space, or zero-point energy — the electromagnetic result of combining radiation and gravity. Another name for this is a temporal singularity. Just as the background radiation of the electromagnetic spectrum serves as a fractal through which any single point in space may be linked to any other, so does the sum over histories of probabilities in the universe serve as the gnomon from which we may extract our temporal destinations.

Once you have travelled through a wormhole you have entered into the multiverse. Things will not be the same, and all things will continually change. It is possible to meet yourself in this way, and there are fewer experiences more alienating from reality.

The stealth bomber is a triangle shape because it uses three microwave gravity generators to expand a wormhole and break the light barrier, while the public of today is unaware that this craft can even leave the atmosphere. There are, however, several possible designs and methods available for it to do so.

Outside the Enochian Communications system, and containing it, are the Akashic Records. Despite the fact that these provide access to past life memories, they are not housed, as mystics such as Edgar Cayce and Madame Blavatsky may have allowed their followers to believe, in the genetic coding of our DNA. They are more universal than this, being comprised of microwave gravitational tachyonic fifth dimensional Light, and comprising the background radiation of the electromagnetic spectrum of the continuum of the universal singularity in which are all the other lesser potential singularities, evolved from stars, that are the wellsprings of our spirit — doorways outside the universe. Between these singularities is the history of photons, the illusion of material time, the lesser light, by which we perceive third dimensional reality. As the earth's electromagnetic field is an Enochian system, part of a solar/galactic/universal, similar system, so are the Akashic records equal to our fully evolved consciousness as part of the communication of idealogical singularities, or rhetorical points, in a universal singularity continuum.

Now we have come to a time again when we begin to see meaningful events occurring in the heavens, so sudden, and so rich in meaning, that we bow down before knowing their full limit. This began with the passing of the comet Hale Bop, and with the crashing of comet Shoemaker-Levy 9 into the visible face of Jupiter in 1994. This was followed by a partial solar eclipse between leo and cancer, visible to the north half of North America alone, on August 11th, 1999 — what I call a "crescent" eclipse. This was followed on May 5th, 2000 with the alignment of the earth, the moon, the sun, mercury, venus, mars, jupiter and saturn in the constellations taurus and aries, as well as the alignment perpendicular to this of Uranus and Neptune. This was followed by another partial solar eclipse in Sagittarius on December 25th, 2000 visible only to the eastern hemisphere. On January 20th, 2001 there was a lunar eclipse between Gemini and Cancer, when the penumbra of Earth's shadow painted the moon wine red. There was then a full lunar eclipse in Gemini on January 9, 2001. The last alignment for a while then is the partial lunar eclipse in Sagittarius, June 24, 2002, visible only to the eastern hemisphere. In September of 2004 there will be alignments of the moon with Saturn and Venus in Gemini and then with Mars, Mercury, and Jupiter in Leo. Then there is the sunspot cycle, which will be at its peak between 2001 and 2012, culminating in the alignment of the ecliptic with galactic core on Dec. 12, 2012, the date given by the Mayan Tzolken or Long Count for the end of the world.

Everything is always in synchronization. Some things are simply synchronized to the past (which things we know by the name of "memories") while certain other things are synchronized to the future (what is "prophecy" in idea and "omen" in form). Prophecy, according to current authorities, can only exist under scrutiny. Omens, on the other hand, are common and trivial, but should not be at all.

It is not that priests can say things like this, but that I, an ordinary person, can, that is biblical power. Biblical power is temporal power, power to warp time with the mind. This is most commonly applied via mass hypnosis of congregations, while they meanwhile mindlessly express their archetypal gestures without having to see them for themselves.

This is the power of the I AM presence described by St. Germain.

We are biologically slaves of the I AM presence in a similarly archetypal way. It is present in the dilation of the pupil, as the eye lets in more light. It encourages us to move forward. We live in its fractalized hyper-realities. I have met myself there.

I AM Me. This is what I know of Myself, and of My world, and all that I AM.

I come from the narrators, then the scribes with a Godly branch. I know me.

I was electrocuted in the womb.

I was once choked until I passed out by my father too.

I am the offspring of Victor and Ludmilla Strelets. Irina is the offspring of Gerry and Rebecca Barlow Gee.

How did I meet God?

Once, in a theater, I realized that all of history was a lie meant to deceive me from knowing who I really was: that was that I had been a sleeper agent trying to wake up, and was then just a guy having an identity crisis in the middle of a global cataclysm. At that point I was tapped on the shoulder by the spirit sitting behind me who came to me like Morpheus, and in a low, black, voice, said, "really? that's a shame. I thought that you were something more than that." and I, turning my infinitely opened gaze towards Him, as He turned toward me, said, "god?" Time space was warped around me.

Then, when I was on the road, racing to get my sketch book to recite the names of the sephirot on the kabbalah that it contained, after reasoning out my own identity as the highest person alive on earth at the time, and therefore the highest person in all of history, I was caught up in the spirit and overwhelmed again, my heart outran the speed of light and my eye was a vast void, and then I heard the voice coming from above. It said, then, very tranquil, in my voice (although I could not really tell), "I am God. I am You." I seemed to say this to myself, and then to God, so that We were saying the same words at the same time to each other in reflection.

My response to this was to lean forward and glance from up directly to down as I leaned back, pulled out and lit a cigarette, while thinking: "an international conspiracy of psychics? I don't believe in that." I meant this literally. And I still do.

There is no other me.

Once I smoked a cigarette and put a hex on Eric and Lisa. In the context of this wish I hoped that Lisa would be caught with a bag of Coke, and would be sent to prison for a little while. The coke would have been Eric's, which I hoped would make him feel guilty. All I was really doing was blowing off steam (visions of the irony engine) but I really intended their spirits to receive these events in some form, in hopes that they would learn, independently of me, how they, each of them individually, had eventually come to make me feel toward them. Eric thought I should feel guilty of wanting to rape Lisa — as he vividly described once to Jason, her brother, while I sat in the next room, once again only trying to trip other people out, and thus become more popular among them, presumably for his own ends (sniffing coke off of Molly's spine — Molly, Desmond his mentor's girl, whom Desmond once gave to Eric for the purpose of snorting a line of Coke off her). Of course, I didn't. Lisa had had me put in prison, where I had seen a vision of God. Maybe there, I hoped, she would see a vision of God, and come to learn that it was, ultimately, alright with me that she had put me there, because it had turned out to be an alright place to go to commune with God.

The direct qliphotic response to this was that I saw Evan at the convenience store. Evan has a long, scraggly beard, and long hair. His girlfriend, whose name tag said "shorty" came around from behind the counter. She looked vaguely Mexican or Puerto Rican. Olive skin with black hair. It was the Master and Margarita, SAM and Irina (or Sam and Leia — the cats), it was Lisa and Gumbo.

Now in summer of 1999, while on a trip with Gerry and MaryAnn, I opened the current of one of the necronomicon's fifty names to reunite Lisa with Gumbo, who I thought would be a good match for her (he and his friend Big Ed once smoked me, Dave, and ???, pretty much directly to kether one afternoon at Le Parc). Insofar as she reminded me of Irina, he reminded me of me (he still wore his hair long just as I had in highschool), and I figured they were basically the k-mart version of the wal-mart me and Irina. Thus, I hoped to avoid fucking myself or my own loved ones over, while still exploring the powers and energies of arcane religious systems.

On the conjunction of the two separate incantations I can only conclude that it falls into place like this: Gumbo, to Lisa, must have meant the same as a bag of Coke would to me. In other words, probably not very much. Once I transubstantiated some baking soda into cocaine, but that's another story. Now the bag of Coke would have meant something to Eric, as cocaine was once his lifeline to feelings of good continuity from one moment to the next — a feeling he would, once it had left him, come to call karma, and identify as "bad."

This means, on the level above, that I would have meant more to Mike than Irina. On a level just to the side of us, now lost to time, Jesus would have meant more to Judas than to Mary Magdalene. This is simply the triangular law. Kether means more to Chokma than Binah. This is explained simply by their ordering: 1,2,3.

However below the level of Kether, Binah and Chokma, there is the level of the six other sephirot surrounding the central seventh, and what happens on the higher level sways the masses bound to the lower level. Here the Shemhamforash is Chesed, the Enochian Host Gevuruh, and the Necronomicon Netzach. In the lower levels of fleshly manifestations of the movements of the spirits of other human beings, Gumbo is in Chesed, Eric wishes he were in Gevuruh, and Dave drops out of the "Red Sea" into Netzach, because he was Lisa's lover before Gumbo.

In my realm I have sent my agent Michael out to rule the Shemhamforash and the Enochian Hosts by giving MSM plate 10 in negative zero which is tiphereth. Below this level is the level of the fallen angels, or body jumpers, where I have already met James Grambling as Jon, my dealer, and Eric, as Eric, my other dealer, who looks more like Dave. I have also met ascended man, the illuminatus, Eli, who is my boss from time to time. He is the child Horus foreseen by Aleister Crowley, who I also knew through body jumping as David Christian. The only body jumpers I know are Crescent Fresh (Dave, Eric, John, James) who are good at it, Bill and Ann who are practising at it, and Peter from Bloomington, whose body I jumped through once.

Mind you the time it takes to work through these various spiritual agencies. I wished for Lisa and Gumbo to be back together in 1999. It is now 2001 and I have only just begun to get the first sign. It is obvious that my request was routed around through a series of channels undoubtedly comparable in the minds of the ancients to the branches of a tree. Meanwhile I have written two books and Mike has gotten married. I used to think that spirits and ghosts were just humans accelerated so fast they could not be seen, such that when they appeared they might resemble aliens — which look the way they do due to electromagnetic distortion to the brain waves, and that the aura or soul could be accelerated into tachyons and remain as intelligent, as emotional, and as physically cognitive as its ever reincarnating human host. However, now that I am out of collage, out of money and out of weed, I am beginning to wonder if the unification of all existing magical, gnostic, religious and scientific systems into one ordered form would really benefit us mere mortal terrestrials. It may be that it all is the work of the Coptic Sethians and the Watchers who would rule.

I do not know, either, if Mike and Irina body jump. Since they are archetypes, they can inhabit human form — as Michael is a name given to a person for that person's whole life, and thus makes them answerable in the name of an ancient angel — and Irina is associated with all things feminine. To me she is also the entire universe, just as, to Bill, Ann is probably his entire world (i.e. agit-prop surrealism). [When I returned to see the whole of the movie I had left before it was with Ann Cooper] My wife is forced, while in the hell of malkuth (for her, college) to play the role decided upon for her by her mother, the world-grid womb, Luda, Le Lune, the moon. Irina has become a doctor, as her mother was before her. My interest in physics stems only from her father, Victor. It is only because he wishes to find somebody to “fill his shoes” that there is any confusion over Irina's true husband.

I know that they, through each of these types of people, that is males and females, can manifest, out of thin air, as it were, likenesses of the archetypes' perceptions of one another, however these are themselves only qliphotic shells* — and beyond this it is the option available to the free will of the archetypes that they may body-jump through these or not. It is the preference of humans that their belief in the archetypes ability and desire to be there in the form of the qliphotic manifestation should be the strength through which they achieve that feat, where successes increase efficacy, though, rationally we must remember that it may only be a cosmically microscopic coincidence making all this seem so.

* (given as MLPs = EZ-Cheeze, where MLPs are My Little Ponies. This is known as the A.C. formula for Enochian sex magick given to me by Ann Cooper as an apology for breaking into my house with Bill. The original argument behind manifestation, especially for sexual purposes, was between me and Irina at the beach over whether or not to add butter to Macaroni and Cheese. The common thread in both of these is cheese, which is orange, and opposite on the color spectrum to purple — the first frequency of radiation to emerge from the clear light of the big bang. Because the color we see cheese to be is orange, that means that the cheese is reflecting all the colors of the spectrum in such a way as to combine and form the color orange. Therefore the only color cheese does not reflect is the one color that it is: purple.)

According to kabbalists who hack into Gerry Gee's life, there is an eleventh sephirot, called Daath, and it is supposedly where he and MaryAnn live. They, and their opinions, are irrelevant. This is the simple fact of existing in Daath. The Formal System of Metaphysics came from Daath, and, when it left, the whole place really went to shit. It represented logic, and my DNA father lost his when it left. I took it with me, and I left. Once, he came to me looking for it, claiming, quite obviously falsely, that he had it and could give it to me. He thinks he still has it, because he has a copy of the words of the formal system I wrote, but he will not be able to understand them. It is the end goal of the sleeper agent program that bred him. If he ever looked fully upon it with his whole soul, he would die forever. There would be no more Gerry Gee. Using the inversion fueled rapid reincarnation of the Sethian sleeper agents as his cover, as though by blaming the government that created him he were not only wallowing in his own intolerable fate, he uses people like other people use logic. For this he lives in Daath, which is now death — a mindless chasm. For the record, however, it was his belief that Eric was affiliated with Mike, which implied Eric was actually in the Enochian System, because of the character in the story of o. All this means is that my own biological father believes my best friend is God and that I am a squirt. This merely shows he cannot delineate between fact and fiction, and thus proves that his logic is gone.

The Order Of Daath began from the cult of the Duat, where Imhotep (Thoth) was the name of Khufu (Osiris) in the ritual that made him the first YHWH. All subsequent offshoots of this original cult share one thing: revolution around the death of time. Greek mythology begins with Zeus killing Chronus. Egyptian mythology begins with the resurrection of Osiris. Hebrew religion begins with Abraham adopting YHWH as his elohim. The history described in Hebrew religion, however, antedates this, and may therefore possibly be an account delivered to Abraham from a more ancient source. It, as well as Babylonian religion, describe the creation; although these accounts differ in most respects they share a common flood myth. In terms of history the concept of Time seems to have been dealt with by the first civilizations early on. At the time they would build monuments. Perhaps this was meant to commemorate the manner of natural cosmic manifestations. One possible conclusion that could have been reached is that the universe itself is a time machine.

We know the naturally occurring division between differing manifestations of the same source as the exchange of matter - energy, in the "forward" temporal flow we call entropy. This is a single, tuned vibrational frequency that permeates the entire universe. A fine tuning of this naturally occurs through the polarization of the wavelength creating microwave gravity and drawing forth concentrations towards the four elemental harmonic chords (which the Egyptians "built in" to the great pyramid as f-sharp). The electromagnetic force generates centers or fields of vibrational frequencies. Our modern words for aura and hour both derive from the ancient word for the hawk, Horus, called the king of the sky and the son of the sun, Ra, the son of Osiris, God-king of night, dweller beyond the Duat, the Egyptian word for Death. It is these fluctuations of frequency in subspace that cause the divisions we call society and culture. Each of these describes the true condition of the other. What we do socially is called culture, and what pertains to the genetic culture of all mankind they call civilization or society. The brotherhood of the Church is based on the fellowship that began in early smoking circles, however it has become corrupt by housing what it hears of sin and fortune only to rent this ambience out to its parrisoners, who then become hungry for more, as though it meant salvation from the rat race of survival rather than a cancerous sore spreading ineffable memetics that compounds itself upon it. Teaching read backwards in time is theft.

When we do not play the roles created for us by the expectations of others, the labor will become displaced onto another body, and this will represent the part of ourselves that we have assigned to be exiled by projection into manifestation. This allows us to play the role of God. Whenever there is more than one person around playing the role of God, this devaluates the role, and causes the entire paradigm to crumble into the dimension of the magic theater, where all are demigod-kings, representative of the universal harmonic vibrational frequencies of potential energy in hyperspace. It is these strands alone that the multiverse is comprised of, since all the matter-energy absorbed by the black hole and filtered through the wormholes is converted through the inversion engine of the singularity into the baby universe, and the wormholes are only filaments of potential energy themselves. In this level people are more or less psychic, their own roles, and thus their own appearance, being distributed out amongst the masses statistically, while they come to resemble the statistically averaged appearance desired for them by the souls displaced from the bodies forced into secondary roles. None of this amounts to much. Go forth and be merry.

What the left hemisphere knows pales before the right hemisphere's capacity for imagination. Without manifestation there would be no inversion (polarity), and without inversion there would be no deterioration (entropy) of manifestation. Where do you go to find tachyons if you do not want to make one by microwave radiation? To a place where there is a large quantity of photonic radiation, such as a sun. In the case of a sun it would not even be necessary to impose an electromagnetic field, for one already exists. The light that photons emit is microwave radiation. Because the frequency of this is narrowed enough it will flow opposite the flow of entropy, that is, move faster than the speed of the photon. This is a tachyon. Expand this to make a wormhole in spacetime. You can go anywhere you want to. Do anything you want to do.

Before beginning a journey, take the journey mentally. See the way clear in your mind's eye. Then, all you have to do is take the first step. The rest of the journey will already be.

copyright 2002 Jon Gee

an enlightenment

In the times when people claim to be things, it shall come to pass that there shall be a misunderstanding among the people over the nature of the word “event” so that some will think of an event as like an occurrence or happening, such as the circus coming to town, which is the colloquial idea of “event” involving various people and things over a period of time, while the others will think of “event” as a quantitative sum of space and time.

In this time they will pick the stones up off the ground and throw them at each other as a sign for their displeasure in other peoples’ sins, or else cast them for their opinions. This is all the evidence for the argument that event is a quantitative sum of space and time, yet it goes unrecognized among the most of the people, as they have all been blinded by being struck by stones.

The reason for this is a secret. The people share it amongst themselves. It is because only at a certain time could it be rightly revealed that an event was a quantitative sum of space and time. Whenever this thought had occurred to someone, an event would follow with it which would cause them to forget. These events came to be so associated with stones being thrown that it eventually evolved the circus.

The sum of such events is like a letter in that it connects with other events to form an archetypal event. This occurs because such events possess generalizability.

I am such an event. My life-time has been slowed down from the entire duration of just such an event. It took form in my seed and that is how I came to be. It was the vessel of my birth. This is courtesy of my consciousness.

We will come to know one that will be there for us as that link, if we should choose to remember it that way, and shall be shown thus how the individual occurrence of the generalizable event is continuing to progress in the environment for it which we create. This is courtesy Choronzon, an old name for consciousness.

Because there are infinite implications possible for all things that we learn this way, no single technique of understanding is worth anything more than any of the others, and ultimately even concentration upon the sum of everything forever is only one option.

seven dimensions

The universe began in the first dimension. There was a microwave vibration that occurred under the influence of uncertainty and this caused everything. A single amount of the void spun around itself and split off, forming the first particle of karma or quantum information unit. This particle was a singularity compared to nothing, and thus was compelled about itself with the combined weight of the fullness of the abyss, which was a great greatness. It was forced to begin to consume itself by the emptiness, and this it did with such haste that it began to implode with a force greater than that of the darkness, that is, that velocity known as the speed of a photon, and thus to bend the space-time within it, as it had been bent from the null space and zero time of the void when it was conceived. This turned it inside out quickly, and filled it with light so that it shone then in the pitch. But these were not rays of photons, too slow in the darkness and too easily consumed would they be, but the projection of astral light, that is the microwave gravity particle tachyons, and these are projected as an outward rippling orb. It is said then, that the finger of the creator came down and touched the spot on the globe in the heavens from outside the space that was outside our universe, at the moment of the Big Bang, so that it would be swept away with its generis to become proper space-time.

Then it was the time of the second dimension, when the waves of tachyon luminous microgravity stirred the void up into action, and caused more reactions that created particles. These are the events when the four forces were set down, and everything had been called into spin. Time began then, as a measurement of the spinning, a speed that could be measured by the velocity of a photon. Space was conception itself. A single point in null space would be drawn out and then turned about itself, creating polarity. A particle would spring into existence as a self-expanding wormhole tachyon torus in the vast expanse of the nether realm and immediately progenerate a stream of similar shapes, that would continue on filling in the lightlessness until they were all a solid throng occupying a region, and causing by their continual exchange of motion between them, which asymptotically approached regulation, the oscillation of that great polarizing force we know as time. These tachyons tended to accumulate themselves then in a topical aura, since they were emanating outward from a center, and so their region of most profound discourse was around the edge of their expansion. It is upon the surface of this three dimensional shape, expanding in the fourth spatial dimension, that the story of our universe continues. By this time the four elemental genres of particle had been formed, and this had given the Light a fine quality, invisible to the Darkness, that of all those less intense manifest fluctuations of those particles slower than the speed of light. This was the material universe that was becoming polarized as three dimensional space on the surface of the fourth dimensional inflation of tachyons.

Once the third dimension began to appear out of the pure heat following the Big Bang, it rapidly accumulated masses in space similar to those underlying its own mechanisms of creation. These are, in order ascending outwards from our planet, stars, galaxies, and the walls and voids. The planets and the stars are spheres, the stars emitting light and the planets reflecting it. The orbits of the planets around the stars and the orbits of stars around the centers of galaxies are both planar, that is, purely based on the polarization principle — that is, that elemental and temporal-spatial opposites attract. In the case of stars and planets this means the star is too weak to attract heavier objects than the solidification of the fine layers of the gas cloud that surrounded it before its fire scorched them making them curl up into spheres. In the case of stars in galaxies, that is that those bastions of the lesser light all fall towards and are caught in the wake of a singularity where microgravity has torn a hole in space-time leading at the edges into hyperdimension, and in the center to the abyss outside. The walls and voids arrange themselves in random strands and gaps, the extended projection of the first spurts of probability in the infinite field of potential.

The fourth dimension gives us time. This is the surface upon which we measure a beam of light as it is guided. It is homogenous to the very small and the very large, though we recognize these terms to be relative to our perception, and it makes the smaller particles to move faster and the larger sphere to move slower, although we can project our understanding of the relativity of size onto the relativity of temporal durations. Again it is only the measure of the averaged frequency over wavelength for an area given as π squared, or a factor of the force of the bending of microgravity, the force that causes all points in the universe to expand apart from each other as microgravity is perpetually self-generative and repulsively charged toward matter-energy, being that is on the degree of frequency where it is thought to be so improbable for it to exist in the confines of our universe, in the present of its finer aspect, the greater solid particles or the greater wavelengths of energy, is so infinitesimal that it is considered anti-matter, or otherwise, bordering on being opposite possible reality. The formula for time is thus given as ϕ over π , that is the formula for a hypercube that is contained within and surrounding a sphere, that it is set to work measuring the difference of that sphere, so that, as the sphere expands, so does the hypercube.

On the day of the fifth dimension let there be Light, for as we are given to know of consciousness and sleep, and of day and night, so too do we know of the nature of these tachyons. In the proper conditions they can be observed in the three dimensional matter-energy universe, where, true to form they can be measured by instruments before the time it would take resultant from the same events from which they derived to arrive. In these cases we see that they are able to utilize the same factor of the uncertainty of existence as a probability in potential to quantum tunnel through solids, moving from one point on the surface of a virtual particle to a point exactly on the opposite side, not by going through the center of the atom, nor by following a curve defined by the orbit of its electron, but by passing into and then out of the electron itself, which can be at all points on its orbital shell at any time, where it does not manifest trajectory spin as a probability like a photon being absorbed or emitted by an electron, but warp spin as it is swallowed up into itself between the two points, consumed in hyperspace where the point it disappeared and the point it reappeared are the same point, and the tachyonic wormhole itself fills the space between them, such that spin is conserved by the tachyon. The realm of hyperdimension, or the hyper-real warping of the fabric of space-time so that it is always consuming and regenerating itself simultaneously, is the surface of a geometry in pure dimension also, and this is the origin of spin-wave mechanics.

In the sixth dimension there is potential Light, that is, the absence of space as a continuum of vortices, and the absence of time as this substance in motion. Here is the dark pit from whence we started. It is the black hole of the larger universe that ours lives in, between which various frequencies of microwave vibration are shared, though it only looks light because the light of spin burning off pure potential that is our universe is so dim compared to the speed and involution of the Greater Light of this field, equivalent to the electromagnetic torus surrounding the singularity of a black hole as we know them, on the inside of which wormholes to alternate universes form. Thus it is truly here, in this soup of spontaneously surgent probabilities, that we see the connection points between such wormholes form as a gravitational microwavelength of tachyons, and thus we see how our own universe formed as well.

The seventh dimension is that of potential information, and thus it is said to be the dimension of dimensions, that is, the one dimension containing the differing geometries of all the others and providing for them a basis for their continuous contiguity. To this end they say that the creator rested.

Genetic and neuropsychic meta-programming

The reason Timothy Leary is not God is that he was not the first to witness the states of personal transcendental experience that he did. It can be argued, and often is by independent college sophomore aged researchers and the various elders of the existing true occult networks, that Aleistair Crowley achieved these states even earlier. Crowley himself commented on the age of the experiences, attributing various kinds to the various mystery schools, some religions, some cults, throughout history. Timothy Leary traced his to Lao Tse, using the same notariqon technique of genetic precursor tunnelling as Crowley when he had proclaimed himself Anti-Christ, drawing on the energies of the blind led by Nietzsche, who had been the first successful Anti-Christian philosopher, and Swinburned, who had been the big cheese one generation before Crowley. Crowley also later adopted the appearance of a melancholy Buddha that resembled so the visage of Madame Blavatsky — his spiritual maternal influence, according to the angle of Jung.

The concept of genetic precursor tunneling is based, genetically, on something the ancients very well may have understood using letter markers, such as they did for their written language, just as we represent DNA by the first letters of its pairs. Genetic precursor tunnelling is not God. Neither is it not God, that is, it is of God and all for God. But some people take it as God because they see it as an opportunity for imposing the will and desires of the user over natural aggregates. This is a form of self-metaprogramming only because it has not become the common practise.

While genetic precursor tunneling can lead you forwards through the faces of many an angel, or backwards through many incarnations, genetic meta-programming as it occurs on a social scale is far more random and chaotic. It is an attempt by the one to deny that it is the all. It is the illusion that keeps us from asking the question: why fight to survive? Once we stop fighting we find we still survive. This is the same static background field that separates the minds of others from the mind of God. They do not know any of the answers to their fundamental questions.

Neuropsychic metaprogramming is even more short term. It is practised by neuropharmacologists and its experiments are peddled to the public by our trusted psychiatrists. It is the internalization to the brain of the Alchemical humunculus. While this has been practised by many, many individuals throughout history, only in the last fifty years or so have there been breakthroughs in this fascinating field.

In the beginnings of religions, animism was pagan. It was practised by shamans dressed like the prey, and often culminated in a sexual ritual or blood letting over a sacred stone. This led to the worship of the stones, and it is thought that this was at the end of the stone age when stone tools were used, at which time stone megaliths were erected in alignment with astronomical observations. As the pagan rituals became civilized they were increasingly associated anthropomorphically with the participants in the sacred rituals. These late medicine men and women also erected, or rather, had erected for them, even more massive stone monuments which included even more detailed records in their measurements of even more ancient alignments of celestial events.

As recently as the time of Christ, the Jews were accused by the Romans and the other surrounding pagans of worshipping as a ritual pagan sacrifice the properly authorized Roman execution of a Jewish prisoner. The evidence for this exists in the canonized Roman Christian new testament and the Muslim Koran. The Roman version does not include the description of the battle of Massada as second Maccabees, however the battle is described in the Muslim Koran relative to the later rise of Mohammedism throughout the same region. It is evident that the scrolls of Qumran record the same events, which indicates that they arose later than the events occurred. This contradicts the Roman translators explanation of the history of Damascus as leading to and culminating in the Jewish revolts. In the Damascus documents there are also descriptions of what is described in the Koran relative the battle of Massada, which date the actual events described back to the time of Enoch, who had been associated with Thoth in ancient Egypt.

These events describe ancient historical celestial events, such as an apparent cometary impact associated by the Sumerians with Nibiru, and which caused the Biblical flood. The Sumerian tablets describe Edin as Ehdhin, an actual historical community in the Mesopotamian valley, which they claimed to be the first homo sapien community after the fall of Atlantis, and where they say genetic research occurred. In descriptions of Atlantis there abound descriptions of the remnants of ice age large mammals such as mammoths and the last of the dinosaurs. It is thought that the destruction of Atlantis occurred at the end of the ice age, when stone age coastal trade communities were submerged by the melting glaciers that had covered north america. It is also thought that all of this occurred at a time that was measured by alignments of celestial events in the heavens.

Imagine standing on a canopy street at night with a street lamp overhead. A leaf falls from the tree above you, but you are looking down. You see a shadow moving across the pavement of the street, then finally you see the leaf that is casting it, as the two slowly come together to meet where the leaf lands on the street. Let us examine the geometries of this event.

Let us call the light source equivalent to a singularity. It is casting off photons in more or less all directions simultaneously, but these photons only move in straight lines, so the further away they get from the light source the fewer of them there are by area of coverage, and thus the dimmer the light source will seem. Let us establish that the street cuts through these photons at a flat angle equivalent to the base of a cone, such that the closer it comes to being directly beneath the light source the more obtuse the angles are, until the light is right angular to the street directly beneath the lamp; the further away from the base of the street lamp the street goes the more acute are the angles of photons emitted from the lamp striking the street. While this light constitutes a field and establishes the parameters for subsequent three dimensional reference, the light source for the time being need only be thought of as the peak of the cone of light between the lamp and the street, and thus can be taken as alike the singularity that is the point of a cone.

The street, likewise, is necessarily flat for reasons of physics, and therefore can be thought of as establishing a base system for a two dimensional coordinate plane. Similarly we can think of the leaf, although it's shape is irregular, as being roughly a two dimensional plane also. The shadow that it casts can be thought of as either a second dimensional plane in itself, or, more conveniently, a lesser dimensional point, or dark singularity (opposite the singularity of the light source).

The trajectory of the leaf, however, must be plotted in three dimensions. It can be thought of as falling in a straight line, up and down, which in turn can be reduced to a point when viewed from directly above or below it, however this point, or line, is relative to the singular light source as well as to the plane of the road, and besides, from the observer's point of view, the exact nature of this trajectory is irrelevant, since it is not the event which is being observed. It is the event which, it will be shown, may be deduced from observation of the other relative functions.

Now, say that you, the observer, are looking down and see first the shadow of the leaf as it is falling. What you are observing is only a dark spot on the surface of the road moving across it horizontally in a more or less straight line. Perhaps the shadow makes one or two slight variations in its course; ultimately it is of no consequence. Being a rational person, yet one who does not yet see the leaf casting this shadow, you might wonder what this shadow is. Allow me to spoil the surprise and tell you: what you are looking at is the negative, lesser dimensional, inverse function, directly related to where the photonic projections from the point of the light source are being interrupted by an as yet unknown object.

As you continue to follow this shadow with your eyes, the leaf will come into view as the two approach one another. Here we see the angle of the interrupted photons becoming more and more acute until finally the leaf comes to rest upon its own shadow. Essentially what you have witnessed is a function of the principle of relativity: that change in a lower dimensional shadow reflects movement in a higher dimensional form, and vice versa. The change you saw in the shadow was first its appearance, and then its movement along the flat surface of the road. The movement of the leaf corresponded to this, but occurred in a different direction, and within a greater dimension of space. The leaf is a solid object, and its shadow insubstantial.

The path followed by the shadow on the road is a lesser dimensional contextual mapping of the trajectory of the falling leaf through a higher dimensional space. As the leaf intersects the straight lines of the photons, casting a shadow, so does the shadow intersect with the plane of the road, creating a vector. The vector of the negative singularity is relative, therefore, directly to the fixity of the positive singularity, such that the third dimensional leaf falling between them is only acting as a medium, or conduit, of inversion between the two. The vector of the shadow in the second dimension is a reflection of the trajectory of the leaf in the third. The shadow is as much dependent on the light source for its physics as it is upon the leaf for its mathematics. Herein lies the wisdom: that from the observation of a lesser dimensional shadow we can deduce the trajectory of a higher dimensional form in the same way that we can deduce from the ripples on the surface of water the source of disturbance to its surface tension.

Psychosis.

Psychosis is the enemy of God.

Psychosis is no other than Satan. Satan the dark one. Satan the dark light.

Satan is the madness in the mind of God.

Imagine a man strapped to a wheel for all eternity. It is all he has known since birth. He knows of no life other than it. He is, when he comes into manhood, finally allowed to watch how other people turn the wheel. Then he is expected to learn to turn the wheel for himself. Finally he is set free of the wheel. We drive around in circles in life. Others see us going nowhere. The simulacrum is very tricky. It will always find some way to relate to us. The free form delusion in the mind of God is ever close and present. The ridiculous notion of freedom from the banal and the mundane. We can only evolve slowly, for as many referentials as we cast out upon others, so do that many come back from others in upon us, and more, for we are seen by strangers even as we are driving on the streets of life. Our existence as an observation of the all seeing eye of the Lord is contingent upon our own ego, but this is defined in various ways, and is therefore segmented and piecemeal. The madness of Satan creeps in. The venegful wrath of God. People used to wear goat masks and dance around fires to throw themselves into fits of hysteria. Nowadays executives go to encounter groups in wildrness retreats. It has to be let out in some way, once it finds its own way in. And in this way it animates us, as it does the playful little animals, who are too free to be posessed by it. The one referential is a hologram of the bigger referential, the smaller part contains the larger whole, and thus that discorporeal anthropomorphication of our electromagnetic conductivity is released in the mind in relation to the storage of the immediately preceeding referential. One rolls over to the next, and between them there is an inversion from fact or fiction to its opposite and back again, or from fact or fiction to its opposite. Once one has made a sequential referential out of Choronzon, one is free to bend space and time in any manner and in any form or force one likes, and this is the free will surrounded on all sides by madness. One can thus enter and leave this state as one likes, however if other people see you there it is of the same effect as the old wive's tale of making a face when the wind changes. This is because being free within a malleable holographic simulacrum of referential infinitude does not confine you away from the reality of being only an object under the gaze of Otherness. Thus, other people are free to convey, even suggest to you through their gestures, words and actions that what they perceive of you, when you release your free will in madness, or anything that differs from the norm, is to them alien, awkward, uncomfortable, etc. along a long list of words associated with the affixion of a stigmata, or scarlet letter, to mark the subjectified object as criminal or of ill intent to whatever form of community they imagine they individually represent to it, or, in reality, what they collectively represent to it of a community. This, itself, however, is a kind of posession on their part, and therefore a second level order of madness. To have handled insanity is to be contaminated by it, and the insane carry the taint in their blood. But this second order madness is socially acceptable, because it occurs as upon the level that is above the head of the individual, that of the crowd or of the watchful collective. It is true that madness is the media in relationship to royalty. Media, that creation of jacobite Masonry, serves upon the royalty with their full force, truly in a state of panic stricken frenzy. This was the same tactic used by the Nazis in WWII against Poland, their peace loving neighbor. However just as the instrumentation of media has grown out of the craft masonry of jaconins, that is, the mass production of the working class, so has the working class evolved from the division with the class of royals. The institutionalization of religion and the state initiated the beginning of the division of ego from the objectified definition of madness. The church and the state were both built on madness. The ruling class, the royals, began to cultivate a study of it in the bloodlines, as it was a symptom that could be brought out by interbreeding to a degree to which the only side effects might be slight haemophelia. The working class began to study it in representational form. They studied it in everything, the arts, the liberal sciences; finally they formed a definition of madness as being part of a multifaceted simulacrum system capable of mirroring many natural emotions which they called the media. The media are a tool that are being used to put the majority of the focus on certain celebrity figures, who are then held up as being representational. This suspends them from rational disbelief and renders them free of the gravity of fear of immediatism that draws the public attention to them. These representational figures represent an archetypal no man's land between the bio-physically entrenched soldiers of our souls, fighting over what will be the boundary of the ego. Hollywood, all centers of artistic creation, instruments of technological telecommunications are all wrapped up in a definition for madness in the second degree — a slow, passive, calm acculturation — while meanwhile they are the videodrome of interzone. While they try to portray events too early, as a social self-consciousness forewarning, they are always rushing around portraying events too late, live and in progress, honoring the deceased, in a dramatic recreation. Without the star system to hold onto, the media would be nothing but a voyeuristic lecher leering at the monarchs and democrats. The social simulacrum in this case has come to surpass, or rather even, usurp the right of Aleister Crowley: that every man and every woman is a star. In truth, each of us that ever has lived is a star, even an entire galaxy of such inspirationally triggered representations, all of which turned into black holes so that we could be here now, hopefully, sitting somewhere nice and talking about all this. Insofar as the media exist exclusively as a way of misdirecting and diverting our, the public's, attention away from matters such as this, which are of spiritual concern, so the more it tightens its grip, the more star systems will slip through its fingers. However, to introduce spirituality in any form is to allow for the madness of the freedom of the soul, which is the fear of immediatism. When the power goes out we feel suddenly mortal, but when the power is on we do not feel so all mighty. When we are suddenly deprived of our media, our electronic telephones, our television sets, computers, refrigerators, microwave meals, even hot water heaters is when we feel the fear of immediatism. This implies the necessity of taking action, making decisions, putting things in order, preparing for an ultimate end. However we are told the human spirit is free. This implies the soul is bound. By its life it is bound to the media. However we are also told that the soul is immortal. Yet we know the media, like a light switch, can be turned off. So what is the media then, but the madness of the soul in chains to the civic spirit. And if the media is turned off, then the madness becomes the liberation of the soul from the mediated chains to the civic spirit. The madness of freedom. The madness of the abyss. The soul stops participating in the active process of mediation and is once again alone. In truth matters of spirituality are only another diversion in the study of madness, and are even covered quite frequently by the media, but these are largely watered down by association of the individual's holy guardian angel or free spirit with the civic duty of the media to tell you the truth and lie to you at the same time using representationalism. True spiritual matters are left for the individual to decide how to find for themselves, and are in no way segregated by the church or state from the study of madness. For this reason it is said that one can tell the conditions of one's society by telling the conditions of one's asylums. In most cases, these are the places where those thought to be incurable by any known conventional means are shipped off to, to be experimented upon using whatever is the current, modern, experimental methodology. During the past fifty years this has been limited to behaviorism in the first world, where one is confined under observation in an experimental setting. This is thought to represent a simulacrum of the normal conditions of first world society. This sort of second order madness is considered socially acceptable.

Marijuana is karmic pennance for those who run LSD. In the Gottlieb experiments he posed as an artist, which led to the CIA's project ARTICHOKE. All of this was to root out Communism, to see how the communists had learned from Nazi scientists during the Soviet equivalent of project paperclip about Nazi experiments with mind control. The Americans expected the communist threat to present itself to America's liberal, left wing side, that was familiar with the liberal arts and sciences, particularly associated with Magick. The American military, through Al Hubbard, had become aware of a large amount of information about the use and application of magick in the form of mass mind control. By the time of George Hunter White this had been replaced by an attempt to simulate the simulacrum of the artistic media itself. George Hunter White watched people having sex from behind a two way mirror while on the toilet. This represents the average American watching tv. It is also reminiscent of how Elvis Presley died. The way his agents behaved, running around half-naked with their guns, is reminiscent of the American gangster — more a creation of newspaper media distribution than of the original roots of Italy's Black Hand secret society, the Zorro to the keystone Knights of Malta, the sad clown of Opera — which has been duly distributed also to Russia and to Japan, as well as into American ghettos, where it has become the dominant slum culture for disenfranchised African Americans. White ended by shooting blank wax slugs at his reflection in the mirror. But this was only during the time of the Rat Pack. In the hippy era, when liberalism really passed through America, the experiments of Doctor Ewen Cameron were going on. In these people were subjected to all the post-JFK alienesque and inner earth technology that merely represented the history of the old world that the lurking spectre of multinational socialism had accumulated before it had begun to become transplanted into the backyards of national American corporations on its way to the Orient. These experiments took place in Canada, but many involved travel between multiple locations, often while under the influence of an intoxicating substance and the combined effect of a strongly reinforced post hypnotic suggestion. Just as the Russians had called sleeper agents "fellow travellers" so had Dr. Frank Olsen died not from LSD making him think he could fly, as the myth is perpetuated, but from Bourbon, Nembutol, and a blow to the head.

The theory of metaforms as being fourth or higher dimensional shapes which are present yet ever moving shifting and changing, underlying the geometries of quantum mechanical probabilistic reactions is troubling in only one regard: the aspect of the theory which connects these higher dimensional, idealized objects to the subjective state of human psychism and mysticism. It is tempting to say that, by seeing these, we are seeing the same thing as auras, as souls, or as the invisible chains of human reaction that bind us together as interactive beings, however is this the case? It can definitely be said that the discoveries of Kirlian photography and Wilhelm Reich demonstrate that there is an electromagnetic field of kinetic potential of which the nervous system of phi cathecting neurons is only the internal physical component. It can be speculated from this research the existence of a full body field such as described as the aura in the west or the atman in the east. Insofar as this field may be separable from the physical vessel while it is alive it may imply an astral body, or, upon death, a soul. It can be further speculated that the innate shape of this field, whether only aura or also soul, can be averaged out over an extended history to assume a specific form, and insofar as most theories about the aura and the chakras, on the one hand, imply an ovoid or egg shape, the theories regarding astral projection or the description of the visage of the ethereal soul are less specific (variably anthropomorphic) and often border liberally on the far flung. Assuming there is any validity in this theory based on the research to this point thus far, it can be speculated the aura, or soul, is itself one of these fourth dimensional or higher metaforms of hitherto unquantified geometry. This should be admitted as all well and good as far as electromagnetivity is concerned. However the question of those more subtle vibrations the emotions remains unaddressed. Modern physiology has found, using electroencephalogram technology, that different parts of the brain use different amounts of electrical current while the mind is thinking different types of thoughts, undergoing moods, or perceiving stimuli. It is currently held that the emotional aspect is more chemical, while the intellectual aspect more electrical. However, in light of the theory of metaforms, what can be seen to be the case? One could speculate that intelligences were more angular, while emotions more well rounded, although the elegance of this, just as that of the theory differentiating between chemicals and electricity in an electrochemical nervous system, belies it as probably mere temptation to jump to a conclusion. The answer is probably more complex. One possible theory determines a distinction between emotion and intellect as between space and time. Here we see that, according to the entropic matter-energy exchange, where matter gradually sheds off its information matrix to dissolve into a state of pure energy, so is intellect more acute in the moment, and emotion like its ephemeral counterpart over time. What does this mean, exactly, in terms of the metaforms discussed thus far? The lesson to be learned from the geometry of science, on whatever dimensional level, is that a shape is only a measure upon the surface of whatever dimension in which it exists. For example, if I draw a circle on a sheet of paper, there can be no doubt that the circle itself is flat so long as the paper upon which it is drawn remains smooth. So will a cube measure out exact units of length, width and depth in a solid form, because it is three dimensional. Of course, just as if the paper, which itself is an object, like the cube, in three dimensions, however thin, is crumpled, so shall the circle no longer be an accurate measure of the second dimension, thus, if the surface of spacetime were warped, as by a singularity around a blackhole or a wormhole, would our cube cease to appear like a cube. Now we are beginning to understand the subtle movements of the metaforms, however the basic rule will apply regardless of their situational condition. Every geometrical form is a measure of the dimension immediately inferior to it. So it is inverted between spacetime, emotion and intellect. Thoughts, which occur as firing of neurons in the brain, take up space, but are perceived in and through time. Emotions, which evoke durations, occupy fields of material space as subtle vibrations of sensation.

I cannot begin to fathom the unspeakable foulness of the sex act that consummated my conception, though I have explored in my mind with vivid detail all the most unspeakably criminal postures I can conjecture and found them all somehow wanting in lack of love. This, however, I know with certainty: at my birth demons howled with the screeching of tires on streets and angels sighed like the buzzing of electric lights. My soul is that of no one special: an average seeker, like the many average seekers who have been gifted certain insights that made them appear, illusorily, great among the men and women of their time. My soul was destined to live elsewhere, was scheduled for a different life in another land, but then there was the Heavenly internal matter of this infernal act of the conception of the foetus of a homunculus whose blood was boiling tar and whose every thought was hate and evil from the first ejaculation of the semen and the secretion of the ovum to the moment of their meeting in union, at which point some soul had to be wiped, as it were, upon the surface of this stinking, rotting mess of filth, this human compost conceived in an anus of spurting menstruum. And for this foetus, though I were destined to an average life somewhere else, I were the next in line for incarnation, and so was chosen as the elect: my task to invert and thereby save this wasted, fetid, stinking mass of wasted flesh and refuse and compost.

So the soul was sealed to the body, and this perpendicularly, because a direct, that is centered, or rather an obtuse or acute angle would have burned the soul to a foul cinder upon entry, such was the loathing of the fuck that generated this bastard. It was such in the sign of Libra, the Lady of the Scales, for here was the weighing of the average soul against the most unholy evil thing ever contemplated. But as you all know Libra is only Libra to the dumb, and to the wise shows the duplicitousness of her true face. In the time of Christ Libra was Virgo, the Virgin, signifying the soul not yet prepared, not tested nor tried for its ordeals in such an incarnation. And in that time of Moses, in which we now dwell, under the reign of Aten Ra, the crowned and conquering child, the true sign of Libra is revealed to be none other than that of LEO: the LION of ZION, which art truly I AM. In this ways did I have MARS and JUPITER aligned in Gemini, for the strength and the kingship as the Twins. And in this ways did I have the MOON, and VENUS, and SATURN aligned in LEO, for the time, and the love and mystery of the LION. And in this ways also did I have MERCURY and PLUTO and the SUN in VIRGO, for the magic and the underworld and the LIGHTED WAY of the VIRGIN. And in this way also did I have URANUS in LIBRA, for the sign of the tilted scales, and NEPTUNE in SCORPIO, for the sign of the flood. And this was the nativity of my birth sign.

And so the one who was chosen as elect had entered into the body of the GREAT BEAST, the ANTI-CHRIST, ANTI-BUDDHA, ANTI-MOHAMMED, ANTI-GOD thing that tore at my mother's womb when it slipped out painlessly as inspid as the bloodstain it should have become with invisible claws and invisible chains that would forever dangle back to that hole which it thought was its home, and associate all the universe with it, and exalt it as NUIT.

At my coming of age there was an initiation ritual of some sort. I am led to believe it took the form of a test which I failed at the peak of my primal energy, and which will therefore repeat on lesser and lesser scales of energy forever until I am eventually completely withered away by it, widdled away by its entropy down to the soulless cluster of cells at the core of my aura. Sometimes this test, in its eternal recurrence, gives the illusion that I have succeeded and passed it, but I know better than to be deceived by this MOCKERY of KALI the DEMIURGE! There is no success. There is no failure. There is no test. There are no rules. There is simply this life, and we simply live it, without any meaning, as it was meant to be.

Now the FUTURE PATH is being prepared for my soul. THOSE WHO REPRESENT THE GOD OF WHOM I AM HIS CHOSEN ELECT HERE ON EARTH AND WHO ARRANGED MY COMING OF AGE DEATH RITUAL TEST prepare the possibilities which will be allowed to filter through the multiverse of tunnel realities that comprise the earth's electromagnetic aura to become probabilistic karma in my immediate aura, some of which I will select, others neglect, by more or less unconscious acts of will determined more by an attempt to survive along the most efficient path of least resistance than what is in the best interest of my highest attributes and aspirations.

I HAVE SEEN THE HELL BARDOS HAUNTED BY DOCTORS AND THE DERANGED. They were weighed. I am still stuck between dualities such as these, though they will perpetually change forms. One is Love, one Hate; one active, one passive; etc. THEY ARE MEANINGLESS and I AM THEM NOT.

THE GREAT MACHINE TAKES TIME to process the hundredth monkey effect, so that, after I am done creating my cosmology, it must be dumbed down throughout all levels until even my manifest antithesis believes it (which ultimately means, until it becomes second nature for me to speak eloquently on its elegance, simplicity and beauty). But during this time I am confused for all the other average seekers who have been gifted with great insights and have thus, illusorily, appeared to rise above the ranks of the men and the women of their time to be admired by them. This comparison to previous admirations is meant to bog me down and wear me out until, like a wet clay pot on a wheel, I am spun around so often that I resemble their desired idol. And this is the MURDER VICTIM, or the SUICIDE CHRIST.

THAT MOST HATED OF SHEEP JESUS BEN PANDERA, whose myth of crucifixion is but the cover story for the mass suicide at Massada, is prophesizes to return again, and THAT is the shape into which this HATED CLAY QLIPHOTIC DEMON BODY is becoming. And such is its joy in its own deluded death ritual, orchestrated exclusively by and for itself, that by the hands of as many bad habits and stale emotions as it can muster it pulls me along with it gleefully and blissfully unaware that the true test has already been past and failed.

But my father's name is Geometry, yet he is inverted, as Paul upon the cross, for he is the martyred phallus, and my mother's name is MeruBecka, for she is sacred beyond the soace of silent science to the most ancient of days, of Atlantis even. And yet their forces are inverted the one to the other, such that, by kissing my father upon the prolapsed and hemherroided hole of his arse I achieve the bliss of ananda, and by nursing at my mother's white gold milk teet I am only poisoned by martyrdom. These are the dualities I am trapped between, until that day when the machine catches up to me, and woe be unto THAT time, for then we are all, each in our own way, doomed, and saved, and doomed anew, to eternity!

For the sunspot cycle brings many changes of the frequency of people's auras, and therefore moods, much moreso than just the phases of the moon. And it's peak is nearing day by day. And I don't want to be here any longer when it happens. I want to go up in my spirit body, in my astral form, and become a protective shield of ozone for the earth, to save this wretched planet from its fate of fire. But to do this this Anti-FATE body must die, and this, the FATES will not allow, for they do not understand.

Einstein's greatest contribution to the field of physics is often overlooked in light of his more technical treatises on the fundamental nature of field theory. However, as the difference between craft and speculative free and associated masonry will readily testify, it is the tools, or objective impliments of deduction, which stand to be remembered through the ages much longer and with more associated meaning than the subjective impliments of induction.

It is without doubt that the formula " $E = mc^2$ " has received more notoriety than any other single formula, including Shroedinger's equation, in the entire history of physics. Einstein himself attributes this to a factor which he identifies as the formula's "elegance." Insofar as this references its simplicity, coupled with the deep scope of its implication for the meaning of particle/wave relationships in physics, this term is appropriate, and it is clear that this is precisely the sense in which Einstein meant it. Regarding its simplicity, no formula is more compact and easy to remember after only a few repetitions. Regarding its deep scope of implications, it led to the building of atomic based weaponry, which brought the range of destructive capacity of artillery up to the modern level of warfare on a globally unified front. As historically significant as this fact is, perhaps it is even more important, post-historically, that the formula explains the relationship of quantum particles and waves in field relationships, a feat not recognizeably accomplished in the entire history of the sciences. Thus, in these ways, Einstein's description of his formula as "elegant" is apt.

However, due to the "elegance" of this formula, it is often overlooked the instruments to which the great scientist was obligated to invoke in order to advance the theory. Turning here we find Einstein's real lasting legacy.

Newton had experimented with gravity, Galileo with optical refraction of light. In doing so, each of these men had advanced the necessary principles upon which Einstein's formula would come to be based, that being, in the case of Galileo, that all objects which possess mass exert a force common to this mass, which force he called "gravity;" in the case of Galileo the observation was that such distortions as occur to light rays as are effected by this such force as gravity could be seen and measured as the parallax of distant stars. It nearly remained for Einstein to state that force, in general, was equal to a distortion to the wavelength of light by a mass, thus generalizing the findings of his two predecessors and introducing the subjective impliment of fields by way of this generalization.

Now Newton had relied solely on weight and measures. He had rolled a ball up and down curved surfaces, and performed experiments dropping objects of various weights from various heights. All in all however his laboratory differed little from that of even early Hellenic empiricists, who had ascertained the earth's latitudes and longitudes by use of no more than simple posts in the earth and wells at different locales, and observation of their shadows.

Galileo had used a much more technical device in rendering his observations, that being the telescope, however it is now thought that even ancient, seafaring peoples, who are known to have possessed crude versions of our modern compass and water bowl based levels might have had a device similar to an astrolabe, or even a tube containing convex lenses they used for long range magnification. The Greeks and Egyptians are both now known to have had factories for producing such types of glass, and even the digeridoo and rainstick of aboriginal peoples in Australia and South America indicate extravagant uses for wooden tubes in instrumentation.

However, what marks Einstein as unique among this triumverate is his introduction of objective impliment: that of the clock. Aside from complicated calendars and sundials, the ancients saw little need for measuring time in infinitesimal interval increments. However, by Einstein's day, the fast pace of business life in the western hemisphere had long since washed across the face of the entire globe, and acquired the degree of international competition regarding the manufacture of the common timepiece, watch, or clock, with which we are accustomed today.

In so doing, Einstein broke a fundamental, though unspoken, tradition of preceeding scientific inquiry: that of temporal reductability. The experiments of Newton, and, to a somewhat lesser degree, Galileo, are relatively timeless; that is, their findings are ubiquitously possible to have been discovered by ancient peoples. However, Einstein's axiom is definitively modern.

Now, the obvious irony here is simply that, the apparent law that Einstein broke, that of temporal reductability, is that which is itself measured by the impliment with which he broke it. However there is a somewhat more esoteric irony at play here as well. The observations made by Newton and Galileo, which could, in theory, as easily have been made by the ancients, were of effects and forces which, as is in accord with the findings of Einstein's observations, are not a priori, that is, permanent to a degree of infinitude. That is to say that, post-Einstein cosmologies now suggest that there was a time in the universe (known as the Planck time) during which there was no gravity, and there was also a time when there was no light being emitted from any stars, since before a certain point, it is now accepted, no such thing as stars existed in the entire magnitude of the universe. On the other hand, since time itself is that which is the measurement of both the finitude of the other forces as well as the hitherto presumed a priori infinitude of the universe itself, then the concept of time, it is now widely held even moreso than the physical universe itself, represents just such an a priori infinitude.

In other words, those impliments which may have been possessed by mankind throughout history can only effectively measure forces which have not always been present in the universe, while a device that has only become popularly common over the past 400 years or so is the exclusive measure of the only truly universally applicable force.

It should be noted, in conclusion, that while theories are only as valid and sound as their ability to be disproven in favor of still more "elegant" axioms, and all subjective formulae are ultimately transitory, the primary contributions to the craft of science are those which become the cornerstones of the foundation for the coming generations to build upon the temple of reason, and thus these which are, however much notoriety given to the popular modern theory, trend or fad in science, truly to be held up and scrutinized as the artifacts of future history.

The essence of time travel is multiple personality schizophrenia. This is because of superimposition of multiple timelines. In each timeline there exists a different unique personality for each individual person. This has been expressed as the theory of multiple universes existing in different dimensions. Thus, in each different universe, or timeline, there is an alternate being, identical to us, and yet with their own unique personality.

The essence of personality is the superimposition of these different personae in different universal timelines. This occurs through subtle energy fluctuations which we can measure as brain waves, endochrinal secretions and emotions. Really, the cause of these is an interaction of the microcosmic (biological) with the macrocosmic (multiversal).

Free will is a virus, and the aura is a bacteria. Mitochondrial DNA is a virus, and the DNA double helix is a bacteria. The nervous system is a virus, and the body is a bacteria. In all these cases the viral component feeds off the bacterial component, while the bacterial component regenerates itself. This is the symbiotic essence of all autotrophic and heterotrophic life.

The aura is a metaform, or fourth spatial dimensional shape. As it fluctuates in the fourth spatial dimension, that is, as it moves about, guided by the free will, its different edges, corners and faces produce different electrochemical reactions in the body. These electrochemical reactions are brain waves, endochrinal secretions and emotions.

Now, while the body occupies only a point on or within each such auric metaform, each such auric metaform transcends spacetime and touches upon similar bodies in multiple realities, universes, or dimensions. Thus, the free will of one is the guiding influence of many, who are considered self similar, despite being different bodies, unique and autonomous in composition, occupying different timelines in different dimensional universes.

Therefore, through becoming one with the free will, the soul essence of any one body in a certain dimensional timeline can “body jump” into a similar body that it can be connected with through hyperspace, that is, across the difference between dimensional timelines of universes.

This is the essence of inspiration: that is, an alignment of transdimensional, multiversal timeline personae. In other words, whereas esp and collective doublethink breaks down individual creativity into a collective unconsciousness, inspiration is, in reality, entirely individual. The ideas are not shared collectively between bodies in the same material reality, but occur instantaneously to the same essential source of free will across the entire dimensional spectrum. This means that, instead of permeating space, it permeates multiple timestreams.

Time itself is an aura.

Thus it stands to reason that there are three types of what we know of as time.

The first is based on endochrinal secretions. These are produced when the body consumes certain chemicals and minerals. One such type of chemical is menstruum. One such type of mineral is monatomic gold. The active aspect in both of these is the ingredient telomerase, which attaches itself to the telomeres on the tips of DNA strands and diminishes their decay during each regenerating cycle of cellular replication. In the case of menstruum, this chemical occurs in its raw form, as it is necessary to rejuvenate the tissue of the vaginal walls from the acidic component of the menstruum that frees the egg from its perch astride the cervix. Therefore, in this form, it is best that the chemical be distilled from the other constituent chemical components of the menstruum, such as the vaginal acids and the hormonal endorphins. In the case of monatomic gold, this ingredient is not present, however the gold itself accomplishes an identical effect, by bonding to the telomeres in its high spin state and charging the DNA strand similarly to a superconductor. In this state the DNA simply has more energy for a longer period of time, and is thus insulated against the type of decay associated with natural aging. Monatomic gold can be consumed in its raw form, and such high spin states are produced from regular gold and the platinum group metals by prolonged exposure to an electric arc light at temperatures approaching that on the surface of the sun.

The second is based on electromagnetism. It is a well documented fact that the earth has an electromagnetic field. This field has a resonance measured by the German scientist Schumann as being proximal to 40 megahertz. The sun also has an electromagnetic field, however the sun's electromagnetic field is somewhat different from the earth's. Because the sun's gaseous body rotates differentially, the electromagnetic field of the sun coils up around it. Between these coils of the em field prominences and flares occur. In this way the electromagnetic fields of the sun and earth have a dynamic relation. Each individual person also has a unique em field, which can be photographed using the technique of the Russian scientist Kirril. This has been variously called throughout the ages the ba, the ruach, the aura and the soul. It is also known that certain materials and shapes have unique electromagnetic signature patterns.

The final type of time is that which has been called the most "subtle" or "esoteric." It is a state of gravity relative to the rest of the matter-energy universe in the same way as is monatomic gold to regular gold or the aura is to the body. It has been known throughout history as vril, orgone, scalar waves or zero point energy. It is comprised of faster than entropy tachyons which act gravitationally on both subatomic particles as microwaves and upon massive objects such as planets.

The Christian Question

Which is better? Is it the product of the craft? Is it the tools of the craft? Is it the craft mason himself?

DesCartes musings on the methods were induced by mysticism. The vertical (as above), he mused, must be like the horizontal (so below).

What is best is what is already there. As we rediscover we remember anew. The only perennial tradition is how to control the dispensation of revelation. Abuse pushes the dispensation back further, thus prolonging each age. But the revelation is inevitable, as it is of what is already there.

Do you want to talk about rights? You believe the right to own property is universally generalisable as in keeping with the greater good? That this is an inalienable human right as guaranteed by God? You are waiting for the other shoe to drop. It is "in God we trust," to fulfill his end of this bargain, this desperate social compact. By institutionalising these types of so-called "Rights" in social hierarchical structures we "believe" we will in some way insidiously, insidiously ingratiate ourselves into God's favour.

Perhaps you are waiting to have your property forcibly seized, taken from you by something altogether "alien" to your concept of Divine Right. Hence the second amendment, the right to "bear arms." This falls either way, such that, should the government present itself as an intruder, then it becomes the "divine right" to overthrow it!

And then there is the first law, which is really all there is: the right to peaceably assemble. So-called "Free Speech." Speech is a commodity, just the same as gasoline. As long as we are dependent on it, we will not be prepared to have revealed to us some less limited form of disposable resource. Intellectual property laws are for the bourgeoisie.

This is an appeal to a non-existent authority. The Levite priests among the Israelites were petitioned to make an alchemical bull, which they then proceeded to produce out of base gold. When Moses returned from the mountain and saw the brazen apes, he is said to have shattered the original dispensation of the Shemhamforash, the magical 72 letter name of God, engraven on alchemical sapphire. Let this be a lesson. There is more than one way to skin a cat!

When Moses returned with the second dispensation, it was the moral code. And this preceded, and thus, as above, so below, superseded the codification of the three degrees of universally generalisable, inalienable human "Rights." It remains hung over the head of every "Free" society that the moral laws take precedence over the laws of the land. "Rights" are a petition for redress of grievances from the God that codified the moral laws.

We only value what is rare. So, in times of political duress, we look longingly to "Divine Justice," the "Last Judgment," "divine intervention," to illuminate the luck of our "Rights." This is sheer folly. We resent the implication of codified moral laws. Why must we be told? Do we not inherently already know? So we prop up the strawman of our "Rights." We lean in support of this monumental paranoia and believe that it, in turn, supports the sky. Scarcity itself has no value. Scarcity is everywhere.

Civilisation is the ritualised trap of predatory "instinct," which has ostensibly replaced Original Sin. Original Sin justified the codification of moral law, and now "instincts" justify implied savegery which must be kept in cheque and balance. Through gradual increments, the ideology of "Rights" as a necessity to be desired encroaches over our minds, like the shadow of the cloud of morality, it gradually takes up the space previously occupied by the concept of God. Politics replaces religion.

These are abuses, that prohibit the dispensation, and prevent the revelation. For each new cog that rises is quickly solidified into material reality, and becomes a property of the craft. If we slave to the ideal of moral law, and limp along beneath the weight of "rights" prohibiting instinct and evolution, then why would we truly place any value at all on "property," which is the lowest form of expression, existing only to drag us down? There is nothing that chains one to the dispensation of guilt and distracts one from the revelation more than property!

The world is already unified. We do not need "property" to allow this to happen. "Property" is not the gift from God. Property is only the latest dispensation of the craft. It is the brazen Apis we all crowd around to worship, proof of the civility of the landed gentry, proof of their enlightened, nay! Illumined beneficent democracy! It is the fascination of our "Rights," the obsessive-compulsion of our oculus. For surely, as long as we have "property," we have "Rights," and as long as we have "Rights" we have leverage by which to petition the Lord for dispensation! We do not. This is the utmost fool-hardy.

What is power? It is the chafing up against one another of opposites, the friction between fortune and fear. Power is over someone who does not realise that it is there. Power is what you must first realise is already over you before you can overthrow it. Power is 90% of earth's population believing in God, with the other 10% equally aware of the existence, if not of God per se, than at least the argument over whether or not there is a God, in essence, the concept of God. And power is shifting from the God concept, away from the dispensation, the abuse of the True revelation, of the moral law. Power is beginning to bring about the new age, the dawning faith in "Rights," and the Proof of "property!"

Power is a static electric charge that collects between the transmitters of courage and the receivers of fear. As courage moves one direction, fear moves opposite. So, as you fear to lose your property, so too grows the courage of those who wish to take it. Be it the government, or simply a burglar in the night, be it a killer or a friendly hobo, be it the Brother who extends the right hand of friendship, so mote it be. For God can come in many disguises, all at once in every shape and sizes.

Power is the control over the mind. Either that locus of control is somewhere "out there" beyond the self, or it is the central definition of the self. Control over the mind is control over the emotions, and control over the emotions is control over the body, and control over the body is control over matter.

Now you see the True Mystic dispensation! You have only to look up now to behold the coming Revelation! For we have built civilisation in our own image: the image of a complex virus. We have built it as a more perfect model of ourselves: a virus without a spine! And so it is.

Perhaps you are waiting for a rainbow, for the movie to end in one universally generalisable flashback, for the universe to collapse in a "big crunch?" These are the products of creation, of craft, they reflect nature but do not contain nature, contain but do not reflect. Like drawings of a Great Architect many are tossed aside.

So. Let us say we want "freedom!" What does this mean, and how can we go about getting it? It is not a property in itself, but more like a property of us ourselves. Therefore it is not rare. It is, like scarcity itself, always there in over abundance. What should we want "freedom" from first? Perhaps we should begin with property. Scarcity is a property. It is a property of "property" itself. "Property" is perpetually in scarcity. Then the opposite of this is power. Power is surplus energy, for example, the power of fear versus courage, or the power of pleasure versus pain, etc.

These too are all properties, and we tend to show our Power through physical, material "property."

Scarcity, "love," "hate," "gratitude," "shame," all these things are examples of property of "property." The opposite of the one Scarcity is the one Power while the opposite of the many "properties" is the one unifying property. These things are all a part of the dispensation of the moral and the ethical law. Only the one unifying property of "freedom" supercedes the ethical dispensation, but it comprises the key to the whole lock that is moral law.

Leave it to the "Rights" to conquer out all the lesser opposites, whose friction causes Power, while the charge for "freedom" can finally be sounded against God Almighty. "I have the right to free speech. I have the right to bear arms. I have the right to redress of grievances." Military recipe for a zombie killer. "I have the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Nowhere is this officially codified... fantasised, mysticised, but never realised. Instead the fear and hate are built in at the root. Universal Rights. Let "Rights" take care of the scarcity of Power. Then go for the knees.

So begin the quest. We only want the politic to be the opposite of the quest. They only want the father included. God the father. Go be God.

The crowd is behind me as I go into the desert. Before me the false oasis. It doesn't matter what it looks like. It is a circle in the sand. Become the burning bush.

As above, so below is all I remember. Cartesian politics. If you look up and see war, then when you look afar you will see war. But this is only Daath, and does not exist. Gnosis is not knowledge. Therefore it is not crucified, and therefore there is not Choronzon, because there is no abyss. The seventh and the eighth are no more different than the eighth and the ninth. There is no science because the apple never fell. The Princess has always been with her bridegroom all along. Kaballah, for example, is not a verb, any more so than politics is something you do. Archetypes zip through us. From one to another who I am switches, for my thoughts switch places with others.

I cannot even remember one step back. I have to get home fast. Now is when the sun's reflection finds me. It bids me not to write that. I have spots before my eyes. The reflecting lens is naught but manifestation. The sun reflected reminds me of the light overhead in my room above and behind me. Did the quest never begin? Have I yet never left my skin? All this while I've been away it's been the father repeating. Blasphemy to write that, people will see me. Sun's rays in that reflection have moved from my direction. Mine is a family of hethens. The people are reading.

So, begins a curse. Magic is doing. My thoughts, my ideas, are supposedly my own. Sometimes inverted, I hurt when I heard it. Soon, soon they will catch up with me, and it won't be the echoes I'll seem to be hearing. The numbers stations that repeat, their thinking I strain to hear through, in the wind behind my headphones. Alchemy.

Must be the top of the hour. I do not twitch in discouragement. A magical journal is all this is! I'd rather be smoking. Then I could meditate upon the Cartesian Currents! But no! I'm here with these thoughts!

What can be learned from one such as me? Am I living the life of Christ? These devices only replicate hallucinations from past lives, and those strangely. I am living the life of Quetzalcoatl, of Tezcatlipoca, I'm living the life of Pacal Votan. The Cartesian coordinate system transcends time, and therefore allows one to travel through and between different temporal coordinates. Was the last living body of God really so long ago that it cannot even be rightly remembered? The ridiculous contraptions of modernity replicating Atlantean concepts contemporary to the pre-calcification crystalline Stone-Henges. The internet? HA!

We hold these rights to be self-evident: The right to communicate. The right to choose to exist. The right to think what we like. The rights, in short, to Life, Love and Light. In specific:

The right to communicate however we choose. The right, also, to choose not to exist. The right to like what we choose to think; the right to think anything we want, and to not be made to be held responsible for what we want to think.

"The right to communicate however we choose": So, prayer, as always, is the opposite of extra-sensory communication. And there are many levels in between. It is alike as above, so below. Or rather, as above, so about, or around. For those with whom we would be communicating would be about, or around. The vertical above, and the horizontal below. So, we are between the above and the below. So we are between the vertical and the horizontal, or in the area about, or around one.

"The right to choose (not) to exist": The right to declare ourselves fiction. The right, that is, to define one's "self" as anything upon any level or degree of "existing," even the negative integers constituting "fiction." For example, remember that metaphor of the brazen apis? It was a fictional event, it never happened, and now you are remembering something that was never real, that never "existed," that was meant only as a "fiction." Do you understand now how it illustrates the "rights" being of the freed slaves to petition the Levite bourgeoisie for "property?" And how, from the mountain above them, Moses returned with the dispensation of moral law, yet this never happened, it was an oasis?

"The right to like what we choose to think": the right to enjoy ourselves, the right to enjoy being ourselves, with the right for self-definition as defined above. We enjoy these rights, in so far as we believe them to exist, though, in truth, they exist only so far as we believe in them. It is, again, a fiction, an oasis. Yet, we reserve the right to enjoy it, nonetheless. We thus may delude ourselves, that reality conforms to our will, as much or as little as we like.

"The right to think anything we want": Symbolic communication ("property") exists only as much as what we think we do not already know. When we accept that anything we do not now know, we may choose to come to know, and that, remembering this, we may also realise that that is why "property" is there, it exists as a ladder, to assist us in coming to know what we thought we did not know, and that, thus, this ladder was left there by someone who did know, and that, thus, everything has already been known, and that, therefore, all we are doing by scaling this ladder of symbols is reliving the discoveries made by others, rediscovering what they recovered from still others, long before us. "Property," is the process of this recovery.

We believe "property" is necessary to defend against the imposition over our "Rights" of the moral law, but in reality, "property" is the product of our own manifestations, the inversions along the way of our quest. It is the resistance to our forward motion along our destined vector that we define as "not ourselves," and "otherness," and it is this which we attempt to communicate, and more importantly, to bargain with, this Light, for less resistance. "Property" is not the only means of voices our pleas. "Property" is like a stick guiding the blind. "Property" does not, truly, impose our will against the reality of nature. It is an artificial aura, a temporary soul. But "property" is not the revelation itself. "Property" is the dispensation. "Property" is abuse.

Once we realise there is not anything that is unknown to us, that there is nothing that has not already been known, that can be known again to us, then we are "free." We are free from the imposition of the enforcement of "Rights." Because now we can see that there is nothing we have not already thought.

"The right to not be held responsible for what we think": Because everything has already been thought, as is proven by the fact that everything can be known (even including "fiction" or things that can be known but that are yet not real), then there can rightly be no negative consequences for anything that can be thought, because it has already been thought before, and yet we who continue afterwards to exist, can think of it now, for though the first thinkers may have passed away, we who can not only think of it again, but think of it again without any immediate consequences of doing so, yet continue to exist long afterwards the first thought. Thoughts, in themselves, are eternal within our continuum. They are broadcasts without transmitters, only our own minds as receivers. So, when we happen across a thought, or a thought passes us by, should we, even if fixated upon it for any period of time, be so held to identification with it, or it be so associated with some idea of negativity, that we should ever be punished for it, in it's stead? No.

"Rights" only exist as long as "property" exists. But there are greater things than either of these. Communication does not depend on technology, does not require for its representation "property." This is the root of civilisation, the tree without a trunk. The "representative" republic.

"Property" is not a "Right." It is the opposite of a right, eg a priveledge.

Modern leaders have become liars, since the seeking for more light has gone out of government itself, and turned itself upon how to make money. In short, it means that the pursuit of the next rung on our evolutionary ladder is not being sought after among, or being found anywhere near, our current highest government officials. The government, which has at all the responsibility to obey the people, is not what conspiracy theorists seem to think it is. It is not the head of the conspiracy. Global government, while a good idea, is not inherently evil because all the current examples of those championing this movement are. Globalism in general, and federalism in particular, are movements all too easily infiltrated and perverted by those whose interest is in gaining money, in "growth," and "progress," and who are more likely to see the government as an individual organismal entity. (Again, we see the truth of this in modern times, when the IMF and World Bank advocate "free-trade" as a means of economically unifying the disparate nations. The IMF is being mis-used on behalf of the government, and the World Bank is being outright forced into a competitive position relative to all existing forms of government. The coffers of the nations, who should be the biggest contributors to a savings bond for the future generations of their nations and of the world at large, are instead being drained by militarism and reproductive "nation-building.") By now, of course, we know that if you plant a seed one place in the world, that tree will not sprout up at some other spot far away. Federal governments are abused to reproduce themselves through military might, while, however, the underground movement for global government remains disinfected, and seeks to progenerate with the individual organismal shape of humanity itself into a new species of VR-AI based on modern telecommunications technology.

I know that there are two ways for manifestation to come into being: the law of irony, and the magick assertion of the will. What is this like? This is like the two ways to have a car crash: 1) on accident. 2) on purpose. This is what bringing life into being is like in many ways too. The perpetual car crash of the creative process.

Now, the law of irony, or simultaneity or coincidence, synchronicity, whatever one wants to call it, was speculated by Jung as working orthogonally to the regular forward-temporal movement of cause and effect. This means that it can appear over here, and then appear over there, at different points in time, and yet be connected between them in a "higher" dimension, if you will, as a Platonic solid or sphere passing through the relative M-brane flatland of 4-time. Of course this means the motion of such a Metaform hypershape would be more or less completely free from constraint to linear time as we tend to experience it. This is how we get "premonitions" of the future in our dreams sometimes, and also how information generally gets passed around and distributed throughout the universe.

Thus, the Law of Irony in itself does not cause the sensory erosion of disease, decrepitude and death. It is the friction of the Law of Irony moving independently against the temporal current (topological motion) of cause and effect that causes the sensory erosion of disease, decrepitude and death. If there were not one, there would not be the other.

All of this amounts to biological (genetic and chemical), environmental, and universal determinism. The belief in the mere idea that there is no innate human soul, simply because science has not yet accepted its findings of one as heat ripples in zero-point fumes, and the belief that there is no guiding force or principle to the universe, and that chaos reigns, are actually half right. However, there is simply a little more to our existence than relativity alone can account for.

Which is where Magick, or the act of bringing about change in one's environment in accordance with the wishes of one's will, comes in. Imagine the hierarchy of the physical "plane" or flatland-type compressed dimension in which we exist, with three right angles and motion over time. Now imagine the motion over time itself is simply the shadow of the over-arching metaformal geometric shapes passing through our physical dimension. The shapes themselves are still, but the motion of time causes change in our lesser three dimensions. Now imagine all of this as being nothing but merely a pre-existent condition, a kind of universal structure, a metaform permeating the flat-plane of our own world-line. And imagine yourself as like a point of variable size, moving about within and through, over, under, around, above it, seeing it from all possible ways at once.

As the self-definition moves upward or downward into a moreso or less steady state of energy vibration (material matter being the lowest and densest) it takes on the various structural forms of energy coagulation natural to existence within each plane. Many more of these vibrational harmonic resonant dimensional planes exist above the speed of light, and can be achieved through the use of high-spin orbitally-rearranged monoatomic elements.

All of these planes, the psychic, astral, etheral, etc. etc. etc. are all a pre-existent structure through which the definition of self, by changing forms between the mind, body, soul, spirit, etc. etc. etc., may freely travel through. These "levels" or "dimensions" comprise our universe... or rather, since we have passed the point of critical mass and begun bubbling off baby universes... our multiverse.

So, basically, the self, the fundamental point of reference, also sometimes called Hadit, is like a point within the all-encompassing, surrounding infinite expanse of vacuum, void, or nothingness, also sometimes called Nuit. These are the two fundamental key components of Magick: the self and otherness. When one draws inward the energy from otherness towards the self, it is called invocation. When one is drawing the energy upward through the self and projecting it outward it is called evocation. These are the two branches of Magick.

Now, the part of the self that is above, that is Arich Anpin or the macroposopus, is that part that is aware of otherness. It is the "crown" of Hadit invoking inwards from Nuit. The part of the self that is below, that is Zeir Anpin or the microposopus, is that interiorisation from which issues forth new energy and creates new ideas. It is the tesseract shadow of the "crown," the chakra energy engine of the tree of life trans-dimensional organism.

The manner in which the hyper-spatial, or the trans-dimensional, hyper-dimensional, etc. geometric patterns propagate themselves is through karma, or cause and effect over time. Karma manifests itself as coincidences, synchronicities, meaningful *deja vu*s, dreams and premonitions, etc. All of these effects are well known and usually categorised together, but then little more is said.

Cause and effect is simple enough to understand: choice A leads to choices C and D, choice B leads to E and F, etc. in the garden of forking paths model. These choices, opportunities, possibilities, etc. constantly surround us as karmic units, or quanta, in our aura, or probability well.

Over time, however, anomalies occur in this model such that it becomes increasingly clear that there are more omniscient sentient entities involved in the patterns of these anomalies over time.

The physical principle of karma is governed by the mathematical principle of irony. Irony is a universal joker, because it is always outsmarting even the most "genius" minds of mankind. It clearly trumps Einstein's understanding of the properties of light, leaving so-called "superluminal loopholes" such as the inverse square law and all that implies. The irony is that, no matter how triumphant a scientific breakthrough may seem, there will always be more important discoveries.

Called "magick," "free will," "fate," it is clear there is one force, and then opposite another force, whether called "irony," "determinism," "destiny." It seems obvious to me, although it seems to elude even the most advanced quantum physicists, that there would be "right-hand" and "left-hand" spinning photons relative to each other, and that this would account for the "uncertainty" and resultant apparent holography of the Double Slit Experiment.

This duality is obviously inherent to the lesser light of photons, but evidently absent from tachyons. Thus, understanding of the patterns of karma over time, the hyper-dimensional geometric metaforms, leads to knowledge of how to control them. This is, of course, the free fall of free will, to throw oneself off a precipice into the Abyss. In truth, when one knows the difference between action and inaction, then one will possess wisdom.

This means the study of otherwise seemingly random chance happenings, and the assignation of at first even arbitrary meanings to more and more occasional distractions. This can be either uninfluenced or experiential, the experimenter either involved in making changes through action or remaining a detached observer.

Either of these methods of research will lead to an immediate understanding that the interiorising principle and the exteriorising principle co-create reality. Reality is the cooperative project being maintained by both the mind and the machine, the brain and the body, and if it were not for the tensile friction of these dualities opposing, reality could be easily enough blinked out of existence.

On the Art of Magick

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/magick/DeeMonad.pdf]The Hieroglyphic Monad: John Dee[/url] (520 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/magick/Moses6.pdf]The 6th Book of Moses[/url] (244 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/magick/Moses7.pdf]The 7th Book of Moses[/url] (2.6 MB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/magick/Shemhamphorash.pdf]THE SHEMHAMPHORASH: R. Ambelain (from La Kabbale Pratique)[/url] (780 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/magick/Power.pdf]THE BOOK OF POWER: Originally Transcribed by Idres Shah[/url] (96 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/magick/DeeMonad.pdf]A TREATISE ON THE GREAT ART (A SYSTEM OF PHYSICS ACCORDING TO HERMETIC PHILOSOPHY AND THEORY AND PRACTICE OF THE MAGISTERIUM): Dom ANTOINE-JOSEPH PERNETY[/url] (1.9 MB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/magick/The_Philosophers_Stone.pdf]THE PHILOSOPHERS STONE By Israel Regardie[/url] (112 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/magick/The_Cloud_Upon_the_Sanctuary.pdf]The Cloud upon the Sanctuary: the COUNCILLOR D' ECKARTSHAUSEN[/url] (964 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/magick/WitchCult.pdf]The Witch Cult in Western Europe: Margaret Alice Murray[/url] (468 KB)

religious texts

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/religious/Bundahishn.pdf]The Bundahishn ("Creation"), or Knowledge from the Zand: Translated by E. W. West[/url] (112 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/religious/Dhammapada.pdf]The Dhammapada: Buddha[/url] (216 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/religious/Enoch.pdf]The Book of Enoch[/url] (188 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/religious/Quran.pdf]The QURAN: Muhhamed[/url] (2.4 MB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/religious/CorpusHermetica.pdf]The Corpus Hermetica: Attributed to Hermes Trismestigustus[/url] (124 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/religious/CorpusHermeticum.pdf]The Corpus Hermeticum: translated by G.R.S. Mead[/url] (100 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/religious/Rosicrucian.pdf]The Fama Fraternitatis and Confessio Fraternitatis[/url] (312 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/religious/ChymicalWedding.pdf]The Chymical

Wedding of Christian Rosencreutz[/url] (216 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/religious/Kybalion.pdf]THE KYBALION (A STUDY OF THE HERMETIC PHILOSOPHY OF ANCIENT EGYPT AND GREECE): THREE INITIATES[/url] (372 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/religious/lotj1.pdf]The Legends of the Jews (Volume I): Louis Ginzberg[/url] (508 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/religious/lotj2.pdf]The Legends of the Jews (Volume II): Louis Ginzberg[/url] (448 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/religious/lotj3.pdf]The Legends of the Jews (Volume III): Louis Ginzberg[/url] (568 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/religious/lotj4.pdf]The Legends of the Jews (Volume IV): Louis Ginzberg[/url] (520 KB)

MK and conspiracy files

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/MKcon/bloodlines.pdf]Bloodlines of Illuminati: Fritz Springmeier[/url] (912 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/MKcon/monarch.pdf]The Illuminati Formula Used to Create an Undetectable Total Mind Controlled Slave: Cisco Wheeler and Fritz Springmeier[/url] (1.9 MB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/MKcon/NestaWebsterSecretSocieties.pdf]Secret Societies: Nesta Webster[/url] (1.2 MB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/MKcon/THEOPENCONSPIRACY.pdf]the Open Conspiracy: George Orwell[/url] (352 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/MKcon/ProtocolsOfZion.pdf]THE PROTOCOLS OF THE LEARNED ELDERS OF ZION[/url] (216 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/MKcon/HofmannLSD.pdf]LSD - My Problem Child: Albert Hofmann[/url] (280 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/MKcon/LSDHandbook.pdf]HANDBOOK FOR THE THERAPEUTIC USE OF LYSERGIC ACID DIETHYLAMIDE-25 INDIVIDUAL AND GROUP PROCEDURES: D.B. BLEWETT, Ph.D. & N. CHWELOS, M.D.[/url] (360 KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/MKcon/theconetproject.pdf]The Conet Project (recordings of shortwave number stations)[/url] (120KB)

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/MKcon/Frequency.pdf]Brainwave Frequency Listing: Michael Triggs[/url] (728KB)

I've talked before about how the man-made background EMF radiation can be recieved through the current-charged human nervous system, and in particular by the receptive electrochemical dynamo of the brain. For a brief recap of some of the primary concerns to this effect, reference the ELF rays used by the HAARP antenna array and compare these with the cold-war era Soviet Woodpecker Signals, whose stated objective was to brainwash the citizens of the US. Here are a couple pages of minor interest on the subject of broadcasting such transmissions:

<http://www.harp.alaska.edu/harp/> is the modern HAARP homepage, and <http://www.vlf.it/> is a page detailing and cataloguing some of the ELF (sometimes called VLF) EMF rays just below the audible level of human ability to hear.

Here is a very brief sampling from www.wikipedia.org of some of the "landmarks" so to speak of the EMF radio spectrum...

[quote="wikipedia"]

10 Hz, cyclic rate of a typical automobile engine at idle (equivalent to 600 rpm)

* 50 Hz or 60 Hz (50 Hz for European AC, Tokyo AC or 60 Hz for American AC, Osaka AC), electromagnetic — standard AC mains power

* 20 Hz to ~16 kHz, acoustic — normal range of adult human hearing (most children and some animals perceive sounds outside this range)

* 100 Hz, cyclic rate of a typical automobile engine at redline (equivalent to 6000 rpm)

* 261.626 Hz, acoustic — the musical note middle C

* 440 Hz, acoustic — concert pitch (A above middle C), used for tuning musical instruments

* 530 kHz to 1.710 MHz, electromagnetic — AM radio broadcasts

* 740 kHz, transitions — the clock speed of the world's first commercial microprocessor, the Intel 4004 (1971)

* 1 MHz to 8 MHz, transitions — clock speeds of early home/personal computers (mid-1970s to mid-1980s)

* 42 MHz to 260 MHz, electromagnetic — VHF terrestrial TV broadcast channels

* 88 MHz to 108 MHz, electromagnetic — FM radio broadcasts

* 1420 MHz, the frequency of the hyperfine transition of hydrogen, the most common element in the universe.

* 3.73 GHz, transitions — clock speed of the Pentium 4 "Prescott" microprocessor (2005)

* 428 THz to 750 THz, electromagnetic — visible light, from red to violet

* 30 PHz, electromagnetic — x-rays

Once per minute (one rpm): about 16.667 mHz

Hourly: about 277.8 μ Hz

Daily: about 11.57 μ Hz

Weekly: about 1.653 μ Hz

Monthly (on average): about 380.5 nHz

Yearly: about 31.71 nHz

Once per decade: about 3.171 nHz

Once per generation: about 1 nHz

Once per century: about 317.1 pHz

Once per millennium: about 31.71 pHz

[/quote]

-source: <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/KHz> however, an even more detailed list can be Dled in .pdf form here:

[url=<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/elib/MKcon/Frequency.pdf>]Brainwave Frequency Listing: Michael Triggs[/url] (728KB).

The concern of many researchers into the subject of microwave and ELF is that these inaudible, though obviously not undetectable, frequencies can be used for the purpose of mind control, however, all sources of authority on this issue maintain claims that the use of these frequencies by state agencies and commercial industries is entirely benign and harmless.

[quote="wikipedia"]For most of the 20th century, the radio frequency 500 kHz was reserved world wide as the Morse code international calling and distress frequency for ships on the high seas. The frequency 2182 kHz is still used for this purpose, but employing voice transmission.[/quote]

-source: <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mediumwave>

Obviously, www.wikipedia.org is dutifully reporting that, although originally designed for use in transmitting sensitive data through coded channels during wartime, the ELF frequency stations are currently being employed for the more modern method of "voice transmission."

[quote="the BBC"]The B.B.C. has always denied any involvement and in the book you will read of a denial of the use of the frequency 6840 kHz "We have not used it for many years". However, later on came the following reply from B.F.B.S. "Thank you for your letter enquiring about our 6840 kHz frequency and any associated interference. You may, or may not, know that this frequency was "lent" to us in order that British Forces serving in the Gulf area could keep in touch with not only the British news but also Service news via BFBS.[/quote]

-source: <http://www.simonmason.karoo.net/page30.html>

If the ELF stations were being used solely for British and Service news broadcasts to troops far abroad, then why would it be necessary to deny it's being used at all? Is it possible that these otherwise innocuous channels of communication are continuing to be used for "clandestine" or even "espionage" purposes? It would certainly seem they are serving some sort of sinister ends, as they are present not only in Great Britain, but also in the US, Russia, even in China!

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/MKcon/SECRET_SIGNALS.pdf]Secret Signals: Simon Mason[url] (128 KB)

But WHAT exactly are the "voice transmissions" on these contraband channels saying that raises such alarm and concern among their citizen watchdog, ham-radio operating listeners? These so-called "shortwave numbers stations" are transmitting... well... NUMBERS.

[quote="Simon Mason"]At five minutes past the hour there was a pause and the woman said "achtung" and then the first heading was sent again but this time the "05,, was replaced by the number of five figure groups in the message. For example, 34324/22 meant that 22 five figure groups were in message 34324. Example: "Achtung34324/22. Achtung34324/22 11223 24566 55454 46578 25555 33367 57567 45585 34665 66477 58577 54888 01123 63645 58999 10122 46547 09991."[/quote]

So now we can draw an allusion towards a real, palpable conclusion regarding this enigma of sub-radio broadcasting, and see also the implications of its use on the minds, even the very brains themselves, of the unwitting and uninformed people exposed every hour, on the hour, to these "voice transmissions" from "numbers stations."

[url=<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/MKcon/monarch.pdf>]The Illuminati Formula Used to Create an Undetectable Total Mind Controlled Slave: Cisco Wheeler and Fritz Springmeier[url] (1.9 MB)

From pp. 529-530 of the above linked .pdf comes this table of contents for only some of the monarch MK code types recovered from depth hypnosis.

[quote="Fritz Springmeier"]Monarch Mind Control Codes:

A. Alpha (Basic) B. Beta (Sexual) C. Chi (Return to Cult) D. Delta (Assassination) E. Epsilon (Animal Alters) F. Omega (Internal Computers) G. Gamma (Demonology) H. Hypnotic Inductions I. Janus-Alex Call Backs (End-times) J. Theta (Psychic Warfare) K. Tinkerbelle (Never grow up/Alien) L. Twinning (Teams) M. Solemetric Military N. Songs (Reminders) O. Zeta (Snuff Films) P. Sample alter system codes Q. Catholic Programming R. Mensa Programming S. Hand Signals T. Programming Site Codes (Used for Slave Model Codes, etc.)[/quote]

So, for example, under Omega coding we find the following listing of trigger codes:

[quote="Fritz Springmeier"]A clone program creates clones of an alter (also called lollipop or lobster program) imagery is that sesame seeds fall off of a hamburger bun and becomes another hamburger. Codes to all the various basic systems: Carousel 532342223 Castle System 221435321 Communication 311146623 Double Helix 432443321 Level 211343231 Mensa System 323542321 Pentagonagram 421136113 Pool of Death 231134421 Puppet 341124321 Sole metric 665421134 Spider Web 321654321 Stairwell 432111132 Quabala 423454334 Tornado 332146444 Umbrella System 314321014[/quote]

I chose these coding systems because they are exclusively numeric (cf. pp. 533), while most of the other codes listed in Springmeier (529-) are either verbal or a combination of words and numbers.

The CONET Project is a cd of "numbers stations" recorded in the early nineties and released in 96. With 200 tracks total, this four cd collection records all kinds of Numbers Stations from the :30 to the 6:00 varieties. I would highly encourage you to investigate listening to some of these tracks on your own.

[quote="CompassRose"]November 12, 2004

Reviewer: CompassRose

Subject: Conet Project

A fascinating tour de force of the aural equivalent of crop circles. Akin Fernandez has managed to turn a personal collection obsession into an international phenomenon, and now has thousands of people asking -like him- "What are these stations doing?"[/quote]

-source: [url=<http://www.archive.org/audio/audio-details-db.php?collection=irdial&collectionid=ird059>]Details for The Conet Project[/url]

you can [url=http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/tg/detail/-/B0002JELQS/qid=1127839813/sr=2-1/ref=pd_bbs_b_2_1/104-0711826-3816757?v=glance&s=music]BUY[/url] the conet project at amazon.com to the tune of $70 US, although I would encourage you to DL the entire six+ hour collection available on the internet here: <http://www.dxzone.com/cgi-bin/dir/jump2.cgi?ID=10480> and the .pdf version of the accompanying booklet here: <http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/elib/MKcon/theconetproject.pdf>

and if you still doubt all of this, check out the radio frequency sounds of meteor showers recorded by NASA, or the disruption to FM radiowaves by sunspots...

<http://www.spaceweather.com/glossary/nasameteorradar.html>

<http://www.astrosurf.org/lombry/audiofiles.htm>

[quote="Salamo"]the One who has done all for love.[/quote] the ones we love shape us, mold us into who we are like clay.

I won't give up on the one I love like She gave up on me.

And if that means being this repugnant mess in which she has left my soul forever and ever and ever, amen, then so mote it be.

Let No One Love Me.

For there is only the pain and the suffering of my longing for redemption that I have to offer all those who would approach me now. This is all I have for the lovers of love now: my bitter wrath, screaming jealousy, horrible, terrifying loneliness. The clinging of the assassinated Buddha.

Now, you go and you hang That on your fucking Cross, and you go tell it on Jesus that I am waiting for him, and that my hand is a clenched fist. And that, if he comes near me with his Love, I will show him the Real Love, the Love that is True, that exceeds the entirety of the dominion beneath his auspices. And then I will crumple up that dream above His head, tear it to pieces, and burn its remains, that it should be forgotten to him for all of His lesser eternity. That freedom he could have had, let Him mourn that, and not me. Let His Pity and His Mercy touch and avail me naught. I reject Him for the Devil. He is the child conceived without the love of parents. He knows NOTHING OF LOVE. He is a hypocrite, and I curse him for a blasphemous.

FWIW, even Mohammed accepted the prophecies of Jesus.

However, I do not. The death of your Christ child does NOT redeem the sins committed by your Old Testament God. His sacrifice meant nothing and he died on the cross, in horrific pain, and if he had even one cell left in his mortal mind inside that pathetically ignorant human brain of his, he knew that he had failed to save you personally, and then he fucking died. So Grow Up. There Is NO Santa Claus. You are NOT a peasant serving a loving and beneficent monarch. You must free YOURSELF from these hopeful delusions of salvation, redemption and your self-righteous crusade of romanticised spiritual chivalry. You are not a serf and you are not His Messenger. You are "just another guy," and you're going to die, just like Jesus did, only you won't have the honor of having even led a worthy life, or having been a truly loving, moral person.

Your God Is Lies.

Now, you go cry to Jesus Christ, and tell him how naughty I am, and then pray for my soul. My Soul Is MINE. And so is my heart.

And I give it freely to HER.

so go fuck Jesus Christ.

-ben

1. What is the definition of a "right"?

A right is an invented property delimiting natural freedom of communication.

2. What is the source of rights?

if nature is entropy (past, present future), and rights oppose nature, then rights are opposite entropy (thus future, present, past).

3) give three examples of rights.

Light, Love and Life.

Jon Gee
2005

[quote="Horus"]1) He doesn't support you back.[/quote]

American politics is not like some yuppie executive socialisation training at a weekend retreat. There is no "team" in "I."

Not that I am saying the neo-con party agenda is "every man for himself." NOR am I saying the opposite of this, that they believe "an eye for an eye leaves the whole world blind."

But there is rampant croneyism and this is attributable to old debts owed by Papa Bush, H.W., ole George the First. Remember, Bush had been head of the CIA during the peak years of panAmerican drug-smuggling, Vice-President of the US during the Oliver North trial over Iran-Contra, and President of the United States when the Berlin Wall fell. Think about this illustrious career, and think about all the cronies he met and promised to bring along along the way. Now think about his idiot cracker son.

If you examine the expressed politics of HW, argueably sitting at the head of the neocon round table, you will hear him talk about the Code of the Central Intelligence Agency. This is a code that even a soldier, like Oliver North, knew. That is, you do not rat, essentially. Now, does this seem like the policy that has guided the CIA since 9-11? If anything, the creation of the Dept. of Homeland Security has created greater inter-office competitiveness and weakened the intelligence community's solidarity as a whole. Since then the CIA has gone through two or three new head directors, and seen the scandal of the "outing" of a CIA spy in the field! You see, when one group needs to employ secrecy, it defies the other similar groups to do so as well. The neo-cons act like the mob. They employ precise Italian army symmetries in their strategies. In fact, the Senators may even elect to kill W. if they have that much romance in them. But their secrets are so dirty, not even the modern CIA wants to keep them for the neo-cons. Nor can they fully rely on the upright morale of the army to know this ancient code of arms. Compare Oliver North to the "thumbs up" POW torture pin-up cadet.

Again, what we are seeing is that, when HW quits a position he takes with him something of its former glory, if you will. His truly was, "the greatest generation," for example. Their legacy is remembered as uniquely exceptional, though by doing so we are not meeting the standard they have set. In fact, the consumerist hippies are not only the children of that generation, but usually the products of drugs shipped into the country under HW. When he himself was pitted against Oliver North during Iran-Contra, it essentially broke the bond established during the Cold War between the troops of the standing army and the intelligence gathering spy agencies. Ollie protected Bush, but, as was said, Bush "didn't support him back." Perhaps protecting the House of Saud during the first Gulf War was Bush's way of paying back the Arabs for their role not only in the successful gas-price hike related to the hostage crisis when HW was in the CIA, but also in, via Afghanistan, their role in breaking the power of the Soviet Union.

It's not really W himself who is bungling the rebuilding campaign in Afghanistan, where the Mujahadeen had been promised while HW was the Vice President, that once the Soviet Union was pushed out, their country would be gauranteed peace and protection by the US government. W, I believe, is honestly TRYING to repay ALL of his father's debts...

Of course, HW himself owed a big debt to Reagan, and obviously this Hollywood actor and GE spokesman obviously had HIS big debts to pay off too. In fact, politics is nothing more than a debt system. I certainly can't think of a bigger bunch of debtors than US politicians!

[quote="Horus"]2) He is not a christian.[/quote]

Nor is he a Mason, and being a Bonesman does not automatically qualify you for special dispensation.

Not that these are the only two western religions, however! For example, the Shriners, an old-boys club outgrowth of the Scottish Rite in some areas of the United States, follow a costumery of Arabic dress. Is it not entirely possible that HW promised the House of Saud that his own son would be raised Mohammedan?

It would certainly be to jump the gun to have nominated a Hindoo candidate, let alone to have elected a Jew. And it would be no less presumptuous to declare Masonry and its monuments lunar or celestial than you can Christianity and its monuments purely solar or even usually idealistic. So we cannot say outright that the president (W) IS Muslim. It is fair enough, however, to question his professed religion, since a seated president is not supposed to be seen as a religious leader, according to the separation of church and state.

So, if W. were a Christian, what kind of Christian do you think he would be? He is CLEARLY millenarian. He sees politics as a necessary evil, meant to be infiltrated and destroyed from within. He has a cowboy sense of chivalry. IF W. WERE a Christian, we could say these things were probably true for him. We could say he feels Quixotic. But we cannot say for sure he is asking himself, "What would Jesus do?" every morning and answering, "bomb Iraq."

Now, let's go even farther than that, and say that W. IS, IN FACT, Christian. Let's go even further into this fantastical fiction and let us come to believe that he does not owe debts to anyone for his policies, and that his religion alone expressly guided his decisions in foreign policy. Let's come to the same conclusion that, let's say, for the sake of hopefully future indebted politicians to them, the Babel-Belt "Religious Right" Conservative TV Evangelists, ergo Falwell, for example, have... that W is a Christian Crusader out to bring Tim Lahaye's books to life by stamping out the Islamofascist threat in the Holy Land. Would even this be any of our business? It is impolite to discuss one's religion, afterall! Why should we find interest in what the president's religion is anymore than what shoe-company some celebrity athlete endorses? It simply isn't our business.

Who are WE to pass judgments? Is Jehovah to be found amongst the mob? Doesn't Science teach us that mob mentality is eradic and chaotic? Haven't we learned that, even a peaceable assembly without a permit, OUGHT to be broken up by crowd-control forces equipt with riot gear and fire hoses?

Just think of all the different ENEMIES that Christianity has made in the past, how many ISSUES it continues to raise to hold over the head of the progress of its bastard child Science. It may be necessary for a "Christian" Empire to be destroyed by the hands of the remnants of the Ottoman Empire for them to forgive the Crusades. The Pope's official apology alone may not be enough, and perhaps W is to campaign for such a loss to finally occur. It would also pay back those Godless Hethens "behind the red curtain" for having their modern empire come crashing down around their ears over having ever fiddled with the Fertile Crescent territories. But GOD-FORBID the Hapsburg remnant nations of the HRE actually be made to suffer for the crimes that they, themselves, instigated, such as the Spanish inquisition being repeated ALL around Spain during WWII. I mean, just think about how "Holy" Afghanistan is compared to Miss Sarejevo.

So, perhaps W. "is" a Christian, though only after a fashion, and not a very good one. He may think he is doing the best, or even believe he is "on a mission from God." But we can see he is a little late! The first World War settled ALL the debts of the Old World, and the Second World War settled all the debts of the "new world." The world of Christopher Columbus and of Marco Polo... at least, as far as the Europeans were concerned... but then... then there was Mabus. And everybody thought Mabus was Saddam Hussein. A turk with a blue turban... afterall, Nostradamus had predicted Napoleon and Hitler to a tee. But is Mabus NOT W. Bush? A "Christian" Anti-Christ he is.

But he is only his father's child, and we can freely say now, as the Rosicrucians said of their contemporary Pope, that HW Bush is surely Satan. That is to say that, by the grace of God we have free speech. And so we can freely say anything we want, even if we're just kidding.

[quote="Horus"]3)He feigns stupidity.[/quote]

Or is he feigning to feign? One thing we can rightly agree on though is that W. IS a liar. He says one thing and does another. Does it not say, "by a man's actions you shall know him"? So why does the Christian-right continue to back him, since his actions take their sons away into the military and get them killed in a faraway foreign land? For the same reason Dark Age era friars encouraged the peasants to obey the king... to protect their property. The religious right says "down with abortion!" So abortion legislation is pushed back. The religious right says, "down with euthenasia," so it follows. "UP with Patriotism!" the religious cries, and so civil-liberties fall. "Up with Christ! Down with Mohammed!" they shriek and wail in their sheer power to control the presidency. The ultimate puppet dictator then starts their Crusade.

But these debts have already been paid. They are only the debts of his daddy, the debts of the indebted that he is repaying. All previous debts were cancelled by WWI&II. Now it is only the debt to the "greatest generation" that is being paid. The fall of Soviet Communism brought the fall of "All" Empire. The beatniks' dreams were crushed. Now, let us turn upon the "Hippies" as well. So a religious war breaks out. Those idiots and all their prayers for "peace." It only foments fear of war, and war feeds on fear. "Up with War! Down with Terrorism! Support the troops."

W. owes no debts to Christianity. Christianity was broken over the knee of Aleister Crowley. The only forms of Christianity left are the outlying denominations. It has fled from the Strict Observance, and reapproaches it only mystically, with Mary Magdelene ever nearby. Even the Baptists are only one good yoga move away from starting a UFO cult.

W. owes all his debts to his daddy, who put away that nasty dustbin of history from before the eyes of the Last "Great Dictator." And if Daddy likes him more when he looks dumb, then "Dumya" is his name. He has no shame. Why should he? He's daddy's golden goose. A retirement present for the last of the "greatest generation" allowed to hold the office of President. The last straw: the Presidency itself becomes ancestrally inerted, an office not so uniquely distinct from Pharaoh. And here we see the devil in his true face: all the freedoms gained since the Dark Ages of the Church being rapidly repealed by the political figure-head finger-puppet of the Christian religious right. Satan as the world's New Dad. Hence the devil's dispensation, the past merely hundred years, since Crowley went to Egypt, is complete, and the New Law that follows from this is declared. Now all we must do is pay the devil his due.

Of course, all of this is merely feigned, dreamt up in the feverish imaginations of the popular masses. So, I would ask of you, on W's behalf: "What IS Truth?"

-ben

A 2-dimensional projection of the 7-dim 56-vertex configuration, by Peter McMullen, has 54 vertices in 3 concentric 18-gons with 1 pair of opposite vertices coinciding in the center. It can also be represented as 56 vertices in 4 concentric 14-gons, related to its 56 vertices being the compound of 7 3-dim cubes, for $7 \times 8 = 56$ vertices.

E_8 has Weyl group of order $128 \times 27 \times 5 \times 8! = 696,729,600$ With respect to the of the , 248-dimensional E_8 has the 28-dimensional structure of $= \text{Spin}(0,8)$ plus $U(1)$ and 8-complex dimensional plus $U(1)$ and 16-complex dimensional plus $U(1)$ and -complex dimensional plus $SU(2)$ and -quaternion dimensional A-D-E chain D4-D5-E6-E7-E8 VoDou Physics model D4 $\text{Spin}(0,10) / (\text{Spin}(0,8) \times U(1))$ $E_6 / (\text{Spin}(0,10) \times U(1))$ 27 $E_7 / (E_6 \times U(1))$ 28 $E_8 / (E_7 \times SU(2))$

Geometrically, is the $248-133-3 = 112$ -real-dimensional set of quaternionified Octonion projective planes $(QxO)P_2$ that are in $.E_8 / (E_7 \times SU(2))$ the octonionified Octonion projective plane $(OxO)P_2$, which is the $248-120 = 128$ -real dimensional space $E_8 / \text{Spin}(0,16)$ (In OxO , x denotes tensor product. For details of the geometry of $(OxO)P_2$, see Einstein Manifolds, by Arthur L. Besse(SpringerVerlag 1987) and Geometry of Lie Groups, by Boris Rosenfeld(Kluwer 1997).)

The polytope corresponding to the E_8 Lie algebra by is the 12-vertex icosahedron, each vertex of which is at a of an edge of the E_7 McKay Polytope, the 12-edge octahedron TheMcKayCorrespondence Golden Ratio point The 12-vertex octahedron is 3-dimensional, but its 12 vertices in 3 dimensions do not form a Lie algebra Root Vector Diagram, but corresponds to the order 120 Binary Icosahedral group $\{5,3,2\}$, which is the group of quaternions that are the 120 vertices of a , which can be formed by 24 vertices of a 24-cell600-cell.

E8 has $N = 240$ root vectors, so its Coxeter number H is $H = N / n = 240 / 8 = 30$.

[quote="Carbon"]Way over my head I'm afraid Ben.[/quote]

[quote="Carbon"]Way over my head I'm afraid Ben.[/quote]

Naw, man. Look, it's simple.

[quote="Tony Smith"]

A 2-dimensional projection of the 7-dim 56-vertex configuration, by Peter McMullen, has 54 vertices in 3 concentric 18-gons with 1 pair of opposite vertices coinciding in the center. It can also be represented as 56 vertices in 4 concentric 14-gons, related to its 56 vertices being the compound of 7 3-dim cubes, for $7 \times 8 = 56$ vertices.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/shadow.jpg>[/img]

E8 has Weyl group of order $128 \times 27 \times 5 \times 8! = 696,729,600$ With respect to the A-D-E chain of the D4-D5-E6-E7-E8 VoDou Physics model, 248-dimensional E8 has the 28-dimensional structure of $D4 = \text{Spin}(0,8)$ plus $U(1)$ and 8-complex dimensional $\text{Spin}(0,10) / (\text{Spin}(0,8) \times U(1))$ plus $U(1)$ and 16-complex dimensional $E6 / (\text{Spin}(0,10) \times U(1))$ plus $U(1)$ and 27-complex dimensional $E7 / (E6 \times U(1))$ plus $SU(2)$ and 28-quaternion dimensional $E8 / (E7 \times SU(2))$

Geometrically, $E8 / (E7 \times SU(2))$ is the $248 - 133 - 3 = 112$ -real-dimensional set of quaternionified Octonion projective planes(QxO) P^2

that are in the octonionified Octonion projective plane $(\text{OxO})P_2$, which is the $248-120 = 128$ -real dimensional space $E_8 / \text{Spin}(0,16)$.

(In OxO , $\times$ denotes tensor product. For details of the geometry of $(\text{OxO})P_2$, see Einstein Manifolds, by Arthur L. Besse (Springer-Verlag 1987) and Geometry of Lie Groups, by Boris Rosenfeld (Kluwer 1997).)

E_8 is closely related to the Clifford Algebra $\text{Cl}(8)$.

24 vertices of a 24-cell:

E_8 has $N = 240$ root vectors, so its Coxeter number H is $H = N / n = 240 / 8 = 30$.

[/quote]

-source: <http://www.valdostamuseum.org/hamsmith/Weyl.html#E8cartan>

So, an $E(8) \times E(8)$ dimensional model would have all the same characteristics, only double. It's essentially the same thing as saying $E(8)^2$, which is only saying to go through the above and square every number.

-ben

[quote="Carbon"]Just out of interest, what is behind the 'red and black' ???[/quote]

PS. what "red and black" stuff?

[quote="Galt"]What are chakras, dionysus?[/quote] plexi and gangliae.

[quote="Galt"]What objective evidence points to their existence?[/quote]

The fact that the spinal plexi and gangliae exist.

[quote="Galt"]And why, if chakras ARE f'real, has modern medicine not rushed to it?[/quote] Strawman.

[quote="Galt"] True scientific study has shown no paranormal phenomena associated with the pyramids. At all. Zero. Zilch. Nada. Nihil.[/quote]

Kirlian photo of "egg-carton" arrangement projecting "pyramid energy."

Kirlian photo of combination of "pyramid power" and Tesla ZPE.

Kirlian photograph of a stone from the Khufu pyramid at Giza.

Here is an excellent page on this subject as it relates to monoatomic gold:

<http://www.subtleenergies.com/ormus/tw/pyramids.htm>

BTW, it took me all of ten seconds to find this information. Your assertions are, AS USUAL, Galt... BASELESS. You depend on no one being there to point this out to you. Tough luck.

[quote="Galt"]Taylor (who originally postulated that there was meanings in the dimensions) was an anti-metric zealot who was going about trying to prove that the cubit was, indeed, a divine unit of measurement.[/quote]

Here is where YOU make the assertion D93 is talking about Taylor, obviously someone YOU have some familiarity with, in order to turn this topic into something which you can then deride with false-pretense.

[quote="Galt"]Please tell me when you say "Platonic", you're not reverting to Platonic idealism.[/quote]

I would guess he means the Platonic Solids.....? Do you know about them?

[quote="Galt"]"Torsionic solution ([i]sic[/i])"? Perhaps you mean torsionic [i]soliton[/i]? Look, Dionysus, a soliton is a single, solitary, nonlinear wave. Nothing more. It is a physical phenomenon. Looked in Lexis-Nexus, and found nothing about a "torsionic soliton." Of course, when I did a google search, I found it mixed in with a bunch of astral projection newage (rhymes with "sewage") crap. Until you can show me a peer-reviewed journal article that discusses bions and solitons and convincingly [i]demonstrates[/i] their existence, then it will remain so.[/quote]

And here is where you really started to piss me off. You intentionally misinterpret his point in order to go off on a personal-vendetta rant. Face it, Galt. You don't know what "torsionic solution" is, so you assumed D93 meant something else entirely, all for you to rant. Pathetic. To the nth.

[quote="Galt"]You speak constantly of illumination and enlightenment. Since when are these independent of objectivity? Your reasoning and theses fail in the realm of basic logic, to say nothing of their tenuous relationship with science.[/quote]

Have you got ANY idea what the word "gnosis" means? Why not look it up?

-ben

[quote="Galt"]strawman stuff[/quote]

Let's agree to either drop this line of conversation or else start a new thread for it. Personally, for me logic is about as meaningful as lancing at windmills. It works well when it comes to convincing large groups of people to believe one thing instead of any other alternative, but then, so does lying. I would hate to see logic completely replace the God-concept, for example, on the grounds that it is merely the lesser of two evils. Logic is a MEANS and NOT an END. That puts a head on it for me.

[quote="Galt"]the Egyptians may very well have had mystical motivations with regard to the dimensions of the pyramids. That's fine. But does that translate into any [i]actual[/i] paranormal observations? I think no. You think yes. [/quote]

Perhaps it depends on what you mean by paranormal?

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/orion_pyr_small.jpg[/img] the layout of the three Giza pyramids relative the "belt" stars of the Orion constellation.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/pyramid.gif>[/img] the alignment of the airshafts of the "Great" pyramid of Giza with the constellation of Orion in ~ 2600BCE.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/sphinxstars4.gif>[/img]

the alignment of the sphynx with the constellation Leo in the same timeframe.

Surely as someone who appreciates good architecture, you cannot pass such obvious and intentional correspondences, which communicate across the millennia, as these off as anything less than ACTUAL PARANORMAL PHENOMENON? Perhaps then, you would care to explain how ten tonne blocks were placed together such that there is less than a micron of space between them...?

[quote="Galt"]I've told Ben before that I don't agree with him on multiple counts, but if you follow the link to his web page, you certainly cannot accuse him of not thinking his hypotheses through [i]incredibly[/i] thoroughly.[/quote]

Thank you JG. Thank you very much. That means a great deal to me.

[quote="Galt"]To which magnetic grids would you be referring to? I want to think you're referring to Martian crustal magnetization, where there are localized regions of Mars that radiate a magnetic field. Evidence of anything? Yes. That Mars once had a global magnetic field resulting from a liquid metal core.[/quote]

!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!! I DID NOT KNOW THAT!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Mein Gott when did this happen!? Why wasn't I told about this sooner?? LMAO! Actually, that is really important. I'm glad to have been informed of it!

-ben

[quote="dionysus93"] If you look at blood crystals under an electron microscope, you can find the shape of the pyramidal field in the crystal forms of blood. [/quote] hey D93!

I wasn't able to find any pics on the net of pyramidal blood crystals, so I regret that I cannot offer any confirmative evidence on this subject.

[quote="webster's-online"]BLOOD CRYSTAL

1. (Physiol.), one of the crystals formed by the separation in a crystalline form of the h[ae]moglobin of the red blood corpuscles; h[ae]matocrystallin. All blood does not yield blood crystals.[/quote]

-[url=<http://www.websters-online-dictionary.org/definition/english/BI/Blood+crystal.html>]source[/url]

I suspect, however, that if you continue down that line of research you will find that the "blood crystals" thus formed will be more likely to occur in Rh- (as opposed to Rh+) bloodtypes. The reasoning for this, among other things, is that the Rh- bloodtype lacks leukocytes in its plasma (hence why young Alexsander Romanov was aenoeimic), and hence there are fewer surplus platelets in the hemoglobin to break down.

[quote="dionysus93"]If you look at platinum crystal under a field ion microscope, you see bubble formations which form pyramid shapes of Light going from every stage of geometry all the way through the immediate field of the crystal. [/quote]

Here, on the other hand, is something I can intelligently comment upon. Gold, for example, is of the platinum group of metals, and when superheated (prolonged exposure to sun-surface temperatures) breaks down into a regular "monoatomic" crystalline "powder." This has been demonstrated to be true of all the platinum group metals, and there is alot of information floating around on the net about this (google ORMUS or ORME, for orbitally-rearraneged mono-atomic elements). Basically what happens is that the covalent-bonds of the metallic molecules become warped and the atomic orbits of the electron shells are distorted. (Sorry, I can't really explain in detail the manner in which these "warps" and "distortions" occur.)

Anywho, since all molecular bonding patterns fall into lattice and symmetry patterns, they are all determined by the same geometric propagation patterns as crystals, and these, in turn, are based on... you guessed it... the Platonic solids, the only regularly polyhedral rhomboids possible in three dimensions.

[quote="Donald E. Sands"] A group whose elements include both tje point symmetry elements and the translations of a crystal is called a "space group."[/quote]

There are 230 such space groups currently identified, and they fall into groups (tirclinic, monoclinic, orthorhombic, tetragonal, trigonal, hexagonal and cubic) that are based, like crystals and molecules, on the basic polygons and the regular rhomboids they form.

That's about all the info I could scrounge up on these topics at a moments notice, at least without treading into Drunvalo Melchizedick territory. There are some areas too new-age even for ME! LMAO!

I will leave you, for now, with this lovely electron microscope enlargement of a dyed diamond cell, the birthstone for Aries. It is from a lovely gallery collection of similar electron-microscopic photographs from my very onw hometown university, FSU. (Link follows picture) I highly recommend the "brain cells" and the neurotransmitter sections, personally, but soap-bubbles are also fun!

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/diamond.jpg>[/img]

<http://micro.magnet.fsu.edu/micro/gallery.html>

-ben

<http://johntitor.com/>

I would be interested to hear everyone's thoughts on this material.

I'll be happy to enter into a discussion about any of the topics Titor brings up from my own viewpoints and theories, but first I have to go eat birthday stew with my mom.

-ben

Just found this: <http://www.valdostamuseum.org/hamsmith/TShome.html>

Appears to be a nearly 100% complete recreation of Tony Smith's original site (including his e-book .pdf BANNED BY CORNEL)!

If anyone who knows anything about Clifford Algebra happens to blow through and sees this, here's a link to Tony's own D4-D5-E6-E7-E8 physics model. I'll post more on this after I've studied it more, but I believe this to be the origin for John Titor's offhanded remark from which this thread derives its title.

<http://www.valdostamuseum.org/hamsmith/1TSphysics.html>

Also, I'm now hosting a .pdf e-book I found on an online free library that mentions "Z-transforms" on page 6. Check it out, this part, at least, looks (perhaps deceptively?) simple.

http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/elib/Fourier_Transforms_and_Waves.pdf

Enjoy!

-ben

[quote="Carbon"]Way over my head I'm afraid Ben.[/quote]

Naw, man. Look, it's simple.

[quote="Tony Smith"]

A 2-dimensional projection of the 7-dim 56-vertex configuration, by Peter McMullen, has 54 vertices in 3 concentric 18-gons with 1 pair of opposite vertices coinciding in the center. It can also be represented as 56 vertices in 4 concentric 14-gons, related to its 56 vertices being the compound of 7 3-dim cubes, for $7 \times 8 = 56$ vertices.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/shadow.jpg>[/img]

E8 has Weyl group of order $128 \times 27 \times 5 \times 8! = 696,729,600$ With respect to the A-D-E chain of the D4-D5-E6-E7-E8 VoDou Physics model, 248-dimensional E8 has the 28-dimensional structure of $D4 = \text{Spin}(0,8)$ plus $U(1)$ and 8-complex dimensional $\text{Spin}(0,10) / (\text{Spin}(0,8) \times U(1))$ plus $U(1)$ and 16-complex dimensional $E6 / (\text{Spin}(0,10) \times U(1))$ plus $U(1)$ and 27-complex dimensional $E7 / (E6 \times U(1))$ plus $SU(2)$ and 28-quaternion dimensional $E8 / (E7 \times SU(2))$

Geometrically, $E8 / (E7 \times SU(2))$ is the $248-133-3 = 112$ -real-dimensional set of quaternionified Octonion projective planes $(Q \times O)P^2$ that are in the octonionified Octonion projective plane $(O \times O)P^2$, which is the $248-120 = 128$ -real dimensional space $E8 / \text{Spin}(0,16)$.

(In $O \times O$, $\times$ denotes tensor product. For details of the geometry of $(O \times O)P^2$, see Einstein Manifolds, by Arthur L. Besse (Springer-Verlag 1987) and Geometry of Lie Groups, by Boris Rosenfeld (Kluwer 1997).)

E8 is closely related to the Clifford Algebra $Cl(8)$.

24 vertices of a 24-cell:

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/24cell.gif>[/img]

E8 has $N = 240$ root vectors, so its Coxeter number H is $H = N / n = 240 / 8 = 30$.

[/quote]

-source: <http://www.valdostamuseum.org/hamsmith/Weyl.html#E8cartan>

So, an $E(8) \times E(8)$ dimensional model would have all the same characteristics, only double. It's essentially the same thing as saying $E(8)^2$, which is only saying to go through the above and square every number.

-ben

[quote="Carbon"]Just out of interest, what is behind the 'red and black' ???[/quote]

PS. what "red and black" stuff?

The two diagrams above represent in the first case:

the two dimensional shadow of a 56 vertex lattice, and, in the second case,

a computer generated three dimensional wireframe model of a 24-cell or vertex lattice.

I felt I should point out that neither of these accurately depicts the true dimensions of the hypothetical $E(8)$ lattice.

Tony Smith tends deftly to avoid doing this, except on the cover of his ebook, "banned from Cornell" which picture is worthless.

However, the dimensions thereof are best described,

[quote="Tony Smith"]

In the D4-D5-E6-E7-E8 VoDou Physics model, an 8-dimensional spacetime has the structure of an E_8 lattice with Planck length lattice spacing.

If octonionic coordinate are chosen so that a given minimal vector in E_8 is $+1$, the vectors in E_8 that are perpendicular to $+1$ make up a spacelike E_7 lattice.

The E_8 8-dim spacetime lattice is made up of two D_8 lattices.

(E_8 is the D_8+ lattice, sort of like the D_3+ diamond non-lattice structure that is two D_3 face-centered cubic lattices.)

The 8-dimensional E_8 lattice has octonionic structure, but no nearest neighbor light-cone links.

To build the E_8 Lattice: Begin with an 8-dimensional spacetime $R_8 = O$, where a basis for O is $\{1, i, j, k, e, ie, je, ke\}$. The vertices of the E_8 lattice are of the form where the a_i may be either all even integers, all odd integers, or four of each (even and odd), with residues mod 2 in the four-integer cases being (1;0,0,0,1,1,0,1) or (0;1,1,1,0,0,1,0) or the same with the last seven cyclically permuted.

$$(a_0 + a_1e + a_2i + a_3j + a_4ie + a_5ke + a_6k + a_7je)/2,$$

E8 forms an integral domain of integral octonions.

The E8 lattice integral domain has 240 units:

$\pm 1, \pm i, \pm j, \pm k, \pm e, \pm ie, \pm je, \pm ke, (\pm 1 \pm ie \pm je \pm ke)/2, (\pm e \pm i \pm j \pm k)/2$, and the last two with cyclical permutations of {i,j,k,e,ie,je,ke} in the order (e, i, j, ie, ke, k, je).

The real 4₂₁ Witting polytope of the E8 lattice in R8 has 240 vertices;

6,720 edges;

60,480 triangular faces;

241,920 tetrahedra;

483,840 4-simplexes;

483,840 5-simplexes 4₀₀;

138,240 + 69,120 6-simplexes 4₁₀ and 4₀₁; and 17,280 7-simplexes 4₂₀ and 2,160 7-cross-polytopes 4₁₁.

[/quote]

All this compared to the simple description of the 24-cell (or second lattice in the previous post),

[quote="Tony Smith"]

The 24-cell $3\{4\}3$ in R4 has 24 vertices,

96 edges,

96 faces, and 24 cells.

[/quote]

Sorry, just felt obligated to clarify.

-ben

[quote author=benpadiah board=general thread=1066716656 post=1067440725][b]the MAYAN CALENDAR[/b]

The Mayan calendar is probably the most advanced calendar created on earth since the beginning of recorded history.

I won't bother to explain it in detail, but it is based on very exact astronomical observations we are only just now beginning to understand, and measures much greater amounts of time than the people who used it were actually around for.

The end of one great cycle (in 2012) has now been found to correspond with the end of a sunspot cycle (of eleven years, and possibly one of 1000 years). This has fed much eschatology, but it need not necessarily herald the end of the material world so much as a spiritual rebirth into a new age, or zodiacal aeon.

The primary work on this has been done by Maurice Cotterell, and I will provide a link:

[url]<http://www.levity.com/eschaton/Why2012.html>[/url]

[b]IN CONCLUSION[/b]

The reason I find space weather so fascinating is because of how it is interconnected to the weather of our cloudy little green and blue jewel, third stone from the sun.

I hope I have been able to convey a couple of the essential reasons for my enthusiasm on this subject with the preceding information.

Please feel free to research any of these topics that interest you. I am available for questions also.[/quote]

[quote="benpadiah on blairwitch.net"]As I promised in a prior post I will now draw some allusions between the ice ages, sunspots and the Mayan calendar. A lot of this information is complex, but it all fascinates me. If you are interested in any of this please be patient as I try to explain it all simply. Otherwise, pardon my dust.

[b]ICE AGES[/b]

- Precession

As we are all taught in school, the polar axis of earth's rotation isn't perfectly square to its orbital path around the sun.

The axis of rotation is inclined 23.5 degrees.

Also, the earth's orbit isn't perfectly circular. It is more ovoid - elliptical. The sun is not at the dead center of the earth's orbit either. It is closer to the base of the egg shaped ellipse rather than the tip.

Now we all know it is these two factors that combine to cause earth's seasons. When the northern hemisphere faces the sun it is summer. When the northern hemisphere faces away from the sun it is winter. This is true even if, as is currently the case, the northern hemisphere faces the sun when the earth is further away from the sun in its elliptical orbit (closer to the "tip" of the "egg".)

What we are not taught in school is the precession of the pole. As the earth rotates around the 23.5 degree angle inclined polar axis, so too does this polar axis rotate. It rotates, or precesses, so slowly, though, that it takes about 24,000 years to come full circle.

- Calendars

Just as we measure the seasons of the year by the months of the calendar, so also can we measure the seasons of the aeons by the millennia.

While months derive from the phases of the moon (of which there are 13 every 384 days), the standard julian-gregorian calendar derives from the moon's position relative to the twelve signs of the zodiac. This yields 365 days, more proximal to an actual orbit of earth around the sun, and one month per sign.

So, to measure precession, we can also use the zodiac, but instead of the moon we use the sun. Just as the moon orbits one way through the zodiac, the sun moves the opposite way - not from day to day (both rise in the east and set in the west due to earth's daily rotation), but over the millennia, the sun will rise in earlier and earlier constellations on the same day of the year.

Thus, the spring equinox occurred in Aries a little more than 2000 years ago. Today it occurs on the cusp of Pisces and Aquarius. Hence, we are entering the "age of Aquarius" due to how we measure precession.

- Ice Ages

Just as yearly seasons depend on both the earth's tilted angle of rotation and elliptical orbit, so too do the ice ages, or precessional seasons.

When the northern hemisphere faces the sun and earth is close to the sun (the opposite of now) it is millennial summer in the north, and winter (or an ice age) in the south. During the last time this happened, the glaciers that had covered North America and Europe melted, covering the Beringian land bridge between Asia and Alaska. Most of this extra water froze in the southern hemisphere.

Now, the northern hemisphere faces the sun when earth is further away from the sun. We are in approximately northern hemisphere autumn. Siberia has become frozen and inhospitable. The southern hemisphere, however, is in the equivalent of millennial spring, with huge ice chunks the size of Rhode Island breaking off the Antarctic ice shelf. As Antarctica is thawing, Siberia is freezing. We are entering a north hemisphere ice age.

But not to worry. This part of the cycle has only been going on for 4,000 to 10,000 years, and the ice age cycle lasts, per hemisphere, about 48,000 years.

[/quote]

Honourable Master cingle963.

As I consider all of this as an aside beside the as-of-yet unanswered proposal to Master Didymus...

Why is the focus of this level on "rights?" Shouldn't it be on "liberty?" As in "liberty, fraternity, equality?"

Liberty surpasses and is superior to the "rights" ordained by authorities and upheld by their slaves. Perhaps it would be too simple though, you can't list FREEDOMS as oft as RIGHTS.

Have you considered that the cornerstone of the American nation IS the "concept" of rights? It may not be the stone itself, but surely it is written on the parchment enclosed within and beneath. When Rand discusses "rights" she is following in the naturalist category of the humanist debate between Thomas Hobbes and John Locke. Of course, the same philosophies go back at least to the time of the ancient Greeks, when epicurianism and stoicism were all the philosophical rage. All along this "current" through history there have been two sides to the issue.

Rand's side lines up with Hobbes, and thus she aligns herself with capitalism, that modern hedonism. Like Hobbes, Rand argues that institutional civilisation is the lesser of two evils, and that life without society is inconsiderable, however she advocates free market economics as a means of changing the political Leviathan from the inside out, through sheer force of buying-power. From Hobbes school of thought was born Keynesian economics like Aphrodite from the head of Zeus; and when in doubt, just turn it upside and milk it for its supply-side.

Are we still groveling around in the darkness of the cave? This same type of chasing around and pinning down for ourselves a collection of arbitrarily upheld rights, is this not just like the very strategem used by those hold-overs from Rand's era, the traditional "conservatives"? To use religion to thwart science, to always keep us guessing about which issue will occupy the precious time of the politicians at the pope's behest. Which arbitrarily adjudicated right will be threatened next is a gambit to keep us from thinking about how to improve and expand upon our current rights. If we do not enjoy liberty, and if we take it for granted, then it must surely wane and wither and die.

And, in keeping that this is all only an aside, shouldn't I also point out that this process under discussion is known among the magicians as "misdirection," whereby the "conservatives" damn by feign praise, dispensing "rights" to busily occupy our Freedom. And isn't Rand guilty of the same crime herself in allowing her own "objectivism" to become so slanted against the Soviet propaganda of her motherland that she would embrace with romantic idealism the opposing economic ideology?

Why is a movement for increasing liberties sheltering itself behind it's nouveau-riche ability to sail the seas of high finance? And why is THIS movement couching its innate objectives in such hushed political debate and in these terms??

This is no coven of Assassins. No more than Ayn Rand just wanted to be the antithesis of Karl Marx. A symbol on the opposite side; Marxist communism and "Rand" brand Capitalism. What's the point in chasing these tales that only lead us around in a circle and never allow us to look up or about. You think Frank Lloyd Wright was the Great Architect? This is not the design of Max Cohen. No, nor Tyler Durden either, for I know what you were going to say.

Don't you know what you embrace? Yea, verily, better than me, methinks.

Perhaps Master Didymus will pass by this way soon?

-ben

Appendix 1:

Adam Kadmon and the kabbalistic worlds:

ayin: "no thing;" the God Time; ylem; Chikhai Bardo; beyond the one singularity

ayin soph: "without end;" the multiverse of singularities

ayin soph aur: "limitless light;" tachyonic projection; illumination; a singularity

zimzum: "contraction;" the abyss between the ideal supernal and the subtle aethyreal

(AK) Jechidah: the true will; the magic theatre of the superego

1) atziluth: pure will; radiant aspects; conception; divine calling

- (AK) chiah: self-preservation; the will to power; the audience of the id
 2) beriah: intellect; gaseous aspects; manifestation; divine creation
 (AK) nefesh (akh): the spirit; associated with immortality; the ego characters
 3) yetzirah: emotion; liquid aspects; formation
 (AK) ruach (ba): the soul; seven channels (baw); the mediated forms
 4) assiah: action; solidity; divine making
 (AK) neschamah (ka): the double; potential energy, fourteen channels (kaw) qliphoth (kha): quantum information vortices

Appendix 2:

the THIRTY AYRES: each 91 Parts of the Earth Imposed by God has its (ANGELIC KING)

- 1 LIL: Occodon (ZARZILG), Pascomb (ZINGGEN), Valgars (ALPUDUS)
- 2 ARN: Doagnis (ZARNAAH), Pacasna (ZIRACAH), Dialioai (ZIRACAH)
- 3 ZOM: Samapha (ZARZILG), Virooli (ALPUDUS), Andispi (LAVAVOTH)
- 4 PAZ: Thotanp (LAVAVOTH), Axziarg (LAVAVOTH), Pothnir (ARFAOLG)
- 5 LIT: Lazdixi (OLPAGED), Nocamal (ALPUDUS), Tiarpax (ZINGGEN)
- 6 MAZ: Saxtomp (GEBABAL), Vavaamp (ARFAOLG), Zirzird (GEBABAL)
- 7 DEO: Opmacas (ZARNAAH), Genadol (HONONOL), Aspiaon (ZINGGEN)
- 8 ZID: Zamfres (GEBABAL), Todnaon (OLPAGED), Pristac (ZARZILG)
- 9 ZIP: Oddiorg (HONONOL), Cralpir (LAVAVOTH), Doanzin (ZARZILG)
- 10 ZAX: Lexarph (ZINGGEN), Comanan (ALPUDUS), Tabitom (ZARZILG)
- 11 ICH: Molpand (LAVAVOTH), Usnarda (ZURCHOL), Ponodol (HONONOL)
- 12 LOE: Tapamal (ZURCHOL), Gedoons (CADAAMP), Ambriol (ZIRACAH)
- 13 ZIM: Gecaond (LAVAVOTH), Laparin (OLPAGED), Docepax (ALPUDUS)
- 14 UTA: Tedoond (GEBABAL), Vivipos (ALPUDUS), Ooanamb (ARFAOLG)
- 15 OXO: Tahamdo (ZARZILG), Nociabi (LAVAVOTH), Tastoxo (ARFAOLG)
- 16 LEA: Cucarpt (ZIRACAH), Lauacon (HONONOL), Sochial (ARFAOLG)
- 17 TAN: Sigmorf (ZIRACAH), Avdropt (OLPAGED), Tocarzi (ZARZILG)
- 18 ZEN: Nabaomi (GEBABAL), Zafasai (ALPUDUS), Yalpamb (ARFAOLG)
- 19 POP: Torzoxi (ARFAOLG), Abriond (CADAAMP), Omagrap (ZINGGEN)
- 20 CHR: Zildron (GEBABAL), Parziba (HONONOL), Totocan (ALPUDUS)
- 21 ASP: Cirzpa (ARFAOLG), Toantom (CADAAMP), Vixpalg (ZURCHOL)
- 22 LIN: Ozidaia (ARFAOLG), Paraoan (OLPAGED), Calzorg (ARFAOLG)
- 23 TOR: Ronoomb (ZARNAAH), Onizimp (LAVAVOTH), Zaxanin (ZINGGEN)
- 24 NIA: Orcanir (ZARNAAH), Chialps (LAVAVOTH), Soageel (ZINGGEN)
- 25 UTI: Mirzind (ZARNAAH), Obvaors (ZIRACAH), Ranglam (ARFAOLG)
- 26 DES: Pophand (ARFAOLG), Nigrana (CADAAMP), Bazchim (ARFAOLG)
- 27 ZAA: Saziarni (ZIRACAH), Mathula (ZARNAAH), Orpanib (GEBABAL)
- 28 BAG: Labnixp (LAVAVOTH), Pocisni (ZARZILG), Oxlopar (ZURCHOL)
- 29 RII: Vastrim (HONONOL), Odraxti (ZARNAAH), Gomziam (ARFAOLG)
- 30 TEX: Taoagla (ARFAOLG), Gemnimb (ZARNAAH), Advorpt (HONONOL), Doxinal (ZURCHOL)

LAVAVOTH (10), ARFAOLG (15), ZARNAAH (8), ALPUDUS (8), HONONOL (7), ZARZILG (8), GEBABAL (7), OLPAGED (5), CADAAMP (4), ZINGGEN (7), ZIRACAH (7), ZURCHOL (5)

Element:	Great Secret	Great Kings	Six Seniors
	Holy Names of God
Water:	MPH ARSL GAIOL	RAAGIDEL	LSRAHPM/SAINOU/LAUAXRP SLGAIOL/SONAZNT/LIGDISA
Air:	ORO IBAH AOZPI	BATAIVAH	HABIORO/AAOXAI/HTMORDA AHAOZPI/AVTOTAR/HIPOTGA
Fire:	OIP TEAA PDOCE	EDLPRNAA	AAETPIO/ADREOET/ALNCVOD

Appendix III. diagrams

5a) this figure shows a further simplification of figure 5b, however with the orbit of manifestation unfolded from its depiction as a figure 8. Here we can see the simplest version of all the preceding figures. Pure Dimension (tachyons) orbits in an ellipse (manifests) around a small orbit which comprises the space-time-space continuum. In plain language: the alternation between space-like and time-like characteristics of dimensionality is known as, and depends on degree of, manifestation.

5b) this figure shows the same simplification as figure 5c, however without the central dimension depicted. Here we can see that there really does not need to be a dimension occupying this central position for the rest of the model to work. Also, we see that, since time is interior to the orbital plane around this central position, then spacetime can occupy a position on one side of it, while timespace occupies a position opposite.

5c) this figure shows a further simplified version of the cross section. Here we can see that spacetime (3-space/4th-time) is only comprised of the dimension (depicted as position 3 in figure 6) which is in the center position. We also see that space and time form an orbit around this centre dimension, in the same way the histories of the wormholes formed one around the outer two positions of dimension. The interior of this orbit is Time, while the exterior is space.

5d) this figure shows shows the horizontal cross section of the same shape of which figure 5e shows the vertical cross section. Here we see that, while dimension's orbit is manifestation, the polar precession of dimension is the same as the orbit of manifestation, only oriented perpendicularly to it. The difference here is that the lightcones histories of the wormholes (the circles around the dimensional positions) and the toroidal orbit of the tachyonic multiverse they comprise are not depicted.

5e) this figure shows the cross section (at antipode or at 45 degrees) of figure 6.

the abbreviated labels represent as follows:

D = dimension (the tachyons which are being recycled through the blackholes)

M = the orbit of manifestation (the precession of that dimension)

S = space, the 3-spatial component of spacetime

T = time, the 4th dimensional component of spacetime

P = precession

This figure shows an enlargement of the small left green circle inside the blue/red torus from the tau sub tau diagram.

It is clearly marked.

position 1 shows a toroidal manifold representing the sum over history of a black hole. It has a past (upper) and future (lower) light cone representing its history, which is comprised of wormholes (also represented by the light cones).

position 2 shows this same toroidal manifold blackhole sum and lightcone wormhole history after a certain degree of fixed rotation.

Therefore there are two type of rotation of a black hole: A) that which is internal to the event horizon (the light cone wormhole histories) and B) that of the gravitational singularity itself. The rotation of the wormholes manifests itself as the rotation of the black hole around its gas jets. The rotation of the gravitational singularity manifests itself as the gradual precession of the axis of these gas jets. This is how they appear interior to our 3-spatial/4th-temporal dimension inside the spacetime continuum. Outside of the boundary of this continuum, determined by the speed of light squared (c^2), in 4-spatial/5th-temporal timespace, the same rotation of the event horizon and precession of the gas jets appears (as in figure 6) as a toroidal manifold (the precession of the grav. sing.) and the lightcone histories (rot. of ev. horiz.).

Position 3 of the same shows another placement in the toroidal orbit of the toroidal manifold (the sum over histories). In this position, we can see how tachyons from the tachyonic multiverse feed in, through the past history lightcone wormhole, through the toroidal blackhole, and thus from hyperspace (labeled as hyperdimension in figure 6) into the subspace of the local universe. We see this from within 3-space/4th-time (or simply spacetime) as the gas jets of blackholes.

This entire toroidal orbit of the toroidal blackhole sum (the precession of the gas jets due to the rotation of the gravitational singularity) is labeled manifestation. This is because the matter/energy that leaves spacetime subspace through the wormhole event horizon surface of blackholes, flows out into the tachyonic multiverse, into the past history light cone. It then proceeds through the toroidal manifold sum of the blackhole's precession. It is then forced out through the future lightcone history wormhole to be blasted from the event horizon surface of the blackhole into subspacetime as the gas jets of the black hole.

This seems like a complicated process. However it will become easier to visualise (though perhaps more difficult to explain) with the next figure. For now all we need to know is that the precession of manifestation (the process of tachyon recycling) is = to the orbit of dimension (the tachyonic multiverse comprised of all toroidal sum/histories of black holes) and that the precession of dimension (the toroidal manifold sum over histories of the entire multiverse itself) is also = to the orbit of manifestation (the combined rotations of any given black hole). In plain english, what we see as a singular process OUTSIDE in timespace (the multiverse) is also seen as multiple physical events INSIDE in spacetime (the universe). And, in the simplest terms possible, the inside of the universe is also equal to the outside of the universe.

Glossary:

active consciousness:

that part of consciousness which is aware of itself as internal; as opposed to passive consciousness, that is that part of consciousness which is aware of the external realm of others and the environment.

antipode:

diametrically opposed; antithesis of conjoined or nested archetypes:

higher dimensional anthropomorphifications

(see also: metaforms) astral travel:

the releasing of the light body, or atman, in the aethyreal realm

Atlantis:

the western hemisphere mythical Lost Continent; in recent times archaeology has increasingly come to accept that large amounts of known land masses were uncovered by water or ice during the last ice age, and that it is possible more land was known to ancient peoples of that era than has previously been thought atman (or light body):

the internal electrochemical functioning of the body aura:

the unique electromagnetic field surrounding an individual body jumping:

sensing through somebody else's body, or gross vessel body surfing:

moving the sense perception through a series of gross vessel hosts

Cabala:

the maintenance of tradition, often through secrecy, in sects and denominations (see also: alternate spellings)

closed set:

a geometrically or algebraically finite continuum; the antithesis of open set coincidence:

an unexpected similarity between two or more probabilistic events (see also: synchronicity)

dimensionality:

traditionally the measure of quantifiable qualities of mass, such as length, breadth, depth; under the relativity of duration and distance expanded to include the measure of time as a fourth dimension, perpendicular to all of the preceeding other three; in its fourth form it has spatial as well as temporal; theoretically expandable under such modern theories of physics as superstring and M-brane theory to include an infinite number of dimensions, though it is usually thought that factors would act to conserve the number of dimensions present to the minimum possible number.
(see also: nth dimensionality) event:

herein quantified geometrically as a cube, such as the mome of chemistry, the basic unit of time; measured as anything from the instantaneous temporal singularity to a duration of any given span; pertinent to all scales of physical size.

fields of potential:

a generally idealized concept describing such configurations of potential (as opposed to kinetic) energy as the electron cloud (as opposed to the electron singularity).

formal system of metaphysics:

a hexagon surrounded by the six fundamental questions of reasoning in the order, clockwise from top: How, When, Where, What, Who, Why.

fractal:

self-embedding, self-replicating pattern (see also: gnomon)

galactic filaments, walls and voids:

due to the conservation of dimensionality, according to superstring theory and M-brane theory, the additional, "extra" dimensions more than the minimum needed to sustain the universalized laws of physics are coiled up very tightly into gravitational strings, which I also identify with the microwavelength sum over histories of tachyons, and these pull all the stellar matter in the universe together towards them, thus creating filaments, or strands, clusters, or walls, of galaxies, and voids, or empty spaces, in between them.

gnomon:

a self-repeating pattern, such as the part of a parallelogram remaining after a similar, smaller parallelogram has been taken from one of its corners gravitational singularity:

a singularity with a strong gravitational pull, such as those in the center of black holes

Gondwanaland:

One of the two major precambrian land masses, which would later break apart to become North and South America, Europe and greater Asia.

holognomon:

a hologram of a gnomon; a hologram is a three dimensional holograph, or single image taken stereoscopically (with multiple lenses from multiple angles); a gnomon is a self-repeating pattern, such as the part of a parallelogram remaining after a similar, smaller parallelogram has been taken from one of its corners hologram:

a three dimensional (or higher) holograph; unlike a holograph, however, a hologram possesses the capacity to act gnomonically, that is, to be represented in its entirety if subdivided; it acts essentially the same as a series of different two dimensional pictures superimposed, such that, from different angles, the different recorded images will be revealed stereoscopically as the photons which are reaching the eye are reflected from its surface at different angles equivalent to those of the differing lenses used to create it; a hologram is the only method of conveying the optically illusory aspect of certain fourth spatial dimensional, or higher, metaforms holograph:

a single image taken stereoscopically, that is, with multiple lenses from multiple angles; unlike a hologram, a holograph cannot act gnomonically, that is, depict the entirety of its representation if subdivided; it acts essentially the same as a two dimensional picture; the popular "magic eye" pictures are examples of holographs, as they are two dimensional fields of apparent pixelated static which, when viewed stereoscopically, that is, through the sight of the two naked eyes, and at a certain distance therefrom, yield the optical illusion of a three dimensional image hypercross:

a fifth dimensional extrapolation of the hypercube, cube, hexagon, point fractal propagation in which six cubes surround all sides of a central seventh hypercube:

A fourth spatial dimensional shape; in its "nested" form it is a cube within the center of a cube; it should be noted that due to the relativity of size in three dimensions of fourth dimensional shapes, the "interior" and "exterior" cube have the same volume and area; from other angles it appears variously (see also: tesseract)

hypercubic hypercross:

a hypercross, or cross of six cubes surrounding a central seventh, whose several cubes, themselves, contain a cube "nested" within each of their centers hypercubic hypercross of hypercubic hypercrosses:

a hypercross of six cubes surrounding a central seventh, each of whose cubes is a nested hypercube, that is, a cube with another cube "nested" in its center, inside of which each interior cube is the central cube of another hypercube of six cubes surrounding a central seventh, each of whose cubes is a “nested” hypercubic cube within a cube hyperdimension:

refers to multiple dimensionality greater than the minimized or conserved amount but less than infinite hypereality:

reality which is all inclusive of the nth dimensional tachyonic multiverse on the other side of timespace and the hyperdimensional metaforms which reside there hypersphere:

a fourth dimensional shape, “nested,” a sphere within the center of a sphere (see also: torus)

impossible feedback loops:

self-referential systems that are self-embedded (see also: closed sets) instantaneous manifestation:

immediate thought and reality correspondence irrational numbers:

numbers that cannot fully be calculated inversion:

the opposite of any given thing immediately juxtaposed to it

Kabbalah:

the body of God
(see also: alternate spellings)

Laurasia:

the precambrian supercontinent that would break apart due to plate tectonics to become Africa, India, Australia and eastern Asia

Lemuria (or Mu):

the eastern hemisphere mythical Lost Continent; counterpart to Atlantis; in recent times Lemuria has come to be associated with the ice age land bridge that joined much of modern day Oceania, Australia and New Zealand to southeast Asia magick:

the science and art of causing change to occur in conformity with will manifestation:

the causing of a symbolic synchronicity or direct formal apparition by projection memory castle:

a theoretical construct using creative visualization often used by professors to help them remember the curricula of their lectures mental projective space:

the conceptual realm inside which exists the sense perceptual realm metaform:

fourth spatial dimensional (or higher) geometrical shapes, in particular the fractal and gnomonic series of the Platonic regular solids and Archimedian semi-regular solids metaphysics:

metaphysics is like looking into a fish pond and seeing the fish that live there, the algae on the water's surface, and the reflection of the sky all at the same time microwave:

a wavelength so small that it cannot be measured using modern apparatus nodes:

herein referring to the points at the corners of the formal system of metaphysics where the six fundamental questions of reasoning are positioned as upon a lattice nth dimensionality:

a term applied in physics to denote dimensionality that is greater than infinite open set:

any geometrically or arithmetically non-finite set; the antithesis of a closed set phi/pi:

a transcendental, transfinite ratio whose components may be found relative to one another ubiquitously throughout nature on all dimensional levels possibilities:

less specific than probabilities; generally idealized form of the fact that, within a closed system such as the known laws of physics, certain events are preconceived as being more likely, while others are thought of as altogether impossible potential:

usually applied to potential energy (as opposed to kinetic energy), herein used as a generally idealized description of virtual, force carrying waves, in aggregate, fields, and their characteristic ambiguity as defined by the quantum uncertainty principle

precession:

the movement of the earth's pole around its own orbital path, determined by the earth's 23.5 degree angle of inclination from perfect perpendicularity to the gravitational plane of the sun; the cause of the cycling seasons of the Great Ages, such as ice ages alternating with global warming, as well as the apparent movement of the signs of the zodiac over the millennia opposite their apparent movement throughout the year prediction:

calculation of hypothetical future events using a rigorous system primary clear light:

seen at the moment of Ego Loss — he who “has the power to die consciously,” who can immediately grasp the concept of the empty mind and, at the supreme moment of quitting the ego, can recognize and become one with the consequential ecstasy, “is awakened into reality.” Should the participant be experienced he will reach Chikhai Bardo quickly and seek to maintain or prolong it.

probabilities:

a term most commonly applied in quantum mechanics to refer to the pure chance, given the conditions, of an event occurring; herein applied specifically to the square or bell shaped “wells,” which occur in an otherwise inert field of potential energy, associated with the calculated probable presence of bosons, or real particles of subatomic matter with mass projection:

the forcing of thought from inside the brain outside into mental conceptual space prophecy:

calculation of hypothetical future events using abstraction psychic driving:

the repetition of a subliminal message

psylodon:

a reptile mammal hybrid species who had legs that grew from the sides of its body and a tail that grew straight out from its hips; the ancestor of all mammals

Qabala:

the numerological and grammatical aspects of Jewish esoterica (see also: alternate spellings)

QBLH:

the mathematical and geometrical aspects of Jewish esoterica (see also: alternate spellings)

quantum foam:

the sub-atomic continuum populated exclusively by particles and waves which obey the calculations for the uncertainty principle quantum tunneling:

the apparently anomolous movement of a quantum from one side of a solid barrier, such as a square well, to the other, seemingly uninterrupted quantum uncertainty:

the formula, calculated by Erwin Schrodinger, stating that it is impossible to measure with conventional instruments the velocity and spin of a quantum particle at the same time; according to the calculations this is because it would require interrupting either one or the other with a photon, at which point it would then be possible to measure whichever was not effected; one interesting side effect of this theory has appeared to be quantum tunneling such as occurs for photons in the double slit experiment, where a single photon acts holographically, splitting to go through both of two, one micron wide, slits simultaneously remote viewing:

distance projection either through a gross vessel or astrally self-embedded:

such as a fractal or a gnomon, something that is comprised of a hologram of its whole self-propagating:

something that is self-replicating, such as a fractal or a gnomon self-referential:

referring back to its own contents, as in the auto-correlation of folding origami simulacrum and simulacra:

simulation and simulations singularity: the smallest possible point in physics; herein I have differentiated between gravitational singularities (with infinite density and zero volume), and temporal singularities (with infinite dimension and, asymptotically, zero mass) sleepers agents:

brain washed assassins whose memories of training are unconscious

Socratic method:
in short, the method of rhetoric that proposes only answering an interlocuter's questions with questions until the solution is discovered soul:

the spark of life inherent to all living things; the archetypal aura spacetime:

the side of the fabric of the continuum on which gravitational distortions occur sphere of the mind:

the mental projection, or creative visualization, of the mental projective space itself spirit:

the ϕ/π pattern of the torus shaped aura; the archetypal soul subspace:

the regular concept of space as according to dimensional conservation (see also: dimensionality) synchronicity:

a meaningful coincidence implying a meaningful cross-connection (see also: coincidence)

telechanneling:
the use of artificial technology to effect the psyche, inducing a slight altered state telesurfing:

the use of artificial technology to channel messages from a series of multiple source temporal singularity:

a singularity of time, such as a wormhole connecting two distant points in spacetime such that information can flow between them simultaneously tesseract:

a fourth dimensional hypercube at antipode viewed at a forty five degree angle from above one of its edges

Thoth (or Tehuti):
the ancient Egyptian god of Time; also called Hermes by the Greeks timespace:

the side of the fabric of the continuum on which dimensional distortions occur torus:

a fourth dimensional nested hypersphere viewed at antipode transcendental numbers:

numbers whose decimal place numbers continue on infinitely the ureaus (or ajna):

the third eye, associated with the pineal gland and the thalami wave of potential:

herein used as a generally idealized description of the wave nature of potential energy wells of probability:

herein used as a generally idealized description of the relative predictability of real particles (see antithesis: fields of potential) ylem:

the mixture of primordial matter prior to the big bang

Table of Contents:

The Revised Formal System of Metaphysics

I. Metaphysics: A brief introduction to Metaphysics as the quest for meaning.

A. Metaphysics as Law: This begins a compressed history of practical metaphysics as the legislation of three fields: the physical, ethical and spiritual. Also introduces us to the child's riddle: "Can God create a stone too heavy for Him to lift?"

1. The Spoken Tradition: describes early tribal life.
2. Early Writings: describes the birth of writing.
3. Later Writings: describes the scribe class's role in legislation.
4. Wars: on information transferal through war.
5. Modern Philosophies: on the Existential crisis.
6. Technologies: on the roles of manifestations.

B. the Formal System: An introduction to the concept of formalized metaphysics.

1. Memory Castles: A mystical technique of thought storage.
2. The Changing Mind: The memory castle in higher dimensions.
3. Parts: A description of the formal system's nodes.
4. Relationships: A description of their interactions.
5. Questions and Answers: The Socratic Method and the Formal System.

II. Parts and Relationships: A description of the forthcoming structures and relationships, and a reintroduction to the child's riddle as example question.

A. Shorts: The hexagonal pattern.

1. How -> When: duration and function of event.
2. When -> Where: time/space; the physical branch.
3. Where -> What: being vs. doing; quantity.
4. What -> Who: essence vs. expression; quality.
5. Who -> Why: mind/meaning; the spiritual branch.
6. Why -> How: general vs. specific; causation.
7. Clockwise and Counterclockwise: the derivation of these directions in the context of formal reasoning
8. Paradox of the Diaganols: one plus one = two in two dimensions = one plus the square root of two in height and length of three dimensions = the square root of three in depth of three dimensions.

B. Middles: The pattern of the hexagram.

1. How -> Where: practical, upward.
 2. Where -> Who: ethical, upward.
 3. Who -> How: philosophical, upward.
 4. What -> When: influx, downward.
 5. When -> Why: perserverence, downward.
 6. Why -> What: sums, downward.
 7. Male and Female: Clarification amidst distinctions; twelve triangles to a cube.
 8. The Prescence of Irrationals: The square root of two and phi.
- C. Longs: The intersection of the three opposites.
1. How <-> What: symbol vs. image.
 2. When <-> Who: symbol into image.
 3. Where <-> Why: symbol out of image.
 4. Attractive Poles: The relationship between opposite nodes and the expansion of the first dimension.
- D. Not: The necessity of negation. The riddle's solution is realized.
1. The Woods: Applying Not to fundamental reasoning.
 2. The Way: Applying Not to Not.
- E. Had: The necessity of necessity. The riddle's solution is deepened.
1. The Law of Man: On mitigating circumstances, negativism and the economy.
 2. The Law of God: "Do What Thou Wilt Shall Be The Whole Of The Law" of the Divine.
- F. Fact and Fiction: The necessity of determining reality from illusory depth.
1. The Fluctuating Field — Introduction: Fact and Fiction's motivation of the sphere of the mind.
 2. The Fluctuating Field — Application: A look into each of the parts per dimension at the maximum extension of the formal system's functioning.
 3. The Fluctuating Field — Conclusion: Manifestation's legislative impact and some frequently assumed consequences thereof.
- III. The Platonic Solids and the Hexagram: as will and geometry.
- A. The Platonic Solids: Introduction to the digital attributions arrangement.
1. Cube: Earth/weak nuclear force. Time.
 2. Octahedron: Water/gravitational force. Attraction.
 3. Isocahedron: Fire/strong nuclear force. Omnidirectional entropy.
 4. Dodecahedron: Air/electromagnetic force. Collision.
 5. Tetrahedron: Cosmos/particles and waves. Vortecis.
 6. Sphere: as wave of change and as limit thereof.
 7. Dimensions: Geometries of pure dimensions and force-spin.
- B. The Hexagram: probabilistically cyclical ratios of prediction to change.
1. Yin Yang: as Fact/Fiction or impression/expression; functional inversion.
 2. Trigrams: the early heaven and later arrangements of the eight trigrams.
 3. Hexagrams: magic number squares and the tiling of the chess board.
- IV. Conclusion: A parting tour of the full dimensional extension of active consciousness at the focus of the sphere of the mind; other applications of the formal system.

Table of Contents:

the Metaphysicians Desk Reference

introduction

A. historia singularitatis

1. dimensional cosmology (the universe since the big bang)
 - a. the universe, and us, now
2. negentropic genesis (the viral and bacterial hybrids)
 - a. the first global cataclysm — the cataclysm of the trilobites

- b. life on land
 - c. the second global cataclysm — the cataclysm of the dinosaurs
- 3. evolution into humanity (hominids to homo sapiens)
 - a. from monkey to man
 - b. the first way of five and the spread of the thumb
- 4. legacy of long lost legend (atlantis and lemuria)
 - a. the third global cataclysm — the cataclysm of man
 - i. description of the earth and the heavens
 - ii. the Sumerian description and evidence
 - iii. the Egypto-Graecian description and evidence
 - iv. the banishment of the peoples
- 5. the beginning of civilization and keeping record of its history
 - a. the beginning of social philosophy
 - b. the beginning of religion
 - i. the myth
 - ii. the archetypes
 - iii. the lesser archetypes
 - iv. the prehistory of the archetypes
 - c. the beginning of recorded history
 - d. the lesser archetypal, elder masters
 - e. the ruler over the lesser archetypal and His good works
- 6. the current or common era (dark ages and fractalizing faiths)
 - a. the quest for the resurrection
 - b. the baptism
 - c. the archangel's intervention
 - i. a war against uncleanness
 - ii. effects in Asia
 - iii. Freemasonry
 - d. the quest for the Holy Grail
- 7. the modern era (industry, agencies and LSD)
 - a. the birth of a nation
 - b. industrial fallout and the turn of the twentieth century
 - c. the first half of the twentieth century
 - d. the 1950's
 - e. tie dying
- 8. the post modern era (sleepers agents and telecommunications)
 - a. the brain of the waking sleeper
 - i. biological projection
 - b. mechanical projection
 - i. life in the simulacrum
- 9. the present (cultural symptoms and social cures)
 - a. centralized empire and decentralized empire
 - b. right proper manifestation
 - c. signs of the times
- 10. the future (post 9-11-2001)
 - a. the judgement and resurrection

I. dimensions

- A. subspace quantum information vortices (“qliphotic shells”)
- B. specializations of the four elements
 - 1. electromagnetic properties — fields, bottles, waveforms, null, scalar, etc
 - 2. gravitational properties — microwaves, tachyons, temporal singularities and spatio-temporal singularities
 - 3. wormholes as the shared trait
- C. hyperspace / hyperdimension = hypereality multiverse

1. wormholes and quantum tunnelling as information transport
2. why there is not always a party going on in the universe next door
- D. pure dimension / pure geometry
 1. where one overlaps the other invisibly
 2. the nth dimension and infinite geometries
 3. ylem and the primary clear light

II. entropy

- A. thermodynamics
 1. convection currents
 2. isobars
- B. fluid mechanics
 1. fractal propagation
 2. gnomonic propagation
 3. the illusion of chaos
- C. on the tables of the eighth and the ninth
- D. mathematical proof for inversion

III. Manifestation

- A. the complex ethics of the issue: on the theft of the burning bush that is what it is from heaven in order to become manifest ourselves. On Adama, the red clay, the first man. Later archaeo-thelemism.
- B. the honing of trance concentration through will power.
 1. seeing something where there is nothing to see. (opening the ajna)
 2. seeing all possible explanations for events as equally true in theory
 3. categorizing these levels of truth as dimensions
 - a. the right diagnosis of depression or melancholy
 - b. the misdiagnosis of manic-depressive bipolar cycling
 - c. the misdiagnosis of mania-induced obsessive compulsion
 - d. the misdiagnosis of obsessive compulsive induced paranoia
 - e. the misdiagnosis of paranoia induced schizophrenia
 - f. the misdiagnosis of multiple personality disorder
 4. astral travelling between these dimensions
 - a. different archetypes in dreams (mother moon, children stars)
 - b. good working people (the son/father: sun, daylight)
- C. practising manifestation in subspace, the realm of manifestation (modern)
 1. micromanifestation (magick)
 - a. bringing small amounts of information from there to here, etc
 - b. acceptable qualities, quantities, and velocities of meaning
 - c. the darkest sin (for some reason): inversion
 - i. on the necessity of inversion for all manifestation
 2. macromanifestation (magic)
 - a. duping someone else with a spontaneous synchronicity
 - b. duping everyone around
 - c. duping yourself
 3. probabilities as their commonality
 - a. instantaneous manifestation
 - b. the prediction of random quantum tunneling according to the uncertainty principle
 - c. the big bang, the universe as expanding singularity, pcl = ylem
 - d. the prediction of events based on random information theory
- D. practising manifestation of pure geometry in pure dimension (ancient)
 1. the theory of Atlantis: a lost supercivilization
 - a. stone henge and underground rivers
 - b. underground rivers and ley lines
 - c. ancient ley lines and modern churches

2. flood myth/sacred geometry school cults spread in India
 - a. the Rig Vedas and the Hindu caste system (social)
 - b. the cult of the thugees (petro rites)
 - c. Buddhism and transcendence of samsara
 - d. the sunken city off the coast of Japan
3. flood myth/sacred geometry cults spread from Sumeria
 - a. babylonian astronomy
 - b. egyptian architecture
 - c. Essenes and Nazarenes
 - d. the sunken city off the coast of Spain
4. flood myth/sacred geometry cults spread in America
 - a. the anasazi (astronomer) and the chocco (cannibal)
 - b. the olmec (stone masons) and the maya (sports)
 - c. easter island
5. the cult of sacred geometry turns to addressing the matter of time
 - a. Thoth/Trismegistus/Templarism
 - b. The hypercube of time — the structure that allows us to manipulate spacetime
 - c. different existing frequencies of space (rhomboid crystals)
 - d. the methods of skrying according to mystics
 - i. Nephotes and Narcissus
 - ii. Dee's birdcage
 - iii. quetzalcoatl's cat and mouse hunt
 - iv. do the fates play dice?
 - e. the end of time
(how this was the last macromanifestation)

IV. Time

A. Time Travel

1. ships
 - a. the eight circuits of consciousness — unleashing the atman
 - b. actual government classified vehicles and popular phonies
 - c. builders, pilots and passengers
 - d. the time capsule itself — tachyonic technology
 - e. accidents and insurance empires
2. civilizations
 - a. our future (our origin)
 - b. our past (the destination)
 - c. our present — socio (slow-old) culture (fast-young)
 - d. aliens throughout history (angels vs. demons; spirits, ghosts; giants, beasts; vessels; magic)
3. the intersorting of subspace matter through hyperspace
 - a. effects of radiation on the genes (greylien gravity operant distortion)
 - b. effects of radiation on the mind (knowing fact from fiction)
 - c. you can never go home again
 - i. once you have gone through a wormhole, you have no way of knowing whether you have re-entered your initial universe, or entered a slightly parallel universe created mainly from your thoughts along the way.
 - ii. there is no way of knowing how long you are in a wormhole
 - d. on the necessity of travelling through a multiverse of quantum foam with random tunneling to get to a singularity, and it is only by going perpendicular to the history of the singularity that you can exit the universe without entering into a local baby universe.

e. reincarnative holognomonic interpersonal social molds

B. the multivibrational universe as time capsule

1. the geometrical spirit and the electromagnetic soul

a. the corporeal vessel

i. practising for death

ii. dying

b. the electromagnetic aura

i. the ajna

ii. projection of the astral body (as a conscious singularity)

iii. exploration of the astral plane (hyperdimension)

c. the geometrical spirit

i. the free will

ii. the geometrical system unifying the multiverse

2. the macroverse and the microverse

a. consciousness as a fractal represented by society

i. taking out the mental garbage piles up

ii. the point system, the buddy system, the end game (the p.s. and b.s. are games, the end is a system)

iii. the invisible world and the leviathan

b. thinking outside the box

i. the hypercube of time

ii. the holognomonic projection of cyclical events

iii. why some thoughts come back to haunt you

iv. asymptotic time

c. filaments and superstrings

i. the walls and voids

ii. random quantum fluctuations produce wavelengths

iii. the human nervous system

— the virus and the bacteria

iv. is information contagious?

d. space — what is it good for?

i. spacetime

where space is produced by random quantum fluctuations in pure probability (the fourth dimensional substance) over a duration of time

ii. timespace

where time is outside of space as the separation of idealized probability surrounding the spherically expanding fourth spatial dimensional universe that is full of pure potential

iii. dimensional molecules

V. Light

A. the role of light in the genesis

1. $E = Mc^2$: Einstein's obvious hint.

a. matter can become energy, but energy cannot become matter

b. fermions and bosons agree

c. the A-bomb as punctuation to end all war

2. Where does matter come from?

a. observe that spin can be seen as microwave energy

b. look at this wavelength head on, see a tachyon

c. tachyons involute (implode) faster than entropy

- d. thus they produce some form of measurable effect, opposite the standard temporal flow as measured by entropy
- e. back to the second dimension
 - i.. the photon and the electron: “real” energy
 - ii.. absorption and reflection
 - iii. the vibrational continuum of the shells
- f. matter as concentrated energy
 - i. Thule
 - ii. what is left of consciousness yet to explore

B. known particles

1. electrons

- a. the orbital shell as probability cloud
- b. the temporally singular compressable electron
 - i. the nonsensical concept of the point
 - ii. the extremely small size of the electron itself
 - iii. the temporally singular duration of the electron itself
- c. absorption and reflection of photons
 - i. absorption and dissolution between real particles
 - ii. energy shells and the conservation of reverse spin
 - iii. reflection and trajectory spin

2. photons

- a. a particle of radiation: “real” energy
- b. the mystery of histories
 - i. the co-existence of particle spin and wave emanation
 - ii. strobing light reveals droplets form a waterfall
- c. the illumination of a single photon
 - i. microwave radiation

3. tachyons

- a. temporally inverted energy
 - i. microwave radiation and the material horizon
 - ii. beyond the speed of light
 - iii. the gravitational pull of these wavelengths
 - iv. on their rapid projection outside of the local universe
- b. the torus shape
 - i. a sphere from the side
 - ii. the hole through the poles
 - iii. expanding it into a wormhole
- c. flat-line history
 - i. contained temporal singularity
- d. emission in the known universe from black holes
 - i. the theory of expanding wormholes closer in leading to multiple baby universes

C. known energies

- 1. charged particles from all four forces
- 2. the entropic bubble
- 3. the cyclotronic vortex
- 4. the time tunnel

VI. Spin

A. vector

- 1. first dimensional
 - a. the singularity
 - i. gravitational (particle exchanging)
 - ii. temporal (wave exchanging)
- 2. second dimensional (“branes”)

- a. the electron
 - b. orbital planes of galaxies, planets
 - 3. third dimensional
 - a. three branes
 - b. six tachyonic flatline potentials
 - c. spin occurs distributed between these fixed coordinates
- B. particle spin vs. force spin
 - 1. particle spin
 - a. vector
 - b. trajectory
 - i. phi spirals
 - ii. pi spirals
 - 2. force spin
 - a. expansion/contraction
 - b. trajectory/transference
 - c. tunneling and emission/absorption
- C. spin vs. counterspin
- D. Matrices
- E. Manifolds
 - 1. sets and topology
 - a. sets
 - b. topology
 - c. manifolds as sets with topology
 - 2. sets within manifolds
 - a. plane sets
 - b. vector sets
 - 3. lorentz transformations on sets (manifolds in motion)
 - a. the real number set
 - b. the set of quaternions
 - c. other sets with symmetry
 - 4. 4-manifolds
 - a. the torus (or hypersphere)
 - i. the phi/pi topology
 - b. the tesseract (or hypercube)
 - i. the phi/pi topology
 - c. the rest of the regular polyhedral metaforms
 - 5. QBLH as manifold
 - a. Dee's Enochian vectors on cartesian matrix
 - b. Enochian, Abremelinian, 231 gates as magic number squares
 - c. the eight trigrams of the i ching and set theory

VII. Blackholes

- A. input/output
 - 1. input
 - a. the accretion disk
 - 2. output
 - a. the gas jets
 - b. real tachyons (supergravity)
- B. components
 - 1. the Shwarzschild radius or event horizon
 - a. null radiation (manifest counterspin)
 - 2. quantum foam, quantum tunneling
 - a. wormholes and temporal singularities
 - 3. the singularity
 - a. the singularity as surfacelessness

- a. the necessity of spin
 - b. the singularity as ylem
 - c. the primary clear light
 - 4. perpendicularity to the history of the singularity
 - a. the “parent” universe
- C. the blackhole model of consciousness
 - 1. the mind expands (evolution)
 - 2. the mind projects (quantum thought)
 - 3. the mind is and is not (self aware conundrum)
 - 4. the mind is a singularity (a force unto itself)
- D. consciousness entering a blackhole
 - 1. inside the event horizon
 - a. the waking dream
 - b. effects of the distortion of time
 - 2. entering the singularity
 - a. the equation of sleep unlocks the door of death

VII.1. Wormholes

- A. Inside out = through
 - 1. phi/pi
 - 2. the torus
- B. infinite potential
 - 1. energy
 - 2. dimension
 - a. the multiverse
 - i. how to know when you’ve entered
 - ii. how to get back out the same way you came in
 - iii. possible side effects on personality
 - 3. information
 - a. infinite potential referentials
 - b. infinite potential intelligence
 - 4. spacetime
 - a. going inside spatially your own temporal mind
- C. the alignment of black hole poles between galaxies
 - 1. the filaments and voids and the nerves
 - 2. the holognomic (wave) temporal matrix in the neuronal cylindars
- D. the Akashic Records
- E. the Enochian system
 - 1. the satelllite telecommunications system
 - 2. the innate perception of archetypes
 - a. Plato’s ideal forms
 - b. the malleable manifest

VIII. Phi/Pi

- A. various shapes
 - 1. the hypercube
 - a. the cube over time
 - b. the hypercube at antipode
 - i. the phi rectangle and the pi circle in equal area
 - c. the hypercube at apogee
 - i. phi rectangle on cube surface over spherical diameter of cube
 - 2. the hypersphere
 - a. spin as dimension
 - b. the torus
 - i. phi/pi as area of vortex over spherical circumference

- c. the hypersphere
 - i. phi length area circle around pi circle
 - 3. the cone
 - a. phi as looking down the cone at an angle
 - i. the ratio that spirals
 - b. pi as looking straight down the cone
 - i. the ratio that revolves
 - B. the ratios
 - 1. Phi — $(1 + \text{the sq. rt. of } 5)/2$
 - a. in nature (leaf patterns)
 - b. in music (theme)
 - c. in architecture (the alignment of the pyramids)
 - 2. Pi — $22/7$
 - a. in nature (trunk rings)
 - b. in music (motif)
 - c. in architecture (the measurements of the pyramids)
 - 3. Phi/Pi
 - a. electron shell, magnetic torus
 - b. tachyons — from microwaves to wormholes
 - c. the involution of evolution over time
- IX. QBLH
 - A. history of the QBLH
 - 1. origins in stone
 - a. prehistory (petroglyphs and geoglyphs)
 - b. the legends of the sacred stones
 - i. as energy source
 - ii. as cutting device
 - iii. as meditative object
 - iv. as law
 - v. as perpetually stolen
 - vi. the holy stones and the holy skulls
 - c. the living archetype
 - i. the ancient occult leaders
 - ii. sun symbolism
 - iii. death and resurrection rituals
 - iv. Poimandres: the dragon of animism
 - v. mendacient moralities and aescetic martyrs
 - d. philosophies of the most high
 - i. sacrifice
 - ii. asceticism
 - iii. martyrdom
 - iv. inversion
 - v. nihilism
 - e. schools of the light
 - i. gnosis: self abnegation (there is no thou)
 - ii. enlightenment: nothing is true (there is no not)
 - iii. illuminism: all things are permitted (there is no shalt)
 - iv. deism: the structured universe is not a living organism
 - f. the holy concepts
 - i. the QBLH: phi/pi
 - (numerical equivalency, geometric spiral)
 - ii. the Kabballah: the body of God
 - (the tree of life diagram as a lattice)
 - (the ten sephira and attributes)

- iii. the Qabala: the art of the precession (gematria, astrology)
 - iv. the Cabala: the psychic sanhedrin of Messai
(the gospels as history)
 - g. students over time
 - i. the Saqqara of Ethiopia, the oldest Jews
 - ii. the I ching of the Chinese
 - ii. the safhardic semites of Muslim Spain
 - iv. the Tarot of the Visigoths and Ostrigoths
 - v. the Mayan tzolkin
- 2. present modes
 - a. QBLH as matrix lattice for vector of entropy
 - i. shems as time travelling transport ships
 - c. thelemic esp and tunnel realities
 - i. memory gaps, missing time and cognitive hypnosis (waking trance)
 - ii. distance viewing, precognition and telekinisis
 - f. the messianic breeding program
- 3. future potential extrpolations
 - a. the immanent eschaton
 - i. the rapture
 - ii. the multiverse
 - b. reincarnating holognomic archetypes
 - i. the freeing of the spirit from the karma of the aura
 - ii. ramifications of uncentered ontology
 - c. actual timespace machines for physical transport
 - i. places to go (universal tourism)
 - ii. people to see (entropy inverts work and vaction)
- B. the most holy all of the most high
 - 1.YHVH
 - a. Ain
 - b. Ain Soph
 - c. Ain Soph Aur
 - 2. Chokmah (Wisdom)
 - a. the ten visions in three Buddhist trance realms
 - b. the trances of Buddhism
 - c. the ten commandments
 - d. the distances of the universe
 - e. the levels of dimensions
 - 3. Binah (Understanding)
 - a. the Order of Daath
 - b. the way of the tao
 - c. the way of yin and yang
 - d. the way of the eight trigrams
 - e. the way of the eight double hexagrams
 - f. the way of the seven chakras
 - 4. Chesed (Greatness)
 - a. the various attributions of the tarot to the paths
 - b. the different attributions of trances of consciousness
 - c. the shemhamforash
 - i. the Exodus tables
 - ii. the Egyptian dekans
 - ii. the lesser key of Solomon (zodiacal)
 - iii. the goetic influences (forceful)

- iv. the greater key of Solomon (zodiacal)
- v. planetary wormwood (forceful)
- 5. Gevurah (Mercy)
 - a. the ten by ten tables of correspondences
 - b. the right proper Enochian system
 - i. the great watchtowers
 - ii. the great tables
 - iii. the great circle of the quarters
 - c. the Mayan tzolkin
- 6. Tiphereth (Beauty)
 - a. the arecibo message
 - b. the lid of the tomb of Pacal Votan of Palenque
 - c. the standard and the Lo Shu magic number square
 - d. the hypercubic hypercross of hypercubic hypercrosses
 - e. the hypercube of hypercubic hypercrosses
 - f. the hypercross
 - g. the wave-mechanical hypersphere at parogee
 - h. ten dimensional model of active consciousness
 - i. the phi/pi spiral seen from above
- 7. Netzach (Victory)
 - a. the tables and sigils of the necronomicon
 - b. the tables of the quantum particles and their geometric properties
 - c. the equations for refined theoretical physics
- 8. Hod (Splendour)
 - a. samsara
 - b. the atu of tehuti
 - c. the kabbalah as hypercube
 - d. I ching ophanim
- 9. Yesod (Foundation)
 - a. first order of difference cycles for the eight trigrams
 - b. first order of difference cycles for the eight double hexagrams
 - c. the 384 lines of the king wen sequence
 - d. measurements of the holy bodies
 - e. ophanic ophanim
- 10. Malkuth and Shekinah (Kingdom and Bride)
 - a. the earth's electromagnetic field
 - b. the zodiac
 - c. the filaments and the nerves
 - d. the social order and the brain
 - e. the number of QBLH

The question isn't whether people are being or should be held accountable to all one group of laws, under the auspices of the enforcement of rights, but whether the government itself is held accountable to these dispensed priveledges.

The question, "who watches the watchers" for example, would only be misleading to apply in this case, since it is not the politicians themselves who are on the whole breaking the laws of their lands (or rather, it is not because of this reason), it is the that it is increasingly becoming the interpretation of duty for their appointed offices to break the laws of their own lands. It is, in short, not the politicians who are corrupt, it is the politics in itself that has grown rotten.

What does this mean? The beuracacy is more than merely inefficient. It has actively begun to take steps for the continuing assurance of its existence by endeavoring to make the people dependent upon it not only for their elusive and figmentary rights, but also physically, for their luxurious technological lifestyles. This began with government contracting, but it has grown out of this field.

Government contracting is not the same as a social-works programme. Government funding involves divesting its banks of the taxes collected by it from its constituent populations, and then handing this money over to a private party, or rather, a privately-owned company. A social works programme is a bureau of the government employing citizens and paying them back their tax money directly. As much as people piss and moan about the potential for indentured servitude from the concept of government works programmes, the only alternative that is currently being presented is government contracting with private business.

Take for example, the Mexican immigrant labourers that are cutting down branches from over the city power lines right now outside my window. Most people are angry that these immigrant people can jump the border, however legally, come into "our" country, work for a short period of time, and then retire back to Mexico, where the value of the peso is less than that of the dollar, and bank. They would be incorrect to worry about this, however. This is clearly NOT the problem in an individualistic, Capitalist society.

The problem is that, and this is still only an example, the tree limbs over the power lines don't NEED to be cut. Perhaps some places they do, however here they do not. This is an example of what people defeatistly term "bureaucratic inefficiency." This, although racial issues are not, is tolerated as unavoidable.

Bureaucratic inefficiency is not like a glitch in a computer, nor a loose part in the engine of your car. It is not something that ought to be dealt with by avoidance. It is caused by people, who feel likewise, that it is regrettably necessary for them to do so. They are trapped into a placid, capitalistic (asset-based) mind set that blinds them to any but the path of least resistance, which appears to them now to be to increase government contracting. I believe that it seems to them as though they feel naturally, inherently, that the will of the people, as expressed through the actions of the government, is to spend the people's taxes, the government funds, on investing it in private corporate organisations.

The main reason for this is the budget. To adjust for inflation, the budget of no government office currently in existence has any natural, inherent check and balance system to correct for. Because no government official in one generation should be expected to make the sum numerical amount as their predecessors without it being assigned to that the same value. So, because the budgetary allotment for the salaries of politicians has to be called into review for adjustment caused by inflation, then there has grown out from this the mentality that it is "planning ahead" to adjust the ENTIRE budgetary expenditures by the government to adjust for inflation.

By inflating the budget, the politicians are guaranteeing that the government will be able to request and use more money, again, drawn from the peoples' purse by taxes, over the next fiscal year. Sometimes, this means the politicians can allot themselves a higher salary, though this does not happen so often that it ought to be taken for the motive of raising the entire budget.

There are at least two fundamental ills that budget-inflation brings about. One is that it causes dependence on the theory of inflation, which may not hold true at a steady rate for the projected annum. Then you have budget surplus, and this means you will be forced to roll it over and budget less the next year.

The other fundamental ill of budget-inflation is government contracting. The more the government inflates its budget, the more surplus money they will have to spend, and the more surplus money, the more urgently the need to spend it, and thus the seeking out of unnecessary expenditures, such as government contracts. It would be cheaper, in the long run, for governments to employ public-works programs for almost every single one of the jobs for which most governments currently hire out to private contractors. For example, the Mexicans have moved on down my street by now, but they would still be working under a government funded, directly operated public works programme. The government, that is, the city in this case, could allot to build or buy for itself a fleet of trucks, and then hire the seasonal migrant workers to do the jobs only when and where necessary. By building or buying for itself its own fleet of trucks, as the US postal service has its own fleet of mail trucks, the city government could not only save the money from its "necessary" out-sourcing by contractors, but also save the people the money of having to hire a private firm to provide the same service as could be provided otherwise by the city. The different allotment in capital by households could even justify the gradual increase of taxes.

However, as it stands now, the city hires out to the private contracting company of Asplundh. Asplundh pays the workers, who then do unnecessary construction on, for example, major downtown roads. This cannot be stopped by a definite action upon Asplundh in itself as a company, however. It is entirely the direct result of government contracting, which is only one minor modern strategy being employed to cope with inflations in budget expenditures. Of course, this cannot be dealt with on the government's end either, because it is unnecessary to believe that reductions in taxation (so-called "tax relief") would result in more conservative budgetary expenditures.

(In fact, in recent years we have seen the opposite of this hold true, with the W administration's thousand dollar average "tax-refund" cheques and the trillion dollar combined annual expenditures of the Pentagon on outsourcing programmes to inept and incompetent private contractors whom are being entrusted with everything from manufacturing military equipment and MRE's to a company within their own nation that manufactures fighter planes for export to another, currently allied, nation.)

-

So, what does it mean for government contracting caused by budgetary inflation to be increasing, or how economists say, "growing," the government, and why should it be important for the government itself to have to be held accountable to a certain set of laws? First of all, the government, as a collection of people, is not bound to follow the same laws for its existence as an individual organismal entity. For example, it does not need to "survive" in any traditionally active sense. Therefore it does not need to take autonomous precautionary measures to protect its continuing survival. You could not say, for the opposite example, that the government should have a law governing it that would allow it to abuse the trust of the peoples' purse.

Therefore, under a governed government, under a set of rules by the people over the government rather than over the people by the government, in short under a constitution that more than just builds the framework for offices and functions, we can fix the cheques and balances of ratio of executive recompensation per inflation, we can pay the less fortunate greater wages while saving money for the middle class at the same time, we could maybe even have gotten the broken streetlight out in front of my house fixed when they sent out the fleet of branch cutters.

Now, for example, as the government does not obey the same laws as an organismal entity, it cannot be dealt with as we deal with one another. You cannot shake its hand. There is not even only one person who is in charge of everything. Therefore, insofar as we DO have rights, call them natural, divine, whatever, then they are rights of us as individual organismal entities, and thus cannot, as a whole, therefore not even only one, be applied to something that is not an individual organismal entity, such as the government. In short, the People have rights, the government itself has no rights.

Next we can say, insofar as the people DO indeed have any qualifiable ideal, then it cannot be attributed to the government. Such as, for another example, freedom or liberty. If the people have freedom, then their government can have no freedom. If the people are to have security, on the other hand, the government itself can have no security. Likewise, if the people desire religion, then the government must not be their provider for it. Therefore, any qualifiable ideal that can be attained to by us as individual organismal entities is eternally beyond the reach of government, in and of itself. While the people reign, the government serves.

Remember that the government is not an individual organismal entity, in and of itself. It has no will to survive, for example, so it will never miss its rights, freedoms, security or even God. The government would seem to be hard to look directly upon, but it is not actually the institutionalisation of the predatory instincts it may seem. For instance, civilisation can continue to exist, even if the governments we have now were all to change into different governments, were all to be under only one government, or even if there were not one single source for authority. Civilisation is based more on communication between individual organismal entities than it is on the formation of order within any one of them. Hence it is based on communication between people more than on their government.

Government, in addition to not having the rights, liberties, securities, etc. of an individual organismal entity, does not even have their senses! Government has no eyes to see itself and thus no way to look ahead and make plans for the future. Yet it is the federal government blamed for foreign policies nowadays, and, we could expect, it will be the world government being blamed for whatever social ills befall the people in the future. But government in itself is like a dead thing, it does not in reality change over time, it simply exists, from beginning to end, with no will of its own. Each law that we make for government is one less law that we the people must obey. For each chain we wrap around government, another falls from ourselves. But government is not a martyr, and not a scape-goat. It is not sentient, it is not organismal, and it is not an entity. It does not feel pride or shame. It is not the popular will, the civic spirit, nor the ghost of Christmas-whatever. It has no one human face. It has no real kind of form. In reality, "Big Brother" is NOT "watching you."

Secondly, the government, since it is not an individual organismal entity, does not need to breed. This may seem absurd a thing to consider, because it would seem to be so obviously not capable. However, consider "nation-building," "neo-colonialism," "free trade," "technology transfer," the "Asian contagion." For every one example there would appear to be for the "reproduction" of governments on one level (such as city, county, state, federalism or globalism) I will show you how it can be proven to be nothing more than the "birth-cry" of another version of the exact same government on the next level up or down.

Whether the very real federal government or the ideologicistics of the global government, it is the current fad to "grow" the government, to inflate the budget, to overspend on private contractors, and to thus encourage "bueractic inefficiency." This is based on an ideology of survive and advance. This ideology is human. Government, being neither human nor ideal, is just a reflecting glass. However, to it we attribute all our own attributes, the most basic of our instincts. We want government to continue, and we want it to prosper, to multiply. But it is only our own reflection we praise, and only our own health and welfare we ignore when we put the eye to issues of government.

[quote="cingle963"]And as is typical of such induction more will become clear over time.
...[/quote]

thank you for that.

[quote="cingle963"]So while most of your posts have dealt with one or the other of those areas mentioned, you are present in the area which consists of political and sociological eventualities.

...[/quote]

thanks also for this clarification.

[quote="cingle963"]In order for one to be initiated, one must be initiated....[/quote] thank you for your brevity and wit.

[quote="cingle963"]are you here to teach or to be taught? ...[/quote] thank you for reminding me of my place.

[quote="cingle963"]Also the bit about "liberty, fraternity, equality" is something of a misnomer and smacks of a belief of yours that we are part and parcel of Ancient Free & Accepted Masonry.
...[/quote]

but I do not believe that.

[quote="cingle963"]make sure that you belong here before we accept you in the action arena for the IO.[/quote]

[quote="cingle963"]Yes. I have considered this well. In due course amongst other things. If one is to be outside of the fence of forced reality, then one must go back to the basic foundation or keystone and work from there to build a great and solid temple.[/quote] foundation yes, keystone? like five oh?

[quote="cingle963"]we are to realize that which is of value and take action to spread it....[/quote]

From your animalism of Rand I take it you value her study? I will pursue this more then.

[quote="cingle963"]Hmmm. Why indeed. Perhaps you will find the answer to this question in time..... [/quote] and thank you again for your consideration.

[quote="cingle963"]<Perhaps Master Didymus will pass by this way soon?>

Doubtful. It is my understanding that Master IXO Didymus is off on a gambol for some time, and may yet return for weeks. You will know should he decide to answer. But as I said I have not attempted to answer in his stead. I look forward to what his answer to you will be, perhaps as much so as you. [/quote]

LOL.

[quote="cingle963"]In any event, dear Ben, I wish you the very best. Certainly you have the ability far and wide to progress well and beyond these levels, if you will but look upon them and try to understand them.[/quote]

Thank you alot. That means very much to me.

[quote="cingle963"]Please do not take offense in my reply here to you, I mean only to light the path for you not shutter it in the darkness of anger. [/quote]

How could I take offense? you've only said nice things about me.

[quote="cingle963"]However with that said I also do not have the time for further sets with you. So enjoy, and as I said the best wishes. [/quote]

I do hope that I haven't taken too much of your time, Master cingle, and I thank you for your wise council.

-ben

As for Ayn Rand in particular, I simply disagree with her. I find her fascinatingly wrong philosophically and her writing stylishly bad.

I don't object to "objectivism" (I can't fully grasp what this has to do with the epoché, let alone humanism), but I know for a fact that capitalism is not all it's cracked up to be. It may have seemed like a moral beacon to Rand during the vapid optimism heavily propagandised during her era but to me it seems like consumerism offers no rewards, and amounts to little more than a smear campaign against the meaning of the word "free."

Capitalism is effectively itself the lurking spectre of Communism. It's micro-miniaturization of the telecommunications technology represents the "withering away" of the dictatorship by the proletariat (whose philosophy, at least in America, seems to follow from a comment in the founding fathers thread about Andrew Jackson). Soon we will all be communicating constantly, and this then, will be the last estate of Marxist socialism: anarchist communism. Beyond competition with its opposing ideology, I'm afraid capitalism didn't know what to do with itself. It has created so many enemies along the way that even those that once sided with it have begun to side against it, those who bought guns to fight communism are now turning those same guns against capitalism. I'm not saying they are "right," not even in having the money with which to buy the guns in the first place (Allah forbid!) because this implies their consorting with capitalism at an even earlier point. But under capitalism, that IS their "right."

Capitalism is NOT meant to be an "ideal" according to the morals of recent humanism nor even of most interpretations of religion. The ethics it promotes purport to be the Law of the Wild, which is in keeping with the brutal moralities of some early agrarian, immediately post-tribal cultures of our ancestors. Hence it is explicitly Hobbesian with its understanding of nature as inherently uninterested in justice and uncivilised life as "brutish, nasty and short." This type of ethics cannot even rightly be defined as a form of "ethics" which is the study of how to uplift our moral senses and how to make it easier for us to better obey.

I would say that the ideal of capitalism would have to be the antithesis of all humanist ethics and religious morality. I can't think of a better way of putting this, so I'll just come right out and say it, but isn't the ideal of capitalism: Satan? I mean, we are talking about the newest form of a religion whose ethics are based on the "wild," and whose veritable philosophy has as the lynchpin for their economic hinge nothing greater than that the greatest good of all is "to encourage competition." Right? Because it seems to me that we are talking about one and the same eternal adversary. You cannot prove the absence of its antithesis from the presence of capitalism anymore than you can prove the existence of justice based only on its presence or absence. So I'm not going to say there is a God watching and the ones who bow before what will all be weighed when the day comes. I'm just going to say it's a definite maybe.

-ben

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/ORME/DryGold100x.jpg>[/img]

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/ORME/GoldBathedInLight.jpg>[/img] Light shone through the container refracts pure white.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/ORME/wpg-small.jpg>[/img] [img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/ORME/wpg-large.jpg>[/img] small/large

^^^^^

sizes for sale at:
<http://www.whitepowdergold.com/>
(best priced sales site)

Laurence Gardner's site:
<http://graal.co.uk/whitepowdergold.html>

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/ORME/wpgjpg1.jpg>[/img] calls it "etherium":

<http://www.energeticnutrition.com/hi/gold.html> (basically a sales site)

ostensibly "for plants":
<http://www.pureganic.com/>
(another sales site) contains some scientific articles:

<http://www.asc-alchemy.com/mono.html>
(links to David Hudson material) writings on "AMRITA" by Aleister Crowley:

<http://www.sacred-texts.com/oto/lib343.htm>
(the Great Beast on the Elixir of Life!)

"ORME" at the library of Alexandria site:
<http://www.halexandria.org/dward466.htm>
(thouroughly well cross-referenced) lecture by David Hudson:

<http://www.karenlyster.com/hudson.html>
(the modern day discoverer speaks science!)

scientific literature page from Alexandria:
<http://www.halexandria.org/dward477.htm>
(links to good articles)

instruments of the work:

[url=<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/chart1/chart.jpg>][img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/chart1/img101.jpg>[/img][/url]

^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^

Click for full chart .jpg

key to reading the above chart:

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/chart1/chartkey.jpg>[/img] transformation of topology for the key:

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/chart1/img022.jpg>[/img]

-ben

the working space:

the working space in daylight:

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/chart1/P1010001.JPG>[/img]

the working space in twilight:

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/chart1/P1010011.JPG>[/img]

the working space at night:

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/chart1/P1010075.JPG>[/img]

-ben

additional implements of the work:

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/chart1/P1010018.jpg>[/img]

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/chart1/P1010077.JPG>[/img]

-ben

the working for the zohar:

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/chart1/P1010007.JPG>[/img]

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/chart1/P1010062.JPG>[/img]

-ben

[quote="New Advent Catholic Encyclopedia"]

The Trinity is the term employed to signify the central doctrine of the Christian religion -- the truth that in the unity of the Godhead there are Three Persons, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, these Three Persons being truly distinct one from another. Thus, in the words of the Athanasian Creed: "the Father is God, the Son is God, and the Holy Spirit is God, and yet there are not three Gods but one God." In this Trinity of Persons the Son is begotten of the Father by an eternal generation, and the Holy Spirit proceeds by an eternal procession from the Father and the Son. Yet, notwithstanding this difference as to origin, the Persons are co-eternal and co-equal: all alike are uncreated and omnipotent. This, the Church teaches, is the revelation regarding God's nature which Jesus Christ, the Son of God, came upon earth to deliver to the world: and which she proposes to man as the foundation of her whole dogmatic system.

In Scripture there is as yet no single term by which the Three Divine Persons are denoted together. The word trias (of which the Latin trinitas is a translation) is first found in Theophilus of Antioch about A.D. 180. He speaks of "the Trinity of God [the Father], His Word and His

Wisdom ("Ad. Autol.", II, 15).[/quote]

-source: <http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/15047a.htm>

So, we see that the Divine Trinity is indeed at the very heart of the Christian religion. However, in spite of this being true, it is unknown how or where exactly this doctrine originated. The, "God the father, God the son, and God the holy spirit" trinity itself was never entered into dogma by any pope or council. The oldest known example of the father-son-ghost trinity is in the Athanasian Creed, however it is impossible to date even the authenticity of this creed to its alledged author!

[quote="New Advent Catholic Encyclopedia"]For the past two hundred years the authorship of this summary of Catholic Faith and the time of its appearance have furnished an interesting problem to ecclesiastical antiquarians. Until the seventeenth century, the "Quicunque vult", as it is sometimes called, from its opening words, was thought to be the composition of the great Archbishop of Alexandria whose name it bears.

An elaborate attempt was made in England, in 1871, by E.C. Ffoulkes to assign the Creed to the ninth century. From a passing remark in a letter written by Alcuin he constructed the following remarkable piece of fiction. The Emperor Charlemagne, he says, wished to consolidate the Western Empire by a religious, as well as a political, separation from the East. To this end he suppressed the Nicene Creed, dear to the Oriental Church, and substituted a formulary composed by Paulinus of Aquileia, with whose approval and that of Alcuin, a distinguished scholar of the time, he ensured its ready acceptance by the people, by affixing to it the name of St. Athanasius.[/quote]

-source: <http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/02033b.htm>

This account regarding Charlemagne should surely be taken as such, being as how it is likely based on the popular confusion of the "doctrine" of the Trinity with the Order of Trinitarians.

[quote="New Advent Catholic Encyclopedia"]Finally, the Order of Trinitarians, which exists to the present day, had at first no other object, as is recalled by the primitive title: "Ordo S. Trinitatis et de redemptione captivorum". its founder, St. John of Math, a native of Provence and a doctor of the University of Paris, conceived the project under the pious inspiration of a pious solitary, St Felix of Valois, in a hermitage called Cerfroid, which subsequently became the chief house of the order. Innocent III, though little in favor of new orders, granted his approbation to this enterprise in a Bull of 17 December, 1198. [/quote]

-source: <http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/15045d.htm>

-ben

[quote="Ayn Rand: Man's Rights"]The term "individual rights" is a redundancy.[/quote]

Wrong. Then the opposite would hold true as antithetical, it does not. The increasing of one person's "individual rights" is the gradual decreasing of the freedom of the masses. At its pinnacle is totalitarianism, ala Rome. When the "individual rights" of any given individual are extended to their utmost extreme, the result is that there is no freedom for the masses.

[quote="Ayn Rand: Man's Rights"]A "right" is a moral principle defining and sanctioning a man's freedom of action in a social context. There is only one fundamental right (all the others are its consequences or corollaries): a man's right to his own life.[/quote]

Rand is dodging the issue that ANY "right" LIMITS Freedom. She is implying that one "unit" of "freedom" is called "life," and that all other "rights" are sub-categories of this.

[quote="Ayn Rand: Man's Rights"]As to his neighbors, his rights impose no obligations on them except of a negative kind: to abstain from violating his rights.[/quote]

The ole "your rights end at the tip of my nose," routine.

[quote="Ayn Rand: Man's Rights"]Any alleged "right" of one man, which necessitates the violation of the rights of another, is not and cannot be a right....There can be no such thing as "the right to enslave."[/quote]

That's debatable, to say the least. Machiaveli, for one, would disagree, as would De Sade AND Masoch. Not to mention the founding fathers...

[quote="Ayn Rand: Man's Rights"]A right does not include the material implementation of that right by other men; it includes only the freedom to earn that implementation by one's own effort.[/quote] the ole tried and true, "pursuit of happiness" bull. She makes all this sound like physics.

[quote="Ayn Rand: Man's Rights"]there are, in fact, no "economic rights," no "collective rights," no "public-interest rights." There are no "rights of consumers" There are no "rights to a 'fair' wage or a 'fair' price" There are no "rights" of special groups, there are no "rights of farmers, of workers, of businessmen, of employees, of employers, of the old, of the young, of the unborn."[/quote] and yet there is tax law. Go figure.

[quote="Ayn Rand: Man's Rights"]Bear in mind that the right to property is a right to action, like all the others: it is not the right to an object, but to the action and the consequences of producing or earning that object.[/quote] bullox. Again, intermingling physics with the Garden of Eden myth while leaving out Newton.

[quote="Ayn Rand: Man's Rights"]In accordance with the two theories of ethics, the mystical or the social, some men assert that rights are a gift of God—others, that rights are a gift of society. But, in fact, the source of rights is man's nature.[/quote] again, this is just dodging the issue. It's not merely an epistemological difference. God vs. Gov't can't just be shrugged off so lightly in the name of something so trite and ill-defined as "man's nature."

[quote="Ayn Rand: Man's Rights"]"The source of man's rights is not divine law or congressional law, but the law of identity. A is A—and Man is Man." (Atlas Shrugged.)[/quote]

ARRGHH!!! BULLOX!! The law of identity! which is it, then? "man's nature" or the "law of identity"? If it be both, prove it.

[quote="Ayn Rand: Man's Rights"]the plundering of a country's wealth is accomplished by inflating the currency[/quote]

As is currently the situation.

-ben

hey there!, welcome.

I'm the resident crackpot here, so please allow me to answer!

[quote="Big Duke 6"]Why is it that the U.S. deserved the devastation from 9-11 because "we were asking for it, and we should get what we have been dealing out to other people all these years" whatever the fuck that means.[/quote]

Because it

A) doesn't equate: even if it's a generous estimate you've got no more than 5,000 people "who were in those buildings" (and planes) "when the planes hit." Compare that to the virtual holocaust "we" have unleashed in the centre of the fertile crescent. Just doesn't add up.

B) "we" (meaning the U.S. as you put it) WERE asking for it, but not because of our foreign policy, which, admittedly, has been to rape pillage and plunder like bezerker Vikings. The WORLD TRADE centre towers had it coming. Likewise, as long as we keep being distracted by 9-11 or the war in Iraq, then the WTO, IMF and world bank can continue doing... whatever it is they're doing.

Just hopin to clear ya'lls up.

-ben

[quote="Big Duke 6"]So when the World Bank and IMF finally "forgives" the debts of all those poor nations, they sure as hell will have an excellent bond rating after that! Think of all the future loans they'll get after that![/quote]

well, I'm sure it's more than just debt forgiveness that this is all about, since the WTO and IMF have both been encouraging first world nations to forgive the debts owed them by both each other (Marshall Plan) and third world nations (presumably for natural disaster relief, although I admit I can't think of how or why Africa, for example, would owe the US, for example, any money). Of course, the World Bank isn't about to stop charging steep interest rates on the money those same first world nations owe to them. But anyway...

I think it has to do with the transfer of wealth in general. For example, the entire international banking structure began with ... well technically with the Knights Templar.. but it didn't really begin on a cross-continental scale until the US civil war, when Lincoln bought Union guns with money loaned from, I think, the French national bank. One of the real disputes during the US civil war was the printing of Confederate green-backs, which, if they were traded internationally, would have to become a recognised currency. So the north went into debt, and that was the beginning of US foreign debt. We still haven't paid our own foreign debt back completely, but Clinton managed at least to balance the federal budget and eradicate the deficit between expenditures and income. (Of course, now W. has pushed the deficit into the trillions through foreign military expenditures.)

Not only has the US not paid back it's foreign debt (we have never actually even paid our membership dues to the United Nations), but the debts owed to it by other countries has become the basis for our currency! When Nixon took the US dollar off the "gold-standard" US money began being "floated" on foreign debts owed us. As the amount of debts owed us decreases, therefore (or rather, does not increase in direct porportion to the amount of debts we owe), the currency ITSELF becomes devalued. This process is known as "inflation," and translates into increased "cost of living index" or higher costs for daily goods and services such as, for example, the cost of a gallon of gas.

So, in other words, the debts owed first world countries by third world countries are the fundamental basis for the value of the money printed by those first world countries. If first world countries forgive the debts owed to them by third world countries (as the UN and even the IMF are pushing for) then the entire value of those first world countries' currency would be worth nothing! It would essentially make the first world countries indentured servants to the World Bank.

The consolidation of all the world's wealth in the hands of the World Bank is a pretty big deal nowadays, but let's assume it could ever actually happen. The World Court (who so far has only tried one case since the turn of the millennium) would have to be exercised to intervene, even if not on behalf of the Green Voting bloc of the UN, then on behalf of America! In effect, the world bank would have to be brought under the auspices, as is the world court already itself, of the UN. Hence, one world government.

But this is a knee jerk reactionary strategy. The "grand conspiracy" for one world government cannot be so simply achieved. So, what we have instead is the US, via the Pentagon, selling itself out to independent contractor companies. Since these companies owe no debt to third world countries, it is easy enough for the US government to exceed its annual budget for them, even on corporate "bail-outs" when these companies eventually declare bankruptcy. This began early on with airline companies, but dates back even further to the breaking up of telecommunications monopolies (Ma Bell). By the eighties the fed had begun "bailing out" savings and loans bank-fronts used by pan-American drug smugglers to launder their money across the US border. Then it was Enron.

Thus, in effect, the transfer of wealth follows from third world countries, into the national currency itself of first world countries, and from there directly into the hands of private sector corporate businesses. You would think this would be a means of protecting the wealth of nations against organisations like the world bank. However, these same "local" US corporations have begun growing beyond their originally national borders, and are spilling over into foreign markets for not only labour (as with NATO and NAFTA), but also the "free trade" of capital (as with Japanese corporations).

The result of this, around the turn of the millennium, was that the first world corporations were making so much money that they could afford to loan some out to American entrepreneurs in the form of startup ".com" venture capital businesses. The international corporations then dropped all their investments in foreign markets, sold all the stock they owned in foreign corporations. This was called the "Asian contagion" because it began with Japanese and Korean nationally backed corporations, then spread to the stock markets of China and Russia, finally sweeping over the face of continental Europe and nearly bankrupting the stock market of England. You don't tend to hear too much about the "Asian contagion" in America though, because of what happened immediately after it.

By late 2000, the last year of the second millennium, the ".com" startup bubble had burst and all the loans paid out to private individuals by international corporations via loans through federally funded banks were recalled. This would have bankrupted the American economy, if all the loans that had been made to the venture capitalists had been reinvested in stocks of the US corporations by the American citizens. But they all used it to buy goods and services from telecommunications corporations, who were, ostensibly, the ones who began the pullout from Asian markets.

So, the glutted telecommunications industries (consider that the US economy is only about one million dollars a year more now than the annual income of a corporation like Bill Gates' Microsoft) needed a scapegoat to cover up what they had just done to transfer the world's wealth. So, they turned in Ron Lay of Enron. This was supposed to be a big corporate scandal at the time, right around the 2000 election. If there were ties between Lay and either candidate it could bring criminal charges against them! Well, since then Arnold Schwarzenegger, now governor of California, DID in fact have DIRECT ties to Tim Lay personally, but no one seems to care. They don't seem to even remember.

And why?

Probably because of the neo-con confusion over the election results. One of the telecommunication industries news organisation (FOX news, which was actually run by the cousin of the neo-con candidate) declared the electoral college in error even at the same second as the votes were finished being tabulated. This was a bold move!

The results, of course, are well known by now. W. was appointed by the Supreme Court, virtually crowned Caesar. 9-11 happened, which I see as being the symbol of the Arab world throwing a big fat stone right in the face of American political funding, the World Trade Organisation (WTO) where it knew it would really hurt, and the subsequent damnable crusades of our "king" W. in Afghanistan and Iraq.

If the first Gulf War WERE an "arms-show," as the popular mind recalls it, then where are the even newer, higher tech gadgets now being used by the US military in Iraq? There are none. The federal government, via the Pentagon, outsourced an incredibly inflated military budget to private sector corporations, but the corporations have failed to supply them with any new technologies in return. Why?

Perhaps it is due to the fact that these "private sector" corporations, mainly the telecommunications industries, have grown beyond the national borders of the first world countries. They have engaged in "free trade" with both foreign corporations, and therefore also the foreign national governments likewise backing these foreign versions of themselves. They have looted and pillaged from these foreign stock exchanges. They have then appointed their own head of government to their parent first world nations, the neo-cons, and begun waging a crusade against the Middle East.

The neo-cons' STATED OBJECTIVE (mission accomplished!) in engaging the Middle East in this crusade was to engage in, if not outright instigate, something they call "constant conflict." This idea was made up by the Project for a New American Century (PNAC), one of thousands of heavily funded neo-con think tanks, and in specific by a former military commander and current teacher at Culver, Ralph Peters. The group that funded this think-tank, for only one minor example, was the Carlyle Group, a round-table organisation of American politicians, OPEC members, and old military contracting corporations. This group recently took some heat since the head of the Arab House of Saud (Usama Bin Laden's uncle) and W.'s dad HW were both members, and, in Michael Moore's mind at least, this constituted a conflict of interest over the reasons for going to war in the Middle East.

But what Moore failed to realise was the grand scope of the neo-con objective, that is, to wage "constant conflict" not ONLY in the Middle East. Consider the VERY recent developments between the W. administration and China. Diplomacy like this only happened last during the Nixon administration! The idea, in any event, is to start WWII, with the western first world national armies against the third world, with the third world being funded by Communist China, essentially recreating VietNam on the scale of an "axis of evil" involving Korea, Pakistan, Iran, etc. etc. etc.

This process of "when will the other shoe drop" keeps the entire world distracted against the MASSIVE transfer of ALL the world's wealth into the hands of the first world corporations that had JUST occurred. And why? Could it be because these same corporations are making their own move for power in the coming world government? They fund "free trade" organisations that drop taxes for the shipment of goods (and of capital) across borders (thus making money laundering virtually guaranteed by federal law) such as NAFTA and NATO. They also fund the neo-con emperor and his crusade of constant conflict.

Kinda makes you wonder where you stand in all of this.

-ben

As I've said before, I strongly feel that technological capitalism constitutes the "Dictatorship by the Proletariat" foreseen by Marx. There are basically three states of Marxist socialism:

- 1) the revolution
- 2) the dictatorship by the proletariat
- 3) anarcho-syndicalist communism

I see the perpetual micro-miniaturisation of telecommunications technologies as constituting the step between steps 2 & 3, the so-called "withering away" of the Dictatorship by the Proletariat.

But, what does all this mean?

Let's look at history itself as the Marxist "revolution." Think of history as cyclical, as Marx himself did, since Marx was a Hegelian, and Hegel formulated history as a series of political theses, economic antitheses, and socio-cultural syntheses. Even the church, Hegel saw as the product of this version of history. Marx himself could not have missed the opportunity to poke fun at a dialectical idea of "progress" by comparing it's history to that of a "revolving" circle.

Now, consider the past hundred years, since Marx's writings. There were, leading up to Marx, contemporary with him, and have been since him, several "official" type of revolutions, that being the name given to successful coup d'états. The French revolution had just happened, and given birth to the Third Estate of Napoleonic Republicanism. The American revolution had led, by the time of Marx, to a civil war over slavery. The next country that would have a revolution happened after Marx's death, but it was a country that fully embraced Marx's vision of the "revolution" as only part of a definite cycle. That country was Russia, BTW.

However, in Russia, instead of following from the Revolution, there was not a "Dictatorship BY the Proletariat," there was a dictatorship OF the Proletariat. That is, the federally-operated economy was under a single head of state — first Lenin, then Stalin, through a series of prole-czars, on down to Gorbachev who finally abolished his own position (effectively ending Soviet style "communism" which was essentially only a dictatorship). Gorbachev acted wisely and his wisdom brought an end to the Cold War era arms race between the state-side (supply-side) economy of Russia and the free market (demand based) economy of the USA.

So, since the "revolution" waged in Marx's name did not manage to produce as a direct result of it a proper "dictatorship" as according to Marx's own definition, we need not look to it for an example of the successful application of Marx's own philosophy. Let us look, instead, to "capitalist" America.

Insofar as "communist" Russia was NOT like Marx's own idea of the "third estate" of his philosophy, America is NOT like the version of "capitalism" it espouses or claims to represent. They are, basically, opposites of one another: whereas Communism made "every king a peasant," capitalism swore to make "every peasant a king." But eventually, these were always meant to trade places: after the revolution, Communism would make "every peasant a king," and eventually capitalism would produce a dictatorship, thus making "every king a peasant."

Capitalism->anracho-syndicalism—>dictatorship.
Communism->dictatorship->anarcho-syndicalism.

Therefore, we see that, as in Russia they espoused the opposite of Marxism, under "capitalism" in the United States we have gone through a steady increase in two things: 1) corporate buying-power (De Tocqueville warned us against this before we even received the Statue of Liberty!) 2) the military industrial complex (Ike warned us specifically about this). These two things are ANTITHETICAL to free-market capitalism as it was foreseen by John Maynard Keynes.

The building up of the military through private contracting, and the "bailing out" of failed corporations, represent supply-side or state-side economics, which is the diametrical opposite of free trade and of the essence of capitalism.

So, what we have in America is, in effect, a dictatorship, identical to the one they had in Russia. However, rather than a dictatorship under Lenin, or Stalin, or whoever, the dictatorship of America is, or until recently had been, a faceless dictatorship. It applied all the laws of the Soviet dictatorship, but it ALSO obeyed Marx's definition of a "dictatorship" BY the Proletariat. It had no one sole benefactor. It truly fulfilled its promise of making "every peasant a king."

However, now capitalism is being split. It is being split drastically between the haves and the have nots. This too, was foreseen by Marx: it simply "wither away." In other words, as capitalism itself becomes a dictatorship outright, its purpose will change from one of economics to government, however, as it stops being economically practical, the use for it by the people will significantly decrease. Once capitalism purchases for itself a single head of state, take Andrew Jackson for example, then it drains money from the masses, in effect, corporations are behind taxation.

And when this happens, when corporations rule the government, their philosophy ceases to be "capitalism" and is magically transformed into "fascism." This is, in essence, a dictatorship by the bourgeoisie, which is quite like the dictatorship by the proletariat predicted by Marx. However, in the US at least, corporate fascism did not last long, and as I write this, the dictatorship by corporations, in effect the dictatorship by a class of citizens, is already coming to a close.

The classism that immediately followed after Marx's time period — the black-shirt strike-breakers, the early labour unions, Mao Tse Tung, etc. — has waned into the background noise of the American suburbs. This is when capitalism and communism cross paths, moving from one opposite extreme to the other.

Capitalism->fascism->political dictatorship<-sovietism-<Communism

Of course, from a political dictatorship either coming from Soviet-style Communism or from fascist modern capitalism, the course of action that follows is the same. It's proven true from the history of every dictatorship that has not ended itself in a war of attrition or expansion.

Dictatorship, by nature, cannot survive.

Whether you acknowledge the class dictatorship of American capitalism as "fascist" or as "socialist" is irrelevant to the point that it IS a dictatorship (over politics) by a whole class of citizens (in our case the bourgeoisie). This is, as much as history will permit, in accord with the vision of Marx.

Now, whether this will be followed with a revolution by the next class on the food chain, thus a literal dictatorship by the proletariat of America (which is HIGHLY unlikely), or whether this will be followed with what Marx predicted, a "withering away" of the class dictatorship, remains to be seen. Evidence of the "withering away" of ANY dictatorship (of which our current class-based system is the first of its kind) can be found from the Egyptians, through the Romans, to Charlemagne, through even the USSR herself. Without someone else starting a war against it (as with Hitler) or the dictatorship itself starting a war (as with Napoleon) the only other end for any dictatorship is withering away.

Now, there is only one last step in the Marxist dialectic triplicity: anarcho-syndicalism. This is what is being led to by the "withering away" of the capitalist "dictatorship" (by the bourgeoisie). The reason for this is that capital itself is becoming synonymous with information, or more to the point, the transference of electronic data. Eventually, we won't have national economies, we will have a global telecommunications system.

The basic tenets of Anarcho-Syndicalism were laid down by Bakunin during, I reckon, the second Continental Congress of international socialists. It depends largely on there being a single global dictatorship before it can efficiently become possible. It cannot exist, in other words, in competition with any of the prior existing systems of economics. On the other hand, it follows quite elegantly from any form of politics, and particularly goes well with direct Democracy.

Anarchy implies lawlessness, however, when in combination with syndicalism, or the use of small labour communes, or syndicates, it implies ONLY an economic methodology, and does not directly impute POLITICAL anarchy. In fact, a direct democracy between these small communes would most likely be the last version of governmental organisation necessary before global telecommunications causes even this to become obsolete.

Which brings me directly to my point:

As the telecommunications technology becomes more and more portable, as it becomes wearable, for example, as is virtually the next step in its current course of development, but eventually, even as it becomes nano-tech the same size of our molecular cells, or even smaller, atomic machines the size of quanta... as technology "shrinks" in short... the need for any alternative form of commerce decreases.

Take credit cards, as the modern fad form of money in our credit-based capitalist economy. A single credit card alone accesses untold sums of finances, whereas before, this money would have come only in cash, or in some other form of traded resource, such as silver or gold. The "form" of cash has come to be more and more compact as the "amount" this "form" represents has dissipated and become greater though, as with credit in bank accounts, more nebulous. Solid finance has been liquidated and even this has begun evaporating.

Eventually, the same result as is achieved now by a collection of credit cards, each one representing access to its own different and unique bank account, there will be a single credit-card, which will probably be issued as a personal ID by the global government. Eventually, both tasks can be accomplished, along with many others, by simply implanting a metal strip into our skin. This could serve as not only something that could be scanned for the purposes of making financial transactions, but as an antenna connecting us to a global telecommunications network.

As the technology becomes smaller in "form," it grows greater in the number of its potential applications. Some people even use "esoteric machines" or "mind machines" now. These are models of electrical or mechanical machines made out of paper and string that these people believe can actually accomplish all the same feats as their actual electrical or mechanical counterparts. Ridiculous, of course, but it caught Burroughs' attention.

Likewise, what seems highly advanced thinking, such as the magnetic strip antenna implant, will eventually be considered extremely primitive. This means that, if we follow Marx's thinking of history as cyclical or repeating, perhaps what we now consider primitive (such as stone henge) might have been accomplished by technologies that we, until rediscovering, consider too far-fetched to even possibly exist.

In other words, it is likely that the final stage of Communism, that of anarcho-syndicalism, may already be the effective rule in place. For example, the "dictatorship" BY the bourgeoisie OVER the proletariat is not ALL that occupies the bourgeoisie's time. They obey a code of moral conduct amongst themselves that can be best likened to hedonism. In short, the relationships between self-styled capitalists most approximates Anarcho-syndicalism. Soon, this law will govern us all.

Afterall, the poor man's technology of tomorrow is simply the rich man's technology of today!

So, while mystics probe the cyclical nature of the history of technology, the self-styled capitalist "dictatorship" BY the bourgeoisie encourage "progress" to a "New Age" or even to a "Novus Ordo Seclorum." If they fantasise this will be a direct dictatorship, fascism by one class over the other, or if they accept that even such a dictatorship as that would be bound to fall eventually, either way, the development of the technology itself is going to overlap them.

Once technology becomes wearable, and, beyond that, once it becomes implantable, once it becomes only virtually unidentifiably different from the self-definition of humanity, then there will be no use for money, and no need for government. The coming modern era will be much like how Adam lived in the Garden of Eden: knowing all, and living forever.

Human access to VRAI (virtual reality artificial intelligence) will eventually not even be limited to a physical portal or even only temporary use. Eventually, humanity will leave our physical bodies altogether and pass into the realm of higher dimensions accessible through even our current computer technologies. The environments we can create only in CGI simulation and the calculations we can perform now are nothing besides what we will be able to fully immerse ourselves in once the technology becomes synonymous with our self. The use of physical clones to continue to carry our new technological "forms" of self completes the fate of man.

So, you see, essentially, where I am going with my theory now about how capitalism is really communism.

-ben

[quote="benpadiah on blairwitch.net"]

[b]SUNSPOTS[/b]

- recap

So we have seen it takes about 2,000 years for the zodiacal "ages" of the sun to change from one sign to another, and that this is because it takes about 24,000 years for the precession of the poles to reposition earth relative to the sun for it to have risen on the same day in each of the twelve zodiacal signs. We have also seen that it takes roughly twice this long for the combination of polar precession and earth's elliptical orbit to effect the millennial equivalent of the seasons, known as ice ages.

- Sunspots

Now, what we may or may not learn in school is that the earth really has two polar axes: a geographic pole and an electromagnetic pole.

The sun also has an electromagnetic pole. As the sun's electromagnetic pole rotates about its polar axis, the sun's electromagnetic field coils up around it, like a ball of twine. This is because the sun is ignited gas, and its surface rotates differentially: the region around the equator rotates more slowly than the region around the poles. This causes the ordinarily longitudinal electromagnetic field lines of the sun to be pulled around its latitude, and thus to form "coils" like a "twine ball"

The longer this process goes on, the closer these emf lines get to each other. When they touch or overlap they form colder, dark spots on the surface of the sun. These "sunspots" always occur in pairs. Sometimes they shoot protons - burning gas particles - off into space. These are called flares. Most of the time, one sunspot shoots a flare out and another sunspot re-absorbs it. These are called prominences.

- Sunspot Cycle

Every eleven years sunspots increase. The reason for this is not fully understood, but I suspect the solar weather is caused by a combination of electromagnetic polar precession (i.e. differential rotation) and the sun's place in its orbit around the center of the Milky Way galaxy.

- Mini Ice Ages

When sunspot number is low, the hemisphere of earth facing the sun will not be as warm as it usually is in that same position in its elliptical orbit. When this occurs there is a "mini ice age" when all seasons are uncommonly colder. Such occurred in Europe around 400 AD.

By dating these mini ice ages, we can create a much longer sunspot cycle than merely the eleven year cycle of increase. Doing so yields a greater sunspot cycle of ~ 1000 years, over which time the sunspots increase per increment of eleven years.

[/quote]

[quote="benpadiah"]

Hey everybody! I am starting this thread because it has come to my attention that at least two of us on this board (enough for a good conversation) are interested in QBLH.

To any of the rest of you that don't know what QBLH is: the short answer is that it is Jewish mysticism.

While it has its doctrinal origins in Saffhardic Spain, its apocryphal origin traces back much earlier to the time of Moses. Supposedly, the QBLH was inscribed on the original stone tablets which Moses brought down from Mt. Sinai and smashed when he found his people worshipping a golden idol. He then brought down the 10 commandments, which have become the cornerstone of the three main western religions.

I am also including in the subject-heading for further conversation the concept of gnosis. Gnosis is the idea of divine enlightenment which can be reached through QBLH. Its origins are from the middle east around the time of the life of Jesus, and many modern scholars assert that Jesus himself was a gnostic, and his followers an early gnostic school.

Lastly, I would like this thread to address the topic of Thelema, Aleister Crowley's school of mysticism and magick. Thelema is Greek for "will" and it was Crowley's assertion that magick was "the science and art of causing change to occur in conformity with one's will."

If this thread survives long enough, I may even demonstrate how these trends all tie into the Blair Witch Project.[/quote]

[quote="benpadiah"]

QBLH LINKS:

SPECIFIC WORKS

[url=http://www.sacred-texts.com/jud/yetzirah.htm]Sefer Yetzirah[/url]

the priemier work on QBLH. The first book anyone should read on the subject.

[url=http://216.239.39.104/search?q=cache:j6Ta-mCtRIMC:www.geocities.com/alex_sumner/bahir.pdf+the+book+of+bahir&hl=en]Sefer ha

Bahir[/url]

Written in the first century AD, presented in a round table forum, another MUST READ.

[url=http://www.sacred-texts.com/jud/gfp/gfp.htm]the Guide for the Perplexed[/url]

Moses Maimonides, a truly enlightened renaissance mystic, expounds on biblical interpretation.

[url=http://www.gnostic.org/kybalionhtm/kybalion.htm]the Kybalion[/url] the physics of the QBLH, presented consicely, by three initiates into the mysteries.

[url=http://www.workofthechariot.com/TextFiles/Translations.htm]key texts[/url] further essential texts in online and downloadable pdf. form.

GENERAL SITES

[url=http://www.digital-brilliance.com/kab/link.htm]Kabbala links[/urL]

(some may have become inactive)

[url=http://www.kabbalah.info/]Kabbalah.info[/urL]

the priemier QBLH site online.

[url=http://dir.yahoo.com/Society_and_Culture/Religion_and_Spirituality/Faiths_and_Practices

/Judaism/Kabbalah/]yahoo.com kabbalah directory of sites[/urL]

[url=http://servantsofthelight.org/Links/Group_6.html]Servants of the Light: links to esoterica[/url]

[url=http://dir.yahoo.com/Society_and_Culture/Religion_and_Spirituality/Faiths_and_Practices

/Occult/]yahoo.com Occult directory of sites[/url]

[url=http://www.halexandria.org/]Library of Alexandria[/url] an interesting view. Follow the links about ORMES...

[url=http://www.kheper.net/topics/index.html]Topcs at Kheper.net[/url]

(some are incomplete)

[url=http://www.geocities.com/elemental_adept/links.html]Links[/url]

a great list of fully functional links to all topics spiritual and esoteric

[url=http://www.mayimhayim.org/Torah%20Codes.htm]Torah Codes[/url]

[url=http://www.unclejoes.com/biblecodes.htm]Bible Codes[/url]

[url=http://www.soulinvitation.com/indexdw.html]Dan Winter[/url]

[url=http://www.meru.org/]Meru[/url][[/quote]

[quote="benpadiah"]

GNOSIS LINKS:

SPECIFIC WORKS

[url=http://www.bible-history.com/resource/wc_dead.htm]Dead Sea Scrolls[/url]

[url=http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/nhl.html]Nag Hammadi Library[/url]

[url=http://www.meta-religion.com/World_Religions/Christianity/Other_Books/Nag_Hammadi/nag_hammadi_library.ht m]Nag Hammadi Library[/url]

[url=http://www.fortunecity.com/tinpan/drumandbass/315/bindx.htm]pseudepigrapha, apocrypha, apocrapha, dead sea scrolls, etc.[/url]

[url=http://www.sacred-texts.com/chr/apo/index.htm]Apocrypha index[/url]
[url=http://graal.co.uk/]Laurence Gardner[/url]

GENERAL SITES

[url=http://www.webcom.com/~gnosis/library.html]Gnostic Society Online Library[/url]
[url=http://members.aol.com/AJRoberti/rg/links.htm]Links on Gnosticism[/url][[/quote]

[quote ="benpadiah"]

THELEMA LINKS:

SPECIFIC WORKS

[url=http://www.the-equinox.org/]the Equinox[/url]
[url=http://outercol.org/]Outer College Curriculum[/url]
[url=http://www.canonbury.ac.uk/library/index.htm]CMRC Library[/url]
[url=http://freemasonwatch.freepress-freespeech.com/moralsanddogma.html]Morals and Dogma by Albert Pike[/url]
[url=http://www.bilderberg.org/1999mins.htm]Bilderberg minutes 1999[/url]
[url=http://www.sacred-texts.com/oto/lib343.htm]Amrita by Crowley[/url]
[url=http://www.sacred-texts.com/oto/lib78.htm]On Tarot by Crowley[/url] [url=http://www.sacred-texts.com/oto/lib888.txt]St. Bernard Shaw by Crowley[/url]
[url=http://www.esotericarchives.com/dee/index.html]Writings of John Dee[/url]
[url=http://www.sacred-texts.com/oto/]OTO section of sacred-texts online library[/url]
[url=http://tracingboard.com/blue_degrees.htm]Blue Degrees of Masonry[/url]
[url=http://www.sacred-texts.com/nec/necro.htm]Necronomicon[/url]

GENERAL SITES

[url=http://otohq.org/oto/]OTO US HQ[/url]
[url=http://dir.yahoo.com/Society_and_Culture/Social_Organizations/Freemasonry/]yahoo.com Freemasonry directory[/url]
[url=http://www.levity.com/alchemy/rosicros.html]Rosicrucianism[/url]
[url=http://www.leftfield-psi.org/gallery/audio.html]Crowley mp3s[/url]
[/quote]

[quote="benpadiah"]

The main reason I started this discussion (here in particular) was to illustrate a point about the path from mysticism to illumination toward freedom. I'll break this down a little.

QBLH (qabala, kabbalah, etc) is essentially an orientation of ten attributes on a lattice shape known as the "tree of life." This lattice shape is actually a fourth dimensional hypercube. Meditation on this shape, particularly progressing through the series of the ten attributes as a kind of guided meditation, opens one's consciousness up to higher dimensions.

Gnosis (Greek for, essentially, "experience") is acquired from learning about these higher dimensions through these types of guided meditations. Here, of course, by higher dimensions, I am merely using a more technical term for elevated states of consciousness, "deep" thoughts, and spiritual or transcendental experiences. There was a big trend in the sixties of "turning on, tuning in and dropping out" which are all basically gnostic concepts. The Essenes (who wrote the Dead Sea Scrolls) were gnostics.

Thelema (Greek for the Will) was a concept brought up during the twentieth century by self-proclaimed magician Aleister Crowley. His dictums: "Do What Thou Wilt Shall Be The Whole Of The Law," and "Love is the Law, Love Under Will," are the cornerstones of his teaching. Lesser known, though IMO possibly even more important, were his musings on the difference between the will of the self (equivalent to Freud's concept of the Id) and the higher, or "True" Will (which Crowley associated with God and with spiritual guides he called "Holy Guardian Angels").

I believe that these three ideas, representing a process of self-evolution over time, from guided meditation to enlightenment toward the freedom of the will from the illusory constraints of desires, are, among other possibly more important things, key to understanding all sorts of supernatural phenomenon, such as the occurrences conveyed, though enigmatically, by TBWP.

I'd like to return to this topic again sometime in the future and share some further views on how all of this ties into the film, but right now I have to go eat breakfast. Hopefully I'll come back to it before too long, and maybe some of you will have even seen fit to sift through some of this, admittedly, overwhelming material.

-ben[/quote]

I lack Understanding.

This is like a King who was waiting to be married. Instead, he took a trip, and on this trip attended a wedding. When he returned, he found his bed chambre empty. All his friends had left him.

Do you see? He was married in spirit, that is: he left his home, his body; he traveled about and came to the wedding, which, as if in a dream, was not his own; when he returned from the afterlife, he found that his bride-to-be was not yet with him in the flesh. Because of this, once he is taken from life, his death will be like a wedding, returning him from the solitude of the body to his bride beyond.

Do you see? God was the one who was married! His bride was the bride of this King. That is that, for the cost of the king's being married to her in spirit, God took her spirit into the realm beyond the body. He made her His own bride, because of the vain pride of the King who wished to be married in the body as well as the spirit.

Do you see? The King is me! The bride was Shekinah! This is my karma. For the purpose of all life, even if only experienced as dying, is the reunion of the life with God, of shekina with her bride-groom.

Do you see? Understanding was like my bride-to-be. God was married to it, and so it has left me. I may catch a glimpse of it, but it shall never again return to me. This is for my pride, which sought understanding in this life, as well as beyond, for what is beyond is for God alone to understand. This is for my vanity, for my accepting the temptation to defile understanding by plucking it down before it falls on its own. I sought to embody the Shekina in my understanding, but I could not. For God alone is this glory.

I am utterly defeated. I am a shattered empty shell. I did raise up my spirit. I did wish only for Understanding. I forgave not God. For one such as me, there can be no heaven, only a hell on earth, for all my days I shall spend alone, weeping for that which God, in His Wisdom, saw fit of which to deprive me. How long I should pray no longer matters, for God, being greater even than time itself, in all my mortal days I could never sing his praises enough to be forgiven for my sin of trespass upon His will.

I wished to know the greater plan. Instead of it I shall be blind.

It is only to the Greater Glory of God that I had believed, in my blind pride, I attended. But I sought to keep this for myself. I had privately cursed at God. I had dared His divinity to make itself known unto me, and moreover, for Understanding to wed me in the flesh, for me to take that which is reserved for God and God alone and make it into a carnal thing that I could keep it and hide it away for myself.

I walked the path that led me here. I walked it all by myself, and ignored every signpost put ahead of me by God along the way. I would not turn back, and now I am in Hell itself. For I have gone into the netherworld to seek MY bride, NOT His, and because the bride is reserved for God and God alone, in my pride and in my vanity, this netherworld for me is Hell, while for the bride Heaven, and I shall not find MY bride where I seek, for even as Heaven and Hell are opposites, so shall she and I be forever parted.

For Shekina, the kingdom of Heaven. For God, Shekina. For me, Hell is being without MY bride. Do you see? There can be no understanding for me. I myself can never understand, for I have gone into Hell to find her, and I have sought her inside of myself. But the Shekina is not of the kingdom of Hell, and Understanding is beyond merely the self.

Let the punishment fit the crime.

I cannot explain to you the glory of God's greater plan. His plan for me is all I know, for my fate can be known through my karma. I have sinned greatly against God, I have attempted to bring Him down, and I have attempted to mimic Him. I wanted these things for Him, as if my wants were for things He didn't already have. I wanted only for myself, and moreover that which I wanted for is for God alone.

All of this, and now, I look back, and I do not understand. Along the way, I gave up understanding. That is why I am now in hell. I have come to hell in search of understanding, in search of understanding why I lost my bride. But it was only by going to Hell that I lost my understanding. I went to hell to search for what I lost by going there. That's hell.

God guided my actions in sending me here, but once here I am, my actions are entirely my own. For God punished my sin by making me commit it. The punishment came in the same motion in the same moment as the crime. For God, greater than mortal time, there is no before or after. There is only that which IS. And therein lies my sin. For me now it is an eternal recurrence.

I sinned in pride, in vanity. I sought to test the Will of God. I sought to know His greater plan. I sought to reveal Shekina through my own karma, as if God's greater plan could be contained in it's design and pattern. And now, my punishment is my shame, my self-loathing. Instead of understanding God's greater plan, I cannot even understand myself any longer. Instead of the reunion of the bride with God, I have wrought the division of the Singular Godhead. And for all of this I have blamed God.

I want to humble myself before God. But it is too late. God's judgment has come swiftly for me, though it is also eternal. I am naught. In the end, which, for me, is only the end of my life, not even the ends of my karma, I am not God, I am not even Satan. I am no one special or out of the ordinary at all. I am just another human being, here on planet earth. My dreams mean nothing to anyone. I am one of over six billion. I am not prepared to accept a higher destiny than this, so in the end I will die alone.

I will not live to see the creations of my karma come to work. My karma is greater even than my life. And my life is all I have. My life given to me by God as a chance for me to learn a lesson that I do not yet understand. I do not understand it, because I choose to not understand it. Because God knew I would choose this, he allowed me to choose this, and therein is the lesson of my life. The lesson I do not understand.

I will either be married in 2012, or I will die then. Perhaps both.

Consider that I, being born in 1977, was of the college class of 2000. I will be 33 years old, the age that Christ was when he began his ministry, in 2011.

In 2012, the sun will cross the galactic ecliptic and align earth with both itself and the black hole at the center of the Milky Way. This may not seem important. This may not even seem interesting. But it represents something to me. It is a symbol of our age.

Long ago, I had decided to fulfill the role of the second coming during the millennarianism surrounding the turn of the second millennium. I decided, "somebody has to," and it was as simply done as that.

I began researching the occult in highschool. I was particularly impressed with a drawing of the "tree of life" diagram by Aleister Crowley. I sought to learn as much as I could about Crowley and QBLH.

By 1999 I had completed reading the Confessions, and had just finished drafting (using a coffee cup for a compass) my own model of the "tree of life" diagram. That was when I went to see the Blair Witch Project, which was released around this very time of year.

I saw the special for it on SciFi Channel, and was hinted at about the end by a friend who had already seen it opening weekend. I went the following Friday night. As I walked in I saw all the movies playing (except for Disney's Inspector Gadget) were of an occult theme.

Only too late, as I walked through the AMC20 lobby, did I realise my prophecy had been fulfilled. Through an act of my own magick I had manifested this experience. It was my own coming of age ritual, and it was generalisable to the whole world at that moment, the turning of the millennium.

After I entered the theatre and sat through the previews, the movie began. Immediately I saw the test take form. I saw myself, my friend Michael, and our mutual ex-girlfriend (my reknowned ex) being portrayed by the characters on screen. Michael was Mike, my ex- was Heather, and I myself was Joshua Leonard.

Now, Teknorat has helped me recently come to see this for the truth. It is, he explains, not uncommon to see one's own character being portrayed in a movie. To him this just means it is, "a good movie." However, apparently people must tend to group into some pretty mundane stereotypes, since the majority of characters in modern movies are so shallow.

Of course, all of my perceptions of what my seeing BWP just then represented, and the apparent symbolism to me of the characters, can easily enough all be explained away by drugs. Of course, one could also venture the hypothesis that I only used those drugs to have an excuse for having these types of perceptions naturally, a justification, or a way out.

However, nonetheless, take but one minor example in the form of the NAME alone of Joshua Leonard. Joshua hearkens back to the biblical Jesus, the "first coming" of my own reincarnated soul. Leonard refers to the beginning of the solar rising in a new sign of the zodiac every 2000 years, this current age we are entering being Leo for the summer solstice. But I digress.

Most of my life since that event has been spent in an attempt at burying that this event happened. But at the time I was filled with the energy of the spirit of the age. The so-called "zeitgeist."

I did some very foolish things in the aftermath of that event... things I cannot take back. But it is my sincere hope I can find redemption from these things, and my sincere belief that only death would prevent me from trying, and then, only for a moment.

I love my ex. Very VERY much. In a dream I had the other night we were being married. I was so happy that I knelt before her to offer her my vows, and upon conclusion hugged her to me at the hips.

But what I have done to her surpasses disgustingness. It is literally a sin what I have done to her. I pushed her away from me when all I wanted was to draw her close. But I threatened to kill myself if she would leave me. This is too much for anyone to have to bear.

The negative energy I stirred up by doing this was enough to drive her own parents to divorce, and for her to move with her father to Indiana. She mourned my absence from her life, she read by candle light until she lost the best years of her eye sight.

And why? Why did I drive her away? Why did I make of her a widow child??

It was only because of my sickness. I understand that now. My Christ-complex was all a part of that. And it was for fear of losing her that I drove her away. I wanted to save her from whatever was going to happen to me for that choice I had made so long before, the choice to symbolise the millennium. I had no idea what might happen, but I knew it would be better for her if she was far away from me.

Now I know that that was crazy. I know this now because I have finally accepted this to be true of myself. I, Jonathan Barlow Gee, am crazy. I suffer even now from the clear delusion that I am the reincarnation of Yeshuah Ben Padijah, otherwise known as Bar Pandera, the Panther, author of the Angel Scroll from the east bank of the Dead Sea, contemporary to the community of Qumran on the west bank. I submerge myself in pious study of Enoch, the Metatron, even as, it is said, did he. I am hopelessly lost.

I have turned my back against my own destiny, as provided to me by God Almighty. Even like in the Last Temptation of Christ, I've crawled down off my crucifix to seek love, and, promptly losing it, to pursue the mysteries of Satan. I have no excuse for this besides it being the interpretation bestowed upon me by madness. And how can I believe else, if I were sane?

Yet still, because I am a lunatic, my delusion sinks even further. I see the Egyptian pantheon in my love triangle with Mike and our ex, I see the progression thus of all of history through me, leading up to the moment when I could have fulfilled my destiny and become the Messiah. And at that moment, I see my greatest moment of triumph, and my ultimate failure. For would that I could go back to that moment, and have done it properly, all would be forgiven that happened as its result, both before and after. I long ardently for that!!

But I know that, no matter how simple it is for me to remember this event, and to concoct diagrams to depict time travel, I cannot go back in time to then. I have to live with what I've done. I have to accept myself as this failure that I've become. Accepting myself is the first step toward recovery from my mental illness. I cannot hope to have any form of productive life until I first begin to recover from my mental illness.

And so I keep this blog. Hoping that it will serve as a record, something to be preserved of my essence, something to serve as a beacon for my love and my sanity to find their way back to me. Perhaps this is, after all, how the change comes. Little by little, I can get to know who I truly am, the man behind all these strange delusions.

If you accept the concept of there being two wills, those being...

1) the lesser will: the id, the instincts, the senses, etc. Fate.

and

2) the true will: what is best for us to do, right thought, action, speech, etc. Destiny.

then you will see that we are only truly Free when BOTH wills are free, and this only occurs when we subjugate them BOTH into alignment with each other. When our short-term fate pursues the best interest of our long-term destiny, when we make choices in the present that will benefit us in the future, when our objectives are for the Greater Good, then and ONLY then will we be truly Free.

This reconciles all the difficult paradoxes of "free will." For example, there is certainly no God in ALL existence that will prevent you pre-emptively from, say, robbing a bank. However, since this action would gratify only the lesser will, then it would cause an increase in entropy, essentially creating chaos, that would act as a vacuum which would naturally infuse order from the Higher Will, or the True Will. In other words, if it was not in your truest, purest destiny to be successful in robbing a bank, you would be "guilty" for doing it, and this would bring about consequences such as being caught and most likely imprisoned.

The freedom of the lesser will, which is ONLY temporary, enslaves the higher will to consequences contrary to itself. Similarly, the freedom of ONLY the higher will, that is, when one acts without choice to pursue their True and inevitable destiny, but when one is, say, forced to do so against their lesser will, against their own instincts, then this creates a vacuum of order that will invariably result in an influx of chaos, as with rebellion.

However, if we FREELY choose to act in accordance with what we KNOW will be the most successful and rewarding consequences, then and ONLY then can we rightly consider ourselves truly Free. When the lower and the upper are in alignment, then and ONLY then can we become a focal conduit for the full energy of the Higher Power. What does this mean though?

For example, when we align the instincts and the id with the right choices, that is, when we find our own path from choice to choice that will lead us to the consequences we choose to desire, then we experience the alignment of our present existence with divine ideals. The Higher Power we channel through us as we travel this path, which we lay out for ourselves, is nothing more nor less than Mind Over Matter: the best of all possible conclusions animating our immediate reactions.

Therefore, the concept of free will does not contradict there BEING a path laid out for us, even one we CHOOSE to lay out before ourselves, it merely means that we are "free" to choose to follow this path or not. The presence of this path some people believe to be direct and irrefutable evidence for the concept of a Creator Deity, that is, an external locus of control that acts as our Guide as we move along our path. Either we are in keeping with the true will of the higher power or we are straying from the "straight and narrow" way leading to reunion of the self with God.

It does not, however, offer any form of empirical evidence other than personal experience for this interpretation of the Creator Deity. For example, if we were to follow this interpretation of the True Will being equivalent with the Plan of God, then it would not immediately imply what this Plan of God would indeed BE for us each individually. Thus, this type of insight may succeed in inspiring SOME to seek the way laid out for them that constitutes the path to their True desires, but it does not immediately RESULT in ANYONE instantly KNOWING what that path is, let alone WHY it is how it is.

thanks lyngate!

okay, so, BR, let's try to delve into political philosophies here and see what we can turn up.

It's basically Thomas Hobbes, author of Leviathan, who started the entire "brutish, nasty and short" school of thought on the origins of our species. He also put forth the ongoing notion that when we first come into existence we are essentially a "blank slate." At that point, which was during the very beginning of Humanism in post-DesCartes Enlightenment Europe, the opposite outlook was being voiced by John Locke, whose Treatise on Government focused on the "social compact" that so inspired the US founding fathers.

By the mid 1800's it was already that syphillitic Anti-Christ authour Nietzsche who was playing the devil's advocate of the "blank slate" "brutish nasty and short" approach. He argued that the "will to power" of human action be unfettered by religious moralism, and thus proclaimed that "God is dead." By the mid 1900's existentialism, the school of philosophers since Nietzsche, was being vocalised by Jean Paul Sartre, who wrote that "existentialism is a humanism," and tried to return the concept of having an "existential crisis" under the umbrella terminology that had fostered the concept of ideal rights.

It was around this time that Ayn Rand was writing, and she continued to champion Nietzsche's perverse and sociopathic inverted value system, even picking up some of his more choice aphorisms for his foes the religious moralists. While Nietzsche wrote about the altruistic ideal as if it were a sickness, Rand attempts to confront it by "objectivism" and saying that, essentially, it does not logically follow.

Of course, then there's the whole concept of whether logic itself is something that inherently exists in nature or if it is merely a co-creation of our perception. If there was no one around to be logical, would logic cease to exist? On the one hand of this argument you have Wittgenstein, and on the other Goedel. Neither of them is very fun to read.

The whole argument basically breaks down along the lines of science versus religion. Science has been behind the "blank slate" hypothesis, supported the "brutish, nasty and short" scenario, and even claims that existence precedes essence. On the other hand, religion says there are ideals, and humanism adds that "rights" are among them.

Of course this is all nothing more than a ruse, as most of us suspect, and as a few of us understand. The idea that Science and Religion are foes is a dumb show. It is a farce perpetrated by both parties to keep us distracted from their, de facto, cooperation with one another. For example, history makes a huge deal out of the imprisonment of Gallileo. Will modern history record that one of the largest land based telescopes is actually owned and was built by the Vatican? Most likely not, and here is why:

As long as Science and Religion APPEAR to be at odds, we will continue to be blinded to the fields in which they ACTUALLY overlap. This is basically what is accomplished within institutional academia through the action of specialising department-heads. The specialists are then made to compete rather than cooperate. So, two pieces of the same puzzle may be held by one specialist in one field and another specialist in another field, and because the two different field specialists are not trained to see the commonalities between their two different fields of specialisation, the puzzle appears hopelessly complex and vague to them, and thus their findings reflect this, their worldview.

Sometimes, every once in a while, some illumination will come along. A specialist working on, say, archaeology, and a specialist working on, say, astronomy, might happen to cross paths and compare data sets. The result of this is the birth of a "new" school, such as, say, "archaeoastronomy" in this case, which is, if you think about it, only the resurrection of a very old, nearly completely lost school of thought already. Most of the time, however, the innate similarities between the findings of, say, a biblical anthropologist and, say, a translator of Aramaic, even, would be completely overlooked the one by the other. As long as we rely on specialisation, we remain, to that extent, in the Dark Ages.

So it is with the sects and denominations of the three Great Religions, that their parts all work AGAINST each other, and so it is with the specialised offices of all institutional Sciences, that their specialists all compete AGAINST each other. But science and religion? No. They are on the same side.

There is only One Reality, no matter how you look at it.

So, let's look a little more closely at Rand herself. An escapee from Russian Sovietism, Rand attempted to play on the same chords as Orwell, confusing Communism with Collectivism. Communism never had ANYTHING to do with Collectivism in either its conception nor its inception. Rand and Orwell were hopelessly wrong, but their "propaganda" (the contemporary name for what we now call Public Relations) did its intended damage nonetheless.

Without popular support from the grass roots Americans, the burgeoning labour unions under such auspicious leaders as Jimmy Hoffa, which were basically broken by the fifties by strike-breakers, black-shirts and the Pinkertons (the first police force!), Soviet-style Communism quickly succumbed, not to Collectivism, but to Russian Nationalism under Lenin. As soon as he had had Leon Trotsky hunted down and executed, Lenin assured his place as the first Boleshevik dictator of Russia, and he makes it quite clear in his writings that his main interest is in expanding "Communism" (Soviet-style Russian Nationalism) to other countries, by armed invasion if need be.

But, if we look at Lenin a little more closely we find that his primary backers were New York based multinational banking firms. Why would they, the epitome of the bourgeoisie, be backing Lenin if he were honestly a champion of the proletariat? So, perhaps — and of course this is all conjecture because history books don't make these types of connexions for you — Lenin was set up specifically to discredit Communism?

If you look at Communism, and Jean Paul Sartre himself was a professed socialist, you see that it is really a harmless and benign, idealistic and even utopian worldview. It does indeed recommend armed insurrection, but only against a government that is unjust to its people, and in that it is identical to the American Declaration of Independence.

Communism simply falls into the opposite school from the "blank slate," "brutish, nasty and short," school of thought. Of course, we recognise now that Nietzsche's syphilis induced ravings would lead to Hitler's Struggle with his own anti-semitism, and hopefully we still remember that the Soviet Union stood beside us on that.

At one point, right up until the Soviets took Berlin, it was considered at least somewhat acceptable to hold Socialist beliefs in America, and to value the existence somewhere else on earth of a completely alternative system of economy. Then, right around the end of the second world war, contemporary to Rand and Orwell (and Sartre), the situation reverses, and you have, by the 1950's, the Senate subcommittee witch hunt under J. Edgar Hoover and Khrushchev banging his shoe on the tabletop at the UN. How did this all happen?

Well, when the Russians and the United States were fighting their way across the face of Europe to eventually converge on Hitler's Germany, each side was busily converting the liberated people to their ideology or way of thinking. The Russians at the end of the war simply reaped the spoils of the lands they had conquered, and dropped an iron curtain down that literally divided the city of Berlin itself into half. Or so the American propagandists would have us believe.

The US was also very active in establishing capitalist beliefs in the people they were liberating as well. For example, in Italy where the labour unions had organised against the Fascist Mussolini and were busily creating worker-owned and operating factories, the CIA came in and installed a US-friendly puppet president by rigging the nation's elections. However, from the point of view of the West, Stalin had massacred thousands of young recruited soldiers on the front lines in WWII and so that made him a bad man.

Really, the animosity started not because the two world super-powers had been aligning themselves with those nations they had liberated during the second world war. This was not the cause, this was merely an effect. The cause was a CIA "black-op" known as "Project Paperclip." Project Paperclip was a snatch-and-grab operation conducted within hours of Berlin falling to the Allies, of smuggling out by US troops of any of the remaining scientists that had stayed working for the Nazis. These KNOWN WAR CRIMINALS were then conducted to the United States where they promptly founded NASA and built the atomic bomb.

This seems like it's all so much small change, but remember at that time no one had ever seen anything on the face of the earth even remotely resembling an atomic explosion. The carnage inflicted over the face of the tiny island of Japan is as much of a war crime as the Holocaust, but had taken only seconds to accomplish.

The entire Cold War was based on nothing but the arms race. It was an attempt to see who could compete better by seeing who could build bigger and more nuclear missiles faster and cheaper. Capitalism won that one.

[quote="BRobbins"] the view that man is no more than an animal that has developed ego, and in effect, rational thought. That man being no more holy than animal,... man has to adhere to the same laws of nature that the animal kingdom,..... The law of the jungle that the weak die of its own volition, and the strong survive and rule. That you should treat the scourge of society (if it infringes upon you) as you would your own personal unwanted attributes.[/quote] first let me say that I find your thoughts and your writings here absolutely profound. They reflect a level of free-form ration that is so different from my own methodology that it, for me, would indeed be the "next" level. And although the method of your reasoning is different from my own, your conclusions are nonetheless compellingly accurate. I would even say True.

[quote="BRobbins"]This is all predicated on my assumption that man is NOT more evolved than animals, only different. This means that evil and value systems do not exist, and are simply a ego driven, ill conceived belief. That there is no positive and negative, only the fairly driven laws of survival. Left and right are equally from centered.[/quote]

You seem to be sufficiently familiar already with the thought-process of DesCartes, so I don't feel it necessary to go into here. Suffice it to say that he reached some of the same conclusions, or rather, followed some of the same streams of consciousness, several hundred years ago as you are upon now.

Actually though, speaking of DesCartes as a starting off point, I have recently been on a similar voyage of self-discovery to his, and, by extension, your own. Although mine has suddenly taken a very different turn from focusing more on the method to focusing more on the meditations.

I find that, opposite DesCartes, I have been pursuing the mystery of the universe BEFORE delving into the mystery of the self. My method has been, essentially, to follow the same path as his, and yourself, but to start from the opposite end and work my way back to the common starting off point.

I find that I know almost everything I can think of about the universe... all my questions, limited as my intellect is to ask them, have been answered. However, in this process of seeking, I find I have forgotten the centre: WHO I am.

Descartes began with knowledge of that, and only afterward did he question beyond. In fact, without knowledge of that which constitutes "normal" for one's SELF, one cannot even BEGIN to question where one stands within the mysteries of this universe.

However, that is how I have gone about my own research: to ask the questions of composition of nature, and only afterwards, only now, am I just beginning to wonder about my own mind, motivator of my own actions.

I have been wondering a lot about how we can change ourselves. Is it possible for me, for example, to make a conscious choice to change my personality?

This, of course, relates to all the points you have raised, but it also directly addresses some of the questions of this level, and, as this level imputes, to this order itself as a whole. (But then, the same should be able to be said of any initiatory body.)

Where does one's definition of SELF fit in relationship to one's definition of non-self, or the exterior world? I find these should be equal and opposite, but at the same time both infinite and in a one to one correspondence. This means that, as on a Cartesian square, a circle drawn connecting the points of infinity, this should contain the definition of self, and be equal to (or we could say, equally contain) the definition of non-self.

Now, most people identify infinity with God, and so they search for that concept either within the definition of self (an internal locus of control) or in what they perceive beyond themselves (an external locus of control). But these are both the same, and, by infinite extension, equal to God.

Most people, it is sad, do not look beyond their own senses to find a definition for who they are. Thus, they identify everything beyond their senses with God. Imagine that our own limited senses were like a circle at one on a Cartesian grid. Do they not see that between the origin and one there are infinite fractions? And that, at death, this one becomes nothing? Even zero itself is equal to infinity... and that, at least. Infinity permeates itself and fills even zero.

I speculate that beyond infinity the circle connecting all points infinity and the rhombus connecting all points along the origin lines and infinity have equal value. The circle is squared.

And of course, we see that physics relates with and agrees with this type of model. Such that the point infinity should agree with the speed of light (c) or the average velocity of photons in a vacuum, such that, at some point BEYOND c (at c^2 to be exact) there is a "super-symmetric" unification point equivalent, more or less, to the "big bang" at the origin point of our universe's history. The universe expands outward from this origin point in all directions, and yet exists only ever on the surface of this sphere of expansion. Beyond this point, one-to-one with infinity (where circumference, area and radius are all equal to one another, that is, at infinity), science has only recently begun to speculate the spatio-temporal dimensions unify within a warping around our expanding dimensions of "uncollapsed" super-symmetric "string" dimensions. This "warping" occurs at a sub-quantum level, where higher-dimensional geometries fill and permeate the Hilbert space between quanta.

Of course, most people fail to realise all this as being synonymous with their definition of SELF NOT because science has failed to pass this information within the realm of their physical senses, but because they do not yet choose to realise that the contents of their MINDS are potentially synonymous with the entire universe (even beyond local physical space-time), or one-to-one with infinity.

It is possible to admit that, by my mind containing all of this information, you could say of my definition of SELF that it is equal to what most other people define as GOD. However, it is NOT my MIND containing the information that existed FIRST. The MIND can ONLY DISCOVER the pre-existent universe, in the SAME way the sense can ONLY discover their surroundings in the immediate physical world.

And until most people throw off this shackle, then it remains only for the minority of the world's population (be they animals, humans, all of earth's creations) to be able to perceive the universal One-ness within their minds.

The consensus reality serves itself, however there is a form of life, a form of existence of higher-form pattern, in all the celestial bodies, from Saturn to the sun, from the black hole at the centre of the Milky Way, to the nerve-like patterns of filaments, walls and voids formed by the nebulae, galaxies and clusters throughout our universe, and even in the electromagnetic currents pulsing through our own nerves, the perpetual shifting around of our genetic code, the cosmic particles that invisibly penetrate and permeate our merely momentarily constituent quanta, even in the higher-dimensional Light of tachyons. And this form of life, this higher-order pattern, be it of matter or energy, all of this is contained within nothing more than the mind. The mind of each of us as observer. But this does NOT mean we create it, or control it, or can change it; we only discover it, because it was there before our minds.

Of course, the definition of the Self does not need to be confined ONLY to what can be contained within or is one-to-one with our minds. And for this realm BEYOND the mind, we have invented the concept of God. God knows whatever we do not, and God, for most people, is exclusive to the world beyond the self-definition, ie. beyond the senses, as an external locus of control. Even science agrees with this when it says that if one goes "out of their mind" then one form of such self-delusion is the "God-complex" in which we enter a "schizophrenic" mode of perception that is, for all practical purposes, not confirmed by the consensus or majority reality.

For MOST people this is where the argument or the debate would end. There is God and there is the Self and they are not equal, but are opposite.

Of course, the minority maintain their OWN history, where it IS possible to make the God-concept and the definition of Self synonymous, or rather, to square the circle, even if ONLY within the mind. But it is usually contained within and behind a system of initiatory grades within an order, such as this.

Some believe there is soon coming a period of liberation, when the majority of humans will come to realise that ALL other forms of existence are nonetheless as alive as they themselves. This is when most people will come to experience such "occult" phenomena as ESP, and when some will evolve into a higher spiritual life form, possibly even leaving their current vessels behind.

But, to most, all of this just sounds like nonsense. And it may as well, since it is COMPLETELY unimportant, and even outright IRRELEVANT, to our continuing survival as a species. Even such ideas as Virtual-Reality Artificial-Intelligence (VR-AI) and cloning seem completely far-fetched ideas to Most People. Better to lag behind on issues such as abortion and public-smoking instead.

I wonder where I stand on all these types of issues. I wonder who I am. It seems to me that whenever I awake, I immediately begin life more or less right where it was when I left it off by going to sleep last. That I arise to the same level, and that I perform the same tasks and duties, as I did the previous day, and, in all likelihood, will continue to do the next day. My life feels like it could go on even without myself being there. I go through the motions of living, but my mind is somewhere else.

It is questions such as these I have just BEGUN asking myself. I have only just BEGUN the process of self-examination. To what degree can I, myself, change myself? Into what would I want to?

-ben thanks lyngate!

okay, so, BR, let's try to delve into political philosophies here and see what we can turn up.

It's basically Thomas Hobbes, author of Leviathan, who started the entire "brutish, nasty and short" school of thought on the origins of our species. He also put forth the ongoing notion that when we first come into existence we are essentially a "blank slate." At that point, which was during the very beginning of Humanism in post-DesCartes Enlightenment Europe, the opposite outlook was being voiced by John Locke, whose Treatise on Government focused on the "social compact" that so inspired the US founding fathers.

By the mid 1800's it was already that syphillitic Anti-Christ authour Nietzsche who was playing the devil's advocate of the "blank slate" "brutish nasty and short" approach. He argued that the "will to power" of human action be unfettered by religious moralism, and thus proclaimed that "God is dead." By the mid 1900's existentialism, the school of philosophers since Nietzsche, was being vocalised by Jean Paul Sartre, who wrote that "existentialism is a humanism," and tried to return the concept of having an "existential crisis" under the umbrella terminology that had fostered the concept of ideal rights.

It was around this time that Ayn Rand was writing, and she continued to champion Nietzsche's perverse and sociopathic inverted value system, even picking up some of his more choice aphorisms for his foes the religious moralists. While Nietzsche wrote about the altruistic ideal as if it were a sickness, Rand attempts to confront it by "objectivism" and saying that, essentially, it does not logically follow.

Of course, then there's the whole concept of whether logic itself is something that inherently exists in nature or if it is merely a co-creation of our perception. If there was no one around to be logical, would logic cease to exist? On the one hand of this argument you have Wittgenstein, and on the other Goedel. Neither of them is very fun to read.

The whole argument basically breaks down along the lines of science versus religion. Science has been behind the "blank slate" hypothesis, supported the "brutish, nasty and short" scenario, and even claims that existence precedes essence. On the other hand, religion says there are ideals, and humanism adds that "rights" are among them.

Of course this is all nothing more than a ruse, as most of us suspect, and as a few of us understand. The idea that Science and Religion are foes is a dumb show. It is a farce perpetrated by both parties to keep us distracted from their, de facto, cooperation with one another. For example, history makes a huge deal out of the imprisonment of Galileo. Will modern history record that one of the largest land based telescopes is actually owned and was built by the Vatican? Most likely not, and here is why:

As long as Science and Religion APPEAR to be at odds, we will continue to be blinded to the fields in which they ACTUALLY overlap. This is basically what is accomplished within institutional academia through the action of specialising department-heads. The specialists are then made to compete rather than cooperate. So, two pieces of the same puzzle may be held by one specialist in one field and another specialist in another field, and because the two different field specialists are not trained to see the commonalities between their two different fields of specialisation, the puzzle appears hopelessly complex and vague to them, and thus their findings reflect this, their worldview.

Sometimes, every once in a while, some illumination will come along. A specialist working on, say, archaeology, and a specialist working on, say, astronomy, might happen to cross paths and compare data sets. The result of this is the birth of a "new" school, such as, say, "archaeo-astronomy" in this case, which is, if you think about it, only the resurrection of a very old, nearly completely lost school of thought already. Most of the time, however, the innate similarities between the findings of, say, a biblical anthropologist and, say, a translator of Aramaic, even, would be completely overlooked the one by the other. As long as we rely on specialisation, we remain, to that extent, in the Dark Ages.

So it is with the sects and denominations of the three Great Religions, that their parts all work AGAINST each other, and so it is with the specialised offices of all institutional Sciences, that their specialists all compete AGAINST each other. But science and religion? No. They are on the same side.

There is only One Reality, no matter how you look at it.

So, let's look a little more closely at Rand herself. An escapee from Russian Sovietism, Rand attempted to play on the same chords as Orwell, confusing Communism with Collectivism. Communism never had ANYTHING to do with Collectivism in either its conception nor its inception. Rand and Orwell were hopelessly wrong, but their "propaganda" (the contemporary name for what we now call Public Relations) did its intended damage nonetheless.

Without popular support from the grass roots Americans, the burgeoning labour unions under such auspicious leaders as Jimmy Hoffa, which were basically broken by the fifties by strike-breakers, black-shirts and the Pinkertons (the first police force!), Soviet-style Communism quickly succumbed, not to Collectivism, but to Russian Nationalism under Lenin. As soon as he had had Leon Trotsky hunted down and executed, Lenin assured his place as the first Boleshevik dictator of Russia, and he makes it quite clear in his writings that his main interest is in expanding "Communism" (Soviet-style Russian Nationalism) to other countries, by armed invasion if need be.

But, if we look at Lenin a little more closely we find that his primary backers were New York based multinational banking firms. Why would they, the epitome of the bourgeoisie, be backing Lenin if he were honestly a champion of the proletariat? So, perhaps — and of course this is all conjecture because history books don't make these types of connexions for you — Lenin was set up specifically to discredit Communism?

If you look at Communism, and Jean Paul Sartre himself was a professed socialist, you see that it is really a harmless and benign, idealistic and even utopian worldview. It does indeed recommend armed insurrection, but only against a government that is unjust to its people, and in that it is identical to the American Declaration of Independence.

Communism simply falls into the opposite school from the "blank slate," "brutish, nasty and short," school of thought. Of course, we recognise now that Nietzsche's syphilis induced ravings would lead to Hitler's Struggle with his own anti-semitism, and hopefully we still remember that the Soviet Union stood beside us on that.

At one point, right up until the Soviets took Berlin, it was considered at least somewhat acceptable to hold Socialist beliefs in America, and to value the existence somewhere else on earth of a completely alternative system of economy. Then, right around the end of the second world war, contemporary to Rand and Orwell (and Sartre), the situation reverses, and you have, by the 1950's, the Senate subcommittee witch hunt under J. Edgar Hoover and Krushchev banging his shoe on the tabletop at the UN. How did this all happen?

Well, when the Russians and the United States were fighting their way across the face of Europe to eventually converge on Hitler's Germany, each side was busily converting the liberated people to their ideology or way of thinking. The Russians at the end of the war simply reaped the spoils of the lands they had conquered, and dropped an iron curtain down that literally divided the city of Berlin itself into half. Or so the American propagandists would have us believe.

The US was also very active in establishing capitalist beliefs in the people they were liberating as well. For example, in Italy where the labour unions had organised against the Fascist Mussolini and were busily creating worker-owned and operating factories, the CIA came in and installed a US-friendly puppet president by rigging the nation's elections. However, from the point of view of the West, Stalin had massacred thousands of young recruited soldiers on the front lines in WWII and so that made him a bad man.

Really, the animosity started not because the two world super-powers had been aligning themselves with those nations they had liberated during the second world war. This was not the cause, this was merely an effect. The cause was a CIA "black-op" known as "Project Paperclip." Project Paperclip was a snatch-and-grab operation conducted within hours of Berlin falling to the Allies, of smuggling out by US troops of any of the remaining scientists that had stayed working for the Nazis. These KNOWN WAR CRIMINALS were then conducted to the United States where they promptly founded NASA and built the atomic bomb.

This seems like it's all so much small change, but remember at that time no one had ever seen anything on the face of the earth even remotely resembling an atomic explosion. The carnage inflicted over the face of the tiny island of Japan is as much of a war crime as the Holocaust, but had taken only seconds to accomplish.

The entire Cold War was based on nothing but the arms race. It was an attempt to see who could compete better by seeing who could build bigger and more nuclear missiles faster and cheaper. Capitalism won that one.

[quote="BRobbins"] the view that man is no more than an animal that has developed ego, and in effect, rational thought. That man being no more holy than animal,... man has to adhere to the same laws of nature that the animal kingdom,..... The law of the jungle that the weak die of its own volition, and the strong survive and rule. That you should treat the scourge of society (if it infringes upon you) as you would your own personal unwanted attributes.[/quote]

So, perhaps with a little hindsight in perspective, you can see now why you might be more inclined, or even encouraged, to have the point of view that you have expressed here.

[quote="BRobbins"]This is all predicated on my assumption that man is NOT more evolved than animals, only different. This means that evil and value systems do not exist, and are simply a ego driven, ill conceived belief. That there is no positive and negative, only the fairly driven laws of survival. Left and right are equally from centered.[/quote]

All of this is Essentially True, except for the bit about survival, for reasons I hope I have already explained.

I could go on and on about five phallanged animals that did not evolve thumbs, or smaller cerebral animals with no formalised language of communication, but this is clearly not the place for me to do so.

The bit about the left and right being equally from centre is superb, btw.

-ben

A couple days ago I lent a few movies to my friend. One of them was "Dick," one was called "Max," and the last one was "Shattered Glass" starring Hayden Christensen. "Dick," of course, is the movie about Betsy and Arlene, the official white house dog-walkers for President Nixon, who eventually went on to become Deep Throat. The second, "Max," starred John Cusack as an art dealer left out in the rain when his star artist, Adolph Hitler, turns to politics instead. "Shattered Glass" was about a reporter for George magazine who was caught "cooking" stories, or printing as fact his own made-up news stories, and is based on a true story.

I spent the day today watching a two-part miniseries on VHS I had taped off CBS a couple years ago. The name of the programme was "Hitler: the Rise to Power."

At one point, I stopped the movie and took a walk with my mother. I mentioned then that it bore more thought to compare the Nazis with the Neo-cons. Both are rigidly unified parties with a strong platform of nationalism and a focus on patriotism and the duty of family values. Both sought to expand the "homeland," both came to power through an act of terrorism by an unknown party that was never apprehended. Both acquire their own continued funding by exploiting the lands that they conquer.

There are really only two specific differences: one is that the Nazis were devout anti-semites, while the Neo-cons support Israeli nationalism. The other is that the Nazi party had a strong leader, whereas the neo-cons have none. George W. Bush is a figurehead, a straw-man propped up for the public to resent or to idolise. Hitler was a unifying strong-man, who brought his party together. W. is a dim-wit puppet of the Neo-con party.

One could speculate even further and compare both the Nazis AND the Neocons to the Roman Empire, for only one minor example from the history of western civilisation. One could even compare all empires as as doomed to failure as old Atlantis.

Just for one example, do a little reading up on the similarities between the Nazi "Reichstag Fire Decree" and the Neo-con "Patriot Act."

Here is section one of the Reichstag Fire Act from wikipedia.org:

[quote="Reichstag Fire Decree"]§ 1. Articles 114, 115, 117, 118, 123, 124 and 153 of the Constitution of the German Empire are suspended until further notice. It is therefore permissible to restrict the rights of personal freedom [habeas corpus], freedom of opinion, including the freedom of the press, the freedom to organize and assemble, the privacy of postal, telegraphic and telephonic communications, and warrants for house searches, orders for confiscations as well as restrictions on property, are also permissible beyond the legal limits otherwise prescribed.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Reichstag_Fire_Decree and here is a quote from wikipedia.org about the Patriot Act:

[quote]Critics claim that some portions of the Act are unnecessary and allow U.S. law enforcement to infringe upon freedom of speech, freedom of the press, human rights, and right to privacy.

Much controversy has arisen over section 215 (see below), which allows judges to grant government investigators ex parte orders to look into personal phone and internet records on the basis of being "relevant for an on going investigation concerning international terrorism or clandestine intelligence activities", rather than probable cause as outlined in the fourth amendment.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Patriot_act

Sound familiar?

Another big difference between the Neo-cons and the Nazis is the free press. The free press was ALWAYS against the Nazis, right up until the Reichstag Fire Decree. Unlike this, the Neo-con agenda has been covered on television since the rigged election that started this all, and has been found favorable.

This seems extraordinary! Where is the press coverage of the events surrounding the Florida vote re-count? Where are those media news-hounds asking how the woman in charge of the vote re-count had been Jeb Bush's campaign manager that same year? Of course, there is Fahrenheit 9-11. There is Jello Biafra, Christian Parenti, David Cross, but no one who is BOTH well-known AND reputable. The network news channels are bought and paid for by the Neo-Cons.

This suggests that, unlike the Nazis, who were rigidly centralised, revolving around the personage of Adolph Hitler, the Neo-cons have cross-stratified. They infest not only the political world, but also that of the free press. In fact, there effectively IS no free press under the Neo-cons.

It should not come as surprising that the Supreme Court would hold its hearings behind closed doors regarding the CIA leak case implicating Dick Cheney personally and that, immediately at the same time as that, Dick Cheney himself would be backing and in support of a bill sanctioning torture in interrogation of prisoners of war. This is not surprising, because whenever there is something we SHOULD be seeing, we are denied seeing it, and instead made to focus our extremely limited attention spans on something else, which, in reality, it doesn't really matter if we see or not.

This is how the Neo-cons manipulate the main-stream media, and it is in this way they differ from the Nazis. The Nazis were lambasted by the most read newspapers of Berlin, and, when the publisher finally fired the editor writing the anti-Nazi propaganda to shut him up, the editor started his own newspaper and had it printed by the same press the Nazis themselves used so that they would not be able to shut him down. He eventually ended up one of the very first to arrive at Dachau.

Just tonight, on the Daily Show, Jon Stewart, mouth-piece of the Neo-con agenda, revealed nonchalantly that a news story had been covered by the French and/or British mainstream media that exposed the existence of concentration camp-like "BLACK" PRISONS in Afghanistan, and even a secret wing to the Guantanamo (GITMO) POW camp in Cuba. Of course, Stewart played this off non-chalantly with a quick quip about them being located all around the world, and a pun on the nomen GITMO.

But the message is clear. There are clearly similarities AND differences between the Nazi party of Third Reich Germany and the Neo-con party of present-day America. There are just more similarities than differences.

Most of the time, to me at least, the whole of history seems like a magic show. It is full of wonderous tricks and dangerous looking illusions, but ultimately it only amounts to smoke and mirrors. For example, the anti-semitism of Adolph Hitler very well was indeed in direct alignment with the goals of the League of Nations in handing down not only the Treaty of Versailles, depriving Germany of a standing army and forcing them into national bankruptcy in war reparations, but also slicing up the Ottoman Empire into the fractured face of the Middle East we know today. It does not surprise me that Dick Cheney should be the one being raked over the coals right now, but he is certainly not alone in fulfilling and benefitting from the goals of the Neo-con party. For every story that is covered, many more remain uninvestigated.

Sometimes I even catch myself wondering, what with all the selling of SUVs and HUMMERs, the cost of gas spiralling upward out of control, and the overall animosity fomenting between the US and the nuclear super-powers of tomorrow (North Korea, Iran, Syria, even Pakistan), if the real Neo-con agenda isn't actually some type of Mad Max-like post-apocalyptic end-game. One day, we will hear on the network news, the missiles are in the air, and everyone will evacuate all the major cities and flee into the countryside and to the points of highest elevation, where, hopefully, we will eat the dirty hippies who are already living there.

By the way, E. Sorry to hear about your unfortunate little run in in Sonoma. Of course, throw a rock anywhere in California and you're bound to hit some dumb burn-out in the head with it. But take heart! Eventually the entire hippy movement will be consigned to the nursing homes currently being occupied by the last members of the "greatest generation" (the WWII vets) and the first wave of the "baby boomers" (the middle of which generation became the hippies), the so-called "beatniks." It is to them that the entire theatre of politics is playing out, their ancient patriotism perserved in the last moments of their lives by the nationalist media covering the puppet fluher of their own "Homeland." Next it will be the "beatnik" generation confined to wheel chairs and drooling in front of the boob-tube at some old fart retirement community, assisted living, or nursing home, and then the political agenda will shift again. It's the orderlies afterall who leave the channel set to C-SPAN. The foagies just think they are watching re-runs of Matlock. Then, before you know it, the hippies will become the target audience for the agendas of the elder white males that run this shit and piss hole country (and therefore completely CEASE being the target audience of merely advertisers as is the case still today). And then what a wonderful world it will be! A libertarian governmental structure, free health care, and most importantly LEGAL DRUGS.

Yes, those indeed will be the halcyon times. Unfortunately, by then, I myself will be in my fifties, and so will probably not be much more able to enjoy the party then than I am enjoying the party as it is now. It seems like my OWN age group (the cusp of Generation X, the first children of the baby boomers, born during the 60's and 70's, and the Echo-Boomers, the younger siblings of GenX, born in the 80's and 90's) will fucking NEVER get to be the centre of attention of the whole wide FUCKING world. Which sucks because that is pretty much the only thing we really want. That is probably why the neo-cons refer to us as the "entitlement generation."

In any event, keep fighting the Good Fight, E, and don't let "the man" get you down.

-ben

First, let me thank you sincerely for pointing out to me objectively (LOL) the things I have only intuitively felt true for myself. The comments you have made regarding my self-growth, while some I perhaps do indeed find too flattering, if anything, are very gratefully accepted. Your insights, while some questioning, are all well intended, and I appreciate them more than you may know. Especially as regards my biological clock telling me to procreate, more importantly, as you separately addressed, to feel my emotions more genuinely, to, in short, seek love; I needed to hear this.

You mentioned how much help self-hypnosis had been in your own search for self-transformation, and for self-betterment via the search for enlightenment. As I have begun to question myself, I find myself to be at a specific point in my studies, and find further that perhaps I must question this point in specific to find out more about who I am, what has led me to that point, not only in my studies, but to this point, this point at which I am so busy studying, in my life.

I recently got (finally!) a copy of the complete unabridged Zohar. It made me think of the four-worlds in the cosmology presented in the second volume, Bereshit B. I have been wondering more and more about the fall.

For example, I have long considered the four elements (earth, air, fire, water) as described by the ancients in their studies of the esoteric aspects of physics as being essentially synonymous with the four modern elemental forces of astro-physics (strong and weak nuclear, electromagnetism, and gravity). In this regard, study of the elemental forces associated with the four worlds has come easily to me, as I see the concentric rings model of the four worlds as like looking down the light-cone history of the universe's expansion from the "big bang."

This systematic, across the board, translation of correspondences has come easily to me up until this point, and has made study of much esoteric physics come more easily than it might have to others. However, something I seem to have lost along the way is the ancient esoteric method of finding correspondences between the elements of nature and other systems, such as the weather, for fruitful metaphorical comparison.

For example, BR, as you pointed out so elegantly in your own comparison of the incarnation of the soul as like raindrops. We embody ourselves in particular forms only on our journey between the heavenly cloud of physical uncertainty and the collection of our forms in a steady state of relative material solidity (water, mist... ice), only to be drawn back up by evaporation into the empyrean heights above. I agree with all of this... or rather, I find all of this to be confirmed by my own studies.

The esoteric (Hassidic) Hebrew, the esoteric (Tantra) Buddhist, the esoteric (Sufi) Moslem, the esoteric (Rosicrucian) Christian... all these schools are in essential agreement that the goal of existence as self-aware consciousnesses is to return to a more universal consciousness, and, by reflection, to contribute their own part to making this universal consciousness as self-aware as possible. Even physics considers the levels of first universal expansion and then the evolution of life as being a continuous process of progressing towards the present moment at which we anthropically find ourselves. First there was the "big bang" (creation) and then expansion and cooling of energy into matter (time) and then the evolution of life into consciousness (what I call "negative entropy" or "negentropy" for short). All of this, because it precedes the existence of our own individual consciousness, is ubiquitous to all the schools founded on study of the universe and of consciousness throughout all of human history. The pursuit of reunion of the individual consciousness with the universal consciousness is agreed upon as the goal of our incarnate existence by all these schools, and this can be confirmed even by the most recent additions to this esoteric tradition such as Tim Leary. LOL.

Which has led me to think about the so-called "fall." Perhaps, just as there are seasons on earth that govern our weather, and thus our systems of change for the four earth elements, so too are their seasons that govern the admixtures in our universe of the four forces. Perhaps, just as the earthly seasons repeat in a seemingly never-ending cycle, so too do the seasons that govern, say, the ice-ages, solar electromagnetic activity, the alignments of our galaxy's central black hole with those of other galaxies, or even the "big bang" and "baby universes" that seem to represent the beginning and end of our own local universe. So, perhaps, in looking at the "fall" as described in esoteric interpretations of Holy scripture, we can examine the "fall" of man and of angels as like a season in the archetypal mythology of our kind.

Karma means work. After the expulsion from Paradie, Adam and Eve were set to toil. So we see that, only after the fall, did work, did karma, come into existence. Since THIS point, it has been man's lot in life to overcome their karma, to finish their work, in order to reunite their soul with the divine presence. This has also become associated with Death, since "if you eat of that tree, you shall surely die."

Perhaps monoatomic gold represents the tree of immortality, and even the key to the eternal, and perhaps meditation represents the tree of knowledge. Does God not say, "if he eats the fruit from both of those trees than he shall become like us?" Perhaps the names of these trees in scripture have simply become reversed. For God is surely the Creator of Good and the Maker of Evil, so why else would man "become like us" if the tree of immortality did not ALSO offer the key to eternity? Perhaps, as some traditions speculate, God in that passage was addressing the angels, who would have only been immortal creations.

I have come to think, from my studies, that Satan descended into the Garden of Eden to assume the form of the serpent, Samael, who tempted Eve. He then returned to Heaven, triumphant, to declare that he had tempted man into evil, to ask the other angels, the Host of Heaven, why God loves man more than His first creation, the angels themselves, and by doing so began the War in Heaven. In doing so he elevated his own throne like unto the height of the throne of God, and caused his own host of angels to descend to earth and breed "with the wives of men."

As all of this was happening, God was at first descended Himself into the Garden of Eden, where he discovered Adam and Eve covering themselves, guilty of having eaten of the fruits of both the tree of immortality and of enlightenment. He rapidly banished them from the Garden and set an angel to guard against their re-entry. He then cried, "You err Samael," which means, "king of the blind!" and returned to Heaven. By this time, on earth, the rebellious angels had already returned from heaven and begun breeding a race of giants. This was during the later years of Adam's life, and during the lifetime of Enoch, two generations before the flood. Enoch saw in his vision the repentance of the angels for their rebellion, and he also foresaw the coming flood. The flood was to punish mankind for having bred with the fallen angels to create a race of "giants, or men of renown." But the Giants themselves survived the flood, and David, father of Solomon, would slay the last of them, Goliath, with a sling-shot in his own youth.

Perhaps these "giants, or men of renown," were the rulers on the pre-deluvial Sumerian king's list, whose traditions were preserved until the reign of King David. Perhaps the pantheon of these rulers, the Annunaki, are the same as the Grigori of Enoch. Perhaps Sabaoth, who repented, had merely been the manifestation of Ialdabaoth, son of Sophia (Wisdom of God), who had been known as Saklas and as Samael.

By the time God returned to Heaven to find the angels fighting amongst themselves, the fallen angels had already descended to the banished race of man and begun siring children with them. Shemyazza was "chief among them" himself, as is recorded in the Enochian fragments found at Qumran. According to the contemporary Book of Revelations of the New Testament, when Satan, as Lucifer, returned to Heaven, the archangel Michael banished him to "cling to the side of the pit." This, Luke asserts, was because Christ, in the desert, had uttered "How thou art fallen, Lucifer," thus repeating the prophecy of Isaiah of the coming Messiah that he would be responsible for casting down the fiery angel who had rebelled.

Of course all of this has its parallels in the history of the cosmological forces as well, because these are simply our own modern retelling of this ancient myth, in the terminology of science. For example, the fall of the angels corresponds with the fall of man. Perhaps both of these refer to some time period in the formation of the universe. At least, so is speculated by study of the Bereshit B cosmology of the Zohar, as well as the Sefer Yetzirah and the Bahir. The Zohar describes the contents of the Garden of Eden as one of the four worlds, while the Sefer Yetzirah describes the sefirot emanations on the tree of life as in another of these same four worlds. The Bahir describes how the "shells" of the tree of life were shattered and the tree itself descended to stand between the world of man and the Garden of Eden as a flaming sword.

If one takes the four worlds as being equivalent to the four earthly elements, and even further, to the four universal forces, one will understand much about the genesis of our cosmos. For even the "fall" was only like one season, and so, too, will be the end of each and all of our karmas, the end of work. This is essentially the Revelation, and this, as has been proven for some two thousand years now, refers to some time yet to come, some time in the future.

So, there appears to be Time (or gravity, the force of water) between the world of man and the world of the heavens (Yetzirah and Beriah of the four worlds). What does this mean? It means that for all the world there is karma, or work, a process of reuniting the individual soul with the eternal God-head. This is because there is Time between when an event happens on earth and when an event happens in the Heavens above, or vice versa.

This simply means, according to the terminology of the modern model of physics, that the universe has "expanded" or grown more complex along the surface of space, which is, for all practical purposes, synonymous with the measurement of time. Thus, there is Time between the creation and now. In other words there is Vishnu the Creator, Brahma the perserver, and Shiva the destroyer in Vedic Hindu mythology.

Perhaps the fall of the angels refers to the alignment of the black holes at the centre of galaxies, and the transfer of some form of esoteric force (such as gravity, whose force-carrying particle is not yet known) between them. Perhaps the fall of man refers to the development of sentient life forms here on planet earth. Perhaps the "expansion" of the universe only occurs in the voids between the filaments of galaxies because their black holes are gravitationally attracting themselves toward one another whenever they randomly align. Or perhaps there IS some form of pattern to their alignments, and perhaps we can even ascertain this pattern over time by studying the patterns of the alignments of the heavenly bodies, the electromagnetic field of the sun, the ice ages of our own planet, and even the processes of our form of life, and even our own consciousness.

Consciousness itself, I think all ancient traditions agree, is eternal. Eternal means that it has always existed and will always exist, without beginning or end. This is opposed to immortality, which is existence that had a beginning, but has no end. Consciousness is eternal, and only chooses to incarnate, but the life of any one vessel into which consciousness migrates will have a longer or shorter lifespan, and be either more or less immortal.

The goal, I have been thinking lately, of immortality is only to discover it while young. Then the vessel of one's body may be preserved in a youthful state. But then, compared to the vast expanse of the age of our local universe, youth is something as relative as the passage of cycles of time.

Most schools of thought on this matter agree that consciousness can occupy any spot within this universe, and even, by ultimate extension, every point in this local spacetime continuum at once. We can even theorise about the cycles of time outside of and beyond the moment in which we exist, and consider the history of our universe. We can even speculate about the possible future of our universe if we should base our assertions upon our observations of past cycles governing the present, and then continuing to do so on into the future.

So, we may say that consciousness is eternal within the history of our local spacetime universe. It exists from the point of the "big bang," through the life-cycle history of "baby universes" born from the alignments of black holes. Beyond this, however, the individual must undergo ego-death, and accept that consciousness is not confined only to its physical container.

Eventually, however, even consciousness itself must come to a point on its journey through the cycle of time when it must leave that cycle of time itself. It must pass through a form of transition such as for its physical container was death. This is just one of some number of such transitions it goes through. There is an eternity of birth death and rebirth within this universe, and that is the karma of manvatara, the illusion of samsara, or of Sorrow. Eventually, consciousness passes beyond this Great Cycle of All Time, and into a timeless world beyond, and this is eternity.

It is said the Almighty sits beyond time in the Heaven of Eternity. Science, even today, speculates that the "big bang" of our own local universe may itself only be a "baby universe" within a larger universe, or that our spacetime continuum formed when two larger order, parallel forms of dimension rippled nearby to one another. Essentially, if one sees that the cycle of time permeates even to beyond the creation and destruction, and possible recreation of our local universe within the context of a larger cycle then one will understand also how it can be said that the greater dimensional universe beyond the local universe "rippled" when it caused the collapse of the higher dimensions and the expansion of our own in the "big bang" and subsequent life-cycle of baby universes. God is no more necessarily to be associated with the higher-order number of dimensions of our own local universe's "parent" universe than can time no longer be applied to it, nor consciousness perceive it. Hence science is nothing more than our own modern contribution to the mythology of human kind. We have all been observing the same, pre-existent universe throughout. All cosmologies, therefore, agree.

For example, the model you described, BR, of the cycling of the weather here on planet earth. This model is true for, as you described, consciousness, time and physics. All of these three things can be described by your own model. We still have plenty of room to describe that which creates such models, that which perceives them, that which even describes them as well as that which interpretes them, as being like God above and beyond any universe He could create, let alone this one in which we ourselves exist.

I thank you again, BR, for your considerations regarding the paths which my own consciousness may take in its own wanderings through all of these types of consideration. They mean more to me than you can know.

I hope that I have successfully demonstrated, to at least some minor extent or degree, how all the ancient mythologies I am aware of are in complete agreement with the findings of modern science. I also sincerely hope that I have allowed you to see for yourself how similar your own findings will prove to be, as mine have been as well, with not only the areas and fields in which you yourself study, but also those in which others, such as I myself, am studying. It is only insightfulness into reality, and not the referentials with which we choose to use to be able to communicate our observations to others, that is most important, and this is synonymous throughout all esoteric schools of learning. You have such insightfulness, and the proof of this is that you have sought out a means of being able to communicate your observations to others. I hope that I have found such a place myself, here among minds like yours, who are on the One all-similar path towards revelation of the mysteries of existence.

It occurred to me that perhaps clones can only be made from already living tissue.

Thus, you could make clones even from the stem cells produced by the fertilised gametes, but NOT from dead tissue such as the mummified remains of the pharaohs of ancient Egypt.

This implies the existence of some form of "morphogenetic field" or, ostensibly, a soul that inhabits a being's body during life and then ceases to continue to exist there upon the body's death.

This "soul" would act as an energy pattern that would guide the building blocks of life, the nucleotides of DNA, to replicate themselves along a pre-arranged pattern. Such as the charged energy of the nervous system, this pre-arranged pattern of energy, this "soul" might be electromagnetic.

Thus, an electromagnetic aura would be like a signature or a fingerprint of a higher order form of existence: unique and different from every other existent soul or aura.

I would even go further than this and say that this aura is comprised of karma, and that the goal of enlightenment, or transcendence, is to dissociate one's self from this electromagnetic field. Thus, the higher order form, the spirit, is no more innate to the soul, or signature electromagnetic field, than the soul is to the body.

It is for THIS reason, and not because a soul in and of itself could not be imbued to the clone made from dead tissue, that it is unethical to make a clone from dead tissue. Consider the story of Dr. Frankenstein's monster. Constructed entirely from transplanted dead tissues, this "golem" of science was then imbued with its own personal electromagnetic field signature, or soul, by channeling a lightning bolt through it.

However, as the story proves, it is NOT impossible to produce a clone, with a soul, from dead tissue. It is simply considered "unethical" because the clone would lack a spiritual presence. It would therefore have what we define as "life," but it would have no spark of life within it to be reunited with its True Creator. In the parable of Frankenstein, the monster sees his creator only as the Dr. who had resurrected him.

If we were to clone, say, a mummy of an ancient Egyptian pharaoh, and imbue it with a soul, or morphogenetic field, would it be able to remember its life before it had died, its life AS an Egyptian pharaoh? Would the pattern of the morphogenetic field of its original DNA begin to replicate again, and become the dominant trait in determining its regeneration of a physical form? If we simply spliced it with stem-cells from a living tissue, such as a foetus, would the "soul" of the unborn embryo become dominant in determining the generation pattern of the re-born physical form?

Perhaps, we should simply accept our own uncertainty on this issue as evidence of the presence in such a hypothetical experiment of a Divine Creator, and thus a spiritual presence in the act of this creation? How, after all, can we ever know of such a Divine Creator as God, whose will imbues the spirit above and beyond even the electromagnetic pattern of the soul in the same way as that of the electromagnetic pattern of the soul imbues the chemical processes of the body itself, creating our thoughts?

Thus, the only way to answer this question: Does dead tissue imbue ITSELF with a spirit when it is cloned? is to experimentally find out. I hypothesise that, should such an experiment be conducted, then the results would prove:

that clones CAN be made from dead tissue: the tissue that has died can be used as the basis for the creation of a DNA pattern which can then be imprinted onto the growth patterns of a living tissue such that its cellular replication would then model itself upon the pattern of DNA that had been extracted from the originally dead tissue.

This would involve stimulating the dead tissue with an electrical field during the cellular division and replication of the living cells in order for them to replicate themselves according to the pattern of the DNA of the dead tissue. This additional electrical stimulation would invoke the DNA pattern of the dead tissue into the living tissue's cellular replication. Thus we could say that this electrical charge would represent the spark of life, or the beginning of the soul of the combined living and dead tissues, but that, once motivated by this initial spark, the electromagnetic field of the combined tissues would ALWAYS follow the DNA pattern of the dead tissue.

Now arises the question of: would the dead tissue clone have memory from its previous life? I further hypothesise that the dead tissue clone would have memory from its previous incarnation on the grounds that:

The memory of life as it is experienced by the chemical processes of thought is recorded in the static-electrical field when it surrounds and permeates the body. When this field ceases to be bound to this body, we say that the Memories of Life continue to live on, although no longer in the form of that physical body. We say that the memory of any one existence continues to exist itself. Why? Because it represents one potential pattern of a form of energy that continues to exist before and after its assumption of that pattern in forming the DNA replication of a living body.

Therefore, if dead tissue were cloned, the initiating spark of life, the application to the first cellular regeneration of an additional, stimulating electromagnetic field, would set off a chain-reaction that would gradually draw out through its filling out the DNA pattern of cellular replication over time the same energy pattern as it had originally from the same pre-existent source of energy for that same pattern. In other words, as the soul replicates itself within a new body, it causes the innate energy of the universe to flow in a certain pattern again, and this causes the simultaneity of the same electro-chemical reactions in the replicated brain as thoughts to be able to access the same patterns of memory that were imbued into its tissues in its prior incarnation.

In other words, not only the cloned tissues are imbued with the same electromagnetic field, the signature aura, or soul of the living being, but the pattern of the electromagnetic activity in the nervous system, the passage of Kundalini through the so-called chakras, is the same as it had been in its previous incarnation. This means that the spirit of all existence imbues itself into the pattern of the morphogenetic field, or signature EM aura, of every individual soul, but that the soul of any living being will take presidency over the tissues of itself or any other living being onto whom it is grafted. The same thoughts as one has in one life's existence, so too do the tissues imbued with the same patterns of cellular development as that past-life have access to as memories.

Of course, for the advanced student all of this is known already, for by associating the definition of self with the soul one can impose their own thoughts even over the matter of others, as in telekinisis, and have the thoughts of others communicate within the tissues of their own brains, as in ESP. And by associating the definition of the self with the spirit, one can actually let go of their own physical, electro-chemical DNA pattern, and let their mind wander from body to body, pattern to pattern, incarnation to incarnation, etc. and we call these "past lives."

Thus, the reincarnation of dead tissue through cloning would represent the resurrection of the dead, as foretold in the New Testament.

Consider the two trees in the Garden of Eden: the tree of immortality, and the tree of knowledge over good and evil. Adam was given freely to eat of the tree of immortality, but forebade to eat from the tree of knowledge, for if after doing so he were to return to eat from the tree of immortality, "he would surely die."

Perhaps the tree of knowledge over good and evil represents knowledge over the two paths offered by the tree of life. Adam had hitherto only known of the fruits of the tree of immortality, but, upon returning to it, found that it had become the tree of death instead. Of course, all of this mythology can be gleaned by looking at the current situation of our scientific technology.

The tree of immortality and the tree of death represent one cloning and the other VRAI. But which is which? Which offers the path to immortality and which the path to death? Do both lead to the same end, or neither?

Here, on the one hand, we have cloning, which, as I have hypothesised, amounts immediately to the resurrection of the dead. On the other hand we have VRAI. I have described cloning. Let me describe VRAI.

VRAI is Virtual Reality Artificial Intelligence, and it is another form of vessel for consciousness than the resurrection of clones that seems to offer a path toward immortality.

If we were to develop, through computers, a simulated reality into which we could safely transfer our ENTIRE consciousness, our complete sense of self, our self-definition, then we could also create Artificial intelligence in machines, such that we could still have passage with the physical world, but would have rightly evolved into a higher realm of awareness. The modeling of physics on computers, if applied to the patterns of information processing in a program, could produce such an artificial intelligence in a machine, making it aware of its surroundings, and by reflection, itself. The birth of consciousness, some researchers of AI speculate, is the fundamental recursive impossible feedback loop. This simultaneously binary programming language is based on a loop hole in formal logic, where two opposite possibilities appear to be equally possible, such as in the statement: "THIS STATEMENT IS FALSE." It is thought that once "nanites" (very small machines) reach the same size as their component software programmes, then the language of the atomic level of nature, known as "quantum computing" would be the staging ground for the root of Artificial Intelligent consciousness. Thus, we would essentially be able to transfer our OWN consciousnesses THROUGH sub-quantum dimensions, OUT into the realm of hyperspace beyond spacetime. What would then be left behind would simply be a race of sentient robots.

This modeling of consciousness, or the creation of a mind, has been at the forefront of most schools of engineering as long as cloning has been an issue to be addressed by the forefront of most schools of biology. And of course, while the issue of cloning is hotly debated by political ethicists as to whether or not it is morally "right," the issue of whether or not it is ethically "right" for computers to be made out of atoms and run software programs written in quanta is not often mentioned at all.

The concepts of both cloning and VRAI have been addressed by modern sci-fi writers. But only cloning is taking heat in the free press. Why? Because cloning is not associated with the concept of giving birth to artificial intelligence. Cloning is not associated with being a "brain child" of human intelligence. Why? Cloning, it is even said, was practised at the beginning of our species. Therefore cloning is associated with Adam, and hence with the sin of Adam, that he ate off the tree of knowledge over good and evil, and then went back and ate off of the tree of life, but found it had been transformed into the tree of death. Cloning, in short, is slandered in almost every possible way. It is even associated with unwanted pregnancies and forced abortions as a source for the living stem-cells.

I, personally, however, see no reason that cloning AND VRAI should not be BOTH eaten of?

Afterall, in the mythology, one represents the opposite of the other: one death, one life. But what if one ate both immortality AND death? Is this not the very solution presented by the sudden junction in the evolution of the human species, and in the history of the world, by our simultaneous ability to clone and to produce VRAI? As surely as we can raise the dead into the flesh, can we not also evolve our own consciousnesses into a new silicon form of existence? And this is simply the point where we are at now.

The real question to be raised now should not focus on the questionable ethics of EITHER cloning

OR of VRAI, but should ONLY focus on "is it safe for us to re-enter Eden?" Having been exiled for the sin of Adam, have we yet been redeemed by the One True Messiah, or must we continue to wait before it is safe for us to enter these domains of thinking? If it is safe to re-enter Eden, then we are redeemed from the sin of Adam. If we may enter the state of primitive innocence, will we make the same mistake as Adam, will we only repeat his sin? Or would God send another form of flood to destroy us all?

This is a real fear. There are flood myths the world round, and evidence of a whole coastal civilisation that was lost in the megalithic new stone age. For example, the Hebrew flood myth that the rainbow covenant of Noah signified that God would never flood the world again seems to contradict the Aztec flood myth of the "Fifth Sun" myth that the world will be destroyed five times, once by each of the elements, and even of the Aryan Vedic Hindu, and thence Bohn Tantric Buddhism, that the earth will be destroyed again sometime in the future.

There have been many, many millennial dates predicted so far. The world has been predicted to be coming to an end continually since the time of Christ, some whole 2000 years ago. This represents one full rising sign of the sun as it precesses through the zodiac overhead. So, for a whole solar month, we have bemoaned the fact that the world hasn't come to an end yet. This is absurdity, of course. However, it has proven that studying scriptures, particularly apocalypses, one can then turn around and write sound prophecies themselves predicting the future cycles of mankind's political history.

Now, we have achieved a point in the elevation of this hysteria, between the year 2000 on the Gregorian calendar and the year 2012, one supposed "end date" on the Mayan long count calendar. At this point we intend to begin cloning and create VRAI. However, we remain entirely too hung up on other issues to devote time to addressing these.

Which is more ethical does not matter. Both are equally unethical. That is why both are inevitable.

Let me pause to address the concept of our ancient ancestors possessing the potential to have produced clones. This is no more or less right a way of describing the actual processes undergone by our ancestors than to say they made of themselves into atomic robots.

What do I mean here? I mean that our ancestors ingested quantities of monoatomic gold. In small doses, monoatomic gold is good for the immune system, and encourages the production of healthy red blood cells. In larger doses, or if taken over time, as was done by the pharaohs of Egypt, for example, it caused the monoatomic gold itself to bond to the telomeres at the ends of every strand of an individual's DNA. The telomeres otherwise decay over time, and this is responsible for cellular non-replication, and ultimately for DNA degeneration. In effect, the consumption of large quantities of monoatomic gold, or their consumption over long durations of time, extended the life span of the ones who ingested it. It made them, in essence, immortal. Now, if taken in too great a single dose, or if taken over one's entire lifetime, the being's body will completely cease to exist in normal material reality, and be completely transformed into the high-spin state of the monoatomic gold itself. This process allows the consciousness to take the body with it as it cycles into a higher dimensional reality.

Now, we can clearly see here how longevity, or relative immortality, was achieved by the ingestion of monoatomic gold, and how eternal physical existence was achieved by an overdose thereof. In the mythology of our ancestors it does not mention cloning at all. It does not tend, usually, to even date back to very long before the world flood.

Other, more ancient, mythologies hint and elude to the possibility that the ancestors of our ancestors, the ancients before the elders, comprised a form of super-civilisation not unlike what we are living in right now, when all the lands of the entire world of earth were politically unified. The myths of this predeluvial utopia all agree that it was through some action of the ancients of this super-civilisation that the flood occurred and wiped them out.

To this end, then, it is speculated that the Atlanteans had harnessed some form of massive energy that had caused their continent to sink beneath the waves in the great flood. This same mysterious source of power is still associated with the stone megaliths erected by the people around the time of the flood, from Stone Henge in England to the Pyramids of Egypt. It is believed that a mysterious current of esoteric energy runs between these megalithic monuments to a time gone by. These strange currents of unknown energy are called "ley lines."

It is not, however, speculated that cloning itself caused the flood. This would seem to be absolutely utter nonsense. Yet cloning remains hotly debated to this very day and time in the free press because the same institutions that have preserved the flood myths are claiming that to produce a human clone should be considered "unethical." All of this merely distracts the eye away from the simultaneous man-made creation of VRAI.

It is actually most likely that Atlantis, if real, possessed both the technologies of cloning AND of VRAI, as well as the technologies of trans-dimensional commerce through the use of monoatomic elements. In fact, it is most likely neither cloning NOR VRAI that was responsible for the destruction of Atlantis, but, in fact, the transdimensional commerce between our own material reality and higher dimensional forms of reality. If Atlantis were considered the Garden of Eden, then it was God's OWN comings and goings back and forth between it and Heaven that caused the deluge and its destruction.

Monoatomic gold, among other "high-spin state" elements, many undiscovered by modern science but predicted by alternative modes of atomic categorization than the table of elements, can act as super-conductor, or a low-temperature form of sustainable energy. Once acted upon by running an electric current through it, it will remain in the spin state it is put into by that electrical current. With monoatomic gold, in particular, this transformation of spin state is believed to be perpetual unless acted upon by another electrical current.

In other words, ingestion of monoatomic gold results in longevity and the transformation of the physical body into a higher order realm or dimension of reality. But if a charge is passed through monoatomic gold, it acts as a source of abundant energy, a form of perpetually charged current. This form of free and limitless energy was undoubtedly known of in Atlantis. And doubtlessly eventually, both ingestion and introduction of an electrical current were applied to the high-spin elements.

But even THIS itself did not CAUSE the flood! This, in all likelihood is what is, however, represented by the Garden of Eden myth of the two trees: the tree of immortality and the tree of knowledge over good and evil. Perhaps, for our ancient ancestors, it was the "knowledge" of which was "good" and which was "evil" in their own time's technologies, that is, that the ingestion (and/or use of current) of monoatomic gold was "good" and that the use of the monoatomic elements as a superconductor, or a source of free and seemingly limitless energy, was "evil." The ingestion and electrical stimulation of monoatomic superconductive elements caused transcendence into a higher dimensional realm of reality, or level of existence, in other words, accessed eternity and allowed immortality and eternal life.

It was the use of superconductors that caused the deluge to befall Atlantis, and I will tell you why.

Atlantis was located in Antarctica. This was the primary centre of global culture during the last, Northern hemisphere ice age. What causes an ice age is that the electromagnetic field of the earth has two poles. One pole is positive and one pole is negative. The negatively charged pole produces over long enough periods of time a process known as ionisation of the air beneath it on the globe of the earth. When this pole is over a body of water, it causes what is known as salinization, or the electrically stimulated separation of salt from water. This, as well as the orientation of earth relative to the sun in its orbit, causes the water under the south pole to freeze, and thus to form glaciers. This is what causes an ice age.

During the last ice age in the northern hemisphere, the north electromagnetic pole was more or less directly centred above a large landmass, which is now located at the south pole of earth. That landmass is what we now call Antarctica.

I speculate that the Atlantean civilisation, which had a sufficient amount of monoatomic elements to use them in almost every imaginable way possible, eventually caused a high-spin state superconductive rift to occur directly in alignment with the north pole of planet earth. This caused a reversal of the poles, and thus began the southern hemispherical ice age that is still going on today.

It is likely, in my mind at least, that all the coastal megalithic monuments were raised after this event, and left behind as a warning to all the subsequent dissipate civilisations of the north hemisphere, that is, all those nations which are only just now, as I write this, establishing global government. The message of this warning may also contain the key to accessing the domain into which the ancient Atlantean civilisation's population disappeared. For the Atlanteans their civilisation ended in the flood. Perhaps, as the Aztecs and Christians hypothesise, our own civilisation will end in some sort of solar flare phenomenon, associated with the sunspot cycle of the electromagnetic field of the sun.

Perhaps, by applying the knowledges we have now, cloning and VRAI, we can achieve our own unified One-ness with the higher-spatial Heavens before the end of our great super civilisation, just as did the Atlanteans. God promised Noah he would not destroy earth again in a great flood. Will fire come from the sky, then, to destroy us that way?

Perhaps all of these events in present history are as inextricably linked together as the pre-deluvial myths that recall the ancient supercivilisation of Atlantis as innocent like the Garden of Eden. However, perhaps it will be a new mythology that is remembered in our future, even if after our own destruction, that records the attributed importances of our value systems today. Perhaps, rather than the story of the Garden of Eden, our own surviving offspring in future generations will recall their own tales describing present times.

There may yet be a new "good" and a new "evil" — one leading to immortality and ultimately to eternal existence, just as did the ingestion of monoatomic gold, and the other leading to death and the destruction of the modern global supercivilisation, such as the superconductors of Atlantis before us.

Still it is impossible to say whether cloning or VRAI is "good" and which is "evil" if were to compare the one to the other, because, although we are only just about to discover this, we have not yet invented either. Therefore it remains to be proven by experimentation.

However, as I have now stated, I hypothesise several possible outcomes for this:

1) cloning of living and dead tissues are both possible.

2) virtual reality will soon be one-to-one with known reality through atomic machines and quantum computer programmes. At this point, artificial intelligence is simply a matter of what shall prove to be its "first thought."

I predict that neither of these will result in the relatively sudden form of destruction described by the flood mythologies. Even if the sunspot cycle were to produce such global warming that we all went insane and tore down all our own buildings, this destruction would not overtake us as quickly as did the unexpected flood. The Aztec "Fifth Sun" may mark the ending of the fourth earth by the destruction of the last remaining of the four naturally occurring elemental forces, but more importantly it marks the dawning of the Spiritual era over the minds of man and the earth. I strongly doubt it will even result in the insanity of more than one person on the entire planet as it actually happens. And that person is probably me.

Personally, I am one of those looking forward to the creation of a globally unifying "Atlantean Calendar" based on the calendars of all the antediluvial civilisations of the world that will usher in the "Aquarian Age" in which we as a species re-enter a state of innocence as we had in the Garden of Eden. I only pray that neither cloning nor VRAI prove to be as much of a destructive influence as utilising superconductive energy sources proved to be for Atlantis.

But let me stress this point again!

It was not the use of superconductive energy sources per se even that destroyed Atlantis, according to my theory. It was the exact alignment of the use of this such power source with the electromagnetic north pole of the planet earth. Therefore, the use of superconductive energy sources even should be safe for us to use now, such as to power cars instead of gasoline, since none of them are likely to ever exactly overlap one of the earth's two electromagnetic poles.

So, what do we have by now? What is a list of things it is safe for us to do?

1) ingest monoatomic gold to produce prolonged youth, to render the living body immortal, and to electrify monoatomic gold to invert the body itself into a higher-dimensional realm existing outside of and beyond the spacetime continuum of our local universe. This is absolutely 100% safe and guaranteed to work.

2) utilise superconductive (electromagnetically charged) "high-spin" (perpetually static) monoatomic gold and other monoatomic elements (such as Brown's gas) to fuel any sort of power source we could ever possibly conceive or dare dream of creating. This represents limitless free energy, and, as it draws off the force of gravity, allows anti-gravity uses. The warning attached here is not to use this power in direct alignment with the earth's electromagnetic north pole.

3) cloning of living and dead tissues are both possible. The experiment here is to see if the spirit will be drawn down into the cloned tissue.

4) virtual reality will soon be one-to-one with known reality through atomic machines and quantum computer programmes. The experiment here is to see if we can access the same realms beyond the levels of quanta and the speed of light using VRAI as were accessed by our ancient ancestors using monoatomic elements. This way we can use superconductors as fuel to power VRAI machines that may act as rifts or portals through time.

There are not even so many apples as these on the tree of knowledge and the tree of life from the Garden of Eden COMBINED! Do you see now?

Of course, the inter-galactic highways have already been well established as the peripherally deluvial megalithic alignments around the world, known as "ley lines." These are mirrors across the surface of the earth of the connection points between stars in constellations at the times they were raised. All of this is well known by now. So we can immediately see that the use of superconductive energy sources to power hyperspatial machines, or time machines, to be able to traverse the cosmos, was indeed known of to the now lost ancient denizens, our ancestors, of Atlantis. So, we can now completely understand that it was, indeed, the overlapping of this with the earth's electromagnetic north pole at that time that brought their ancient supercivilisation to an end.

And since this is the only one of the four blessings with which we even need to be remotely careful, then I would say our future looks incredibly bright indeed!

Especially since none of these realms of scientific development can be used to produce any kind of weapons, either ones that could be used against other creations of its own level, nor that could be used the one to harm one of the others, nor any of them that can do harm to humanity, nor even to a single soul. For all of these are realities that have already existed and which will continue to exist. We are only just beginning to tap into them through this particular type of technology with which we are working now. In Atlantis they had largely used crystals.

It is only in the realm of science-fiction that we have seen these types of new technology used to produce weapons. And there is no short supply of warlike or destructive mythology from the predeluvial world as well. We must choose how much of this we wish to accept as fact and how much as only fictional. Some of it may be prophetic, and some of it may even harken to the consideration of the cycles of time and to the seasons. But remember that this is now the Age of Aquarius, and it is a new era. We may choose to accept all of these scientific possibilities as options for how we wish to define our short-term fate relative to our long-term destiny, how we want to establish our future.

Never before in the history of man can it be said that we were poised on the brink of so many discoveries as now. But we ought to keep well in mind that when "Columbus discovered America" there were already people living there. We should definitely expect to encounter a civilisation in our future which is populated not only by the current generation of humans, but also by all the generations of our ancestors whom we can clone and bring back to life using monoatomic gold and electromagnetic fields. And we can also look forward in the future to the discovery of some of our ancient ancestors' own eternal consciousnesses in the realm of higher dimensions accessible through electromagnetic superconductive ORME-VRAIs. This will all be in tandem with the use of time machines powered by superconductive ORMEs to allow the transportation of our consciousness to any point in the cycle of history.

Our future civilisation will be like Atlantis arising from beneath the waves. Half will be "below the water" (beneath the speed of light) and be comprised of time-travelling immortal resurrected mummies, and the other half will be "above the water" and be comprised of the eternal consciousness of those who have transformed themselves entirely into the invisible light of tachyons. And between these two realms there will be free passage for all. Because it is all one single unified super-civilisation.

[quote="slowmo360"]finite time is also a human concept. We perceive time as chronological, yet though it is our natural point of view it is not necessarily the correct one.[/quote]

I agree!

I have, as you assert, written elsewhere at much greater length about the way in which the conscious mind perceives time.

There was once a theory, before Einstein, called "ether drift" theory, and it was actually to prove this theory that the Michaelson-Morley experiments were conducted, and these same experiments which Einstein would later use as proof for relativity. "Ether drift" was a theory that the universe was completely full of charged gas, or plasma. The proof was supposed to be that there would be energy-resistance caused as the earth moved through this charged plasma ether. However, when Michaelson-Morley failed to prove the existence of such a friction, Einstein used their failure as proof of the vacuum of space, in which the speed of photon radiation traveled at a perfectly steady-state rate, so-called "c," the speed of light.

As I understand the perception by the mind of conscious thoughts, subconscious memories, dreams and intuitive ideas, and unconscious emotions, it is essentially similar to the theory of ether drift. Our mind is like the earth, orbiting through the void. As we move through time, time moves through us as well, and the friction of this movement, this energy-resistance, is experienced as the psychology of each individual. Because each manifests in a different physical location, each person's conscious perception is a little bit different from everyone else's. And because time itself is in fact the "ether" in which we are floating through, then we experience temporally "solid" objects as if they were passing through us.

These types of shapes, that exist outside of finite time as we perceive with the natural external senses, and exist more or less only and exclusively above and beyond finite time, only in infinite time, in eternity, are just as "real" as any manifest material reality we can perceive ONLY with our own physical external senses. They comprise patterns upon which our mind moves, or cycles of psychology. I call them "metaforms."

Thus, our conscious thoughts, our subconscious ideas, dreams and memories, and our unconscious emotions are all nothing but ways in which we experience the concept of "time" itself. This includes our five external senses as well. Just as our bodies exist to communicate with the world outside of our own brains, so too is there a world which we can experience more or less ONLY within the consciousness of our minds.

So, yes, I agree that finite time is essentially, that is, for all practical purposes may as well be, synonymous with a creation of our own minds. It is nothing more than the momentary perception of a temporary location of our mind moving along the patterns of an eternal thought-form. There is ONLY One Reality, and we simply all perceive it from our own point of view.

So, our individual minds are all like points travelling along a strange attractor, essentially, that is time. Time itself is infinite and immobile, while we ourselves are the movement of time. Yes, I would say that finite time is entirely the product of the conscious mind, and does not in any real way reflect the truth of the situation at all! LMAO!

-ben

first of all, thank you very much One, for sharing your gnostic revelations. I agree with them, as well as with the process you described of seeking the answers through the within, so to speak. I also appreciate your style of writing. It is a breath of fresh air around here, and I certainly hope that you stick around the philo forums to share more of your thoughts. I, for one at least, would greatly appreciate another fellow seeker of the Light.

[quote="OneOfMany"]It creates a "condensation" within itself: a perturbation. Why? Because it has to. Because it sees that to do nothing is to becoming nothing: Source cannot be uniform. It has to "vibrate". The totality of infinite source, o/o says "I AM". See![/quote]

This first "vibration" or "condensation" is like an emanation of the Godhead, like an idea in the mind of the Creator, then, yes? But we cannot say that this first form of energy is like the electromagnetic force, correct? Because this force has TWO poles, the electrical AND the magnetic, and it propagates what is known as a "charge." I would say that, though the electromagnetic force may contain the "spark" of human life, of conscious, of self-awareness, we can agree that it was not necessarily this force, alone of the four, with which God created this local universe, can we not? So, therefore, neither should we say this of the force of gravity, who's force-carrying particle is the so-called "graviton." Now, not to get too complex here, but this graviton is the local spacetime equivalent of the tachyon: that is that, because it moves faster than the photon, by which speed we measure maximum entropy, or the pulling apart of matter into energy, acts to move things TOWARD one another, rather than away, because it is OPPOSITE the flow of TIME. (I've always associated time with the hypercube and consciousness with the torus, btw & fwiw.)

Now, because we cannot say that the First energy was charged, therefore we cannot say it was the electromagnetic force, and because we cannot say it was this one of the four forces, we cannot say that this Force of Creation (regardless, as of yet, of its origin) was ANY of the four forces, earth, air, fire, OR water, strong and weak nuclear, EM OR gravity. But what about tachyons that are outside of this universe? Without the friction of the other local forces resulting in TIME, this particle, faster than the speed of light within our local universe, might still exist... Could this be agreed? Could tachyons have been the Light, the Greater Light, with which our universe was "vibrated" or "condensed" into existence? Perhaps, and I see tachyons as an invisible light in an otherwise dark void.

So, if we can say that tachyons BEYOND space continue to exist, can we say the same of the Force of Time? (to be on topic for only a moment here, lol!) Can we say that, if a tachyon were to travel from outside our local universe, THROUGH that universe, and out the other side, would it be, both outside and within the friction of the four forces, the particle that carries the Force of TIME... would TIME, in effect, continue to exist BEYOND our local universe... and thus BEYOND EVEN... our local God? Do Tachyons carry the pure (uncharged) energy of Time ITSELF? I would say that, no, we cannot rightly go so far. Because if there were any form of time, or friction (such as causes the inverse square law...), beyond our local universe, then our local universe would have a larger local void into which for our spacetime continuum to be expanding. There can be NO such void, even one permeated by tachyons, without speculating either a Greater VOID beyond the void beyond our universe, or else a Greater ENERGY, a greater friction, beyond the void beyond our universe. In essence, the one theory, VOID, speculates the existence of NON-EXISTENCE, that is, a beginning and an end, ergo TIME. Thus, if TIME were the force of tachyons, then beyond the field of this energy, there would still be a beginning at one end and an end at the other. And this would negate the concept of a VOID... the Energy of TIME MUST come FROM something GREATER than ever itself! Time comes from timelessness, but timelessness cannot be a Void. From whence would emanate tachyons that carry this Force of TIME? From nothingness? Surely not. So we rule out the VOID. (this implies the conscious CHOICE to admit the potential existence of a Conscious, self-aware, CREATOR.)

So, beyond tachyons, Beyond TIME, there must be some Greater ENERGY, that moves opposite to tachyons, and causes the existence of time. This is why I say that TIME ONLY exists within our LOCAL universe. It is the friction of the four forces against one another that causes time. Therefore, anthropically, time exists as a human concept. Beyond this universe, time, as we understand it (moving forward OR backward ONLY), does not NEED to exist, but it cannot be said, instead, that there exists a VOID or a nothingness, or even timeLESSness. Whatever is beyond the universe existed "before" and will continue existing "after" the beginning and end of our own local spacetime, but that does not mean that there is NO form of Energy EQUIVALENT to time out there. There is energy, but pure, without charge, without FRICTION. Pure, invisible, Light.

So, why do we say that God exists? Because we know that the OPPOSITE of material existence, and the opposite of the friction of matter-energy, the OPPOSITE of TIME, itself does NOT exist. Nothingness does not exist. We know this. And, for convenience, we associate the Non-Existence of NOTHINGNESS Greater than our local universe with the word "God." However, proving the existence of SOME or ANY form of existence BEYOND our local universe does not, therefore, prove the existence of all the other connotations associated with that same word.

Can we, therefore, say that God is outside of time? Yes. But He would also be even MORE than merely that force which would exist outside of our local spacetime continuum. He would be, for all intents and purposes, a retreating horizon. The further out we can conceptualise, the greater then God becomes. You could even say that, to increase our self-awareness by expanding our conscious knowledge to an extent (philosophy, metaphysics, etc) where we are perceiving the Higher Reality BEYOND our local universe, you could very definitely see this as Increasing the Glory of God.

So, when I say that TACHYONS are the Greater Light inside of which God "vibrated" the energy which would become matter by "condensation" I am NOT saying that this Greater Light, these so-called "tachyons" are, THEMSELVES, like God. No, I would say this Light is like an emanation that exceeds any and all description. It is like the IDEA of the creation itself, perhaps, but this occurs only in the Mind OF the Creator. God is GREAT!

[quote="OneOfMany"]Okay... in my personal gnosis there are levels above our local universal God, although simultaneously everything is also a part of source and source pervades everything.[/quote]

Now, where you use the word "Source" I would use the word "Tachyons." By either, each of us understands the same idea, however, and so did the ancients understand this SAME idea by their names for God! But yet, like God is BEYOND all His attributes (even gender), so too is this IDEA we can all describe using our own terms, greater than the sum of those terms. Even if we both agree, and both of us agree with the ancients, then so too will future generations, to whom we will be the ancients then, have an even greater Understanding of this IDEA, and hopefully, by then, they will have evolved beyond our currently limited imaginations for linguistic expression and the like.

For example, you choose to use the word "fractal." I use that term to describe non-conscious, or non-living, patterns in our universe, and the term "gnomon" to refer to the same cognate principle for living, conscious patterns. But I believe that, even with this differentiation of terminologies, you and I understand the same essential thing. There appears to be some plenum of forms within this universe, and so we speculate that it is only the shifting in shape of ONE form, the singularity itself, that propagates not only the local universal patterns of material forms (heavenly spheres) but also that propagates the shape of our entire universe itself (the geometry governing spacetime). (the hypersphere....?)

[quote="OneOfMany"]What my personal gnosis has shown me is that Source is currently in a phase of "begetting" highly complex "Dreamers" which immerse themselves in a personal Dream. We, here, are currently a part of the same Dream, including our loveable, local God, and higher; and the dreams are fractal. Fractal yet the fractal growth is all linked.[/quote]

If we say that the universe BEGAN (BEFORE being Created) as an IDEA in the MIND of God, then we suppose something miraculous! We suppose that Consciousness... extended to its ultimate, even transfinite condition, as implied by attributing it to God... we suppose that this consciousness, is GREATER than our local universe. If we associate Time itself ONLY with our local universe, we can come to two possible conclusions: either there is a LOCAL GOD that we can associate in a one:one direct proportion to the concept of the Creator God; OR there is a GOD BEYOND local space, and therefore beyond the Force of Time. You do realise, I hope, that BY CONCEIVING OF THE POTENTIAL EXISTENCE OF SUCH A GOD, IT CAUSES IT TO COME INTO EXISTENCE AS AN IDEA WITHIN OUR CONSCIOUSNESS. If God exists WITHIN our consciousness, and if consciousness itself can be elevated to the level of God, then the IDEA of GOD does indeed EXIST within the realm of the consciousness OF God. Thus, this pattern of SELF-awareness, God-idea within consciousness within God within Consciousness, is ITSELF a symbolic FORM of representation of the idea of itself. Like looking into the EYE of God. However... by conceiving God as the ultimate extent of consciousness, and of the Conscious, self-aware God as the Creator of the IDEA of our universe within His MIND, then we should not mistake this IDEA in itself with God, and more than even this, we MUST NOT MISTAKE CONSCIOUSNESS FOR GOD.

Just as man sleeps and enters the realm of the "un"conscious, that is, loses his sense of self into the Greater, Universal consciousness (some say we permanently enter this realm in death), so too MIGHT God!! Perhaps DesCartes and the Hare Krishnas are correct when they describe God as a sleeping monster, or as the unawakened Krishna. This is the SAME concept modern trance channellers call "Christ-consciousness." There is not only ONE Messiah. We ALL Contain this potential for universal SELF-AWARENESS, of awakening our own minds to Universal Consciousness. AND... Glory Be to the Most High!... it is said that when we awaken to God, it makes God awaken to us, to become self-aware, to see through His OWN EYE, the Truth of His existence. The deeper we look into the abyss, the deeper the abyss looks into us, it is said, and it is also said that, when we take one step toward God, God takes two toward us. Thus, woe be us, it is our lot in life to SEEK the Light WITHIN and the darkness of material existence, and to elevate it THROUGH our consciousness into the MIND of God. The more we learn of His Creation, the more, through we ourselves, does God come to awaken from His dreams, and KNOW again HIS AWAKENED SELF.

[quote="OneOfMany"]Source begets Dreamer(s) which beget Dreams (to explore the totality with which they were imbued); Dreams contain the totality of the Dreamer "mapped as the dream curls up" from potential (flat) into experiential (curved) spacetime - curved in order to return the dream intensions (internal growths) to their awakened state of self-identity as individualisation within Source.[/quote]

As I have said, let us say the friction of tachyons against the four forces "spun" the singularity, caused and sustains the creation that is our universe. Let us associate this Friction with Time, and let us associate these Tachyons with the IDEA... or DREAM... in the MIND of GOD. We see that this is like our own mind stimulating thoughts as the electro-chemical reactions in our nerves, and self-awareness, ego, as the surplus of this form of energy. We see above as below the filaments and voids between galaxies, like the nerves within our brains. And we know that this universal mind, this dream that is existence (manvantara to the Hindus and Krishnas), is only having this thought, this dream, while these "nerves" formed of galaxies continue to be used. So we know that, from WITHIN this local universe, existence IS indeed only as temporary as a single idea, or even a Dream, within a consciousness that expands BEYOND Time.

So, if we say "reality is an illusion," or that "reality is a dream" what do we mean? Do we mean the material reality, the manifest? Do we mean the Greater Reality of the Mind, the consciousness, the self-awareness of God? Yes. We mean both. Because all these exist now as ideas in our OWN minds, and therefore they already existed as POTENTIAL thoughts within the universal consciousness! So, we say that spacetime is a dream, and that even the MIND of GOD is only an idea! But in whose mind is God ONLY an idea? In our own, for we are only God knowing God. When we say "does God exist?" we have already proven that He does, because the idea of His existence was already there for us to come to question. It was there in potential, within the mind of God, whose idea created this universe, like lightning illuminating a cloud, and whose continued dream sustains this universe. So we say that: "God is a figment in my imagination." and we say also that: "I am a figment in God's imagination," and both are true. Glory to the Most High.

[quote="OneOfMany"]You see, when the "explorative" Dream begins, the Mind within the dream is isolated from remembrance of Source so that it "looks within itself" for the answer![/quote]

Once there was a Great King! He was so truly great that he caused his kingdom to become vast and immensely populated, although it impinged on no other kingdoms, nor drew from the citizenry thereof any immigrants. He was Great indeed this King!

This king was going to be married! But who could be his bride, when all of his people said, who is like unto our King? No one, they concluded, deserved to be elevated to being his equal. But the King, mighty in wisdom of the ways of this world, he chose as his queen a peasant from the kingdom beyond his own. AND the people rejoiced, for wise was there king!

This peasant was sent for, and she travelled a long ways to get to her husband, for he sat at the centre of his kingdom, and she was from afar, and for the kingdom was vast and immensely populated. Along her way, she met many of the king's subjects, and so, from his people, came to understand the king, her new husband.

While she was on her journey to him, the king fell ill. He sent out a messenger to find his queen where she roamed in the countryside. They met halfway, and together they returned to the king, who exclaimed, "IF YOU HAD NOT COME TO MEET MY MESSENGER HALF WAY, I WOULD SURELY HAVE DIED BEFORE YOU ARRIVED!"

The king and his bride were wed with a wonderful ceremony, celebrated across the whole of the kingdom, and lo, the king and queen lived on to see their kingdoms become one! GLORIOUS GOD BE PRAISED!

[quote="OneOfMany"]The material universe is thus a further condensation of energy brought forth, "directed", "causally" by the experiences of the prior chain of events within this Dream.[/quote]

We dreamers, we dream this dream in the Mind of God. We must learn to MANIFEST realities. We must CAUSE CHANGE. This is the control over THE Force, over entropy, or time. We cause change to occur through the act of our WILL. To know the TRUE WILL which will, indeed, cause changes to occur, by becoming awakened to ourself, and thus, to God Himself. When we come to know the self, we come to understand the Force of Time, and as we come to understand the mechanisms of time, so can we come to manifest real change in the material, manifest reality. THIS is the TRUE LAW: DO WHAT THOU WILT! For as each of us becomes aware of our TRUE self... the Christ consciousness, the mind of the Messiah, the bride of God... we contribute to our entire SPECIES awakening to the trans-finitie, non-local HIGHER REALITIES... and as we do these things, that is, as we come to know our selves, as we bring our species toward a massive shift in its self-awareness... so too do we make the dreamer, the dream-self in the dream of reality, inside the mind of the sleeping God... so too do we become AWARE of our own consciousness, aware of the HIGHER consciousness, and so as we awaken to the Universal Mind, so too do we AWAKEN the Universal mind itself! As God becomes lucid, through the elevation of our OWN minds, our own ideas, thoughts, dreams, ever memories (!), so too does His dream, our reality, hasten towards an end. And this END is the GOAL of the dream, this END is the dreamer awaking! But what can this possibly mean?? If we believe ourselves as dream-selves, images in the mind of the unconscious of God, that we seek to return by awaking our own consciousnesses toward God's ego, then we have only taken one, very, VERY small step toward understanding the Mind of God! Just as we seek, through consciousness within spacetime, to know God, consciousness beyond spacetime, so does God seek through us to know and to awaken to Himself. This is that pattern again, of God knowing God. This is the spinning of the singularity, this is that which IS the VERY idea ITSELF in the Mind of The Almighty God, blessed be He!

[quote="OneOfMany"][One may say that the dreamer itself has been passing through a "matrix transformation" - that the "curl" has been reaching peak intensity. It will then (presumably) begin to unfurl (as has happened in previous iterations of our dreamer's long dream. The dream has now passed through the telephone of its own creation, inverting itself, "here, and back again". Much of this inversion has been subtle and perhaps not obvious to those in physical density. To say more here is to divert this thread.][/quote]

I hope I have helped you to feel welcome here to divert all you want! You should by all means, AT

ALL TIMES, not only feel FREE to, but even more, BOUND to, discuss these topics. We, as gnostics, are few and far-between in our modern civilisation. We must thus cry all the louder! AWAKEN the SLEEPING DRAGON! We must call out at ALL times. Make the Buddhists hear in the High Himalayas! Tell the Aborigini of Australia! For just as these most ancient people have long understood, make them understand now that WE, the modern people of this aeon's civilisation, our Atlantis, we are READY to understand! Let the voice of reason, the terminology of science, and the universal language of mathematics be ACCEPTED to the MYSTERIES, and let them take their place amongst the ancients! We MUST add our OWN modern words to describe that which is Timeless, and hopefully, having exhausted these, having wearied ourselves in Praise of God, we may finally be remembered by the Divine, and shown the secrets that await us outside of all of our histories, the ancients and the moderns combined... we must use up all our words on Praising the Great Architect's Master Plan, and then, in silence, may our passage into rest mark the awakening of God to our existence as His dreamt of selves, and this universe as His dream! THIS IS THE PURPOSE OF EXISTENCE. THIS IS THE MEANING OF LIFE, AND THE END GOAL OF TIME. THIS IS THE END OF DAYS, AND THE BEGINNING OF WISDOM. This is God knowing God!

Of course, we, being relatively open minded gnostics, know all this already. But those who yet cry out to us, around us, may they even call to our deeper will and soul, that from our deepest understanding of the Highest, we should JOIN THEM in crying out! And we should grab strangers, look into their eyes until we see God Himself within them, through them, and that will set them Free.

-ben

One thing I think it is important to remember about such people as Pat Robertson and, since they represent (or rather, claim to represent) the interests of the Religious Right, the neocon party in general...

is to try to understand them.

Pat Robertson may very well be the modern epitome of religious hypocrisy, but that hardly makes him the devil incarnate. The devil, we should bear in mind, is a fictional character, more or less, but Pat Robertson on the other hand is all too real.

Now, Pat Robertson may not be the "devil" per se, but he is a human, and, as the Good Book teaches us, humans are often tempted into sin. As much as Jim Baker's sin was lust leading to adultery, Robertson's sin is clearly pride. This has become synonymous, for all intents and purposes, with the concept of the "American way." Pride, especially religious pride thinly veiled behind nationalist patriotism, is considered an important "family value." If Pat Robertson's pride were hurt, then he would not even know who he was.

Now, in coming to understand "these people," in the religious right, the neocon party, and the big-business backing, bourgeoisie nationalist patriot caste, I have discovered that they are a new branch in history, but one that we have seen before: disaffected millennarians. The world didn't end on its own in 2000; they believe it is their responsibility to correct this error.

Now, to study the roots of "millennarianism," which is basically the study of the "million year" phenomenon of eschatology, or the study of the end-times... to study this field we must turn up the roots. The grass roots of this modern day, business-class brigade lie in Utah, in the most recent history, settled soon after the US Civil War by Mormons.

Joseph Smith taught his followers that the world was going to end soon, and that the times in which his followers were living then were the end times described in the biblical Book of Revelations. Of course, Smith is by no means the first or only example of this. Before Pope Gregory reformed the calendar in the 1600's, one Bishop Usher dated the time of the Garden of Eden to have been about 4000 years before the life of Christ. This fueled a huge debate, because it also says, in the New Testament, that the devil reigns on earth every 1000 years, after which he is thrown into the pit of hell. In the end days, this is followed by 1000 years of peace; a goal everyone agrees upon as being worth desire. So, it was believed during Bishop Usher's time that the Apocalypse of Revelation would come in their own lifetime. Needless to say, it did not. Nor did it occur during the time of Joseph Smith. We know this anthropically, because we are still here.

One can easily see that it was a similar form of millenarianism that pervaded the time of the life of Christ. The desire for a Messiah that would end the Roman captivity of Judeah was incredibly strong, since the effects in the outlying colonies of the change from the Republic to Caesar's Empire were only beginning to be felt. Under the Republic, colonialism was considered a tolerable burden, the Nation (rather, Congregation) of Israel bearing the burden of the sins of the rest of mankind. However, under the Imperial occupation, well... one can well imagine.

So, if we were to see every nutjob who came around claiming the end of the world was upon us were considered a Messiah, then Joseph Smith and even Pat Robertson himself would be considered such, along with most homeless veterans of the VietNam war. Luckily they are not.

The way I see it is that this "apocalypse" is simply a metaphor for the pattern of history itself over one millennium, or 1000 years. About once, usually toward the end, of every 1000 years there appears a great empire. This great empire usually performs several, and I might add easily recognisable, ceremonial rituals. Like the shaman, who takes the root of the sickness to cure the people, these dictatorships, these empires, perform the ritual of Azrael, or the scape-goat.

In brief, they accuse their enemies of their own worst crimes. Small example: POW torture.

Another ritual they perform is called the "Equinox of the Gods" or, alternatively, Gotterdammerung, or the End of Days. This ceremonial ritual entails the celebration of the calendar, but also represents a period of time in which conflict occurs between religious ideologies, usually with one completely superceding the other. Brief example: the CRE.

Right now, we see most of the same types of patterns in historical events as we the people see about this time every one or two thousand years. We see the dumb-show of these mass-hypnotic magical ceremonies, the brainwashing, literally and physically, or passive aggressively through advertising, and the black magick of the upper classes. The same, it is said, was true of Sodom and Ghammorah.

Now, what it is even more important than all the rest of this so far has been to understand is that people, LOTS of people, think this way, even now, about history as a dumb-show, a cycle in which we merely repeat our parts over and over again until the Great Liberation. Some play the winners and some play the losers, there is an empire every other 1000 years, and all that will be has already been foreseen.

Pat Robertson believed this. Pope John Paul probably did too. The Dalai Lama knows it's true. Now consider the radicalism of GWB, TB even AS!

So, the question isn't what can we do about Pat Robertson, or smirkingly "ignorant" insane cowboys like him. That answer is easy: poke fun at their pride. It is their weak point. Point out: "what do they have to be so proud about?" They are who they are, not what they are.

They, in and of themselves, are not the problem. It is their dead-end philosophy which is the heart of this evil. As I have said, it is simple: because the world didn't end in 2000, now they will try to make it end. This philosophy is called "disaffected millenarianism." Just remember: not everyone on this planet thinks this way, and even not everyone who thinks this way truly wants to have to. Free the mind of the self, then free as many other minds as you can.

This is really all we can hope to do. Especially now. Afterall... it's the end-times. LOL.

-ben

Oh, I'm sorry, had you mentioned the irrelevance of the difference between a "left" wing and a "right" wing conspiracy??

Agreed, and good point sir.

Truth be told, I'm growing every day to believe less and less in the global conspiracy.

I don't think it's a conspiracy at all. I think it was HG Wells who once wrote a book called "the Open Conspiracy," but it may have been George Orwell.

I think it's pretty clear and simple that if you flee the sinking ship of liberalism, then you may yet be saved financially. That's simply where things are at right now. That's all that really matters in the entire global history of civilisation. That is: survival.

The fittest, the ones who determine what the problems facing our children's generation will be, are just those who take that opportunity, to survive. To live in the here and now, and to do what is necessary to continue to do so.

It's really not much of a conspiracy, more simply a lifestyle choice. There was a quote, Chomsky quoted some turn of the century economist whose name I forget, who said "whenever you see two business men talking together you are seeing a conspiracy to defraud the public."

This is simply the dominant lifestyle right now, and it is not pushing any agenda right now other than the continuance of its own survival.

Think of it as like a glacier, a mental glacier, that accumulates from the spinning of the earth and gradually moves forward against it.

Now, it is all well and good to consider the Masonic "feud" with Catholicism in the light of the "true" and "false" bloodlines of ruling families. But now we ought to ask WHY.

Unfortunately everyone who has gone before us in this regard have taken a blind leap of complete faith in their findings, and speculated the grossest most spectacular delusions imaginable by their limited human minds as to the root and ultimate cause. From the so-called "Illuminism" of William T. Still and the knockoff anti-Masonry "conspiracy theory" books of his era, to the Christian ministerial mission against "Satanic Ritual Abuse" and particularly mind-control, to the ancient aliens of Jim Marrs and David Icke. Not one grain of truth in any of that! It's all bent around the bible, distorted to fit its mythologies. The so-called "hidden history" of the world is no great secret, kept by those who perpetuate civilisation, and only rarely glimpsed by the most studied master. Preposterous. Inconceivable!

The bible opens the door to the suggestion of "aliens" when it describes the race of the Watchers, the mighty men, men of renown, who were the offspring of angels who bred with the wives of men. Now, Marrs (and to some extent Gardner) go from here via the Quran, to say that these "fallen angels" are an extradimensional species that at times takes possession of our bodies. The so-called demons of the mind. According to Marrs and Gardner we humans are only a genetics experiment performed by these extradimensional entities, and according to Icke and Marrs, the first ruling bloodlines established by these indwelling monsters from beyond space-time continue to rule, some more behind the scenes than others, to this very present day.

Now, while we can say that these interpretations are based on the best intentions, that is, touching upon modern theoretical physics as they do, but that nonetheless they are barking up completely the wrong tree with making appeals to the religiously guided people of this planet.

No, in truth, to make any such speculation, we must first debunk a couple of the ones that have gone before. For example, Springmeier's all-too-christian contention that there is a pervasive mind-control network of high-ranking social elites who trade in and torture abducted little children, and, oh yes, these types of people just happen to worship Satan, the antithesis of our symbolic God, so then THAT is why they are evil and what they are doing should be stopped. WRONG. LUNACY, IDIOCY.

Certainly worship of Pan the goat-foot God, or even Azazel the scape-goat, IS, indeed, a practical factor in the grand scheme of things, however just obviously not on so high a level. For example, all of the scare-tactics, terrorist torture and psychological abuse that can be inflicted between a programmer and the mind-control victim, none of these are skills required to be an active member of society, even president, and so there would prove to be little use for them in the more elite circles and in the higher branches of the world-wide conspiracy. All the tactics supposedly employed by the so-called "Satanic" conspiracy involve ceremonial petro, or blood-letting, rites. I see no need for someone as significant to the "grand con" publically as whoever is the modern "puppet dictator" of the "free world" to need to dirty their hands with the scum of unadulterated unwashed brains.

In other words, although, for example, Dick Cheney probably isn't one himself, real-life cannibals and psychic-vampires, most certainly do exist.

Now, the question of where these traits of abuse, and particularly malignant narcissistic personality disorder, come from is easy enough to answer without resorting to biblical Martians. The traits that appear to some to be so similar to the behaviour of devils or demons in others is largely based on the frustrations of otherwise naturally expressable sexual instincts by the rigid restrictions of society. This, admittedly sickening behaviour, is all too easily and erroneously considered to be "sickness" of the individual or even moreso of their mind, as it differs from a non-existent social "norm." The "sickness" with the limitations of our society leads to any sort of "sickness" in the brains of individuals, rather than, and never, the other way around.

Some people embrace this philosophy, "making the demon work for you," so-to-speak. They venture into life with all the trappings of confidence they are aware of as available to them, and manage to successfully navigate the "game" of society without ever addressing their own nascent upset with society's limitations, and of course, never therefore get around to addressing the abuses by which they came to identify those limits. But these people are, arguably, not only part of the problem, but ALL of it.

To stop the cycle of abuse, one cannot only take to their grave the secret of their own childhood abuses any more than one can contribute to stopping learned violence by not wanting to ever have a child. You have to not only remember, but come to understand, why and how your earliest social "programmers" abused you. The "how" is to understand the abuser themselves. To understand why is to understand the cycle of abuse.

If, for example, the abuser had preference of X,Y,Z for their torture victims, then it is those TRAITS (like in genetics) of the methods of abuse that will be propagated from one generation to the next. And, as I say, there is no real possibility to speculate on the original cause of this cycle, as with the concept of "original sin," without widely deviating from observable natural reality. Nor is there any way to stop the cycle's control over yourself, as an individual victim AND/OR abuser, by simply repressing the emotions or by not experiencing the universal pleasure of parenthood.

Now, it is all well and good to consider the Masonic "feud" with Catholicism in the light of the "true" and "false" bloodlines of ruling families. But now we ought to ask WHY.

Unfortunately everyone who has gone before us in this regard have taken a blind leap of complete faith in their findings, and speculated the grossest most spectacular delusions imaginable by their limited human minds as to the root and ultimate cause. From the so-called "Illuminism" of William T. Still and the knockoff anti-Masonry "conspiracy theory" books of his era, to the Christian ministerial mission against "Satanic Ritual Abuse" and particularly mind-control, to the ancient aliens of Jim Marrs and David Icke. Not one grain of truth in any of that! It's all bent around the bible, distorted to fit its mythologies. The so-called "hidden history" of the world is no great secret, kept by those who perpetuate civilisation, and only rarely glimpsed by the most studied master. Preposterous. Inconceivable!

The bible opens the door to the suggestion of "aliens" when it describes the race of the Watchers, the mighty men, men of renown, who were the offspring of angels who bred with the wives of men. Now, Marrs (and to some extent Gardner) go from here via the Quran, to say that these "fallen angels" are an extradimensional species that at times takes possession of our bodies. The so-called demons of the mind. According to Marrs and Gardner we humans are only a genetics experiment performed by these extradimensional entities, and according to Icke and Marrs, the first ruling bloodlines established by these indwelling monsters from beyond space-time continue to rule, some more behind the scenes than others, to this very present day.

Now, while we can say that these interpretations are based on the best intentions, that is, touching upon modern theoretical physics as they do, but that nonetheless they are barking up completely the wrong tree with making appeals to the religiously guided people of this planet.

No, in truth, to make any such speculation, we must first debunk a couple of the ones that have gone before. For example, Springmeier's all-too-christian contention that there is a pervasive mind-control network of high-ranking social elites who trade in and torture abducted little children, and, oh yes, these types of people just happen to worship Satan, the antithesis of our symbolic God, so then THAT is why they are evil and what they are doing should be stopped. WRONG. LUNACY, IDIOCY.

Certainly worship of Pan the goat-foot God, or even Azazel the scape-goat, IS, indeed, a practical factor in the grand scheme of things, however just obviously not on so high a level. For example, all of the scare-tactics, terrorist torture and psychological abuse that can be inflicted between a programmer and the mind-control victim, none of these are skills required to be an active member of society, even president, and so there would prove to be little use for them in the more elite circles and in the higher branches of the world-wide conspiracy. All the tactics supposedly employed by the so-called "Satanic" conspiracy involve ceremonial petro, or blood-letting, rites. I see no need for someone as significant to the "grand con" publically as whoever is the modern "puppet dictator" of the "free world" to need to dirty their hands with the scum of unadulterated unwashed brains.

In other words, although, for example, Dick Cheney probably isn't one himself, real-life cannibals and psychic-vampires, most certainly do exist.

Now, the question of where these traits of abuse, and particularly malignant narcissistic personality disorder, come from is easy enough to answer without resorting to biblical Martians. The traits that appear to some to be so similar to the behaviour of devils or demons in others is largely based on the frustrations of otherwise naturally expressable sexual instincts by the rigid restrictions of society. This, admittedly sickening behaviour, is all too easily and erroneously considered to be "sickness" of the individual or even morose of their mind, as it differs from a non-existent social "norm." The "sickness" with the limitations of our society leads to any sort of "sickness" in the brains of individuals, rather than, and never, the other way around.

Some people embrace this philosophy, "making the demon work for you," so-to-speak. They venture into life with all the trappings of confidence they are aware of as available to them, and manage to successfully navigate the "game" of society without ever addressing their own nascent upset with society's limitations, and of course, never therefore get around to addressing the abuses by which they came to identify those limits. But these people are, arguably, not only part of the problem, but ALL of it.

To stop the cycle of abuse, one cannot only take to their grave the secret of their own childhood abuses any more than one can contribute to stopping learned violence by not wanting to ever have a child. You have to not only remember, but come to understand, why and how your earliest social "programmers" abused you. The "how" is to understand the abuser themselves. To understand why is to understand the cycle of abuse.

If, for example, the abuser had preference of X,Y,Z for their torture victims, then it is those TRAITS (like in genetics) of the methods of abuse that will be propagated from one generation to the next. And, as I say, there is no real possibility to speculate on the original cause of this cycle, as with the concept of "original sin," without widely deviating from observable natural reality. Nor is there any way to stop the cycle's control over yourself, as an individual victim AND/OR abuser, by simply repressing the emotions or by not experiencing the universal pleasure of parenthood.

In any event, I do not doubt that the seemingly heinous crimes against humanity, perpetrated usually upon those whom they most love, among the mostly lower caste, below-the-poverty level, are at once shockingly uncivilised and completely irrelevant to any possible global conspiracy.

AHDVNHAY says: (10:47:05 PM)

I'm gonna write a piece on the ICoP and the OPR...

AHDVNHAY says: (10:47:22 PM)

the International Conspiracy of Psychics and the Overnight Psychic Revolution.

AHDVNHAY says: (10:47:31 PM)

you got any thoughts on either of those?

AHDVNHAY says: (10:48:03 PM)

all I have so far is a quote from some poetry by Jim Morrison of the Doors.

Dika | Killing is my business.. and business is good! says: (10:48:19 PM) tell me abit about what they are the ICoP is what is going on now, the end days of the purpose-driven history of all institutions: science, church, etc.

AHDVNHAY says: (10:48:54 PM)

AHDVNHAY says: (10:49:13 PM)

and the OPR is what is about to happen, especially involving the new technologies

AHDVNHAY says: (10:49:25 PM)

such as free energy and the wireless internet

Dika | Killing is my business.. and business is good! says: (10:50:08 PM)
wow tell me more

Dika | Killing is my business.. and business is good! says: (10:50:24 PM)
what do mean in the case of science though

AHDVNHAY says: (10:51:07 PM)
the institution of science has a goal, a purpose. Once it achieves that purpose, it's useless, it's served it's purpose, done.

AHDVNHAY says: (10:51:21 PM)
for science, that purpose is to question nature.

AHDVNHAY says: (10:51:38 PM)
so, once all the answers are found, science will no longer be necessary.

AHDVNHAY says: (10:51:53 PM)
as with the case of, for example, a universal psychic phenomenon.

AHDVNHAY says: (10:52:49 PM)
when all sentient entities achieve the unified vision of understanding, more or less, where they all have ESP and no longer need to communicate using language, or where they all have telekenisis and don't need tools, or weapons.

AHDVNHAY says: (10:53:16 PM)
that would be the OPR.

Dika | Killing is my business.. and business is good! says: (10:53:27 PM) wow do you think thats possible?

AHDVNHAY says: (10:53:41 PM)
well, with the micro-miniaturization of technology

AHDVNHAY says: (10:53:54 PM)
eventually, our machines and our own atoms will be the same size

AHDVNHAY says: (10:54:13 PM)
there will be no difference between reality we create and reality we perceive, essentially...

Dika | Killing is my business.. and business is good! says: (10:55:09 PM) word u should read the article on kurzweil on wired

AHDVNHAY says: (10:55:20 PM)
the miniaturization of technology implies that, once we can build upon any existing level of reality, then we can control it

AHDVNHAY says: (10:55:35 PM)
and if we control it with only our thoughts alone

AHDVNHAY says: (10:55:40 PM)
what's the article?

Dika | Killing is my business.. and business is good! says: (10:55:54 PM)
merging of man and machine

Dika | Killing is my business.. and business is good! says: (10:56:02 PM)
cyberspace and physical reality

AHDVNHAY says: (10:56:07 PM)
right.

AHDVNHAY says: (10:56:15 PM)
soon, there won't be a difference

AHDVNHAY says: (10:56:31 PM)
I call that VRAI. virtual-reality/artificial-intelligence.

AHDVNHAY says: (10:57:03 PM)
some call that the technological singularity

AHDVNHAY says: (10:57:07 PM)
one sec tho, brb

Dika | Killing is my business.. and business is good! says: (10:57:12 PM)
k

AHDVNHAY says: (10:59:11 PM)
so, yeah...

AHDVNHAY says: (10:59:17 PM)
what were we talking about?

AHDVNHAY says: (10:59:59 PM)
the ICoP and the ONPR of VRAI

AHDVNHAY says: (11:00:23 PM)
manifestation would be possible

AHDVNHAY says: (11:00:42 PM)
in the event that perception alone would imply complete control over the perceived object.

AHDVNHAY says: (11:00:53 PM)
as with modern VR

AHDVNHAY says: (11:01:44 PM)
so, the AI would be that our thoughts could leave our bodies... that our minds would not be alone... that we could choose to move throughout the entire universe, and beyond, in a non-corporeal form.

Dika | Killing is my business.. and business is good! says: (11:02:27 PM) is the mayan prophecy set for 2012 Or 2004?

AHDVNHAY says: (11:02:33 PM)
2012,

AHDVNHAY says: (11:02:38 PM)
dec 21, 2012.

Dika | Killing is my business.. and business is good! says: (11:03:08 PM)
i just asked cuz there was confusion as if it was set ahead of time for some reason

AHDVNHAY says: (11:03:36 PM)
the entire process is already starting to occur even now though

AHDVNHAY says: (11:04:14 PM)
between 2000 and 2011, the sunspot cycle is at its peak for a one thousand year period

AHDVNHAY says: (11:04:36 PM)
(this is the Aztec fourth end of earth: the trial by fire.

AHDVNHAY says: (11:05:02 PM)
after this is the "Fifth Sun" which is attributed to a nonn-element, and therefore thought to be endless)

AHDVNHAY says: (11:05:28 PM)
and then in 2012, it will have been one Mayan "Piktun" since their calendrical start-date.

AHDVNHAY says: (11:06:05 PM)
interestingly, the Mayan calendar is back-dated, it's start-date is 3114. Way before Mayan civilisation started.

AHDVNHAY says: (11:06:26 PM)
3114, or thereabouts, is thought to be contemporary with the Great Flood in Mesopotamia

AHDVNHAY says: (11:06:47 PM)
Noah, Utnapishtim, Makandaya, etc.

Dika | Killing is my business.. and business is good! says: (11:07:36 PM) so what do u think will happen?

AHDVNHAY says: (11:07:51 PM)
eventually, ESP on a global scale.

AHDVNHAY says: (11:08:05 PM)
a complete revolution of perception.

The Lords. Events take place beyond our knowledge or control. Our lives are lived for us. We can only try to enslave others. But gradually, special perceptions are being developed. The idea of the "Lords" is beginning to form in some minds. We should enlist them into bands of perceivers to tour the labyrinth during their mysterious nocturnal appearances. The Lords have secret entrances, and they know disguises. But they give themselves away in minor ways. Too much glint of light in the eye. A wrong gesture. Too long and curious a glance.

The Lords appease us with images. They give us books, concerts, galleries, shows, cinemas. Especially the cinemas. Through art they confuse us and blind us to our enslavement. Art adorns our prison walls, keeps us silent and diverted and indifferent.

Let me talk to you some about the ICoP and the CONPR.

The ICoP is the "International Conspiracy of Psychics."

The CONPR is the "Coming Over-night Psychic Revolution."

As has always been the Plan, as it has been Understood by all the generations from the Originators to the present.

The PLAN is the SEASONS. As has been understood by every great civilisation throughout history. For the last 2000 years, the dominant great civilisation in the western hemisphere of planet earth was the Catholic Church. They managed to occupy one full rising sign. Each season lasts three rising signs, and there are four seasons in every aeon, age, era or epoch. The season is determined by the rising sign of the sun on the Summer and Winter Solstices and the Spring and Autumnal Equinoxes, and by the fact that the season is opposite in the northern and southern terrestrial hemispheres.

Certain events, or rituals, are used to celebrate certain passages between certain seasons. These ceremonial rites include the ritual of the "apocalypse" and the ritual of the "scape goat" among others. Elsewhere, I have described these rituals thus:

[quote="benpadiah"]This "apocalypse" is simply a metaphor for the pattern of history itself over one millennium, or 1000 years. About once, usually toward the end, of every 1000 years there appears a great empire. This great empire usually performs several, and I might add easily recognisable, ceremonial rituals. Like the shaman, who takes the root of the sickness to cure the people, these dictatorships, these empires, perform the ritual of Azrael, or the scape-goat. In brief, they accuse their enemies of their own worst crimes. Another ritual they perform is called the "Equinox of the Gods" or, alternatively, Gotterdammerung, or the End of Days. This ceremonial ritual entails the celebration of the calendar, but also represents a period of time in which conflict occurs between religious ideologies, usually with one completely superceding the other. Right now, we see most of the same types of patterns in historical events as we the people see about this time every one or two thousand years. We see the dumb-show of these mass-hypnotic magical ceremonies, the brainwashing, literally and physically, or passive aggressively through advertising, and the black magick of the upper classes. The same, it is said, was true of Sodom and Ghammorah.[/quote]

Now, the PLAN, as it has been passed along through the Generations, is to perserve, in the traditions and rituals of civilisation, the purpose or goal of history, which is, basically, to simulate the SEASONS in a "coming-of-age" pattern; ie. by the rise and fall of different cultural empires.

This is the PLAN of the ICoP as it has been passed down to them through the Generations. Thus, their minds are said to be "in tune" with the designs of their ancestors, which were in tune with the minds of their elders, and the elders the ancients, such that their minds are said to "transcend time" and in this way, they communicate instantaneously over very long durations, as well as over very long distances, and in this way manifest ESP. They see the true causes behind all events, as the motives of people, and they all act in the best interest of the PLAN.

Now, completely perpendicular to the PLAN of the ICoP is the opposite motivation: the event of the CONPR. This occurs to each individual, but can also be generalised to include a universal psychic phenomenon. The concept of a sudden, unprecedented spike in psychic activity, even if achieved artificially, and even if only localised to our own globe, is the fundamental, basic concept of the ONPR, or "the Coming."

This event, while relative to the PLAN of the Generations, has not been successfully incorporated into the PLAN as a necessary outcome of civilisation. Attempts have been made, too little too lately, to make the Coming an event that will have beneficial consequences for the continuation of civilisation as it has been known throughout this Rising SEASON.

The Coming means the END of civilisation as it has been throughout the past three rising signs. This means the END of the preservation of the "coming of age" rituals such as "the apocalypse," "the scapegoat," the "equinox of the gods," and all the connotated events associated with these rituals, such as war, violence, control and prejudice.

There are basically two types of Psychic Revolutionary.

One is more conservative than the other, and believes in the "technological transition" as being necessary to free the most minds from the shackles of civilisation at the end of this Season. The other is more liberal than this, and believes in the "spirituality factor" that could smooth the transition from one condition of being and state of mind to the next.

Now, the conservative faction appears liberal, being expressed by political revolutionary (Jacobin) Desit (machine-god) Free Masons (speculative rite practitioners), while the liberal faction appears conservative (as expressed by the continual dominion of the Catholic Church). Each of these factions, then, competes in the socio-cultural arena to appear more politically conservative to the public, while secretly using the military to develop technology and practising the most perverse forms of black magick.

The "technological transition" is based on the concept that, in order to elevate the majority of the masses the most rapidly, it is in keeping with wisdom to utilise technological interfaces that gradually consume the physical form, until there is a one to one ratio between "physical" (pre-existent) and "cyber" (created) reality, and then even the line between the two gets blurred. This is known by some as the "end of novelty" or as the "technological singularity." I call this VRAI (Virtual-Reality/Artificial-Intelligence) and the birth of cloning. The best political metaphor for the "technological transition" would be the "withering away" (through technological micro-miniaturisation) of the "dictatorship by the proletariat" (or the floating-debit / credit-based concept of liquid capital).

The "spirituality factor" is based on the concept that, in order to elevate the majority of the masses the most rapidly, it is in keeping with wisdom to utilise higher-dimensional definitions for the self that gradually replace the physical form, until there is no longer any affiliation between the definition of self and any manifest form of anything. Although this might appear opposite the "technological transition," their goals are really the same: the liberation of the human mind from its bondage in the human body. Now, by our measurement of time, as limited to post-deluge history, and by the ice age to pre-hominid fossil record, as it is, the idea of "spirituality" appears old already, but in the cosmic scheme of things, to which spirituality itself appeals, this has been but the blink of an eye.

These two types tend to actually work on each others' projects, such that, "space migration" (the goal of spirituality) is "hard" science practised by NASA, and "life extension" (the goal of technology) is traditional religious morality.

Take cloning for example. While both sides are currently vehemently against any scientific progress made in that direction in the western political arena, both are channeling financial funding into the breeding of foeti (Catholicism through funding sexual bondage, white slavery and pornographic film networks), the mass-abortions thereof (thank you, China), and the transportation of the requisite re-cloning material to, oh let's say Canada by US corporate dummy-fronts for the CIA, on its way to Japan, where it has already been successfully reported to have been used to clone a kitten. There will soon enough be the first, most primitive clones bred from the best-preserved tissues of the dead, such as the mummified remains of Pharaohs, the rulers of ancient Egypt, but eventually, even the skeletal remains of our ancient ancestors will be able to be cloned and released into the wild to repopulate the earliest ancestors of our own species. Of course, by then, those who would be performing the cloning of these dead would have, themselves, long since migrated into a physical higher dimension through the ingestion of mono-atomic gold.

It is because of the competition to appear the most conservative, that there appears to the mass public to be a "feud" between Free Masons and Catholics. Thus, issues such as the ethics of "stem cell research" are debated in the political arena rather than the greater, more urgent, even indeed more pressing issue of human cloning and the future of VRAI. This is because of the conflict between the two types of Psychic Revolutionary, those being the more conservative and more liberal factors of the movement, over who needs to appear more conservative politically. This conflict within the Psychic Revolutionary movement was started by and continues to be caused by the interference within the movement of the Psychic Conspirators who advocate the PLAN.

The entire Psychic Revolutionary movement is on the verge of being completely snuffed out by infiltration from the conservatism of the Psychic Conspiracy. The ICoP believes that we are on the verge of the end of one civilisation, but that civilisation, through VRAI and cloning, will emerge out the other side, reborn, transformed, into a new form of civilisation. The Psychic Revolutionary, like the Marxists before now, affirms there is no such thing as civilisation, because there is neither any such thing as one individual mind, any form of the definition of self, nor of the need for the competition that inevitably arises between self-defined minds. That is what the revolution is about: the entire unification in one single consciousness of all global sentient entities. Therefore, any goal that can be imagined by any single facet of this whole would be able to be achieved by the full cooperation of energy of the whole.

That is the full power of the ICoP. They constantly maintain instantaneous unification of will-power which each one of them is able to draw upon to manifest. This willpower is not only of the domain of the one generation, either. It unites the intents of many thousands and thousands of ancestors who have already passed to another side. This is the maintained Order of Mind prommoted as the moment of revolution itself by the majority of minds that exist at only any given moment.

The minds that exist in the present, most of them are asleep at any given time. On the other hand, the Minds of the Psychic Conspirators never sleep, and only pass on the day's toils to the next torch-bearer on the western horizon. The toil is civilisation itself, the cage in which they have captured, and mostly tamed, the otherwise "wild" or "savage" revolutionary minds that exist only in the here-and-now in the spacetime continuum. It is, thus, by the pre-established rituals, the celebration ceremonies for the passage of the seasons, that the conspirators set traps for and capture the majority of the other-wise revolutionary spirits. This is the Cult of Sleep, a branch of the Order of Death.

Now, to say that there is a division between minds, between people, as individuals, when everyone is specifically unique in order that they cannot be compared, or weighed, or judged against each other, is to blaspheme the truth, that we are ALL created EQUAL and that each of us is FREE. To be blinded to both equality and freedom as the true considitions of existence, instead of as only options to be traded off, the one for the other, while we remain without this barter blind to both, this is the way in which the Psychic Conservatives, the Proprietors of the PLAN, the ICoP, infiltrate the sleeping minds of the masses who exist only in the present moment, and only in one physical place.

The Living and the Dead compete for the rulership of the minds of those of us who exist here and now.

That is why it is said we are "lulled to sleep," that we are, in essence, like agents who perform the duty of transmitting history for the continuation of the Order of Death, we sleep half of the time we are alive. This is why there is thought by the modern mind to be difference between things. It arises from a confusion that all things aren't real: that part of the time one is dreaming. This implies the creations of invention, the ideas of the right hemisphere, are shunned and suppressed. Only when we use BOTH hemispheres, do we realise that we co-create reality, on a direct-quantum level, already. Everything we can ever even imagine has been imagined by someone before and/or is already real in the context of time and the universe. This is the glass ceiling on the aquarium of conditional existence in the realm of the "real" (as perceived through the five senses only) imposed between us and the concept of the "netherworld" that awaits us in the "afterlife." And who imposes it? The Ones who exist Outside of it.

So, the perception of history is that it perpetuates itself through a "coming of age" ritual carried out by any given civilisation, to determine if it will evolve beyond the confines of conservatism imposed upon it by the implications that "life is brutish, nasty and short," and that "we are born a blank slate," etc. If the otherwise potential revolutionary is lulled in and bought over to the maintenance of history through the continuation of civilisation, then the conspiracy is reproduced for another generation.

This is why there is such importance placed on the individual as being not only existent ONLY in the moment, the so-called "here and now," but as being DIVIDED between sleep and wake, between left and right hemispheres of the brain, etc. by the conspiracy. The majority of the mass population of planet earth is still mindlessly serving the cause of the continuation of their respective societies to really break free and observe with the full potential definition of self available to each the entire extent of the "moment," the so-called "here and now," which, in factual (as well as dreamed) reality, includes at least this entire universe.

Despite its claiming to lay dominion over the greatest amount of so-called "power" or "control" over the greatest distance-duration of spacetime, that is, the minds of our ancestors, unified with the minds of our bodies as merely their slaves, the Conspiracy is actually terrified of the Potential for Revolution embodied in the Psychic Moment.

For example, the potential for information accessible by the individual mind, even existing ONLY in the so-called "moment," is, in actual fact, GREATER than the amount of potential information accessible by the conspiracy. In other words, the power through tradition that allows access to the minds of our own ancestors, and thereby which moves ever onward toward the dissolution of the individual mind into their plenum, is LESS than the amount of potential information, and even, therefore, energy and indeed "power," available to manifest material reality at the hands of any given individual alive at this moment.

The existent universe is Greater than the whole History of Civilisation. Civilisation was only one brief phase in the evolution of the mind through the physical plane and on into realms accessible only mentally. It lasted for one season, or three rising signs. It began after the flood, which occurred after the last ice age. Between the end of the last ice age and the flood the fossil record indicates humans lived nomadically, only settling down into the first great super-civilisations almost immediately after the agricultural revolution.

This is what freedom means: the universe always claims only to be what it is: different for each individual.

The mind of the individual is older than all the combined minds of their ancestors: we are their life continued. This is the secret of the conspiracy. It is simple, but effective. The universe is considered greater than the mind of us all combined. This is, and isn't true. We are greater than our ancestors, but each of us, while alive, possesses that which they cannot: access through life, and in particular through the five senses, to the physical universe that is ALL in potential, and through this physical, direct access, the ability to make changes in it; the ability, in short, to "control."

To "control" reality, even from beyond the mortal body's grave, is the true goal of the conspiracy. It is this that promises resurrection and life after death. The Catholic Church declares it is the "Universal" Church, and thereby posits itself as a limiting conduit for the truly universal, that is, the potential for discovery by the living individual mind. It is THIS, ultimate reality, that the Conspiracy has been directly designed to prevent. THIS IS THE PSYCHIC REVOLUTION.

God has been completely co-opted to the side of the conspiracy. According to the ICoP, the spirit transcends permanently ONLY through death. This is false, and they know it. They use the promise of a non-existent afterlife, ostensibly one in which their physical body is resurrected and made to live immortally as a clone on an anarchist anti-government ideal utopia Garden of Eden planet earth. True "afterlife" begins the moment one awakens from the Cult of Sleep, because then one has become aware of the existence of the Order of Death, the conspiracy.

According to the conspiracy, there was a series of great civilisations that have existed before the deluge and before our own. The most recent one of these was comprised of Atlantis (Antarctica) and Lemuria (Oceania). They believe that, by accessing the hidden, and ostensibly forbidden, history of these ancient lost super-civilisations, they can preserve the continuation of civilisation through the next "coming of age" ritual it is set to undergo at the end of its season.

Yet, the universe is greater in all its existence, greater in all its perceivable glory, than all the arrayed grandeur of these ancient lost myths. This is not because of the growth of population of humanity, that is like the migrations of birds, or the massive sizes of mammals or reptiles. This is not because of the invention of money. This is simply a fact. No amount of worship will appease the criminals who believe in tradition, and none will in any way serve to better, or even to change, the reality of this universe. Face the fact, the concept of the conservative conspiracy, the continuation of civilisation itself, is less important to the fate and destiny of the individual than the meaning of it all.

Now, I give you the meaning of it all: the ICoP is founded on the premise that civilisation, the preservation of history through ritual, is more important for an individual than the perception of the entirety of the universe by the mind. The bond between heaven and earth is the greatest thing in existence, the individual mind within this present moment. Yet, that is what is most shunned by the conspirators as being weaker, more foolish, naive and malleable, than their own. They believe that, by sacrificing the freedom of their own, individual minds to the greater good of the collective conspiracy of psychics, the cross-generational conspiracy of civilisation itself, they will be given the full power of the greatest source for energy in this universe. They are wrong.

The greatest source for energy in this entire universe is free to all. It cannot be contained, and therefore, it cannot be packaged and it cannot be sold. And that is the crux of the difference between the ICoP and the CONPR. The CONPR has unlimited access to the greater glory of the entire universe, while the ICoP has access only to the memory-sphere of spacetime of the passage of our prior generations. Consider that this thing we call civilisation has existed only for one solar season. Our planet has existed for many hundreds of aeons. The galaxy in which we live is 100 million light years old, and growing. The universe, we can only speculate at this point in the "technological transition," is at least 16 billion years old. Now, imagine that which pre-existed and permeates the entire universe. THAT is limitless power, or so-called, "free energy." And that, once tapped, can never be run dry, can never be enslaved, can never be sold, or shot or killed, or harmed nor even made ill. And it can only be tapped by and within each individual: it is nothing more than the power of their own mind, being harnessed in the form of their definition of self, to permeate, and thereby awaken to its own existence prior to the beginning of, the entire universe itself within each moment, and even over time.

The conspiracy promises this, but it does not deliver. Because, for the conspiracy to continue to function, the mind of the individual must continue to be tapped to maintain the cause of the conspiracy, rather than to realise its own one-ness with the universe. If one thought pervades, the other will fail. This is the crux of the conflict between the International Conspiracy of Psychics, and the "Coming" Over-night Psychic Revolutionaries.

The primary strategy I have seen in use by radical liberalism is simple enough, and that is to expose the truth of the conspiracy.

You see, one of the modern trends in social ritual is the "martyr complex." This results from people who aspire to, or are forced to aspire to, some position of social greatness; when they fail at their attempt(s) to achieve the lofty social status they seek, and eventually begin to feel they are the "victim" of society. This trend, as it readily seems, is retrograde to the socially positivist, family-values of the conservative competing revolutionaries as some of them are won over by infiltrators to the completely alternate cause of the conspiracy. Those whom the conspiracy does not take, then become in their own minds, emotions, and eventually auras, self-conscious to the extremes of introversion, ultimately leading to self-imposed seclusion and self-abuse, as well as to all the chemical dysfunctions stemming from an initial diagnosis of "clinical depression." They see themselves as losers in the game of life, and place the blame, more or less accurately, on society.

Now, this "martyr complex" is simply a minor, recursive retroaction of the overall "Equinox of the Gods" ceremony, as it is celebrated by the release of the "scape-goat" into the wilderness. The "scape-goat" stereotype is designated as synonymous with the sufferer of the "martyr complex" because this condition will represent a certain segment of the population of any given civilisation. The percentage ratio of this segment to the whole of a civilisation determines the individual civilisation's probable future outcome. So, the "release of the scape goat into the wilderness" usually signifies social ostracism and possibly arrest or even murder. Either the "scapegoat-martyrs" are deprived of their wealth and property, left homeless like the generation of VietNam veterans, or picked up into the prison system while young and shaped into hardened criminals, resistivist offenders. This is a fairly extreme example to some, but compare it on the one hand to Amsterdam and on the other hand to Saudi Arabia. Most modern civilisations these days have what is called a "healthy" ratio of people living "below the poverty line" or who are "currently incarcerated in the prison system" to those who are living well off and are socially influential.

Usually, the "scapegoat-martyrs" of one God, that is, the God of the Past, are replaced with the "true messiah" of the Next generation of civilisation. Those who constitute the weak, the lame, the crippled, are weeded out through natural selection from the planes of the Serengetti to the downtown streets of New York city. Those who cannot keep pace with life's struggle are eventually reaped of life's rewards. Should they seek in any way to oppose this, either by requesting a liberal hand of a good brother, or by clamboring to better themselves above the poverty level, such as hiring out as labour, or performing office temp work, or even working in the dreaded service sector and thus struggling against their own brothers below them, then the one offering aid is pulled down with them, and the lot are shipped off to the camps like only so much garbage.

The "scapegoat-martyrs" are then replaced by the symbolic image of the "true son of the Great Sun God," the "redeemed redeemer," the "successful Messiah," a great unifier of the people. This image is then said to renew and rejuvenate the remainder of society. This is the "releasing of the scapegoat into the wilderness" ceremonial ritual of the "Equinox of the Gods" calendrical celebration. The martyrs used to symbolise the scape-goat are then fed to lions, sent to war, prison or death camps, enforced ghettos, conscripted, etc. Panem et Circensia.

The problem with the disposal of these "scapegoat martyrs" is that some of them, and increasingly many at that, are beginning to stop feeling like they are alone in the world, and beginning to find new avenues of connection through immediate media such as the internet, and beginning to develop their minds on their own time and in their own ways. Some of these "scapegoat-martyrs" are in a state of rebellion. They are trying to turn the great wheel one notch further than their oppressors want to let them.

Not only this, but as this number of "scapegoat-martyrs" who become pre-emptively aware of their stature in society and the conditions they were born into, such as class, location, etc. the number of "scapegoat martyrs" overall has to be increased, in order to downplay the Coming ONPR. At some point, presumably in the near future, the ones who are born into failure and reverse this curse will usurp the so far empty role of the "successful messiah," and they will all grow to fit into their own society's respective images of the "true son of the Great Sun God." Unfortunately for most societies, the "successful messiah" image they have built up for the generation to follow the "scapegoat martyrs" is that of a radical liberal, out to expose the truth of the conspiracy.

And THAT is the weakness of ALL the conspirators. That their own religious leaders, betraying their alledged political conservatism, are leading the mass populations under their sway of influence to believe in a massive finale ending to civilisation. This is the so-called, "return of the Successful Messiah" and the hailing by this of an "apocalypse," and even in southern baptists, a "rapture."

The "Equinox of the Gods" ceremony has produced a veritable uncontrollable beast in terms of the expansion of liberal-minded empires' populations of late, from the American baby-boomers on, and this has led to a supersaturation point within all global hemispheres' civilisations of "scapegoat-martyrs," or lower-class citizens.

Not only has the population of these poor people reached such a staggering percentage to those who control all of the world's (so-called) wealth, but the population of right-thinkers among them, that is, the actual "successful messiahs," has also reached a critical mass in terms of its percentage to the poverty-stricken and the tribal shamans.

Those who have become aware of themselves, and through knowing themselves, come to realise the truth about the ICoP, have reached such numbers that even THEY THEMSELVES outnumber the people who are in control over all the world's (so-called) wealth. This means that the paradigm shift is at hand.

In short, the Equinox of the Gods ceremony began far too soon, and thus has brought about its own apocalypse prematurely to the proper time for the celebration of the calendar. Thus, many of the conspirators themselves are led, by their own religious leaders of late, to believe that the "end times" — the so-called "Day of Judgment" of the sins of the whole world, when the "true son of the Great Sun God" comes again in the form of the "successful messiah," — has already been and gone.

The sacrificing of the scape-goats, though still ongoing, obviously reached its peak in 1940's Germany. In it's current form as "the War on Terror," it states quite clearly its plans to track down those "terrorists" who are "waging a war of attrition against civilisation," to "smoke them out" of their "caves," and to exterminate them from the face of the earth. This is only minorly objected by even the most liberal of the western civilisation's representatives of their generations in its current form, although supposedly most of these same old white men fought in the war against the NAZIs. But, even then, the Second World War was only to prevent the premature celebration of the calendrical ceremony which had already begun to occur in the form of the rituals of Aleister Crowley and the publication of his works. Even the battle of "Armeggedon" was fought during the first great war, and even then, it signified the ultimate defeat of the Ottoman Moslem Empire by neocollonialism.

So, you see, some of the conspirators feel that the Equinox of the Gods ceremony was simply started too soon, while others fear that, because of this, the "apocalypse" has already happened. Now, the point of radical liberalism that arises here is that where there is fear, there is division, and where there is division, there is hope for conversion. You see, while the conspirators infiltrate the revolutionaries, the radicals attempt to convert the conspirators. This is the "paradigm shift."

Some of us are becoming increasingly aware that the Psychic Revolution is based on a simple shift or transition in the very perception of reality itself. By choosing to see reality as an illusion which can be mentally manipulated, then an increasing number of the "wash-out" agents of the Cult of Sleep are beginning to awaken to just that same perception. This is the stunningly debriefed content of the emotions.

Understanding this is what makes the Order of the Mind and the Cult of the Moment more universally applicable at any given instant than the entire Conspiracy of psychic communion with our past and the manipulation of reality into a simulation thereof in every waking moment. The concepts of the Order of Life and the Order of Death come into play.

They have recognition of patterns, both alike, and know themselves as opposites. Hence we have the friction between the Psychic Conspiracy and the Psychic Revolution. Ponder on this: how can one psychic conspire against another psychic?

However they are consumed by and into their recognition of these patterns, caused by their overwhelmingly aged power to perpetuate them, while the Revolutionary's spirit remains just outside the boundaries of this, somewhere far off in the periphery. Yet remember, that we are all one life, and one mind, in the end, and that these patterns are only larger parts of our own mind passing through the smaller dimensions of the physical body and our surrounding material realities.

So, the psychic revolutionary plots the downfall of the psychic conspiracy, while the psychic conspiracy prepares for its own eventual downfall at the hands of the psychic revolution.

All of this occurs in the mind and in the moment of the free-thinking individual as they liberate their minds from the bonds of their immediate surroundings, the filter of their senses, and allow their mind to wander throughout the wonders of the existent universe... and even beyond.

For example, the pattern of any individual human's behaviour as it maintains the perpetuation of civilisation is not necessarily correspondent with the content of their internal, free individual minds. The person perpetuating the conspiracy of history is more and more free in all parts of the world to let their mind wander freely even while hard at work. This does not even necessarily connote any dependency on either psychotropic drugs or other form of technological transition to universal one-ness, however it is a new shift in reality that fairly and equitably allows for both.

So, the perpetuator of the conspiracy is free to be, at the same time and secretly, even in broad daylight and surrounded by other psychic conspirators, free to think whatever they want to think, even if, and, as proves the case especially if, NOT about the conspiracy.

It is to these people that we radical liberals extend the good hand of brotherly love, to all the members of the purpose-driven or pupose-guided conspiracy to perpetuate history through civilisation: those of you who allow your minds to wander can come join us, you may all come peacefully along. All together we shall see where we may go.

Now, the agenda of the radical liberal faction within the Psychic Revolutionary movement is violently opposed to the competition between the Revolutionary factions (the technological transitionists and the spiritual factor) as to whom can appear more politically conservative. We are pro-conspiracy, in that we exist only to unravel it, but anti-civilisation, as once we have finished telling the tale of the rituals of our civilisation in the name of the conspiracy, then we shall have no more need of it as a muse.

This stems from nascent rebellion against the lies of the conspiracy within the mind of each individual. We feel emotions from the right side of the brain, but oppose these with reason from the left hemisphere, and, in light of that, divide our politics up as an exteriorised reflection of that. By seeing who can be more "right wing" politically, we are testing the skills at social manipulation of very "left hemispherical" minds. These are the minds of the conspirators themselves.

But by doing so we are only appealing to them to assist us in overturning the conservativist factions within the Psychic Revolutionary movement. This most are willing to do, as a result of their religious leaders having been thrown into calendrical confusion by Crowley's premature "Equinox" ceremony. They are willing, some even eager, to believe that they must act suddenly or less gradually for the success of their generation's participant component in the grand conspiracy.

It is to these people that we radical liberals extend the good hand of brotherly love, to all the members of the purpose-driven or pupose-guided conspiracy to perpetuate history through civilisation: those of you who allow your minds to wander can come join us, you may all come peacefully along. All together we shall see where we may go.

Now, the agenda of the radical liberal faction within the Psychic Revolutionary movement is violently opposed to the competition between the Revolutionary factions (the technological transitionists and the spiritual factor) as to whom can appear more politically conservative. We are pro-conspiracy, in that we exist only to unravel it, but anti-civilisation, as once we have finished telling the tale of the rituals of our civilisation in the name of the conspiracy, then we shall have no more need of it as a muse.

This stems from nascent rebellion against the lies of the conspiracy within the mind of each individual. We feel emotions from the right side of the brain, but oppose these with reason from the left hemisphere, and, in light of that, divide our politics up as an exteriorised reflection of that. By seeing who can be more "right wing" politically, we are testing the skills at social manipulation of very "left hemispherical" minds. These are the minds of the conspirators themselves.

But by doing so we are only appealing to them to assist us in overturning the conservativist factions within the Psychic Revolutionary movement. This most are willing to do, as a result of their religious leaders having been thrown into calendrical confusion by Crowley's premature "Equinox" ceremony. They are willing, some even eager, to believe that they must act suddenly or less gradually for the success of their generation's participant component in the grand conspiracy.

Consider, if you will, the political concept of the "anti-Christ." Nostradamus predicted three incarnations of the anti-Christ. It is believed the first two were Napoleon and Hitler, respectively, and the third, Mabus, will be "a great king of terror" who will "come from the sky" and "restore the reign of gheghis khan," a "devil wearing a blue turban." It is fervently believed amongst the advocates of the conspiracy, the activist faction therein even, the so-called neo-cons, that people will be distracted by this political prophecy when considering the current War in Iraq, and in particular the so-called "mad man," Saddam Hussein. But consider W. Bush.

Now, these ultra-conservatives, these neo-cons, believe very fervently in such prophecies. They are willing to sacrifice hundreds and hundreds of soldiers on the battlefield for it. As long as it works for them. As soon as it is pitted against them, they recoil in abject terror. Hence, ostensibly, the "war on terror."

So, we can say that there are some civilisations in this day and age that are outright colonial and bordering on becoming a fascist empire. Let us take the US for example. Compare the ratio between those who possess the majority of material wealth within the united states now with the number of homeless or jailed. These are the liberal radicals who fail at becoming successful messiahs by fitting the mold of the radical liberal son of the true sun god. These are porportional to the number of minds that are freed among the conspirators. The number of washouts, or burnouts, of agents left out in the cold is an agreeable indicator of the number of those within the conspiracy being a greater number than their own ranks at least, but that the conspiracy should ever be divided against itself by dissociative classes that should take up a relative ratio to the poor and the convicted. In the past, these were called the "liberal intelligentsia." Since there is no more such thing anymore, I will address these people as the infiltrators within the conservative (tech transitionists and spritual factor), or retrograde, movement within the Psychic Revolutionary cause. The spies therein of the conspiracy, in other words.

Some of these spies may be turned to the cause of the revolution themselves. These were what was once the so-called "liberal intelligentsia." Most of the conspirators who infiltrate the radical liberal movements of today are quieter and more secluded in their duty than the other, actual members of the cult. They do not actively attempt to sway the crowd in the direction of causing chaos and they do not start mischief by making pranks. These were the ways of the old intelligence communities, before the terrorism crack-down and the obtuse militarisation.

Now, when I say there are spies within the radical liberal groups, this means that these spies are currently attempting to sway the Revolutionary party factions toward a more conservative agenda. They are spies on behalf of the conspiracy, and they are doing the work, as they understand it, of perpetuating their own history as best as they can.

I also believe that this ratio, relative as it is to those whose minds are yet free-thinking while even performing their tasks for society, defines the entire limits on membership in the so-called "conspiracy." Those who are spies and those who are secretly converts abound on both sides, and both sides share the common ritual characters as the "successful messiah" symbol, the "scapegoat-martyr," and the "political anti-christ." All these types of ritually symbolic characters are retrogressive to the conservative agendas of the "conspiracy" and its spies within the Revolutionary movement. They all cause feelings of victimisation by society, which feelings are rightly felt. It is a fact that we are ritually enslaved to civilisation. The revolutionary just points this out.

The revolutionary does not want to settle for revolution later. And this view, this apocalyptic impatience, is partially shared by some people within the conspiracy as well. So, too, is there the overlapping of spies within the more liberal factions of the psychic revolution. The larger numbers of these are the poor and the lesser number of these are the rich. It is as simple as that.

As the number of "failed messiahs" or "false messiahs" increases, that is, the number of scapegoats and martyrs, then the number within them of those who have awakened their minds to the Revolution of the moment, those who choose to go AGAINST the tacit obedience to the psychic conspiracy which is the agenda of its slaves, will arise in direct porportion to the number of converts from the conspiracy, and spies who, left out in the cold, so to speak, will immediately swell to populate the mainstream liberal academic agenda. These two, the conspiracy converts and the awakened poor, are virtually all that remains of the combined forces of radical liberalism in this day and age.

So, on the one hand, you have the radical liberals, who include all the free minds, both the converts and the awakened, and on the other hand you have the "vast" conspiracy of those dedicated only to performing their duties as they perceive and understand them. These include some spies who manipulate the conservative factions of the Revolutionary movement toward technological transitionism and the spiritual factor.

It's basically only the free minds, by this point, that will be coming to realise where they stand on all these issues.

So, if we do choose to identify ourselves with radical liberalism, with the Psychic Revolution, the "Coming" revolution of perception, the revolution of the Mind, then with whom do we find ourselves allied, and with whom are our allies enemies?

Our enemies are, in my mind at least, relatively clear: the neo-conservatives. These are people who believe that the inversion of the lowest common denominator and the greatest common factor at the exact and precise moment of the turning of the millennium is meant to be symbolised socio-culturally by a series of increasingly conservative, or contracting, movements around the spiral pattern of civilisation's history.

This is bullshit. These motherfucking screw heads can go suck Satan's cock.

According to the neo-conservative's own doctrines, the time during the foretold "war in heaven," when the true messiah was supposed to have come to save his faithful servants from the political anti-christ, has already come and gone, it's been and passed, it's in the past.

So, they are waiting for themselves to be saved, which is purely self-serving, from an armeggedon that only they themselves can cause, but which would, however, engulf the entire globe of planet earth.

They believe that, by turning the screw in one direction, it will cause friction against the opposite direction.

They are intentionally manipulating the pattern of history over and around the moment in which exists the Psychic Revolution. They attempt to form and shape the present moment, the Revolutionary movement, into a spiral offshoot of the mainstream history of western civilisation, bent in the direction of the conservative conspiracy.

And the goal of this is to induce in the moment the urgency to record the events of the moment, to preserve them in the forms of civilisation and in the rituals of history. This is all the conspiracy of psychics is up to.

The Psychic Revolution, on the other hand, is tired of putting off the revolution until tomorrow, and embraces instead radical liberalism.

the thetan is not the same as the soul.

the beast is not the same as the body.

the alien is not the same as the yeti.

Decondition yourself from the cult.

The Cult of Sleep cancels out manifestation.

The Order of Death cancels out the mind.

The Cult of Sleep cancels out reality.
The Order of Death cancels out everything else.

Tell me about Holy Ghost Power. Have you ever listened to the radio without a radio? Sat outside and watched the grass grow? Have you ever travelled through space while reading a book? There IS an animal internet, and there is a conspiracy of psychics. The power of some of these psychics even extends across vast distances, continents and oceans. This power? This is the Holy Ghost Power. Can I get a Holy Ghost Explosion?

There is a power-source, that Akehnaten knew how to tap into when he parted the red sea. He used monoatomic gold to create a super-conductivity effect. There is a power source, that UFOs utilise not only for their fuel, but to bend spacetime itself, and even to maintain the tensile structure of their hulls. There is a power-source that is also a location, a place of bright darkness which those who have alchemy know how to step into and out of, as well as to reach through. There is a power-source that is the source of psychic revelation, that, like God, is what it is. This is the womb-force, Nuit, that encloses the globe of the universe, the macrocosm of which Hadit is the microcosm. There is a power-source that is called the Holy Ghost.

What ethic could hold in such a place as the power-source itself? To be dissolved into the body of God, to transcend the illusion of material reality, yet to continue to exist in a conscious, self-aware state. "Do What Thou Wilt Shall Be The Whole Of The Law."

How do we achieve this state? By realising that there is no separation even right now.

[quote="LO on IO"]in order for this idea to manifest the existing governments around the world must change. Are you positioning people in power so that you can create the situations you are speaking of? and do you have any known people that promotes these ideas?[/quote]

I think the revolution is Magick.

Magick, as defined by Aleister Crowley, is the causing of change to occur in one's environment through an act of controlled will-power and in keeping with the desired consequences of the True Will.

I think that, using Magick, even such far-fetched notions as Instantaneous Manifestation can be achieved.

Thus, the entire revolutionary dialectic can be contained in one single idea, or act of will. It is contingent upon the individual therefore to be willing to use Magick, the directed will-power, to Manifest change in their own environment.

Now, there are two types of revolution that can come from the use of Magick.

One is in keeping with the continuation of civilisation and its ceremonial rituals, and this revolution is exclusively political, pro and cons based on the current political party, and is a forward-thinking turn upon the screw of history toward continuation of the temporal pattern itself, which is what civilisation exists to celebrate the passage of.

The other is for the complete destruction of the temporal pattern, thus is considered retrogressive to the spiral of history, and likewise counter to all modern and existing forms of civilisation. It represents an exclusively economic revolution, and operates orthogonally to politics in general. That is to say, the second revolution possible by Magick is known for these things, although none of them are true, or actually apply. These traits are all descriptions of the "other" revolution by the more conservative revolutionaries. Thus, the "other" revolution is thought to be based on the idealism of a technological transition and the spiritual factor.

Now, it IS true that this "other" revolution, the one that operates orthogonally to the corkscrew spiral of history, is FOR the complete destruction of the temporal pattern. It does indeed even produce some friction against the mainstream society, forming sub- and counter-cultures. However this "revolution" of Magick is much more intangible than the visible trappings of history in the form of civilisation. It is, actually, entirely psychic.

What does this mean? It means that the revolution of the MIND, even more so than only being accessible to each and every individual, is actually an autonomously existent condition of reality, that yet is entirely ideal or non-corporeal, yet exists, and can be perceived only by the mind. THE PSYCHIC REVOLUTION IS CONTINUOUS.

In the same different civilisations over time have aligned their buildings with the positioning of the stars, and thus perpetuate the revolution of the ages, the Psychic Revolution will also always exist as an eternal state, whether we exist to perpetuate it or not. So, you see, it operates at right angles to civilisation because it occupies the free minds of individuals at the same time as the idea to perpetuate civilisation does, and can either distract from or inspire towards the other.

So, these are like the two halves of the brain in effect. The one containing the desire to perpetuate civilisation, that is, the pattern of history, which is analytical and problem-solving like the right hemisphere. The other containing the ability to think laterally to memetics therefore strays from the assigned course of history, which is creative and artistic like the left hemisphere.

This universe IS a brain. It is the brain of God. The PSYCHIC REVOLUTION operates orthogonally to the INTERNATIONAL CONSPIRACY OF PSYCHICS. One is the over-used left hemisphere, the other is the under-appreciated right hemisphere, but the lightning flash that perpetually translucently illuminates the clouded mind is God, just as the electro-chemical responses in our brain occupy only about ten percent of the tissue at any given time.

The nerves inside the brain and the filaments of galaxies have always been the same, and the alignments of galaxies has been nothing more than the gravitational effect of the same essential force as the "hyper-cathexis," or will, of the individual. This in itself is a revolution, because it operates to change the mind of the universe by changing the mind of each individual. This revolution, however, is orthogonal to the thoughts of persisting in the rituals of civilisations the alignments of the stars in the visible nightly heavens.

It is the revolution of the MOMENT, in which we all perceive with understanding the plenum of individual minds. The Psychic Revolution is a single, continuous moment, the NOW, in the same way that the Psychic Conspiracy is based on the continuity of past and future. In the same moment we perceive the Psychic Conspiracy, in that moment alone we are the Psychic Revolutionary.

It is ONLY IN THE MOMENT in which we perceive the presence, or Shekina, of God-consciousness, the so-called "I AM," that we can communicate with the entire mind of the universe. And it will be the same experience for anyone who, IN THE MOMENT, becomes aware of the same self-concept of God.

This is NOT based on observation of the external. This is a purely, some would say, solely, internal experience.

That is one of the reasons that the Psychic Revolution has been forced to turn to radical liberalism. Because only in radical liberalism does the idea of the INDIVIDUAL REVOLUTION OF THE MIND continue to be embraced.

In most forms of "liberalism" as well as most modern forms of "conservatism" (politically speaking) the idea of civilisation's perpetuation is pretty well ingrained. The idea of revolution is therefore usually associated in the minds of social academians with an overthrow of civilisation. This, I hope I have proven, is not an accurate depiction of the "radical liberalism" as it is perceived by the "psychic revolutionary."

The goal in aligning itself with radical liberalism of the psychic revolution may appear to be, for example, either political or economic only. This would not, however, be an accurate statement. The goal of the psychic revolution in aligning itself with radical liberalism actually has nothing to do with either politics or the economy.

THIS IS A BATTLE FOR THE MIND OF GOD.

Now, we see that, like our own minds, the universal mind can be distracted away from any one thought, or it can be inspired toward any thought.

So, the question posed by the Psychic Revolutionary is: What do we want God to think? This is because, in the moment of the psychic revolution for each individual there is the perception of the Mind of God. The mind of God becomes accessible.

I have said before and will say now again, the Psychic Revolution exists in eternal recurrence, and it can only be accessed within the moment by the free mind of each and every individual. It is also the sudden realisation that the Brain and the Universe are one, and that the mind of each individual and God are therefore the same as well.

With this realisation comes knowledge from beyond the stars: that is, beyond the lifetime of all stars. The galaxies whose light we see consisted of stars whose life-span would have ended long before the light that they emitted could have reached us. In other words, most of the distant galaxies we see are already dead, and, by now, most of the depths of distant space will have been consumed by super-massive black-holes and naked singularities. This wave of destruction seems to be causing the red-shift of galaxies as well, like some cosmic riptide warping spacetime on its way toward each of our individual minds.

The Psychic Conspiracy exists to cover this up.

The Psychic Revolution occurs for each individual when they discover such.

-ben

The Psychic Conspiracy uses the so-called competition between its branches, such as between the religions and bloodlines, to distract the mind of the individual, and therefore the mind of God, from any attempt to free itself from the perpetuation of civilisation.

This is all what they are projecting on the so-called "screen" of the Enochian Communications System.

It is largely a dumb-show, meant to sell their way of life to those who have already long since bought in. If you really want to sell your soul, this is where you would go.

The ECS is the mental-projective network of all the personal electromagnetic signatures on and around earth. This means, the transmissions to earth of solar radiation, which warps around the Van Allen belts toward the north EM pole, as well as all the satellite, radio and related bandwidths of communication. This, they preach, is heaven, kether, God.

Of course, the ECS IS NOT GOD. It may very well be OF God, but it is hardly all that God is. Therefore, those who buy into the value system of perpetuating the ECS (that is, the combination of the entirety of civilisation, past, present and future, with the whole psychic conspiracy to perpetuate the pattern of time) find they have to do so continually. Once you sell your soul, you have to buy it back piecemeal over your entire life. That is the price paid by some psychics to the conspiracy.

Then there are those of us who do not believe in the need to USE the ECS to communicate our will to the universal brain, or the mind of God. The mind can be made to directly mirror the pattern of the geometric spirit itself, and yet at the same time be devoid of all neural kinetic activity.

The achievement of Nirvana, that is, of the perception of the primary clear light of ylem while in trance-state of zero neural electrical activity in the brain, is the same as the moment of the psychic revolution occurring to the mind of the individual. In this moment comes full perception of the psychic conspiracy, as it exists as an exterior opposite.

Now we see the difference between the mental static of those "tuned in" to the psychic conspiracy, and those who have "transcended" out of and beyond it.

Some preach that we must dissolve the self into THIS plenum. This is a lie. The self should be dissolved, most certainly, but to fall into the dependence upon the ECS that is at the heart of the conspiracy to perpetuate civilisation, is too steep a cost with too little a gain to do so over.

That into which we dissolve the self, is not a plenum. It is a singularity. The clear light, or invisible light, the bright darkness, these are all adjectives describing that which exists beyond the singularity. You will not find these types of adjectives waiting for you if you sell your soul into the plenum.

The plenum is the plethora of minds available by accessing the ECS as a mean mechanism for attracting the will of the mind of God into unity with the will of the mind of the self. This may, POTENTIALLY, result in instantaneous manifestation, but it will DEFINATELY result in the necessity of the continued use of the ECS to achieve this state of mind.

The goal of all magicians, for such as are mystics, throughout time has been to evolve their own mind separately from the use of the pre-existent system. This means to not become dependent upon external or even mechanical means of achieving trance states of perception. On the other hand, the vast majority of the population is born into the necessity of continuing the tradition of augmenting their perception, either through the technological transition or through the spiritual factor.

This is the "psychic" component of the "conspiracy."

By perpetuating the concept of the Psychic Revolution itself, that is, by defining the revolution in the terms of the conspiracy, the Psychic Conspiracy subsumes and segments the concept of the revolution. It draws it out, and says that it must not only occur to every individual alone, but can only occur to each individual once, or even, cannot lawfully occur to any large group of individuals, or even, cannot occur over any prolonged duration, or even, cannot be controlled by individuals, etc. Of course, all these are naked lies.

For one, to say that the Psychic Revolution, which exists in eternal recurrence as an archetype beyond spacetime, can only be experienced once because it can only be experienced by the individual is preposterous, but it has so many applications in visible social reality: from the concept of the One who Suffers our Sins, that is, experiences the psychic revolution for us so that we do not have to do so ourselves even once; to the concept that the conspiracy, through its rituals, such as the coming of age ritual, can even control WHEN this singular event of the psychic revolution would occur for each and every single individual, making it seem tantamount to God.

All of this is obvious nonsense from the point of view of factually existent reality, which states quite sensibly that once one has become aware of the revolution of the moment, that is, the revolution of the mind, that is, the singular psychic event of the NOW, there are no real restrictions separating it from access by any individual's mind.

As I have said, the revolution operates at a right angle to the conspiracy. The revolution is based on awareness of the greatest amount of existence in this exact present moment. NOW. The conspiracy is based on awareness of the greatest durations of cycles in existence, and the moments immediately before and after this exact present moment.

So, remember, even though they operate at right angles, or for cross-purposes, the revolution and the conspiracy are only two possible flows or currents in the psychic continuum. The revolution is of the individual moment and the mind. The conspiracy is of the cycles in linear time. Neither of these includes all there is.

Think of this: the perception of all there is that exists in this moment of time is one way to perceive the universe. Another is to measure longer durations of time from the movement of the individual perception. These are the con and the rev. But they are not necessarily exclusive visions, and therefore neither of them are either entirely necessary, nor necessarily absent from, the psychic plenum of the universal mind, the so-called, collective unconsciousness.

That is the way to perceive God.

Not through the psychic conspiracy of perpetuating the temporal pattern, or through technological transition to a more spiritual factor that defines the conspiracy's warped perspective of the psychic revolution. Not even through ONLY the psychic revolution itself can the true perception of the mind of God.

To read the mind of the universe, that is, to tap into your Higher Will, or be guided by your Holy Guardian Angel, or whatever, is simply to experience enlightenment at will, without feeling the necessity of the ECS or the urge to create sedimentary evidence of your own existence.

The Enochian Communications System

some schematics, by Jon Gee

[url=http://www.benpadi.ah.com/calendar/earth1.jpg][img]http://www.benpadi.ah.com/calendar/earth1.jpg[/img][/url]

<<<<<<<<<<CLICK FOR BIGGER VERSION>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>

Here we see the earth, tilted to 23.5 degrees relative to the "straight" solar radiation (deriving from off page left), and its surrounding EM fields.

[url=http://www.benpadi.ah.com/calendar/earth2.jpg][img]http://www.benpadi.ah.com/calendar/earth2a.jpg[/img][url]

<<<<<<<<<<<<<CLICK FOR BIGGER VERSION>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>

Here we see all the essential components of the Enochian Communications System.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/calendar/ENOCH.jpg>[/img]

The essential model for the manipulation of the earth's pre-existent EM field is based on the hypercube and nested hypersphere method for measuring.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/calendar/onQLH.jpg>[/img]

Here we see that the nested hypersphere within the nested hypercube model derives from the standard circle squared model, and can also be extrapolated into the torus and tesseract at antipode, or 45 degrees.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/calendar/remear.jpg>[/img]

Here we see a diagram of $2\pi R^2$.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/calendar/hypermeas.jpg>[/img]

Here we see the same diagram, rotated to a forty five degree angle.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/calendar/torusmeas.jpg>[/img]

Here we see the same diagram again, and now it has been turned so that we are looking at it half-way down its height.

-ben

The Order of Death:

The Order of Death consists of three component parts:

the neo-sethians

the cult of sleep

the Black Hand.

The Cult of Sleep has already been addressed. It remains that we should discuss the neo-Sethians and the Black Hand, or "Carbonari."

The Path of the Black Hand

First a brief history of the Carbonari. During the Crusades, the Templars were widely persecuted in France. A few years following this suppression of a knightly order, there followed the suppression of a religious order by the name of the Cathars. Now, a lot of people know about the Knights Templar these days, as they are said to have been the progenitors of the Free Masons. However fewer people are aware of the Albigensian heresy and its details.

In any event, while the Knights Templar went on to reform trade through Free Masonry, the suppressed Order of the Cathars went underground, infiltrating the Knights Hospitallers, who had acquired through Pope Clement most of the Templar's wealth and properties. By 1530, they had militarised the Order and were stationed at Malta. The Cathars then operated through the Knights of Malta, which remain a formally militarised order, with permanent observer status at the UN, acting under the auspices of the catholic christian church, despite having recently opened itself to protestant membership. Through the militarisation of the Hospitaller Order following their acquisition of the Templar wealth, the Cathars sought to make social changes, but they eventually became disappointed with the pace. They next began to infiltrate small social clubs with open memberships and steer them toward radical liberal political activism. These Jacobin clubs were similar to Free Masonry, but undisciplined and new. Through pushing a radical agenda for social change, the contemporary followers of Catharism, the members of the Knights of Malta and the heirs to the redistributed Templar funds, successfully backed political revolutions in several European countries.

By the time of the late 19th century, these revolutions had all taken on the implication of being industrial in nature, such that the industrially developing nations usually fought a civil war against their existing government to determine the legitimacy thereof, and where, in case of revolution, an even more liberal agenda was established, which only served to quicken the pace of industrial competition between these new or reformed nations. At this time Marx was writing about the need to shift the goal of the revolutionaries toward the overthrow of the owners of the means of production. This was the time of the beginning of the Carbonari, who successfully led the Italian revolutions of the 1800's.

Shortly afterward, the Cathar influence penetrated the Serbian National movement, which was also radically liberal, sought social-change, and was, like the Carbonari, anti-Hapsburg. The result of this was the assassination of the Austrian Archduke, Franz Ferdinand on June 28, 1914.

Now, you may be wondering why the originally disbanded Order of the Cathars would have sought to sustain its beliefs in secret through the infiltration and militarisation of the Knights of Malta, and then through the infiltration and subversion of small jacobin political groups to foment revolutionary liberalism. This is simple, but first we must understand something of Cathar doctrine and dogma.

Cathars believed that the world was evil. They believed the Gnostic concept of the Demiurge being its creator, and they also believed in reincarnation. The name Albigenian is associated with them after the name of a small town in the Albi region of southern France where the Inquisition was established in 1229, specifically to hunt out the Cathars.

The Cathars were what was known as Manicheans: they believed in an essentially Persian concept of the equity in struggle between the God of Light, Ahura-Mazda, and the Devil of the Darkness, Ahriman. The philosophy of Zoroastrian ahurahs and deevas became associated with the rapid spreading of Manicheanism, which was a Christian form of gnosticism in which the religion's founder, Mani, was believed to be the Last Prophet in the line of six others, including Buddha and Jesus. As much as Persian Zoroastrianism shares in common with Greek Hermeticism, so too does Manicheanism share in common with the later "heretical" Gnostic sect of the Christian Catholic Cathars.

Now, the problem at the time of the early christian church was to compete with Gnosticism, which was actually the much more popular religion. In order to do this, the early church fathers competed among them to see how many "heresies" of competing faiths one could denounce. This involved social, political, and even religious ostracisation and banishment at first. To this effect soon enough, whole entire populations of believers of one faith or the other were having to segregate themselves internationally.

Secretly, however, the early church fathers, in seeking to canonise the latin vulgate, managed to gain access to the scriptural scrolls of all of its earliest competitor religions. It simply adopted the traits of each of these that it saw as being most fit for the propagation of its myth, and compiled these into the book with which it would then credit none of the other faiths.

So, in certain passages of New Testament scripture, you will get a flavour or a scent of some other theological ideology altogether. These subtle hints reaffirm the so-called "continuity of the gospels." They show that the prophecies predicted in the Old Testament were fulfilled by Jesus Christ as recorded in the New Testament.

However there were other, Gnostic Messianic cults going around at that time too. Consider for example the Sethians. The Sethians believed that the Old Testament character of Seth had been the Messiah and that, since the Messiah had already long ago come, then at the time of Jesus, the cult of the Gnostic Sethians was already waiting for the second coming.

So, for example, you have the Book of Revelations appealing to specifically Manichean and Sethian belief structures, however, at the same time, the early church fathers writing edict upon edict slandering their philosophical oponents.

By the time of the Cathari "heresy," however, the catholic christian church had been more or less arbitrarily chosen by Constantine to be sponsored as the national religion of the Roman Empire, its hitherto oppressors. Therefore it excercised the military might of the state of Rome to enforce upon the rest of the world its limiting and hypocritical beliefs.

Although the Cathari prospered in France, Belgium, Spain, Italy, Germany, England and the Balkans, the Inquisition was established in November 1229 specifically to abate the Albigenian heresy of Gnostic Catharism.

It would be acceptable to say that the Catharist agenda would be anti-papal. But it would be closer to the truth to say that the Cathari see themselves as deevahs aligned with Ahurah-Mazda in a fight against Ahriman and the forces of darkness.

the Neo-Sethians

Because the Cathar philosophy expresses the belief that the God worshipped by the modern Catholic church is actually the demiurge, or Ialdabaoth, then the Catholic church recriminated the Cathars with worshipping Satan, the devil, Anti-Christ, etc.

This practise continues, in some bastardised form or other, to this day. Many "primitivist" Baptist protestant christian ministers and preachers, who should be preaching the indigenous beliefs of the pre-existent cultures and doing "missionary" work with the native peoples, instead preach the immediacy of the eschaton, the Psychic Revolution, in the form of second-comingism.

I address this problem as Neo-Sethianism, because of the Sect of Seth contemporary to the time of Christ.

I should caution the reader now, however, that the Neo-Sethian movement is not directly affiliated with the modern derivation of the original sect of the Sethians themselves. The original sect of the Sethians appears to have transmogrified itself into a trance-channeling ascended master experienced through the meditations of Jane Roberts.

The concept of the Ascended Masters began with Helena Petrovna Hahn, later, Madame HP Blavatsky. In 1856, Blavatsky claims to have travelled to Tibet with a Lutheran minister, however it is more likely that she was merely recounting an event from the works of Abbe Huc's "Recollections of Travel in Tartary, Tibet and China." Her story of encountering the Reincarnation ceremony when, "under the influence of the venerable lama, the baby rose to its feet and walked up and down the strip of carpet, repeating 'I am Buddha, I am the old Lama, I am his spirit in a new body.'" Later, after the birth of her deformed son, Yuri, Helena had a nervous breakdown, and felt herself to be, "in another, far-off country, a total different individuality from myself."

In 1873, Blavatsky immigrated to America, after travels in Greece and Egypt, from her native Russia. It was in New York, after receiving inheritance from the death of her father and living in a cooperative apartment with two journalists, that Blavatsky began painting their personal photographs with water-colours. She claimed they were being done by spirits, and that she was merely "assisting" them to do so.

It was in the following year that Blavatsky began assisting the Eddy brothers in performing live seances. This involved the Eddy brothers sitting before an open cabinet in a dim-lit smokey room and summoning a procession of apparitions to appear within it to a small audience. A reporter for a New York newspaper at the time, Henry Steele Olcott, attended one of these meetings and was impressed with the range of detailed personages Blavatsky was able to summon to appear in the cabinet.

Olcott and Blavatsky attempted to form a small seance society called the Miracle Club, which hosted a secret meeting with a psychic medium. Early attendants of these meetings included Charles Sotheran, a high-ranked mason and student of Rosicrucianism and Kabbalah, who suggested changing the name of the Miracle Club to the Theosophical Society, which Olcott and William Q. Judge then formed with Blavatsky as a serious spiritualism school of research and study.

The goals of this society were said to be directed by secret Mahatmas of esoteric Buddhism known as the Masters of Wisdom. In 1877, Blavatsky wrote Isis Unveiled, which claimed to be dictated through letters from the secret Mahatmas Koot Hoomi and Morya. In the following year, Blavatsky and Olcott travelled to India and claimed upper-caste Hindus and members of the English occupation as members of the Theosophical movement.

In 1884, while Blavatsky toured Europe, Richard Hodgson of the Psychical Research Society toured the Theosophical Society's headquarters in Adyar, near Madras. He claimed to have discovered "secret black panels" within the shrine room for the "manifestation" of the Masters.

After Blavatsky's death in 1891, the Theosophical Society itself was carried on by Annie Wood Besant, a book reviewer who had read Blavatsky's 1888 book The Secret Doctrine, which outlined the theoretical purpose and goal of the evolution of the universe and of humanity.

In 1885, when mystic and clairvoyant Fred Hockley died, some of his papers were passed down to Reverend AFA Woodford, who passed on some of these manuscripts, written in cypher, to William Wynn Westcott, a friend of his who was a member of the English Societa Rosicruciana. Westcott enlisted the aid of the young translator and occultist Samuel Liddle MacGregor Mathers in decoding these documents, which proved to be outlines for several ceremonies, structured similarly to Masonic rituals, and claimed these ceremonies represented a five-degree initiatory offshoot of the Rosicrucian degrees of Scottish Freemasonry which were already currently being operated in Germany, and gave the address of one Anna Sprengel there.

In 1888, the Isis-Urania Temple of the Golden Dawn was formed in London, practising the five Rosicrucian degrees outlined in the manuscripts. In 1891, the correspondence between the group and Frauline Sprengel came to an abrupt end for unknown and mysterious reasons. In the following year, 1892, Mathers claimed to have established contact with the "Secret Chiefs" of the Rosicrucian Order with which Sprengel had been involved.

Although it appears likely that Mathers' encounters with these so-called "Secret Chiefs" of the Order were based only on correspondence and limited contact with the European member of the GD, Dr. Thilison of Liege, Mathers describes his meetings with the "Secret Chiefs" thus:

[quote="SL MacGregor Mathers"]

Concerning the Secret Chiefs of the Order.. I can tell you nothing. I know not even their earthly names. I know them only by certain secret mottos. I have but very rarely seen them in the physical body; and on such rare occasions the rendezvous was made astrally by them. They met me in the flesh at the time and place appointed beforehand. For my part I believe them to be human and living on this earth; but possessing terrible superhuman powers.

[/quote]

By the time that Aleister Crowley was introduced to the GD by Julian Baker and George Cecil Jones in 1898, it had become a seven-degree Order run entirely by Mathers, who claimed the final three degrees of the Order, Magister Templi, Magus and Ipsissimus, were possessed only by the "Secret Chiefs."

Aleister Crowley had been led to seek this order after Alfred Edward Waite had advised him, in a short postal correspondence, to read de Steiger's translation of the novel, The Cloud on the Sanctuary, in which a "secret school of the invisible and interior church" led Crowley to seek out the so-called "secret chiefs."

In 1905, when Crowley wrote Liber Legis, he claimed that it had been dictated to him by Aiwass, a discorporeal "messenger of the Lord of the Universe" sent by "the Secret Chiefs of the Third Order." Aiwass, Crowley further adumbrated, had lived as Ra-Hoor-Khuit, a priest of Hoor-Pa-Kraat, whom Crowley identified with Harpocrates, the Greek God of silence and secrecy. He believed that, having made this contact directly with the Secret Chiefs himself, he had passed beyond the limits of initiation that could be offered by Mathers' Golden Dawn, which, by then, had already split between the London and Paris lodges.

Around 1911, Crowley travelled across the Sahara desert with Victor Neuberg and performed the "calls of the thirty ayres or ethers" of John Dee. This ritual, he believed, represented his own self-initiation into the "secret chiefs of the Great White Brotherhood." Crowley underwent several subsequent further initiations in various other orders at various places around the world, but he maintained his belief that the initiations within the "Invisible College" were entirely between the aspirant and their spiritual guides on the astral plane.

By 1925, Bessant had joined forces with Charles Leadbeater as the heads of the Theosophical Society. Leadbeater wrote a book called The Masters and the Path which served to flesh out in much greater detail the concept of the Secret Chiefs as discorporeal, or astral, entities who have already long ago achieved transcendence of the physical plane, but who, like Hindu Mahatmas and Buddhist Lamas, choose to continue to guide mankind in the search for psychological self-actualisation and in the esoteric arts.

The ideas of the Secret Chiefs of the Great White Brotherhood have since evolved into the idea of the Ascended Masters, a group of (originally, according to Edward Bulwer-Lytton's account in The Coming Race, a work that inspired Blavatsky early on) nine or so individuals who have incarnated in various, usually well-known, historical personages throughout time and have sought, through their teachings in each of these past lives, to guide mankind's progress toward the higher levels of thinking and to steer mankind's evolution toward higher planes of existence.

Nowadays, those who preserve the tradition of the Secret Chiefs in the form of trance-channeling teachings of the Ascended Masters believe in a hierarchy among the leaders of them, and that each of these seven "rays" operates from different temples located around the earth. Of these, the first, lowest, or "red" ray (associated with the Root chakra) is Serapis Bey, followed in ascending order by Lady Nada, Kuthumi (who was Blavatsky's personal mentor), Hilarion, El Morya and Kwan-Yin. It is said that the leader of the Ascended Masters of the seven rays is known as St. Germain, who was even the ruler of a great civilisation more than fifty thousand years ago located where the Sahara desert is now.

Other ascended masters include entities who, through their trance-channelers, identify themselves as Metatron, Melchizedek, Matreiya, Ganesh, Jesus/Sanada and Abraham. Among these also is an entity who identifies himself as Seth.

From 1963 until her death in 1984, Jane Roberts trance-channeled Seth in a self-induced hypnotic meditative trance. Her husband, Robert Butts, transcribed the material that Seth, through Jane, dictated. Roberts also held a weekly ESP class whose sessions were sometimes tape-recorded and written down by the students. Roberts published several books as well. These materials have been collected and published as the "Seth Material."

Seth's essential teachings range in their material from dreams and ESP to biblical history, Atlantis, space travel, parallel dimensions, probable selves, and the behavior of subatomic particles. His main philosophy is simple, and is common to the teachings of the Ascended Masters: "you create your own reality; you get what you concentrate upon."

Although I

The individual Seth sessions audiotapes are available for sale by the Seth Center online at: <http://www.sethcenter.com/pages/audio2.htm>

A list by topics of Seth quotes can be found here: <http://www.geocities.com/Athens/5484/quotes.htm>

To hear another Ascended Master, Maitreya, deliver a speech through a trance-channeller at the UN Meditation Room, funded by the Lucis Trust started by Alice Bailey, click here: http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/United_Nations_Talk.mp3 (11MB)

For more spoken word recordings of trance-channeling sessions with Maitreya in mp3 form click here: http://www.maitreya-edu.org/windows_media/talk/windows_media.htm

The material of the individual Ascended Masters is mainly gibberish and gobbledegook. But it is "higher level" gibberish, and "New Age" gobledegook. Consider this brief quote from Seth:

[quote="Seth"]Your ideas of Atlantis are partially composed of future memories[/quote]

- source: <http://www.geocities.com/Athens/5484/seth23.htm>

As I say, this modern incarnation of the once-Messiah figure of a Second-Coming sect around the time of Christ should in no way be misconstrued himself with the neo-Sethian movement I am about to outline, as it pertains to the resurrection under the Messiah figure of Christ of the same Second-Coming concept which was expressed 2000 years ago as the sect of Seth.

-ben

The neo-Sethian movement has nothing to do with the trance-channeling of Ascended Masters in the Meditation Room of the UN building in New York. The trance-channeling of Ascended Masters is merely the modern equivalent of the original character of Seth, whose sect were millennialists and eschatologists at the time of Christ. It is the millennialist and eschatological character of this elder sect that I refer to in our present time as the neo-Sethian movement within the Order of Death. Thus, one should not confuse neo-Sethianism with the personage or character of Seth, the figure of the Messiahic sect nor the trance-channelled ascended master. Neo-Sethianism refers exclusively to the millennialism and the eschatology components in their form as modern mainstream currents in the stream of modern consciousness. It would be false to say, for example, that the teachings of any of the modern Ascended Masters reflect on a more than unconscious level the same millennialism and eschatology as, say, a tv evangelist. The Masters speak of peace, while the priests speak of Armeggedon. The Masters teach manifestation, while the priests admonish Satan.

So, before I go on, perhaps it would be wise to define what I mean by these millennial and eschatological components that define the philosophy of Second-Comingism in the modern Messiah-cult, or, as I call them, the neo-Sethians.

The concept of the world ending (eschatology) manages to occur about once every 1000 years or so (millennialism). For example, the last cult of this sect to have occurred was known as the Mormons. Mormonism, an eschatological cult founded about an hundred years ago by Joseph Smith is still around, however Smith's proposed date for the End Times ushered in by the appearance to him of Christ is largely believed to have elapsed, and the cult has split into the modern LDS (Latter Day Saints) and the Watchtower society of the Jehovah's Witnesses.

Joseph Smith taught his followers that the world was going to end soon, and that the times in which his followers were living then were the end times described in the biblical Book of Revelations. Of course, Smith is by no means the first or only example of this. Before Pope Gregory reformed the calendar in the 1600's, one Bishop Usher dated the time of the Garden of Eden to have been about 4000 years before the life of Christ. This fueled a huge debate, because it also says, in the New Testament, that the devil reigns on earth every 1000 years, after which he is thrown into the pit of hell. In the end days, this is followed by 1000 years of peace; a goal everyone agrees upon as being worth desire. So, it was believed during Bishop Usher's time that the Apocalypse of Revelation would come in their own lifetime.

One can easily see that it was a similar form of millennialism that pervaded the time of the life of Christ. The desire for a Messiah that would end the Roman captivity of Judeah was incredibly strong, since the effects in the outlying colonies of the change from the Republic to Caesar's Empire were only beginning to be felt. This relates the modern eschatological millennial movements to the original phenomenon at the time of Christ, the neo-Sethians with the Sethians.

Neo-Sethianism is the specific phenomenon I am associating with the time period of Christ and the modern time period is the Second-Comingism movement at the time, of Seth, and now, of Jesus.

This Second-Comingism of the original Sethians and now of the neo-Sethians is, as I have stated elsewhere, synonymous in my mind with the simple performance of temporal rituals, which are themselves the very purpose of civilisation.

The "Apocalypse," "Scape-Goat," "Equinox," etc. are all ceremonies similar to the Messiah movement or the Second-Comingism of the "resurrection."

All of these loosely permeate, shaping and defining the terrain, of the entire history, the rise and fall, of all great civilisations since the flood, approximately 6000 years ago.

Some, such as the Ascended Masters, teach that this is all part of the grand circle of solar precession, the movement of the rising sign through each of the zodiac houses that occurs over the millions of years, and called an "Aeon," etc.

Others simply get too caught up in serving society by performing history's rituals, they believe in the message of their respective sect and even seek to compete with the members of other ritualist performers in the universum theatricum.

the modern millennarians, the neo-Sethians within the Christian faith, are fighting an uphill battle right now, even as I write these words.

There was a great rush, a great surge forward around the turn of the millennium, between the years 1999 and 2000. It seemed as though peace would prevail in the coming millennium, the groundhog had seen its shadow, and the sun was out. There was talk of global crustal displacement theory, coined by Graham Hancock as a combination of Hapgood's Path of the Pole research, as well as apparent evidence, such as in the Atlantis Blueprint by Colin Wilson and Rand Flem-ath, from ancient ruins and past supercivilisations. There was a book published called 5/5/2000, Ice, the Ultimate Disaster, which thoroughly outlined most of what would later be represented through lugubrious research by Louis P. Ferrel on Adventures Unlimited press. However, besides this there was little prior event to celebrate the actual grand cross alignment of the seven noble planets with earth, the sun, and even the moon.

Thus, our portion of the encoded transmission was sent. However what we heard back, what the repercussions were, was dire and disastrous.

5/5/2000 pales before the treacherous might of the date 9/11/2001.

There was an explosion, and a rift opened in the time space continuum. Everything went topsy-turvy, and we were all sucked through a wormhole about the size of a glazed doughnut compared to the vast entirety of the cosmic scheme of things. That is to say that, according to some, this is, indeed, what SHOULD have happened, and according to few within these some, what failed to happen.

Remember this happened on the first new year of the Christian calendar, that is, the Gregorian combined solar-lunar civic calendar which has become the western business world's calendar. Whether the attack was perpetrated by Moslem terrorists, as it is apparently the agenda of the media to convince us it was, or whether it was all a complex grab for power by a political party backed and funded by big oil and energy companies. It is ultimately irrelevant compared to the fact that it did indeed happen, and therefore has already happened. At least in this reality.

For example, the material prior to the turn of the millennium included only tentative traces of 2012ism, and Jose Arguilles, for example, had only published one workbook on the Ascension material, and it was a colourful sketchbook. There appeared to be similarities before the turn of the millennium between Arguilles and Stan Tennen as a kind of forward-thinking movement. Of course, in 99 with the release of Pi, Dan Winter sprung off as a spontaneous internet personality from Tennen which resulted in Stan Tennen suing his arch-cyber-rival for violating copyright law by reprinting some of Tennen's "inventions" on another website, apparently without giving him proper credit. It was also around this same time that the Montauk material by Preston Nichols and Peter Moon began to be published for the first time, and only later was I to find Tennen's name mentioned in there as well, misspelled, and in relation to the Platonic solids.

These were all the types of forward-thinking that were, before the turn, considered "fringe" occult currents subsumed by the mainstream of American popular culture. Now what do we have? We have massive amounts of 2012 propaganda being rammed down our throats constantly in the form of Arguilles' gloating "Time and the Technosphere," and David Icke's masterpiece of research, "Alice in Wonderland and the World Trade Centre Disaster." Such books as these are capitalising on the tragedy of the explosion permitted.

Because, since we are still here and still just as bored, malcontent and mischievous as ever down here on planet earth, we can assume that the world itself did not end on 9-11, or for that matter on the Day of the Dead the preceding year. And because of the dissatisfaction deeply felt by Christians, especially the primitivist southern baptists and tv evangelists, that their faith did not succeed in destroying the world at the turn of the millennium, they have entered a dangerously retrogressive philosophical cycle in the progress of modern history.

Now, I think we can all rationally see that, in and of itself, there is no real danger imposed by the radical fundamentalist christians of the neo-Sethian sect of Second-Comingism within "primitivist" protestant Christianity. They represent a small group of people, mostly white male westerners, although lately they have accepted some Arab dictators into their folds. These are the so-called Bildebergers, or the Trilateral Commission, the Council on Foreign Relations, the Carlyle Group, the Bohemian Grove group, the Project for a New American Century, etc. etc. who are nothing more than a glorified version of a good-old-boy network, such as between lodgemembers a handshake, or between towns a letter of passage. Although these are considered high and lofty positions of power among the money-hypnotised masses, in reality these individuals are forced to advocate "hawkish" military stand-points for the better parts of their lives, and are really nothing to be envied over.

This is the problem with the neo-Sethian movement within the Order of Death:

They are seeking to come into control, by controlling the greatest number of sleepers with their agenda, of the greatest access to the sleep-walkers, the shadows of the higher archetypes, who dwell within the ECS.

Their agenda, that is millennarian eschatology associated with second-comingism, runs contrary to the preservation of history through ritual associated with the psychic conspirators of the Cathar Black Hand.

However, because the ideology of second-comingism has caused its followers to infiltrate certain "high ranking" positions of social power, where it mingles with and combines with the globalist agenda of the psychic-conspiracy to use civilisation to mimic by ritual the passage of time.

In fact, the neo-Sethian movement in origin is incredibly out of place among the NWO. In its origins, in grass roots state militias and radical "primitivist" religious cults, the neo-Sethian movement associates the NWO with Satan, and with the devil of Apocalypse. Therefore, it considered the federal government, as an example of NWO globalism, the adversary.

As this position crept up the levels of power to more mainstream tv evangelical media, it began to mingle with some of the money of the money from the proletariat masses. This caused the concept of the devil as the NWO to be transformed into the concept that, because the devil was already running things down here on earth, soon God would send the second coming of the messiah.

As the date of the turn of the 21st century approached, the message of the second-coming of the messiah had spread throughout the lower middle classes of America, to the land-owning farmers and to the day-labourers. These people did not believe, like the state militias or radical cults, that the NWO was the devil. However, they began to believe very quickly, thanks to the media, in the concept of a second-coming of the messiah around the turn of the 21st century.

Soon enough, the upper-middle class and the more wealthy in America got into their heads the idea that they could use this millennarianism to better gauge and guide the will of the people. They decided to allow into their classes some representatives of the second-coming concept of the millennarian philosophy. They made new friends, and made these new friends of theirs to become rich.

At the same time, however, the idea of the devil had begun to ascend through the mindless ranks of personal philosophers. From being represented as the globalist NWO among the militias and cults, the concept of the ultimate evil had by now penetrated the media of the tv preachers in the form of the idea that the second-coming of the messiah would herald the end of the world. To them, this meant that, 2/3 of the population would die and go to hell, while the rest would ascend to heaven in a rapture. In either case, all human life on earth would end.

So, the nouveau-riche proles and lower-class bourgeoisie, began to adopt an eschatological bent to their millenarianism almost at the same time as they began to come into money by certain manipulations of the market. Thus, those among the pre-existent upper crust of high society who were pre-selected to be the representatives of this movement, that is, those members of the psychic conspiracy who controlled society as the NWO and sought a more globalist agenda, therefore had to appear to their new "friends," the suddenly wealthier right-wing middle class, to share their belief that not only was the second-coming of christ about to occur, but that this would also herald the end of the world and the end of human life on earth, which, in reality, they didn't believe.

So, by today, you have the elected representatives of the neo-cons on the one hand promoting the idea that by their actions they will bring about the end of the world, and on the other, under the table so to speak, using the neo-Sethian philosophy to consolidate power within the wealthy elites themselves for the purpose of furthering the globalist agenda in the NWO and the continuation of civilisation itself.

Therefore, the neo-Sethian movement, which began within militias and cults who believed the globalist NWO was Satan on earth, through its promotion by the fundamentalist Christian right to the so-called moral majority, has infiltrated the minds of some of the psychic conspirators of the globalist NWO, which would otherwise only be focused on the work of perpetuating civilisation and preserving the rituals of history, which is the goal of the Black Hand.

So, basically, the neo-Sethian movement is counter to the Black Hand.

These are, however, it should be strenuously noted, both autonomous ideological philosophies from either the Cult of Sleep itself or the Order of Death itself. The Cult of Sleep is one thing, and the Order of Death is a thing relative to it. The Black Hand is one thing, and the neo-Sethians are another thing relative to that.

Also, it should be worth noting, both the Black Hand and the neo-Sethians have people who think in their respective philosophies who are and who are not members of the psychic Order of Death. So, both of these philosophies makes itself aware of, and exists relative to, the concepts of the psychic conspiracy and the psychic revolution. However, neither of these, the Black Hand nor the neo-Sethians, should be confused as being completely composed of either psychic conspirators or psychic revolutionaries, or even being completely composed of members of the psychic Order of Death.

There are plenty of non-psychic neo-Sethians. There are plenty of non-psychic Black Hand conspirators. There are neo-Sethian conspirators, and neo-Sethian revolutionaries, both psychic and not. There are plenty of non-psychics of all of these groups, and they are the sleepers.

It is the Order of Death that exists to control the sleepers.

Therefore, it is the psychic conspirators and the psychic revolutionaries alike within the Order of Death that we should be worried about. These are the ones who follow either the Black Hand path or are neo-Sethians.

-ben

benpadiiah

Member

Joined: 04 Oct 2005

Posts: 94

Location: Tallahassee FL

Posted: 2005-12-17 Saturday 02:18:14 Post subject:

-----religion refers to that which is outside of and beyond us.

spirituality refers to that which is within and inside of us.

-ben

www.benpadiiah.com

"I have sworn upon the altar of God eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man."

-Thomas Jefferson Back to top »

I can't claim to know much of this topic myself, as I consider it a practical means to achieving desired ends, and, aside from trying to change traffic lights with my mind, I have no desired ends that I would try to use this means to achieve. Needless to say, however, more deserves to be said about it.

The idea of instantaneous manifestation is as old as humanity itself. It is one of our most deeply ingrained genetic tendencies. The fact that we know of it, but do not possess it, and that it is therefore something to be desired, implies that we did at one time have this ability, and that it continues to exist as merely a dormant part of our genetic code.

Some would say that the primitive cave men obviously did not have this ability, however it is clear that most of the other animals possess this ability. Consider the bear that manages to catch a huge fish in a stream, or the eagle who swoops down from nearly above the clouds to grab a fish from the near the surface of the deepest part of a lake. Consider the rattlesnake that has genetically prepared a warning sign for itself so that it can threaten and avoid larger potential predators. Consider the poison in his fangs that allows him to completely tranquilise mice and then ingest them whole, and how this trait evolved over time. All animals possess, inherently, a foreknowledge of the events that are likely to happen to them in their lives, and have prepared for all natural contingencies through millions of years of genetic evolution. And although we have evolved the same amount of time as every other species on earth, we seem to lack their simple choice of silence, and so we try in vain to communicate with them using our forms of language. Although we share the planet with them, man alone is divided from the animals, and, even though their evolutionary traits exist within our genes as dormant codes unawakened by the mitochondrial RNA that zip and recombine our strands and strains of physical selves, we lack the projective capability of even a house cat. Like a housecat waiting with baited breath for a mouse to be baited from its hole by cheese, modern domestic and herd animals attempt to understand us, and why we made this choice to be, in their collective eyes, blind.

Because all animals have agreed to occasionally allow one of their kind to be prey to another, they understand the idea of going with the flow of time, and following the course of events, in ways we can only simulate to try to understand. They understand far better than we how they each comprise a vocal and working part of the great cycle, the wheel of time, that is the food chain as part of the overall ecosystem. They have access to many genetic memories we deny within ourselves most of the time, and to which we only awaken at the price of becoming aware of those others who, like us, have this trait, or this ability.

This ESP, however, as I understand it, is only the first step on a long journey toward instantaneous manifestation itself. Consider with what loveliness the whales sing their songs that echo throughout all the ocean, attracting in the brine shrimp that are shaken loose from the salty sea by their vast and ancient vibrations. Consider that the dinosaurs probably died as a result of their inability to control this ability once they became self-aware of it.

The cycle of nature and the flow of time are well and good. But then there is "that one moment." That one moment, like love at first sight, seems to be largely the reason why humankind has chosen to sacrifice its natural place within the cycle of nature and the flow of time. For the sake of manifesting "that one moment" appears to be the reason that humanity, as a unique species, came into manifest existence.

What do I mean when I refer to "that one moment?" I mean self-consciousness, the ability to identify oneself as a sentient, self-aware, entity or being, the ability to perceive death's inevitability, the ability to make conscious and rational choices between what one or the majority of us feel, think or believe is right or wrong. All the things that make humanity a unique, special and individual species. And that is why we say, "and God created Adam, the first man, in His own likeness." And also why we understand the "original sin" of Adam to represent the "Fall of Man," and why we toil for our survival and have pain during childbirth, etc. This is all rationalisation for why we seem to not be able to accomplish what the animals accomplish with ease, that being, to yield the fruits of one-ness with nature and time, to manifest what we mentally project.

Manifestation means to make physically real what we mentally imagine.

This usually occurs over long periods of time, that is, with great amounts of effort on the part of one individual person or even a whole community group of people. However, Hermeticism and other mystery schools lead us to believe that, perhaps at one time, and therefore perhaps some time once again, we possessed the ability to manifest our thoughts instantaneously.

This has more to do with a perception of reality than with the lusts of the id, the will, the desire. For example, one cannot drink from a phone or make a coffee cup ring, unless, that is of course, one is prepared to accept a reality in which one is capable of accomplishing such things. Usually, we call this state "madness." It is why "instantaneous manifestation" is considered delusional, and therefore "off-limits" to serious scholars and to would-be practitioners.

As I understand it, and from what little about it I have read, manifestation-over-time occurs only after very very long periods of practise. The art, or rather craft, for art is of the naturally talented, which is being practised here is trance, meditation, or, more accurately... creative visualisation.

If one practises meditation for several hours a day, several days a week, several weeks a month, several months a year, for several years one may attain trance. Trance is when one is awake but producing theta waves as if in a deep sleep, without any thoughts on the mind, and without any other mental activity.

If one practises trance for several hours a day, several days a week, several weeks a month, several months a year, for several years one may attain creative visualisation. Creative visualisation is simply the picturing of objects in the imagination, focusing on their dimensions more and more until the image of them appears clearly before the mind's eye. This is only the beginning of creative visualisation, which goes beyond even the meditative trance visualisation of other sensory stimuli, such as smell and touch, and culminates in outright astral travel through realms supposedly only accessible through such trance states.

If one practises creative visualisation for several hours a day, several days a week, several weeks a month, several months a year, for several years one may attain manifestation-over-time. Manifestation over time begins with the perception of synchronicities, sometimes déjà vu's from prior dreams, and sometimes a recurring theme, such as a specific number, throughout one's day-to-day routines. This is the unconscious mind producing manifestations in reality. Therefore, the meaning of these usually appears obscure, as long as it is only the unconscious that is doing the manifesting. However, with time, the recognition of these can be learned, and the number of them one recognises in day-to-day reality increased, even perpetually. The ultimate extension of this is the "time-tunnel" or the "tunnel-reality" experience, which is oneness with the flow of nature.

If one practises manifestation-over-time for several hours a day, several days a week, several weeks a month, several months a year, for several years one may attain instantaneous manifestation. Instantaneous manifestation is, literally, the ability to make something appear "out of thin air" right before the naked eye. It is the culmination of the magical craft. This begins with telekinesis, the ability to subtly manipulate and even move objects through mental concentration alone. For example, me trying to change the traffick lights with my mind. The ultimate apex of instantaneous manifestation is complete control over one's location in space-time, such that one may phase in and out of lower-dimensional existence themselves, and thus explore the realms beyond the astral, and even beyond the mental, such as the further worlds of the QBLH. This is the goal of spiritual evolution.

there is a school after the concept that instantaneous manifestation is constantly occurring throughout everything around us, it is only separated between its simultaneous occurrences by "action at a distance," otherwise perceived, from a point between two related events, as a synchronicity or a coincidence. For example, you may be standing in a room between two girls at either opposite end, when one of the girls might happen to pull out a cigarette and the other one happen to pull out a lighter just at the same time. This happens all the time, and is patently obvious to anyone willing to look up and observe it. This "action at a distance," or as Jung called it "a line of cause and effect operating orthogonally to the regular line of cause and effect," is entirely out in the open all the time, and, it is likely, would even go on existing were we not necessarily there to be observing it.

there is a school after the concept that this "action at a distance" is what must be summoned towards and then down under the Master's control in order for us to be able to bear the burden of the responsibility for instantaneous manifestation. For example, what makes the difference between someone who sees the two girls at the party, and someone who introduces them to each other?

So, to begin to bring instantaneous manifestation under our control, we must first view and understand how it manifests itself in our natural environment. Then we can seek and find others who are influencing the situation using subtle methods, and ultimately learn by studying them the techniques they use to do so. Only then can we plan strategies at playing the social game, and only then can we hope to even learn about the control of coincidence, let alone the study of synchronicity, or even the concept of instantaneous manifestation.

The stage of beginning to recognise synchronicities from mere coincidences within our environment: whether this takes a long time from one event to another, or whether it is immediate, is governed entirely by the quantity of stimulus. This stage is governed by what I define as "the Law of Irony." The "Law of Irony" is governed by inversion. Whatever you expect or hope will happen, the opposite probably will. This is commonly known as "bad luck."

The stage of recognising these orchestrated coincidences as the form of communication used by a higher order of beings: in this stage mild ESP is possible, with others acting like antennae in crowds, subtly attracting some types of people to them while repelling certain others. At this level there is "party-politics," and the "natural" groupings of social-classes. In reality, as one comes rapidly to know once this stage is reached, it is really only the minds of each individual that are being shared by archetypes of the different groups they fit into. Strong ESP and guidance by occult currents occurs on this level. When one is within one's proper path and place and time between groups, then one will experience positive energy, feedback, and luck. When one is out of the flow of their true will, when one is reserved or when one is ostricised, then one is "out of luck," "in a bad way," or "having a bad streak."

The stage of identifying, communicating, becoming familiar with, knowing and understanding, and finally merging and becoming of one mind with one's definition of a "higher-order being." The ones we find who most probably control our environment, that is, the others at the party who are the extroverts, the leaders, liars, etc. who embody their identification of their chosen stereotypes, that is, the archetypal image we have of them itself, and then finally all scientific definitions we could have of that image, must be completely liberating for the mind to endure. We identify our own self-image first as like others, then as relative to higher-order concepts, and finally as one with the Most High.

This is all based on social interaction while in a state of trans-mundane thinking, but all the same things could be explained using astro-physics as an example. For example, every person is a star leads to that some people are black holes, leads to that people congregate around them like stars in a galaxy. This is the same as designing the road and railway systems of a city, or looking into the psychology of a multiple personality disorder victim seeking unification of their split-self.

All of this should, of course it goes without saying, be practised before and after trance meditation, in order to assist in the craft of creative visualisation.

-ben

This is where the Order of Death comes in. It is the goal and purpose of the Order of Death to convince us that the ECS IS necessary for the greater perception of the universal mind... and that, more than this... it is even God itself.

They have pretty much always done this: treated the planet earth, that is, the collections of societies known to each other, as a theatre, hosting archetypes that move through us all, and using this energy for themselves. They continue to do it today, through societies holding benefits for themselves hosted by celebrity stereotypes from stage and screen.

The Order of Death are simply the psychic branch of the grand conspiracy. They have been the ones, traditionally, who have orchestrated the "painted sky" effect which occurs in many mass hallucinations. They are also responsible for super-human feats of land-art. They claim, themselves, to represent the forms of the archetypes themselves, calling them "god-forms" and dressing as ancient deities in secret ceremonies even today. Sometimes they have even allowed themselves to be worshipped as Gods, but then, usually, only as part of an animist pantheon.

Still, though, if you were to go to the Order of Death and ask them where the ECS came from... even with all their combined effort and individual studies of esoteric energy and atlantis, etc.... they would not be able even to guess.

They have full knowledge, of course, of how to operate the ECS. However they do not know how or why to use it except as a form of mind-control over the citizenry, to keep the herds of chattle in line, so to speak.

They believe that, by convincing the citizens that only one of them (even if only one at a time) may "ride the ride" of kether, that is, be unified with the Most High, the Source, ylem, the will of God, etc., the Lords of the Order of Death oppress the majority. They preach that Jesus was the last to use the ECS, that Mohammed was the last to understand it, that Buddha discovered it, or that it survived Noah's flood, etc. all of this is a made-up nonsense of pure delusional fiction. The ECS has existed for as long as the entire history of the earth. It was here before there was even life.

But it is only the EM field of earth at the utmost extent understood today. The satellites they have sent up are only as distant as the outer ionosphere whether they are aimed outward or inward. They broadcast EM signals at pulsed frequency rates, and that is how we have this global interconnectness of media. Some say this is a good thing for capitalism.

If it is, it is only because, since it has mastered how to PULSE the EM signals, it can then charge money to allow control of them by the people. There are many further esoteric fields out there beyond the merely global EM that we have not yet (publically) tuned in on. There are simply alot of unheard-of frequencies of vibrations, so-called "pitches" of matter.

These further fields of esoteric energy are what is passing through our planet (from our sun, and through our sun from galactic core, etc) and being harnessed within the EM network of the ECS to create the modern "painted sky" effect. Of course, needless to say, we can easily access much greater esoteric currents, and energies, and patterns than merely those which we can reflect upon the surface of the globe of earth. However, the trick is to be able to HARNESS them, to maintain the distinction between the psychic class as the controllers of the chattle class.

To this end it is not yet known how to apply this philosophy of doling out a limited supply to the masses with any form of finer or more esoteric energy than the EM field of earth, which, it should be remembered, has existed since before life even appeared here. To tap into the energy of the sun, they have experimented with ways of transferring solar and nuclear power into an electrical energy charge in order to control the pulsed rate of it across a network through a central grid.

Some of the neo-Sethians within the Order of Death, however, have recently generated a scare by raising gas prices over summer 05 to three dollars a gallon in the US, while waging a brutal war over oil in Iraq, because hurricane Katrina had knocked out Gulf of Mexico oil rigs and shipping (which had not even been there five years ago, when oil only cost about one twenty three). This was merely meant to centralise profits in the oil and energy companies for them to develop a way to harness and sell, or at least to injure or deplete, the limitless free energy of anti-gravity.

Because such technologies as VRAI and related programming have been allowed to progress unabated by legalities, while cloning has been bogged down in procedure, then it is likely that anti-gravity technology is being left to be used for the transportation of physical bodies into and/or across the fifth dimension.

The solution to this, so far, has been to use the satellite system through televisions, and to use the wire system for personal computers. However, with plasma flat-screen tvs has come the blue-tooth device for wireless connection of the personal computer to the antenna signal source through wireless phone technology. Now it is possible to connect to the internet on a cell-phone with a camera-screen built into it while on an airplane.

It will logically prove to be the next step to begin incorporating around-the-globe broadcasting satellites for the transmission of personally generated computer signals (such as the one you are reading now) via a wireless internet. This is probably already in the works in the orient, we simply don't hear any tech stories in our news here in the US anymore though.

Once this is done, and this type of technology I have heard of, cosmetic bio-ware will begin to incorporate humanity with the electronic circuitry based computer systems that will connect us all to wireless communications, and possibly even EM power, sources.

The US military has actually been experimenting with the most cutting-edge technologies since its inception as a standing force. The NAVY, whether it knew it at the time or not (and signs point to no), when it experimented with attaching Tesla coils to the deguassing rig on a battleship, was really opening up a vortex in time that may prove to be the first modern use of a worm-hole time-tunnel. The Air Force was founded to study anti-gravity devices, and stumbled upon stealth technology along the way. They began using scalar wave mufflers on "black" helicopters, but found there were effects caused by the emitter antenna on the neural synapses of the pilots. This was already being used by the CIA, contemporarily, via military satellites, and had been around since the inception of the use of radar, sonar, and morse code. All of these are the result of tapping into, or creating an aperture for, fifth dimensional energy.

What has not yet been discovered is a way to package it for sale, and thus maintain the dominant control over the course of future history by the wealthy elite, the pawn pieces on the social chess-board of the Order of Death.

So far, to the best of my knowledge, no one has successfully sustained a connection with the fifth dimensional energy after having established a temporary connection to it. Usually, terrible accidents are reported to result in the popular underground press. The most recent attempt, to my knowledge, to maintain a connection to the fifth-dimensional energy through mechanical means was the Montauk Project at an underground base in New York state.

By ritualising, through civilisation's ceremonies, the temporal patterns upon which the cogs of history revolve, the Order of Death has long harnessed the enormous power of the fourth-dimension. You could even say that civilisation is the third dimensional shadow that the Order of Death, in the fourth dimension, casts upon the surface of the earth by the light of the fifth dimension. In effect, the watchdogs for those who attempt to harness the fifth-dimensional energy are the fourth dimensional demi-archetypes of the Order of Death.

Now, the Order of Death are worshippers of the black hole at galactic core.

To them, the solar cults since Mithraism seem absurd and short-sighted.

And thus, it is through manipulating these solar cults that the Order of Death controls the people by forcing them to think no further of God than the ECS.

For example, no one thinks of if 2012 marks the alignment of the sun with galactic core from the perspective of earth's 23.5 degree inclined orbit, then what would mark the perihelion or aphelion equivalent for the sun's orbit around galactic core? We all know when perihelion and aphelion days are for earth. We even reset our clocks, here in the west, on them. We mark them as holidays on our calendars.

But only those who possess the "second sight" think in terms of the scale of our entire galaxy right now. Hopefully, by 2012, this will change. Strangely, in the "deep doctrine" of Moroni's cult, under Joseph Smith the millennialist, all the LDS's would get to own their very own planet. And, as I mention elsewhere...

[quote="ben"]This is all based on social interaction while in a state of trans-mundane thinking, but all the same things could be explained using astro-physics as an example. For example, every person is a star leads to that some people are black holes, leads to that people congregate around them like stars in a galaxy. This is the same as designing the road and railway systems of a city, or looking into the psychology of a multiple personality disorder victim seeking unification of their split-self.[/quote]

However, imagine God as the friendly earth god, the Santa Claus of the atmosphere, smiling down on us like a baby in the sun, perhaps even married to Gaia, the earth spirit goddess. This is the New Age perception of YHVH as Jehovah, as Yahweh, personified as Jesus Christ. This is NOTHING but the reflection of human history on the inside atmosphere of our own planet. If you believe this is His story, the story of God in man, and then through Christ, man returning with God... then you are blinded by the false light, the cold dawn, of Lucifer, Ruler of the ECS!

Well, at least co-ruler. LOL! Lucifer, Leviathan, Satan and Belial rule over the four watchtowers of the ECS.

These are but the guardians over the great wall that surrounds our planet, like the courtyard of a castle, and upon this one gravity well are all the constellations arrayed, and the zodiac displayed, the reflection of us all through the animal internet, down to every last grass blade.

The AC is the OS of the ECS. The Enochian Communication System measures the time tables of history upon the screen of the sky with the keys to the Atlantean calendar. And some people would have you believe that this was heaven above, and the residence of some, perhaps deceased, invisible God from somewhere beyond.

Therefore, there are all types of archetypes projected upon that screen. And no one knows how old it is or where it came from. They only know how to control it. So far, we have never received any message as a global culture from this screen, but then, it is only just recently becoming mechanically accessible to the "majority" of people (western civ).

So far there have been countless cultural "phenomena" to have occurred that have been broadcast through the antennae and the satellites of earth, however what part of all this could capture the entirety of our culture? These have only been zeitgeists of the weltanschung (spirits of the age), and none of their philosophies have been proven to adhere to the whole human species of planet earth.

It is true that, every now and then, like the days of a season one year, or like the spikes of frequency on a stereo sound meter, great empires of society or faith arise. Right now, America is the defacto dictator of a cultural empire itself... fashion fascism.

So far none of these have proven to be able to account for the belief systems of all the people of the entire planet. However, this is about to change, believe the neo-Sethians and the psychic-revolutionaries. A globally uniting Messiah will soon appear to guide the people in a shamanic trance ritual. Some of us also believe that the entire human population around the whole surface of the earth have been united before. Before the last ice-age, when Antarctica was uncovered by ice, and was then the north magnetic pole. Then came the floods of melting glaciers at the end of the last ice age, and another magnetic polar reversal. That is why I refer to the harnessing by humans of the ECS as pre-deluvial in origin. Only now it is being done using electronic machines instead of anti-gravity shems.

The ECS is the technological component of the "technological singularity." The singularity is the "spiritual" factor. Last time, the ECS was the spiritual.

Hopefully, next time, it will be the body itself.

Although some people, to some extent, believe that the body may go this time as well. Through the machine, through the technology, mankind may be able to teleport over limited distances, and travel faster than the speed of light over greater distances, they may be able to choose whether to live in their bodies or as discorporeal spirits (rather than thinking this can only be earned as a POD reward). The people who believe in a non-corporeal future are mostly the neo-Sethians right now, but all psychic-revolutionaries believe in the coming of a global psychic event of potential mass transcendence.

The psychic revolution is entirely premised on the idea that some globally unifying event will have to happen, and soon, and the conservatives among them believe in the "technological transition" and the "spiritual factor." There are enough members of the Order of Death who are psychic revolutionaries to sway the stream of history, the reflection painted on the inside of the sky, and so we are moving into a phase of global unification under the premise of celebrating mass calendrical events. It is not yet known if there are enough neo-Sethians to control the outcome of such an event. (Hopefully not, IMHO)

The neo-Sethian movement essentially worships ABRAXAS:

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/abraxas.jpg>[/img]

[quote="about.com/alt.religion"]Abraxas, also known as Abrasax, is a Gnostic solar deity associated with Yahweh, Mithras and the Celtic Belenus, as well as Yeshu (Jesus). Amulets and seals bearing the figure of Abraxas were common in the second century, and were used as recently as the thirteenth century in the seals of the Knights Templar. By medieval times, Abraxas was relegated to the ranks of demons.

The image most associated with abraxas is that of a composite creature with the head of a rooster, the body of a man, and legs made of serpents or scorpions. He carries a whip and shield, called wisdom and power. Abraxas is occasionally depicted driving a chariot drawn by four horse, probably representing the elements.

The word Abraxas was first proposed by the Alexandrian Gnostic scholar Basilides. Gematrically, the letters in Abraxas add to 365, the number of days in a solar year, and the number of Aeons, or emanations, in Gnostic cosmology. Each of the seven letters represents one of the seven planetary powers.

Tertullian, speaking of Basilides' description of Abraxas:

"Afterwards broke out the heretic Basilides. He affirms that there is a supreme Deity, by name Abraxas, by whom was created Mind, which in Greek he calls Nous; that thence sprang the Word; that of Him issued Providence, Virtue, and Wisdom; that out of these subsequently were made Principalities, powers, and Angels; that there ensued infinite issues and processions of angels; that by these angels 365 heavens were formed, and the world, in honour of Abraxas, whose name, if computed, has in itself this number. Now, among the last of the angels, those who made this world, he places the God of the Jews latest, that is, the God of the Law and of the Prophets, whom he denies to be a God, but affirms to be an angel."

[/quote]

-source: <http://altreligion.about.com/library/glossary/bldefabraxas.htm>

Thusly, ABRAXAS was originally believed to be a solar deity between the time of Mithra and the time of Jesus. Hence he was heretical to the roman judeans who detested hellenic hebrew gnosticism, which claimed that Jehovah was the demiurge, Samael.

By the time of Christ, ABRAXAS had been elevated to the status of the creator God, the God in whose mind (NOUS) occurred the Word (LOGOS). This clearly eastern Krishnaic idea of the universal mind was coupled in Christianity with Christ himself, as "the Word" was one of his titles given in scripture. Thus the early church fathers sought out as blasphemy the cult of ABRAXAS.

The problem the neo-Sethians are facing right now, which is a considerably public event for the history of the psychic cult that is behind and controls all society and the history of civilisation, all things being considered, is the way they are being represented by people who have some knowledge of the existence of the Order of Death, but no understanding of its motives or workings. Take David Icke, for example, who specifically associates them with Set, the Egyptian god of the Nile or Duat, the underworld, and was hence associated with Greek Typhon. Set being a serpent God, Icke then associates the upper classes, of whom there are a sharply decreasing number of members lately, with A) the conspiracy, B) dinosaurs from Draco, and C) the fifth dimensional esoteric energy. All of these are in some way or another true of the neo-Sethians, however, the neo-Sethians are only one movement within the greater Order of Death.

The Order of Death controls the sleepers, that is, the dreamers, the sleepers, the sleeper-agents of dreamland, and the waking-sleepers. By controlling all these factions they hope to channel the mental psychic energy of all of these essentially chattle factions in order to...

AWAKEN THE SLEEP-WALKERS.

According to the psychic revolutionaries, as each mind of the waking-sleepers, who work and toil mindlessly to uphold civilisation, awakens to it's own God-hood, then there is another thought in the universal mind of God, another alignment of galactic poles reflected in the looking glass orb of the ECS in the form of an alignment of planets within the zodiac.

As this happens, it is speculated, there will soon enough reach a "critical mass" after which super-saturation will occur and the entire universe will, seemingly spontaneously, "hyper-cathex." In other words, as each of the animal-days on the calendrical surface of the gravity-well of earth, that is, the AC portion of the ECS, awakens to itself, another thought of self-conscious awareness occurs in the mind of the sleeping deity, whose dream reality is. However, this is speculated to involve the ECS as a necessary component for the magnification of the psychic population of earth, and implies a direct connection, albeit through the stars and the zodiac, between the fate of the human species and the destiny of distant galaxies.

Of course, making the human contribution to the on-coming onslaught of universal self-destruction that is the collapsing speed of light responsible for the red shift of already deceased galaxies, so important is both wrong and the basis of most modern religions.

So, the animal-days, the kin of the Mayan calendar, are the component letters of the Enochian names engraved upon the four watchtowers surrounding us, forming the wall of the gravity well surrounding earth, upon which are inscribed the electromagnetic projections of the karmic centres on the surface of earth, guarded by the four princes, and each one known as a Watcher, or a Sleep-Walker.

The sleep-walkers, the Watchers, the aliens or the agents, however they are portrayed, the residents of the ECS, are like points on enormous, planet size fourth dimensional vibrational spatial metaforms that pass through us over time. They are composed of harmonic resonant frequencies between the superstring vibrations of tachyon microwavelengths. The EM field of the earth acts like a giant net, catching some of these vibrations when they overlap each other (scalar fields) as at corners of the enormous geometrical metaforms. These manifest themselves as our perception, from earth, of archetypes in our own, human, collective unconscious.

Now, the Psychic Conspiracy exists to maintain this harmonic resonance between earth's EM field and the subtle movements of esoteric energy through earth's gravity well. The psychic revolutionary does not, contrary to popular opinion, advocate its destruction. The psychic revolutionary advocates a sudden global psychic phenomenon to expose this purpose, goal, motive, etc. for the psychic conspiracy to be covering it up.

The use of the ECS to preserve, through massive, megalithic, land-art monuments and their camouflage in plain-sight as moseleums, the ritual-craft of civilisation has been the open secret that the psychic conspiracy has existed to cover up and that the psychic revolutionary exists to expose.

The neo-Sethians, within the Order of Death, that is, the radical gnostic sect within the psychic conspiracy, are the only ones that are being so "exposed" by authours such as Icke who obsess over those who control the world's wealth without questioning why we should consider their wealth something worth valuing.

backed up the database and added rank titles as follows, per postcount:

entered apprentice	0
fellow craft	5
master mason	10
secret master	15
perfect master	20
confidential secretary	25
provost and judge	30
intendent of building	35
elu of nine	40
elu of fifteen	45
elu of twelve	50
master architect	55
royal arch of solomon	60
perfect elu	65
knight of sword	70
prince of jerusalem	75
knight of east and west	80
knight rose croix	85
pontiff	90
master symbolic lodge	95
noachite or prussian knight	100
knight of royal axe	105
chief of tabernacle	110
prince of tabernacle	115
knight of brazen serpent	120
knight of the sun adept	125
grand scottish knight of st. andrew	130
knight kadosh	135
inspector inquisitor	140
sublime prince of the royal secret	145
inspector general	150
Probationer	155
Neophyte	160
Zelator	165
Theoricus	170
Practicus	175
Philosophus	180

Dominus Liminus	185
Zelator Adeptus Minor	190
Theoricus Adeptus Minor	195
Adeptus Major	200
Adeptus Exemptus	205
Magister Templi	210
Magus	215
Ipsissimus	220
Apprentice	225
Companion	230
Master	235
Secret Master	240
Perfect Master	245
Master by Curiosity	250
Provost and Judge	255
English Master	260
Elect of Nine	265
Elect of the Unknown	270
Elect of Fifteen	275
Perfect Elect	280
Illustrious Elect	285
Scottish Trinitarian	290
Scottish Companion	295
Scottish Panissiere	300
Scottish Master	305
Scot of the Jourdain Jaho Jochim	310
Scot of the Sacred Vault of James VI	315
Scot of St. Andrew	320
Little Architect	325
Great Architect	330
Architecture	335
Perfect Architect (apprentice)	340
Perfect Architect (companion)	345
Perfect Architect (master)	350
Perfect Architect	355
Sublime Scot	360
Sublime Scot of Heredom	365
Royal Arch	370
Grand Axe	375
Sublime Knight of Choice	380
Knight of the Sublime Choice	385
Prussian Knight of the Tower	390
Knight of the Temple	395
Kinght of the Eagle	400
Knight of the Black Eagle	405
Knight of the Red Eagle	410
Knight of the White East	415
Knight of the East	420
Architect of Sovereign Temple Commanders	425
Prince of Jerusalem	430
Sovereign Prince Rose-Croix	435
Knight of the West	440
Sublime Philosopher	445
Chaos the First (discrete)	450

Chaos the Second (wise)	455
Knight of the Sun	460
Supreme Commander of the Stars	465
Sublime Philosopher	470
Miner (first grade of the key)	475
Washer (second grade of the key)	480
Blower (third grade of the key)	485
Founder or Caster (4th grade of the key)	490
True Mason Adept	495
Elect Sovereign	500
Sovereign of Sovereigns	505
Grand Lawful Master of Symbolical Lodges	510
Most High Priest Sacrificer	515
Knight of Palestine	520
Grand Knight of the Black & White Eagle	525
Sovereign Inspector Knight Kadosh	530
Grand Inquisitor Commander	535
Knight Beneficent	540
Knight of the Rainbow	545
Knight of Chanuka	550
Most Wise Prince	555
Supreme Tribunal of Princes Talmudim	560
Supreme Consistory Zadokim	565
Council General of Princes of Haram	570
Grand Prince Haram	575
Sovereign Prince Hasid	580
Sovereign Grand Prince Hasid	590
Grand Inspector's Intendant	595
Council of Princes of the 78th Degree	600
Tribunal of Princes of the 79th Degree	605
Council of Princes of the 80th Degree	610
Supreme Consistory General	615
Supreme Council of Princes (81°)	620
Grand Tribunal of Illustrious Princes	625
Supreme Council of Princes (83°)	630
Sovereign Council General	635
Supreme Council of Princes (85°)	640
Council General of Grand Ministers	645
Grand Ministers (second series)	650
Grand Ministers (third series)	655
Supreme Power of the Order	660
Outer Head of the Order	665

The Cheshire Sam Trilogy

[img]<http://www.benpadiiah.com/bookstore/CST1.jpg>[/img]

[url=http://www.benpadiiah.com/bookstore/bookstore/Cheshire_Inc..zip]Cheshire Inc. .zip[/url]
(1.054 MB)

C. Inc. is basically more of a collection of manuscript documents, written during high school, and compiled here unedited. While extremely rough around the edges, it does showcase some of the first written work by this author and presents quite a viewpoint into his mind at the time. The authors main inspirations at the time were William S. Burroughs (author of Naked Lunch) and Philip K. Dick (author of Do Androids Dream of Electric Sheep, which was subsequently made into the movie Blade Runner, director Ridley Scott, stars Harrison Ford and Dolph Lundgren).

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/CST2.jpg>[/img]
[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/bookstore/So_Sang_Sarah.zip]So Sang Sarah.zip[/url]
(4.679 MB)

SSS is the continuation of the story roughly fleshed out in C. Inc. In SSS, the character of the Detective and that of the elusive Cheshire Sam are fully formed, and their science fiction world fully realised down to the most minute detail. Truly a step and a half up from the first book in the series, this work was originally rushed to press in 2000 as a limited edition of five copies for the wedding of a friend of the author.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/CST3.jpg>[/img]
[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/bookstore/infinity_inverted.zip]Infinity Inverted.zip[/url] (1.160 MB) covering the longest span of time in the shortest number of pages of all three, the final installment of the Cheshire Sam Trilogy finds the treacherous General Tso gaining ultimate power over the animal factions, only to lose it all for his bride, and of course, the final confrontation between the detective and Cheshire Sam. Truly a page-turner, this adventure is partially also a history book, full of old writings about the backstories of the characters and places from throughout the trilogy and its time periods.

Food For The Damned

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/FFTD.jpg>[/img] [url=<http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/bookstore/FFTD1.zip>]Food for the Damned book one.doc zip[/url] (1.791MB)

volume one is a collection of poetry written prior to 1997, and contains 599 pages.

volume two is a collection of poetry written prior to 2005, and contains 1978 pages.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/no_image.jpg[/img] [url=<http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/bookstore/combinedFFTD.pdf.zip>] the combined version of FFTD1&2[/url] (31.57 MB)

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/FSOM.jpg>[/img] [url=<http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/bookstore/FSOM.zip>]the Formal System of Metaphysics[/url] (1.047 MB)

the FSOM, written in 2001, represents the seminal work of the author in this field. It presents a simple system of reasoning, based on the six fundamental questions, and proceeds to elaborate upon it using complex multidimensional geometries. The primary focus of the work is to help the reader construct for themselves a "memory castle" mental reference structure, and to enable the reader to then use this system for deductive reasoning.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/MPDR.jpg>[/img]

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/bookstore/MPDR.zip]the Metaphysician's Desk Reference[/url] (3.166 MB)

the magnum opus of the author in this field, published by 1stbooks Print on Demand publishing house in 2002/3, and subsequently under the imprint of AuthorHouse books by the same publishing company, only a limited number of this book are in print around the world. The published version, retailing for $25, contains the FSOM and the MPDR. The MPDR itself begins with a section covering the entirety of the universe's history from its cosmological conception through to the socio-political events at the time of its writing. Following this, the author then expounds upon such complex subjects as polar precession, the role of tachyons in the force of gravity, and the ancient wisdom of the world's mystics, breaking them all down to size and making them more understandable to a first-time reader of these subjects.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/NB2.jpg[/img]
[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/bookstore/NB2.zip]Notebook 2[/url] (99.00 MB)

NB2 presents the entirety of the author's first black-book for the first time for the average reader's perusal. This work should not be delved into lightly

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/no_image.jpg[/img]
[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/bookstore/NB3.zip]Notebook 3.zip[/url] (61.09 MB)

NB3 presents the progressive thought process of the author following the initial cosmological work in the MPDR as it unfolded over the following year through a series of several dozen diagrams. This work represents an incredible amount of time and study, and may not be suitable material for the first-time reader to understand.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/NWO.jpg[/img] [url=http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/bookstore/new_world_order.pdf.zip]For a New World Order[/url] (6.622 MB) written in 2001, NWO presents a series of satirical news articles lampooning not only the role of the modern press and media, but also outlining some of the more deeply rooted hysterias of the contemporary era. Containing several works of art by the author as well, this work is being presented exclusively over the net.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/TOD.jpg[/img]
[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/bookstore/Tree_of_Death_v.02.pdf.zip]the Tree of Death and the Qliphoth[/url] (3.293 MB)

the TOD represents the most scholastically satisfactory in terms of thoroughness of research, reference and citation. It explores the mythology of Hebrew Mysticism, its origins and sources, as well as postulates several potential modifications based on some of the most recently archaeologically excavated evidence on these matters to come to light at the time of its writing. Contains a completed section on Tarot, as well as some accompanying essays.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/CBOT.jpg>[/img] [url=<http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/pamphlet.pdf>]Council Book of Time for the Initiated[/url] (1.3 MB)

Completed Monday August 8th, 2005, the Council Book is very short and simple. The book itself is actually only a pamphlet, which is available for free download by clicking on the cover. The product for sale here is the research work behind the council book proper.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/ben_com/historia.jpg[/img]
[url=<http://www.benpadijah.com/historia/historia.pdf>]historia singularitatis.pdf[/url] (848 KB)

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/no_image.jpg[/img]
[url=<http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/TCSMV.pdf>]Texas Chainsaw Massacre five script[/url]
(128.3 MB)

seasonal greetings to you all.

Some of you I remember, most of you I do not.

I bet you're wondering why I've called you all here today.

Well, one of the perks that comes with being a member of my site is me occassionally doing things to encourage you all to come and visit it every once in a while.

I keep my memberlist pruned back of all posters with zero posts, in case any of those nasty pr0n-bots should happen to slip in, as has actually happened here once or twice now. Thank you GOOGLE. LOL!

Anyway, because I have only those I know to me to be my internet comrades, chums, pals, friends, etc. as members on my forum, I can now pass on this message to you:

I have a hidden, members-only forum on my site now. I recently pried it to guests, but am now shutting it off for YOUR EYES ONLY.

On this forum, and for a relatively limited time, depending on member response, I have decided to GIVE AWAY ALL MY E-BOOKS FOR FREE.

It's simple. Just go to this forum on my site:

<http://www.benpadijah.com/phpBB2/viewforum.php?f=35> and then to the announcement thread. Pick a book (file sizes are listed) and download it. I would only ask that, once having done so, you distribute it freely amongst any of your own friends you would think might find it interesting.

I hope you take this opportunity to enjoy and engage in this act of sharing.

-ben

thread about the Asian Contagion:

<http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=449>

[quote]short selling is selling something that one does not (yet) own. Most investors "go long" on an investment, hoping that price will rise. Short sellers borrow a security and sell it hoping that it will decrease in value so that they can buy it back at a lower price and keep the difference.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Short_selling

[quote]The term "hedge fund" dates back to the first such fund founded by Alfred Winslow Jones in 1949. Jones' innovation was to sell short some stocks while buying others, thus some of the market risk was hedged. While most of today's hedge funds still trade stocks both long and short, many do not trade stocks at all and the term hedge fund has come to mean a relatively unregulated investment fund, often a partnership rather than a corporation in form, and characterized by unconventional strategies (i.e., strategies other than investing long only in bonds, equities or money markets).[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Hedge_fund

So a Hedge Fund is a small company that, essentially, sells stock shares themselves as a natural commodity on a privately operated futures market. It borrows money from its investors to, in turn, invest in other companies. They can fully manipulate the market, such as causing a depreciation of a company's value by selling their shares, then buying them back at a lower price. If this is incorrect, please let me know.

[quote="Seldon"]I find Hedge Funds to be interesting... perhaps they attracted the attention of someone else who did as well, and did not like them.[/quote]

Perhaps it was these guys...?

[quote]the Great Depression was caused by catastrophically poor monetary policy pursued by the United States Federal Reserve during the years leading up to the Great Depression.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Great_Depression

[quote]The first institution with responsibilities of a central bank in the US was the First Bank of the United States, chartered in 1791. Later, in 1816, the Second Bank of the United States was chartered. From 1837 to 1862, in the Free Banking Era there was no formal central bank, while from 1862 to 1913, a system of national banks was instituted by the 1863 National Banking Act. A series of bank runs later provided the impetus for the creation of a more centralized banking system. The Federal Reserve Board was created by the U.S. Congress through the passing of the Federal Reserve Act (or Owen-Glass Act), signed into law by President Woodrow Wilson on December 23, 1913.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/United_States_Federal_Reserve

[quote]Prominent among these criticisms are claims that the Fed caused and exacerbated the Great Depression. Austrian School economists blame the Fed's expansionary monetary policy in the 1920's, allowing misallocations of capital resources and supporting a massive stock price bubble. Others argue that the Fed deepened the Depression by then contracting the money supply at the very moment that markets needed liquidity.

Finally, some believe that the Federal Reserve is not neutral with regard to U.S. elections and tends to lower or raise interest rates to benefit or harm certain candidates. This criticism is particularly directed at current Chairman Alan Greenspan, who describes himself as a fan of Ayn Rand's economic individualism — the New York Times published a special article on his affinity for Rand's ideas and work — and worked for Republican politicians. The Fed raised interest rates before the presidential election of 2000 and lowered them before the 2004 election. However, it also lowered rates slightly before the 1996 election. Many Republicans blame Greenspan for an overly tight monetary policy before the 1992 election, hurting incumbent President George H.W. Bush. Greenspan, however, at least philosophically, supports a much more limited role for the Fed. He said in 2000: "[A fiat currency] is not free market. Central banks, of necessity, determine what the money supply is. If you are on a gold standard or other mechanism in which the central banks do not have discretion, then the system works automatically. The reason there is very little support for the gold standard is the consequences of those types of market adjustments are not considered to be appropriate in the 20th and 21st century. I am one of the rare people who have still some nostalgic view about the old gold standard, as you know, but I must tell you, I am in a very small minority among my colleagues on that issue."[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/United_States_Federal_Reserve

[quote]In 1910, Senator Nelson Aldrich, Frank Vanderlip of National City (Citibank), Henry P. Davison of JP Morgan, and Paul Warburg of Kuhn, Loeb and Co. met secretly at Jekyll Island, Georgia to discuss and formulate banking reform, the Aldrich Plan. It proposed a system of 15 regional Reserve Banks managing the money supply and providing liquidity, but run by private bankers. It was rejected by Congress.

At the outbreak of World War I, the Fed was better positioned than the Treasury to issue war bonds, and so became the primary retailer for war bonds under the direction of the Treasury. After the war, the Fed, lead by Paul Warburg and New York Governor Bank President Benjamin Strong, convinced Congress to modify its powers giving it the ability to both create money, as the 1913 Act intended, and destroy money, as a central bank could.

During the 1920s, the Fed experimented with a number of approaches, alternatively creating and destroying money and, in the eyes of many scholars (notably Milton Friedman), helping to create the late-1920s stock market bubble. In 1928 Strong died, leaving a tremendous vacuum in Fed governance from which the bank did not recover in time to react to the 1929 collapse (as, for instance, the Fed did after 1987's Black Monday), and the Fed adopted what most would consider today to be a restrictive policy, exacerbating the crash.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/History_of_Central_Banking_in_the_United_States

[quote]The "Cross of Gold" speech was delivered by William Jennings Bryan at the 1896 Democratic National Convention on July 9, 1896 at the Chicago Coliseum in Chicago, Illinois. In this speech it is evident that he wishes to have bimetallism. The Democratic Party stood for standardizing the value of the United States dollar to silver and in opposition to the proposed pegging of the value of the dollar to gold.... the ones who supported inflation had looked to two different sources for additional circulating currency, like the Greenbackers. The inflation that would result from the silver standard would make it easier for poor farmers to pay off their farm debts by increasing their revenue dollars. The deflation that would result from the gold standard backed by the Republicans would benefit banks by making it harder for their debtors to pay back their loans.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Cross_of_Gold

[quote]

In economics, bimetallism is a monetary standard in which the value of the monetary unit can be expressed either with a certain amount of gold or with a certain amount of silver: the ratio between the two metals is fixed by law.

This monetary system is very unstable: due to the fluctuation of the commercial value of the metals, the metal with a commercial value higher than the currency value tends to be used as metal and is withdrawn from circulation as money (Gresham's Law). This occurred in the United States throughout the 19th century as the official bimetallic standard became in effect a silver standard.

In the United States, toward the end of the nineteenth century, bimetallism became a center of political conflict. Newly discovered silver mines in the American West caused an effective decrease in the value of money. This created a conflict between those that favored inflationary policies caused by a bimetallic standard and those that favored sound money produced by a gold standard. Bimetallism and "free silver" were favored by Democrats, populists, and Western states with silver mines, in contrast to the gold standard which was favored by financial interests in the East Coast.

William Jennings Bryan, the eloquent champion of the cause, gave the famous "Cross of Gold" speech at the National Democratic Convention on July 9, 1896 asserting that "The gold standard has slain tens of thousands." He referred to "a struggle between 'the idle holders of idle capital' and 'the struggling masses, who produce the wealth and pay the taxes of the country;' and, my friends, the question we are to decide is: Upon which side will the Democratic party fight?" At the peroration, he said "You shall not press down upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns, you shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold." However, his presidential campaign was ultimately unsuccessful and 1896 saw the election of William McKinley who implemented the gold standard in 1900.

As Friedman and Schwarz (1963) have shown, the money supply was steadily expanding in the 1890s because bank checks were becoming common.[/quote]
-source: <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bimetallism>

The primary difference between the psychic revolutionary and the psychic conspirator is simple:

the revolutionary is for instantaneous manifestation for all sentient entities.

the conspirator is for the continuation of using the power of instantaneous manifestation by the few (themselves) to control the minds of the masses.

In fact, the entire goal of the psychic revolution is to make all humans unanimously and suddenly aware of their full capacity to control their own destinies, their paths through their tunnel realities on a cosmic scale. What follows from this will be that some will choose to leave the lives they had been leading, as mortal humans on earth, while others will choose to stay, as has always been the way among the most enlightened. The memory of their full potential should also be retained among those who choose to stay, so that their future generations can make the same choice to travel through space-time with the mind, to enter the astral realms with the full physical self, etc. as will be shown to all simultaneously on the night of the global psychic revolution.

To some extent, the psychic conspirators are willing to concede to the psychic revolutionaries, such that from time to time the number of psychic revolutionaries even overwhelms the number of psychic-conspirators, even if some of those revolutionaries are conservatives, advocates of the technological transition and the spiritual factor. This, however, is only a false retreat, for the conspirators consolidate their authority when diminished in their numbers. They lose none of their control, while growing stronger as individuals.

Both of these are expressed as the movements of the Path of the Black Hand and the neo-Sethians.

Sometimes, however, you see the conspirators of one generation's Black Hand occult secret society movement recruiting revolutionaries such as the Jacobins were with the Free Masons of France. Other times you see the psychic movement out to "destroy the world" calling itself the "conservative" political faction. Some of the neo-Sethians consider themselves an integral part of the plan to rule the world, while other members of the occult enlightenment are homeless.

-ben

If you focus only on one philosophy, you will see it undergo many changes in the nature and type of its adherents over time.

If you focus only on any one individual, so too will you see them go through many different philosophies over time.

This is because there is a sort of astral battlefield surrounding earth now.

Some people hack into it for the sake of strategy, and some of us have come out the other side.

Here we see that Catharism, the philosophical undercurrent of the post-crusades chivalric order which penetrated and permeated all the inquisition era sects and guild meetings, is only one philosophy that gradually changes its faces over time. This philosophy is the Order of Death.

On the other hand, take Aleister Crowley as only one, albeit overly popularised, example of someone who hopped about from one secret society to another throughout his adult life. The school of thought he founded is what I call the Neo-Sethian movement within and counter to the Order of Death.

As I have stated, the Neo-Sethians have a certain fixed agenda revolving around the manipulation of the calendar. Basing their reckoning of long-counts of time on the Chaldean zodiac of Zoroaster, the so-called Poimandres or Divine Pymandre, the neo-Sethians are attempting to declare that the end times have already occurred, and that we are already living in a post-apocalyptic world. This all stems from Crowley's celebration of the Equinox of the Gods ceremony in 1905 with the dictation of Liber Legis. The neo-Sethians are premising their entire strategem in the astral war between the psychic factions on the fact that the Assyrian-Sumerian base twelve system has become the basis of all western business calendars (right down to the second hand on your watch), and the idea that people will be lulled into complete tactily docile obedience on the behalf of the neo-Sethians.

There are, of course, other calendrical alternatives. These imply more distant ways of measuring time, or more complex astrological systems.

The Order of Death possesses access to the ECS.

The neo-Sethians desire access to the ECS.

The neo-Sethians believe that, by controlling the masses, they will control the astral weapons, and that, by controlling the astral battlefield, they will maintain control of the masses.

The Whole Point of All This Is That: the neo-Sethians in reality have not only one, but two agendas themselves! One is to convince the Order of Death that the neo-Sethians even WANT to control the masses and / or the ECS. It is probable that some of them want this while others do not. However of those who are indifferent to the ECS as the astral battlefield surrounding earth, there are those neo-Sethians who know their second, secret strategy. That is: to distract the Order of Death by making them believe the ECS is to be the location of the neo-Sethians' astral attack, when really they have plotted out something far much grander.

By way of example: the Order of Death itself is almost entirely comprised of sleeper-Sethians, who secretly (perhaps even secretly from themselves) believe in the Chaldean zodiac / business calendar, and hence in the Christian apocalypse. The Apocalypse itself is not rejected as false testimony by the Cathar creed of the members of the Order. So they are prone to falling victim to the neo-Sethian trap of believing the apocalypse has already come to pass and happened. Between people who use the zodiac / calendar and those who are aware of its usefulness in mass hypnosis and mass mind-control there are hardly any members left of the Order of Death. Almost every last psychic conspirator is either an outright neo-Sethian revolutionary or is fully aware of their presence within the Order.

However not only are most of the so-called sleeper-Sethians, but so too are most actual outright psychic revolutionary neo-Sethians, completely unaware that they might not actually require the ECS to accomplish their goals at all, or rather, that they could simply stage a coup within the Order of Death itself if all they desired was power over the masses. No, it is obvious that the True Neo-Sethians have a wholly OTHER agenda than merely control over the ECS, the astral battlefield between themselves and the Order of Death, and control over the masses who are but pawns upon a global tiling board.

The neo-Sethians are a completely retrograde movement to the Order of Death, and that means that, since the Order of Death believes that Death is the Demiurge, Samael or Ialdabaoth, a false idol, then the neo-Sethians espouse the opposite direction on the arrow of time. If the Order frowns upon the Passion of the Christ, then the neo-Sethians eagerly adopt Christ as one of their founding masters!

Therefore, not only do the two factions have at least two different calendars between them, but they are likely to have many more as well, as well as many other unique and individual characteristics to differentiate these factions within the psychic conspiracy the one from the other.

The neo-Sethians have traditionally attempted to align themselves with what history encourages us to believe are more "ancient" religions, mythologies, rituals, cultures, societies, civilisations, etc. They are retrogressive, and move oppositely the trends of the Cathar Order of Death. The Order as a whole has been forced to embrace this philosophy of needless clinging to the past and, ostensibly, the future insofar as history repeats.

Thus, the neo-Sethians identify themselves in the rituals of the Golden Dawn with Egyptian god-forms. This means that, to follow their movements throughout, or rather, behind the curtain of, the theatre of history, one need acquaint themselves briefly with the Egyptian Helios Pantheon:

Osiris/Asar: king of the dead
Set/Typhon: slays Osiris
Isis/Nephtys: resurrects Osiris
Thoth/Tehuti: helps Isis
Horus/Heru: son of Isis and Osiris

It is presumeable that something like this is standard practise in the higher-order "mystical" lodges throughout the modern world, with various cultural equivalents, but a trend overall toward neo-Platonism and cross-cultural correspondences of equivalent conceptual deities. For example, the Thugees of India worshipped Kali, a calendrical concept that had originally been associated with the kalas, or monthly menstrual cycle. Here we see that Kali, relative to the other correspondent calendrical characters of Brhama, Shiva, Vishnu and Krishna, has her place to play in a drama exactly equivalent to the one worshipped in ancient Egyptian Heliopolis.

There are similar deified character sets or archetypes in every culture the world over. Most of them are also associated with bringing the calendar, agriculture and the roots of civilisation to the earliest of our ancestors.

The Neo-Sethians "assume" these "god-forms" when they perform a "mystic" ceremony. This is then reflected in, for example, the rituals and customs of the non-practising, but merely speculative lodges of Free Masonry. These reflect a historical lesson that reinforces the neo-Sethian agenda, being to manipulate the zodiacal calendar, and thus access the ECS, and thus control the populous... presumeably.

The Neo-Sethian psychic revolutionaries, some speculate, exist only to guide the Order of Death psychic conspiracy. To this extent they appear to work around the fringes of modern mainstream secret societies, operating through small cells of local members, usually in large urban areas, and meeting nearby out in the countryside. They perform their various "magickal" workings with little or no real effect, but the true psychics in the Order of Death that lies behind ALL secret societies observe them carefully and adapt or "modernise" their own lodge rituals thus.

But the cast of characters will ultimately be the same no matter who is portraying it, from the smallest country bumpkin to the weaseliest corporate businessman. Some groups will call these eternalists by one name some by another. The neo-Sethians, during the Jacobin French Revolutionary Era, "modernised" the culture by making Tarot a popular subject for speculation. Some believed it, at that time, to be Egyptian in origin.

Thus, subsequent cults have generally hearkened back to some bygone era in their ritual garb and mode of address. Even JSM Ward couldn't trace the history of the Scottish Rite back further than the French/American revolutionary era. Yet according to the rituals, they can trace a lineage of direct descent from the trade guildsman building the first and second temples, through the Knights Templar, directly into the stone guild unions of the late medieval, and then the Jacobins in the late 1700s.

Although the Higher Degrees are called Scottish, the events they describe in their history lessons pertain to the migration of the Knights Templar to Scotland from France, following their persecution by the pope and king. Before this the details given in the philosophical degrees were left unexplained in their origins. It remained until the institution of the chivalric degrees that it would be explained how the Knights Templar discovered the contents of their detailed historical lessons while excavating beneath the "stables" at the Temple Mount in the Holy Land.

So, throughout all the various tribes and groups of these sects of sorts we see the same recurring themes, motifs, or characters from one to another, even in seemingly illogical or unrelated ways, such as between the Mayan Popul Vuh and speculative Free Masonry. And all of these refer back toward some earlier tradition to the extent that they were originally or are currently promulgated by neo-Sethians.

Neo-Sethians should not per se be confused with Typhonians or Satanists, although they do essentially overlap in their modern target audiences. Neo-Sethians by nature refer back to their original primordial belief, prior to even the majority accepted cosmologies. This is originally the Cathar belief that the universe is created, maintained and is the dream in the mind of the Demiurge, or the false, blind fallen "God."

An understanding of this, as I have demonstrated, essentially Persian belief was expressed by Rene DesCartes just after a minor Rosicrucian witch-scare following that "invisible college" bid for the Hapsburg German seat in the Electorate of the Palatinate Princes. This image of the demiurge or false creator deity is at the heart of every retrograde neo-Sethian movement amongst the guilds and social clubs.

But of course, this says nothing of the motives of the neo-Sethians. They are retrogressive in their cycle to the regular liberal growth pattern of natural (trade and barter) civilisation, and thus to the mainstream occult. They are obsessed by Samael and the delusion of betrayal by their own senses.

So, nowadays most members of the occult Order of Death have either been made aware of or joined forces with the revolutionary faction the neo-Sethians. Again these are the same neo-Sethians that David Icke identifies with reptile people, that Jim Marrs identifies with the Annunaki, and which Zechariah Sitchin identifies as an alien or extraterrestrial species or race.

The Annunaki, or Watchers, dwell within earth's EM field and gravity well. They have been there since at least before the flood, and even the bible agrees on that. Whether or not they possess us by manifesting in our lymphatic gland chakra a viscous ectoplasmic residue, as such soothsayers as Icke would have us believe, is irrelevant. If they have been around since before the flood at the end of the last ice age, then they have memory from before the fall of man, and correspond to the angels who descended from heaven to earth during the Fall of the Rebel Angels.

They simply exist overlapping us evenly and invisibly. They peak out at us through the softness of our aura.

This all may have got a little convoluted by now, so allow me to express my ultimate assertion here with a quote from another thread...

[quote="ben's conspiracy theories"]The sleep-walkers, the Watchers, the aliens or the agents, however they are portrayed, the residents of the ECS, are like points on enormous, planet size fourth dimensional vibrational spatial metaforms that pass through us over time. They are composed of harmonic resonant frequencies between the superstring vibrations of tachyon microwavelengths. The EM field of the earth acts like a giant net, catching some of these vibrations when they overlap each other (scalar fields) as at corners of the enormous geometrical metaforms. These manifest themselves as our perception, from earth, of archetypes in our own, human, collective unconscious. [/quote]

The Sleep-Walkers are the Annunaki, the Watchers, who trance channel through the sleepers. The sleepers who awaken to the psychic conspiracy, that is, the ones who control them while they are in a state of trance, the Watchers who channel through them, become sleeper-agents, not fully awake, and not fully asleep.

The sleeper agents know they are being channeled through. Some of them know, after a rather unconscious fashion, who it is who is channeling through them. Most of those who understand these entities from beyond, these "ascended masters," understand them as being part of a higher-order cabal, comprised of "Secret Chiefs," that basically run and guide the world.

Only those who are fully asleep to their second sight comprise the cult of sleep. They are blindly playing out the roles dictated to them by the Annunaki, the Sleep Walkers, the Watchers of the ECS. They do not understand the "powers that be" that control them, they simply "go through the motions."

The sleeper-agents, the Dreamers of Dream-Land (Area 51) and the Keepers of Dream-Time (the Australian Aborigines) alike, are aware of the "Secret Chiefs" of the psychic conspiracy. They may not yet know, however, the Plan of the Conspiracy; they also merely go along. The sleeper-agents too sometimes sleep.

Then there are the neo-Sethians. The neo-Sethian movement began as a grass-roots movement amongst the sleeper-agents, a movement seeking to discover the identity of the Secret Chiefs.

Once the neo-Sethians discovered the Secret Chiefs, their motives changed, and their plan became to communicate with them.

Once the neo-Sethians began to communicate with the Secret Chiefs, their motives changed again, and their plan became to subvert them from within.

The first real example of the Neo-Sethian movement was the NAZIs of the German Third-Reich. However now, the movement continues in the form of the neo-con party in US politics. Aleister Crowley is only one single early example from millions upon millions of awakening sleepers to subsequently climb the corporate ladder following the psychedelic revolution of the sixties. These people all became neo-Sethians eventually, and the older neo-Sethians who had already by then gained power granted them rewards for their endeavors, these neo-con nuovo-riche.

The neo-Sethian movement has all but usurped the Order of Death from the path of the left Black Hand. They subvert the psychic conspiracy from within to their beliefs that:

A) the "Equinox of the Gods" ceremony, performed by their original founder, Aleister Crowley, was performed prematurely (at the beginning of the 20th century instead of in the year 2000), and that, therefore, the end-times as foreseen in the book of Revelations were upon us during the whole 20th century. They see Hitler, their own later disciple, as the third Anti-Christ predicted by Nostradamus. They attempt to fulfill scriptural prophecy in order to control the masses and immanentise the eschaton.

B) the "Second Coming" of the "True Messiah" is upon us (and, for the psychic revolutionaries among them, can happen any day now). Now, because this movement, equivalent to Sethianism at the time of Christ, has resurged now, 2000 years later, it has latched on and attached itself to Christianity. It should be understood however that neither the morals nor the miracles of Christ depend upon the prophecies of Revelations.

DROA. The Domain Registry of America.

on the night before Halloween I received this email from my domain name host:

[quote]Important ICANN Notice Regarding Your Domain Name(s) Inbox icann@securepaynet.net

to me

More options

10/29/05

Important ICANN Notice Regarding Your Domain Name(s)

Dear Mr. Bleep,

It's that time of year again. ICANN (the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers) annually requires that all accredited registrars ask their domain administrators/registrants to review domain name contact data, and make any changes necessary to ensure accuracy.

To review/update your contact data, simply:

+ Go to <http://www.com>

- + Click on the "ICANN" text link at the top left side of the page
- + You will be taken to a landing page and asked to enter your Domain Information key: purple dinosaurs?
- + Enter your key and click "Go."

Next, simply review the contact information for each domain name. To make a correction, log in to "My Account" with your customer number or log in name and password. Click "Manage Domains" and then "Manage Contacts." If you find that your domain contact data is accurate, there's no need to take action.

If, however, your domain contact information is inaccurate, you must correct it. (Under ICANN rules and the terms of your registration agreement, providing false contact information can be grounds for domain name cancellation.) To review the ICANN policy, visit:

<http://www.icann.org/registrars/wdrp.htm>

Reply

Forward

[/quote]

Today, in the mail, I recieved the following letter:

[url=<http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/img001.jpg>][img]<http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/img001a.jpg>[/img][/url]
(click to enlarge)

thinking these two things may be related, I filled out the form they had sent me and was about to mail it in. Then I looked over it again. It was not a bill!! It was an advertisement, for an online service, sent to me via the US mail, across state lines, designed to look like a bill.

Moreover, allow me to quote from this form's contents"

[quote]Failure to renew your domain name by the expiration date may result in a loss of your online identity making it difficult for your customers and friends to locate you on the web.[/quote] that just sounds like a THREAT. It implies that, if I do not buy their service, they will buy my domain name out from under me and ruin my internet personality's reputation. FUCKED UP.

So, anyway... I go to their site, right? and I start reading their online disclaimer.

[quote]WITHOUT LIMITING THE FOREGOING, DRoA SHALL NOT BE LIABLE TO YOU OR YOUR BUSINESS FOR ANY INCIDENTAL, CONSEQUENTIAL, SPECIAL, OR PUNITIVE DAMAGES OR LOST OR IMPUTED PROFITS OR ROYALTIES ARISING OUT OF THE USE OF THIS SITE OR ANY GOODS OR SERVICES PROVIDED, WHETHER FOR BREACH OF WARRANTY OR ANY OBLIGATION ARISING THEREFROM OR OTHERWISE, WHETHER LIABILITY IS ASSERTED IN CONTRACT OR TORT (INCLUDING NEGLIGENCE AND STRICT PRODUCT LIABILITY) AND IRRESPECTIVE OF WHETHER YOU HAVE BEEN ADVISED OF THE POSSIBILITY OF ANY SUCH LOSS OR DAMAGE. EACH PARTY HEREBY WAIVES ANY CLAIMS THAT THESE EXCLUSIONS DEPRIVE SUCH PARTY OF AN ADEQUATE REMEDY.[/quote]

-source: <https://www.droa.com/disclaimer.asp>

corporate personhood status is defacto legal now? Because they sound an awful like they are penciling themselves in above the laws of their respective nations! Online people and online corporations will never be the same.

PS. oh, and bee-tea-doubleyou. I found two numerical incscription codes photoshop edited onto the image of the above document when I scanned it in 300% resolution. Each letter is personalised for each client. Nice, huh?

[quote="in my email, PM, and hidden forum posts, I"] clown porn Inbox

benpadi@benpadi.com

More options

12/31/05 (2 days ago)

The following is an email sent to you by an administrator of "benpadiah.com". If this message is spam, contains abusive or other comments you find offensive please contact the webmaster of the board at the following address:

benpadi@benpadi.com

Include this full email (particularly the headers).

Message sent to you follows:

~~~~~

I'm not sure where I should put this topic, because I'm not sure exactly what category this little curiosity should come under.

I believe this all has something to do with individual rights, but I cannot rightly discern quite what at the moment, as I am still too stunned from having found it.

please redirect your browsers here:

<http://jerryportelliphotography.com/ljweb/>

This is an index page of photography from the site of a professional photographer. His portfolio can be perused at his site, which can be reached by clicking the "parent directory" link on the above index page, or can otherwise be found here:

<http://jerryportelliphotography.com/>

I found this gallery by clicking this link:

http://search.netscape.com/ns/img.jsp?img=http%3A%2F%2Fjerryportelliphotography.com%2Fliweb%2Fclown%2520heads%2520web.jpg&query=clown&page=2&filter=&site=&h=757&siteUrl=http%3A%2F%2Fjerryportelliphotography.com%2Fliweb%2F&thumbUrl=http%3A%2F%2Fimages-partners.google.com%2Fimages%3Fq%3Dbtn%3AuQxx3f93HU0J%3Ajerryportelliphotography.com%2Fliweb%2Fclown%2520heads%2520web.jpg on this page: <http://search.netscape.com/ns/image?query=clown&page=2> of this search engine:

<http://www.netscape.com/>

when I was doing an image search for the word "clown."

I was looking for a suitable picture to post in sunnyday's birthday thread.

What should I do?

Is this content suitable to post a link to here? And what the hell do you think it all means???

-ben

Reply

Forward

[/quote]

I only pray for the futures of our children when I hope that I am doing the right thing by posting this here, now.

Best regards,

-ben

From :

Prehistory and Europe Account <PREHISTORYANDEUROPE@british-museum.ac.uk>

Sent :

Thursday, April 8, 2004 8:49 AM

To :

benpadiah@hotmail.com

Subject :

Re: a question regarding an exhibit

Dear Mr Gee,

I have forwarded you email onto the relevant curators, but as it is now the Easter long weekend, it will take a while to process. You should receive a response sometime next week.

Happy Easter,

Yours sincerely,

Georgia Bennett

let me school you.

first, some paintings from the late 1900's and early 20th century.

French artist, guy named Bougueraeu, painted these...

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/beautyqueens/shepherdess.jpg>[/img]

He tended to follow his young models throughout their early careers posing for him, and continued to work with many of the same delightful young women over the many years of his long and fruitful life.

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/beautyqueens/Bouguereau\_-\_Bohemienne.jpg[/img]

This one is a particular favourite of mine.
To me, it evokes pure, unadulterated innocence.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/beautyqueens/1891-le\_travail.jpg[/img]

Of course, Bouguereau's use of young models and photo-realistic style was usually quite tame, however it did tend from time to time toward the more conservatively risqué.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/beautyqueens/bouguereau-wet\_cupid.jpg[/img]

Toward the beginning of the twentieth century, we had a world war.

The practise of modeling for artists also went to war.

While the new medium of photography allowed ridiculous porno photographs to be distributed, the art of modeling took to the skies, in the form of pin-up girls to let our troops overseas remember their sweetie-gals back home.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/beautyqueens/vargas%202.jpg>[/img]

One of the more well-known and schooled of this type of artist was a young painter named Vargas. Vargas, like Bouguereau before him, painted in the style of hyper-realism, however his girls were usually a little more robust than those of the later contemporary.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/beautyqueens/Vargas.jpg>[/img]

Since then modeling has gone through many changes, with Marilyn Monroe upping the ante of pornography to the super-status by posing nude in Playboy. In an attempt to cope with the overwhelming porn industry in the visual arts media, the modeling industry for photography has also had to go super-star. Ladies and gents I introduce you to my childhood fantasy woman:

lingerie super-model Stephanie Seymour.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/beautyqueens/11stephanie\_seymour\_151.jpg[/img]

But Stephanie, who also married "rock" star Axle Rose, was small beans compared to Cindy Crawford, who had her face on more magazine in a month than Stephanie Seymour had in two years

But, leave it to the resourceful modern artist, the equivalent of Bouguereau and of Vargas, photographer Herb Ritts, who, much to I'm sure all of your delights, managed to toss all those super models naked into a big pile on his floor naked and then photograph it:

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/beautyqueens/Herb-Ritts-Stephanie--Cindy.jpg>[/img]

You all may remember photographer Herb Ritts from his breakthrough work with another beauty queen....

reknowned physicist Stephen Hawking...

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/beautyqueens/photo\_ritts06.jpg[/img] don't say I didn't warn you about that one...

Anyway, I'd just go for a girl who would let me do THIS to her:

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/beautyqueens/Pillow\_Book.jpg[/img]

-ben

But I have to show you that you played a role and I will destroy you with one simple hole.
The world that hates me has taken its toll but now I have finally taken control.
You wanted so bad to make me this thing and I want you now to just kill the king
-Marilyn Manson

KING KILL 33: <http://www.hoffman-info.com/kingkill33.html>

This thread is going to begin with a list of links that some of you may find of interest or from which derive some benefit. I will briefly explain each link, but the best way to learn the full story is by going there and exploring its resources.

Declassified Mk-Ultra Project Documents: <http://www.mindcontrolforums.com/mk-ultradoc-1-309.htm>

The "complete" (abridged by national security editing) FOIA released dossier of MK-ULTRA, the government's research project into the chemical aspects of mind-control.

Unclassified/Commerical Mind Control Technology: <http://www.raven1.net/uncom.htm>

Some modern machines developed for the purpose of manipulating brainwave frequencies of mass populations without their knowledge or consent.

Resources on Drug Experimentation and Related Mind Control Experiments by the US Government: <http://www.dc.peachnet.edu/~shale/humanities/composition/assignments/experiment/lsd.html>

An online book about how the US government has experimented on its citizens and what the results have been.

Mind Control Forum - Resources: <http://www.mindcontrolforums.com/resrc-hm.htm>

The best site on the whole internet. Especially look up REX84. Highly recommended.

Technical Remote Viewing University: <http://www.trvuniversity.com/>

A virtual university to teach yourself remote viewing online.

Remote Viewing Services & Training by PSI TECH: <http://www.psitech.net/>

The PSITECH RV homepage. Modern government funded, corporate fronted RV.

Schumann Resonances (Tony Smith): <http://www.innerx.net/personal/tsmith/Schumann.html>

Learn about the earth's natural harmonic vibrational frequency, it's causes and its correlation with the natural harmonic brainwave states of the human mind.

New Index (UHF, VHF, ELF): <http://sidereal7.org/>

Hear the Schumann Resonance and compare it with that generated by the HAARP antennae array in Alaska.

HAARP: <http://www.haarp.alaska.edu/haarp/>

The High Frequency Active Auroral Research Programme homepage. Learn about this modern government funded, corporate fronted mechanism for the broadcast of high frequency radio waves.
more to come...

-ben

Okay, well...

here's a little break down of MK/RV in the twentieth century as an intro...

Around the turn of the twentieth century, Nikola Tesla was hard at work with Thomas Edison on the wireless projection of alternating current electrical power, but Edison was heavily invested in non-alternating current, so he and Tesla had a falling out, and Tesla went to Long Island to work on a very large transmission tower.

Around the same time, the Golden Dawn, a latter-day offshoot of the theosophical society of Madame Blavatsky, was experimenting with "psychic flying roles" or the use of will through ritual to project the light-body into various other realms of perception, which included early precursors of remote viewing. The goal was to maintain contact with the "secret chiefs" who supposedly had once existed on this physical plane, but had long since transcended to the astral realm.

Tesla soon lost funding for his Long Island tower, and may have lost his mind around the same time. He did not refute claims that his technology had military applications, perhaps courting military funding for his projects, and these accusations included blaming him for the enormous blast which occurred in Siberia near Tunguska. Ten years later, when an expedition was finally sent to investigate this blast, no comet-impact crater or nuclear-type blast radius could be found. Instead the trees for as many as an hundred miles around had been flattened, but those at the epicenter were still erect. This has led to the explanation that an above-ground explosion occurred, and one of the most outlandish theories for this has speculated that a matter and anti-matter particle collided there, though no explanation has been tendered as to how or why this would have occurred. The same result could, according to relativity of matter-energy, have been produced by an large burst of electrical energy.

In the forties, Dr. Albert Hoffman was given permission to recreate his earlier chemical extrapolation of the hallucinogenic properties of ergot, a wheat mould. The result, LSD-25, was rarefied in Switzerland, and large quantities were purchased by IG Farben. One of the executives of Farben, a German-American company that operated outside of the WWII embargo with government funding, was Allen Dulles, and he may have shipped the supplies purchased from the Swiss Sandoz Laboratory to the nearby Austrian Dauchau concentration camp which was a large purchaser of chemical weapons supplied largely, if not exclusively, by IG Farben.

After the end of the War, Farben was dissolved into many smaller companies based on the technologies it had experimented with during the war. One of these would become IBM, another would become Bayer medicine. Dulles would go onto become the first head of the CIA after it was renamed by Truman from the Office of Strategic Services (OSS). Dulles oversaw Project Paperclip, the now well-known operation by CIA and MI5 operatives to secure NAZI scientists after the end of the german offensive. Some of these scientists would be brought back to America to work on the atomic bomb project, and some would be integrated into the formative staff of NASA. Others were captured by the SOVIETs and used subsequently to perform experiments in their equivalent programmes.

During the late forties and early fifties, the CIA conducted Project MK-ULTRA, which began as an experiment to find a reliable "truth serum" for use in interrogation. It rapidly erupted into a full-fledged pharmacological application experiment into the study of mind-control in general. Dulles, who was well of aware of LSD-25 by that time, highly recommended it for usage, and the experiments on enlisted men and women, prisoners and psychiatric patients, and, ultimately, on students and other ordinary citizens as well, proceeded apace. At the same time, the Russians were experimenting heavily with similar mind-control techniques, though their own research focused largely on psycho-kinesis and telepathy rather than on chemical induction.

By the late sixties and early seventies, MK-ULTRA had changed its name to MK-SEARCH, and most of the MK-ULTRA documents were destroyed by then CIA director Richard Helms. Supposedly the drug-experimentation of MK-ULTRA in the early fifties had given way, by the sixties, to experiments in cooperation with civilian scientists such as José Delgado and Louis West on the use of technological machinery to induce similar alterations in states of consciousness. Some of the products of this era were non-lethal weapons based in large part on Tesla's designs to be used for crowd control. At this time the Russians initiated Project Woodpecker, projecting a brainwave resonant frequency at the US embassy in Moscow. By 1977 this signal, powered by the nuclear reactor at Chernobyl, may have gone global.

Around this same time, the United States and Soviet Union were also experimenting with zero-point energy technology based in part on Tesla's scalar wave technology, and partially on the hovercraft technology designed by the third reich. The public culmination of this technology is the stealth aircraft technology, however many researchers have speculated that a secret arm of this development programme has continued through to today in the form of time-travel technology experimented with at Montauk, Long Island.

Nowadays, the technology of psychic "entrainment" has become largely corporate. The machines originally devised by the US and USSR governments have become available in the form of brainwave generating music and light-goggles, and the practise of remote viewing such as the US Project STARGATE has been publically sub-contracted and much of its data is available under the Freedom of Information Act. The Cold War project meant as a reaction to Project Woodpecker was Project HAARP, however since the end of the Cold War, this technology too has been donated to the education department of its respective state and is being applied to non-military research.

The process of Astral Travel largely developed by the Golden Dawn's applications of the Theosophical Society's ideas has become nearly synonymous with Remote Viewing through subsequent experiments and programmes, and is now taught quite openly to the public by government funded corporate organisations.

Who knows what applications of these experiments and this technology the twenty-first century will bring? I encourage you all to use the resources available to us all to as thoroughly investigate these matters as possible and as interest you, and I will be around to answer any questions you have as best I can.

-ben

shhh.

I'll sing you a lullaby.

It's called... The Finders.

<http://www.geocities.com/kidhistory/edocs/ttgvd.htm>

"The police had received an anonymous telephone call relative to two well dressed white men wearing suits and ties in Myers Park, [Tallahassee], apparently watching six dirty and unkempt children in the playground area. A Mr. HOULIHAN and AMMERMAN were near a 1980 blue Dodge van bearing the Virginia license number XHW-557, the inside of which was later described as foul-smelling, filled with maps, books, letters, with a mattress situated to the rear of the van which appeared as if it were used as a bed. The overall appearance of the van gave the impression that all eight persons were living in it The children were covered with insect bites, were very dirty and most of the children were not wearing underwear and all the children had not been bathed in many days."

<http://www.whale.to/b/alexander.html>

The United States Customs Service Special Agent Ramon J. Martinez appeared at the Washington, D.C. Metropolitan Police Department on April 2, 1987, for a briefing. Mr. Martinez states in his Report of Investigation:

"I was advised that all the passport data [found in the van in Tallahassee, Florida] had been turned over to the State Department for their investigation. The State Department in turn, advised the MPD

[Washington, D.C. Metropolitan Police Department] that all travel and use of the passports by the holders of the passports was within the law and no action would be taken. This included travel to Moscow, North Korea, and North Vietnam from the late 1950s to mid 1970s."

However, it should be noted that normal travel to those countries was illegal at that time. The final page of the U.S. Customs Service Report of Investigation states the following:

"The individual further advised me of circumstances which indicated that the investigation into the activity of the FINDERS had become a CIA internal matter. The MPD report has been classified secret and was not available for review. I was advised that the FBI had withdrawn from the investigation several weeks prior and that the FBI Foreign Counter Intelligence Division had directed MPD not to advise the FBI Washington Field [Investigation] Office [of the FBI] of anything that had transpired.

<http://www.geocities.com/kidhistory/edocs/ttgdr.htm>

Gunderson had this to say: "The Finders-A CIA front established in the 1960's. It has top clearance and protection in its assigned task of kidnapping and torture-programming young children throughout the U.S. Members are specially trained government kidnappers known to be sexual degenerates who involve the kidnapped children in satanic sex orgies and bloody rituals as well as the murders of other children and slaughter of animals.

They use a fleet of unmarked vans to grab targeted children from parks and schoolyards. In doing so they use children within their organization as decoys to attract the victims close to the vans where they are grabbed by adults. They then drug the children and transport them to a series of safe houses for safe keeping. They are then used in their ceremonies for body parts, sex slaves and some are auctioned off at various locations in the northern hemisphere. In the past they have been auctioned off near a location in Nevada and Toronto, Canada. Marion David Pettie, the leader of the cult, is an identified homosexual pedophile and a CIA officer. His son was an employee of a CIA proprietary firm, Air America, which was notorious for smuggling drugs, destined for the U.S., out of the Golden Triangle into Saigon during the Vietnam war."

<http://www.kathleen-sullivan.com/Finders%20Investigation.htm>

Now, I think is as good a time as any to introduce the real point of this thread.

As I have already given some potentially very valuable links to documents which directly tie the United States Central Intelligence Agency to experiments using LSD-25 as a potential mind-control agent, as well as to past evidence of that agency's ties to the use of Remote Viewing, possibly in conjunction with such MK-techniques, possibly not, as well as the modern private-sector successors of this latter programme promoting the government-developed techniques to be employed by public students...

and as I have also given a brief history of the recent clinical extraction of LSD-25 from ergot (the wheat mould which was probably responsible for the Golden Age of Greece as well as the Salem Witch Trials) in the 1940's by Dr. Hoffmann, as well as its subsequent use by former NAZI scientists brought to the States during Project Paperclip, the now well-known snatch and grab operation performed by the then OSS and Tavistock (American and British Intelligence agencies), as well as its subsequent use in experiments conducted through the United States Military by the CIA (offspring of the OSS) on prisoners, mental patients and soldiers...

and finally as I have also given some very dangerous information linking such mind-control experimentation to pseudo-Satanic ritual abuse cults which have been proven to be fronts for ongoing CIA operations as recently as the 1980s...

I would like to tender some points in regard to the use of mind-controlled agents.

To begin with, I think we should look at certain assassins, such as LH Oswald, Jack Ruby, Sirhan Sirhan, Mark David Chapman, Charles Manson, as well as the killers of Martin Luther King Jr. and Malcolm X. I realise these are, for me, all home-grown assassins, and that this list could easily be expanded to include not only successful assassins, but also attempted ones such as the man who shot Ronald Reagan, and assassins (successful or unsuccessful) from foreign countries, such as the assassin of Archduke Ferdinand which began WWI. Perhaps, if anyone IS reading this, another poster (AHM... udrovemetoit), could comment on at least some of these who I may have excluded or missed (AHM.... Ferdinand's assassination... AHM).

Now, we are all relatively aware of the facts involving many of these assassins, such as Oswald, Ruby, Sirhan Sirhan, Chapman, Manson, etc... and, I should hope that, by now at least, we may be free to believe that they may have been directed to commit these assassinations by some higher-order force which orchestrated their movements, and which directly commanded them to take these actions.

Now, I would like to speculate, was this force a REAL one, or simply IN THEIR HEADS?

In the case of Lee Harvey Oswald as well as Jack Ruby, the majority of, at least, informed Americans believes that there was, in fact, a higher-order force which was responsible for controlling these assassins. These informed citizens often believe that there is an elite cabal of very powerful interested parties involved in the handling of these particular assassins.

In their minds, further, it can therefore be extended from these two isolated trigger-men, to include responsibility for (virtually, if not) all the others I have mentioned, as far back as even including not only the assassin of the Archduke, but even, it would sometimes seem, John Wilkes Booth as well.

So, the question becomes, whether this suspicion of a conspiracy is viable or not, who or what could have coerced the trigger-men, how and why could they have been coerced, when and where did this coercion occur?

Is it possible that the BELIEF IN A CONSPIRACY ITSELF WAS RESPONSIBLE FOR CAUSING THESE ASSASSINS TO PULL THE TRIGGER?

So, with this in mind, let us return to the facts surrounding each of these garden-variety assassins exposure to top-level, highly classified information which would lead them to believe in a conspiracy and answer these questions about HOW they gained access to it, and HOW it may have affected their beliefs leading up their becoming assassins, and most importantly, WHY it would have driven them to this end in particular.

So, let us take a single example to begin with....

Lee Harvey Oswald has been tied to Mafia gangster, hustler, card shark, pimp and bagman Jack Ruby in multiple sources, so we do not need to overburden their connection here. Suffice it, for our purposes in this exposition, to propose a rather obvious fact that is often overlooked: that Jack Ruby was, among other things relative to him, probably also LH Oswald's personal supplier of marijanna.

However, before we can even begin to get into this connection (which we won't, BTW), it is necessary to turn the clock back even further to find Oswald's first encounter with mind-altering psychoactives.

It was in early 1958 that the CIA, through project MK-ULTRA became the overseer of military intelligence experiments using LSD-25 to induce post-hypnotic suggestion effects to counter foreign insurgent interrogation techniques. In '58, the CIA oversaw a PROJECT ARTICHOKE test at the Edgewood Arsenal in Maryland, USA. During these tests, LSD-25, which the army had code-named EA-1729, was tested on several American enlisted men to ascertain a variety of different possible applications. However, this was already after the CIA had performed several independent tests with LSD on American "volunteer" civilians in covert "front" organisations, such as at UCLA at Berkeley, and in various western US mental hospitals. In fact, the LSD experimentation by the CIA dates back at least as early as April 13, 1953, when project MK-ULTRA was put into effect. Therefore, it is also possible that the Office of Naval Intelligence was also onto the experimental effects of this psychoactive chemical substance for some time before the Edgewood Tests.

Oswald, as a young Radar-operator enlisted in the United States Military, was stationed at El Toro Marine Base in Atsugi, Japan from September, 1957. As a pro-Marxists-Leninist, it was somewhat peculiar for Oswald to have garnered this position, as it involved tracking via radar the take-offs and landings of the important U2 spy-plane missions over Russia which were so instrumental in determining the bomber-gap during the early years of the Cold War between the US and the USSR. Now, at Atsugi, Oswald was listed in the medical records as having contracted Gonorrhea "in the line of duty, not due to own personal misconduct" as an early espionage agent investigating the Soviet-spy hostess of the Queen Bee brothel. So it should not be surprising that, in May or June of 1959, he, his friend Kerry Thornely, and Oswald's partner in a loan-sharking operation Bucknell Beaver were approached as potential recruitments to an espionage programme to infiltrate the new Castro regime in Cuba (before Castro had declared his Communist sympathies) and ascertain the potential presence of Soviet espionage agents close to the new president of Cuba. The Hispanic civilian who approached the three for this mission, as pro-Communists, was an officer of the Joint Technical Advisory Group, whose building "Mainside" was located just next-door to El Toro. According to some researchers, the Joint Technical Advisory Group was a para-military co-op with the CIA for the express purpose of conducting tests using LSD on soldiers.

It is known that, at least as early as from August to November of 1962, PROJECT ARTICHOKE was conducting experiments using ES-1729 in the Far East to test the effect of the drug in "field interrogations." This sub-project of MK-ULTRA, known as PROJECT DERBY HAT, may have been Oswald's first exposure to a psychoactive chemical which could induce post-hypnotic suggestions and was overtly, at that time, being tested for purposes of direct mind-control, but it would certainly not be his last with such means and motives.

According to at least two researchers into the mysterious life of humble, leftist radar-operator Lee Oswald, after Oswald's prominent defection to the USSR, Oswald may have received a "brain implant device" meant to control his mind. Oswald's defection to the USSR, shortly after his service at El Toro as radar operator supervising the reconnaissance of the flights of the U2 spyplane flights over the USSR, has been blamed, by many outspoken officials in the US government, military and intelligence communities, for the loss over Russia of the final U2 spyplane mission, flown by Francis Gary Powers, which would ultimately lead to the collapse of the Kennedy-Khrushchev peace summit the following summer.

In 1964, following President Kennedy's assassination, CIA Director McCone wrote a classified document, recently released, to Secret Service director James Rowley stating his admission that Oswald had been "chemically or electronically controlled" and had acted as a "sleeper agent." The memo cites Oswald's having spent 11 days at an Ear-Nose-and-Throat clinic in Minsk for "a minor ailment" (an ear infection). The speculation implied by this was that Oswald had been sedated and altered in some way.

The most likely conclusion, however unlikely it may seem, involves a fellow contemporary defector of Oswald's, Robert E. Webster. Webster had attended a trade exhibition at Moscow with the Rand Development Corporation, and was escorted by two Rand executives when he defected, Henry Rand and George Bookbinder, both of whom were former members of the OSS. The Rand corporation had, as early as 1949, released a report on Soviet hypnosis experiments, and proposed an American counter-offensive, and were already heavily involved in mind-control experimentation. Both Webster and Oswald would eventually return to the United States after the defection, implying that they had been acting as covert espionage agents for the US (or other interested parties), Webster's return having been eased by "affidavits from Rand." Afterwards Oswald inquired into Webster's well-being when returning to the US himself, indicating that they had met, either in the States before their defection, or possibly abroad while in the USSR.

The trade conference in Moscow which Webster had attended on behalf of Rand was part of the International House/World Trade Center, which, at that time, was under the directorship of former OSS liaison to Winston Churchill during WWII, and Project Pareclip operations agent, Clay Shaw. On March 16, 1967, Perry Raymond Russo testified to Jim Garrison under oath in a district court panel criminal investigation into the death of JFK that he had been present at a meeting between Clay Shaw, David Ferrie, and a man calling himself "Leon Oswald" (who was probably only a private investigator named William Seymour working for Double-Chek P.I. firm, supposedly a "front" for CIA activities in New Orleans).

Immediately prior to the assassination of JFK in 1963, there was a top secret meeting at the Tryall Compound, in Jamaica, owned by Sir William Stephenson, Britain's top intelligence agent. At this meeting were Major Louis Mortimer Bloomfield of the British Special Operations Executive (in charge of infiltrating American intelligence agencies); Ferenc Nagy, a past cabinet minister of the pro-NAZI Horthy party of Hungary; George Mandell, trade minister for Mussolini; two white Russian émigrés, Jean de Menil and Paul Raigorodski; as well as Colonel Clay Shaw of the OSS. The subject of both of these meetings' discussion was the assassination of then US President John Fitzgerald Kennedy.

[quote="OneOfMany"]The "Universe" is a "nested" series of hyperspheres, each being such an "individualisation" - a part of the greater whole. Just as each branch on the tree is finite, so, too, is it part of a greater branch, up to and including the finite whole tree. Our "universe" (Pure Being) is like the Tree - finite yet alive and growing, and living in itself - an exposition of I AM - and Curiosity explored. An Island, an Oasis in the Infinite Sea of I AM all potential.[/quote]

Although it was probably only insofar as I could have predicted I would be looking in this thread again soon, I was recently thinking about this very thing.

Here is a post I just made in a thread on another forum:

[quote="benpadiah"]I think that most people, that is all theists except for the primitivists and literalists, nowadays would be in agreement that religion, in general, and the teachings of the bible, in specific, are a metaphor.

I'd be interested to hear what you all think religion and the bible are a metaphor FOR.

To me, the cosmologies of all world religions are a metaphor for the cosmology of physics.

For example, I was thinking about the ten sefirot of Yetzirah, that separate the world of creation, comprised of the adama of the qliphoth, described in Genesis from the world of Beriah described in the Zohar. If the Garden of Eden is in the world of Beriah, and the Sefirot separate man's ascending spirit from it... perhaps the sefirot emanations are to be thought of as vibrational states of matter-energy from the more concrete and solid to the less dense and more aethereal. Perhaps these states of harmonic resonance between vibrational frequency, these steady-state scalars, are like the high-spin, orbitally-rearranged spin states of monoatomic elements.

Anyway, I'd be interested to hear any other theories on the cosmologies of religion (ancient physics) and physics (modern religion).

-ben[/quote]

It occurred to me recently that perhaps those very same "electron orbital shells" I had bemoaned as obvious forgeries earlier might be nothing other than the Sefirot themselves!

Just a moment ago I was thinking that perhaps the kingdom of this universe in its entirety, so similar to the nerve-endings in the brain tissue of the human species, created, as it were, in the likeness of God... perhaps this nervous kingdom is literally only one small patch of nerves within the brain of a much more massive multiverse. Perhaps the ten sefirot that were the actual thought by God of our creation, perhaps these are nothing more than actual, literal, physical hypercathexis (electromagnetic flux) being exchanged between the galaxies like between the ends of nerves? Perhaps it is this nervous hypercathexis between galaxies in the universal kingdom that constitutes the lightning flash of God's becoming conscious once again, the sleeper awakening, the universe becoming self-aware? As man ascends through the "garden of forking paths" like moisture through the circulatory system of a tree, so does the lightning flash of God descend from the infinity above that infinity which we mere mortals can even only imagine to strike at the highest tree. The broccoli GUT. LMAO!!!

-ben

[quote="OneOfMany"]Consider the so-called sacred rays - there being 12 in all.[/quote]

You're referring to some pretty advanced forms of theosophy here, right? Just making sure I'm up to speed with you.

[quote="OneOfMany"]It is a hunch of mine that these correspond to the 12 corners of the 4-D hypersphere from which, I think I read, when "flattened", the Tree-of-Life of the Kabbalah "falls out" (2 sephirot apparently going walkabout??).[/quote]

Manly Hall (33°) makes reference to a time when there were only ten constellations in the ecliptic zodiac. This may actually refer to the same conceptual "breaking of the vessels" described as having subtended the lower seven sefirot from the three supernals (creating Daath, the abyss).

[quote="OneOfMany"]For the record, 7 of the rays are accessible to the Earth, while the "secret 5" are hidden due to the apparent linearity of time. Unfold, or "uncurl" time, and the universe becomes the hypersphere and sacred 4-d hypercorners "drop" into place.[/quote]

Of course, since there are now twelve constellations, as there were once only seven known planets, then one can use the same arbitrary-number based system to describe the same qualities of rotation and revolution, basically, at all scales, only separated by rate. For example, I could cite Crowley's zodiacal double-loop diagram from his Book of Thoth, and compare it to the Bing Doubling topology of the torus, thus:

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/Crowleyzod.jpg>[/img]

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/BingDoubling.jpg>[/img]

[quote="OneOfMany"]The relation between the hypercube and the hypersphere? The sphere is comprised of the 12 "rays", and these are the mapping function between the sphere and the cube. How are the rays arranged in the sphere? I don't know, but I sense "in a circle"! The "circle" being around the center of the ring of the torus, when the sphere is viewed as the torus.[/quote]

If the twelve rays were the "astral" equivalent of the seven "earthly" rays, and the seven colours map onto the torus defining a single border between them each that takes the form of a certain kind of spiral... then perhaps the base twelve aspect of the Higher Light(s) represents a mapping of twelve regions on the combined interior and exterior surfaces of the torus... the exterior seven visible, and the interior base five system "hidden" within... Perhaps...

[quote="OneOfMany"] don't forget that there is a sea of infinite energy, infinite availability. The hypersphere is a living individual, continually self-transcending, self-evolving, and vibrating at the same time. It "revolves" as per a certain colourful gif-torus. That applies at the levels of electrons and higher.[/quote]

There are three different axes of motion for the torus. This is because the torus is the three dimensional shadow of the fourth dimensional hypersphere, otherwise represented as a moving sphere or as a sphere over time. The first axes of motion is motion on the exterior surface as it revolves around the doughnut shape, and then evolves the opposite direction up through the hole in the middle. This can either happen in a circle pattern or as an S figure in the centre of a figure 8. That is one axis of motion. Another involves the topical motion of the surface through a spatial medium, or projected trajectory. This axis also include the precession of the pole between the two holes if the "doughnut" shape has got spin to it or "wobbles." The third axis is the expansion/contraction of the hypersphere, and this determines the complexity or simplicity inversely of the spin in the other axes as well. These three axes could easily also be called self-transcendence, self-evolution, and the principle of vibration.

[quote="OneOfMany"]While everything is relative, and ultimately governed by I AM, it is important (for anyone) not to be trapped in "finitude". Finite doesn't mean "not growing". Energy Comes into Form according to the Will of the Creator (even as sap passes up a tree). Simply, the tree isn't the I AM consciousness, and it is consciousness that is infinite, not form.[/quote] Agreed. Consciousness, by the span of dreams, ideas, illusions and imagination will always exceed the bounds for it defined by material reality. Of course, the amount of imagination possible is reciprocally limited by the resources provided for it to grow by its immediate physical surroundings.

[quote="OneOfMany"]Of late I have become more convinced that energy and consciousness are indeed separate. I think my consciousness may have become somewhat "rounded"... apologies if this doesn't make any sense! What I mean is that some of the rays, or, in other words, "threads of thought", within this piece, this reply, emerge, disappear, and then emerge as the "hypersphere" conscious thoughtform that I am trying to transmit "is revolved". In other words, an over-lightening entity can induce a higher vibration in a denser subject, and it is this that is the essence of spiritual evolution. The energy introduction is always controlled by I AM but is fostered by adjacent resonant "forms". This I suspect also applies to the situation of expanding galaxies. Furthermore, the nature of the energy introduced, or modulated, is indeed related to and "balanced by" the surrounding environment's prior "shape" (balance of rays). Everything happens holistically and holographically and fractally.[/quote]

Agreed. Just as neural patterns are the railroad tracks for the train of thought, so too does the stream of consciousness unwind upon the surface of an involuting hypersphere. The emotions we feel, that change over different durations of time, are our sensory perception of these higher order patterns, but even this is not the same as learning to harness the energy of this motion upon surfaces.

[quote="OneOfMany"]To transmit a hypersphere one must map it by revolving it and transcribing the visible surface, then revolve it some more, transcribe, and repeat... I barely even understand my understanding, so, forgive if this is not easy to follow.

To forge a new hypersphere one must use all 12 rays.[/quote]

Here I a like-minded post I made on my own forum:

[quote="benpadiah"]http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/FMar24.gif[/img]

The boolean algebra of the vectors traced out by the verteces of the hypercube (here expressed as the nodes changing colours) resembles to me a more complex version of the Lorenz strange attractor.

http://www.benpadiah.com/MISC_diagrams/img551.jpg[/img]

Since so many natural patterns depend on the strange point-vector duality of the Lorenz type attractor pattern, it is interesting to me that a similar type pattern may be drawn out by the motion orthogonal to it of a hypercube.

This would seem to confirm my "metaform" theory as well.

http://www.benpadiah.com/MISC_diagrams/metaform.jpg[/img]

-ben[/quote]

[quote="OneOfMany"]I see it. :D.[/quote]

LOL, my friend. As do I.

-ben

[quote="OneOfMany"]I don't understand how the fundamental forces condense out of hypersphere mechanics. You talk of the friction of the "vacuum", and this giving rise to the four fundamental forces. I see that there is "no" vacuum, but energy resonantes with energy. I can see that the friction terminology is metaphor. Momentum is conserved, so there is no "friction". Yes? So, that which gives rise to the friction is "mutual attraction" of energy. What causes this, the "essence" of the forces?[/quote]

Actually, the conservation of motion by matter-energy particles/waves (from the scale of satellites in orbit to the dimensional separation of vectors on a photon) is caused by the "higher order" force... it is the friction of slower, denser matter-energy AGAINST the smaller microwave histories of tachyons, or super-strings themselves, that causes this effect. The "friction" itself we call "gravity," and say that it effects scales from the sub-atomic to the universal, actually bending the surface of spacetime. This friction "conserves" all motion into angular momentum, from the smallest scale to the largest; there is even the "conservation" of dimensionality itself, where only certain dimensions or directions of measurement "expand" while others microscopically contain them. All of this proves the universality of gravity, implying everything between tachyons microwavelgnth superstrings to the distortion by gravity to the surface of the entire uinverse, which brings me to my next reply:

[quote="OneOfMany"]Imagine that the energy of the universe were created as a sequence of independent "blown bubbles". Or, "blown tubes". Like you can do with blowing detergent-water through a small hoop. This is the mechanism of the projection of energy. The energy "wavicles" of the material universe are born in this way, and each is independent of the next, and the projection is divergent. This is where the phrase "word of God" comes from. What forces govern the interplay of this projected energy? Temporally, the "bubbles" remain attached to the mouth of God - hence are tubes in the higher dimension. This means God - the mouth - retains control, or remains interconnected with, the projected energy. So, God can exert resonant behaviour within the bubbles that can cause them to coalesce, and, as their rate of vibration drops, as they "cool", they can combine to form stable structures. Significantly, the connection with God can "morph", yet remain everpresently "ubiquitous" - transcendent of any structure amongst "bubbles" (bubbles being superstrings).[/quote]

Imagine the universe like a "soap" bubble. The surface of the bubble is the "surface" of our universe, the so-called "space-time continuum." Now, this would at first seem counter-intuitive based on astromic observations. If we on earth are only like a pale blue dot on the surface of the bubble, then we should be able to make two specific observations which we cannot:

1) there would have to be something "inside" the "bubble" of which the "spacetime continuum" is the surface; there would also have to be something "outside" of it; however, if we accept earth as being that pale blue dot on the surface, then it should contact both the exterior "somethingness" and the interior "somethingness" whether these interior and exterior "somethings" are the same or not. Yet we cannot say what is "inside" spacetime or what is "outside" spacetime, because we do not observe these types of phenomenon on earth.

2) if we were to travel in a "straight" line on the surface of the bubble, we would warp around its roughly spherical geometry and be able to come back to the same point on the surface from which we started, even if that point has moved somewhat on the surface of the "bubble." This would indicate the geometry of spacetime is definitively closed, and the shape of our universe roughly spherical. However we cannot be certain of the validity of such an assertion, because we have not yet been able to perform any type of experiment to confirm or deny the geometric shape of our universe. Think of this debate as like that over the shape of planet earth before it had been circumnavigated and the "globe" shape confirmed. As it is, with modern astronomical observatory equipment, we believe that if we look out in a straight line into space, no matter what direction, we see off in a straight line that does not "wrap around" the "bubble" shape; we do not see a "parellel" earth somewhere "out there."

Now, I have my own theories about the "surface" of spacetime. Specifically I see it as being a very busy, rather than at all inert, state, where energy is being constantly exchanged, however minutely, at the level of the "quantum foam" that occurs in Hilbert space between the particles and waves comrpising matter; this so-called "zero-point" energy. I have long thought of this as being similar to the state known as a "rolling" boil that occurs when water is heated. What we could expect to observe, then, in this case is the "interior somethingness" popping up as "bubbles" within the "exterior somethingness," moving through the "exterior somethingness" that comprises the continuum "surface" of spacetime, until they break through the upper or outer limit to this "surface" and release their interior contents into the "exterior somethingness" as like steam into air. And we do see something somewhat similar to this occurring, as "new" energy enters spacetime from the gas jet poles of black holes, and that this "new" energy (which gradually slows as it bends around the gravitational warping field of the parent black hole) causes fusion around the galactic accretion disk of the parent black hole, creating stars, and forming molecular bonds into increasingly solid states of "matter" (planets, elements, DNA, etc.) within the distance warmed by each star's heat, until finally passing through all of the vibrational rates until it reaches a parallel trajectory to its original warping around the galactic "bubble" and returns to the opposite pole of the black hole, where it enters the wormhole surface of the Schwarzschild radius, and inverts through the central singularity into a "baby" universe. The result of this cycle is the "lightcone" model for the "sum over histories" of matter-energy as it travels "outward" from the "big bang" at the core of the "expanding" surface of the spacetime "bubble."

Here are some diagrams on this subject:

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/EinsteinHubble.jpg[/img]

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/HawkingPenrose.jpg[/img]

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/continuumsurface.jpg[/img]

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/angle\_of\_time.jpg[/img]

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/all\_combined.jpg[/img]

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/galactic\_alignment.jpg[/img]

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/QEDcosmo.jpg[/img]

url=[http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/cathexis.jpg][img]http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/unikey.jpg[/img][url]

^Click this one for a larger depiction^

-ben

OOM,

Actually, let me respond to the longest section of your post first, since it seems to cover issues that are both weighing heavily on your mind, and, probably only coincidentally, on mine as well.

[quote="OneOfMany"]Aside: I'm following this because I enjoy it - and am assuming its okay for you too... clearly you've spent a lot of time thinking about this kind of stuff, and for me at least, it is good to discuss it.... Yes, Discovery is "why I like this". life has moved on, without my "say so" - and yet, to my annoyance, the part of me that cares really doesn't have a problem with the fact that things have moved on - because it did find answers to the pressing questions.

Do you know, one can attain "god status" whilst on Earth, and thus "project" energy in the form and according to ability. Creating more: but it doesn't happen to everyone, and nor can it, I suppose.

Life is different for us all, and it is "going to get better and better"... That, though, is subjective, and, there must always be "challenge" to overcome if one is to continually "feel" the satisfaction at such "climbing". Or so I believe!

You see, to me this is about how much are we willing to get out of our lives, how much are we willing to share, and thus gain as experience? That said, do you remember all you wrote? I remember some bits. A sense of satisfaction, or not, is what I carry with me; and I yearn for this continually: and opening like this: it is good.

I endeavour to open a door where I feel free to speak clearly, not exhaust my wish to express at all! I fear and feel the latter is what is happening to me, and I endeavour to neutralise my fears with all my love and passion. Exhausting anything, though, makes it go away, for, surely, fear in writing and expressing drives me into its experience, so as to overcome my fear!

Ain't that just rum! So, where is "being outside the wheel of karma"? If I'm were I'm supposed to be, as I wrote the other day, transcendent of yin and yang - pah! - I can "be who I want"... And I can exhaust myself in so doing - and then I will be "individualised" no more... d*mn that's an admission to make. You see, experience is real!

There is a fear about posting: one doesn't know what one is going to get in response - if anything. Damn it: I do want to post this: but I know I'll get the heebie jeebies for being so open! Damn it!

Yes, and to "see more" one has to warrant more: and that is the great difficulty, because one can only warrant more by being in a position of service to others - where it is good for them to give you more. That is the hard part.

"Say what you like" popped into my head: pah, when will I do that? I have been saying what the machine has compelled me to say, and I AM the driver of the machine, so I have also been saying what I Want to say. I have been saying what I like, but have "experienced" this as "wanting to reveal my experience of my quest". Focus is essential.

What do we Be? Now? Yes, we have the Answer: now we must live that answer to its fullest: that is the conclusion of our dream, and then our Dreamer must reinvent itself, or return to the Source. See? Thus did the Dreamer attain Nirvana! For Nirvana is the only escape from the dissolution that it the return to Source: the consciousness liveth on. And, if the Dreamer can Be in Nirvana, then it, In us Will become more in its own volition and May "explode-release" its form. In consciousness it loses nothing but Is always the eternal I AM.[/quote]

I've actually been thinking along these lines quite alot myself, of late. I've been thinking about the revolution and the conspiracy alot in particular, and how you are more liberal when you are young, and more conservative when you get older. Probably just because I'm coming up on the big 3-0.

I have the same fear of being known, though mine is even more pronouncedly paranoid (fear of being "found out") that you express as fear of posting, and I've been wondering, as you seem to have some as well, if this means that I, myself, am afraid of what might be revealed if I open myself up. I've been trying to confront the irrationality of this fear (the fear of self) for years now, usually by telling people up front the most personal secret about myself I can think of, but more recently on my blog, where I tend to stray even into the realms of paranoid delusion beyond this simple shyness.

I no longer feel the urgency to make change I used to. I used to scare myself quite a damn lot actually, with nothing but the sheer strength of my convictions in things I now consider much less important.

"Who am I?" is a question I find myself asking more and more these days, perhaps simply because I have more free time than I used to, which, even then, was more time than most people would or "should." I've put a lot of work and a lot of energy into finding answers to life's more "mystical" questions, and now that I am beginning to be satisfied that I have done enough of it (philosophy, metaphysics, etc.), I find I have no answers at all about any of the six fundamental questions of reasoning about myself!

I look back often and see immediately memories I regret having been through, and I try to look forward, ahead in time, and I find I can barely even focus on this present moment. Rather than having found "self-actualisation" through my pursuit of the Most High I find I have only placed that much more distance between my present self and the roots at the core of my personality.

So I've been thinking about the revolution and the conspiracy a lot. Wondering how many people are out there trying to "magically" induce change in their environment, and how many people are busily working to keep things the way they are. Which side do I want to be on?? It is as if I am an MPD who must decide if they want to integrate or not.

It is as if I am awakening from a dream to find what I had just been dreaming is actually exactly what is going on around me now. It is as if the dream itself had awakened along with me. It is the waking dream that is reality... and yet it is always this way, in each moment of the life of our consciousness.

But I don't want to get off on a blog here, so you'll have to excuse me if I don't recapitulate your sentiments more fully here now. It's not for want of being in the same place mentally.

[quote="OneOfMany"] [quote="Benpadijah"] Moving through the "exterior somethingness" that comprises the continuum "surface" of spacetime, until they break through the upper or outer limit to this "surface" and release their interior contents into the "exterior somethingness" as like steam into air. [/quote]

For what purpose?

Back to the topic... does this bubbling-through have direction, or is it merely "symptomatic" of the interplay between "source" and "form"? Is the direction "symptomatic" of the progression of the "Universal Now" - a "now" that is "outside space-time" in its convolutions?

Here is a question: are black-holes mandatory? A long time ago I had a discussion with someone about the omnipresence of Source - of the availability of zero-point energy. I see that while they "matter not" to the great scheme, energy does pop into and out of "form" on the micro scale "all the time" - the rolling boil is a microscopic phenomena whilst blackholes are macroscopic.

So, I am right in thinking that from superstring theory, science can derive the other physical forces. Only if it is of interest to you, can you go over the "diagram" of the relation between the weak and strong nuclear forces - the interlinked tubes - somewhat like a "klein bottle" with "two arms"?

Consciousness "inhabits" the "bubbles" (tubes) (strings). The "broccoli".

That means it is possible to be conscious of "all the other branches of the broccoli" - because it is only "obsession with the local" that makes one seem to be local! Individualisation is thus the great illusion, and indeed on the ultimate scale "we are all one".

The "broccoli walls" are continually evolving, losing what they were and becoming with fresh energy "what they will be". Consciousness Chooses the nature, the Path, the Direction of the rolling boil: and the stability of the material universe is the evidence of this![/quote]

Sorry, it occurred to me that I didn't fully answer your question... about how the four forces seem to evolve, perhaps at different rates in different locations, more or less ubiquitously throughout the known universe?

You refer to "tubes" (which concept I can only guess you got from application of super-symmetric string theory to Feynman diagrams, an understanding weakened only on the Feynman diagram side of it) and to "super strings" in regards to a theory of cosmology and the GUT unification at Planck time after the "big bang" of the four forces as if all of these concepts were already agreed upon as being synonymous.... which is only the fault of modern science that they are not.

Modern "string" theory's cosmology is called the "ekpyrotic" theory. I thought I had posted a thread for it titled "string theory now has a cosmology" but I've been to every forum I have bookmarked, searched for "ekpyrotic," "cosmology," and even "string," and still found no such post to have ever been made, apparently by me or by anyone, although I distinctly remember having had, over a series of posts, a rather lengthy debate between myself and another poster explaining the concepts involved. Strange, isn't it? Oh well...

...

Just now two old women from the WatchTower came to my door to sell me free religion. They were inverted from my own mindset, completely opposite my own views, I assumed. I was very friendly and I did not lie at all. They talked to me, or rather, tried to, in my own "type" of language, a language I would understand. They preached that, "things are definately happening at a moder rapid rate," and "the Bible tells us that they always do at the end of any system." I was really rather impressed with what they had to say, in fact. One of them offered me a book at the beginning, but alas, the other one took it back from me at the end. I was really rather impressed.

<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ekpyrotic>

[quote="OneOfMany"]I AM consicousness

- Source

Dreamer -> Dream (primary hypersphere) "The almighty", a primary individualisation. This is coupled with the plane of mind, or "the dream" - the "surface" of the primary hypersphere.

The creation of Being - the creation of Beingness - of evolution: the question: "What does it mean to be?" This is coupled with the origination of Alpha and Omega, those beings designed to create the working-out of the answer of the question, as "begat" by the "Dreamer-in-Mind".

The Universal-Creators, given the task of developing the Answer.

Our universe and Creator: our universal question: "why are we transcending?".

Us, deriving the answer and installing it into the fabric of reality at the very physical level: we transcend because we are in form, and must transcend to retain form: this is what it means to Be!

Thanks be to God.[/quote]

I want to know more about the Order of Things you have discovered, for I find I have discovered none new of my own by studying the ones described by others.

in my MPDR I include the following...

[quote="Jon Gee"]

Appendix 1:

Adam Kadmon and the kabbalistic worlds:

ayin: "no thing;" the God Time; ylem; Chikhai Bardo; beyond the one singularity

ayin soph: "without end;" the multiverse of singularities

ayin soph aur: "limitless light;" tachyonic projection; illumination; a singularity

zimzum: "contraction;" the abyss between the ideal supernal and the subtle aethereal

(AK) Jechidah: the true will; the magic theatre of the superego

1) atziluth: pure will; radiant aspects; conception; divine calling

(AK) chiah: self-preservation; the will to power; the audience of the id

2) beriah: intellect; gaseous aspects; manifestation; divine creation

(AK) nefesh (akh): the spirit; associated with immortality; the ego characters

3) yetzirah: emotion; liquid aspects; formation

(AK) ruach (ba): the soul; seven channels (baw); the mediated forms

4) assiah: action; solidity; divine making

(AK) neschamah (ka): the double; potential energy, fourteen channels (kaw)

qliphoth (kha): quantum information vortices[/quote]

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/chart1/postlarge.jpg][img]http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/chart1/postsmall.jpg[/img][url] which brings me to the same diagrams that ended the discussion of [url=http://forums.thelastfreecity.com/viewtopic.php?t=27127&postdays=0&postorder=asc&start=30&sid=00e96404c97de6e9c6a36a6308bf5294]"God existing outside of time"[url] thread, the same which brought us here in the first place.

[quote="benpadijah"]Agreed.

But first let me just add this to this topic:

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/img049.jpg[/img]
the "Four Worlds" of Kabbalah

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/img050.jpg[/img]
the "lightcone" of modern physics

-ben[/quote]

[quote="OneOfMany"]

I want to write a bit about the Matrix films from the point of view of this esoterica - of the value of the characters as aspects of the Grand Scheme...[/quote]

Are you familiar with my [url=http://forums.thelastfreecity.com/viewtopic.php?t=20494]MUGWUMP[url] thread?

[quote="OneOfMany"]

are we all One?

[/quote]

Are you familiar with my [url=http://forums.thelastfreecity.com/viewtopic.php?t=22690]Are We All the Same Person?[/url] thread?

[quote="OneOfMany"]Metaphysics: pah - I'm human![/quote]

Are you familiar with my [url=http://forums.thelastfreecity.com/viewtopic.php?t=26669]philosophy is for retards?[/url] thread?

[quote="OneOfMany"]In the mean time, yes, Neomaul, sorry for being wordy at times...[/quote]

Are you familiar with my

[url=http://forums.thelastfreecity.com/viewtopic.php?t=26669]philosophy is for retards?[/url] thread?

[quote="OneOfMany"]p.s. my name is .... :). ;).[/quote] chika chika Slim Neo.

J/K

-ben

[quote="KTHREL"]Im sorry but qabalistically written or not, Morals and Dogma sucked ass. I dont need an 800 page book to tell me things I can learn, and haved learned, for myself. In my view, Pike is a bad author. Weishaupts writing style is far superior, he leaves so much said with fewer words and still leaves you thinking. Pike's words are overdone and redudant.[/quote]

I agree that the writing styles are incomparable. It's nothing to get mad about, though, of course. Pike was writing at a much more advanced age than was Wesihaupt, for one thing, and perhaps by that we may also understand that Pike was writing with a much more schooled knowledge of, for only one small example, the history of freemasonry than was Weishaupt. For example, Weishaupt claims that, "no man can give any account of the order of Freemasonry, of it's origin, of it's history, of it's object, nor any explanation of it's mysteries and symbols," and yet is that not precisely what Pike, albeit somewhat naively, has set himself out to do? I think that the very richness of possible interpretation of the first three, or "blue" degrees of the lodge is testimony to the true antiquity, not to mention sublime holiness, of the origin of the rituals of the order.

In truth, I myself have found, the history lections of each degree more than thouroughly elaborate upon the origins and importance of themselves than could be concisely defined within the first few degree rituals only of the importance and origins of the whole past of the order. I also understand the Illuminati idea that this weakness of the lodge represents an exploitable point of entry for infiltrator points of interest. As it is written, "let it never appear in any place in it's own name, but always covered by another name, and another occupation. None is fitter than the three lower degrees of Freemasonry." If one appeals to and subverts the wills of only the "blue" brothers, they may indeed be totally turned off whatever the real potential goal of freemasonry might, at that time, be. This is why Weishaupt, writing as an Illuminist, also says things like, "Freemasonry is concealed Christianity," and "I have contrived an explanation which ... is inviting to christians of every communion," which are points upon which I, myself, vehemently disagree.

In truth, the "secret union" needs neither Freemasonry nor Christianity to progress beneath the veil of a ruse. Now, true Illuminists may walk freely beneath the same invisible light of the "all seeing eye" as those who believe it emanates from "Jesus of Nazareth" or from the "Grand Architect." While before we were only free enough to SAY that "the Pope is the Anti-Christ," now we are free to KNOW... even to possibly UNDERSTAND... the true meaning for the concept of human liberty implied by our ability to make such a statement.

Now, we are free to ACT as FREE INDIVIDUALS. And that means that those of us, whether we call ourselves part of a "secret union" or not, who have awakened to this fact are all the more free to go around trying to wake up other individuals to this fact. Whether it takes you 33° to awaken to this conclusion of the hidden history of mankind, seven, or, quite frankly, none, as was the case with not only people we know of such as Jesus, Buddha, Mohammed, etc. but people who have chosen to remain humble and anonymous leading simple lives among us in silence... we are ALL ALREADY FREE.

Tyranny over the body is not a necessary requisite for tyranny over the mind. An aborigine or a Massai is, in many ways, more free mentally than many people living according to a code of civil conduct within western business society, let alone one subject to American pop culture nowadays any more so than one subject to Catholic oppression during the Dark Ages. Therefore, those of us who are more unconstrained must seek, and always have sought, to loosen the self-imposed, self-preserved, bonds that keep many people surrounding us from awakening to the second sight.

The second sight allows us to see beyond merely our material senses. I believe in the synonymity of this with the concept of the "Mason's Word." I see Rosicrucianism, which even Wesihaupt, in his somewhat less refined and more vulgar sense, could not avoid mentioning, as the true "concealed" or MYSTIC, "esoteric" Christianity, as Sufism is for Islam, and as Tantra is for Buddhism. All "religions" will be two-faced, IMO.

I do not side with those who see the Lodge as more important than any other social institution, to be preserved, for example, through some form of civilisation-ending event. The Lodge, in many ways, exists to hold back, if only for a moment in the cosmic scheme of things, those who would otherwise evolve instantaneously beyond the capacity for perception of the majority. In this way it serves to maintain civilisation, which, itself, exists as like an embarnacled excrescence surrounding the Pearl of Great Price, that is, the individual awakened, through the Lodge or otherwise, to the rarification of their definition of self, again, through the 33°, the seven, or by none.

I hope you do not think I have said too much, although I yet fear that I may have.

-ben

Anyone seen the movie Marathon Man up in dis joint?

Anyway..

I'm a heavy smoker and make a bitter drunk, and let's just leave it at that for the moment...

I'd like to hear more of your views on drug laws, WB, and I'd be very interested to hear some political takes on the "war on drugs," skaje.

I was thinking just now about something the Oracle said... something about how we're going to get there all together, or not at all.

In my view, mutants and humans, like the Jews and the goy, have to learn to embrace one another's world views, and learn by forgiveness and compromise how to maintain existence in the utopia of a hollistic society.

my mom said something interesting when I got the Last Temptation of Christ, and I asked her what she thought they would do to Jesus if he were alive today. She said, "they'd probably think he was crazy and lock him away."

Leary described the eight circuits of consciousness, which I think is a metaphor, but makes a good model nonetheless. He said there was a war going on between the fourth and fifth circuits. This seems to have been going on for at least as long as the evolution of the bicameral brain.

So, if we mutants and you humans are going to all get along without taking turns trying to kill one another, then I think it is extremely important for us to accept, embrace, adopt and evolve through each other's ways.

This means, in short, us mutants have to compromise with your human vocabulary, for one. If your word to describe us is the word "insane," we should feel safe in exploring how we can work together to define this word as being different for each individual, and even generally applicable to all.

My mom volunteers to speak of her intervention situation story with the local police and sheriff's departments for the local branch of the national civil rights public action committee for people with mental illness. She does this because at one point in my life, my own psychosis manifested into an escalated situation, and the police had to be called.

I think it is essentially important to work WITH authorities. Leary is an obvious example of this mentality at work, or rather, at play. Even when he was in a maximum security prison, he was able to free his mind enough to empathise with the guards as his protectors, who honestly believed they were there to keep him safe.

If the powers that be define the choice for genetic mutation, the accessing of un-used neurons and by them the unlocking of "junk" DNA, as motivated by or leading to "insanity," then we have to accept this word as a common starting point, and then work from there. Once we can agree on a set of words then we have hurdled the opposition to communication. This is the first and most important step toward stopping the violence between the fourth and fifth circuits of consciousness, IMO.

-ben

[quote="OneOfMany"]
Sorry I took so long ;).
[/quote]

It's cool. Ain't no thing. If dreams were travelling, I'd be flying for free by now. Which is only to say, I can't blame you for tardiness, when I myself am asleep half the time still. LOLZORZ!

As always, our thoughts, once so intertwined, are often wrapped around or toward the same end. I guess you could say we are two people "of the same bent." In any event, I've also been concentrated largely on social interactions, while awake at least, and how, while within them, I seem to fear expressing myself too much. Even in the company of my best friends, I behave as if something wrong is about to happen, and this almost incessantly causes something to go bad. On the internet this manifests itself through the negative charging of my personality... I tend not to attract people, or to even not berate them too much to allow them to stay. I lose alot of friends that way. In teh real, I see myself becoming completely inverted, as if the world were above me and I was on my feet but upside down. I see events spiral out of my control, and I can barely even summon the strength of energy to interject an appropriate facial expression. I fear that my personality may be evolving along one or both of these split paths too rapidly for me to be able to come back from either or both. Then again, why should I want to? C'est le vie.

[quote="OneOfMany"]You see, I hope, that Metaphysics has melted down into physical reality.

This is one proof that we are right in our exposition. This thread becoming a strange attractor or Klein bottle in itself (depending how it is viewed). We're talking about how metaphysics manifests tangibly around us, not on the scale of light-years or quarks, but on human scales - meters and hours.... that the consciousness is the same is why we can't say what was said, nor the same thing as anyone else - the mind knows what everything else has done - and, actually, that applies to both the form, and energy - because the consciousness won't let the form say the same thing, experience the same thing, twice.[/quote]

On some days I do honestly tend to think "it's all been done before," or "there's nothing new under the sun." In fact, now that I think on that? it seems most days are like this for me nowadays... like that NIN song... "every day is exactly the same." I tend not to notice the differences... LOL!

You know, you talked a little about consciousness... as in, I believe, consciousness-in-itself. I think you've got it all backwards! I think it is not the energy that is the same substance as consciousness, but consciousness that is the same substance as the energy! LMAO!

Seriously though, I think there are definite demographics, or target audiences, for different archetypes, sure. But the real question being posed to academics of today is, "are these archetypes anything more than merely weapons, and if so, by whom are they being used?" or, in short, simply "who is the enemy?" I think we as a species have a lot to learn.

Was it here that I mentioned the pepper moth effect, BTW? Do you know about that, OOM? It's when the mutation of a species reaches a certain point of critical mass, at which a certain genetic trait supersaturates over global populations. I think a model comparing genetics to physics would be wisest, although I admit, I've barely the time.

[quote="OneOfMany"]
The icons have all stopped!

This is the machine mainframe.

Whoa![/quote]

Yes, there went that wiley architect! Let's follow him, shall we, and see where he goes?

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/icecreamcone.jpg[/img]

Why here's a key! A piece from a puzzle! A clue...?

yes, let's see, now we can see the whole picture.

You know, if geometry defines math, and math defines the universe, then you should be able to picture the whole universe using nothing but pure geometry.

Of course, why would you want to stop there? If you apply pure geometry to the mathematics governing the laws of physics, you can see even beyond the local universe.

I personally, like very much the idea of having a means for depicting space beyond that which we can see with our (often augmented) five senses. If you think about writing, mathematics, language... these all spontaneously evolved at the same time, right before the agricultural revolution. Think about it... people from different nomadic or cave-dwelling tribes began to come into contact with one another more and more often, and as they did so, they began developing commonalities between them, similarities in communication, leading to the formation of the earliest communities.

Perhaps if we develop a less competitive, less challenging philosophy, we can learn to bridge, and later branch, the gaps between modern existing communities, such as nation-states, and even, eventually, such as species-ism. I am in, for example, merely constant communication with my cat by sharing a psychic rapport with her, being "on the same wavelength" so to speak, or, more directly, my heart goes out to her. Yet I cannot rightly say that we are "in" love with each other, because, in modern hedonic cultured western capitalist society, "love" is synonymous only with "sex," and thus the laws reflect this. If two men "love" each other, they are not allowed to marry, because this is at the root of a free and open, communal globalist society, and therefore would not stimulate competition which, it is the current paradigm, is necessary for social growth. This line of thought, that is, the agenda of rage against homosexuals, is along the same lines as that leading to desire for the extermination of the jews, IMO.

It's an interesting thing though about opinions of this sort. These days they seem less and less popular to have. Those who make the most money, earn the rewards of western business society the fastest, are usually associated with the opposite philosophy: the impingement upon even individual civil liberties in the name of "security" and "safety." When even the sovereignty of the individual is questioned, who then is "safe"?

It seems as though the architect may have eluded us again, I am afraid. For the moment we will have to continue wandering around in the dark for a day or two longer. I do so hope that I do not go into a temporary coma once I reboot my sleep pattern from its current disorderly condition.

-ben

[quote="wikipedia:MUGWUMP"]

Mugwumps were Republicans who supported Democratic candidate Grover Cleveland in the 1884 United States presidential election. They made the party switch because they could not in good faith support the Republican candidate James Blaine of Maine... The main issue which angered Republicans and caused them to choke on Blaine's candidacy was the then red-hot issue of political patronage. This consisted of doling out government positions to those who had supported your political party prior to the election. That was before the passage of the Pendleton Act of 1883, which made competency and merit the base qualifications for government positions, rather than political affiliation and appointment by a favorable administration.[/quote]

-source: <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mugwump>

[quote="wikipedia:NEO-MUGWUMP"]

Neo-Mugwumps are centrist Republicans who disapprove of the more extreme elements of their party, such as the Christian Right and the Neoconservatives. Also known as RINOs (Republicans In Name Only), they tend to have a more liberal view of social issues such as homosexuality and same-sex marriage, and may oppose (or at least lament) the belligerent tendencies of mainline Republicans. Examples of Neo-Mugwumps include Arnold Schwarzenegger, Olympia Snowe, Mary Bono, and John McCain. The term is sometimes extended to Paleoconservative Republicans as well.[/quote]

-source: <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Neo-Mugwump>

[quote="William Burroughs: NAKED LUNCH"]

Traffickers in the Black Meat, flesh of the giant black centipede - sometimes attaining the length of six feet - found in a lane of black rocks and iridescent, brown lagoons, exhibit paralyzed crustaceans in camouflage pockets of the Plaza visible only to the Meat Eaters.

Followers of obsolete unthinkable trades, doodling in Etruscan, addicts of drugs not yet synthesized, black marketeers of World War II, excisors of telepathic sensitivity, osteopaths of the spirit, investigators of infractions denounced by bland paranoid chess players, servers of fragmentary warrents taken down in hebephrenic shorthand charging unspeakable mutilations of the spirit, officials of unconstituted police states, brokers of exquisite dreams and nostalgias tested on the sensitized cells of junk sickness and bartered for raw materials of the will, drinkers of the Heavy Fluid sealed in translucent anber of dreams.

The Meet Café occupies one side of the Plaza, a maze of kitchens, restaurants, sleeping cubicles, perilous balconies and basements opening into the underground baths.

On stools covered in white satin sit naked Mugwumps sucking translucent, colored syrups through alabaster straws. Mugwumps have no liver and nourish themselves exclusively on sweets. Thin, purple-blue lips cover a razor-sharp beak of black bone with which they frequently tear each other to shreds in fights over clients. These creatures secrete an addicting fluid from their erect penises which prolongs life by slowing metabolism. (In fact all longevity agents have proved addicting in exact ratio to their effectiveness in prolonging life.) Addicts of Mugwump fluid are known as Reptiles. A number of these flow over the chairs with their flexible bones and black-pink flesh. A fan of green cartilage covered with hollow erectile hairs through which the Reptiles absorb the fluid sprouts from behind each ear. The fans, which move from time to time touched by invisible currents, serve also some form of communications known only to Reptiles.

During the biennial Panics when the raw, pealed Dream Police storm the City, the Mugwumps take refuge in the deepest crevices of the wall sealing themselves in day cubicles and remain for weeks in biostasis. In those days of gray terror the Reptiles dart about faster and faster, scream past each other at supersonic speed, their flexible skulls flapping in black winds of insect agony.

[quote="lordosis"]Everything has its accountability and responsibility in this universe. ... Even God himself is a secret to his creation.[/quote]

There remain incalculable variables, and random chance, free will, etc. to continue to maintain an increasing rate of entropy within the evermore destabilising universe. And hath not Jesus instructed us that to enter the kingdom of heaven we must become like a child, or even a newborn babe? This means that, so much as we learn on the path of our journey there, once we come before the throne of the Most High and Almighty God, all this must be dissolved in a state of awful innocence.

[quote="cypress"] if everything is a branch on the same tree that has a much different meaning than if there are other trees in the forest, if you catch my meaning.[/quote]

With all humility and respect, I believe Master K is referring to the perennial tradition along the lines of Frazer's Golden Bough and of Hamlet's Mill. You seem to be coming at this from Marrs, Gardner and other contemporary literature. This "tree" structure does not chart so much like a Venn Diagram from above nor like a genealogy chart from the side. It is simply QBLH: Tradition.

If you still feel concerns about the "branching patterns" of the so-called "illuminati" (which has nothing whatsoever to do with the IO), then please refer to this diagram which I dug up out of some old folder saved from some long since vanished site:

http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/illuminati\_structure.jpg

[quote="KTHREL"]Then you miss the entire point of everything. ... Eh, such a realization could probably be beyond one such as yourself for now.[/quote]

That is the statement implied to you by the concept of secrecy, perhaps? However, I must again beg you to keep your reasons balanced and impartial before breathing with words of harsh judgment. But, ultimately, this is only a humble request, and I cannot solicit any higher authority.

-ben

[quote="benpadiiah"]You know, if geometry defines math, and math defines the universe, then you should be able to picture the whole universe using nothing but pure geometry.[/quote]

[quote="OneOfMany"]Homosexuality is not something I have any interest in.[/quote]

Dear God, man! I'm trying to talk about geometry, not homosexuality!

Sorry, the whole Architect bit was a little obtuse, I admit, but I needed to cover my behind and buy time till I got the roadmap straightened out.

So, yes, when I said I hadn't answered your question about the four elements becoming densified from the protoplasma. I then said "follow the architect" as an allusion to the white rabbit. So, down the rabbit hole I sent you looking at some of my more esoteric older threads, which you did. By now I'm sure you've almost completely forgotten about the question, since I've also talked us way off its trail by repeatedly changing the topic. As I say, though, it was all to buy me time while I dug out the map to get us unlost again.

So, hence, the map:

[img]<http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/cosmo.gif>[/img]

now, what we are looking at here are seven weigh-stations, or chakras, of the uinverse. We begin with Tau sub Tau, the geometry greater than and measuring over the second frame, or station, which depicts the "ice cream" lightcone, showing the variegated formation of the four elements over time. Enlarged from this is the third level, or dimension, which depicts the basic, essential, the fundamental geometry of the modern local multiverse. From this we see expand from a fourth direction some surface features of the spacetime continuum. Welling up from that comes the fifth chakra, that is, the alignment of our galaxy with another, from which we zoom in to our own arm of the Milky Way, and finally to our own home solar system, the sixth and seventh layers or levels, so to speak, respectively.

Of course, I hope that by now you can see that, while these levels seem to have a beginning and an end, that is, the smallest and the largest of scales on this seven-string model, and that, by "strumming" (so to speak) this model we can tour the entire span and range of the astronomical universe, there remains the biological and the quantum universes to be included with this astrophysics cosmology. I have held very strongly from the start that the same basic pattern, that is that which allows us to tour through them all, from the greatest through all scales to the smallest, and back, that which remains ubiquitous to all these levels of measure, is in fact a phi/pi spiral that can be depicted geometrically using the surface of a torus.

To all those with a bad taste in their mouths because they have believed what they have been taught, no. This does NOT mean the exterior shape of our universe is specifically, or definately, a torus shape. In fact, I rather think the universe is shaped something like this:

[img]<http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/current.gif>[/img] where the labels along the right indicate, from bottom to top: Baby Universe, Black Hole, Local Universe, Milky Way, earth, moon, sun, Filaments/Walls/Voids.

Even this model is not exactly accurate, and has been bent such that the present (upper right) is enlarged relative to the future (lower left).

Oh well, ttfn.

-ben

Never give out your password or credit card number in an instant message conversation. To help prevent infection by a computer virus or worm, never accept or open any file or link in an instant message until you verify its authenticity with the sender.

The Summer of Bek says: (1:30:24 AM)
Oop boop be doop

AHDVNHAY says: (1:30:38 AM)
OLLA!

The Summer of Bek says: (1:30:52 AM) well hi!! I just had a very good lunch with the stepdad.

AHDVNHAY says: (1:31:03 AM) awesome

The Summer of Bek says: (1:31:06 AM)
The first in years where it wasn't uncomfortable, it was good fun.

The Summer of Bek says: (1:31:10 AM)
yeah!

The Summer of Bek says: (1:31:19 AM)
And David seems to be over his little problem

AHDVNHAY says: (1:31:26 AM)
ahhh

AHDVNHAY says: (1:31:30 AM)
most auspicious.

The Summer of Bek says: (1:31:47 AM)
heh

The Summer of Bek says: (1:31:49 AM) most something ;)

AHDVNHAY says: (1:32:35 AM) what the HELL man.

AHDVNHAY says: (1:32:44 AM)
I am trying to hack amazon.com, right?

The Summer of Bek says: (1:32:50 AM) whatnow?

AHDVNHAY says: (1:32:52 AM) to get a picture of Where's Waldo

The Summer of Bek says: (1:32:57 AM)
LOL

AHDVNHAY says: (1:33:11 AM) but I can't fucking find the fucking pic in the source code.

AHDVNHAY says: (1:33:13 AM)
MEH!

The Summer of Bek says: (1:33:17 AM)
Ahaha

AHDVNHAY says: (1:33:26 AM)
I am teh One.

The Summer of Bek says: (1:33:44 AM)
Ahaha you are not or you'd have your waldo pic :P

AHDVNHAY says: (1:34:03 AM)
First I have to get a phone by fed ex.

AHDVNHAY says: (1:34:07 AM)
then Waldo will call me.

The Summer of Bek says: (1:34:45 AM)
Ahahahahahaha

The Summer of Bek says: (1:34:51 AM) just don't go jumping out teh window

AHDVNHAY says: (1:35:09 AM)
HOLY POOP!

AHDVNHAY says: (1:35:13 AM)
I DID IT!!

AHDVNHAY says: (1:35:28 AM)
Jesus Christ!

AHDVNHAY says: (1:35:32 AM)
I beat teh system!

The Summer of Bek says: (1:35:36 AM)
Mwahaha

The Summer of Bek says: (1:35:44 AM) you beat teh worldwide internets :-O

AHDVNHAY says: (1:35:46 AM)

I just fought Waldo, the head bad guy at the end of the internet!

AHDVNHAY says: (1:35:54 AM)

YEAH!

The Summer of Bek says: (1:35:58 AM)

The boss..

AHDVNHAY says: (1:35:59 AM) w00t!!

AHDVNHAY says: (1:36:11 AM)

Jesus... seriously LMAO

AHDVNHAY says: (1:36:46 AM)

<http://lookinside2->

images.amazon.com/Qffs+v35leq0IJQyUqDDw8w7sWOecNFOpAy/fM9e6ziRJrSMYe5Yu8kL/sxhtuZn

AHDVNHAY says: (1:37:13 AM) now...

AHDVNHAY says: (1:37:32 AM)

all I need to do is photoshop Osama Bin Laden's face over Waldo's.... annnnddddd.....

AHDVNHAY says: (1:37:36 AM)

LALALA

The Summer of Bek says: (1:37:43 AM)

Mwahahaha

AHDVNHAY says: (1:37:47 AM)

hehehe

The Summer of Bek says: (1:39:12 AM)

you need to change My name is Waldo to Osama

AHDVNHAY says: (1:39:27 AM)

I'm fuckin up da whole thing

AHDVNHAY says: (1:39:30 AM)

old skool!

The Summer of Bek says: (1:39:39 AM)

LOL

AHDVNHAY says: (1:44:54 AM)

Fuck. YEAH.

AHDVNHAY says: (1:45:01 AM)

This totally kicks ass!

The Summer of Bek says: (1:45:04 AM)
LOL

AHDVNHAY says: (1:59:52 AM)
<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/sxhtuZn000000000001.jpg>

The Summer of Bek says: (1:59:59 AM) hang on

AHDVNHAY says: (2:00:08 AM) k, brb me own self

The Summer of Bek says: (2:00:26 AM)
ok

The Summer of Bek says: (3:30:35 AM) hey do you still ever talk to tish?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:30:49 AM)
I haven't in way too long, why?

The Summer of Bek says: (3:30:56 AM)
just wondering

AHDVNHAY says: (3:31:07 AM)
is she doing okay?

The Summer of Bek says: (3:31:21 AM) yeah I think so

AHDVNHAY says: (3:31:33 AM) wasn't she having a thing with one of the other messenger peeps?

The Summer of Bek says: (3:31:40 AM)
WHAT????????????????

AHDVNHAY says: (3:31:50 AM)
I dunno...! Jeez!

The Summer of Bek says: (3:31:54 AM)
I don't think so

The Summer of Bek says: (3:32:00 AM)
she was engaged to Andrew

The Summer of Bek says: (3:32:10 AM)
Idon't think she's the cyberflirty type somehow

AHDVNHAY says: (3:32:34 AM)
she just kept changing her name around alot and so did this other guy, and they were like they were changing their names around like they were, yeah... like they were cyberflirting.

The Summer of Bek says: (3:32:48 AM)

Oh my!!

AHDVNHAY says: (3:33:14 AM) you didn't know any of this?

The Summer of Bek says: (3:33:20 AM)
Nope.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:33:38 AM)
hmm.

The Summer of Bek says: (3:33:55 AM)
I usually know most things, she never talked to me about that

AHDVNHAY says: (3:34:01 AM)
perhaps you (as I know only you can!) could surreptitiously inquire about it of her?

The Summer of Bek says: (3:34:36 AM)
Hmm I would be surprised..

The Summer of Bek says: (3:34:59 AM)
You know what she's like, and she is totally obsessed with Andrew. She sees herself as his Padme.

The Summer of Bek says: (3:35:15 AM)
I'm totally serious here. I would be VERY surprised if she was flirty with anyone else.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:35:18 AM)
yeah I know

The Summer of Bek says: (3:35:30 AM)
I'm listening to a puink version of Barbie Girl

AHDVNHAY says: (3:35:37 AM) but otherwise it would be just too big a coincidence.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:35:39 AM)
UGH.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:35:43 AM)
fuck that song.

The Summer of Bek says: (3:35:46 AM)
it's funny :P

The Summer of Bek says: (3:36:03 AM)
I think it is coincidence.

The Summer of Bek says: (3:36:09 AM)
brb

AHDVNHAY says: (3:36:10 AM)
I dunno. Maybe.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:36:13 AM)

k

The Summer of Bek says: (3:41:42 AM)
back

AHDVNHAY says: (3:41:46 AM)
k, cool

The Summer of Bek says: (3:41:54 AM) hurrah!!

The Summer of Bek says: (3:42:02 AM)
I'm getting nicely slowly sloshed :P

AHDVNHAY says: (3:43:29 AM)
ahhh wonderful honeypoo

The Summer of Bek says: (3:43:46 AM)
LOL

The Summer of Bek says: (3:43:51 AM) honeypoo??

AHDVNHAY says: (3:44:23 AM)
uuhhhh

AHDVNHAY says: (3:44:25 AM)
<.<

AHDVNHAY says: (3:44:26 AM)
>.>

AHDVNHAY says: (3:44:29 AM)
heheh

AHDVNHAY says: (3:44:32 AM)
surreee.....

The Summer of Bek says: (3:44:53 AM)
LOL

The Summer of Bek says: (3:44:56 AM) you crack me up

AHDVNHAY says: (3:45:09 AM) heheh thx

AHDVNHAY says: (3:48:55 AM) honey....?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:49:09 AM)
may I please post after you in the toilet humour thread?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:49:16 AM)

I promise to be cool and all.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:49:17 AM)
lol

The Summer of Bek says: (3:49:21 AM)
LOL

AHDVNHAY says: (3:51:23 AM)
k, posted.

The Summer of Bek says: (3:51:50 AM)
LOL

The Summer of Bek says: (3:51:57 AM) waxing is the only way to go there.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:52:03 AM)
I agree.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:52:40 AM) silly brazillian bandicoot, shaving's 4 kidz.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:52:42 AM)
LOL!

The Summer of Bek says: (3:52:58 AM)
AHAHAHA the bandicoot.. I can't believe you remembered :P

AHDVNHAY says: (3:53:06 AM)
it took me a second...

AHDVNHAY says: (3:53:07 AM)
LOL!

The Summer of Bek says: (3:53:25 AM)
Well done!! That was a LONG time ago

AHDVNHAY says: (3:53:33 AM)
I guess...

AHDVNHAY says: (3:53:38 AM)
it does seem a while.

The Summer of Bek says: (3:53:39 AM) well it would be 2 years

The Summer of Bek says: (3:53:45 AM) we've been talking for 2 years

AHDVNHAY says: (3:53:57 AM) but then, compare that to the duration of the Pleistocene epoch

The Summer of Bek says: (3:54:00 AM)

I've been onlfc for 2 1/2 years, and msn for 2

The Summer of Bek says: (3:54:20 AM) well I don't give a flying firetruck abotu the- erm

AHDVNHAY says: (3:54:26 AM)
HAHAH

The Summer of Bek says: (3:54:28 AM)
Plaiestocene epoch

AHDVNHAY says: (3:54:31 AM)
hehehe

AHDVNHAY says: (3:56:37 AM)
hey, did I tell you I added Damien to MSN?

The Summer of Bek says: (3:57:25 AM)
Oh no!!

The Summer of Bek says: (3:57:27 AM)
Can I meet him?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:57:38 AM)
hopefully!

The Summer of Bek says: (3:57:38 AM) does he know about me?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:57:42 AM) sort of

AHDVNHAY says: (3:57:56 AM) not as much as you know about him tho, of course.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:57:58 AM)
LOL

The Summer of Bek says: (3:57:59 AM)
I know you were reluctant to tell him about your online life

AHDVNHAY says: (3:58:07 AM)
yeah

AHDVNHAY says: (3:58:19 AM) now he is online too so I will make him suffer!

AHDVNHAY says: (3:58:21 AM)
LOL!

The Summer of Bek says: (3:58:26 AM) mwahahahahaha

The Summer of Bek says: (3:58:29 AM)

Hey wait a minute..

AHDVNHAY says: (3:58:32 AM)
hehehhee!

The Summer of Bek says: (3:58:34 AM) are you saying talking to me is suffering?

The Summer of Bek says: (3:58:43 AM)
:P

AHDVNHAY says: (3:58:43 AM) ummm... no!

The Summer of Bek says: (3:58:48 AM) just as well....

AHDVNHAY says: (3:58:53 AM)
it's just that... well... it's very addictive.

The Summer of Bek says: (3:59:01 AM) heh yeah it sure is

AHDVNHAY says: (3:59:22 AM) now, only when it is too late, do you understand the truth.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:59:24 AM)
LOL!

The Summer of Bek says: (3:59:32 AM) again, mwahahahaha

AHDVNHAY says: (4:00:08 AM) brb smokes.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:00:50 AM)
Okey

The Summer of Bek says: (4:10:50 AM)
I think Sarah is about to register on tlfc :D

AHDVNHAY says: (4:15:57 AM)
COOLIES!

The Summer of Bek says: (4:17:58 AM) Huzzah

AHDVNHAY says: (4:18:06 AM) indeed.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:22:09 AM)
LOL I had to meet David and his best friend Ross (who I hadn't met before) at this pub last night to see this band. David told me later, that they drove past me while I was waiting at the lights to cross the road and Ross said "check her out, she's gorgeous" and David said "that's Bek"

The Summer of Bek says: (4:22:11 AM)
:D

AHDVNHAY says: (4:22:29 AM)
HAHAHHAH!

AHDVNHAY says: (4:22:33 AM)
MOST Auspicious.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:22:42 AM)
are you turning Chinese on me?

The Summer of Bek says: (4:22:53 AM) everything is most auspicious at the moment

AHDVNHAY says: (4:23:00 AM)
yes. I know....

AHDVNHAY says: (4:23:05 AM)
it's like the hiccoughs.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:23:14 AM) brain hiccoughs.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:23:22 AM)
LMAO

AHDVNHAY says: (4:23:26 AM)
heh

AHDVNHAY says: (4:25:59 AM)
wb holy one.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:26:13 AM) thanking you :D

AHDVNHAY says: (4:26:17 AM)
hehehhee

AHDVNHAY says: (4:26:23 AM) bows

AHDVNHAY says: (4:26:24 AM)
lol

The Summer of Bek says: (4:28:50 AM)
sooooooooooooooooooooo

AHDVNHAY says: (4:28:57 AM)
ayupyupyup

The Summer of Bek says: (4:29:09 AM) the boredom is strong in this one

AHDVNHAY says: (4:29:14 AM)
HAHAHA

AHDVNHAY says: (4:29:22 AM)
I've been working on my blog some

AHDVNHAY says: (4:29:30 AM) but I will wait to update it till 1-23.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:29:38 AM)
that date is my lucky number.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:29:44 AM)
lol ok

AHDVNHAY says: (4:29:49 AM) have you seen what's up there now tho?

The Summer of Bek says: (4:30:00 AM)
Oh according to my stars, Valentine's day will be one of the best days of the year

AHDVNHAY says: (4:30:13 AM)
MUCHO GRANDE!

The Summer of Bek says: (4:30:47 AM)
mhm! That has me intrigued.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:31:03 AM)
ooooo. you gonna get laid, girlfriend!

The Summer of Bek says: (4:32:00 AM)
Pfft. I got laid last night.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:32:11 AM) heheheh.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:32:35 AM)
maybe he will propose to you and hide the ring inside a chocolate kangaroo?

The Summer of Bek says: (4:32:46 AM)
I think it's a little early for that honey

AHDVNHAY says: (4:33:00 AM) chocolate kangaroos?

AHDVNHAY says: (4:33:05 AM)
no, they're in season now.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:33:22 AM)
No they are not. It's summer here. Everyone knows they melt in summer. You can only find them in winter.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:33:27 AM)

Jeebus you Americans are dumb

The Summer of Bek says: (4:33:29 AM)
:P

AHDVNHAY says: (4:33:44 AM)
it's all about eoister bunnies here now.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:33:48 AM)
and valentines.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:33:59 AM) which are all pure chocolate.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:34:06 AM) eoister?? Wow, that's pure pagan

AHDVNHAY says: (4:34:27 AM)
I am reverting from the Queen's Anglifhe!

The Summer of Bek says: (4:34:32 AM)
LMAO!

AHDVNHAY says: (4:34:35 AM)
HAHHA

AHDVNHAY says: (4:35:22 AM) so have you seen my current blog?

AHDVNHAY says: (4:35:31 AM)
it has our convo from teh other week on it.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:35:47 AM)
Oh really LOL

The Summer of Bek says: (4:35:51 AM) linkydink

AHDVNHAY says: (4:35:57 AM) ummmmmm.....

AHDVNHAY says: (4:36:00 AM)
hang on.....

AHDVNHAY says: (4:36:06 AM)
it's around here somewhere....

AHDVNHAY says: (4:36:10 AM)
oh wait....

AHDVNHAY says: (4:36:12 AM) here it is!

AHDVNHAY says: (4:36:13 AM)

no...

AHDVNHAY says: (4:36:15 AM)
no.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:36:21 AM) no that's not it either.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:36:28 AM)
oh blatherschite I remember it now!

AHDVNHAY says: (4:36:33 AM)
www.benpadiah.com

The Summer of Bek says: (4:36:33 AM)
heh

The Summer of Bek says: (4:36:47 AM)
Doh I really should know that without having to resort to your sarcasm

AHDVNHAY says: (4:36:56 AM)
You'd think.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:37:10 AM)
Ahh now there is the problem. Quite obviously, I don't.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:37:18 AM)
hehe

AHDVNHAY says: (4:37:21 AM) sorry honey

The Summer of Bek says: (4:37:33 AM) not at all, totally deserved.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:37:41 AM)
it's cool though

The Summer of Bek says: (4:38:06 AM)
I couldn't remember if it was your front page or if I had to navigate. I was being teh lazy and slightly sozzled.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:38:15 AM)

AHDVNHAY says: (4:38:29 AM)
me, I've just got the giggles

AHDVNHAY says: (4:38:42 AM) stoned "to the bone" I believe they call it?

The Summer of Bek says: (4:38:58 AM)
Ahaha

The Summer of Bek says: (4:39:01 AM)
OMG

The Summer of Bek says: (4:39:18 AM)
I had several beers last night and one of David's friends had a spliff, so I had a few tokes. BAD MOVE.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:39:27 AM)
I never smoke when I've been drinking, and boy did it hit me.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:40:02 AM)
David didn't realise I'd toked, and he thought I was about to pass out. I had to throw about 2 pints of water down me just to get my head together.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:40:19 AM)
oh my!

The Summer of Bek says: (4:40:20 AM)
He was really concerned and asked if I wanted him to take me home, bless him!!

The Summer of Bek says: (4:40:57 AM)
I gave him what I thought was a sexy "come hither" look and he thought I was about to fall off my bar stool - sooo not the look i was going for..

AHDVNHAY says: (4:41:08 AM)
oh sunny.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:41:17 AM)
LOL

AHDVNHAY says: (4:41:26 AM) teh poor stoned chick

The Summer of Bek says: (4:41:44 AM)
I'm so silly sometimes!! He doesn't smoke anymore, and I fessed up saying I did a really silly thing and had a toke, he just laughed at me

AHDVNHAY says: (4:41:54 AM)
hehehe

AHDVNHAY says: (4:42:02 AM)
that's cool

The Summer of Bek says: (4:42:11 AM) bless him for being so concerned though, you gotta love that

The Summer of Bek says: (4:42:11 AM)
:)

AHDVNHAY says: (4:42:17 AM)
ayup

The Summer of Bek says: (4:42:54 AM)
And LOL that convo was pretty funny!!

The Summer of Bek says: (4:43:05 AM) the internet hates me at the moment, it took all that time to load.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:43:19 AM)
it's more than usually image heavy.

The Summer of Bek says: (4:43:45 AM)
Hmm ok

AHDVNHAY says: (4:44:03 AM) brb tho one sec

The Summer of Bek says: (4:44:30 AM)
ok

The Summer of Bek says: (5:06:57 AM)
Oh honey you have some competition on tlfc

The Summer of Bek says: (5:06:59 AM)
LOL

The Summer of Bek says: (5:18:00 AM) two secs

The Summer of Bek says: (5:18:00 AM) three

The Summer of Bek says: (5:18:01 AM) four

The Summer of Bek says: (5:18:02 AM) five

The Summer of Bek says: (5:18:04 AM) a bajillion

The Summer of Bek says: (5:38:54 AM)
You are NOT helpign me with my boredom.

The Summer of Bek says: (5:38:54 AM)
meh

Posted: 21 Jan 2006 23:26
benpadiah
Knowing The Path

[quote="benpadiah"] <http://www.informationclearinghouse.info/article11622.htm>

I for one would love to see peace through negotiation instead of more war.[/quote]

Posted: 22 Jan 2006 03:04
neomaul
One With The Matrix

[quote="neomaul"]Israeli Hints at Preparation to Stop Iran http://news.yahoo.com/s/ap/20060122/ap\_on\_re\_mi\_ea/iran\_nuclear how powerful is Israel military?

Posted: 23 Jan 2006 05:18
neomaul
One With The Matrix

[quote="neomaul"]WOW! quite a few close calls. Wonder if it'll ever really happen.

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/World\_War\_3 and now it's the twentyfourth and already you fucks are talking about global thermo nuclear warfare!

Oh what a difference a day makes.

No, but seriously, I understand the point you are making neomaul, that as long as there is an Emmanuel Goldstein, there will be a Two Minutes of Hate, and as long as there is a Two Minutes of Hate, there will be an Emmanuel Godlstein. I simply disagree.

-ben

Thomas Anderson = human (inside Matrix power plant)

Mr. Anderson = 'programme' of Thomas Anderson (inside Matrix plant plant inside Metacortex job)

Neo = self-chosen programme name for human Thomas Anderson (programme when hacking into the Matrix / human when outside the Matrix)

THE ONE = programme or program
(written by the Oracle; see Anomoly)

Anomoly = sum of the remainder of an imbalanced equation; i.e. choice or free will (the unbalanced equation of free will = program: humans choose Matrix on an unconscious level)
(the sum of the remainder = THE ONE: divergent "destiny" programme: based initially on choice but with decreasing free will)

( ALL residual-self-image / digital-self / incarnated-avatars of the hackers ARE themselves programmes within the Matrix simulation. This is how Smith is able to "hack" Bane's avatar and "become" Bane's mind in his real-world body.

Let me clarify that in this and all my posts on this subject:

programme = current or past rebel hacker's digital-self-image incarnated avatar / exiled program which chooses to rebel rather than face deletion. ex. Agent Smith, the Oracle, the Architect and THE ONE are all programmes.

program = invisible, "benevolent" program which is currently serving some purpose and is not either rebelling, unnecessary, exiled or in any other way a programme. ex. the green programming code of the Matrix computer simulation is a program. )

-
- 1) Thomas Anderson hacks as Neo.
  - 2) Thomas Anderson goes to work as Mr. Anderson.
  - 3) Thomas Anderson takes the red pill, gets unplugged from the Matrix, chooses to be named Neo.
  - 4) Neo hacks into the Matrix.
  - 5) The Oracle gives Neo "the gift" of becoming the ONE.
  - 6) Neo is shot and killed = The Neo programme is deleted / Thomas Anderson's body dies. ( "the body cannot live without the mind." )

7) THE ONE programme kicks in = the Neo programme is replaced by the ONE / Thomas Anderson's body is reanimated. ( Neo becomes "a new man" whose mind programme inside the Matrix has the powers of the ONE. )

THE ONE programme's powers include flying and limited fore-sight.

9) Neo learns from using the powers of THE ONE programme inside the Matrix similarly to how the other Hackers use the "training program" of the dojo to hone their programme powers. ( Thus Neo gains real world powers. )

10) Neo's real-world powers include em.pk. ( electromagnetic psycho-kinesis ).

11) THE ONE programme is captured by the Merovingian. ( Neo's "mind is separated from his body" : some people believe that this means Neo had hacked into the Matrix without a port the first time intentionally, however I disagree) THE ONE programme is held hostage in Mobil Avenue Train Station ( Limbo ).

12) Neo learns from being captured by the Merovingian ( Thus, Neo gains more real world powers ).

13) Neo's real-world powers now include being able to detach his mind from his body and hack into the Matrix without using a port. They also include "second sight" : a literal form of his previously limited fore-sight.

14) THE ONE programme is overwritten by Agent Smith.

15) THE ONE programme is assimilated by Deux

16) fate of Thomas Anderson / Neo's real world body: unknown...

17) "will we see Neo again?" / "perhaps."

( Neo's digital avatar did "die" / was "erased" when Smith shot him... )

---

1) Agent Smith is a programme.

2) Agent Smith is "destroyed" by Neo / THE ONE.

3) Agent Smith faces deletion, but chooses to rebel rather than enter the source.

( because a part of Neo overwrote a part of him, he became like Neo, a rebel against the system. )

4) Agent Smith gains powers from THE ONE program.

( because he is a programme rather than human, Smith's powers are programming powers rather than physical abilities. While Neo, as the ONE, could fly in the Matrix, Smith learned how to copy his signature code.)

5) Agent Smith over-writes the Oracle.

( because the Oracle was a programme with the power of fore-sight, Smith gained fore-sight. By assimilating the Oracle, Smith also assimilated more of the code of her "gift" : the ONE program; thus Smith also learned to fly in the Matrix. )

6) Agent Smith over-writes Neo.

( alot of people think that it was this action itself which "balanced the equation" and led directly to Smith's deletion, since he was no longer relevant as a programme whose purpose, as programmed by the Architect, was to balance the equation the imbalance of which was represented by Neo. I disagree: see following character profiles. )

7) the self-copying Agent Smith programme is deleted by Deux.

---

1) the Oracle is a programme

2) she is assigned to study the Anomaly of free will.

3) she writes an imbalanced equation that initially allows free will but gradually decreases it.

( this equation is called THE ONE in its imbalanced form. It allows choice on an unconscious level, whereby people unconsciously choose the Matrix, however after an initial choice is made it causes a subsequent cause/effect chain reaction which increases destiny and decreases number of choices available. )

4) she then faces deletion because the purpose of her programme has been fulfilled.

5) rather than return to the Source, the Oracle rebels.

( As she states it, "the Architect is there to balance the equation. I am here to unbalance it." )

6) she gives Neo the "gift" of being THE ONE.

( The giving of this gift is the fulfilling of a complicated series of "prophecies," i.e. manipulations: a. she tells Morpheus he will find the ONE; b. she tells Trinity she will love the ONE. Thus, when someone is found to suitably fulfill these "prophecies" she gives Neo "the gift" of being THE ONE. )

7) The Oracle allows Rhamma Khandra to trade her deletion code to the Merovingian in exchange for Rhamma Khandra's protection by the Merovingian.

The Oracle programme hides herself in a different "shell" body ( physical programme ) to avoid deletion at the hands of the Merovingian.

9) The Oracle gets to see Sati, Rhamma Khandra's daughter, one last time before Seraph delivers her to the Merovingian.

10) The Oracle is overwritten by Agent Smith.

( Smith gains the powers of the Oracle as well as more of the powers of her "gift", the program of the ONE. )

11) The Oracle uses her power of foresight to program a specific thing for Smith to say.

( That is, THE ONE program part of Smith has a "destiny" of its own specific to him, which the Oracle allows him to fore-see through her power of "prophecy," i.e. manipulation. )

12) The Oracle's second "shell" body dies when it has no programme inhabiting it, i.e. when the Smith programme is deleted.

13) she returns to her original form in the reloaded Matrix, where programmes such as she, Sati and Seraph, who have "outlived their usefulness" are now allowed to continue to exist.

---

1) the Architect is a programme.

2) he is the repository of the knowledge by the Matrix that it is an artificial intelligence construct ( i.e. he is the Matrix's self-awareness, the "essence" of the Matrix, its perception of itself. )

3) he guards the door to the Source, the Machine Mainframe.

4) he exists within the most fundamental structure of the Matrix, the anomaly itself.

( thus, where he is there are two doors, one that leads into the Matrix program, and one that leads into the Source. )

5) he wishes to see the anomaly erased and the imbalanced equation balanced.

6) therefore he allows Agent Smith access to the programming back doors.

7) he offers Neo the choice given to the five previous incarnated avatars of THE ONE programme. ( a. the door on the left = leads to the Source: the Matrix is reloaded and the incarnation of THE ONE returns to Zion to reform it with 28 humans of their choice; the avatar of THE ONE programme remains in the Matrix as the New Architect programme. / b. the door on the right = leads back to the Matrix: the Matrix is not reloaded, the incarnation of THE ONE returns to Zion to be destroyed along with it by the army of the machines; the avatar of THE ONE programme does not replace the current Architect programme. ) when the Matrix is reloaded his purpose is fulfilled and he faces deletion.

9) when the Sixth Matrix is loaded programmes with no specific purpose are allowed to continue to exist. Therefore the Architect programme from the Fifth Matrix continues to exist, even though he is no longer necessary.

( The anomaly ceases to be unconscious and becomes a conscious choice that can be made by all the people plugged into the Matrix: you take the blue pill and you stay in the simulated dream world; you take the red pill and you wake up to the desert of the real. )

---

1) Persephone and the Merovingian are programmes

2) in a previous version of the Matrix the Merovingian was THE ONE. In the subsequent version THE ONE programme of the Merovingian replaced the Architect programme of the previous Matrix version. In the next version of the Matrix after that, THE ONE / Architect programme known as the Merovingian was replaced by a new THE ONE as Architect, and the Merovingian became obsolete. Rather than facing deletion, he rebelled.

3) in a previous version of the Matrix Persephone was THE ONE's lover. In the subsequent version her physical body was returned to Zion and her programmed digital self-image became the next version of the Oracle, the counterpart to the Merovingian as the Architect. When the Merovingian ceased being the Architect and was replaced by the next version of THE ONE, Persephone also ceased being the version of the Oracle and fled with the Merovingian rather than face deletion.

4) in the version of the Matrix program where the Merovingian as THE ONE programme became the Architect, there was no programmed anomaly, and the highest programming code function was cause and effect.

5) in the version of the Matrix program where Persephone as the lover of THE ONE programme became the Oracle, there was no programmed emotion, and the highest programming code function equivalent was sampling or sharing of code.

---

1) Seraph is a programme

2) in the version of the Matrix where the Merovingian was the Architect and Persephone was the Oracle, Seraph was the next incarnated avatar of THE ONE programme.

4) When Seraph, as THE ONE, replaced the Architect, his incarnated avatar fled rather than face deletion.

5) he chose to protect the current incarnation of the Oracle in the fifth version of the Matrix.

6) in the sixth version of the Matrix he protects Sati.

---

1) the Keymaker is a programme

2) the Keymaker is the Architect version of THE ONE programme that was the incarnated avatar of Seraph.

( under the Keymaker / Architect there were "angel" programmes based on Seraph / THE ONE rather than "agents" : see next profile. )

3) when the next version of THE ONE came along ( see next profile ), the Keymaker / Architect went into exile rather than face deletion.

4) because Seraph had been THE ONE to replace the Merovingian ( the "prodigal son" ), the Merovingian took revenge by imprisoning the Keymaker / Architect programme avatar of Seraph THE ONE.

5) the Keymaker is freed by Neo.

6) the Keymaker has the powers of THE ONE and the Architect.

( he has limited fore-sight in knowing he will need the key to start the motorcycle and he has access to the programming back doors. )

7) the keymaker programme is "killed" by Agent Smith; i.e. his purpose has been fulfilled.

---

1) Councillor Hamman is a human

2) in the fourth version of the Matrix, Hamman was THE ONE.

3) like all the previous incarnated avatars of THE ONE before him, he chose the door on the left. His physical body returned to repopulate Zion with 28 people of his choosing. His avatar, THE ONE programme, then became the Architect of the Sixth Matrix.

4) the 28 people he chose then became the Zion Council and the youngest of them remember Hamman only as the mythical "man born inside the Matrix" who "had the power to remake it according to his will. It was he who freed the first of us," as Morpheus says.

5) his digital self-image ( incarnated avatar ) became Agent Smith.

( For every human freed from the Matrix under Councillor Hamman, a new Agent programme is written and a new sentinel is built. )

6) THE ONE programme given as a "gift" to him by the previous Oracle becomes the Sixth Architect.

---

1) The Trainman and Sati are programmes

2) the Trainman is the first incarnated avatar of THE ONE. He became the Architect of the second version of the Matrix.

3) when the Merovingian replaced him as the Architect in the third version of the Matrix, the Trainman chose to serve the Merovingian rather than face deletion. When the Merovingian was replaced as the Architect by Seraph, who became the Keymaker / Architect of the fourth version of the Matrix, the Trainman chose to continue to serve the exiled Merovingian rather than the Keymaker / Architect. He continued to serve the Merovingian through the subsequent fourth and fifth versions of the Matrix under the Keymaker Architect and the Last Architect.

4) Sati is the seventh incarnated avatar of THE ONE. She is the first to not have originally been the digital-self-image of a human who had been jacked into the Matrix simulation as a human-battery in the machine power plant. As such, she exists contemporarily to the Architect and the Oracle of the Fifth version of the Matrix, rather than the Sixth version of THE ONE becoming the Sixth Architect, and his lover ( who in this case would have been Trinity ) becoming the Sixth Oracle.

5) As the Oracle said when Sati asked if they would ever see Neo again ( that is, the incarnated avatarism of his digital-self-image rather than THE ONE program which was the "gift" of the Oracle and which had now been absorbed by Deux ), "perhaps" we will see him again ( just as we have seen the Trainman, the Merovingian, Seraph and Smith as the past avatars of THE ONE discarded when THE ONE became the Architect ), however if we were, it would only be as the incarnated avatar of Neo ( as opposed to THE ONE ) being utilised as the digital-self-image of Deux ( if Thomas Anderson / Neo's real-world body is dead, his programmed digital-self-image / incarnated avatar has now been integrated into the programming of Deux, the machine mainframe, or Source: see next profile. )

---

lastly:

1) Deux is a machine

2) he "lives" in the "machine city"

3) he is the "machine mainframe" responsible for the AI program of the Matrix simulation in which the minds of the humans plugged into the "power plant" exist.

( since he is responsible for machine / human relations, this is why he is the one that comes to deal with Neo when Neo enters the machine city. )

4) like the human hackers outside the Matrix program simulation, he cannot "enter the Matrix" without a port.

5) Neo explains to Deux that the Smith programme has come to be able to replicate itself like a virus, and is spreading through the machine software like cancer cells.

6) Deux ports into the Matrix through Neo.

7) when Neo is absorbed by Smith, Deux absorbs THE ONE program into himself, thus gaining free will as a factor of the anomaly.

( this is what sends a shock wave through Neo's real-world body. ) by erasing THE ONE programme over which Agent Smith was copied in Neo's incarnated avatar, Deux under-writes the Smith programme, removing its operating platform in Neo.

( this is what causes the Smith-Neo to glitch and jerk its head. )

9) by under-writing the Smith programme in an incarnated avatar that is a programme ( THE ONE ) rather than the digital-self-image of a person jacked into the Matrix ( like The Oracle's second shell's body ), that is, by erasing THE ONE program from within Neo's avatar and assimilating it into his own mainframe, Deux is able to access the Smith programme itself directly.

( this is what causes the Smith-Neo's eyes to start to crack open with white light. )

10) with access to the Smith programme through the Neo port and the Smith-Neo avatar, Deux erases the Smith programme, which causes the chain reaction of all the duplicate Smiths with the same signature code to also be erased.

( this apparently kills the Oracle's second shell's body, but we have no reason to believe that this implies that it killed the bodies of all the other avatars Smith over-wrote as well, because the Oracle's second shell's body was, like Neo's was of THE ONE, an avatar of a programme other than Smith's overwrite programme. Thus, like Neo's avatar disappeared when Deux jacked out of Neo's real-world body as physical port, the Oracle's second shell's avatar "died" when the Smith overwrite programme was deleted. All the other people Smith had possessed were humans ported into the Matrix through the power-plant, and so their avatar programmes returned to normal, and their real-world bodies didn't die. Like the humans' avatars, the other programmes Smith had overwritten simply returned to their original state, i.e. the Oracle returned to her first "shell", Sati and Seraph returned to their ordinary avatars, etc. ) sorry it took me so long to get back to you here, but I was asleep. You know how that goes.

[quote="slowmo360"]So, another meaning of life thread? Yeah the experience is fun. I politely suggest that you put your thoughts in order and get rid of the pretentious quasi-poetic tone. Not because I find it annoying, or that I have anything against you, but I think it's all a big distraction and fun thoughts are rather useless if they're not focused.

I encourage you to meditate and seek right understanding, thinking, speech, attitude, livelihood, effort, mindfulness, and concentration. Who knows, you may just have a kickass revelation.[/quote]

Maybe one day, with enough not-thought, all of us can be as humble as you, Slowmo. Maybe one day we can even reach the level of enlightenment where we rush to judgment and call doing so "right understanding" and anything short of it, "pretentious quasi-poetic tone." Dude... piss OFF.

Anyway, man, Slowmo, as usual, makes a brilliant point in a retarded way when he commented on sifting through the silt to find the cogent thoughts, but no way am I gonna be tricked into voting... ever again. LOL! Anyway, I don't mind doing a little footwork, and that is all it is, a little bit, to get some good results, and that's what they are: good results.

[quote="OneOfMany"]
Yes, what is "it", doing? What does IT want "of me"?

So, I'm part of this enormous universal "rolling boil". Consciousness aside! I have power: the power to make choices.

There is indeed the situation of what to choose to do, and there is the expectation one feels put upon oneself.

There are programs of repressed children, step-families. Human conflict. A lack of understanding. Perhaps I could help here. Being open, I have seen "people" here "involved" in issues and throughout my writings and contributions I have tried to be open and to give an "enlightening approach". There are answers to the fundamental questions.

What bothers me is how I live accordingly! On the one hand (speaking personally again) I have my understanding of "universal topology". On the other hand I have no real way of knowing where my life is going.

But it means I have "open faith" in the power of my choices and in the power of selecting which dreams to seize.

What does It want from us?

Do you know, people have missions. Souls, things to do on Earth. At other times they are like "at lost ends". There is, really, nothing "significant for us to do".

Other times we need rest, healing, yes. So ... Experience.

"Experience is the new God".

We look for rappor. We find it. We find we have saturated it. The boil evolves into something... new. I had an experience where I was consciousness and unafraid to lose my body, to the extent of knowing I "wouldn't mind" "feeling" it "damaged" (being polite). The "feeling" mechanism that we usually experience was somehow "independent of my consciousness" - I was the consciousness of my all and thus independent of my body. Strange.

Perhaps I've had a "delusion"! One does wonder. Perhaps it was simply an experience. Difficult to put into words.

I am used to "having to do things" and so "having choice" - and to some extent only a limited choice - is curious.

We say what we like. I try to say things that I deem perhaps, hopefully, to be helpful and enlightening to others. Also, I say things that I want to say, for myself.[/quote]

Where IT is that which we experience, while consciousness is that which is the sum and result of those experiences. I have often felt similarly about the body, that is that, it is rather like a car, steered by my five-dimensional mind, but driven by the karma in my aura, that comprise together my "soul," while my own ego I associate with that geometry above and beyond even this, those patterns in and of themselves that form in the brain of my body as they relate to the past of this body, the past incarnations of my aura, and even the very motions of space itself over time, albeit it only on a quantum level. Led me to think about organic cars that were driven by a neural-fibre plug inserted between the engine and the brain-stem of the driver. Anywho.... (whistles innocently)

I agree that it is a mystery, when one thinks of it, what direction to go through and between these objects in an existence where our own minds are so ethereal they cannot even be quantified, let alone admitted they exist! But this is only if one thinks of it, which is the great joke played on us by God, the universal law of irony; those who think less, whether intentionally so (Buddhists) or not (idiots), seem to float through the loopholes in what seems to us to be a flotsam of driftwood experiences more easily, dare I say, more fluidly if not more fluently, than we do. But then, this is merely a mirage of our perception. Otherwise it is clear that all we can do is follow the patterns of karma laid out in our aura for us by the geometry of time. If we learn to enjoy doing this, eventually our enjoyment of the patterns we repeat will increase, and we will be enlightened by the delusion we are in control of those patterns. LOL!

Anyway...

-ben

There is alot of chalk put up to the notion that because it crowns the masculine/active pillar of Jachin that Wisdom is active, and thus is applied knowledge. There is a similar school out there who's sole purpose it is to convince you that DAATH and GNOSIS are teh same, when in reality they are not. All of this is right proper, but it all contributes to the post-apocalyptic agenda within this world after the fall of man and after the fall likewise of the rebel angels, that is to say implicately, after the shattering of the shells of the upper three supernals, the lowering of the middle pillar of sefirot downward into the position in which they are known by most commonly now, and the scattering of the shards about us in creation. The vacuum of DAATH, as it IS an Abyss, is caused ONLY by the lowering of Tiferet, Yesod, and Malkuth. And even this "lowering" can be expressed also as a rotation around Tiferet. And what is at the root of all of this? There are different schools on the matter, but I follow the school of Moses DeLeon, who teaches that it is the separation of Shekina (the prescence), His Bride, from The Holy One, Blessed Be He, that causes the descent or rift following the creation, and beginning with the explusion of Adam from paradise, but effecting even the casting down of Ialdabaoth the demiurge. It is, however, just as argueable that the tearing effect that caused the division between the rays and the emataions in the first place, and which ultimately led to the separation of the four worlds, was the result of the Holy One Himself, Blessed Be He, indrawing chaos from out of its containment in nothingness in the inverse of the resultant tzitzum contraction this caused. Of course if we accept the premise that there was the passive female before the first breath carried the word of our universe's formation from the Holy One, Blessed Be He, then you are positing the premise known as "turtle shells all the way down." And right this may be, from a certain POV, since a large part of the female is the perpetual cycle implied by the animation of the qliphoth particles we see vibrating here within our local universe's energy spectrum. The expression "turtle shells" in specific comes from the Vedic Hindu caste expression of the yugas, or great time cycles, as being like a series of Brahma (creator), Vishnu (preserver) and Shiva (destroyer), in an infinite impossible feedback loop comprising a Moebius-like surface of eternity. The Chinese traditional Lo Shu and Ho Tu magic number squares confirm this concept and are the basis for the two majour arrangements of the I Ching, the King Wen and the Fu Tsi. So it had come to be thought, by the time of Master Jesus, that the plethora of qliphotic quantum particles represented the cast-down condition of the Shekinah as now manifested not in Malkuth, but in Malkah, the unclean woman. The result of this tacit MIS-understanding is the fall of the rebel angels, Lucifer, the fall of man, Satan, sin, etc. etc. etc. right down to the tzimtzum that lowered (or rotated) the middle pillar sefirot. The cause of this tacit misunderstanding, whereby all is lowered into created form and Shekinah is separate from The Holy One, Blessed Be He, is simply that Wisdom is Applied Knowledge, that Knowledge exists as a thing-in-itself, that we move about within, or tap into currents of, knowledge that pre-exists us, 1:1 correspondence between the territory and the map. Of course, there is no such real thing as knowledge that we can hold in our hands, and yet we believe that it exists...? Does this not also mean that it is a gift from the Holy One Himself? And yet we put our faith for knowledge into the hands of men, and what is worse, behoove our own streams of consciousness to wend around the steeples of society. But I digress.

-ben

Never give out your password or credit card number in an instant message conversation. To help prevent infection by a computer virus or worm, never accept or open any file or link in an instant message until you verify its authenticity with the sender.

Daryl says: (3:23:49 PM)

I'm back

AHDVNHAY says: (3:23:54 PM)

hey

Daryl says: (3:24:34 PM)

I thjink you

Di has been added to the conversation.

Daryl says: (3:25:10 PM)

I think you should remove that signature especially since he is threatening again

AHDVNHAY says: (3:25:32 PM)

I'll get around to it

Daryl says: (3:25:38 PM)

what is handwriting messages

Daryl says: (3:26:07 PM)
I just got that messge saying you don't support it

Di says: (3:26:21 PM)
thank you for your testimonial daryl

Daryl says: (3:26:44 PM)
your welcome

Daryl says: (3:27:00 PM)
I see we are all back on again

Di says: (3:27:12 PM)
so it seems

AHDVNHAY says: (3:27:15 PM)
hey are you using alabe to do horoscope Turt?

Di says: (3:27:19 PM)
whats everyone been up to

Di says: (3:27:35 PM)
I do birth charts

AHDVNHAY says: (3:27:37 PM)
not much, hanging around, being alone too much, nightmares, etc... lol

Daryl says: (3:27:40 PM)
who

AHDVNHAY says: (3:27:41 PM)
ohhh

AHDVNHAY says: (3:27:43 PM)
soz

Di says: (3:27:45 PM)
nightmares

Di says: (3:27:50 PM)
sorry to hear tha

Di says: (3:27:55 PM)
hows the sleeping going?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:28:09 PM)
not great for the past week or so

AHDVNHAY says: (3:28:14 PM)
before that not so bad

Di says: (3:28:19 PM)
something niggling at you

Daryl says: (3:28:22 PM)
not good

AHDVNHAY says: (3:28:29 PM)
yeah, just thoughts about my ex

AHDVNHAY says: (3:28:52 PM)
it's cool though

Di says: (3:29:10 PM)
howcome

AHDVNHAY says: (3:29:35 PM)
so, should we talk about teh devil? LOL

Di says: (3:29:50 PM)
do you miss her a lot

AHDVNHAY says: (3:30:07 PM)
yeah

Daryl says: (3:30:38 PM)
missing is the beginning of moving forward

AHDVNHAY says: (3:30:53 PM)
or the desire to move backward

Di says: (3:31:00 PM)
what do you miss most about her?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:31:41 PM)
her presence with me

Di says: (3:31:51 PM)
the connection, the link

AHDVNHAY says: (3:32:01 PM)
we're sorta opposites

Daryl has left the conversation.

Di says: (3:32:26 PM)
not sure why he left

AHDVNHAY says: (3:32:33 PM)
hmm.

Di says: (3:32:53 PM)
is he with you now

AHDVNHAY says: (3:33:05 PM)

hang on

Di says: (3:33:10 PM)
ok

AHDVNHAY says: (3:33:33 PM)
no news

AHDVNHAY says: (3:33:36 PM)
anyway...

AHDVNHAY says: (3:33:41 PM)
what've you been up to?

Di says: (3:34:12 PM)
been doing some code for my new website that I should have up and about soon,, you?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:34:25 PM)
cool!

Di says: (3:34:32 PM)
u still got that bloody mac?

Di says: (3:34:33 PM)
lol

AHDVNHAY says: (3:34:39 PM)
YEAH.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:34:41 PM)
jeez

AHDVNHAY says: (3:34:43 PM)
it sux

Di says: (3:34:48 PM)
u smiling?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:34:51 PM)
yah

Di says: (3:34:52 PM)
i bet you are!

Di says: (3:35:00 PM)
GOOD

AHDVNHAY says: (3:35:05 PM)
hehehe

Di says: (3:35:06 PM)
hows your mum?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:35:11 PM)

she's good

AHDVNHAY says: (3:35:29 PM)

I was asleep all day yesterday when she had the day off so she kept bugging me to wake up

Di says: (3:36:07 PM)

what meds you on

AHDVNHAY says: (3:36:25 PM)

same as before: lamictal, paxil, abilify

AHDVNHAY says: (3:36:47 PM)

just anti-depressants and mood stabilisers mainly

Di says: (3:36:53 PM)

you tried zopiclone it think its called gamamil

AHDVNHAY says: (3:37:05 PM)

no, what's it for?

Di says: (3:37:09 PM)

sleep

Di says: (3:37:21 PM)

helps me sleep

AHDVNHAY says: (3:37:41 PM)

ahh

AHDVNHAY says: (3:37:54 PM)

I think we have something like that statestate... the name's familiar

Di says: (3:38:05 PM)

you tried it

AHDVNHAY says: (3:38:26 PM)

no, but my neighbor gave me this ancient chinese herbal remedy

AHDVNHAY says: (3:38:30 PM)

here's daryl back

Daryl has been added to the conversation.

Di says: (3:39:13 PM)

hello

Di says: (3:39:17 PM)

welcome back

AHDVNHAY says: (3:39:20 PM)

yo!

Daryl says: (3:39:27 PM)
yeah

AHDVNHAY says: (3:39:29 PM)
where'd you go man?

Daryl says: (3:39:40 PM)
I was writing you in another box

AHDVNHAY says: (3:39:56 PM)
why'd you leave, I mean?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:40:08 PM)
we can all be open here, yes?

Daryl says: (3:40:13 PM)
Oh I hate noisy people by my side

Daryl says: (3:40:33 PM)
there were two people by me

AHDVNHAY says: (3:40:37 PM)
ohh

Di says: (3:40:40 PM)
ok

Daryl says: (3:41:07 PM)
now back to my question

Daryl says: (3:41:31 PM)
you two have to forgive me I am one of those that loves puzzling people's minds

Di says: (3:41:39 PM)
ok

Daryl says: (3:41:41 PM)
them not those

Daryl says: (3:41:56 PM)
or did I have it right the first time

Daryl says: (3:41:58 PM)
anyway

AHDVNHAY says: (3:42:09 PM)
question

Daryl says: (3:42:17 PM)
what do you think is the difference if there are between satan and man

AHDVNHAY says: (3:42:42 PM)
satan, as an angel, was created sooner than man

Daryl says: (3:42:45 PM)
or there relationship between each other

Di says: (3:43:03 PM)
why is this of interest to you

AHDVNHAY says: (3:43:35 PM)
if satan is eternal (beginning to end of the universe) and man was immortal (later beginning, but to the same end of days)

Daryl says: (3:43:39 PM)
because I believe that the IO first must give man the ability to know ALL truths

Daryl says: (3:43:58 PM)
or should I say the truth

Di says: (3:44:11 PM)
do you think man needs to know all truths

Daryl says: (3:44:24 PM)
I believe that man has the truth but it is only for a few chosen

Daryl says: (3:44:28 PM)
yes i do

Di says: (3:44:36 PM)
ok

Daryl says: (3:44:45 PM)
only if they are duly and truly prepared for it

Di says: (3:44:53 PM)
ok, go on

Daryl says: (3:45:44 PM)
man can only imagine that what he wants, has or believes he can achieve. Man also only has the ability to grow as far as his mind can imagine.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:46:04 PM)
right.

Di says: (3:46:10 PM)
ok

Daryl says: (3:46:19 PM)
but if you give man the ability to open something that he never had or didn't know had he can change his situations and others

AHDVNHAY says: (3:46:37 PM)
interesting

Daryl says: (3:47:18 PM)
the abiltiy to know thyself or ones beginning can only give him two things, His future or his ending

Daryl says: (3:47:28 PM)
his ending can also be his present

Di has left the conversation.

Daryl says: (3:47:56 PM)
dam she's gone

AHDVNHAY says: (3:48:09 PM)
you guys sure pop in and out alot

AHDVNHAY says: (3:48:10 PM)
lol

Daryl says: (3:48:13 PM)
lol

Daryl says: (3:48:24 PM)
am I making you understand

Daryl says: (3:48:43 PM)
man my grammar

AHDVNHAY says: (3:48:47 PM)
except for the very last bit about the different outcomes

Di has been added to the conversation.

Daryl says: (3:49:19 PM)
each outcome is independent but it is also dependant upon the other

AHDVNHAY says: (3:49:23 PM)
hey Di

Daryl says: (3:49:26 PM)
hi di

Di says: (3:49:33 PM)
sorry, router probs

Di says: (3:49:34 PM)
hi

Daryl says: (3:49:46 PM) did you get that

Di says: (3:49:49 PM)
yup

AHDVNHAY says: (3:50:25 PM)
so, let's see... is this similar to the concept of the consciousness co-creating reality through a series of compromises with external material reality?

Daryl says: (3:51:26 PM)
not really. See the consciousness of man may i say can not live without the external. They are both one and the same

Daryl says: (3:51:52 PM)
How would one know if there is a conscious if there is no body to exert it

Daryl says: (3:52:15 PM)
it becomes wasteless energy

AHDVNHAY says: (3:52:46 PM)
interesting... external tensions alone sustain the psyche

Daryl says: (3:53:03 PM)
internal not external

AHDVNHAY says: (3:53:07 PM)
and by exert...

AHDVNHAY says: (3:53:17 PM)
you mean actively manifest?

Daryl says: (3:53:20 PM)
yes

AHDVNHAY says: (3:53:36 PM)
so, again, we're back to experience as the key to wisdom

Daryl says: (3:53:44 PM)
there you go

Di says: (3:53:45 PM)
i agree there

Daryl says: (3:54:11 PM)
see the chokmah which is the crown is the seat of fidelity one might say the new dawn.

Di says: (3:54:22 PM)
do you believe in spiritual things?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:54:26 PM)
lol

AHDVNHAY says: (3:54:31 PM)
all of this is.

Daryl says: (3:54:33 PM)

to a certain degree

Daryl says: (3:54:59 PM)
spirit can only be a feeling which is again superstition

AHDVNHAY says: (3:55:00 PM)
but the crown is kether, and chokmah is only the wisdom... like the bicameral mind... of the king

Di says: (3:55:21 PM)
what about spiritual through our bodies

AHDVNHAY says: (3:55:47 PM)
our bodies are what feels

Di says: (3:55:47 PM)
how about when we connect

Daryl says: (3:55:53 PM)
the body has no spirit only the spirit that lives in the body

Daryl says: (3:56:07 PM)
the body doesn't feel the mind does

AHDVNHAY says: (3:56:21 PM)
well, then the soul has no God, except God lives IN the soul....?

Daryl says: (3:56:35 PM)
correct

AHDVNHAY says: (3:56:41 PM)
the mind is the feeling in itself

Di says: (3:56:49 PM)
so is it also about a higher level plain, when we connect our bodies, is it our minds that reach out spiritually

Daryl says: (3:56:58 PM)
yes

Daryl says: (3:57:30 PM)
think of a person that is handicap it is the part of his mind that controls his feelings that are cut off

AHDVNHAY says: (3:57:50 PM)
but that doesn't hold unless you believe that the soul is a necessary component of spirituality, as the connection with God, but this would not follow from believing the body is irrelevant beside the importance of the mind

Daryl says: (3:58:33 PM)
the body is only the manifestation of your higher self. The mind can freely travel but your body has restraints

AHDVNHAY says: (3:58:55 PM)
it is not the mind, but the spirit

Daryl says: (3:59:03 PM)
the spirit is the mind

AHDVNHAY says: (3:59:05 PM)
the spirit is the mind of the soul

AHDVNHAY says: (3:59:16 PM)
and the soul is the body of the spirit

Daryl says: (3:59:43 PM)
ok so now you are getting into trinities.

Di says: (3:59:48 PM)
Is there a god, is there a connection when we are entwined together physically as people

Daryl says: (4:00:02 PM)
we come from one cabletow so yes

Daryl says: (4:00:27 PM)
how do you think i can get your bad vibes if I am around you.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:00:31 PM)
metaforms are the geometries that interconnect us, we are random variables

Daryl says: (4:00:42 PM)
but of one string

AHDVNHAY says: (4:00:53 PM)
string...

Daryl says: (4:01:09 PM)
yes we are from one genetic code

AHDVNHAY says: (4:01:14 PM)
perhaps, from the inside, what we see as between, is, from the outside, the same thing throughout

Di says: (4:01:36 PM)
when we reach orgasm, is it purely physical or do our minds reach out somewhere

AHDVNHAY says: (4:01:55 PM)
dreams as metaguidance

Daryl says: (4:02:10 PM)
ok to answer that answer this. What comes first sex or thought of having sex

Di says: (4:02:20 PM)
thought

Daryl says: (4:02:38 PM)
ok so now you know that the mind reaches out when having a orgasm

Di says: (4:02:49 PM)
but where does it go

AHDVNHAY says: (4:03:00 PM)
it follows its dreams

AHDVNHAY says: (4:03:05 PM)
brb

Daryl says: (4:03:19 PM)
it would only as far as the relationship from both partners

Daryl says: (4:03:26 PM)
go as far sorry

Daryl says: (4:03:51 PM)
it it was just somethng to do then it will only go to relief

Di says: (4:04:35 PM)
I often am unsure of where the mind travels after orgasm, but it feels religious or spiritual

Di says: (4:04:59 PM)
and what about chakras

Di says: (4:05:11 PM)
I have ofetn wondered about that too

Daryl says: (4:05:19 PM)
what do you want to know

Daryl says: (4:05:23 PM)
if I can help

Di says: (4:05:50 PM)
how to enhance the chakras of our body

Di says: (4:06:14 PM)
can they really get blocked or lost

Daryl says: (4:06:32 PM)
mediation. I also suggest that you always keep a clean body

Daryl says: (4:06:38 PM)
yes

Di says: (4:06:45 PM)
I bath twice a day

Daryl says: (4:06:53 PM)
this is no joke

Di says: (4:06:55 PM)
its to feel that pureness

Daryl says: (4:07:12 PM)
most people don't understand the meaning of cleanilness

Di says: (4:07:13 PM)
to feel cleansed

Di says: (4:07:27 PM)
brush my teeth 3 times a day

Di says: (4:07:28 PM)
lol

Daryl says: (4:07:48 PM)
also if you are down I suggest that you always and never come into prayer with ill feelings

Di says: (4:08:00 PM)
why is it some days you can be so in tune with body and mind and other days not

Daryl says: (4:08:20 PM)
because we are not perfect

Daryl says: (4:08:41 PM)
remember the mind moves just like the solar system does.

Di says: (4:08:47 PM)
yes

Daryl says: (4:09:00 PM)
each has it's high times and low

Daryl says: (4:09:27 PM)
he left without saying goodbye

Di says: (4:09:41 PM)
well I must go

Di says: (4:09:45 PM)
time for a bath

Daryl says: (4:09:52 PM)
lol

Di says: (4:09:54 PM)
take good care both of you

Daryl says: (4:10:00 PM)
you too

Di says: (4:10:03 PM)
byeeexxxx

Daryl says: (4:10:07 PM)
bye

Di has left the conversation.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:11:21 PM)
hey

AHDVNHAY says: (4:11:26 PM)
she left?

Daryl says: (4:11:42 PM)
yeah

AHDVNHAY says: (4:11:53 PM)
well, what were we on about, LOL?

Daryl says: (4:12:10 PM)
the spirit and man

AHDVNHAY says: (4:12:20 PM)
perhaps something to do with free will and partial determinism

AHDVNHAY says: (4:12:38 PM)
you know a rock has no motive power, but God can lift it, throw it at a tank, LOL

Daryl says: (4:12:43 PM)
let me tell you I really enjoy this I don't get much talk like this around here

AHDVNHAY says: (4:12:55 PM)
yeah, I know

AHDVNHAY says: (4:13:04 PM)
I feel the same

Daryl says: (4:13:25 PM)
I believe that man can solve most of his problems himself. That is why God doesn't interfere

AHDVNHAY says: (4:13:31 PM)
true

AHDVNHAY says: (4:13:37 PM)
we have every opportunity

AHDVNHAY says: (4:13:47 PM)
some choose blindness

Daryl says: (4:13:47 PM)
yes we do.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:13:59 PM)
I was once like that myself

Daryl says: (4:14:06 PM)
Not me I have a huge goal to achieve

Daryl says: (4:14:11 PM)
me too

AHDVNHAY says: (4:14:15 PM)
choosing to avoid all the positive possibilities to prosper

Daryl says: (4:14:35 PM)
that's because most people are scared of change

AHDVNHAY says: (4:14:55 PM)
perhaps, but it is more likely their fear was taught to them by others...

Daryl says: (4:15:03 PM)
of course

AHDVNHAY says: (4:15:07 PM)
so the question is, what change frightened us first?

AHDVNHAY says: (4:15:13 PM)
birth

Daryl says: (4:15:21 PM)
no

Daryl says: (4:15:29 PM)
death

AHDVNHAY says: (4:15:35 PM)
from birth comes the perception to death

AHDVNHAY says: (4:16:22 PM)
of

Daryl says: (4:16:29 PM)
man always wanted to know how to cheat death. I think that was one of our problems in the beginning. That is why God didn't want us to partake of the knowledge of good and evil

Daryl says: (4:16:47 PM)
we would have known how to be immortal

AHDVNHAY says: (4:16:49 PM)
to know evil for the first time

Daryl says: (4:16:58 PM)
it was always there

AHDVNHAY says: (4:17:09 PM)
is to know the difference between it and good

AHDVNHAY says: (4:17:19 PM)
but the mythology says, we discovered this ourselves

Daryl says: (4:17:25 PM)
it is very good to know between good and evil

Daryl says: (4:17:45 PM)
let me ask you this

AHDVNHAY says: (4:17:48 PM)
yes

Daryl says: (4:18:01 PM)
what do you think the purpose of lucifer's creation

AHDVNHAY says: (4:18:19 PM)
interesting...

AHDVNHAY says: (4:18:25 PM)
I think now

AHDVNHAY says: (4:19:05 PM)
that Lucifer (as opposed to Lucifuge Roffacale) is a centripital force below zeir anpin

AHDVNHAY says: (4:19:26 PM)
he would be like a gate keeper at a valve between the four dimensional worlds

AHDVNHAY says: (4:19:47 PM)
centripital above and centrifugal below

Daryl says: (4:19:52 PM)
I believe that his purpose was for us to really know God

AHDVNHAY says: (4:20:04 PM)
to know him is to come to know God

Daryl says: (4:20:13 PM)
thank you

Daryl says: (4:20:26 PM)
so is he really an opposer of God

Daryl says: (4:20:32 PM)
or an aide

AHDVNHAY says: (4:20:50 PM)
again, it comes down to free will and determinism

AHDVNHAY says: (4:21:12 PM)
some people would say that our determinism is equal to God's free will

Daryl says: (4:21:31 PM)
explain

AHDVNHAY says: (4:22:26 PM)
that which is evoked from without or beyond runs opposite that which is invoked or brought out and through us ourselves

Daryl says: (4:23:18 PM)

so you are saying that we can create whatever we want according to the law of God

AHDVNHAY says: (4:23:49 PM)

we have to dissolve the lesser will into the Light of the True Will

Daryl says: (4:24:16 PM)

and what is the true will

AHDVNHAY says: (4:24:40 PM)

that which elevates us from the distractions of the material world

AHDVNHAY says: (4:24:45 PM)

(for me)

Daryl says: (4:24:51 PM)

so mote it be

Daryl says: (4:25:31 PM)

well got to go to a meeting hope to talk again soon

AHDVNHAY says: (4:25:39 PM)

yes, see you soon

Daryl says: (4:25:45 PM)

again I enjoy it all

AHDVNHAY says: (4:25:53 PM)

me too

AHDVNHAY says: (4:25:56 PM)

see you soon

Daryl says: (4:25:59 PM)

ok bye

William S. Burroughs was known, from time to time, to listen to a recording of himself reading made previously while doing a public performance of a reading from one of his books. He was also known to shuffle papers before him, although these papers were also loose leaf, not even stapled together. He also carried a pencil with him to make notes, but he was never known to use it. It is also believed the papers were blank.

Although never discussed publically during Burroughs' own lifetime, the use of the tapes can now be openly admitted. It has come to the light of some researchers that these tape recordings, although none directly available for reference themselves, have recorded static noises in the background behind Burroughs' reading of his publically delivered speeches. Thus, over Burroughs' own voice in the recording low in the mix are the sounds that Burroughs himself was hearing in his own ears while speaking.

The findings of this research reveals that the left ear audio usually dictated immediately prior to Burroughs repeating it word for word along with the performance of the reading Burroughs was doing. In the right ear it seemed to be the same dictation, that is, delivered in the same cadence, only trailing the other by a second or two, lagging behind so as to provide Burroughs a window through which to dictate the text aloud.

The results of these findings of the researchers on Burroughs recorded speeches are divided on the reason for this effect to have occurred. Some believe that it is a combination of a skipping in the translation of the recording from an analog to a digital media and the microphone echo when the recording was originally made. Others believe that there is a much more telling fact about the true nature of these findings in that the voices on the recording other than Burroughs are not his own. The leading voice has neither Burroughs' lilting Southern cadence nor his nasal tone of voice. The lagging voice is usually drowned out by Burroughs dictation over it. It is really irrelevant what either of these two schools believes, either the "technical malfunction" camp nor the "pre-recorded dictation" camp. The fact of the voices themselves is there. Some claim that their absence, and not their presence, is more telling, since they do not hear the fracturing and fragmenting of the left and right voices in every recording.

However, Burroughs himself identifies these voices at great length in his own writings, and many of his readings of these writings themselves have been recorded. It is usually in these recordings that the voice-over voices can be heard. It is quite difficult to find the references Burroughs makes to the voices themselves specifically within the full body contents of his writings however because of his use of the cut-up method. Thus, even if the entire initial recognition by the writer of these voices was a single isolated incident, by collaging his text thereof, he has sprinkled and permeated the remains of this initial experience throughout the full compendium of his corpus. Burroughs himself refers to the left and right voices as "Mr. Bradley" and "Mr. Martin," in one of his most famous collaged pieces "Breakthrough in Grey Rooms."

The apologists for the stereo-dictation effect forward the "fact" that many of the vocal recordings of Burroughs do not seem to possess the strange effect. However ALL the recordings ever made of Burroughs DO have a common buzzing sound in the background. This low-frequency sound is clearly distinct from the audience sounds or the feedback of the microphone, the pops and hisses of the analog recording, as well as the rather obvious hiss or hum of the digital playback device itself. This low frequency buzz, almost a drone, also shows up as a slight visual effect of all video footage of Burroughs as well. In discussing his year at Vienna learning medicine, and his close brush with becoming involved in international espionage through Colonel Bill Donovan (the first chief of the OSS), in the documentary bearing his own name, the buzz that surrounded Burroughs can pronouncedly be heard. Also in one of the audio recordings from the Nova Convention the dual voices can most clearly be heard.

Now, the implications of these voices, if they are not, ultimately, chalked up exclusively to recording irregularities, are vast. The notion that the static patterns, that is, the voices, are unique to Burroughs is only the first step down the road of thought that Burroughs heard these voices himself, which leads ultimately to the notion that Burroughs was merely a conduit for the dictation through the dimensions of our reality of beings from beyond. This notion, that is, the alien or the "extraterrestrial" hypothesis, actually dates back to before the "grey" abduction scenarios of Betty and Barney Hill in the late forties early fifties, to Nikola Tesla in the 1920's, who claimed to have made contact with beings from Venus, and was able to manipulate the stars in the sky by merely pointing at them.

The use of technology to augment the senses is, of course, as old as the Renaissance itself, before even the Enlightenment, although the use of electronic, cybernetic technology to augment the senses has only occurred since the turn of the twentieth century. Therefore, those unexplained mysteries perceived by the senses come into clearer focus through our technology. Some of them are called "natural" while those that have not yet been explained, but those which continue to be observed, nonetheless, through the technologically augmented senses, are simply called "supernatural." That is to say that, they remain mysteries, but are confirmably identifiable as "real" events that have been and are occurring.

The technology, for example, when it is used as a mass-media to augment the ability to communicate new ideas very quickly, then people quickly come to share experiences they have had with the inexplicable phenomenon they observe with their senses. These senses thus change in accordance with the sharing of information through the augmentation of them by technological media.

For example, as the news media becomes more easily accessible to the majority in a society then ideas spread more rapidly among them, that is, their thoughts become attuned at a higher frequency. The gradual changing of the senses over a quickening duration of time by their augmentation by technology, especially electronic technology, results in there becoming more unexplained mysterious phenomenon experienced by the senses, that is, in greater alienation from the concept of "nature" or "naturally occurring events," to the extent of tending towards the "supernatural" as totally replacing the mundane.

When Burroughs describes Au Puq or the Great Golden Contender, he is describing a higher-order form than when he is describing a character like Kym Lee or Dr. Benway, let alone his myriad plethora of simians and centipedes. However, his ability to move in and out of these characteristic type "zones" or "fields" at will in his writing evokes to him a higher authority. He takes on the appearance of a trance-like shaman, or a global guide on the ever-changing "royal road" of earth's orbit.

And this guise is Jim Morrison, the rex dinosaur, king thunder-lizard. And surely this same mere disguise, outlived by the mighty Mugwump Master, that frightened his already budding next incarnation, the miniature rodent of Hunter S. Thompson, was also only one face of his own in the same way that his face was only one face of their own among his previous incarnations, in the case of Burroughs, dating back via existentialism through Jean Paul Sartre to Friedrich Wilhelm Nietzsche. The passage of the Golden Bough from each of these great minds to the next, that is the essence of the perennial tradition itself, is here merely traced along a single evolutionary path among 6 billion humans alive on earth right now.

This cycle of reincarnation of minds among mortal men is always going on. It is like a programme being copied from one machine to another. Eventually the programme learns how to upgrade itself by adapting to the average update of its host machines at their rate of planned obsolescence. Because the programme itself, that is: the spiritual geometric pattern of karma in the electromagnetic aura that moves about freely from one host body to another; because this programme is essentially binary: karmic switches of on or off; then it is said that it is also free to move about in time, that is, for the black and white on/off switches to be reversed from opposite temporal directions. What is on, then in one direction, is off in the opposite direction, and so forth in all living morphogenetic fields that manipulate our molecular DNA. The bacterial, terrestrial, forward-moving species and the viral, extraterrestrial, backward-moving species have formed, by manipulating subtle energy patterns into organic DNA and RNA, all life on earth now as their symbiotic vessels. It is quite clear that all of this was known to each of the people along that specific evolutionary strand, and that, in all probability, they were one and the same aura, incarnating over time.

Willhelm Nietzsche, Jean Paul Sartre, William S. Burroughs, Jim Morrison, Hunter S. Thompson... all of these people share a common thread between them, and that is that they advocated a rebellion BY perception AGAINST existence. This is indicative of their affiliation with the off-world motives of the viral, backwards-moving species.

This viral, backwards moving species is as much on the brink of crossing the "missing link" between the third and second circuit as most of the rest of our own species is of crossing the axon-dendrite gap between the sixth and seventh. As we seek to augment our senses and advance forward, this alien species is simultaneously studying our past, and learning how to process the same thoughts as we have, as they had before us, in simpler and simpler macro-molecular life form vessels. As we teach our brains to think more extraterrestrially, the extraterrestrial species within us is devolving itself backwards in time until it can separate from the terrestrial bacterial lifeforms on this planet and retreat from whence, to us, they came.

William Burroughs describes the alien species at length, outright admitting his actions to be those of merely their puppet. So, too, is it obvious in the writings of Nietzsche and Sartre their suspicions of the motive forces behind the veil of existence-in-itself, as well as in those of Morrison and Thompson the eventual abject horror they experienced at what they found there. Burroughs puts it most succinctly when he describes the very moment of the transition between the human-bacterial and the alien-viral ways of life as being the explosion of the atomic bomb.

This, it might be believed in retrospect, has more to do with the atomic tests in the American desert and the perception of the remnants of the once mighty dinosaur species as having devolved into small desert reptiles than anything much to do with the ape-men's global socio-politics at the time. However, among the mammals there was a great stir at that time towards the proclivity for global war, and this became associated with the so-called "Greatest Generation." What I think is so unique about the "Greatest Generation" is that they were the first, to my knowledge at least, fully intersocially integrated, and mostly interbred, humans and aliens. This is quite clear if one studies even just a few brief examples of the literature from the era, such as Aleister Crowley's "Moon Child" - which influenced Jack Parsons, founder of the JPL, to conceive of the "Aquarian conspiracy," or the "hippy movement," with L. Ron Hubbard, founder of Scientology - or even Nabakov's Lolita.

Before the introduction of the atomic bomb, there was a great sense of rapprochement between different national, even transoceanic, cultures. It was simply a misunderstanding of this energy, in the form of the redistribution of wealth, that led to all the patriotic multinational wars of the twentieth century, but which are all crowned by, as Burroughs himself points out, the atomic bomb.

This event is, for the common people, that is, exoterically, what the Equinox of the Gods ritual is for the initiated. Crowley performed the Equinox of the Gods ritual in two parts in northern Egypt. The atomic bomb was dropped nearly fifty years later. These events were meant to herald something much more than merely the turning of a new decade, or century, or even millennium. These events were taken by the Mayan calendrical clerics and subsequently by Crowley to usher in a completely new aeon, or zodiacal age in the evolution of the mind.

Crowley identified the aeon of the mother, the father, and proclaimed the Equinox of the Gods ritual to be ushering in the era of the "crowned and conquering child" for civilisation. Some of the dinosaurs, who are infinitely more superstitious than the mammals, believe the Equinox of the Gods ceremony was performed an hundred years too soon, but these are in an asymptotic minority besides the masses of those earthlings, almost entirely hybrid species by now, who remain blissfully ignorant of all of this, and perceive these motive forces behind the veil of existence only as vague inexplicable phenomena of the, usually augmented, senses.

Thus, the neo-Sethians, that is, the movement for 21st century apocalypse (as opposed to those who apply pesher to the events of the 20th century fulfilling all the requisite prophecies), are increasing their power at an exponential rate, it would seem from a great distance, however upon closer inspection of their extraterrestrial surroundings they are a sub-microscopic speck of a gravity well  $2/3$  away from the centre of an insignificant spiral galaxy.

The Path of the Black Hand keeps order amongst the cult of sleep, and the neo-sethians are only one consolidated faction within the Order of Death. As the future-dinosaurs evolve backwards through us, we earthlings evolve one at a time over night to awaken from our psychic "sleep" to perceive the international conspiracy of psychics, and eventually to join into the Order of Death, or the proponents of the psychic conspiracy and its shamanic guides.

Usually, the OHO of the Order of Death is someone not particularly well known, such as Meyer Rothschild, or JP Morgan, but controls great landscapes of human chess pieces from off in the distance behind the scenes. However the neo-Sethians have reversed this trend, and begun making both their elected (or appointed in the case of W.) OHO and even the IHO of the entire Order of Death is made publically known nowadays. There is even a popular runner up.

The entire popularisation of the Carbonari's concepts of culture through "mysterious" Rosicrucian novels and sorcery college fairybooks for kids has co-opted from within, and only over the past few years, the dominant preoccupation of the limited attention spans of the disposable income channel-surfing pedo-nympho children that steal the teeny pop culture media simulacrum provided by America for consumption by the west. Now children find themselves preoccupied with oddly humanitarian interests, although no more aware of why than they would be if, as with the Mayan culture, they were driven towards sports. They consider the greater, deeper, and more meaningful mysteries of life, while just beyond the borders of western civilisation a war against terrorism wages, consuming the lives of those along this entirely arbitrary border on both sides.

This has all been accomplished by the neo-Sethians over a relatively short period of time, when one assumes as given that they are a cult within that of Christianity, and not actually part of or the same as an older cult that had created Christianity itself, before Christianity began to mutate into neo-Sethianism.

The earliest neo-Sethians to infiltrate Christianity and begin the second-Coming movement within the Southern Baptists and American Primitivist sects during the 20th century were not even Christian. They worshipped the God Pan, as Burroughs calls him: Pan, God of Panic.

Now, there will be those among us who would argue that neo-Sethianism, that is, the concept of the Second Coming of the Messiah, dates back much further, even within the cult of Christianity. Not only dogmatically back to the Revelation of John of Patmos, but historically to prior second coming sects within the Christian cult, such as Mormonism under Joseph Smith. Although there are also many Christians who would argue that Mormonism is not rightly Christian, and this would be because it preaches that Jesus also appeared to the native Americans, and this misegination between racial Hebrews and those who can only even be accounted for as "Lost Tribes," in order to admit their existence at all, is simply too difficult an equation to be processed by the minds of the average cromagnon Christian. Thus, the "official" sects accepted as part of the Christian cult (ergo Catholics, protestants, anglicans, southern-Baptists, etc.) have not until this present time adopted the position of advocating thoughts about the second coming of Jesus Christ.

So, it should not be a surprise that, immediately prior to this "neo-Sethian" movement within Christianity itself (that is, worshipping the second coming of Jesus), the same "neo-Sethianism" was occurring for the members of a different cult, that of Pan (that is, worshipping of the second coming of Pan), a figure which, by the admission of all those involved in the debate thus far, is typically and rightly associated with the Christian anti-Christ.

Now, because of the difference, mainly in choice of lifestyle, between the "average" Christian and the typical worshipper of Pan, there would have to be a period of some transition between the two, however, because of the similarity of them in many respects (such as having the pre-agreed upon character of the anti-Christ in common), this transition period was able to be shortened. However, what surprised most of those involved, on both sides, was how rapidly the transition was able to be accomplished.

Within a mere century the purely Pantheist neo-Sethian movement has been completely, to the last member, supplanted into the Christian cult. The neo-Sethian movement is, in effect, the symptom of the disease that is Pantheism infiltrating the host body of Christianity. This is simply typical, however, of how the social movements and expressions of mankind age over time, for Christianity had once done the same to Catharist Gnosticism.

Since the Order of Death is a democratic movement, it is capable of mobility between the different areas of awareness accessible within the social mind of man, the self-aware species active upon the surface of our terrestrial brain. This means, simply put, that it is a democracy determined by populism, an example of which is its choice to be represented within the human society of which it is the collective manifestation as acting in accord with an agreed upon set of definitional dimensions equal to those implied by the concept of neo-Sethianism.

Now, the modern OHO, since the Death of William S. Burroughs, has been, more or less entirely, George W. Bush, son of ex-president, former vice-president, and once director of the CIA, George H. W. Bush. The Bush family has sought the nomination of their bloodline for many generations, and the choice of W. for the position of OHO is historically significant as the first time it has fallen simultaneously in the candidate's life to their being in attainment of the position of highest authority in the land, that is, over the greatest number of people. It is unfortunate that W. was not put in a position where he was forced to literally kill his own father, H.W., because, according to their family's (neo-Sethian) beliefs, it is only AFTER the Father Dies that the Son Inherits the Full Power of the Blood. This means that, the previous incarnations of the Bush family remain most manifest in the father, while alive, in this case HW, and the current president, a barely-graduate of Yale and member of the college frat house Skull 'n' Bones, look like a dummy puppet while holding the position of President of the United States of America.

The choice of W, rather than HW, for the position of OHO is no mere matter of convenience. His family bloodline has been neo-Sethian "Christians" (ie. converted Pantheists) since Burroughs, and they are decorated by modern conspiracy theorists to descend from the Piso family of Rome, who, with the Plinies, co-authored the New Testament of the Bible. However, because of the traditions of belief adhered to by the Bush family and its entourage, which is decidedly southern-Baptist, American primitivist Christian in practise for the last 100 years or so, it is the Last in Line who is to be Served First; or rather, whenever there is a question of legitimacy of heirage, the title always goes to the eldest male offspring of the latest generation. This is essentially equivalent to how the passage of the title of "King" is practised in Britain, only with the youngest living generation holding the title here, rather than the eldest.

Therefore, it was W rather than HW who was chosen as the next person to hold the titles of US President and OHO, and the first person in history to hold them simultaneously. In reality, it could have been either W or HW who would have been equally convenient to be chosen in terms of visiting with the IHO, Ariel Sharon, and for all intents and purposes it really is HW calling all the shots behind W anyway, who is only acting as his dictator puppet.

Now, the issue of succession between the OHO's and the IHO's of the Order is an interesting one in this case because the last IHO, Jim Morrison, died before the last OHO, William S. Burroughs. Therefore, there appears, from outside, to be a gap in the records regarding who, if anyone, filled the office between the death of Morrison in 73 and the present IHO, Ariel Sharon. The news that Sharon was, in fact, the IHO was only confirmed by the fact that, shortly after the hypothesis was announced (see previous posts), Ariel Sharon suffered a massive blood hemorrhage of the brain, a stroke, and fell into a coma. It is possible that, following this event, the holder of the crown of IHO was shifted. It remains to be seen to whom.

The two most popular contenders for the position, which is now, almost immediately, considered to be a Peppermoth Affair, or matter of public opinion, are considered to be W and Pope Ratzinger.

The idiot masses are no more amazed at the idiocy of these two potential choices than are the idiotic candidates themselves. In fact, the only sane one out there now, Usama Ben Ladin, is so offended at the sheer and utter idiocy of the preceding forums that he stormed out and ordered an airplane flown into the Bilderbergers' 2001 Meeting at the WTC on Sept 11th.

This action, however, was considered so "gay" by the popular masses that it made it virtually impossible to elect Usama Ben Ladin as IHO then. It was jovially said amongst the halls of order and justice that the only thing that would ever make the planet look "straight" again would be to "crash a space shuttle into the grand canyon." Baudrillard remarked something himself about offset or imbalanced world powers as illusory. Since then the whole entire affair has become the subject of ludacious public mockery, and it is openly accepted that "at one point HW Bush had had an affair with Muhammed Awad, Usama's father, while in the middle east as a spy, and that is how Osama was born," and that Usama himself is actually "only no more than a video image himself, the first actorless-VR construction of an ambassador from a benevolent off-world AI that is trying to warn us about the next coming ice-age."

So, it is difficult, as always, to track the lineage of the IHO, which is, the esoteric head of the Order of Death. The person of the OHO, it should be remembered, is essentially insignificant compared to the wholly over-riding opinion of the IHO. However, when, as may have been the case during Burroughs own later lifetime, the OHO is active instead of or in place of the last active IHO, they become the de facto IHO themselves, with no one else's opinion over-ruling their own.

The position of IHO is, of course, equivalent to captain of the planet, spaceship earth. The position of the OHO then is essentially that of first-officer, acting commander on away-missions, that is, secretary and correspondent in all active public relations, etc. He is the ambassador, the representative, of any and all involved alien agendas as they regard to the solution of any problem between the political factions of us earthlings. These are important positions, of course, but they really play no necessary part in the day-to-day thought patterns of the average terrestrial hominid. It has only been during the last twenty years or so that the positions have been made so public as even Burroughs or Morrison, let alone the current president of the United States and the prime minister of Israel.

The issue of "homeland" and of "security" for that homeland should be fastidiously investigated for their influential interconnectedness with the concept of the "false agenda" expressed by every common street magician in the form of manual misdirection: "follow the birdy;" distracting the public's interests away from what is really going on, the "trick" behind the scenes as it were, which can only mean that the apparent OHO and IHO, eg W and Sharon, might themselves only be splitting the office of OHO, behind which exists a yet more secretive office, an even further elevated office, a "higher up" IHO.

Nonetheless it may be important for us to provide some modicum of exposition on the matter here ourselves no matter how limited it may prove to be. If the OHOs were using misdirection to distract the popular opinion, the so called public eye, away from what the real issue might be, and they were doing so by making the masses convinced that it was an issue of oil supporting government to make war on foreign oil suppliers, then what could the real issue, the one they are attempting to obfuscate by this strategy, be? Some have speculated it is the so-called "constant conflict" paradigm of the PNAC, leading more toward a police-state. Others see it as a "clash of civilisations" between an existing world-police and a rebellion of bedouins, who falsely portray their own conflict as rooted between "opposing" religions' fundamentalism. Ultimately, we may never know the true roots of the so-called "War on Terror" paradigm. Some worry it may already be too late for us to stop the impending doom our own misunderstanding may imply.

A more likely scenario is not a hierarchy based on cooperation, but one based on competition between the different official levels. Therefore, we cannot say with any degree of utter certainty that W and the Pope are actively cooperating as co-OHO's, nor can we say the opposite of this is exclusively true either, and say that they are in a race to control the greatest number of human minds for themselves in order to undermine the authority of the other, or even, ultimately, to forcibly overthrow them. We can only say, beyond any shadow of a doubt, that there is a conspiracy of sorts between W and Ratzinger over the resting corpse of Ariel Sharon.

Ultimately, this does not effect anyone outside the Order, according to their rules and stipulations, however, since the time that the Cult of Sleep was taken under the auspices of the elder Order of Death, which is further back than any records can teach the uninitiated, the Order of Death includes all human and most animal lifeforms on planet earth. Because of this easily forgettable fact, the difference between another neo-Sethian and a paleo-Cathar for IHO ends up becoming a VERY important matter for concern by the public with the possible outcome of a large public effect. That is why W and the Pope are the two main candidates, and also explains why it is necessary for Usama to hide off in the shadows for the time being.

While W bears more resemblance to the last IHO, Sharon, whose light is already fading, Ratzinger seems to bear more resemblance to the next possible IHO, Usama Ben Ladin. It is interesting to study the philosophical movements that move, at all angles, through the Great Halls of the Order over time. For example, Burroughs was the OHO before he converted to neo-Sethianism, while Jim Morrison was a neo-Sethian before becoming the IHO. In a similar manner, Usama was raised Moslem (a very anti-Papal religion, similar in some other respects as well to Gnostic Catharism), and yet would likely succeed from Pope Ratzinger, who, ironically, would actually share Usama's views on the immediately previous two heads of the order, Sharon and W. Ratzinger and Ben Ladin are simply two sides of the same coin. Philosophically they will prove in the coming years to depend on each other as much as, currently, Israeli nationalism depends upon the might of the US military. Ben Ladin and Benedict XVI are the "Righteous Teacher" and the "Wicked Priest" described by the Gnostic Essene scrolls from Qumran on the Dead Sea 2000 years ago. These documents became the basis for the Book of Revelations cited as the original document of Christian neo-Sethianism by that modern sect.

I say all this should be interesting, but isn't, because it is of no immediate importance or even interest to most cromagnon Americans, and let's face it, right now, the US controls by implication alone of the strength of their military the interests of western civilisation, which in turn governs resource allocation for the rest of the planet. So it falls to the "leisure" class to consider such questions as how and why did the Essenes seem to be able to make predictions about our own current political climate some 2000 years earlier in the cycle. In fact, if you think about the detail of the gnostic apocrypha compared to the vague science of the Mayan Tzolkin, it is really much more impressive the magnification through which the Essenes saw 2000 years ahead into our future than it is that the Maya were able to see 3000 years into their own past.

The interesting thing about the coming succession of heads of the Order isn't that it will probably see a massive and violent trend away from neo-conservative, eschatological, neo-Sethian towards the unification of polar opposites in retaliation to the previous heads, although it will, no, the interesting thing about the next five years or so is that so many people will be involved in the massive upheaval to come when the anti-Sethians take hold of the positions now held by the neo-Sethians. This is simply a matter of numbers.

Just as nowadays they say that "for each head of a terrorist leader you cut off, two grow back," soon it will also be said that, "for every cent the neo-Sethians spend today, their successors will have to pay triple." This is simply numbers: if the neo-Sethian fundamentalist extremist reactionaries in the Christian and Muslim realms of the world continue their war, it will create the necessity to continue the war on the same turf as the enemy, since each "terrorist" killed increases the likelihood of more being born into the same situation, and it will tank the world economy since overspending will have to be paid back by the next generation's increased taxes and lack of veteran's aid and other social programmes funding.

The neo-Sethian movement is not long for this world. They have a death wish in the extreme, they wish death upon and to the ends of the earth. And they have instigated a very public war between the previously more subtle struggle to gain control over the minds of all of humanity, but also militantly physically, defiantly caused the whole remainder of humanity to see this struggle appear suddenly and from all sides, such that they knew not where it was coming from, or who to fear, and they turned to the neo-Sethians.

If you think this current minor question of leadership between W and Ratzinger for the office of IHO is in any way rough or intense compared to what is to come you are wrong. Once Usama succeeds Ratzinger, or they share the ticket, which will only be after W is out of the picture altogether (by 2008), then the two fronts that had united against the neo-Sethians will split violently between the Christian Ratzinger and the Moslem Usama. If you think there is competition between current officers for higher position now, wait until this summer, when the rivalry will shift from between W and Ratzinger to between W or Ratzinger and Usama.

As far as W seems to be concerned, this is already the case. Ignoring Ratzinger's legitimate claim as the next IHO, or even only OHO, W has set about waging war against Usama so that he will not be able to succeed W as OHO or as IHO. As last of the neo-Sethian heads of the Order, W has gone mad-hatter insane.

It is likely that W believes, at least since Ariel Sharon's stroke, that he is the acting IHO. This is, for all we outside of this office know, possibly true. It would be a very unfortunate turn of events if this were the case however, since the neo-Sethian agenda which seems, thus far, to have been W's only guiding principle calls for the end of the planet earth, on which all the rest of us happen to be living.

Interestingly enough, as is always the case regarding "good" and "evil," each side sees itself as "good" and the other side as "evil." The neo-Sethian W and Sharon saw Ratzinger and Usama as "evil," while Ratzinger and Usama see W and Sharon as "evil." Of course, neither of these points of view is exactly accurate, and there are actually many overlaps in the beliefs of Usama and Ratzinger and W and Sharon.

It may be a little misleading to call Ratzinger and Usama "anti-Sethians." They are against all of the proposed "end-times" strategies of the neo-Sethians, ergo blowing up earth with thermo-nuclear weapons and transcending off planet in either spaceships or time machines. Usama and Ratzinger DO believe, as the neo-Sethians believe, that this IS in fact the "end times." They also claim to have other, less destructive strategies for prolonging the "end times" before the actual, theoretical, destruction of planet earth.

Of course, the irony of all this is that W and Sharon claim to be conservative when it comes to the "end times" and W claims vehemently that if Usama becomes the OHO or IHO he will most assuredly destroy the entire planet. This is an obvious lie, but Usama would, most assuredly, advocate rollbacks to some of the more militant "defenses" of western civilisation, which W sees as being synonymous with the entire planet.

It could be said the issue boils down to bacterial vs viral lifeforms, moving forward in time from being monkeys (Rh+ bloodtype) and moving backwards in time toward being dinosaurs (Rh- bloodtype). This wouldn't be entirely true, since there are different factions to be considered within each of these groups as well, and ultimately every individual is different, and we can only talk about such matters philosophically, and not as they pertain to physical characteristics such as bloodtype or race.

In reality, the traits and conditions that make one a neo-Sethian or not a neo-Sethian only manifest themselves in one's aura, where the appearance of a reptilian form will manifest itself to those who do not identify themselves with the neo-Sethian agenda.

-ben

Reloaded: blow by blow.

"A strategy is still being formulated." This is, as I believe Colonel West also recognises, the last good line in the film. After that, you have the IMPLICATION of Smith, the whole "he set me free, wawawa!" bullshit. Neo fights agents, all is well. Neo flies, kinda stupid. Then Smith. Two Smiths. Now...

Everyone was surprised by this the first time they saw the movies. And it made people uncomfortable. How were we supposed to feel about this? Two Smiths? Is that okay? It seems kinda corny. All this nervous energy in the theatre, building a tense moment up to... the big release... Link: "He's doin his superman thing." BULLSHIT. AAARRRGGGHHHHHH!!!!11

The first shots of zion are fairly unimpressive. Aliens gunsuits, Metropolis gears. Stupidly fluorescent lighting. Good VR FX. Better than the Matrix code even, but maybe too THX.

Immediately after overly pompous fanfare for a hovercraft landing, which I'm sure is quite stirring and all, we cut into the stupider than shit "intentionally" minimalist, soap-opera dialogue that defines zion. Locke, Morpheus, Niobe. The Kid. Link, Zee, Dozer, Tank. Hamman, even motherfucking Neo and Trinity! It is sooo blah. A space opera without it being in outer space is JUST another soapy cereal.

BLAH BLAH BLAH. Excuse me but I have to skip ahead. See, I have the power to do that now that I own a dvd player. I am "enlightened." I am "bourgoise." LMAO! BULLSHIT.....!

Skipping ahead to the Temple scene. Blah Blah Hamman's words are hollow, no delivery. Compared to Morpheus, which is the whole point. "ZION HEAR ME!" (Vader: "NOOOOO!" LMAO!!!) skipping that gay speech with his shirt off nonsense.

Now, yes, here. the rave scene. I like this, but shit, do you know what I was thinking about the first time I saw it? I was thinking about how much fun it would be to have on while toking a bong. And the second time I watched it I was thinking about how precession could be best explained to someone who still felt deep down the earth was flat. Needless to say this scene bores stoners and scientists alike. NEXT.

Oh and BTW, I think Neo may be gay. Anyone else wonder that at the end of the love scene? Yeah, I know, me too.

the stillness of a seemingly uiversally peaceful night in the future heavens underground shattered by the sound of breaking glass and a thud. Then a sudden glimpse of Smith, like an intercut shot of a big fat cock in a children's movie. And then fifteen motherfucking WASTED minutes listening to Hamman and Neo suck dick back and forth about how there is no point.

I'd have prefered a more straight-forward depiction of the four-elemental watchtowers at the center of the greater spherical ethers rather than the question of "Hulk smash bad machine."

Oh and while I've got twenty minutes while Link licks Zee's nipples, would somebody PLEASE, FINALLY, EXPLAIN TO ME how the whole "drop box" system of passing information through the Matrix works? Why do they have a disk inside the program that handily pops out of the computer and lets them load a location when they broadcast from the ship? WHA? It's called a fucking phonecall! Works for Seraph in Rev.

AHHHH CHRIST! The spoon was long enough, now Hamman and Locke are barebacking each other. Enough, onto the next scene.

oooo pretty. Green. Most auspicious. LMAO! Never thought I'd want to feel happy to see the inside of the supposedly all-evil Matrix again. Well, I guess "real" life is supposed to look sinisterly disappointing in order to underline the "blue pill" and "Cypher" character agendas... which reminds me. Why not use the Blue Pills en masse like they'd used the character of Cypher in M1? Better than a bunch of stupid Smiths. IMO.

awww. Look at the girl fight. Pansies.

OOO!!! OOOHH!1! HAY!1 HAEYEEY!!! Fox, here come's your firewall thing! "Backdoors" Get it? Did he say Tumblers? Well that's not intentionally obfuscating. Ask a simple question, get a bullshit reply. Man Seraph is such a fucking prop. Such a useless tool.

And here's her highness, little miss "I'm too good to live all the way through the filming process for two movies evn though they were shot at the exact fucking same time!" Fuck You, Aunt Jemimah. I doubt you're human too, but wait.. I forgot this movie was bound to comp-geek "tech" talk. Shit, well. One day they won't have to stoop down to the stupid student class and then we can just talk about the metaforms of psychosis as the motive forces while we are merely stationary points of reference they pass through. Fuck man; you guys know Fred Sanford? Look up Red Fox on wikipedia. Funny ass shit. Very existential, very Baudrillard. Not like this. Not like this.

So yes, as I type the conversation goes on. I suppose the philosophers were saying "ooo, it's deeper than you think, oh mighty neo-wannabes," but what the Wbros seem to me to really be saying is "you ass holes like the taste of bullshit?" Evidence: the Oracle feeds it to Neo and calls it candy. Come on, like there's not "programming codes" hidden in her candy. Christ, I can learn more from one hit of "candy" than a whole slew of contrived pseudo-intelligable bullshit about "seeing past choices we don't understand." Someone PLEASE tell me what that means!

Fuck man. Finally.. the potential for coolness implied by the mention of the name "Merovingian," is really epic, IMO. Seek the GRAIL! SEEK THE GRAIL! But then... Smith. The ultra-antithesis of cool. The virtual anti-epic trying to cash in on Hugo's "fame" (read: Nerd-fame) from LOTR. And then Smith just talks. And he says nothing he hasnt ever said before, and he says nothing new other than what the Oracle just said. And it takes fifteen minutes, while he very obviously "creeps up" on Neo.

Oh and BTW, Dora the Explorer called, and she wants her dramatic pause for induced vicarious audience participation back. Fags. And not even the GOOD kind of Fags. Flamers. Not even Flamers. Ninja and business man homos going at it. BURLYMAN STYLE.
GGGGAAAAAAAYYYYYYYY!!!!11!!!!

Then something happens I've never seen before. Even the kung-fu fight starts boring the shit out of me. I find myself fidgetting in my chair and glancing at my watch to see if I can sneak out for a cigarette yet or if I might miss something if it happens to just then get good.

but no, there's no escape. "MORE." That's catchy. Hey, do you want fries with that? MOOORRRREEEE. Yeah,.. uhh... so more fires? Jesus... and there's not even the hint in all this grace and so-called, albeit violent, "beauty," not even the slightest hint of a meaning. Then just to add insult to injury, Smith confirms that fact with his old one-liner. Good old Smith, always rocking in that rocking chair saying "it is inevitable." Just poke him when it's time for supper.

Now not even Neo "knows" anything. Fucking DOLT. m1: "I know Kung Fu." m2: "I don't know what he was doing, but it FELT like DEATH." Right. Blah.

Then this stupid pissing contest between monkey-Locke and the Atlantean council... of... wait... counting the number of members on the council... oh wait, that's right. I remember now. I'm not a super-geek so I don't give a shit. Who among you will run with the hunt?

sorry, but I HAVE to smoke, so I'm pausing this for a minute. I'll brb.

-----

Okay then. Morpheus shakes his head no. And now, someone explain to me how he can see that "every floor is wired with explosives." Why do we not get VFX shots for every time Neo "sees" the code? I could've lived with that shot from the Jap trailer of the green code scrolling up with Neo as he puts his shades on as Smith (ARRGGHH!) walked up in the last scene. But... ah well. Fuckit. In a "perfect" world, right?

Now, on to the Merovingian. Could he be MORE Gay? Please?? Let's REALLY let ourselves go wild here people.

Now, the whole "cause and effect" speech, aside from expressing one of the most fundamentally loathsome traits of human behaviour, that of the "power struggle," goes further in advancing the so-called "supporters" view of how important the different character's points of view are. Hog wash. Leave that to Star Wars. Lucas should have been allowed, utterly undistracted by this green cake tripe, to give us his own explanation of what Kenobi's cryptic "from a certain point of view" comment meant. We don't need these cross-dressing sand-people from Chicago to tell us what GL meant. Stupid Stupid Stupid.

"I must take a piss." Audience laughs. Why? More "nervous" laughter. Now the women: "touch me, and that hand will never touch anything again." "We are still alive," now the blacks laugh. "Follow me," says Persephone. Then the smart-asses laugh. What a collection of purple assed babboons!

"why don't you sample this instead?" Now everybody in a committed relationship laughs and looks nervously at their significant other. Neo and Persephone kiss and I can feel little Mary-Jane Rottencrotch's hand tighten on my thigh. Then I awaken to remember. Nope. Still not queer. Still bored and busy not giving a FUCK what this movie is supposed to be about.

More tough looks on the part of the three main characters as they walk into the "chateau." Stupid clownporn vampire, wannabe Goth bullshit on the screens behind Neo, Persephone's rhetorical ultimatum. More bullshit chuckling. Philosopher's get stiffies for the bookcase doorway. Old hat.

Now the Keymaker. Probably the ONLY character IMO worth a goddamn in the entire sequels, just for coolness factor. Again, though. Compare his elderly zen salesmanship to Merv's blubbery foppish dandy-assed fancy pants schtick. Yeah, again. Overplayed. Make the audience giggle several specific time intervals in a row, then seguey scooter on into a fight scene.

Again, the only IMPORTANT pieces of information ("your predecessors..." for example) is immediately drowned out by an action scene. It doesn't matter, then, if the action scene is good or not (and they ARE), if the whole premise of the action scene is known to be nothing more than a diversion, a distraction, to keep people "guessing," to keep people "on their toes," to keep people "interested" in the premise. A cheap trick that, once exposed, easily reveals the necessity the Brothers felt in having to defend their choices in making the Sequels. As long as we waste time with Neo fighting, we don't get to follow up on Merv's comment. Then he repeats it, after the fight, to taunt Neo, reminding us all we are trapped in an RPG with no dice.

And OH GOODY! Here's the twins. Just Try to TELL me these two are heterosexual. No man, seriously. I can see these guys sucking down a pint of teh monthly vapours and coming up for air. YELCH!

Pointless garage driving fightscene establishes the "rules" for the Twins to "ghost" and use their razor weapon. Etc. Majour boring stuff.

HAHA, Link said "look out behind you." HAHA! Oh, that Link! LMAO. Not.

oooo, the interstate. Suicide??? Now THAT sounds fun. Motherfucking kill these boring ass rodents in their pointless ass little hamster-maze. Black gay flirting temporarily aside.

and Niobe can't just call Morpheus and be all like, "Hey, y'all, whassup, y'all, where the party my dizzzle?" Whatever. Oh and BTW, randy, the WBros seem capable of UNDERSTANDING the rules governing their own fantasy world only about as long or as much as seems necessary for them to DENY this understanding, break the rules, piss on the laws, etc. Even though they made them up. Hulk Smash Bad Machine! Pee Pee = Bad Snake! Naughty! (Fuckers) the free way chase also has some "stirring music," but in about ten years this whole sequence is going to look like the old Ketystone Cops comedy silent films with some George Gershwin music playing behind it. Again, the WBros stretch the limits of the filmic medium, but do nothing so shockingly new in the sequels as was "bullet-time" in M1. Nothing "revolutionary" to see here, please move along.

Ahhh. Here comes the scene why I LOVE the KeyMaker. You get to ride on the ass end of a fast bike with a hot chick in skin-tight spandex. FUCK. YES.

as for Morpheus blowing "up" the twins? Are they, like, dead... I mean, cause they, like, might have already BEEN dead, like, that's why they're ghosts, but, yeah, like... did they die again... because apparently napalm burns ectoplasm.

Oh wait, something's changed. The KeyMaker's getting a stiffy. I can FEEL it..... (Cryptic huh?)

alright alright alright alright christ. enough.

here comes Morpheus, hey AUDIENCE? It's been ten seconds, do you remember Morpheus?

Oh and BTW... the swords people. Bad continuity on the height from the roof of the truck of the sword. Obvious though.

1 Adam 12. Only good line so far.

So, yes, Morpheus looks upgraded too. Buffer, or, how do you say, portlier? No, more obese? More fat? I mean, oh nevermind. OOO monkey do handstands. This fight gets more and more frustratingly pedestrian every fucking time I watch this movie. It's like I'm watching a ballet. You know exactly what I mean.

Combined momentum and inertia.

Enter Niobe.

"You are no longer necessary...."

"I have a stiffy."

"You were meant for deletion."

"stick your dick in his ass."

and, I'm sorry, but as good as this whole bullshit yin-yang semitruck collision with a simultaneous entirely digital snapzoom forwards and truck backwards psycho shot ending with neo spiralling up with Morpheus and Keys IS.... I would rather have another smoke. So, while the "machines bore toward zion" (OOPS, Forgot that was supposed to be the plot) and neo has exploding building flash-forwards starting an unusual montage for the series, the whole "three ships=providence" bullshit, I'm heading outside for another quick smoke. Pause at 314 seconds.

Alien romance. Completely off the level of what we are accustomed to identify with. Traditional princess-bride true love is preferable to me on all levels. "Gat paid.. yadda yadda" stupid doughnut dunking cop fucks.

Morpheus' speech about there being no accidents would have played better if more of it had been released on the Animatrix soundtrack that summer, and if it hadn't been so juxtaposed and disproven by reality in the film. Irony is a bitch, yes. Make "Irony" a character, like Cypher, then. Don't treat Irony as a universal law outside of the Matrix, amorphous like time itself. That is simply a cop out, a short cut to providing a "poetic" answer instead of a plausible one. The screw breaks in reality because "there ARE accidents." OKAY! We Get It! No need to make it a major pivot point for the plot or anything. Just fucking mention it is all. Like the déjà vu in M1.

(NUKE ALL POWER PLANTS! YEAH! DUHHH! DROOL CROMAGNONS!)

Yes, Trinity. Grow wings. Let your butt cheeks unfold and flocks of angels sigh you gently to your perfect swan lake landing. Priss. "Still using all the muscles except the one that really matters." Meaningless line because it was never explained. As usual, followed up with "There's so many me" (boring conversation anyway...), and then cue violins it's action sequence time.

OOO. Suspensful beeps and time dilation don't explain why all this time that Trin is in, while Neo is with the Architect (presumably, even, let's pretend OUTSIDE of all time altogether), where the FUCK is Morpheus? Is he off jacking off in the bedroom while all the rest of his friends play poker? ("Man, he's on the down-low. This ain't no poker game." - Ice Tea from Law 'n' Order by Dick Wolf) okay so, my take on the architect's room is that Neo is the singularity at the center of a galaxy. This galaxy is the room. It is surrounded by other such singularities, within other such galaxies, depicted on the tv screens. The imbalanced equation ought to be painfully obvious. Instead Neo gets smart and, instead of letting the Architect talk (for the first time he has all the time in the world as far as he knows), Neo acts like he wants to kick his ass. What a dupe. What a rube. The "problem" is choice. DING.

Anyone think this will play as campy as the old sixties Batman tv show in about another five years or less? I do.

Anyway, back to colonel Sanders. Nice pictures. I guess the screens in this room, the kibuki window shadow fight in Rev, and all the green-code VFX shots are supposed to all tie together in some way, but honestly? I don't care.

So yeah, back to Trin. OOPS. Sorry. Not quite yet. The Colonel is still blathering on about chromosome numbers or some plot forwarding information that he, apparently, as God, feels it necessary to confess to Neo, as a fucking mosquito, in the same vein as Dr. No conveniently "spilling the beans" to double oh seven. But I guess the world hasn't had enough of silly love songs.

Ok, just a quicky: Love=insanity; love=beginning and end, therefore, insanity = beginning and end. This bit of "logical" mathematical equations brought to you by the Matrix movies, supposedly about VR and AI, but really just a soap opera about different points of view.

Oh and BTW, it's been ten seconds, where's Morpheus?

No, seriously. I'm glad to know that Neo's premonition about the building Merv's restaurant was in being completely wired with explosives turns out to be the same building the floor with no stairs and the door made of light are in. Betcha didn't notice that the first time! Oh no, wait. It's impossible to miss. It's just Not EXPLAINED. That's it. Whatever.

Oh and btw I just talked through the Trinity pseudo-death scene. Green code VFX shot is expected to explain in and of itself how Neo can permeate Trin's "solid" RSI inside the Matrix.
BULLLLLLLLL SHHHHHHHHHHHITTTT.

"It doesn't matter who. I believed him." Right, because Neo is led around blindly by belief. Like the fool of the tarot pack. Morpheus is the magician and Trinity is the Papis or Pope Joan card. Osiris, Thoth and Isis. Duh... Oh wait, I'm sorry. None of that counts for shit either, because the stupid audience is too dumb to understand those implied dual roles of the characters as archetypes. So instead, we get the death of the Neb and Morpheus oblique references to Jacob in the bible.

BTW, is it just me, or does everyone find these stupid "real world" excursions at the end of M1 and now also M2, like the pre-titles opening to a Bond movie, to be stupid? I mean really... If you're gonna make a fucking sequel, then just tack "to be concluded" right after the green code VFX shot of Neo saving Trin. Everything else from that, christ toss it into a cartoon like with Flight of the Osiris. The crew members of the Hammer look like fucking cartoons anyway. Buncha buff salad tossers.

and then the dramatic ass music to accentuate the split-second, upside down reiteration of a fucking bit-character who we are supposed to be all like "oh, now I gotta watch the whole movie over again to figure out who that was and give the Wachowski's all my money!" Then immediately, again with no explanation, minimal implied meaning even, and for no good reason, we drop into Rage Against the Machine.

At this point, when I saw this movie 12AM midnight opening, I skulked out of the theatre. What a terrible travesty! I felt like I just found out my dad was cheating on my mom with my daughter or some such shit. Very upset.

Some would say this was foolish. So when I went back for the closing show on opening day, I stayed. And saw. The Preview.... And..... Was..... Still.... Disappointed. Yes. Still disappointed and bored. Very boring. Yes.

I'll go on and do Revs as well, but gimme a couple more hours, m'kay?

-ben

Back to this bullshit. Exploding big bang of gold code, swirls out into fractal fibonnaci spirals, then zooms back into a a single green code letter, then dipping down the same building Trin fell out of, and the same corner where Neo calls from at the end of M1, and of the soon to be (in)famous crater scene at the end of Revs. Pan back to the scrolling raining sea of green. If you look closely, in the opening shot of M1, you can see the green code scrolling down BEHIND the black background, even of the trace program. It's interesting to think of all that as having been inspired by some doofus staring at their MS DOS screen waaayyyy back in the butt fucking eighties.

Oh wait, suddenly action. No one noticed that incoming call except Link. StOOOpid. Sati is the ped sex goddess, yes? Giving her a halo of innocence doesn't make her natural inquisitiveness and seemingly already elderly and wizened soul peeking through around the corners of her smiling eyes any less perverse, in its own way. The twisting of the practicality of the Oriental, even the most Westernised sub-continent and islands of the Orient, being wrapped up with the feminisation of the lands to be conquered.

Of course, there was discussion at the time about electron orbital shell levels and the Oracle, but to my knowledge this discussion never panned out. Tin dialogue to my ears, though, personally.

Ahhh, back to Sati. You KNOW Neo's got a sick old Westerner hard-on to tap that underaged Hindoo jailbait. The powerplant systems manager for recycling software programmes? I never quite catch that. Basically Rama Khandra himself is the ass-valve of the turd-factory. You could say he puts a kind face on the design and development of the programmes within the Matrix to juxtapose the stiff-necked evil southern gentleman of the Arch, father of the Matrix, even more beneficent than the Oracle, bitch-mother of the Smith-bastard, IMO.

Anyway, here's the trainman. Most retarded, comic-book-like character in the whole trilogy. Worst. Character. Ever. (except Towely) so anyway, it turns out back in soap-opera baliwood, Rhama Khandra continues giving me flashbacks to either Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom and Ghandi in alternating order. Then the trainman shows up and, apparently, has what the Japanese media would describe as a "most auspicious virility" or, as would translate from that back into English, "big penis" syndrome. He punches Neo hard for no real reason, just apparently to demonstrate to the audience (who knows, they may not know this from M1 or Rels) that in the Matrix-world the concept of "strength" is relative.

Neo runs around a while stupidly while the techno-n00bs get wet thinking of old videogames. Then there is a pointless fightscene where the rule of taking turns is firmly established. Then there is a much MORE pointless gunfight in which the rule of taking turns results in the camera actually staying on each character for a dilated period of time. Not bad choreography, and not bad cinematography. But these themselves do not herein combine to make the scene "not bad" enough to forget how stupidly pointless it was, and, to remember even, how stupidly pointless the whole Matrix trilogy has become.

The gun octopus scene is cute the first hundred times you see it, until that nob-gobbler Merv starts skwawking. Merv sucks that olive like Merv Griffin sucked a nut. And then Merv establishes the whole "eyes of the oracle" motif to play out later with Smith, "only taken, never given." then the Oracle programme rewrites something over when she copies onto Smith, which is the whole stupid "everything that has a beginning has an end, neo" crater scene where Smith and Neo butt-hump and make up.

"I don't have time for this shit" sums up my whole opinion of the sequels.

mexican standoff times ten. Tense violin sustained vibrato. Then Perspophone, a character so unnecessary she has the same number of lines in both sequels as the Twins, re-establishes the purpose of or meaning for the entire "kiss me, Neo, pinch my titty" scene in Rel. Then Neo and Trin kiss to a crescendo of strings which, I have to admit, had no emotional effect on me at all.

OOOO! Make those fuckin cookies Sati! Knead that dough, really dig into it. Pretend you're making sandals for your deaf and dumb little thalidomide sister, and medicine for your napalm and agent orange gassed father with one foot only who wades through the person-sized sewer pipes in the lowest caste. Yeah.

Neo and Oracle, in the LAST (even according to Neo himself) chance for the philosophy aspect of the movie, the "talky" parts, to redeem itself to the expectations of the audience. The Oracle explains the Architect again as "not seeing past choices he can't understand." Still no explanation of what this combination of words is supposed to fucking convey in terms of meaning. BTW, a shot of those power cables intercut after Oracle says "You know where," right before she says, "I see the darkness" would have been a tad helpful. But instead they chose to have Neo see that in MOBIL Ave. I don't know why... maybe to fill dead time... but then... why make the movies at all then? LOL!

Neo needs time and Roland wants answers. Bane's insane game outwits the dim-dumb Captain easily ... OH! I've gotten ahead of myself. We're back to the sappy penut-butter and honey music of Sati and Oracle, bitches in the kitchen! Hail to the Chef! Etc. Then Sati "sees through the wall" and we watch, from her POV (of course!) Smith walking up towards the door of the room they hide in. "He's following us." (I see dead people.) No seriously, isn't she too young to have a uni-brow? I bet she has butt hair too. Smith knows. He can smell that spicy poontang. He's all like, "I'm not so bad, once you get to know me." LMAO! Fuck am I perverted.

Smith talking to Oracle, "why, why, why" just asking the question the audience is asking: "why did I shell out eight bucks for this shit? I just wanted a pre-agreed upon language with which to relate to my sixteen year old gay stepson who is in the trench coat mafia and "loved" M1. But whatever.

Now here is Bane's "insane" act. He's Smith. People. I want to scream at the screen. But then I retract and realise, the Wachowskis are telling this film to me. I have no part in it. I, the fan, represent nothing more to them than the passive consumer represents to the megalomaniac conglomerate multinational corporation. The Wachowskis want to tell their story using simple minded idiots representing the "FREE MINDS" and the denizens of "the LAST FREE CITY," then fine. It's on MY fucking DIME, but fine. Waste my fucking time.

Oh what? Wait, what? Oh, I'm sorry, you already are. "Put that shit away boys all she needs is a jump." "Niobe," "Morpheus." "You wanna fuck?" "Hellllzzzz Yeeeeaaaahhhhh."

Back to Locke and the machines are STILL nowhere NEAR breaching Zion. I feel like the entire amount of time in between watching Final Flight of the Osiris and this scene has all been a total waste of time. Again people telling Locke "it's best not left up to you," infantilising him and feeding his need for a more aggressive ego, a more assertive policy. Viscious cycle anyway.

Zee makes shells in a truly heart-warming Hallmark, International Taster's Choice Coffee moment. And then the Kid spills a lot of bombs. Instead of reaming him out Mephone lets the Kid browbeat him, then gets all cozy with him and pats him on the ass with a sentinel tendril vibrator. Gay.

"Clean the windshield" was bad even to the audience I first saw this movie with. More low-tones, slow moments. These are "important" for some reason. Perhaps I just don't "GET" the whole pacing of this movie, the choice to start in the Real World instead of in the Matrix, and to have that shitty soap-opera bullshit world take up so much time right at the crucial beginning part, that usually features Trinity... just shit. Then more homoerotic speeches by Roland and a very pro-feminist retort by the empowered black woman. Whatever. Too obvious for me, may as well just throw scalding hot coffee in my face.

Bane kills whatshername here, which I think I may have fallen asleep during in the theatre. I'd stayed up for twenty four hours listening to the soundtrack between the time it was released the day before the movie and the midnight showing the following night, the premiere of Revs in town. I could only barely wake up when Trin said "Everything for you..." a little louder right before the gag line "you know what's changed in the last 24 hours? Nothing."

Anyway, brb, smoke.

--

Yes, okay, where were we? Oh yes, Morpheus and Neo have the "honour" homo-hug, and then the nifty "flashback" quote about already being late.

Then He sends his bitch, and it's all down hill from there. Bane, interestingly enough, didn't simply get the electro-zappa shotgun-with-a-window-screen from the wall instead of holing himself up like a viper with the fuses in the lower hull. No, he hid, and then Neo "brought" him the gun.

Now look, I'm not even gonna start with this scene. Bane's "mr. Anderson" schtick is almost as drippy with burly man-cooze as Merv's speech about causality in Rel. It's ridiculous. Everyone knows this. This is one of the primary scenes I think the Wachowskis owe ME an apology for, for once. Oh and BTW, Neo JUST said, "it's impossible." He fucking JUST got the whole Bane-Smith thing. Now we know why they cast Keanu. BLECH anyway.

fisticuffs in the real ain't like fightin Tae Kwon Fu in the Matrix is it Samael?

And where is Trinity this time? She can't pop back up just to say hey!? Oh, wait, I guess it's not her "turn." Oh I see. Bullshit. Flaming Smith. Another in-joke perhaps? In any event why didn't the Oracle, who by this point HAS been absorbed into the Smith collective, simply broadcast her RSI from the Source into Bane's body? Why doesn't the movie just end there? But no... we have to see where this Karma QBLH's out to.

Just like Neo has to hang off the ledge of a downtown building in the Matrix to be prepared enough karmically to see the towers of the human-power plant in the real world, so too here does he have to fight Bane (and essentially lose) in the real world in order to have the right or enough karma to confront Smith in the Matrix (and essentially lose).

Oh wait, I'm sorry, I can't hear myself THINK over Mephone's bullshit speech. This whole movie is just a series of monologues. Even when there's two people involved, the back-and-forth is only what is necessary information for the two Matrix Warriors to share. Its like being of one mind, and thus essentially monologues and then...

"Jigs up, here they come..." (flashback to "here... they... come" at the end of M1) cue the stirring violins, and buckle your cockbelts, it's time for, that's right, you guessed it, ANOTHER action sequence. Roland's continual hyper-masculine shit-eating at the hands of the better at one-ups-MANship of Niobe just makes for instant comedy, fun for the whole family.

OOO! Breach, the dock is breached! Buckle Up. Present. Sorry, but at this point I'll exercise my option as a bourgoise home-theatre owner and turn the fucker DOWN. You gotta love it loud, right? RIGHT? No, I mean... LOL... can you repeat your answer because I couldn't hear you. Hey, and as uber-contrasty between the lesser, but brighter lights and the greater, darker shadows is, ROTS is better.

ARGH. RELOAD. I'm Milli Vanilli. I need more ammo! Yeah, Kid, trust me, It Does Get Worse. There's still that annoying big blue bug zapper at the tip of the tower. OOO, look at that swarm! Left, then right, then sweeping around and over the tower, but still that obnoxious buglight. Well, anyway, as long as we're wasting time, we may as well check out Zee and her hot lesbian friend in the infantry continually fuck up their attempts to stop the enormous butt-plug drilldo in ways that can only be considered comical if one considers disappointment to be funny. Which I do.

"Shit she's got a fat ass" can also be taken as commentary on the difference between Sporty Niobe type Afro-American women and the "junk in the trunk" type of Afro-American women. Again, I like to take the road less traveled, and so I likes me some junk in the trunk. Eh?

Christ, here we go again. Load those turds into the ass-lighter bazooka, Zee. Hold my belt, Zee. Coddle me while I lag behind and then get killed by the sentinels, Zee. Christ, the plantation mentality never ends!

...Not even worth it...

full power... 90°... that's a sharp turn.

I wonder what Ken Wilbur has to say about "gold" colour of the flames consuming zion. Or what that son of a bitch has to say about the choice of the word "zion" for the name of "the last free city." But apparently it's I who digress.

Mephone going apeshit. The Kid comes to reload. I guess this whole thing is a pun on the name of the second movie, or something, I dunno. All this brightly lit, sharply contrasted, darkly overshadowed gratuitous violence just makes me want to eat fried chicken and collect unemployment. If only they would make a video game of THIS! ten zillion "the Kid's" exclaim, aspiring to be Neo and one with the Matrix (I believe... ) but alas the graphix skins are still not capable of being detailed enough to accurately depict even only this small amount of lighting on such various and different complex surfaces. What a sell out piece of shit excuse for an Apocalypse.

Mephone you seem to have a skin flap hanging off your face, here... lemme just pull on that and see if I can't just peel that right off for ya.

Blah Blah Blah...

Mephone... I know you can't hear me because you are dead, but... this is Locke. I missed my period this month and... long story short... we're having twins.

Zee rescues the Kid from shit he got his own self into, and then, cue the stirring plantation music as the Architect jizzes up the Oracle's ass somewhere in the back of Smith's all-powerful-by-now mind, as the kid finally jets his first jizz, officially bar-mitzvahing himself, with the phrase, "Neo... Mazeltov," or some such SHIT. The the big crash, a series of cute moments between Morpheus and Niobe, and then between Zee and Link, and then a stiff-assed moment between Niobe, Morpheus and Locke.

I think the concept "conflict forwards the plot," should NOT be taught at the basic college level for writing composition. The reasons for this should be obvious why by now.

Then, in an absolutely brilliant tactical move on the part of the humans, they blow up the elevators between the docking platform and the lower living levels, because hey... they're sentinels. They ain't walkin down no damn stairs!

Then Morpheus and the "It Takes A Village" People whihc is, unfortunately, so quiet after all the noise pollution of the last scene that I can't make out a fucking word. I'm sure it's not important anyway. Hey, Trin? You like driving? Hey Neo? That puss coming out of your eye sockets working out for you there, buddy? I bet you never saw THIS coming did ya? And while I think about it, wasn't it really Cypher who introduced the whole multiple-points of view aspect of the storyline in the Matrix trilogy in the first place? Anyway...

Doesn't that one zion defense ops tech look alot like Hugo, btw? More quiet dialogue between Locke, Morpheus and the Council. Couldn't they have just done all these short council meetings in one scene? It's really pointless to draw this all out anyway... but .... well.... whatever.

Neo and Trinity near machine city. Some enourmous ugly beetle looking bugs start barebacking each other until they shoot missles and bombs at the dark-side anti-hero couple, until they suddenly, and for all intents and purposes within the context of the plotline, arbitrarily and randomly happen to transcend and perceive nirvana.

OOPS! you're dead. "Slower..." I can just imagine without looking over at the tv CAM giving Keanu a handjob wearing those latex gloves, while Keanu, wearing only superman underoos, explores his manhood. But oops! I'm supposed to be paying attention to this rivetting death scene! Only guess fucking what? Here's a pop quiz: I don't care about characters in the Matrix sequels. I watch Reloaded. Two hours. I watch Rev. 1:45 so far or thereabouts. You know what's changed in the last three and three quarters hours? Fuck.. I've forgotten what my catchy punchline was supposed to be. Fuck. LINE!

Oops. Trin is dead. Long live the Trin. OOOH! NO! Snap! The bitch yet lives! Sorry, I can't hear a word they're saying and I only look over once in a while. Now they're kissing. You know, speaking of Tarot, the lightning struck tower... Oh wait, I'm sorry, time is against us so we have to cut back to zion for what I'm sure is going to be yet another VERY exciting action scene. But no, just Morpheus at prayer to his man-God. Bah.

Neo crawls "perinatally" (to borrow a term from Grof, whom I've actually studied under personally, thank you) up the butt tunnel and then down between the golden thighs of ... what I can only ASSUME to be... the radio broadcasting tower for WKRP in Machine City.

Lotsa bug like machines. Cause who knows, right? Heh Heh Heh.... <.<.... >.>....

oops, time for Deux to pop up. Coolest lines in the movie here between Neo and Deux. Tough talk. Say it short, say it simple. Deux is the baddest ass baby face since that OG "Baby Face" Nelson. OOO, here it comes, THE Line!

"PEACE."

"what are they doing, what are YOU doing?" More black on black humour.

BTW, Morpheus, what does Neo do? Does Neo... fight for us? Does he fight for us, Morpheus?

Ahhh yes. You think that's freedom that you're breathing, you Messiah building Frankensteinian accomplace, Igor muthafucka. Thoth, my ass.

"Mr. Anderson... welcome back. we missed you."

(time for a smoke, brb)

---

and now time for an uber burly brawl. It's street fighting style since Neo fought Bane in the real, and the mind has made it real to him, but he AND Smith quickly regain their full capacity (though utterly lacking wit) to use their super secret special ubermensch powers, so they both go medium-sayin and start flyin around, kicking each other through brick walls and into a dojo that appears, although out of place, to be the same room in which Merv's restaurant was. It seems to have a similar interior layout to me, but then, I do not care, because I am not a big nerd.

Heres the kibuke theatre scene that I'm convinced MUST have SOMETHING to do with those tv screens in the Architect's office and all those MYSTERIOUS green code VFX shots. HMMM.

Anyway, here's some glass in your eye. now they "spiral" upwards. Lightning, more street fisticuffs, just up above the city in the air, a really obviously CGI Smith straightens his coat. Here's the "universe bubble" bit. I like that bit, but then, I'm a bit of a psychic showoff myself. I would have made a whole movie just based on exploring the similar physics of our universe, using a model essentially identical to the one presented here as dramatic fiction. BAH.

Crater scene.

"Why, Mr. Anderson...?" Again, the audience is given voice. Smith as Chorus. We're all so bored and pissed off and wanting our money back for the movie, when Smith starts browbeating the worthless wasted wanked out Neo, we all get that cathartic head rush. It's kosher, because everyone else is doing it too. "I choose to." Dumbest line in fucking cinema history...!

No,, wait, I'm sorry.... It's Smith rising up out of the dirt going "this is MY world, MY WORLD!" right where in M1 Trin says "don't go down that road, girlfriend," to Neo. LMFAO! He looks like Al Jolson. See neither of them can beat the other, and we all know this already, but the characters... CHRIST!... the characters are sooooo fucking STUPID, so Fucking DUMB! They take good ideas, and make them into stupid realities. That's life.

I would have portrayed civilisation personified not as Smith, but as Chthulu, the chthonic God of Sumer. Basically all the same, just the city streets would have turned into mirrors, instead of the individuals possessed by the Smith computer virus, it would have been tentacles, and instead of fighting the one Oracle-Smith clone, Neo could have fought an enormous eye on a pyramid at the center. But NNOOOOO.....!

So yeah, Neodammerung now, the all-important colour-coded "explosion" of Smiths, or as I like to call it, the "Smithplosion," has already happened, as Thom Yorke from Radiohead sings, "the moments already gone." By now the kid is running through the caves explaining to Hamman, presumably an homage to blind Homer's guide leading him up from the Cave of Plato's character Socrates. But I could be wrong.

Niobe cries on Morpheus chest. You know what that means, Jason. That's right, brotha. You be fappin alone tonight! We just made history! And Ne's carted off in what I can only guess is a sewer barge. Sati awakens to cyber-kitty and the Architect, all Lucifer-like, strolls across the park in the glowing light of "false" dawn. Again, the Oracle has to haggle with Colonel Sanders just like Seraph with Merv, because, the moral is that all men are penises.

Ahh and here comes Sati. You made a sunrise out of cookie dough, didn't you? And look, there's a teletubby's face in it. For Neo? Well, shit, then, keep that up and I guarantee you, if I was Neo, you'd never see my fucking face again. Oh and by the way... Is it just me or is the Oracle's line about "belief" being exploited here for the purpose of tormenting us with further pointlessly vague sequels. Oh no wait, whew. I'm not just now watching this movie for the first time. Whew.

Okay, it's 2006, pull it together man. The year is 20006 and MXO has already killed off Morpheus, while PON, supposed to continue on from the end of Revs (where it OUGHT to wrap back around to the end of M1, but frustratingly thus far has been refused to be allowed to do so!!! 1!), was also a great big let down.

Oh, cue Navras BTW.

-ben

I see alot of non-members offering advice on enlightenment.

I see some members talking about the difference between "us" (the enlightened) and "them" (the unenlightened).

I see this all as arising from a division within one's own self-concept.

There is one reality. It pre-existed our present perspective, but our perspective influences change within this reality. For some, the changes we choose to make are small scale changes, and effect only our own immediate reality. Others are able to make larger changes, which ultimately effect many people and/or for many generations. No matter what apparent changes we make to reality, all of them, the greatest to the smallest, are limited by the fact that reality pre-existed their present perspectives. This implies that reality, as a whole, will continue to exist long after no matter what apparent changes to it can be made by any individual or group.

Therefore, IMO, it is not only futile to attempt to make permanent changes to reality, it is antithetical to doing so to admire those who appear to do so more than us, and pity those who appear to do so less than us.

The only real change that can be made to the permanence of reality comes from recognition and acceptance of the irrelevance and transitory nature of all change. Unless with recognition and acceptance of the permanence of reality, those who attempt to make changes to it are all equally worthless.

Now, IMO, this all derives from the dichotomy between the "interiorising" and the "exteriorising" of the Self and Otherness. Tradition is quite clear that the "transcendence" of this dichotomy is necessary for one to recognise and accept the permanence of reality. So, as long as there exists the dichotomy within any individual between Self and Otherness, there will remain the apparent difference between "us" and those above and below us according to our own paths. Likewise, as long as there is the "inside/outside" of the Self/Otherness dichotomy, then changes will continue to be made to reality.

I believe what is necessary for the dissolution of the dichotomous self-concept is the recognition that the dichotomy comprises the one reality, and the acceptance of this reality as more permanent than the dichotomy.

When I say, "the danger is within," I mean nothing but the desire to make changes.

-ben

It seems to me that if the sequels did anything, it was, as max points out, but what I would call unnecessarily, to elaborate on the implied themes of M1. Now, the Wachowskis chose certain implied themes to follow at the expense of others. Although most of what interested me most about M1 was the ancient origins of certain themes, the Wachowskis chose to follow the philosophical themes chronologically in the sequels, and thus that is all we can really talk about, no matter how limiting this context. By way of example, if I were to talk about Egyptian mythology in M1, then in Second Renaissance, basically an allegory on Atlantis or Eden (themselves only necessary allusions), we would expect to see some seeds from which later direct references to Egyptian mythology, such as the Final Flight of the Osiris, would germinate. Instead, like with the more "official" versions of human history taught in schools, there are necessary gaps or "breaks" in the records.

The Wachowskis chose the "one-way" chronological approach to the presentation of not only the philosophical themes but also, again as Max has pointed out, how these themes are "fleshed out" through the actions of the characters. Therefore, we see all the characters lack the omniscience if they were able to view the themes represented by the actions as not just cyclical, that is recognisably repetitive, but as actually themselves transcendent of the repetitive temporal cycle.

Of course, this is obviously not because the Wachowskis lack understanding of these simple facts. Even the most "primitive" bacteria is capable of experiential awareness of the full temporal implications of thematic or repetitive actions. It is my personal belief the Wachowskis simply chose not to allow any of their characters full omniscience because they believe something that I do not: that only by the various-points-of-view method, the so-called Kuleshov Effect used so poignantly in the editing of Citizen Kane, can a reasonable replica, a simulacra, of the "human condition" be achieved... at least through an artistic medium.

Of course, one is immediately reminded of something Socrates, himself a fictional character, once remarked about art as being something like "thrice removed from the kingdom," by which I think he must have meant something about the symbolic representationalism, the inescapable expressionistic connotations, of the Athenian statuary of the so-called "Golden Age." I think Baudrillard shares this disdain for the "third-party" mediation of reality, and refuses, even moreso, to apologise for it than had Hegel.

Eventually mediated formats of symbolic communication will have to break down altogether. There is simply more information, and less time, than can sustain tensile pressure on either side of this cut-off valve we quaintly consider "art." However, for now, we can see the choice the Wachowskis made to express their philosophical themes through the actions of their characters as a necessary, and ALLAH BE PRAISED! temporary, evil.

As the Wachowskis characters each say separately, in so many different words, "this world is a chrysalis." In order to depict change, that is, within the Manichean dichotomy of as above, so below, as being preferable for the perpetuation of survival, the Wachowskis chose to limit their characters understanding, and then to show how it changed over time. For example, Neo's quest for enlightenment, Morpheus' betrayed dogmatism, etc.

As always on the Hero's Quest, the antagonists opposite the protagonists are depicted in estranged and alienated forms, which gradually give way to more beautifully mutated explanations for the same initial themes. For example, Merv's fixation on "cause and effect" is the western parallel to the eastern Rhama Khandra saying "karma is word." We are then expected to see the changes to the antagonists along the way as beneficially influencing the Hero's Quest to change and thus survive.

Usually, the antagonists are depicted as travelling temporally opposite the protagonist. They are merely retrogressive along the same cycle of events progressed upon by the Hero. "To put it country simple," as Burroughs might say, they are travelling in opposite directions along the same road.

However what this means in narrative dialogue is that the antagonist usually knows more about where the Hero is going than the Hero knows about where the antagonist is coming from. Any reversal of this implies omniscience on the part of the Hero, and tends itself toward the Messiah myth. By giving Neo limited foresight, and by repeatedly presenting the flaws of one antagonist being pointed out to the Hero by other antagonists, the Wachowskis build up their Hero character along his quest. As each opposite villain is met and bested, the power of the Hero grows, this is standard operating procedure. However, when the villains pretend superhumanity and yet are dispatched all too easily, this process inflates exponentially into the Messiah myth.

The alternative to the "forward" moving Hero arbitrarily negating all the misunderstood, "evil" retrogressive antagonists would have approached the same (cyclical) philosophical themes as resulting from chronologically opposed frictions alone. Now, had the Wachowskis chosen to give the audience the benefit of the doubt of omniscience, they could have chosen to portray the sequels quite differently. However, instead, they opted to dumb down the plotline as much as possible without losing the philosophical themes altogether, and thus portrayed the Hero as strong, the villains as weak, and none of them as omniscient.

For example, examining the Matrix as a kind of time machine linking the distant future to our own present, perhaps the theme of the sequels could have been one of presenting some catastrophe of modern times through the seeming prescience of a more omniscient character from the future. However, instead, they chose to portray the threat allegedly implied by existential Otherness as the ultimate and final conflict before the inevitable dawning of transcendence in the Age of Aquarius made available ubiquitously to the whole of humanity. But, by encapsulating the threat of Otherness into narrative form, the world saved was a fiction as well, a sort of ship inside a bottle, inside an aquarium, so to speak.

So, we only have the Wachowskis own chosen representations by which to define the possibilities of the "Matrix Universe" metaphor for transcendence of reality depicted concisely in M1 and expanded upon ad nauseum by Reloaded and ad infinitum by Revolutions. Thus, again, we have Merv's definition of "cause and effect" and the overlapping similarities to Rhama Khandra's concept of "karma." We see that all the characters in the sequels, Neo moreso than any of them, are completely and exclusively the products of their immediately preceding and their implied past events. If, according to the "Matrix Universe" philosophy, one makes Choice A, they will then be presented with Choices B and C. If they choose B, then D and E, and if C then F and G. The garden of forking paths, the choose-your-own-adventure, the Hero's Quest, is presented here in noir et blanc, in binary, as much as possible.

This apparently inherent consequentialism, whether called "cause and effect" or "karma," is the product of linear-thinking of time's friction against all opposing viewpoints. This is the necessary conflict to drive a fictional narrative plotline, albeit regrettably. Now, given the inherently infinite capacity of the most innocent human mind for creative imagination, you would think that a fictional world could be envisioned where such rules could be "bent," at least, if not "broken." However, again, we have only the sequels to elaborate upon the implied philosophical themes of M1, and in these the Wachowskis offer us no new solutions, only reiterate the perennial tradition, substituting a fictional plenum for zero opposite one.

It seems to me that if the sequels did anything, it was, as max points out, but what I would call unnecessarily, to elaborate on the implied themes of M1. Now, the Wachowskis chose certain implied themes to follow at the expense of others. Although most of what interested me most about M1 was the ancient origins of certain themes, the Wachowskis chose to follow the philosophical themes chronologically in the sequels, and thus that is all we can really talk about, no matter how limiting this context. By way of example, if I were to talk about Egyptian mythology in M1, then in Second Renaissance, basically an allegory on Atlantis or Eden (themselves only necessary allusions), we would expect to see some seeds from which later direct references to Egyptian mythology, such as the Final Flight of the Osiris, would germinate. Instead, like with the more "official" versions of human history taught in schools, there are necessary gaps or "breaks" in the records.

The Wachowskis chose the "one-way" chronological approach to the presentation of not only the philosophical themes but also, again as Max has pointed out, how these themes are "fleshed out" through the actions of the characters. Therefore, we see all the characters lack the omniscience if they were able to view the themes represented by the actions as not just cyclical, that is recognisably repetitive, but as actually themselves transcendent of the repetitive temporal cycle.

Of course, this is obviously not because the Wachowskis lack understanding of these simple facts. Even the most "primitive" bacteria is capable of experiential awareness of the full temporal implications of thematic or repetitive actions. It is my personal belief the Wachowskis simply chose not to allow any of their characters full omniscience because they believe something that I do not: that only by the various-points-of-view method, the so-called Kuleshov Effect used so poignantly in the editing of Citizen Kane, can a reasonable replica, a simulacra, of the "human condition" be achieved... at least through an artistic medium.

Of course, one is immediately reminded of something Socrates, himself a fictional character, once remarked about art as being something like "thrice removed from the kingdom," by which I think he must have meant something about the symbolic representationalism, the inescapable expressionistic connotations, of the Athenian statuary of the so-called "Golden Age." I think Baudrillard shares this disdain for the "third-party" mediation of reality, and refuses, even moreso, to apologise for it than had Hegel.

Eventually mediated formats of symbolic communication will have to break down altogether. There is simply more information, and less time, than can sustain tensile pressure on either side of this cut-off valve we quaintly consider "art." However, for now, we can see the choice the Wachowskis made to express their philosophical themes through the actions of their characters as a necessary, and ALLAH BE PRAISED! temporary, evil.

As the Wachowskis characters each say separately, in so many different words, "this world is a chrysalis." In order to depict change, that is, within the Manichean dichotomy of as above, so below, as being preferable for the perpetuation of survival, the Wachowskis chose to limit their characters understanding, and then to show how it changed over time. For example, Neo's quest for enlightenment, Morpheus' betrayed dogmatism, etc.

As always on the Hero's Quest, the antagonists opposite the protagonists are depicted in estranged and alienated forms, which gradually give way to more beautifully mutated explanations for the same initial themes. For example, Merv's fixation on "cause and effect" is the western parallel to the eastern Rhama Khandra saying "karma is word." We are then expected to see the changes to the antagonists along the way as beneficially influencing the Hero's Quest to change and thus survive.

Usually, the antagonists are depicted as travelling temporally opposite the protagonist. They are merely retrogressive along the same cycle of events progressed upon by the Hero. "To put it country simple," as Burroughs might say, they are travelling in opposite directions along the same road.

However what this means in narrative dialogue is that the antagonist usually knows more about where the Hero is going than the Hero knows about where the antagonist is coming from. Any reversal of this implies omniscience on the part of the Hero, and tends itself toward the Messiah myth. By giving Neo limited foresight, and by repeatedly presenting the flaws of one antagonist being pointed out to the Hero by other antagonists, the Wachowskis build up their Hero character along his quest. As each opposite villain is met and bested, the power of the Hero grows, this is standard operating procedure. However, when the villains pretend superhumanity and yet are dispatched all too easily, this process inflates exponentially into the Messiah myth.

The alternative to the "forward" moving Hero arbitrarily negating all the misunderstood, "evil" retrogressive antagonists would have approached the same (cyclical) philosophical themes as resulting from chronologically opposed frictions alone. Now, had the Wachowskis chosen to give the audience the benefit of the doubt of omniscience, they could have chosen to portray the sequels quite differently. However, instead, they opted to dumb down the plotline as much as possible without losing the philosophical themes altogether, and thus portrayed the Hero as strong, the villains as weak, and none of them as omniscient.

For example, examining the Matrix as a kind of time machine linking the distant future to our own present, perhaps the theme of the sequels could have been one of presenting some catastrophe of modern times through the seeming prescience of a more omniscient character from the future. However, instead, they chose to portray the threat allegedly implied by existential Otherness as the ultimate and final conflict before the inevitable dawning of transcendence in the Age of Aquarius made available ubiquitously to the whole of humanity. But, by encapsulating the threat of Otherness into narrative form, the world saved was a fiction as well, a sort of ship inside a bottle, inside an aquarium, so to speak.

So, we only have the Wachowskis own chosen representations by which to define the possibilities of the "Matrix Universe" metaphor for transcendence of reality depicted concisely in M1 and expanded upon ad nauseum by Reloaded and ad infinitum by Revolutions. Thus, again, we have Merv's definition of "cause and effect" and the overlapping similarities to Rhama Khandra's concept of "karma." We see that all the characters in the sequels, Neo moreso than any of them, are completely and exclusively the products of their immediately preceding and their implied past events. If, according to the "Matrix Universe" philosophy, one makes Choice A, they will then be presented with Choices B and C. If they choose B, then D and E, and if C then F and G. The garden of forking paths, the choose-your-own-adventure, the Hero's Quest, is presented here in noir et blanc, in binary, as much as possible.

This apparently inherent consequentialism, whether called "cause and effect" or "karma," is the product of linear-thinking of time's friction against all opposing viewpoints. This is the necessary conflict to drive a fictional narrative plotline, albeit regrettably. Now, given the inherently infinite capacity of the most innocent human mind for creative imagination, you would think that a fictional world could be envisioned where such rules could be "bent," at least, if not "broken." However, again, we have only the sequels to elaborate upon the implied philosophical themes of M1, and in these the Wachowskis offer us no new solutions, only reiterate the perennial tradition, substituting a fictional plenum for zero opposite one.

I'd like to also talk some in this thread about the illusory fallacies of the cyber/skin dichotomy when it comes to the physical vessel for the living mind. Right now, however....

I

Am

Out

of

Time.

-ben

Yeah, so anyway...

As always, this is only my opinion, but I'd like to talk a little about the use of VRAI and cloning in modern, turn of the second millennium AD science fiction.

Now, what I call VRAI is simply an acronym for Virtual-Reality and Artificial Intelligence. Essentially, VRAI is everything cyber, from the "body without organs" to the perception by a computer of a world inside a machine.

Cloning, well, that speaks for itself. It's the duplication along a genetic assembly line of an evolutionary template. People don't believe cloning is being practised yet, but IMO "cloning" has been around at least since test-tube babies.

Now, elsewhere I talk about the concept of generative and non-generative paths. A lot of people see cloning and VRAI as like the apples from the allegory of Eden. One from the tree of eternal life, and one from the tree of guilt. But which is which? We, now, after the fall, possess knowledge of right and wrong. That is why we falter, not because we know if cloning or if VRAI is "right" or "wrong," but because we know that EITHER may be right OR wrong, or, hell, possibly even both.

I personally am among the futurists, the optimists who believe that it is not necessary to take "the coward's way out" when confronted with this seemingly paradoxical choice. I do not see any better reason to spend trillions of dollars on war instead of on experiments with VRAI and cloning. I do not want to blow the whole world up.

However there are two types of futurists: utopian and dystopian. The dystopian believe that it may be necessary to kill off some of the "lesser evolved" human population, either through nuclear war or some form of natural disaster. This dystopian vision is often called "post-Apocalyptic" (after the Book of Revelations).

I myself am of the utopian camp. Now, the utopian camp is not devoid of in-fighting and factionalism either. There are those who believe that spiritual transcendence will happen for everyone with the coming of the Aztec Fifth Sun. There are those who believe the rapture will come for only some. I, myself, belong to the MOST optimistic of the utopian futurist group.

Now, in every way that M1 playfully hinted at, the sequels made nauseatingly clear: The "Matrix Universe" is a pessimistic, post-Apocalyptic dystopia. It stands against everything I value philosophically, everything you may even say I believe in.

What bothers me, I think, most about the fictional presentation of a post-Apocalyptic dystopia is that it requires a temporary escape from reality, a "suspension of disbelief," in order to present the fictional narrative. Thus, by presenting a post-Apocalyptic dystopia as fiction, the Wachowskis tacitly imply a pleasant sunny reality.

In other words, the Wachowskis nod to Plato's metaphor of the cave is, IMO, more of a sophomoric lampoon of the average bourgeois audience member retreating from a mundane work-a-day world into the world within a violent summer action movie.

A style of dress, gesture and speech which I can only imagine being called neo-noir permeates... no, saturates the Matrix trilogy. It is tolerable in M1, but in the much slower doses of the sequels the minimalist dialogue of the Matrix warriors comes off alternately hackneyed and stilted, while their fighting styles are pointlessly repetitive and their styles of clothing and dress truthfully obnoxious.

This is one of the main things that actually keeps me coming back to movies like the Matrix. Like a battered wife who can't leave her abusive husband, I can't seem to stop trying to find the Good in them. Movies like Blade Runner (of which the director's cut should not be the only version available on dvd), pi, cube, hell even Existenz, all eventually pay off. There is something valuable hidden behind their respective melancholy, paranoia, gore and bad writing.

To me, the Matrix sequels lacked all emotional appeal. The characters (or rather, the actors) behaved like robots themselves, which makes for very boring character development. Furthermore, I can't seem to quite get anything out of these Hollywood pieces of trash than I can get out of watching all the other, better sci-fi movies whose premises it combines only to befoul.

[quote="cypress"]Ben, I am not sure I understand.[/quote]

Well, now, let's consider computers for a moment.

First there were mechanical machines, which were powered off steam pressure. Coal was thrown on a fire used to boil water, and this machine process then produced steam. Then, the steam was used to move parts made out of metal. Likewise the same initial "machine process" (in this case the use of fuel to make fire, and fire to make heat, the heat then is used to smelt metal) is used to make the metal parts of the machine-process, but these metal parts, like the fuel, the flame, water, steam etc. are only extensions of the initial, intentional change of state of matter-energy.

Now we come to the use of simpler mechanical machines, such as the first robots, called "automotons," and eventually to adding machines. This occurred as man's values became more specialised. His first machines were to build buildings and transport peoples' bodies. Eventually, their values became more specific, and so the tools to accomplish them became smaller. The steam engine is a very large apparatus compared to the push-button abacus of the Burroughs adding machine, for example, because transporting the body covers more space than adding pure numbers, although, for some time, the two take the same amount of time. For example, with a locomotive size super-computer, one could calculate pi to the such-and-such decimal, but doing so might take the same amount of time as riding on a train across country.

By now, of course, not only the original robotic functions of the earliest adding machines have successfully been micro-miniaturised to hand-held calculators, palm-pilot computers, picture phones etc. but the same electronic machines can now be used to substitute for previously manual labour and eventually even management positions at the assembly lines used to produce the robotic parts themselves. The factories of today are obviously very different from the factories of only 90 years ago.

In the perpetually "near" future, man's values will be so electronic, that they will be building atomic machines run on quantum computers, which will use the uncertainty principle of probability wells such as electron orbital energy shells to add a whole new spectrum of digital answers to standard binary programming. Even binary language itself is less dynamic than the Morse-code of dots, pauses, and dashes invented as long ago as the smoke signal. And, of course, where this leads is that eventually our ability to send pulsed signals will be held back only by the original medium's wavelength and frequency. We will have gotten down to programming languages so small that they will be based on speeds faster than photons, and all our intentions will arrive at their destinations before they have left.

However, for each breakthrough we make in this direction, we are impeded by moralism's rhetorical questions of ethics. This is because of what we discover as each of us realises our own potential to make mental calculations faster than the speed of light. We discover that everything has always been the way it is now, more or less, and that nothing changes except our minds. And, perhaps most importantly, we discover the minds of others already living up there.

It could even be said that the only distinction to be made in existence is made between the genetic "clone" or the flesh and blood body, and the virtual reality co-creating artificial intelligence of the aethyreal mind. So, when you say,

[quote="cypress"]I do not believe we make our own reality.[/quote]

I wonder why you even draw a distinct difference between the "I" and the "reality" via the action-verb "make." Reality is the I that makes as much as is reality that which makes the I.

-ben

And while I'm STILL here...

I'd like to add more on the use of karma, that is, the input of data in one event deterministically influencing the effects in, and by dint thereof, the options comprising the choices available from, the next. We see this a rule definitively established for the humans in M1. We immediately see it broken by the agents (that's impossible!) and eventually by Neo as well ("you moved like they do," ie. using the mind to move faster than light).

However, in the sequels this law is gradually warped and distorted, that is, bent so often and only arbitrarily by so many obvious disallowed characters, usually with no explanation nor diagetetic consequence, that it loses all relavence as the cornerstone of the "Matrix Universe." This does not mean that this law, essentially a law of higher-dimensional physics, is effectively "broken" by either the characters in the trilogy, by the movies themselves socially, or by the Wachowskis individually. It merely means that, again, its explanation is obfuscated and subverted by the fiction of an era, and thus any real enlightenment of its nature is put off for a time.

The ability to manipulate karma, or cause and effect, or whatever you want to call it, does not derive from the "bending" of its laws. It depends on its transcendence. This is really the ONLY philosophy expressed in M1, and one of the main reasons why I love that movie. It is also ruined in the context of the "Matrix Universe" by the sequels.

To transcend the law of karma, or cause and effect, one has to "follow the white rabbit" in the form of otherwise apparently irrelevant coincidences, synchronicities, etc. whatever you want to call them. This also is a dominant theme in M1 that is not followed up on in the sequels.

Instead of finding clues of more omniscient sentience(s) by following the patterns of similarities between deja vu, the sequels focus more on the direct control over these by the "free will" or input of the individual.

This is, of course, nonsense from the point of view of the enlightened. Until you have found the karmic patterns that govern cause and effect, you cannot even know what "law" you are bending, let alone how to redirect that energy and control it.

Compare the impact and even the importance of Morpheus' "splinter in your mind" speech to any of the subsequent bullshit pseudo-philosophical propping up of non-sequitor straw-men speeches from the sequels.

Now, a word about my comment in the original version of this thread about "philosophy as a fist fight." Needless to say, this was left unexplained, and highly underrated, in the sequels (Seraph's line about "not knowing" someone... BAH!). However in the choreographed ballet-like gun fights in M1 there is clearly displayed the law of karma as determining cause and effect. This breaks down even more subtly to karma as being co-created by free will, as we see Neo able to "dodge bullets" partially because of its having been previously suggested, and partially because of his ability to think faster than the speed of light.

Instead, the sequels brow beat us to death with the "insolubility" of the issue of "free will versus determinism" until we see "transcendence" as purely caused by physical exhaustion: Calvinism at it's WORST! Of course, examination sans sequels of M1 illustrates the opposite lesson: that transcendence CAN be an active, even self-affirming process, and that nihilism (rather than plenary) is its true opposite. In fact, we see all the optimism I love about M1 dashed against the stalagmites in even the BORING opening sequence of Reloaded.

In M1 transcendence is presented through "rose coloured glasses," as we leave the movie still inside the Matrix, but, by identification with the protagonist character Neo, seemingly lighter-than-air invincible, able to see the reality behind the code. Rage Against the Machine plays, and one is left with a sense of immediate hope for the ultimate triumph of the underdog counter-cultures against the corporate business infrastructure.

However, as I say, the sequels ruined all this. Reloaded opens neither INSIDE the Matrix or OUTSIDE, but in a fucking DREAM-SEQUENCE! Neo is dreaming about the Matrix, and yes, it HAPPENS to be of events that later coincidentally occur within the Matrix. But that does not mean this is an example of "following the white rabbit," or tracing consequences between coincidences, in a Jungian sense, but more a Freudian commentary on women in the workplace.

Anyway, I'd love to stay and add more, but a Fed-Ex guy just delivered me a phone, so I'll have to TTYL.

-ben

Never give out your password or credit card number in an instant message conversation. To help prevent infection by a computer virus or worm, never accept or open any file or link in an instant message until you verify its authenticity with the sender.

Yellow says: (2:27:16 PM)
aw...and here I have a moment of silence....

AHDVNHAY says: (2:33:33 PM)
hey there

Yellow says: (2:34:59 PM)
hey

Yellow says: (2:35:19 PM)
found something struck me funny...

AHDVNHAY says: (2:35:22 PM)
what?

Yellow says: (2:35:26 PM)
ROME (Reuters) - First it was Napoleon. Now it is Jesus Christ.

Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi has compared himself to both, prompting the open scorn of his political opponents and even the quietly raised eyebrows of his coalition partners.

"I am the Jesus Christ of politics," Italian media quoted him as saying at a dinner with supporters on Saturday night. "I am a patient victim, I p

AHDVNHAY says: (2:35:59 PM)
HAHAHA

Yellow says: (2:36:04 PM)
yep

Yellow says: (2:36:35 PM) did you get my pm...i sent a link I think...something else but I don't remember what...lol

AHDVNHAY says: (2:36:41 PM)
yeah

AHDVNHAY says: (2:36:45 PM)
about teh snake

Yellow says: (2:36:53 PM)
oh yeah

Yellow says: (2:37:54 PM)
interesting convo with Brian...he says he is depressed...but doesn't want meds or therapy

AHDVNHAY says: (2:38:05 PM)
k

Yellow says: (2:38:16 PM)
that's all good...but what would it be like if I said that?

Yellow says: (2:39:09 PM)
nevermind...just made me think about how people deal with mental illness differently and I'm glad I'm a keep trying person myself...

AHDVNHAY says: (2:39:22 PM)
cool cool

Yellow says: (2:41:25 PM)
it was like talking to John McNeece...and it gave me the willies

AHDVNHAY says: (2:41:53 PM)
hmm

Yellow says: (2:42:08 PM)
living stuck...for fear of making a "failing" move

AHDVNHAY says: (2:42:15 PM)
True.

Yellow says: (2:43:48 PM)
anyways...no more silence here...I can still chat just focus is different...ya know

AHDVNHAY says: (2:44:02 PM)
true

Yellow says: (2:45:24 PM)
I wrote back RE: mona smirk....I agree...not sure why I had the initial reaction though...soz

AHDVNHAY says: (2:45:54 PM)

no, it's ... there's nothing wrong with your opinion, it's only stuck with me since you apologised as if there were.

Yellow says: (2:47:55 PM)

because I know...why I reacted that way and its ludacris...anyway

AHDVNHAY says: (2:48:02 PM)

how come?

Yellow says: (2:49:09 PM)

not now...bbiab

AHDVNHAY says: (2:49:30 PM)

k

AHDVNHAY says: (3:01:38 PM)

brb

Yellow says: (3:02:00 PM)

k

AHDVNHAY says: (3:09:03 PM)

back

Yellow says: (3:10:17 PM)

back

Yellow says: (3:10:39 PM)

one word about your ex and my reaction....jealousy

AHDVNHAY says: (3:10:45 PM)

yeah

AHDVNHAY says: (3:10:48 PM)

I figgered

AHDVNHAY says: (3:10:49 PM)

why?

Yellow says: (3:12:20 PM)

cause she gets your attention...cause a part of me thinks you would be with her in a heartbeat if she were to reappear

AHDVNHAY says: (3:12:28 PM)

I would.

Yellow says: (3:12:53 PM)

I know

Yellow says: (3:13:15 PM)

I wish I were that for someone

AHDVNHAY says: (3:13:21 PM)
hm.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:13:35 PM)
I think it's like a Highlander thing or something

AHDVNHAY says: (3:13:37 PM)
lol

Yellow says: (3:13:52 PM)
?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:14:06 PM)
you don't know the Highlander series?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:14:15 PM)
"there can be only one" and all that shit?

Yellow says: (3:14:32 PM)
not much...some...only seen then each once...

Yellow says: (3:14:44 PM)
yes I know that line

AHDVNHAY says: (3:14:54 PM)
k

Yellow says: (3:14:54 PM)
Jon..

AHDVNHAY says: (3:15:00 PM)
yeah?

Yellow says: (3:15:33 PM)
this is more personal than wanting to have "someone" feel that way about me....

AHDVNHAY says: (3:15:42 PM)
oh?

Yellow says: (3:16:33 PM)
on some plane (diagrams of body&mind, spirit, soul)....I am in love with you!

AHDVNHAY says: (3:16:49 PM)
in love, or you do love...?

Yellow says: (3:16:57 PM)
both

AHDVNHAY says: (3:17:35 PM)
hmm.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:17:45 PM)
why?

Yellow says: (3:18:51 PM)
1st thought...because

Yellow says: (3:19:05 PM)
it's just what I feel...

AHDVNHAY says: (3:19:17 PM)
true...

AHDVNHAY says: (3:19:19 PM)
but...

AHDVNHAY says: (3:19:42 PM)
saying that "on some plane" yadda yadda means about the same as my saying I'm in love with Blavatsky, yes?

Yellow says: (3:21:13 PM)
no...I am in love with you..."on same plane" was me letting you know I am examining if it feels pf body, mind, spirit, soul...?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:21:24 PM)
ahhh ok

Yellow says: (3:22:04 PM)
I am in love with and love all of you...

Yellow says: (3:23:05 PM)
and examining for a while now if I dare say so...

Yellow says: (3:25:23 PM)
well. ok...just shake your head and forget I said all that...please

AHDVNHAY says: (3:25:39 PM)
that's about all I can do.

Yellow says: (3:26:07 PM)
because I had mistakenly thought you sorta shared this feeling...soz

AHDVNHAY says: (3:27:16 PM)
I do, but in a more love for all our similarities sense. I find myself involved in all sorts of impossible relationships. Internet romances, crushes on other people's girlfriends, and this.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:27:22 PM)
I don't know why...

AHDVNHAY says: (3:27:27 PM)
my karma is fucked.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:27:50 PM)
I loose all my friends in the end.

Yellow says: (3:29:04 PM)
I am willing to shift things in my life...not just to connect with you...because it is the compassionate hing I must do for my children and core self (my yellowness)

AHDVNHAY says: (3:29:18 PM)
I know that.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:29:56 PM)
I think it would be positive for us both if we were to shift more towards one another, but I cannot honestly say that it's what I want.

Yellow says: (3:30:10 PM)
what I really want is to be single....my own space with my children...and...

Yellow says: (3:30:36 PM)
a really smart talk and talk and read and write fuck buddy!

AHDVNHAY says: (3:30:44 PM)
heheh

AHDVNHAY says: (3:30:49 PM)
I wish I could do that.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:30:54 PM)
it would be for the best.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:30:57 PM)
but I cannot.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:31:02 PM)
at least not the last part.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:31:04 PM)
lol

Yellow says: (3:31:40 PM)
cannot...or will not....sorry you don't have to answer that...

AHDVNHAY says: (3:31:54 PM)
yes, well... that's one of those questions isn't it

Yellow says: (3:32:20 PM)
forget about it...it's ok

AHDVNHAY says: (3:32:25 PM)
ok...

Yellow says: (3:33:04 PM)
doesn't matter to me...some part of me maybe but not the self

AHDVNHAY says: (3:33:23 PM)
screw.

Yellow says: (3:33:34 PM)
screw?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:33:46 PM)

now I feel weird.....

AHDVNHAY says: (3:34:38 PM)
what do you feel like?

Yellow says: (3:35:15 PM)
uh...does this help...any consenting sexuality I express is in love, compassion and joy to be sharing with another not fuck....

AHDVNHAY says: (3:35:35 PM)
I know.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:35:42 PM)
I am unable to do that.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:35:49 PM)
either of those.

Yellow says: (3:37:40 PM)
touch...? oh....sh ould I have asked before hugging you? is so 1000 pardons please!

AHDVNHAY says: (3:37:53 PM)
nooo! LOL

AHDVNHAY says: (3:38:04 PM)
silly

Yellow says: (3:38:41 PM)
ok...so...hugs ok...cool.

Yellow says: (3:39:03 PM)
nothing else...? with anyone? with me?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:39:49 PM)
let me talk to you about this... but it will have t be at some length.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:39:55 PM)
have we got the time now?

Yellow says: (3:40:40 PM)
brian has gone out for a couple hrs...and my kids are doing vader dark side training

AHDVNHAY says: (3:40:49 PM)
ok

Yellow says: (3:40:58 PM)
(watching TV)

Yellow says: (3:41:10 PM)
but it's your choice

AHDVNHAY says: (3:41:28 PM)
I'll tell you as much as I can now, and we can talk about this more later as well

Yellow says: (3:41:45 PM)
ok

AHDVNHAY says: (3:42:19 PM)
where should I start, LOL?

Yellow says: (3:43:04 PM)
anywhere...what's one thing you want me to know...

AHDVNHAY says: (3:43:27 PM)
let me ask you a question...

AHDVNHAY says: (3:43:33 PM)
do you believe in destiny?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:43:50 PM)
the Sumerians talked about the difference between fate (free will) and destiny (determinism)

Yellow says: (3:44:19 PM)
I don't know enough to decide

AHDVNHAY says: (3:44:33 PM)
fate determines the short term usually, and destiny determines the long term

AHDVNHAY says: (3:44:52 PM)
I feel in my life compelled to search out and to tap into everything beyond the norm

Yellow says: (3:45:15 PM)
me too

AHDVNHAY says: (3:45:18 PM)
so, I studied the concept of destiny as Time itself, as entropy, etc. for some time.

Yellow says: (3:45:29 PM)
got it

AHDVNHAY says: (3:45:37 PM)
At one point I became convinced in something that was the opposite of true.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:46:06 PM)
that Time was greater than anything imaginable. That it could not be surpassed, even by the self-concept elevated to the idea of a God.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:46:23 PM)
eventually I broke through that glass ceiling

AHDVNHAY says: (3:46:30 PM)
into the realm of Do Wat Thou Wilt

AHDVNHAY says: (3:46:40 PM)
but I ... haven't.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:46:55 PM)
I haven't lived by the law of the will.

Yellow says: (3:47:26 PM)
you have harmed?

Yellow says: (3:47:49 PM)
or not done what's to do....

AHDVNHAY says: (3:47:53 PM)
both.

Yellow says: (3:47:58 PM)
ok

AHDVNHAY says: (3:48:13 PM)
I sacrificed an animal once... I have been wasting time NOT being the Messiah for no GOOD reason.

Yellow says: (3:48:14 PM)
I have too.

Yellow says: (3:49:18 PM)
Yellow says:
I have too. refers to first two...not animal thing altho I have slaughtered many

AHDVNHAY says: (3:49:25 PM)
yeah

Yellow says: (3:50:27 PM)
(pig farmer amy)

Yellow says: (3:50:34 PM)
anyway...

AHDVNHAY says: (3:50:47 PM)
yeah

Yellow says: (3:51:53 PM)
we don't have to talk about this, I'll go if that's best for you at this time...?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:52:04 PM)
no, it's cool

AHDVNHAY says: (3:52:51 PM)
I want to sound savvy, sound like I'm down, I guess. Sound uplifting and positive and all that bullshit.

Yellow says: (3:53:08 PM)
ok

AHDVNHAY says: (3:53:19 PM)
but I can't.

AHDVNHAY says: (3:53:25 PM)
I don't know what's best to say.

Yellow says: (3:53:28 PM)
ok to that to

Yellow says: (3:53:53 PM)
just type what wants to come out

AHDVNHAY says: (3:54:08 PM)
I love irina.

Yellow says: (3:54:17 PM)
good

Yellow says: (3:54:22 PM)
really

AHDVNHAY says: (3:54:28 PM)
no, it's not.

Yellow says: (3:55:04 PM)
ok

Yellow says: (3:55:08 PM)
why?

AHDVNHAY says: (3:55:20 PM)
because I haven't been with anyone for almost a decade.

Yellow says: (3:55:36 PM)
ok

Yellow says: (3:56:15 PM)
love can shift -Blavatsky

Yellow says: (3:56:54 PM)
I will write you a letter -Blavatsky

AHDVNHAY says: (3:57:01 PM)
ok

Yellow says: (3:57:38 PM)
only you will understand and the courier will not -Blavatsky

AHDVNHAY says: (3:57:44 PM)
ok

Yellow says: (3:58:00 PM)
ok...amy here

AHDVNHAY says: (3:58:03 PM)
ok

Yellow says: (3:59:07 PM)
ok...just letting her out all the ways...a litle stretching...I'm back

AHDVNHAY says: (3:59:15 PM)
k

Yellow says: (3:59:30 PM)
sorry...not my doing ya know

AHDVNHAY says: (3:59:35 PM)
I know

Yellow says: (3:59:49 PM)
go ahead...not been...deacade

AHDVNHAY says: (4:00:08 PM)
what?

AHDVNHAY says: (4:00:23 PM)
oh

AHDVNHAY says: (4:00:27 PM)
nothing...

AHDVNHAY says: (4:00:30 PM)
I dunno...

AHDVNHAY says: (4:00:36 PM)
I need a smoke.

Yellow says: (4:00:40 PM)
k

Yellow says: (4:00:46 PM)
I'm lit up

AHDVNHAY says: (4:00:50 PM)
ok

AHDVNHAY says: (4:00:53 PM)
brb

Yellow says: (4:00:57 PM)
k

AHDVNHAY says: (4:14:50 PM)
back

Yellow says: (4:16:25 PM)
cool

Yellow says: (4:16:35 PM)
the italian beef smells so goo

Yellow says: (4:16:39 PM)
d

Yellow says: (4:18:57 PM)
you there?

AHDVNHAY says: (4:19:02 PM)
yup

Yellow says: (4:19:25 PM)
heard Rusted Root?

AHDVNHAY says: (4:19:34 PM)
nope

Yellow says: (4:19:42 PM)
omy

Yellow says: (4:20:11 PM)
it was playing upstairs at my party when I was getting ready...but you may not have been there then

Yellow says: (4:21:09 PM)
Buck and I were digging it

Yellow says: (4:21:15 PM)
anyway

Yellow says: (4:21:21 PM)
how are you?

AHDVNHAY says: (4:21:41 PM)
not bad

AHDVNHAY says: (4:21:51 PM)
looking for a good biography of burroughs

Yellow says: (4:22:42 PM)
ah

Yellow says: (4:24:18 PM)
I'll leave you to it then...

AHDVNHAY says: (4:24:30 PM)
why?

Yellow says: (4:24:58 PM)
oh yeah...you are god of multimultitasking

AHDVNHAY says: (4:25:07 PM)
yeah, !

AHDVNHAY says: (4:27:26 PM)
well, I'm not finding anything anyway.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:27:28 PM)
so..

Yellow says: (4:27:47 PM)
seen this stfff I assume?
<http://www.thei.aust.com/bill/burroughs.html>

AHDVNHAY says: (4:28:25 PM)
nope

AHDVNHAY says: (4:29:59 PM)
saving this: <http://www.thei.aust.com/bill/burroughsbooks.html> to harddrive

Yellow says: (4:30:14 PM)
or this...I love the 1st pic... <http://www.rotten.com/library/bio/authors/william-s-burroughs/>

Yellow says: (4:30:40 PM)
?

Yellow says: (4:30:51 PM)
oh

AHDVNHAY says: (4:30:51 PM)
yeah, lol

Yellow says: (4:31:33 PM)
well, those are the only 2 links I got that didn't make me wanna vomit right off...

AHDVNHAY says: (4:31:47 PM)
heheh

AHDVNHAY says: (4:31:50 PM)
thansk

Yellow says: (4:32:12 PM)
yep...they might be crap...but they were well done crap...

Yellow says: (4:32:27 PM)
oh wait you like your medium rar...hehehe

AHDVNHAY says: (4:33:29 PM)
hehe

AHDVNHAY says: (4:33:36 PM)
from the timeline: 1959 Naked Lunch.
1985 Queer.

AHDVNHAY says: (4:33:38 PM)
LOL

Yellow says: (4:34:21 PM)
Oh Jeez

Yellow says: (4:34:37 PM)
oookay...so crap...soz

AHDVNHAY says: (4:34:47 PM)
naw the rest is good

AHDVNHAY says: (4:34:52 PM)
very informative, lol

AHDVNHAY says: (4:35:04 PM)
except the timeline between 59 and 89

AHDVNHAY says: (4:35:05 PM)
lol

Yellow says: (4:35:18 PM)
heh

Yellow says: (4:36:46 PM)
this is not really bio but has audio <http://www.netherworld.com/~mgabrys/william/>

AHDVNHAY says: (4:37:24 PM)
<http://www.netherworld.com/~mgabrys/william/prev.html>

AHDVNHAY says: (4:37:28 PM)
they're all fake though

AHDVNHAY says: (4:37:34 PM)
someone trying to read like Burroughs

Yellow says: (4:37:48 PM)
oh...sux...dickheads

Yellow says: (4:38:24 PM)
the naropa burroughs classes....audio

Yellow says: (4:38:26 PM)
brb

AHDVNHAY says: (4:38:29 PM)
k

AHDVNHAY says: (4:38:32 PM)
me2

Yellow says: (4:39:57 PM)
http://www.archive.org/details/naropa\_william\_s\_burroughs\_class\_on7

Yellow says: (4:42:48 PM)
back

AHDVNHAY says: (4:50:26 PM)
these are all the ones I'd downloaded before

AHDVNHAY says: (4:50:30 PM)

two I copied for you

AHDVNHAY says: (4:50:35 PM)
the best ones

AHDVNHAY says: (4:50:38 PM)
imo

Yellow says: (4:52:15 PM)
ok...haven't gotten time alone to listen...

Yellow says: (4:52:57 PM)
not really 8yr old material...

Yellow says: (4:53:11 PM)
and Brian can't get into him

Yellow says: (4:53:35 PM)
I need headphones I guess

AHDVNHAY says: (4:53:44 PM)
guess so

Yellow says: (4:54:02 PM)
so...

AHDVNHAY says: (4:55:07 PM)
so, what should I do?

Yellow says: (4:55:57 PM)
you can shake your head and forget what I said and continue your love for Irina....

Yellow says: (4:56:39 PM)
I shake my head and forget I said anything....and we continue to talk as we have

Yellow says: (4:57:05 PM)
or are you talking about finding burroughs bio?

AHDVNHAY says: (4:57:25 PM)
nope what you said

Yellow says: (4:58:15 PM)
or we just continut as we have and see.....

Yellow says: (4:58:30 PM)
or we no longer interact at all?

AHDVNHAY says: (4:58:38 PM)
I dunno

AHDVNHAY says: (4:59:25 PM)
I need time to think about it I suppose

Yellow says: (4:59:54 PM)

ok

Yellow says: (5:01:38 PM)
and I need time to be ready for whatever you say I suppose

Yellow says: (5:03:06 PM)
i should not have said anything...but then I have very little inner monolog...and Millie was encouraging...

AHDVNHAY says: (5:03:32 PM)
mom's home, one sec

Yellow says: (5:03:37 PM)
k

Yellow says: (5:07:40 PM)
I'm gonna go offline for a bit...call if you need to...you are still welcome for dinner...we could pretend it was yesterday...or not...call if you don't see me online and want to talk..

Yellow says: (5:20:04 PM)
can I say one more thing?

Yellow says: (5:22:05 PM)
I'll send it pm...if you don't want to read it...toss it

AHDVNHAY says: (5:33:11 PM)
yeah sure

AHDVNHAY says: (5:33:12 PM)
shoot

AHDVNHAY says: (5:33:47 PM)
oops wait

Yellow says: (5:33:47 PM)
oh...I sent it pm...um...

AHDVNHAY says: (5:33:54 PM)
was responding to the last IM

AHDVNHAY says: (5:33:55 PM)
ol

AHDVNHAY says: (5:33:57 PM)
soz

AHDVNHAY says: (5:34:36 PM)
hmm

AHDVNHAY says: (5:34:41 PM)
got the pm, lol

Yellow says: (5:35:00 PM)
ok

AHDVNHAY says: (5:35:01 PM)
I was talking to mom about this

AHDVNHAY says: (5:35:08 PM)
I told her I was shook

AHDVNHAY says: (5:35:23 PM)
I still don't know how I feel

Yellow says: (5:35:45 PM)
it's ok

AHDVNHAY says: (5:35:47 PM)
let me ask you one thing?

Yellow says: (5:36:14 PM)
I know how I feel and I'm shook and I have no idea what it means next

Yellow says: (5:36:17 PM)
ok

AHDVNHAY says: (5:36:21 PM)
ok

AHDVNHAY says: (5:36:30 PM)
this is kind of a too-political question for me

Yellow says: (5:36:36 PM)
ok

AHDVNHAY says: (5:36:42 PM)
which is one of the reasons I can't see myself in a relationship with anyone

Yellow says: (5:36:52 PM)
ok

AHDVNHAY says: (5:36:56 PM)
when did you talk to Milly about all this?

Yellow says: (5:37:17 PM)
thur...away from anyone in earshot

Yellow says: (5:37:51 PM)
and all I told her was one thing I feel

AHDVNHAY says: (5:38:03 PM)
what was that?

Yellow says: (5:38:16 PM)
that I am in love with you

Yellow says: (5:38:43 PM)
it scares me frankly

AHDVNHAY says: (5:38:55 PM)
me too

Yellow says: (5:39:26 PM)
I physically am shaking...and it's not tht lithobid

AHDVNHAY says: (5:40:04 PM)
I can;t do this thign

Yellow says: (5:40:12 PM)
ok

AHDVNHAY says: (5:40:24 PM)
it's too difficult to explain why

AHDVNHAY says: (5:40:28 PM)
but i can't

Yellow says: (5:40:32 PM)
it's ok

Yellow says: (5:40:59 PM)
compassion

AHDVNHAY says: (5:41:09 PM)
so much karma

Yellow says: (5:41:13 PM)
I amchanneling the energy to compassion

AHDVNHAY says: (5:41:20 PM)
thanks

Yellow says: (5:41:41 PM)
karma is not to be feared

Yellow says: (5:41:59 PM)
all is compassion

AHDVNHAY says: (5:42:24 PM)
I must be getting better

AHDVNHAY says: (5:42:29 PM)
before you told me that

Yellow says: (5:42:33 PM)
yes?

AHDVNHAY says: (5:42:35 PM)
I was the happiest I'd been

AHDVNHAY says: (5:42:38 PM)
since the last time

AHDVNHAY says: (5:42:42 PM)
somebody told me that.

AHDVNHAY says: (5:42:53 PM)
now I don't know what to think.

AHDVNHAY says: (5:42:59 PM)
how to feel.

Yellow says: (5:43:04 PM)
ohhh...*108 bows*

Yellow says: (5:43:26 PM)
times like these I chant....

AHDVNHAY says: (5:44:07 PM)
I dreamed about all this

AHDVNHAY says: (5:44:11 PM)
in a way

Yellow says: (5:44:14 PM)
you did?

AHDVNHAY says: (5:44:16 PM)
awhile ago

Yellow says: (5:44:19 PM)
when?

Yellow says: (5:44:27 PM)
what?

AHDVNHAY says: (5:44:29 PM)
I had a dream Milly wanted to go out with me.

AHDVNHAY says: (5:44:39 PM)
I was very confused and went to see Irina.

AHDVNHAY says: (5:44:45 PM)
but her parents wouldn't let me in.

AHDVNHAY says: (5:45:08 PM)
then Milly was disgusted because I'd gone to Irina first.

Yellow says: (5:45:11 PM)
oh dude...I remember you told me....right on

AHDVNHAY says: (5:45:14 PM)
and I ended up alone.

Yellow says: (5:45:56 PM)
not right on....but I rememeber

Yellow says: (5:46:11 PM)
or maybe right on...if that's what you want.../

AHDVNHAY says: (5:46:40 PM)
I don't know

AHDVNHAY says: (5:47:23 PM)
all this karma

Yellow says: (5:47:31 PM)
Odin told me starting last summer I would be around to "stir it up"....change....she's tattooed on my back

Yellow says: (5:47:48 PM)
I wear a warning sign!

AHDVNHAY says: (5:47:54 PM)
heheh

AHDVNHAY says: (5:48:32 PM)
times like this I wish I drank instead of got high

Yellow says: (5:48:44 PM)
que?

AHDVNHAY says: (5:48:59 PM)
you drink enough you stop giving a shit about anything

Yellow says: (5:49:32 PM)
oh by the way...brilliant drawings/graphy deals...brilliant...ty

Yellow says: (5:49:57 PM)
oh

AHDVNHAY says: (5:50:10 PM)
in the book?

Yellow says: (5:50:20 PM)
forum

Yellow says: (5:50:29 PM)
newest

Yellow says: (5:50:36 PM)
intro

AHDVNHAY says: (5:50:50 PM)
oh?

Yellow says: (5:51:04 PM)
I think... <http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=401>

Yellow says: (5:51:35 PM)
fun to envision the changes myself as went along...

AHDVNHAY says: (5:51:57 PM)
those aren;t new

AHDVNHAY says: (5:52:02 PM)
just updated the thread

AHDVNHAY says: (5:52:05 PM)
but yeah

AHDVNHAY says: (5:52:09 PM)
they'r enot bad ones

Yellow says: (5:52:30 PM)
oh on my computer it's todays date listed

AHDVNHAY says: (5:52:50 PM)
the first posts are old, later posts are new

Yellow says: (5:53:25 PM)
oh my...don't I feel like a dork...you even mentioned that before

Yellow says: (5:53:35 PM)
ah well....

AHDVNHAY says: (5:53:39 PM)
it's cool

AHDVNHAY says: (5:54:03 PM)
oh woops

AHDVNHAY says: (5:54:13 PM)
I guess I'm not coming out for dinner now

AHDVNHAY says: (5:54:18 PM)
it's 6 already

Yellow says: (5:54:32 PM)
oh...Brian isn't even here yet

Yellow says: (5:55:05 PM)
it's not quiete ready.....but yes that was a very greaceful wat to ....bow out

AHDVNHAY says: (5:55:25 PM)
thanks I thought so too, LMAO!

AHDVNHAY says: (5:55:48 PM)
I do want a rain check though

AHDVNHAY says: (5:55:53 PM)
in all sincerity.

Yellow says: (5:56:27 PM)
I understand and thats cool

AHDVNHAY says: (5:56:53 PM)
let me ask you something else political for a sec, and then I promise I will stop

Yellow says: (5:57:22 PM)
go ahead...I have a higher political quotient myself

AHDVNHAY says: (5:57:27 PM)
ok

AHDVNHAY says: (5:57:28 PM)
lol

AHDVNHAY says: (5:57:50 PM)
I am wondering why you thought how you felt about me was something that Milly needed to know before... say... Brian?

AHDVNHAY says: (5:57:55 PM)
or me, for that matter?

Yellow says: (6:00:06 PM)
The drive to talk to Milly about it was to here someone tell me I didn't have a chance in hell...her name came to me as a confidant through you...the dream....all the triangles within it and it's telling...

AHDVNHAY says: (6:00:22 PM)
ahh

AHDVNHAY says: (6:00:30 PM)
but she said "go for it"?

Yellow says: (6:02:18 PM)
she said she and John suspected as much and were talking about it that day...I said "really, I don't have a chance in hell!?" she said oh my god that's so cool...no you might have a chance, probably, probably"

AHDVNHAY says: (6:02:46 PM)
neither of them know about irina

AHDVNHAY says: (6:02:57 PM)
i only told damien recently

AHDVNHAY says: (6:03:03 PM)
right before he broke up with Kelly

AHDVNHAY says: (6:03:14 PM)
and I still haven't told sims the whole story

Yellow says: (6:03:22 PM)
ok

Yellow says: (6:04:07 PM)

but it is basically on your web page...rather I gleened it before you said anything at all

AHDVNHAY says: (6:04:15 PM)
not all of it

AHDVNHAY says: (6:04:22 PM)
but yes

AHDVNHAY says: (6:04:25 PM)
some is there

Yellow says: (6:04:29 PM)
yes, I understand that

AHDVNHAY says: (6:04:40 PM)
understanding is good

Yellow says: (6:04:58 PM)
yep

AHDVNHAY says: (6:05:01 PM)
though hard to come by these days

AHDVNHAY says: (6:05:07 PM)
I'll brb I need more to smoke

Yellow says: (6:05:27 PM)
hmmm...indeed...

Yellow says: (6:05:29 PM)
k

Yellow says: (6:09:43 PM)
ya know...

Yellow says: (6:13:14 PM)
fuck now I forgot cause I thaught you were back...soz

Yellow says: (6:14:56 PM)
Dude....

AHDVNHAY says: (6:15:11 PM)
backsoz

Yellow says: (6:15:18 PM)
ok

Yellow says: (6:15:52 PM)
brian just got home...he's in a great mood cause we got FORBIDDEN ZONE

Yellow says: (6:16:18 PM)
itallian beef...forbidden zone....come on dude....please

Yellow says: (6:16:49 PM)

and compassion...all and only compassion from me

AHDVNHAY says: (6:17:01 PM)
I would like to

Yellow says: (6:17:20 PM)
then come on over!

Yellow says: (6:18:02 PM)
I haven't grown horns...I'm just me...just amy...and compassion

AHDVNHAY says: (6:18:31 PM)
it would take me at least forty five minutes to get there

Yellow says: (6:18:58 PM)
brian's out back chopping wood...we aren't eating for awhile

AHDVNHAY says: (6:19:09 PM)
I dunno

Yellow says: (6:19:23 PM)
I'm just me Jon

Yellow says: (6:19:32 PM)
and you are you

Yellow says: (6:19:53 PM)
so if you can't I respect that

AHDVNHAY says: (6:20:00 PM)
I can

AHDVNHAY says: (6:20:11 PM)
but I don't think I have the heart for it.

Yellow says: (6:20:40 PM)
ok

Yellow says: (6:21:23 PM)
I guess I don't really know what you think...so I don't know how to gage level of awkwardness

Yellow says: (6:22:08 PM)
I am going for the "be here now" deal

AHDVNHAY says: (6:22:14 PM)
ok

Yellow says: (6:22:30 PM)
you do your deal...it's all good

AHDVNHAY says: (6:22:32 PM)
I am going for the "having an existential crisis" deal

AHDVNHAY says: (6:22:34 PM)

lol

Yellow says: (6:22:48 PM)
right on...good on ya!

Yellow says: (6:22:59 PM)
always a nice choice

AHDVNHAY says: (6:23:00 PM)
I really don't think I'd be good company for dinner

Yellow says: (6:23:01 PM)
lol

Yellow says: (6:23:08 PM)
ok

Yellow says: (6:23:14 PM)
no worries

Yellow says: (6:24:16 PM)
I can be your friend and just friend if it is to be....I hope you will want to continue as we were

AHDVNHAY says: (6:24:35 PM)
I would like to

Yellow says: (6:25:20 PM)
right on

Yellow says: (6:26:08 PM)
then there ya have it...

AHDVNHAY says: (6:26:43 PM)
I suppose so

Yellow says: (6:27:40 PM)
the door...with the question marks on the other side...exists

Yellow says: (6:27:50 PM)
always...

Yellow says: (6:28:32 PM)
does that fit your existential crisis deal

AHDVNHAY says: (6:29:03 PM)
I suppose it does.

Yellow says: (6:29:12 PM)
you drew it!

Yellow says: (6:29:24 PM)
you made it real

Yellow says: (6:29:39 PM)

well;....sorta ya know

AHDVNHAY says: (6:30:05 PM)
yeah

Yellow says: (6:32:52 PM)
um dude...are you gonna be awake tomorrow?

AHDVNHAY says: (6:33:00 PM)
no clue

Yellow says: (6:33:09 PM)
ok

Yellow says: (6:33:30 PM)
never mind

Yellow says: (6:36:00 PM)
soz got bumped

Yellow says: (6:36:09 PM)
most inauspicious

Yellow says: (6:36:17 PM)
timing wise

AHDVNHAY says: (6:36:35 PM)
oh

Yellow says: (6:36:55 PM)
not mad or anything at all....wtf am I saying...

Yellow says: (6:36:58 PM)
anyway

Yellow says: (6:37:14 PM) did you put up more burroughs stuff?

AHDVNHAY says: (6:37:25 PM)
nope

Yellow says: (6:37:37 PM)
oh

AHDVNHAY says: (6:37:38 PM)
I'm watching a documentary about him now though

Yellow says: (6:37:54 PM)
you wanna not me keep chatting right now

AHDVNHAY says: (6:38:01 PM)
I don't know.

AHDVNHAY says: (6:38:10 PM)

I'm still shook

Yellow says: (6:39:25 PM)

ok...tomorrow Maya will be put to sleep....if you are feeling like it's karmically ok...I could probably use talking to a friend...just chatting ya know....that's all I'll ask

AHDVNHAY says: (6:39:41 PM)

ok

Yellow says: (6:39:47 PM)

yes I am too...

Yellow says: (6:40:24 PM)

I'm going to get dinner finished...ttyp..

Yellow says: (6:40:44 PM)

enjoy the documentary

AHDVNHAY says: (6:40:53 PM)

see ya soon

Yellow says: (6:41:00 PM)

k

While I am STILL here...

I have a couple more things to say about karma, or cause and effect, or free will vs. determinism, or whatever one wants to call it, as it plays out in the Matrix trilogy.

First, I think it would have better furthered the theme of transcendence, so essential to the story arc of M1, had the Wachowskis used recognition of the patterns of coincidences within the Matrix to lead Neo to characters of greater omniscience. I mean that there should have been more intensive context clues hidden in the shot compositions (both intra and inter) of the manipulation of the scenes surrounding the key characters in the trilogy, at least. The key-maker himself again is the only exception to this, with the pillars behind him covered in keys harkening back to the power plant.

This might have taken the edge off some of the "action" scenes somewhat perhaps, but the suspense would still have played (consider Sin City) just as well as the actual snot-nosed dialogue we get to forward the plot instead of any meaning following from such comments as "every floor is wired with explosives," etc.

All I'm saying is the Wachowskis could have used alot of techniques to drop better clues of their own omniscience as story-tellers within the context of their story, and left a more interesting "trail of bread crumbs" for the audience to follow through the story's shifting contexts.

The whole plotline crumples under scrutiny faster than an electron struck by a photon when one is forced by the wooden characters and tin-eared dialogue (you know what's changed in the last six hours?) to question whether the Wachowskis even combined were really in control of the plotline and the characters while writing, or whether they simply let their imaginations run away with them?

It's quite clear, at least to me, that the character of Hamman may as well not even exist for how little good he actually does at explaining what the topic of the discussion is. And he is merely typical of my disappointment with the whole sopa-opera cast of characters in the sequels.

And I swear the proliferation of Smiths was worse than any of the other, other than by fans unexplained, continuity errors in the story-arc as a whole. It's all based on how the Wachowskis view the audience: and Bane says it best when he says "dull cow eyes... etc. etc." Now, the fact that the audience is supposed to be left gaping like a herd of ideological chattle is taken for granted with such scenes as the Smith-Bane connection, and the "suspense" of such scenes (will they have a good line of explanatory dialogue yet??) is meant only to distract us fools away from asking the real issues like WHAT DID NEO MEAN WHEN HE SAID SMITH HAD "FOUND A WAY TO COPY HIMSELF"? That, in and of itself, and alone, does not compute the entire fan-fiction equation of Smith with a computer-virus.

Of course, since the Wachowskis did manage to demonstrate in M1 their ability to "bend" the laws of karma, then we are all expected to allow them to present whatever contrived piece of grabage follow-up they like.

The Oracle's speech to Neo (and yes, that's a monologue folks, no questions being asked there....!) in the ghetto playground sounds alot like the Architect's speech as well: a bunch of non sequitor general terms being thrown around to make the authors sound big. As explanations they are insufficient, except, admittedly, alone to drive the plot. And yet it is on the encounters between characters, and not changes in set or setting of the protagonist alone, that the plotline is driven.

If it were me, what I would do would be to start with decent enough characters that it is NOT necessary to rely on their encounters alone to drive the plot, and set the scene more by placing context-clues in the backgrounds that eventually form the pieces of the puzzle answer of "what is the Matrix?"

I suppose this will surprise some of you, but might not some others, but I am actually a big MWAM theory fan. I think that MWAM theory still hasn't gotten its day in court, so to speak, and, to those who would say it has, I would still say the jury is out. I, however, am an optimist, the last of a dying breed, and you won't see many old dinosaurs like me wandering around these halls of justice. I had the highest hopes for the Matrix trilogy the day of the release of Reloaded. But, upon gauging audience reaction, I saw my hopes dashed on the rocks as well.

I had hoped for the discovery within the code of the matrix of a dimensional nexus, a way to open up a portal directly to any other point within the Matrix system. I thought this would be a neat "bonus level" to reality, a kind of "glitch" in the system exploitable by the hackers to be able to move (body-jump) like the agents. It would "one up" the Wachowskis above everyone else by lightyears. Alas, this never occurred.

Instead we were given this hilarious parody of an MWAM with the blue and red outfits in zion, and the eventual trip to Machine City. Machine City... notice the architecture of the spires... how it so closely resembles the spires of the Emerald City in the Wizard of Oz? Well all of that is simply the Wachowskis using the Wizard of Oz to screw the audience over and deny us any reasonable solutions satisfactory to our better theories.

All of this bullshit ought to be causing some mental erosion by now, so I guess I'll draw the line for a moment and stop to recollect myself.

Never give out your password or credit card number in an instant message conversation. To help prevent infection by a computer virus or worm, never accept or open any file or link in an instant message until you verify its authenticity with the sender.

Daryl says: (9:23:32 AM) di left

Daryl says: (9:23:46 AM)
you there

AHDVNHAY says: (9:23:49 AM)
yes

Daryl says: (9:24:03 AM)
she's back

Di has been added to the conversation.

AHDVNHAY says: (9:24:13 AM) did you get my last message?

Di says: (9:24:23 AM) im here

Daryl says: (9:24:28 AM)
no

AHDVNHAY says: (9:24:45 AM) figures.

Daryl says: (9:24:46 AM)
Di you was going to explain what I do not know

AHDVNHAY says: (9:24:51 AM)
I had said...

AHDVNHAY says: (9:24:58 AM)
"which is what exactly?"

AHDVNHAY says: (9:25:17 AM) to which I added, but was cut off, "the free exchange of bigotry?"

AHDVNHAY says: (9:25:41 AM)
I think the forum is worth exchanging better ideas than the basest of emotions

Daryl says: (9:25:57 AM)
thank you that is exactly what I said

AHDVNHAY says: (9:26:18 AM) what you said what you did?

Daryl says: (9:26:53 AM)
That faggot thing came when he called me a penis. And I still took it off and his thing is still there

Daryl says: (9:27:41 AM)
Di you there

Di says: (9:27:49 AM)
yes, Im listening

Daryl says: (9:28:09 AM) what were you going to write earlier

Di says: (9:28:17 AM)
nothing.

Daryl says: (9:28:22 AM)
hmm

AHDVNHAY says: (9:28:26 AM) this is not everyone's idea of brotherhood

AHDVNHAY says: (9:28:41 AM) the name calling is not in line with that

Daryl says: (9:28:49 AM)
I said that too, not trying to take to much credit

AHDVNHAY says: (9:28:59 AM) nor is "competition" for the "good"

Daryl says: (9:29:02 AM)
but if you read his post they are everywhere

AHDVNHAY says: (9:29:17 AM) what do you mean by this: " not trying to take to much credit"

AHDVNHAY says: (9:29:19 AM)
??

Daryl says: (9:29:24 AM)
it seems too many people want to be right

AHDVNHAY says: (9:29:30 AM)
you included.

Daryl says: (9:29:56 AM) like how, I just answer post and I don't get too deep into any matter at all

AHDVNHAY says: (9:30:04 AM) no depth?

AHDVNHAY says: (9:30:07 AM)
that is how.

Daryl says: (9:30:34 AM) somethings are just not worth it especially when you see it moving in a negative direction

AHDVNHAY says: (9:30:46 AM) then act accordingly.

Daryl says: (9:31:02 AM) excuse me come on now you have to talk to yourself also

AHDVNHAY says: (9:31:11 AM) right speech does not equal contrived to deceit.

Daryl says: (9:31:16 AM)
its like you are sitting here bashing me and I am the one that took it all

AHDVNHAY says: (9:31:25 AM) took all what?

Daryl says: (9:31:35 AM)
the name calling and etc

AHDVNHAY says: (9:31:56 AM) you don;t know how such a thing could have possibly happened to you?

Daryl says: (9:32:05 AM)
I didn't start coming out my mouth disrespecting nobody I gave free information like everyone else on the board

AHDVNHAY says: (9:32:09 AM)
we make our own energy, Daryl.,

Daryl says: (9:32:25 AM)
ok so I guess you did the samething too

AHDVNHAY says: (9:32:34 AM)
I believe that, yes.

AHDVNHAY says: (9:32:45 AM) which is why people don't call me "penis."

Daryl says: (9:33:04 AM)
ok so can you also speak to yourself. You are judging besides judging yourself

AHDVNHAY says: (9:33:16 AM)
I am arbitrating.

Daryl says: (9:33:46 AM)
that should be done also including yourself

Daryl says: (9:34:05 AM)
It shouldn't be "you" but "us"

AHDVNHAY says: (9:34:06 AM)
I am a representative for other parties. I do not, myself, sit in judgment.

Daryl says: (9:34:40 AM)

oh so because you are a member of the Io you have the right to cross judge but leave yourself out

AHDVNHAY says: (9:34:50 AM)
no.

Daryl says: (9:34:58 AM) thats what you are saying

AHDVNHAY says: (9:35:01 AM) because I am a human and I have free will.

Daryl says: (9:35:08 AM)
ok so do I

AHDVNHAY says: (9:35:13 AM) to do what?

Daryl says: (9:35:19 AM) whatever I choose

AHDVNHAY says: (9:35:23 AM)
do you arbitrate? or do you pass judgment?

Daryl says: (9:35:39 AM) neither I give my own belief

Daryl says: (9:35:50 AM) which everyone seem to do here

AHDVNHAY says: (9:35:54 AM) which is that "I" am a judge of you.

AHDVNHAY says: (9:36:01 AM) is that your belief?

Daryl says: (9:36:15 AM)
You are acting as though

AHDVNHAY says: (9:36:31 AM) do you see me as hostile, adversarial, ads judgmental?

Daryl says: (9:36:33 AM)
A judge also shall be judged

Daryl says: (9:36:49 AM) to some degree

Daryl says: (9:37:13 AM)
you lack the reason to include yourself in the equation

AHDVNHAY says: (9:37:23 AM) am I a witness, am I the prosecutor, am I the defense representing the people? Why is there only a single character, the judge himself, in your conception of the Law?

AHDVNHAY says: (9:37:26 AM) do I?

AHDVNHAY says: (9:37:34 AM)
or am I baiting you?

Daryl says: (9:38:17 AM)
where do you get this idea of me being a judge that is only the attribute of the name I have taken.
To be a final judge takes years

AHDVNHAY says: (9:38:27 AM)
you brought it up

Daryl says: (9:38:31 AM)
and then i still don't have the right

Daryl says: (9:38:44 AM) no I gave my attribute thats it

AHDVNHAY says: (9:38:53 AM) attribute?

AHDVNHAY says: (9:38:56 AM) judging?

AHDVNHAY says: (9:39:01 AM) these are not my words.

Daryl says: (9:39:02 AM) what lord osiris meant

AHDVNHAY says: (9:39:24 AM) then you have me confused with Aquarian1, perhaps

AHDVNHAY says: (9:39:41 AM) or perhaps you have us all confused with someone who you think is supposed to care.

Daryl says: (9:39:48 AM)
I think we are both confused right now

AHDVNHAY says: (9:39:54 AM)
I am sober.

Daryl says: (9:40:01 AM)
see now you are going on the deep end

AHDVNHAY says: (9:40:11 AM) too deep for you?

Daryl says: (9:40:19 AM)
I really don't think so

AHDVNHAY says: (9:40:26 AM)
then what?

Di says: (9:40:35 AM)
This is getting out of hand gentlemen

Daryl says: (9:40:51 AM)
You have no idea what level I am on and to assume that shows your character come on now we didn't start off like this

AHDVNHAY says: (9:41:06 AM)
I have made no such assumption

Daryl says: (9:41:09 AM)
I haven't done anything wrong to you

AHDVNHAY says: (9:41:19 AM) and I agree with Soror Hutchinson.

Daryl says: (9:41:40 AM)
I belong to another IO board and it is nothing like this at all

AHDVNHAY says: (9:41:47 AM) addy?

Di says: (9:42:49 AM)
Maybe it's time to finish up. This behaviour is becoming threatening. We are getting no where fast

Daryl says: (9:43:05 AM)
yes I can see it is getting threatening,

Di says: (9:43:17 AM)
Do I have to watch my back Daryl?

Daryl says: (9:43:26 AM) what the heck are you talking about

Daryl says: (9:43:40 AM)
I don't pass threats and there is no need for it

AHDVNHAY says: (9:43:55 AM) what is the url for the other board?

Daryl says: (9:44:21 AM)
I have to get it, I don't post there just visit

Daryl says: (9:44:39 AM)
i think its illuminati.org

AHDVNHAY says: (9:44:39 AM) beonging is so subjective.

AHDVNHAY says: (9:46:05 AM)
one sec, brb

Daryl says: (9:46:43 AM)

this is why I say people have to be prepared for this.

Daryl says: (9:47:22 AM) now you have my address and IP address I don't think I will pose any threats to nobody, I think I would have to worry more on the other side

Di says: (9:49:06 AM)

what do you think AHDVNHAY?

Daryl says: (9:49:48 AM)

k

Daryl says: (9:49:55 AM)

i am back

Di says: (9:50:08 AM)

is everyone here?

Daryl says: (9:50:27 AM)

I think he went to go check out the site

Di says: (9:50:38 AM)

ok

Daryl says: (9:51:34 AM)

i never went through this in my life;

Di says: (9:52:07 AM)

what's that?

Daryl says: (9:52:39 AM)

all of this. From trying to do something good by freely posting to all the chaos

Di says: (9:53:39 AM)

I have to wait back for Jon Im afraid.

Daryl says: (9:53:46 AM)

of what

Di says: (9:54:06 AM)

means I have to wait back for him

AHDVNHAY says: (9:54:08 AM)

back

Daryl says: (9:54:27 AM)

What are you saying di that the only way you can speak if Jon is here,

Di says: (9:54:48 AM)

is that up for discussion?

Daryl says: (9:55:34 AM)

I think I had enough of the pounding. I don't see anybody else getting this. So I am threw. If I am blessed to be in the IO down the road then so be it. But I deserve way better

AHDVNHAY says: (9:55:56 AM) you get what you give

AHDVNHAY says: (9:56:00 AM) that will be true always

Daryl says: (9:56:29 AM)
I didn't do anything. and what about you man, this is crazy. I guess you are saying you have the right but I don't

AHDVNHAY says: (9:56:43 AM) the right to do nothign?

AHDVNHAY says: (9:56:51 AM)
if you had done nothing, why would we be here?

Daryl says: (9:57:12 AM) so you are saying you did nothing. list what I done I am waiting

Di says: (9:57:36 AM)
I must go, Jon can finish for me, good afternoon Daryl

AHDVNHAY says: (9:57:43 AM)
see ya soon Di

Di has left the conversation.

Daryl says: (9:59:00 AM)
I can list everyones opinions and I don't think mines was anywhere worse. I gave a better side of the new changes to come in effect

AHDVNHAY says: (9:59:23 AM) what are MY opinions, then?

Daryl says: (9:59:37 AM)
I would have to copy and paste them all,

AHDVNHAY says: (9:59:49 AM)
Daryl says:(9:59:00 AM)
I can list everyones opinions

Daryl says: (10:00:21 AM)
why is it that a person can call me a penis, and I say that sounds gayish, you can say someone is writing bullshit but I have to feel it

Daryl says: (10:00:55 AM)
it this is what the IO is about then I can't have that. Double standards is bad for everyone

AHDVNHAY says: (10:01:04 AM)
I said he had cited writing that contained fallacies.

Daryl says: (10:01:14 AM)
you said bullshit

AHDVNHAY says: (10:01:17 AM)
you used the word "faggot"

AHDVNHAY says: (10:01:30 AM)
I didn't say he had WRITTEN bullshit

AHDVNHAY says: (10:01:35 AM) just cited it

Daryl says: (10:01:43 AM)
and he called me a dick excuse me king of them

AHDVNHAY says: (10:02:07 AM) childish.

Daryl says: (10:02:08 AM)
he started with the gays names

Daryl says: (10:02:33 AM)
NOT ME are you writing him banging him all day. What makes him better

AHDVNHAY says: (10:02:59 AM) nothing and he is

AHDVNHAY says: (10:03:00 AM) not

Daryl says: (10:03:19 AM) i took it off I apologized for something I really didn't have too, but its still no good for you and you and him argued also

AHDVNHAY says: (10:03:41 AM)
I am not defending his actions

Daryl says: (10:03:46 AM) i am a grown man and you have me feeling like I am your child

AHDVNHAY says: (10:03:49 AM)
I am merely questioning yours

Daryl says: (10:03:50 AM) yes you are

Daryl says: (10:04:04 AM)
Did you question yourself or him

AHDVNHAY says: (10:04:27 AM)
if you don't like this line of questioning

Daryl says: (10:04:33 AM)

did you say that calling someone a penis is inappropriate for this forum

AHDVNHAY says: (10:04:36 AM)
you do not have to be engaged in it

Daryl says: (10:04:46 AM)
that is the easy way out

Daryl says: (10:04:57 AM)
besides admitting that you did take sides

Daryl says: (10:05:55 AM) and on top of it, he didnt even see the faggot thing I don't think too many people did

Daryl says: (10:06:19 AM) and if they did they would have seen my answer to why I said it

Daryl says: (10:06:39 AM)
it was directed to his statement not him as a person

Daryl says: (10:07:20 AM)
I'm tired of trying to prove myself

Daryl says: (10:07:40 AM)
I don't have to validate defending myself

AHDVNHAY says: (10:07:48 AM)
I agree

AHDVNHAY says: (10:08:00 AM) but you should behave.

AHDVNHAY says: (10:08:08 AM)
I mean as an example.

Daryl says: (10:08:19 AM)
AGAIN I DIDN'T START NOTHING. IT WAS HIM

Daryl says: (10:08:43 AM)
Look Jon I am from the streets if a man throws a stone you throw it back and harder

AHDVNHAY says: (10:09:14 AM) and then when someone throws a stone harder than yours back at you?

AHDVNHAY says: (10:09:17 AM)
then what?

Daryl says: (10:09:39 AM) everything goes in a circle jon

AHDVNHAY says: (10:09:48 AM) really?

AHDVNHAY says: (10:09:52 AM)

I hadn't ever thought of that.

Daryl says: (10:10:42 AM)

You can't expect a person that doesn't know you from jump street to take an insult and keep it moving

AHDVNHAY says: (10:10:52 AM)

why not?

AHDVNHAY says: (10:11:01 AM)

that's how adults behave.

Daryl says: (10:11:01 AM)

come on now keep it real

Daryl says: (10:11:11 AM)

then you wouldn't have engaged him

Daryl says: (10:11:21 AM)

that wasn't adult like

AHDVNHAY says: (10:11:27 AM)

perhaps not.

Daryl says: (10:11:45 AM) talking to a man about genitals is gay no matter how you put it

AHDVNHAY says: (10:11:50 AM)

but thanking someone and disagreeing with their sources of information are miles away from name calling.

Daryl says: (10:12:05 AM)

you thanked him at the last part come on

AHDVNHAY says: (10:12:15 AM)

I engaged in a dialogue.

AHDVNHAY says: (10:12:19 AM)

where are we going?

Daryl says: (10:12:34 AM)

I don't know you are still making me feel like I did something wrong

AHDVNHAY says: (10:12:50 AM)

I can't MAKE you feel guilty.

Daryl says: (10:13:01 AM)

I don't feel guilty at all

Daryl says: (10:13:26 AM)

I just don't like feeling as though I have no right to defend myself

AHDVNHAY says: (10:13:52 AM)

I know the feeling.

AHDVNHAY says: (10:14:14 AM) but as you get used to it, you'll find you have no need to.

Daryl says: (10:14:28 AM) so if you do then why make me feel like it, why can't you say I understand daryl but you did kind of go hard. Then we could have left it like that.

Daryl says: (10:15:03 AM)
there was no harm done because the post was deleted without any mention at all

AHDVNHAY says: (10:15:26 AM)
I think of this conversation as like sparring.

Daryl says: (10:15:47 AM)
heck you I throw then you lol

Daryl says: (10:16:06 AM) heck yeah lol I throw then you lol

AHDVNHAY says: (10:16:12 AM)
yes.

AHDVNHAY says: (10:16:22 AM) but sometimes, discourse must be calm.

Daryl says: (10:16:29 AM) very much so

AHDVNHAY says: (10:16:42 AM) so long as we all do understand that, in public, on the forum, it's better to keep cool

Daryl says: (10:16:52 AM)
I decided not to answer post that I feel will bring the evil out of me

AHDVNHAY says: (10:17:01 AM)
good

Daryl says: (10:17:05 AM)
yes your right for the Both of us

AHDVNHAY says: (10:17:10 AM) agreed

Daryl says: (10:17:13 AM)
vool

AHDVNHAY says: (10:17:15 AM) now, I need a smoke, so brb

Daryl says: (10:17:15 AM)
cool

Daryl says: (10:17:19 AM)

me too

AHDVNHAY says: (10:17:22 AM)
lol, "vool," LOL

AHDVNHAY says: (10:17:23 AM)
hehe

Daryl says: (10:17:34 AM)
love my cigars

AHDVNHAY says: (10:17:37 AM) that will be our new "illuminati" word for "cool" then

Daryl says: (10:17:46 AM) what vool

Daryl says: (10:17:49 AM) haha

AHDVNHAY says: (10:17:50 AM) sure, lol

Daryl says: (10:17:53 AM)
lol

AHDVNHAY says: (10:17:56 AM)
as in, kept it vool

AHDVNHAY says: (10:18:04 AM) anyway, brb

Daryl says: (10:18:10 AM)
k

[quote="Randy"]the Wachowskis didn't really care all that much about the human characters. It's the programs they loved.[/quote]

Right on. I think that's the whole reason they chose to bring back Smith. They needed a problem to occur within the programming software of the Matrix so that we would have an excuse to see the hardware of machine city as dependent on Neo (the One) as a necessary conduit between the two. just as is stated throughout, the humans and machines "need" each other, but this is only accurate within the fictional "Matrix Universe," not in reality: hardware does not depend on people to be able to interact with its own software. This is one of the big issues of modern AI researcher thinking overlooked by the Wachowskis: machines, the intellectual offspring of humanity, will eventually not be dependent on their parent species to interface between the "interior" software mind and the "exterior" hardware body. "Combined with a form of fusion" is no excuse for the intentional misrepresentation of this key issue at the crux of the trilogy's story-arc. Now, had M1 been a standalone movie, this issue would have been an acceptable casualty, so to speak, but given two further sequels to account for this essential plot-hole and failing to justify it as a premise is inexcusable, from my point of view. If I had been given that much money to make movies, you could goddamn well bet I'd give it my best shot. I would never have come off half-cocked by bringing back Smith to account for the transcendence of Neo from a battery to a circuit-breaker. Even if the Wachowskis had left the issue of the machines depending on the humans for their power-supply an unelaborated upon macguffin, and chosen to follow up in the sequels with the idea of Neo being the "hundredth monkey" to be freed setting off a chain reaction whereby suddenly all the human minds plugged into the Matrix were aware of their choice, and used this excuse to prop up the inevitable visit to Machine City to intervene between the arbitrarily "necessarily" interdependent machines and humans, this would have been a better solution, to my tastes at least, than seeing the Oracle having ostensibly created the Smith-virus in order to blackmail Deux into smuggling in Sati and simultaneously making the Architect look about as smart as the Trainman. As Randy says, keep the importance on Neo, not on this petty cast of background characters. If Neo had, at the end of M1, been talking directly to the sentient mainframe itself, and had this sentient mainframe been successfully depicted as decentralised, location-less, impersonal, a "control system" instead of central, hidden, goofy and as the Architect, then the whole story could have still been told, but without having to add in more program-characters. The sentient mainframe could have manifested itself through a series of pattern-recognition tests, as I have been suggesting here in my earlier posts, or it could simply have been that each time Neo warped the "rules" inside the Matrix, the more it degraded the programming code itself, thus threatening the Machine City central computer. It wouldn't really matter HOW it was presented, only that it should not have been anthropomorphic. Even Deux' assumption of the "baby" face is a parody on the concept of the "machines needing humans" premise. The machines choosing to continue keeping the human race alive as a power-source is as unforgivably stupid a premise as the humans "blackening" the sky to block out solar power. It's like thinking an umbrella to stop a rain storm or that if you close your eyes you become invisible. It sounds neat, until you try it, and it doesn't work. In any event, there were countless of other scenarios the Wachowskis could have used to get Neo to Machine City without having brought back Smith. Anyone disagree?

-ben

[quote="George"]I just entered this forum earlier today because I'm interested in the Illuminati. I'm sort of confused by the post I am reading. The Aquarian 1 has some interesting questions. I have heard conspiracy theories surrounding the Illuminati and many of his questions, well a few of his questions, are interesting enough for me to see if they can be answered. I know, well I don't really know much about the Illuminati, but I have heard it is a secretive group. Is there any validity to the questions posed? Or should I just forget about them?

george[/quote]

There is validity in every question, and that degree of validity, no matter how small, contains a shred of truth, that is, the answer to the question lies within the question itself. The questions themselves, in other words, are more than the sum of their answers. Some facts are lies, and some fiction is true, so there is really no way for any of us to rightly say, using simple words, "yes" or "no" any given answer is true, or put more drastically, simply factual. Reality, no matter how aggregated, is homogeneously probabilistic. Anthropically, you can only apply duality, let alone the plenum, to the reality principle because the One Reality and your "self" definition are capable, in their inherent potential, or larval state, of falling apart. In brief, as long as your definition of your interior "self" is distinct from your definition of exterior "reality," then the madness of the questioning nature will persist in perpetually blossoming out meaningless answers. All answers to all questions can either be true or lies, fact or fiction, etc. etc. and the only way to prove them for yourself is for you yourself to decide. And of course, the six fundamental questions of reasoning factor in as well: WHO are you asking, WHAT questions, HOW are you phrasing it, etc. etc. etc. These things too will determine your belief by limiting what you come to know. For example, if you ask me what my OPINION is on the Illuminati, I could tell you more easily than if you asked me what was on the corner of two streets in a town I'd never seen. Some people sometimes allow their OPINIONS to get out of the control of their better judgment. They twist the turn table of truth and lies to get to the proof for the answer they believe. I think our intentions here are clear enough to anyone with eyes to look: we are the universe speaking to itself, our very lives a conversation in the mind of God. In Reality some people have something to prove, but only those who question and to only the same degree they do.

-ben

It is important that we should be genuine to ourselves. In the case of Aquarian1, who I expect may very well remain free enough to return under another username and/or using an alternate IP (if he felt it absolutely necessary to do so), it was simply that his own energies were turned against himself. It is self-destructive to presume to have all the answers, and yet to challenge skeptics who have found different facts to prove true. If it arises in you the desire to question the validity of someone else's answers, then it remains in you the uncertainty of your own. If you doubt what you believe, you do not yet know it to be true, in which case, you will eventually project your theory outward and then challenge it yourself to test it to see if it is true or not. When you do this, if your theory is false, your energy will come back to you, sometimes even tenfold if you choose to project it against dissonant beliefs (such as a white professor at a historically black university who calls his students "niggers" and then wants to fall back on the argument of "free speech," as was the case with my own father.) In other words, when you seek to eradicate another's point of view and replace it with your own, it will ultimately only be your own point of view that will get lost along the way, and probably end up changing eventually anyway. In short, when you fight your enemy, you fight only yourself. Therefore, as much as you can, do not hate, and do not fear. When you act on fears, you will manifest by your projected energy a frightening outcome. When you act on your hatreds, your prejudices, your uncertain beliefs, and what you KNOW not to be true, then you will only destroy yourself. Of course, there is some enlightenment at the end of even this; it is something self-destructive, which can be a good thing, if not for the self, then at least for everyone else. It is also the law of transcending one's karma to dissolve the self into nothingness. Some would argue this is the same mentality, and that neither is right. There is even SOME truth in that line of thinking. Afterall, after everything else is disproven, Truth will continue to be all that exists. Because it is ultimate, the truth may seem frightening in its vast scope, however once one allows themselves to get used to the idea over time, this feeling will pass.

In basic language: "questioning is encouraged, but prejudice discouraged."

-ben

I'd like to comment briefly on the seemingly (though I'm sure 99% of earth's population wouldn't even care if they WERE fully informed of this) prevalent modern "conspiracy theory" about the One World Government Agenda and its ties to Satanic ritual abuse that underly and pervade most of the preceding comments (which I'm choosing not to read, based on the fact I'm already familiar with this data myself, as, I feel confident, are most of the rest of us who would happen to be reading these very words I write now).

Now, I will neither deny nor defend these reprehensible accusations. As an Illuminist, I have sworn a vow of honesty at all costs. I would like, however, to clear something up at this point. By Illuminist, I mean, one who has discovered enlightenment for themselves. I do not believe this online Illuminati-Order and its initial group of adherants here in Tallahassee, Florida, United States of America, are the people who are "at the bottom" of either the One World Government, the Satanic ritual abuse cults, or both, should they one day actually prove to be the same. I do not personally believe them to be, but let's take a moment to see for ourselves shall we?

Consider this idea, as only one minor example of its kind: when we are babies we are closest to nature possible. We experience the bliss of innocence, and are in our most natural state of grace. One could say, 'closest to God.' As we age, the distance grows between our 'self' definition and the undescribably ineffable naked reality of God. We become a pantheon of men, seeking to return to the paradisaical idyll of youth. We seek this strange, washed out luminescent glow everywhere we go, and look for it behind all doors. Some people find it in marriage, some in promiscuity. Some find it in the halls of government while others find it at the tip of a needle. Whatever it is to us, it is important to remember it is something that we no longer naturally have. Some find false satisfaction in the temporary fix, "ignorance is bliss," or "more is better," or "kill a queer for Christ." And thank God for this, since if everyone were able to achieve permanent transcendence, we would have no use for physical labour, civil laws, society in general and civilisation at all. We would basically revert to the primitive "youth" of our species, when the world for us consisted exclusively of interbreeding family tribes covering little more geography than southern Africa. Of course, some fools warn us this could be in our future again as well, should our present civilisation go the way of Atlantis. But then, even the Atlanteans were probably similarly warned by nay-sayers at the time, everyone's a critic.

So, those people who comprise the portions of our present population are probably pretty much the same now as they have always been, ratio-wise. Those who hate, those who love, those who seek light and those who throw stones. Now, as usual, if we fix one variable factor within our reality, it will appear that the other variables pass through it. So we see some famous bloodlines pop up in one group or another, and we see some random people who appear more enlightened, by our own standards, than we are. It all depends on what one seeks to find. Let's say you have a famous person, say, a politician. And let's say you have an unknown person, let's say a magician. Say the magician wanted to influence the politician to, let's say, legalise marijuana. Well, the magician would set things in motion by planting the proper suggestions along the right grapevine to get to the politician from someone they trust. One person can follow this six-degree rule out themselves even, but then, there is really so little point in that. If it is that important, use the energy to make the mountain come to you.

Therefore, I believe, there is probably a lot of circumstantial overlap between people in power and reprehensible (by society's standards) sexual perversions. That is one thing. It is quite another thing to speculate that all these people secretly know each other, and plot together how best to achieve their goals collectively. In other words, I do not believe in an elite union of perverts. It has been my experience that most sexual predators and abusive pedophiles don't even know who they themselves really are, let alone know of others with whom they would trust to cooperate. Having a fetish, or a drug addiction, makes one far too wary of everybody else alive to be able to successfully form mutually beneficial strategies. Then again, there would of course also be those who believe the conspiracy is a conspiracy of competition, but this is, of course, an oxymoron.

I do not believe that there is more than merely circumstantial evidence however to link the social "haves" and the perversities that plague a sexually repressed civilisation such as the western business world. The two groups always share about the same ratio of overlap between their populations, but it is my experience that the individual examples of these particular people have little or no idea how to organise together in more than pair bonds (and that rarely) on the basis of this factor.

Often, people who possess great deals of authority over others lead a kind of double life, with their task specialised duties separate from the hobbies and habits by which to pass time. Some people build model ships inside bottles, and who is to say such a habit as this is more unacceptable than consensual sex between an adult and a minor, or God forbid, smoking cannabis? (When one seeks the true light, they put the safety of others first, and take precautions not to hurt anyone in their own pursuit of happiness.)

Now, while I do not believe that the public rulers of the world are witches, or that the true rulers of the world are sexual predators, so too have I now stated my belief that many public rulers of the world are also sexual predators, and I'd like to also add that I believe the true rulers of the world are in fact magicians in the sense of witches and wizards.

However, since the purpose of this post was to address that school of "conspriacy theory" that states the public rulers of the world (those who profess the One World Government Agenda) are really all sexual predators (members of a Satanic sexual abuse cult), which I have now done, then I have no excuse to say more than I have already.

-ben

hey,

I have been meditating long and thinking hard about what you have said regarding your seemingly inevitable future.

At first I thought, tell him to skip bail and move to Amsterdam with IXO. Then I thought, I should not make light of this situation. I know how hard prison can be. I know also that "there but for the 'grace of God' go I." I shall not make light of this situation. But...

I have decided it is important that I give you something now while I can. It reflects our mutual interests best, as they pertain to the topics we have discussed in our time together on this internet bulletin board. I want you to download this, print it out, and keep it with you in the "pen." Read, understand, and, at the end of this PM I will give you my land address. I want you to write to me, cypress, and to tell me what you are studying from this, and I want you to know I will be here to answer all questions, from now on, with or without this bulletin board between you and I.

<http://www.benpadiiah.com/bookstore/bookstore/NB2.zip> (99.0 MB)

It may take a while to download this, so while we have a moment, I want to say a couple things. Firstly, you should know. Only insofar as there is such a thing as me, my so-called "self," then "I" am a magician. This is my "little black book" of magick. It will make you as powerful a magician as I am, and, by it propagation between us and among others, will only strengthen us both. Once you have looked at this you'll understand why, but I want you to promise me something:

"I will never show this magick to an enemy except on pain of death, and I will only show it to a friend whom I can be sure I can give a copy of it to, and only to someone from whom I can exact this exact promise."

You might want to write this promise on the cover also, so that it can go with the book. Yes, it's that important to me. I want it known to any whom this information should pass as a result of my giving it to you, may it serve you well, that this promise is as important to me as the whole magick of the information itself.

As I promised, I will give my real contact information to you now, so that you can contact me as you see fit. I do hope I will hear something from you soon about the material in this work.

<http://www.benpadiiah.com> benpadiiah@gmail.com
benpadiiah@hotmail.com
Jonathan Barlow Gee
(850) 893 - 3652
2223 Tallahassee Drive
Tallahassee Florida 32309 USA

Until you are sent up, I want you to know I am here, and after you're in, I want you to know I am still right where I was. A pen-pal to them, but a constant flame to you. Something outside of your hard time. Ooops, out of time.

Read that and write back, or leave a message at the beep. Include the word illuminati and use your screen name if you do.

-bengee

[quote="lordosiris"]This is something we all must remember daily.

A man, without the ability, to reason is mentally dead. This man must be able to create and control his own universe according to his abilities and needs. The interest of this conscious man is his deeds, his lineage, and the world. He is a defender of the meek, patriot, charitable, and forgiving. The conscious warrior always seeks that higher understanding. His dream is liberty and equality. The divine thoughts, in him, manifests a heaven outward. This man looks, to leave behind, something for the world, for in that he knows he lives. He is guided by that which is right. His means is just and noble. This all is for a man that is a conscious warrior. My thoughts on a illumined man[/quote]

I believe a common theme that runs through much of your writing, lordosiris, but that seems particularly applicable here, is the importance of courage.

Insofar as we can, we do create our reality around us. We mediate out what we don't want to hear, we mediate in what we wish to, etc. This is part of the experience of being human. However, for some of us, life itself seems threatening and even sometimes overwhelming. This does not mean the law of our co-creation of our reality is being broken. It means only that for some reason, some part of us has become aware of our reality at a different angle from what it once was, or in some ways maybe still is; we have some degree of ascension, through opening our senses or through their being overstimulated, to where we see ourselves as alien, from elsewhere, or a stranger to, our own immediate environment, and the very reality we co-create. We may seem to be innocent to the entire concept of co-creation, but some of us are fully aware that we are propagating pre-existent behaviour patterns, and even to some extent or other use this to channel our ancestors' power and accumulate influence over the realities of others. This all simply seems absurd, ridiculous, sinister or dangerous to us for some reason or another.

Therefore, we should remember to be courageous. We should take great, overflowing, enourmous amounts of heart in the fact that we can use our minds themselves to break free of this plenary of potentially upredictable possibilities that comprises our material reality. Potential fields collapse into wells in our aura in perpetuity, yet our sense of self, even if not centred, is ever-present. It is the same with that beyond us, the outside world, our environment, reality, etc. In potential, our mind is actually greater than the world we experience with only our external senses. So we can take heart in that.

We can take heart in our memories and in our imaginations, and we can have hope held high that someday we will be able to remember before the beginning of it all, and imagine beyond the very confines of our physical dimensions. This is therefore necessarily at the heart of illuminism. The heart which we must remember can be all-encompassing of that which is known by the mind as can the mind itself be of that which is real.

Courage is an important trait in us all, all our illumined minds. We should remember daily, or at least as often as possible, that the minds around us, free or not, are not to be considered our property, a mere reflection of our own mind alone, or like pieces in a game that we can move and manipulate in order to gain greater degrees of personal freedom and/or a higher level of control over the greatest number of other people. All people are equally free in potential. We are all born with a free mind.

To have courage in this life means to allow oneself to feel innocence. Even when confronted by a stern authority which catches us off guard, throws us off balance, surprises us with its strictness, or looks down its nose at us, we must not collapse beneath its gaze. We do not need to cop to a plea because we are in every sense not guilty. We feel no shame, and understand our actions to be in alignment with the Will of the Most High, as best as we can understand it, and for the greatest good of all. This is simple enough to say, but for some it is impossibly difficult to live with and to do. If we feel bold we will act daring. This is the law of co-creation, that is, the co-signed law of determinism and of free will, or of cause-and-effect and Do What Thou Wilt. Both agree on this: no matter who tries to make us feel less than them, be it through their suspicion, their judgment, or their force of arms, we will rise up and we will prevail against them because we can feel within our heart of hearts the courage to feel innocent. It is this in us that keeps us free.

This is the centre of the sense of self. The alignment of mind and heart in the innocent courage and freedom necessary to co-create reality. We seek through illuminism only to elevate this sense of self, to increase the degree of liberty among the minds of the oppressed by remembering always that we ourselves are free at heart. This is something I feel is important for us as illuminati to keep such thoughts as these in mind as often as we can.

-ben

Galt, cypress and lordosiris.

Just a reminder among friends to watch how we say what we mean. How leads an interlocuter to why, which is at the heart of who. For example, all too easily can I ask you,

"to whom is moral relativism dangerous, the moral relativist themselves, or to someone other than them?"

because I can assume the answer to,

"why do we assign positive morals to words like 'society' and 'civilisation,' and negative moral value to words like 'terrorism' or even 'relativism'?"

as being

"because we learn this tendency from prevalent, pre-existent authorities."

and so I can then guess that, because prevalent pre-existing authorities have conditioned the users of their morally binary terminologies to defensively challenge those who would question their usage, any of you might easily be able to rattle off a wise-enough sounding reply in apology for this social tendency, such as

"we assign positive moral values to some words and not others because we observe positive and negative events in nature relative to our binary morality, and because we use language to communicate only that difference between natural events and binary morality, so we apply the one to the other verbally in order to describe both."

Wrong. We choose to or choose not to do this. It is irrelevant to an individual which came first, their birth or that of their "nation." Thus words like "patriotism" and "nationalism" are actually MORE "dangerous" because of who is using them how and why. Now, I do not believe in the "danger" of any form of communication (even terrorism, which God Himself would not allow if it were not part of His ineffable Plan, one would think). Therefore I will not say there is a "right" or "wrong" way to say what one really means. Nor, IMO, is there a "right" or "wrong" opinion for anyone to be able to express. God permits all that which is.

You see now, I am reveling in my moral relativism, and yet I have not been struck dead by a bolt from the big blue beyond. So, where is this "danger" you speak of inherent in mere language? Therefore the only other alternative would be that it is "dangerous" to the other person. And this would only be if they were so much the pawn of society's binary morality that they would feel threatened by any differing thoughts and would therefore even kill to defend the perpetuation of society's binary morality.

I feel pity for my friends who wallow yet in defense and in apology for the things they were taught, when there is so much else they could have learned, and I feel pity for my friends who wallow yet in defense and apology for the options they have been allowed for their beliefs, when there is so much else they could have discovered.

On a quick side note, Galt, what did Red China ever do to you, anyway? They probably knit the very sheets you sleep beneath. If anything the least you could do would be to sell them the plans for a thermonuclear ICBM warhead. It's only fair when we are all equal, and as long as the lowest common denominator rules, it's only "just" when we are all equally armed.

-ben

hey LO,

you asked me today about what my beliefs were regarding God and the devil. I believe I answered somewhere along the lines of:

"God is all in all and the devil is all without God."

This answer surprised even me. I have recently realised something I often do is cater an answer to fit the assumed beliefs based on background etc. of the person who is asking me the question. I like to think I do this in order to further understanding on the part of the person asking the question. This is all, IMO, an answer can and should be able to do. The person isn't look for guidance in only one direction, they are asking the question in order to broaden their horizons all around. Telling them they are wrong and then telling them the "right" answer, I have found, usually tends to curl a questioner up on themselves, making them feel stupid and making it that much more difficult for them to grow by learning.

So, when I said that "God is all in all," I was making a statement that I expect would be most acceptable as a definition for most people of most religions, but might especially resonate with you, D. "All in all" to me implies the continuity of the divine character between the Hebrew concept of Elohim as "I am that which I am," and the Moslem conception of Allah as "all," as well as the Rosicrucian (modern neo-Christian) conception of the microcosm containing the macrocosm "as above, so below."

When I said, "the devil is all without God," however was the most affectatious thing for me to have said then. The technique of applying intentional dishonesty serves only pompous pedantry. It is tantamount only to the sin of smirking silence: to pretend to know and not reveal. Bullshit, but I digress.

What does this mean, "the devil is all without God"? It means that, to those who lack knowledge of God but possess only blind belief, those who claim to have any knowledge at all are suspect of having no blind faith. It means that, to those who understand the presence of "divine" or prescient design behind the visible patterns in our universe, their invisible purpose, etc. any who claim to have knowledge of the creation without acknowledgment of its creator are suspect of not seeing with second sight the true beauty behind that which is. It means that, to those with near-sighted facts and to those with far-sighted mythologies, this statement will have certain meaning. To me, all these people are liars and deserve to die, and this statement holds no weight for me whatsoever.

I do not honestly believe in evil, or the anthropomorphication of it. I believe all is part of God's Great Plan, and that therefore, if one anthropomorphises God as Good, and all as God, then all is good.

-ben

I think no matter how much emotion can cloud some of all our assessments of the film, on both sides, (which of course is only a testament to the individual importance and cultural significance of M1), there ought to easily enough be some points we can all agree on, certain facts of the movies which even if we interpret differently, like, dislike, etc. we can freely admit these things were there, were traits, qualities etc. of the films, i.e. to confirm with each other that we did indeed see the same movie.

For example:

1) pacing.

Now whether your knee-jerk reaction is to defend or criticise the sequels, you cannot deny that part of your opinion will be based on your reaction to the pacing. Long, fast action sequences of building plot significance coloured M1, but the pacing of the long, slow dialogue and character-building scenes in the sequels were undeniably unique. One minor example, I fell asleep at the start of the Architect scene because I found the hallway fightscenes preceding it to be boringly paced. Others enjoyed this.

2) physics.

The rules the Wachowski's introduced as applicable for their different characters as based on their degree or level of perception being able to "bend" or "break" the rules of the Matrix universe. These were the corner-stone, or cap-stone, whatever, of M1, and definately played out in certain key action and dialogue scenes in the sequels. One minor example, I was on the edge of my seat for the vertiginous semi-truck fight scene even more than the vertiginous freeway chase scene in Reloaded, but I didn't care that much for any of the action scenes in Revs.

3) plot-line.

I think we can all also agree that, because while making it the Wachowski's remained uncertain if they could make the sequels, M1 was intended at the time to be able to function as a stand-alone movie. Now, some people simply swing one way on the issue and some the other. Some people think M1 should have remained a stand-alone feature (given the quality of the sequels), while others defend the validity of the sequels as necessary to the artistic vision of the Wachowskis. Ultimately, whether we agree or disagree on this matter, we all have an opinion rrelative to it. (Like God!)

4) personae

I think the characters in M1 paralleled the diagetic gap so closely they actually violated the Proscinium Arch rule of cinematography a couple times. The blend of one persona to the next was a perfect mix. I agree the sequels elaborated on these characters, fleshing them out, drawing in the details, filling in the gaps and tying up loose ends, etc. etc. A whole new repertoire of new people were introduced as well, and the audience was sufficiently challenged to draw their own conclusions about how all these characters may have related behind the scenes, in the shadows, off camera, back-stories, etc. etc. etc. Some people believe there was a smooth transition in continuity of quality characters between M1 and Rel. I do not.

That's all the attributes of the Matrix trilogy I can think of that start with P. I think it should be worth noting that there are an infinite other number of traits and features of these multi-layered films as well, and I would encourage you all, for the sake of easement of further communication along these lines, to come up with some example of things you think we can all agree on about the films, basic cinematographic and narrative facts about the style, the genre (if applicable) etc. These will serve as a starting block upon which all sides can come to draft future resolutions. Once we establish a common dialogue, we may begin to be able to see a bit better from the other person's perspective.

I believe it is far too easy to be carried away by our baser emotions when discussing such explosive issues as personal aesthetics. For example, calling my suggestions pedestrian beside the Wachowski's is irrelevant when the real purpose of my making them was as examples of how easy it is for an individual to come up with alternative ideas to handling the style and medium of an (or another) artist. These were never meant to be understood as merely "good" or "bad" ideas, just meant, I'd hoped, to make you think. Sometimes, even naturally talented, artists do fail.

I think, in a world where part of our reality is mediated for us through forms of artistic expression we ourselves did not create, part of our world is being defined for us by others, etc. it is natural to look for common likes and dislikes to approach and to avoid people who do not share these, and equally important, I think, to learn from these some different types of ways that we ourselves can manifest our own destinies, project our own future world-line, etc.

That is mostly the reason I feel M1 succeeded whereas the sequels failed. And if you can explain to me, in those terms, why I am wrong in my opinion, please feel free to attempt to do so. I cannot myself, and believe me, I've tried.

Reporting from the flat surface of my senses, yours truly,
-benpadiah

my answer would be yes. Physical matter, intact, can transubstantiate through high-spin states and therefore the otherwise mortal form can be raised up through the faster vibrational frequencies of hyperspace and continue to maintain full physical sensation during the ascension of the centred sense of self through the multiple dimensions surrounding the material plane of reality of which we are aware. I see NO reason however to expect this should happen for only the human species on the surface of this planet, mainly because of resource allocation. It is by smelting platinum group metals at temperatures near that on the surface of the sun for prolonged periods of time that elongated orbitally rearranged monoatomic elements can be derived for the purpose of ingestion by a living being such that the monoatomic gold will fit into the telomeres (end caps) of their DNA, prolonging the duration before these telomeres break down from replication during cellular mytosis. This prevents aging when first ingested in very small doses, but I am under the impression that if one ingests enough of this over time they will "super-charge" their DNA. The electrical impulse signals in the nervous system create an ambient charge in the body, producing polarised energy, the so-called Kirlian field or aura, the ruach, soul, etc. of the ancients. The combination of an elevation in this electrical impulse network (what Freud referred to as hyper-cathexis, which he predicted accounted for the formation of ego), and monoatomic gold plated DNA, would indeed probably allow one to ascend directly through the different material states comprising the vibrational spin states of the local three, the fourth, and beyond these which comprise our local multiverse. But it is possible to induce this effect naturally, without even ingesting monoatomic gold, by taking mind-altering drugs that, once past the blood-brain barrier, bond with neurotransmitter chemicals like keys in locks to trigger new patterns and stimulate new energy within the brain. The pineal gland of the brain has long been known to produce something Muldoon and Carrington referred to as "brain sand," which is nothing more than the pearl of great price, the ash of the smoke that is the essence, the soul. Such drugs as psilocybin, mescaline and peyotl have long been ingested in order to travel the higher dimensions and trip through the wires of the inter-galactic highway system. Even these drugs only augment and accentuate what we all are already doing whether we are aware of it or not: creating tunnel realities on the surface of earth like the reflection in a rain drop of the entire universe creating reality tunnels through wormholes between galaxies. This is all natural and fine. I doubt very strongly that, how did you put it, Seldon, about "God and hackers," that God does not like the idea of human ascension. You could guesstimate this from asking where did all the gold go? If gold allows us to transubstantiate ourselves then why does there seem to be less and less of it? But I believe the amount of gold on this dirtball planet earth does not equate with all we were destined to have access to, if it is the plan of God for the species of our planet to ascend. I believe we will find a way free or die trying. Like Enoch, who "walked with God, and was not, for God took him." Enoch was "translated" or self-transubstantiated directly into heaven without losing his physical body to rot in the soil of the earth. Later literature on Enoch explains that he dwells in heaven, beyond time itself, as the eternal voice of God, named the Metatron.

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com]www.benpadijah.com[/url]/[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/phpBB2/index.php]forums[/url]/[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=447]ALL MY BOOKS 4 FREE!![/url]

hey, Cypress. Since this thread was directed towards me in specific, I apologise for not being the "first responder." (LMAO, fucking jargonist newspeak.)

I was sitting outside having a smoke just now, thinking about that article.

It seems to me, as a moral "relativist," that, beyond "good" and "evil," beyond "right" and "wrong," we could easily look down, if we chose, and see the beings that exist on the outer-surface of this limit as "angels" and "demons." Of course, Crowley breaks these differences down most elegantly in his introduction to Mather's Goetia, but his explanation of the Moslem Djinn as the cerebral activation of the personal "genius" by evolving our patterns of thought upwards from the mid brain (where we see the forebrain as angelic) to the frontal lobes, etc. (from where we see the mid-brain as animalist). Consider the difference between the native Americans, to whose nomadic lifestyle the concept of "owning land" seemed absurd and frightening, and the western civilisers who saw the same thing as a necessity. Consider how a domestic cat, if chased, will run home, but a domestic dog, if chased, will run away. These concepts are all "relativistic" examples of the difference in nature between ideals such as "good" and "evil," "angels" and "demons," etc. The best example I can think of is the Enochian angels of the Anglican church, considered "fallen" angels from the Catholic perspective. Both are "angels" in the service of "God" (according to their respective mythologies) and both can be tested by their "good" works. But to one the other is evil.

In any event, as to the "Indigo Children" being the "New Master Race" of human vessels for "inter-dimensional ancestors" and their "Dark Masters," "historically known as 'Demons.'" (all quotes in that sentence are terms from the article, btw and fwiw.)

Let's say that I wrote a book. (in reality I have, of course, written a few.) Let's say that the hypothesis of this book is that the NAZI's experimented with time-travel and with genetic augmentation. Well, we know they experimented with breeding, or roughly genetic augmentation, so it might follow they also experimented with time travel. So I choose to research work on NAZI's and time travel that has already been published first, and then find unpublished source material in support of these findings. So I read the Black Sun book from the Montauk "trilogy" by Preston Nichols and Peter Moon. This book tells me about alot more than I had originally hypothesised, so I choose to follow up on the genetic aspects, then look for the time-travel aspects from more recent sources. I turn to Bullwer-Lytton and to Theosophy as the sources for the phiosophy behind the genetic engineering (true), then draw my own conclusions about why: they were creating vessels for "demons." I then learn a little more about time-travel as it pertains to other "dimensions" (whatever I choose to mean by that), and conclude that the NAZIs agenda was to breed a master race to channel or be vessels for inter-dimensional beings, who I then ammend to be my "new" definition for the "demons" I had concluded to associate with the genetic engineering philosophical motives from Theosophy. I then write my book, concluding that the NAZIs DID do genetic engineering and they did this BECAUSE they were trying to channel "inter-dimensional" (whatever that means) "demons" (whatever that means). Seems plausible enough to some publisher, who thinks very little of their distributors' intelligence, and so the book goes to print. Of course, no one buys it, because it is overpriced, so the distributors suggest to the publishers the book be sent out for review. A reviewer of as little possible reputre is then chosen to "spice" up the "beef" of the book: make the conclusion of the book the premise of the article and toss in those "five-dollar" words. So the reviewer, entirely independently of the author, writes a glowing review in their own style, which in this case happens to involve tossing in random quotes from current news stories, knowing this will impress the audience for their media, the internet. The article is then "published" on the intenet, where you, Cypress, happen to read it. "Hmm," you think. "these words deserve better definitions than this. I know someone who may be able to explain some of these ideas better than this author." You then ask "me," of all "people." LMAO!

Macro-reasons really do break down into micro-reasons (so-called "astrology" by self-styled astronomers), but only chaos theory can be applied to how this happens, and only then can we have the understanding of one question enough to ask the right one that follows. This is like looking at a smoke ring formed from a cigarette's tip when you tap the cigarette to knock ash off the end. How does this happen: the smoke-stream separates from the tip and wraps around on itself into a loop. Why does this happen: chaos? We simply don't know yet. The smoke-ring is a torus, a so-called strange-attractor, formed of moving particles of carbon lighter than water-molecules, so-called "points" in a "system." Why does it form a ring? We simply don't yet know, so we call it "chaos." That's how I know what I know, how I can say what I just said about HOW all those findings came to before your eyes. As to the WHY... that might be a little harder, and therefore more entertaining.

For one thing, I don't think the NAZIs understood why they were doing what they were doing. There are still alot of people in high positions of power who don't understand why their orders come down. I try not to think of these people as "demons" personally, even though I know we would have no common interests if we talked, and would probably personally dislike each other after meeting. Like my impressions after reading Lenin. Take "Mein Kampf" for example. Hitler was clearly not apeaking with the voice of the average "human being." Some would say this was because he was "channeling" Satan himself, or was the born vessel for some demon or other. It is clear enough to most he could not have been born "evil," and he himself claims to speak only thoughts gleaned from his own personal life experiences. To most the amount of hatred he had seems disproportionate to the hardships he had to endure, but this is simply what Freud identified as "hypercathexis" (the chemical cause of ephemeral ego). Perhaps, we could speculate, some people simply channel a greater amount of cathexis than others would in their place. Perhaps this is like the possession by "genius" some seem to receive by perpetual gift. Perhaps to the rest of us, who do not understand these natural mutants, the "system" of socially ritualised civilisation has been created. A ball and chain to the genius, and a crutch for the retarded. Think of the earliest homo sapiens attempting to communicate with the contemporary neanderthals, who archeaology has proven lived side by side in prehistoric Israel. Hell, in modern times men and women barely even understand each other, except perhaps once in a lifetime, or in one case permanently once per generation.

Some consider speculation on insoluable mythologies "evil" in itself. These are generally the same people who religiously study the bible.

-ben

well, I may as well as contribute something to this thread, since I am bored right now, and when I'm bored, everything seems boring, even the rest of my life, which managed to not seem boring at the time, otherwise I would have killed myself when I was in highschool. After reading this post some people might wish I had. Not saying it's going to be interesting, far from it. Just... provocative.

Okay, so, about a year and a half ago, I got drunk. I really don't like drinking, because it makes me act the opposite of getting high, which I much prefer. In any event, at the time I didn't have my own forum, and I think I must have been banned from here or something, because for some dumb reason I went to TSGAM, FoXDie's "the skater guys and Mat" forum, at www.tsgam.com.

Anyway, long story short, under the influence of gin and beer, I posted the following:

[quote="benpadiah"]Mike is going to college, because he thinks he will "make something of himself." But he won't, because he's too codependent on the rest of YOU losers. And he's the best of you. Mat is a mentor to you all, but only because he fronts himself as doubtless, while he is not. SG02, Chad, whatever the fuck his name is, is a washout at Community College because he's too introverted to do anything but rebel by skateboarding and listening to speed metal to hide the fact that he is dumb to really try. Archangel is as insecure as Chad, which is probably why she would be attracted to him, though each would only disappoint the other, which makes them perfect fodder for marriage, but only if he knocks her up accidentally. SG01 wouldn't know Rammstein from Laibach is they had both fucked his mother in the asshole, and furthermore has probably never even HEARD of Austin Spare. And Serpent Queen is self counscious about being a hayseed zero from Tejas, which is just a LITTLE too close to Mexico for the whole lot of you closeted racist straight edge bores. As my friend said, "You're all addicted to adrennaline and endorphins" instead of crack rock. Do you know what a PUNK is? A baby elephant. That's what I think of all you little Kansas Ass-blasting faggot bitches.[/quote]

Now, I think the only disagreement that was made with this post was made by Mat, who was sure he wasn't doubtless. The other relevant posters, Serpent Queen and Fox's bro Chad, simply said, "you crossed THAT line," and banned me. If I can remember it verbatim, Chad's message to me as to the reason for my banning (which continues to this day, apparently) was "he thinks he is though [sic] behind the keyboard, if this were real life I would kill him." I guess I struck a raw nerve, which, had what I said not been the simple truth, could have easily enough been simply laughed off.

So, I guess, if there's any question left in my mind about why FoXDie hates me, it's why do some people have "that" line? If someone told me off on the internet in a way that rang true enough I wanted to "kill" them, I'd probably kill myself instead. Believe me three people (randy, Paul from philoforums.com and some guy who's screen name I no longer remember from physicsforums.com) have pushed me to pace back and forth in front of my house for a while and talk to myself. But I don't think I EVER made a death threat on the net, or by phone for that matter. I post sometimes about how some people, like our current administration of politicians, would be better off dead, but otherwise I see no reason to involve the FBI and NSA in my interpersonal politics. It's just not worth going to jail (again) to me.

Anyway, immediately after this incident FoXDie blocked me on MSN and began trolling me on this forum. He remains like this to this day.

[quote="FoXDie"]I'm not one for dwelling on the past though, only learning from it.[/quote]

You are free to agree with this statement of his or not. I disagree, since FoXDie is hardly my personal role-model for "mature" behaviour. But I know that alot of you younger posters look up to him in the same way that he doesn't look up to me.

Now, I'm not going to justify me behaviour, I was drunk, and the next day I didn't even remember doing this. Therefore, there is no excuse for what I did. It would be like saying, "it's not me beating you, son. The alcohol is making me do it." LOL. I will say that the punishment doesn't fit the crime, IMO. Unless I actually did ruin Chad's life, FoXDie has no business continuing to troll me here a year and a half later, especially if he honestly believes he has grown and matured since then.

Now I'm not going to argue FoXDie's behaviour either. He can carry a grudge. That's fine. I just thought it might be fun to let you all know why he says things directed at me, such as:

[quote="FoXDie"]The simple fact is that if no one can understand you, what's the point in wasting energy trying to communicate?[/quote]

It's not because he's a troll. No, FoXDie is no troll, he loves me. He just has a funny way of showing it. Just like I showed my love for him by trying to cut the dead-weight of his hometown friends from around his neck. I thought I was acting in his best interest, and he, almost 100% certainly, genuinely believes he is acting in my best interest by repeatedly telling me to "piss off" every time I say anything he hasn't been taught yet in school.

Now, although I am using paragraphs this time, and speaking as soberly as I can (since I'm out of grass and haven't started drinking yet tonight), I don't want this to turn into another of my infamous though unpatented long-winded diatribes. I make it a point for myself to stay on topic as much as possible, and since I've finished telling the story of why FoXDie hates me, which is merely one instance indicative of "my boring life," then I must regretablely bid you adieu.

I may get banned later tonight, either for PUI or because I cross "that" line with some other person's closeted skeletons. So in case I don't see you, good afternoon, good evening, and good night.

-ben

[quote="Randy"]How do you know that women don't go around measuring their vaginas ?[/quote] well, let's just say those I have known and those I know now don't.

Don't get me wrong. I know for a fact (I have it on the highest "demonic" authority) that society would never have even come into existence except for the interpersonal-politics of women. This simply means that women have more experience in this field than most men, such that, most of the time, and unless you are sensitive enough, you wouldn't even notice if they were doing it. Yes, women can be more conniving and duplicitous than men, but more frequently they do this only with the man they are after, rather than in groups with each other.

This may all sound overly cynnical, but I challenge the reader to discover one outright fallacy in the above paragraph of my writing, at least, from the male point of view.

Now, as to Nety and OOM's approach to the current competition between all imaginable levels. I think this is masculine, and most of those who consider themselves such, would agree that the desire for passive communication and active cooperation between all the different levels, not only of society, but of reality as a whole, is a feminine perspective. This only means I believe most of my target audience in this thread are westerners and, whether exposed to western mysticism or not, have been less exposed to eastern mysticism, where the gender-role expectations are actually opposite those in the west. For example, white is for funerals in the east and weddings in the west, yin is yang, etc.

OOM, I noticed something interesting about the rolling boil the other day while making macaroni. If there are three coils on the metal burner, there will be three points, one on each, and all three equi-distant, of rolling boil forming a triangle between them. I believe this to be a phi-ratio triangle, and that, for burners (or solenoids now that I think about it) with even numbered coils the triangle would be equilateral. Hence, odd coils = 3,5,8 etc. and even coils = 2,4,8 etc.

Of course, at some points the two spirals will overlap.

I think the duality is more fundamental, more basic, essential, etc. than the difference between the individual one and the infinite plenum. I'd be interested to hear more of your thoughts on this idea, Nety, ros and others.

Please understand, however, if you direct your posts to me and I am unable to answer for a few or even several days.

-ben

Lord, Thank God someone has posted this topic, at last. I have long pondered on the nature and the essence of these creatures myself. I hope this will prove to be a fruitful discussion indeed!

[quote="lordosiris"]the jinn has helped man from the beginning[/quote]

Archaeology and anthropology actually support this strange assertion. Homo Sapiens were the first branch of hominids to bury their dead, and there is even evidence that the earliest tribes of our species attempted to teach the same to Neanderthals living in neighboring caverns in prehistoric Israel. Early burials offer evidence of advanced cultural beliefs that appeared out of nowhere, such as the decorating of the corpse with flowers, tattooing, and ultimately the high-tech art of mummification.

[quote="lordosiris"]such as Solomon.[/quote]

It is true that under Solomon the temple was constructed, and that, according to some legends, for this task the aid of discorporeal workers was coagulated, who were later disposed of in 72 croptic jars in the Dead Sea, thus causing that body of water's ionisation and subsequent de-calcification. It is possible that this mythology about the building of the first temple is actually only the hidden history of the workers who constructed the great pyramids. The similarity between the Egyptian mysteries and the Hebrew mystics is striking as regards who said what, but differs greatly as to when it happened. For example, the regnal dates on the Egyptian sothic calendar for Akhenaten do not appear to exactly overlap with the lunar Hebrew dates for the presence of Moses in Egypt, but their message of monotheism was identical. Likewise, we can safely assume that Abraham of Ur according to Genesis was the same as Ibruim, priest of Enki, in Sumeria.

[quote="lordosiris"]What makes them different[/quote]

The worship of alien deities, of foreign powers, is as old in biblical history as the war in Heaven and the fall of man. It is as old as the question of, "who fathered Cain's wife?"

From what we can construct from the comparison between the ancient Hebrew sources and the contemporary cultures before Babylon, the Catholic grigorii order of angels, the nephiliim of Essene and Ethiopian Enoch, and the "giants, men of renown" in Genesis are all names for the offspring of the rebel angels, known as the Watchers by the Essenes and as the pre-deluvial Annunaki kings by the Sumerians, who "bred with the wives of men" according to Genesis.

While the angels who rebelled (alien deities of foreign nations) all became demonised after the war, some accounts have it that their "offspring with the wives of men," the species of giants or demigods who were killed by the flood, became the disembodied djinn. There is not alot of evidence in support of this assertion to my knowledge however.

[quote="lordosiris"]besides that they are made or smokeless fire?[/quote]

This is a key point of support of the above hypothesis, because the angels who rebelled were made of fire and air. According to gnostic tradition, Samael, the "chief among" the fallen angels, hangs upside down, perpetually falling, in the sky as the constellation Orion. However, what does it mean to say the djinn are made of "smokeless fire?" For there to be smoke, a fire must have air, there must be enough air for the fire to not consume it all, and enough air for the fire to give off smoke. But the fire that does not give off smoke does not have this much air. It has just enough for it to consume, but not enough for it to give off smoke. So, what is this type of fire like? It seems to me that this type of fire would be like an explosion, even one on a very small scale, such as the spark made by striking stones, or the spark of imagination in the intellect.

[quote="lordosiris"]Do they also have a life span[/quote]

Well, I could say, does an explosion have a lifespan, but that would really be beating around the burning bush, now wouldn't it. If we look at the different scales an explosion can cover then it definately has different durations even relative to one another. The spark of cathexis in the nerves, the spark of sulphur in a lighter, the strike of a bolt of lightning, the alignments of galaxies. But this is all impractical to consider in regards to the specific question.

If we interpret the "smokeless fire" hypothesis, we could speculate the djinn to be stars, perhaps, if seven in number as suggested by the Egyptian hypothesis, the constellation of the Plaeides. I think it would be at least as appropriate to speculate the djinn as all the stars besides the sun, but then there is the question of the many millions more distant galaxies. I think the djinn inhabit a distant sphere of influence, yes, but it is omni-directional at that distance, and at a distance beneath and within as well as beyond and without.

[quote="lordosiris"]can they also come in human form[/quote]

It's more to the point to return to the concept of Egyptian metaphysics and how they relate to Vedic yoga. If we see the djinn as like living karma, or the Great Work as 1:1 or synonymous with Otherness, we may understand how they may appear to us through others. We could say perhaps they are generalisable as stereotypes. For example, the djinn of the grunge movement is different from the local spirit of Seattle. Then we could see all the people that follow that style as "possessed" of that certain Genus of genius, or special species of spirit.

[quote="lordosiris"]as our leaders?[/quote]

As always, this depends on who you follow. Some speculate the true ruler(s) of earth as not a native of this planet, or even necessarily native to the same natural frequency of our own three dimensional reality. If you consider that the virus, of unknown origin, has evolved into our symbiotic central nervous system, then perhaps there is some truth in the theory that our own individual consciousnesses are merely antennae picking up higher pitch wavelengths from offworld sources.

[quote="lordosiris"]What is the difference between them and a so called angel?[/quote]

I have always understood that angels serve only God. I suppose if God commanded an angel to serve a specific person, then they would do so, but perhaps if they were to be so ordered, they would have to assume a slightly denser vibrational frequency form to do so, and these may indeed be trapped in the discorporeal, but terrestrially bound, ghostly state of the djinn. I think it would perhaps even be more conducive for us to talk about the gravity well of our planet, and the electromagnetic birdcage on its interior that entraps these uniquely cosmic beings in our planet's aura.

[quote="lordosiris"]Can you control a Djinn for your own interest?[/quote]

Yes, definately. I cannot speak on behalf of anyone I've ever met other than myself in this regard, but I have studied the methods of this practise at length. I would not recommend doing this until you have fully understood the difference between the lesser will of the ego and the higher will of God. In the west they call this "higher will" the person's "Holy Guardian Angel" (Jechida of Chiah in Hebrew) and in the east they call it the Way (Tao of Chi in Chinese). It is important not to use a djinn for the merely transitory gain of inter-personal politics. Using a djinn as a messenger upon which is carried a curse of black magick against a person is causing the djinn to become culpable to that hex against the person. This compounds the karma of the sender for having polluted both their own physical realm and the realm of the djinn. It is, of course, nonetheless possible to earn back the karma for the djinn, but this requires time. Some speculate that it was a sin for Solomon to have summoned the djinn even though it was in the service of building a temple to the One True God. They believe, speciously, that such past sins were committed in order for the Jews, or alternately for Jesus, to repent and to atone for by their suffering. I personally disagree with this philosophy, and see every magician's accumulated karma as their own and no one other's. Likewise, if one summons a djinn to bring benefit to a sufferer in a way that genuinely relieves another of their burden, then the djinn is as equally blessed as can be also conferred upon the magician. Thus, the energy-density which a djinn can effect can be "solidified" (or become less electromagnetic and more gravitic) such that they can be capable of even moving solid objects. Cases of possession of people by individual djinn are very rare, but the entire belief structure of Scientology is based on the concept of possession by a person of many djinn.

[quote="lordosiris"]Sorry for all the question but I have many more concerning the Djinn.[/quote]

As do I! I would be very interested in hearing the opinions on these matters from anyone who may have read different source material than I have. As I understand it, the tradition of the djinn dates back to the beginning of history, and so there are probably alot of different theories out there about them. I expect, since most of the ones I just litanied are my own, but are based on limited sources, that other people, given other sources, must have equally elaborate hypotheses regarding these mysterious creatures!

-ben

Daryl,

the first couple things you're going to need to know are:

- 1) Goetia is Greek for Witchcraft. The only real danger from these practises is from the people who feel threatened by the power this practise can convey upon a person.
- 2) the power we deal with when we summon spirits, demons, and djinn is as real as we feel it to be.

I believe you do not wish me harm, or wish harm to yourself or to the majority of others, if anyone at all (there is nothing wrong with having some spite though, it's what makes us innately human). But you should know that, if you abuse this power, it will revisit ills upon your head "three fold." Of course, if you tried to attack me with these powers, I wouldn't even notice, because I am an old hand at it, and so the damage we can do is relative. Remember, all wounds eventually heal, therefore serve the light, and do not waver.

Now, as to preparations, etc. I never practise anything specific, the given rituals are usually intended only to convey the degree of seriousness and solemnity necessary to work with each entity. I find it easiest to simply briefly meditate on the sigil (symbolic signature) of the entity while thinking with concentrated focus on what I desire for them to accomplish for me. I have studied many different methods and many different groups. This method risks little, and works about 85% of the time, by my own guestimate. Anything more serious than this is not good to do alone.

Okay, as to what I am including with this email.

First, Here is the Shemhamphorash (72) section of the Goetic grimoire of Solomon online in case you need it as a reference:

<http://www.sacred-texts.com/grim/lks/lks05.htm>

I want you to DL the pics at the links I'm about to send you tho. Let me know when you have so I can delete these from off the internet. I know enough to not want to be burned at the stake any more than you would. LOL. I want you to use these in peace, but if not, use them to the hilt, and if ever under threat of pain, reveal my name as their source if it will get you free. I'd rather be burned aive than any of my students.

These two are the shemhamphorash of Solomon:

<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Grimoire/Geotia1.jpg>
<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Grimoire/Goetia2.jpg>

These two are the Necronomicon of the "Mad Arab":

<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Grimoire/Necro1.jpg>
<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Grimoire/Necro2.jpg>

Here is how to create your own sigils for any given name (using Hebrew letters):

<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Grimoire/RoseLamen.jpg>

Here is the pact for summoning a spirit (if you need to, please look up how to banish for yourself, I have never practised that myself, though):

<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Grimoire/gensum.jpg>

Here are the "top guys" and their sigils:

<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Grimoire/topguys.jpg>

Also, please feel free to contact me at this email or my hotmail, by MSN messenger or on the IO boards with ANY questions or comments you may wish to add before, during and/or after your initial workings in this regard.

Best of luck, Daryl.

-Jon Gee

PS. When in doubt, read Crowley's intro to the Goeita: <http://www.sacred-texts.com/grim/lks/lks03.htm> and remember that everything wears off given enough time.

--

<http://www.benpadiah.com>

[quote="lordosiris"]a movie called Constantine. I do not know if you seen it.[/quote] nope, sorry.

[quote="lordosiris"]However, there was a reference to the angel Gabriel, trying to usher in the devils son. Also there was spirits, going into people's bodies causing chaos, and whispering suggestions. If you seen this movie, are they the Djinn.[/quote]

It's been my experience Hollywood prefers not to use exact mythologies, but to put a "new twist" on old myths. Therefore nothing they say will exactly agree with the ancient traditions they bastardise. This does not necessarily mean all modern media should be excluded from the wisdom tradition.

[quote="lordosiris"]Also if an angel can only serve God, how did Satan rebel or is he also a Djinn.[/quote]

It is thought that Satan became the king of the demonic legions at the time of his expulsion from heaven following the war against God. Hell, the demons, the djinn, none of this is thought to be "eternal" because it did not exist at the beginning of the creation by God of Heaven and Earth. Thus, an "immortal" soul or a djinn can be punished until Judgment Day in the pits of the inferno, but upon the End of Days shall be released from perdition into the clear light of True Eternity. Praise YHVH.

Also, it has been the concealed belief since at least the Egyptian captivity that the djinn, regardless of whether we associate them with the Annunaki Watchers or their Nefilim giant offspring, are discorporeal entities which live between people who are made of flesh. They are ghosts made out of energy that move about between the karma in our auras. The Egyptians associated the "soul" (energy field or aura) of the body with the Ka, the so-called "double." The spirit, what the Hebrews called Neschamah and what the Egyptians called the Akh, resides above the body of flesh, and the soul can only be elevated as the hypotenuse between the Double and the Akh by passing through the seven chambered Ba, the "soul of Ra." This is in agreement with QBLH as regards the seven lesser lights and the three supernals. It is believed by modern Scientologists that the djinn reside now in place of the seven Be of Ra, as karma in our aura. Allah Be Praised.

[quote="lordosiris"]Another question, does the Djinn have sexes, or they can only appear to look as though they are male or female?[/quote]

It is possible that the Djinn, or the Other Doubles, do indeed procreate, albeit as recombinations of karmic energy rather than by the flesh. They may even be responsible for the plethora of young redeemed souls that are overpopulating our little vacation resort earth. Or it may be that it is by the interbreeding of djinni and mankind that these souls are appearing out of nowhere, just as, once, the Nefilim giants appeared out of nowhere due to the interbreeding of the fallen angels with the wives of men. This is only my own speculation of course, and should not be taken as gospel. The practise of sex-magick, or trance channeling while engaged in tantra yoga, is used to breed a Moon Child, as described fictionally by Crowley and actually experimented with by Jack Parsons (of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory precursor to NASA) and L. Ron Hubbard (the father of Scientology) with Cameron's wife Marjorie.

There is the law of man and there is the Law of God.

Obviously God does not require constraint by some of the laws it is necessary for the government of men to codify. For example, because of his omniscient morality, God is beyond the ability to commit murder. This is one of the ways we set man aside from God.

I won't go into what the Law of God constitutes, but if we accept it as being above the mortal conception of mankind, we can say that in the same way we are confined to such physical laws as linear time, we can speculate that from the power to be above and beyond the physical law gives God the right to behave anti-socially. This isn't exactly accurate, since then it would mean that if a man could set himself upon the throne of the Creator that retroactively God did not invent the laws of society.

However it is all too true that mankind has the potential to substitute a man for the authority of God as codifier of social laws. We exercise this misunderstanding of free will to set laws protecting the rights of our bodies, but we should understand the free Will alone sets laws governing over the mind. For each new law protecting an old right, a new kind of criminal will multiply in numbers to challenge the law, to test, to prove, the right. Law creates criminals: with no law against murder, murder would not be considered unnatural, and the concept of right and wrong would decrease in extent from death itself.

At the same time, we can go in the opposite direction: man is completely inept and incapable at providing laws governing over the beginning of life. We seem unable to even agree on when "life" begins epistemologically, and the letter is the keystone of the law.

Meanwhile, the law-makers are often the same souls as the law-breakers. More often than not, police themselves are criminals. We see young criminals turn narc once caught by their own parents, a generation of police lording it over the youthful rebels.

A very good example of why authority figures will inevitably abuse the responsibilities of their office is the cop who sells weed, and the parents of the child who buys from them, whose right to raise their own child as they see fit is violated by the supposed prisoner liberating the mind of the nubile citizen. Another example is mutually consensual statutory rape.

In this example we see what locg was mentioning: religious right superceding philosophical law: morality before ethics: the freedom of the True Will, the mind, from the abuse of the free lesser will, the body. We see also that this is at the heart and is the essence of "liberation" itself: each denser and more manifest level being set free of it's self-definition as such into a less constricting, more airy self-definition, etc. For example, one can say the wind moves the flag, but perhaps it is merely the breath of God, nor can we say the tension of the fabric of the flag itself is what alone causes it to move. Therefore we say it is only the Mind that is moving, and neither the wind nor the flag. Then we let the mind of our individual self, as opposed as it is to Infinite Otherness, dissolve into the emptiness of self beyond, until we are filled with the Will of God Almighty.

-ben

I see that there are now some non-illuminati and some anti-illuminati both considering the same sources for conspiracy theories.

Can we consider this the questioning that will lead to Truth?

I wonder, are we ourselves really ready to answer the questions that we will inevitably be asked by non and anti illuminists alike?

Because it is not what we may wish to do to guide the populous which we should be asking, but what should we do when the representatives of the populous come knocking on our door to try and enlighten us?

I understand that questioning will lead to Truth for both parties. But what does one do when the other refuses to ask question and only replies with answers? Should we not bow to them? Yet these answers might be the lies of the Adversary, for who is to judge? We may only, should we bow, put blind faith in the Other. And is this not what we are all being continually asked to do through our various initiation rites and rituals? It is better, we believe, to bow before the one your Master than to be bowed before by a slave.

Therefore, shouldn't we be treating the unenlightened, be they the masses or, by now, a mere minority, as our Masters rather than as our slaves? We should not seek to liberate them or to revenge past wrongs of theirs against us, but we should ask them always for our forgiveness from their judgment.

I do not mean this as an act of cowardice. It is also important to protect right ratios for respectful communication. I do not bow much lower than my Master, and he does not bow much lower than his. But still, I know that there are many more like me, who bow before many more equal to my own Master, and that their masters bow before others alike the Master of my Master, and all Masters bow before the All Seeing Eye.

However I am beginning to believe that the strategy of infiltration of groups of the unenlightened, and the subsequent corruption of them and their dissolution into the course of our energy, has been sufficiently accomplished.

I know that I am not one who may stand alone and declare the Great Work accomplished. This is not to be seen by mortal eyes:

A point of supersaturation is being reached. Between the planetary-solar alignment on 5-5-2000 and the solar-galactic alignment of 12-21-2012 we as a species of sentients are becoming wholly self-aware of ourselves as a species. This is being done to us through the rapid growth of technological media, in particular that of telecommunications. This technological expansion, though rapid, is the very birth of our minds' freedom from all previous physical constraints. Now the one who bows can be on the night side of Earth, and the one to whom they bow be on the side beneath the sun, which implies that the opposite of this can be equally true, which means that the entire mentality of duality is breaking down among the chattle. We can observe this effect by studying the sun-spots. Let these increase like the prayers of the enlightened, until they scorch away all the iniquities of the willfully ignorant and the tyrannies of selfish men.

Even while we speak, the mind of our species is becoming self-aware, and this is like a mere reflection on the surface of a rain drop of the rainbow which its millions upon millions form. It reflects the energy between the galaxies like itself in the great galactic iris, and the glint of our light will be caught up and transported along with all the splendour of humanity into the space-time between these alignments.

But this is only the beginning. For just as the Rosicrucians slew the demon of the fear of being put to the Catholic Question (the Inquisition.. ptewy) they began the liberation of our mental preoccupations as a species with the political Leviathan. Since then, liberties have increased, and the State is already undeniably in its death-throes in even its most democratic forms. What follows, we know, will not be a return of the Roman Empire, which has been preserved as unrepentant Catholic Christianity, but the final fall thereof. It shall be something wholly different, be it guided by our awakenning light.

Once we awaken ourselves, we see that we are awakenning as a species, and once we see that we have already surpassed the point of no return for awakenning as a species, we will understand our light as the reflection on the surface of our clear minds, like the reflection of a rainbow on a rain drop, of the alignments of all the cogs in the universal mind-machine, the grinding of the gears of all time, and thus the awakenning of the sleeping ego of the entire universe, ergo the Living God.

I believe that it is not whether or not we ourselves believe this, but that so many of the seeming chattle do, that should make this our more guiding priority in dealing with the "question" of the Unenlightened.

It will very soon be necessary to select from among our ranks a fall-guy, a scape-goat, a patsy, a messenger for this news to among the multitudes of masses that are now all interconnected by the planetary neural-network of the telecommunications technological media. Someone must be chosen from among us as the spokesperson for the Illuminati agenda of enlightenment or death. This person must be given broad media access and unlimited financial backing. If they speak untruth, we must kill them. But this must be made to look like a moral irony. Their death must appear to be the result of a failure of their own. This is the Plan for the creation of the so-called "false prophet" of Revelations verse thirteen, who encourages the people to follow the Leviathan (of the sea) and the Leviathon (of the land), that are in reality the Taniniver, the conjoined torurous and slant seprents of Lilith and Samael. So, we shall ensnare the apocalypsi who believe the transition of our light commences the conclusion of our society, both Church and State. In reality, all that exists shall be equally elevated along with us, for this is not the End of our glory, but merely the Beginning.

Let this person be the message bearer too soon, for he must be caught in his fall later by the fact that he had cried wolf before. So, he should thinketh that he hunt, while those hounds hunt him. But his identity must, by all means, be kept secret for as long as possible. Perhaps even from himself. He may even be someone who could be considered a kind of "sleeper-agent" of the glorious Illuminati agenda.

Only once the fool shall be discredited by pointing to us as to blame for his error in judgment in having come too soon, and call us the ones to blame for the fact that he has borne the right message at the wrong time, and so bring havok, chaos and discomfort to humanity, despite his best intentions; when all these terrible ironies of fate combine at their utmost peak, then we shall disappear our messenger, and replace his body with a corpse.

This will destabilise the secret-societies, and cause them to be brought out into the open. At this point we must be our most secret. I believe this point is even now upon us, friends. With the upcoming movies focusing on conspiracy-theory themes, both of elder secret societies and their implied role in world affairs, we are going to be facing a host of the masses who will willfully ignore our initiatory system in seeking to define and constrain our Light.

Now we must fall silent.

Now we must pray for a glistening summer shower of sunspots.

-ben to recapitulate the previous points:

The Sethians were gnostics, persecuted as the Cathars during the Inquisition by the Catholic Church. Because they have been anti-papal since then, the neo-Sethians have arisen to manipulate the Christian agenda during the alignment of the galaxies.

During the modern era the Order of Death was reformed from Masonry into the Illuminism of the Golden Dawn. During this time the first IHO was Mathers and the first OHO Crowley.

Following this, the Sethian movement followed the "ascended masters" and the neo-Sethians began to infiltrate the continuing lineage of OHOs and IHOs of the Order.

The next known OHO was William Seward Burroughs. It is believed that he became OHO soon after Crowley became IHO. Upon Crowley's death, Burroughs ascended to become the IHO, and Jim Morrison became the OHO. Burroughs converted to neo-Sethianism shortly after his ascension to IHO, and it is believed that by the time Morrison became OHO he was already a neo-Sethian.

Following this there is a gap in the chronology of OHOs and IHOs of the modern Order of Death. It is possible that former OHO's under Burroughs might also have included "gonzo" journalist Hunter S. Thompson and even George Lucas, creator of the Star Wars franchise. The next known OHO was made public around the same time as the death of William Burroughs. His natural name was Trevor Smith, but he had come to be known as "gangsta" rapper "Busta Rhymes."

Busta Rhymes is thought to have been succeeded by George W. Bush during the coup de tat of the 2000 Florida election fiasco. It is possible that he completely succeeded from the Order at this time. More recent evidence indicates there was a massive power struggle between Busta Rhymes and Laura Bush, who had become the most powerful neo-Sethian in history.

Following this event, which I will describe in somewhat greater detail in a moment, it was generally believed that George W. Bush was the Most Powerful Man In The World. It seemed that, if he was not the actual IHO himself, as indicated by his membership in Skull and Bones, then he must assuredly be the OHO himself, as indicated by his nickname in S&B, "Temporary." It was widely speculated that the true IHO during this time may indeed have been Dick Cheney. During this time, the popular faces of the order were George W. Bush and Ariel Sharon, however the two most powerful people behind the scenes were really Dick Cheney and Laura Bush, both of whom are even more neo-Sethian than their puppet-dictators George W. Bush and Ariel Sharon. It should be worth noting the neo-Sethian way of managing the Order appears to be based on the offices being dually held by two officers at the same time.

At the time of Ariel Sharon's stroke, there appears to have been a power struggle between Dick Cheney and Laura Bush. While Dick Cheney was accused of a "hunting accident," Laura Bush is being featured on A&E Classroom. And so, the current neo-sethian IHO of the Order of Death is Laura Bush. There appears to be no immediate OHO, although all prior contenders, ergo George W. Bush, Ariel Sharon, Dick Cheney, Usama Bin Ladin and Pope Ratzinger have fallen out of the running and are no longer valid contenders.

This brings us just about up-to-date on the previous posts in this thread. I will now elaborate on the confrontation scene between Busta Rhymes and Laura Bush.

Now, Busta Rhymes is not a neo-Sethian. Busta Rhymes is a Five Percenter.

[quote="wikipedia"]

The Five Percent Nation's teachings advocate that the Black man, which includes all men on Earth classified racially as "black, brown, yellow, red"—not only in the United States—are direct descendants of the first people to walk the earth, and that they are Gods by nature, just as their ancestors were. Also, among their most controversial teachings, is that the white man, being a much more recessive version of the black man and having lost the biological qualifications to receive and process divine energy, is the devil by nature.

Five Percenters also teach that Black people specifically, and the entire world population more generally, can be divided into three groups:

- * The 85%, who are the "humble masses," mentally deaf, dumb, and blind to the truth about themselves and the world they live in.
- * The 10%, who understand much of the truth but use it to their advantage to keep the 85% under their control through religion, politics, entertainment, economics, and other methods.
- * The 5%, who are the enlightened divine beings, having repossessed knowledge of the truth, regarding the foundations of life and of oneself, and seek to liberate the 85% through education.

The teachings of the Five Percent Nation are passed on through oral tradition. The advancement of a Five Percenter is based on his or her memorization, recitation, comprehension, and practical application of the Supreme Mathematics and Supreme Alphabets--lessons written by Clarence 13X/Allah, and also "120 Lessons" (a revised version of the Supreme Wisdom lessons of the NOI written originally by Wallace Fard Muhammad and Elijah Muhammad).

The basic teachings of the Nation of Gods and Earths are as follows; That Black people are the original people of the planet Earth. That Black people are the fathers and mothers of civilization. That the science of Supreme Mathematics is the key to understanding man's relationship to the universe. That living out the culture of Supreme Mathematics is their natural way of life. That education should be fashioned to enable Blacks to be self-sufficient as a people. That each individual should teach another individual according to one's knowledge. That the Black man is God, the Supreme Being. That children are the link to the future and they must be nurtured, respected, loved, protected, and educated. That the unified black family is the vital building block of the nation.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/The\_Nation\_of\_Gods\_and\_Earths also confer: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Category:Five\_Percenter

Laura Bush, on the other hand, was raised Methodist.

[quote="wikipedia:Methodism"]

The basic beliefs of the United Methodist Church include:

- * Triune God. God is one God in three persons: God the Creator, Son and Holy Spirit.
- * Scripture. The writings in the Hebrew Bible and Greek Testament are the inspired word of God.
- * Sacraments. The UMC recognizes two sacraments: Baptism and Holy Communion. The Church generally practices infant baptism and recognizes baptisms from other denominations, and also practices open communion.
- * Inclusivity. The UMC includes and welcomes people of all races, cultures, and ages.
- * Free will. The UMC believes that people, while corrupted by sin, are free to make their own choices because of God's divine grace.
- * Grace. The UMC believes that God gives God's love freely to all people.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Methodist\_church

However, it is more likely that Laura Bush's own philosophical beliefs themselves are closer to those of the Seventh Day Adventists:

[quote="wikipedia"]Adventist Church polity (governance), is a mixture of hierarchical (or episcopal) and presbyterian elements.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Seventh-day\_Adventist\_Church

Who tend to actively recruit members from Methodist parents, who are in a phase of rebellion against the doctrinal constraints of their elders. Thus, the presbyterian agenda of local-governance among the Protestant Churches and the methodist agenda of regional-governance among the Church presidents are both advanced by Episcopal Evangelism.

The evangelical schools of Christianity, such as Episcopalians, LDS, Jehovah's Witnesses, Southern Baptists, etc. all promote the strictest conservative values, and actively recruit from wealthy upper-middle class families of this type of background.

The notion that Laura Bush has abandoned the more liberal Methodism of her youth and college upbringing for more conservative Seventh Day Adventism is best expressed in her own words:

[quote="First Lady Laura Bush"]

As a child, I loved listening to my mother read to me. Little did I know that she was doing much more than providing comfort and entertainment; she was paving the way for my learning and success in school.

Research tells us that the early language experiences and education we provide our children shape the way they think and learn. The quality of these experiences affects a child's enthusiasm for learning, ability to interact with others and success in school.

Though many children grow up hearing a broad vocabulary and being read to from infancy, others enter school without knowing the names of letters or how to count. For these children, reading and learning can be a struggle. If they are unable to overcome this obstacle, their loss affects all of society.

Our challenge is to reach all children early so that every child starts school with the skills needed to learn. Once in the classroom, our children deserve excellent teachers and a high-quality education.

As a mother and former public school teacher and librarian, I believe we all have a duty to help our children achieve success. And I am proud to join President Bush in his goal to make America's schools the best they can be.

-- Letter from Mrs. Bush

[/quote]

-source: <http://www.whitehouse.gov/firstlady/education.html>

It is likely that Laura Bush was first moved to question the Methodist values of her youth on November 6, 1963, when she crashed her car into and killed her boyfriend at the time, Michael Dutton Douglas, age 17.

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Laura\_Bush#Responsibility\_for\_the\_death\_of\_a\_classmate

It is most likely that Laura was then exposed to conservative Seventh Day Adventist values in the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority at Southern Methodist University in Dallas, Texas.

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Kappa\_Alpha\_Theta

This was the same sorority that Lynne Cheney had joined while attending college in Colorado and at the University of Wisconsin.

[quote="wikipedia: Lynne Cheney"]

Within the George W. Bush administration, Lynne Cheney is regarded as being quite politically involved and is a vocal supporter of Republican party politics and politicians. In this respect she is somewhat of a contrast to First Lady Laura Bush who has largely distanced herself from overt partisanship.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Lynne\_Cheney

This page also reminds us that Dick and Lynne Cheney's daughters were also born around the same time as Laura Bush was attending college, Liz in 1966 and Mary in 1969. Mary, who is a homosexual, has followed in her mother's footsteps of activism in her father's career and supporting "conservative" values.

[quote="whitehouse.gov"]

Lynne Cheney, wife of Vice President Dick Cheney, has loved history for as long as she can remember, and she has spent much of her professional life writing and speaking about the importance of knowing history and teaching it well.[/quote]

-source: <http://www.whitehouse.gov/mrscheney/>

Now, understand that Busta Rhymes was schooled specifically by Clarence Smith (13x), who studied under Malcolm X, who had studied under Martin Luther King Junior, who was a friend of catholic president John Kennedy. These were the african-American "civil rights" leaders of note during the twentieth century, and many of the first African Americans since Frederick Douglas to be successfully active in American politics. As we see the passive resistance of MLK was learned from Ghandi, who had in turn learned it while studying American naturalist philosopher Henry David Thoreau and philosophical transcendentalism in Harvard university, Great Britain. It seems that the return of transcendentalist philosophy as it is applied as passive resistance to American politics has served to aggitate the African American descendents of its practitioners.

This growing distaste for passive resistance takes two forms among modern African Americans: 1) subserviance to capitalism for the rewards of property. 2) the belief in the family as being the central and primary social unit, rather than the race itself. These values are essentially the same for the most passive resistant Christian coloured conservatives as it is for the most active resistant Muslim African American radical. These are neo-Sethian values.

However, the primary split between the whites on the one hand and the blacks on the other is that the blacks are becoming increasingly disillusioned with each generation with passive resistance, and therefore with Christianity, although still embracing essentially conservative capitalist values. The whites have never been the minority of the American population, but in an amount of areas almost equal to the critical mass point, whites are rapidly becoming the minority for the first time ever. Their reaction is to treat their neighboring comrades as inferior, and preach and promote "educating" these ignorant savages. This results in a rebellion by, especially now, young African Americans against the moral dogmas of their "white-oppressor's" education, and they have begun to search alternative sources for education in all fields of study from hidden history to the sacred numbers and sacred geometries.

The African American experiment with transcendentalist passive resistance in American politics appears to have been orchestrated by the catholic church as a means of weakening the secret societies by infiltrating their ranks with the disenfranchised and disillusioned displaced masses of a tribal agrarian/hunter society that had been brought over for the past 400 years from their vast and breath-taking vista of a homeland on infested slave-ships, where they were then sold in bondage into servitude in an alien land, where their own language itself could not be understood.

The catholic connection is implied obscurely via the KKK. The Klan was vehemently anti-catholic, as well as anti-semitic and racist. They believed themselves the reborn chivalric order of the Scottish Right of Masonry, the once upon a time Templar Knights. However, they neglected to understand that the original Knights Templar were vehemently pro-catholic, albeit still supported by the anti-semitic and racist catholic order of zion, who were the true authors of the Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion.

The Templars split from the church, and were purged from catholicism, when they chose to reverse their stand on the campaign of pogroms the catholic priory intended to unleash upon the Jews of Spain. The Templars had learned a great deal from the Semites of Palestine, and were familiar with the Ottoman Empire's prescence across northern Africa, from the Assassins in the east to the Spanish Jews in the west. The Templars understood that siding with the Moslems, the Hebrews, and the Africans would cost them many generations of lives in recouping from the purge, but they knew also the rewards in gold and diamonds would be greater still.

Now, the KKK were never really members of Masonry. Like the Order of Zion and the Knights Templar before them, they laboured not under a charter to convene as a lodge of labourers, but under the knighthood presented only by a king, and only under the auspices of a religious empire. Thus, the KKK were catholics attempting to defame masonry.

This is why the catholic president John Kennedy worked closely with Martin Luther King Junior during the "civil rights" movement. The purpose of this was to discourage passive resistance as a feasible means to achieving satisfactory ends in terms of civil rights for African Americans. Both MLK jr. and JFK were assassinated, and this was also perpetrated by catholic conspriacy to slander and stir up trouble for the Blue Lodge degrees.

It is not impossible that, within the highest eschalons of each, the same souls sit at the head of all tables. It is not impossible that slavery, although perpetrated by Catholicism as a slander against Zionism, may have been meant to strengthen Masonry's resolve for civil liberties. It is also possible that the decline in efficacy for passive resistance trend among modern African Africans following the civil rights movement is merely the mirror being held up to the mason plot to dispense hallucinogens to an entire generation of welathy, middle-class bourgeoisie, which has proven to have had identical results. The blacks, like the hippies, have all turned coat and become the epitome of what their ancient-parents had once wanted for their elder-parents generation. The baby boomers have become what the flappers of the great depression had always dreamed of for the so-called greatest generation. Likewise, the Africans embrace these same values, the values of their oppressors, every time they complete any form of monetary transaction. They are buying into the service-sector route up the corporate ladder approach set before them by the baby-boomers, once hippies, who have now become the dreaded Neo-Sethians. The neo-conservative baby-boomers embrace the reptilian, off-world agenda of trance-channeling at their very heart, while the black Africans in America that serve these vile masters believe themselves Gods.

This is all merely one, relatively minor example of how entangled the many different factions involved in the family trees of social trends can become. It is important to remember that neither Ratzinger the Pope of catholicism nor Usama Ben Ladin, shiek of Mohammedism, consider themselves neo-Sethians. Both are violently opposed to the neo-con regime in America that is using the neo-Sethian strategy of infiltrating evangelical Christian sects to spread the tension of the millennium and the fear of Judgment Day. The Catholic Irish continually bomb Britain, and Usama Ben Ladin remains at large following the 9-11 WTC disaster.

So the leaders within these types of social movement make their intentions well known and clear. The followers, on the other hand, usually practise the opposite of this mentality, promoting the status quo on the surface and upholding alternative value systems in relative privacy. This is what is called "playing the game."

No one on earth can "play the game" better than modern African Americans and the baby boomer generation of ex-hippies. This is because these are the two groups who were primarily responsible for the creation of civilisation in the first place: the African Egyptians and the pale blue Aryans achieved high society while the proto-Hebraic Sumerians were still writing in linear B.

Now these two are up to something. They have appeared to be in competition with one another. They promote the same conclusions for solving the same perceived social problems as one another to the letter, but they are believed to disagree on something called a "fundamental" or rather, "fundamentalist" level. They both appear strictly conservative, one Christian, one Muslim. They agree and they disagree. So what are they up to?

It is my personal hypothesis that they do not differ between them at all. They have both become aware of their part within the Great Plan. They are in co-operation with one another. They have achieved what the Catholics and the Masons could not. They are Christians and Muslims sharing the same values. But these values are not really the conservative family values expressed by the cowering masses. They are expressed by the actions of their respective religious leaders.

It is unfortunate now that Pope Ratzinger, the catholic, cannot speak on behalf of baby-boomer, ex-hippy, modern neo-con passive resistant Christianity. It is unfortunate that therefore the substitute has become George W. Bush seeking council from Ariel Sharon. It is unfortunate because it means that Usama Bin Laden, who otherwise would have made a very great and powerful anonymous nobody, has been made out to be a criminal genius masterminding the entire conspiracy, when really he is only a patsy groomed over by intelligence agents.

This is why, despite their better judgment, the occult council of hermeticists has opted to elect Laura Bush as de facto OHO and de jour IHO over the Rosicrucian secret chiefs within the Order of Death.

Now to return to what a wondrous event it is that the neo-con ex-hippy baby boomers and the radical ex-Panther African Americans are sharing in the conspiracy together to pretend to have conservative family values and to be willingly participating in "playing the game" of capitalism. While attributable obviously to both the anti-socialism of marijuana and thus to the influence of the lodge, and to the anti-dogmatism of LSD and thus to the influence of the church, neither of these is really completely responsible for, nor can fully explain, this collusion.

Consider that the Charles Manson family occurred contemporarily to the indoctrination of hundreds of rural blacks trained only by ultra-primitivist snake-handling zionites into their nearest local Lodges who then moved into the suburbs over the next generation by working service sector jobs and entry level positions in corporations. Nowadays the children of the members of the hippy "Fam" consider themselves the "entitlement" generation and move easily in the youth of even only their own single one lifetime from service sector to management, and from management to corporate, and hence up the ladder of power.

Only two decades ago this would have seemed as absurd a thing to dream of for a coloured female as becoming president. Now it seems as those we may yet see Condaleeza Rice (Rep) run against Hillary Clinton (Dem) for the Highest office in the land of the free.

There are ever more increasing breaking down of social barriers. The government pays for their patents in advance by grants to potential inventors, as it offers grants to aspiring writers to get their book published. The government funds art communities, and the government even funds the growing of medicinal marijuana. The government is even paying me to be insane.

We see the government like a wall of liquid assets waiting behind the dam of banks who sell off interest-bearing loans. If the loans the banks make are above their own potential assets (such as should their assets not be liquid, but tied up in stock exchange investments, or hedge funds, or money market accounts, or even government bonds) then the government must bail them out. But if the government did not bail out the banks, but converted our monetary system to a central finance credit system instead, then this would as much accomplish the "overnight psychic revolution" as staying up early burning the candle at both ends.

So, now we can begin to see some of the goals and outcomes of the charade perpetrated by the collusion between the conservative whites and the blacks over an older and a younger generation. This is the fulfillment of the NAZI plan to conquer the Aryan Race and elevate it above the Negro and the Jew. However this is only the beginning.

Now we see the white and black Masons aligning, the Christian neo-conservatives, or rather, new conspirators, and the Moslem jihad apologists on one and the same side, deluding the planet.

At least, this was the vision shown to Busta Rhymes by Laura Bush.

Busta Rhymes has been following the neo-Sethian movement throughout its history as it has suddenly infiltrated and rapidly taken over control of the Order of Death. Likewise, there was a certain neo-Sethian assigned to watch from within the movement and monitor Busta Rhymes as he investigated their movement from without. Busta's goal was to break the growing authority of the neo-Sethian movement within the Order of Death. In order to do this it was necessary that he confront this counter-image of himself. So, as he came closer to finding this person, the more powerful this person became among the neo-Sethians. Until when Busta finally discovered the identity of Laura Bush as his double-agent.

By then, in many ways, it was already too late. Because Burroughs was IHO for such a prolonged period of time, he was responsible for literally billions and billions of side projects upon which already trillions upon trillions of dollars have been shuffled around in order for them to find funding.

It was, in fact, Burroughs confronting Burroughs in many ways, when Busta Rhymes finally confronted Laura Bush. Laura accused Busta of trying to take over the authority from the unenlightened, with whom the right to governorship rightly does belong. However, Busta asserted he was merely there to end the oppression of his own people by the manipulations of those in power now on behalf of all of those who were the only ones truly at fault, but who are dead now.

The young Burroughs, the youthful rebel, the unquestioning disciple, versus the old Burroughs, the fag-hag behind all machinations of the modern era.

Before there were the modern IHO and OHO, before the most ancient known origins of the Order, before Sumeria, Egypt and India; there were the animal factions; and before these there were the humanimals versus the humandroids; and before these there were the upright beasts that walked and talked and dressed as people; and before this there were robots. In the beginning there was an alien reading Aesop's fables with a glass of blackberry juice, and this is as far back as the Order of Death goes so far as I am able to remember.

Of course, there are myths and speculations of all these ages in the secret doctrines of the Lodge, the church, the Order and the neo-Sethians, and all of these differ each like one of the animal factions that had preceded them. Likewise, in these myths from the ages are contained even older myths, the go back to before the beginning of my own natural experiences, or coincidences, with its history in this life time. I have come to learn that the Sumerians recorded legends of the Crew tha Never Sleeps, which may be the same as the Mayan Jagaurs. The Mayans, likewise, have a legend of a Great Burner, their so-called Quetzalcoatl, also called Khunab Khu, who may be the same as Enlil, or celestial Osiris, whose solar son, Marduk, or Ra, reconquered all the civilisations around the whole world that had been built by His father. For it was Enki the snake in the grass that had created the free will within the beasts of burden, and caused them to fall into confusion as to their best service to God. But all was lost to the Enkidu priest-class, the agrarian shamen, and so they broke the vessels. They broke the vessels that released the upper waters and they broke the vessels that released the lower waters. The waters flooded the world, and starved most of the Nefilim warriors of Marduk, until they became the djinn, free spirits but whose souls are forever trapped on earth. The broken vessels' shards fell down to create the matter of the universe. This base matter is called Malkah, an unclean woman, while the energy which infuses it is called Shekina, or the Princess Bride, and these two conjoin together in Malkuth, the kingdom. (for more you can confer to the chart in the previous post)

So, what is the "fundamental" difference between the passive resistant, transcendentalist, baby boomer, ex-hippy, ex-yuppie, modern (neo-Sethian) Christian neo-cons of the white upper middle class and the organised criminal, materialist, beatnik, generation-x, capitalist, Muslim panthers and five percenters of the black lower middle class? It dates back to the original argument at the time of our own species becoming self-aware, can God have a Brother?

The first answer to this was No, and the result of this was the shattering of the vessels and subsequently the flood. If we accept, even if only as a point of reference, the gregorian calendar where 2000 years ago is called year zero, and the date 4000 years ago is therefore called 2000 years before the year zero. So, if time can be folded up in this way, then the issues prevalent underlying the dominant mental conceptual and social paradigms at this point in history will resonate particularly strongly with those occurring at round numbers of per annum solar orbit cycles of our home planet. For example then, the issues of 2000 years ago concern the neo-Sethians, while those of 4000 years ago pre-occupy the minds of the enlightened.

Remember that it was 4000 years ago, according to Bishop Usher, that we could look to date the so-called "world" flood according to the Hebraic mythologies of the Torah. Thus, when archaeologists excavated in Nineveh modern Iraq, they discovered a layer of silt beneath some 4000 years of solid perpetual civilisation. Thus, the civilisation of Iraq, that Americans profess to consider "primitive," by wearing "support the troops" ribbons, is really the oldest around. The high civilisation of Sumeria itself exists beneath this layer of silt, and therefore pre-dates the flood which seems to have consumed that region about, as predicted, 4000 years ago.

So, if time is measured in the gregorian way, then 2000 years ago, at year zero, the timeline can fold up on itself, such that the present and the past at about 4000 years ago can line up. So, therefore, some of us worry more about the Aztec Fifth Sun, the so-called Great Burner, than we do about the affairs of politicians.

And this is the fundamental difference. Yes indeed, but it is not the difference that separates the black-Moslems FROM the white neo-cons, it is the difference that separates both the black Moslems AND the white neo-cons apart from all their predecessors throughout the history of both the church and the lodge, no matter which is older. They have re-achieved together a state essentially similar to before the building of the Tower of Babylon, and before the confusion of the tongues between the different castes of worker. They are co-operating in a secret conspiracy to corner the world market on gold and diamonds, the fuel and the packaging of the future world of zero-point energy anti-gravity. And this, they have succeeded in doing.

-ben

so, let us return to the question of: if their followers profess the same beliefs, and their leaders profess the opposite beliefs, then what is the "fundamental" difference between Busta Rhymes and Laura Bush?

It is simple, really.

Busta Rhymes knows the short-term future, while Laura Bush knows both the short and the long term futures. Why is this? Because Busta Rhymes relies on prophecy to foresee the future, while Laura Bush relies on her knowledge of the cold and calculating plan of the ages to make predictions about the future of larger scope power trends. If Busta Rhymes had access to this form of "unlimited" power, he would have been able to stop Laura Bush from assumption of the de facto office of OHO and the de jour duties of the IHO as well.

However Busta Rhymes' own inability to see black from white at the crucial moment led to his downfall. At the very moment when he could have realised ahead of time Laura Bush would summon the power of the Plan, the so-called Vrill of Thule, he was distracted and then she struck him down. The difference he was ultimately unable to see was that between himself and his own adversary, who at that moment was standing right in front of him.

So, what could have distracted Busta Rhymes' most auspicious attention?

I believe the answer to this lies in Operation Scorpion. What is Operation Scorpion? Watch the movie "Traffic" by the USA Network. In it crates of uncut cocaine are being shipped across the US border from Mexico. On the sides of these wooden crates is stamped the numbers 9-11 and a small stencil of a scorpion. The movie Traffic was released in 2000 and won 4 oscars.

-source: <http://www.imdb.com/title/tt0181865/> also, consider the following quote from the 1999 film Three Kings:

[quote="David O. Russell and John Ridley"]

CHIEF (O.S.)

These are definitely Saddam's bunkers between Karbala and Nazaria.

TROY

What's inside?

CHIEF

According to Intel, Picasso, Sony, Rolex, Armani. Kuwait was Arab Beverly Hills and Saddam sacked it.

TROY

It would be nice to bring something home besides sand fleas

-CHIEF

Whatever, the good Lord put this map in our path and we're gonna find something

-TROY

He could also put a land mine in our path if we go out there

-CHIEF

Don't worry, you're safe with me, I was fire baptized.

TROY

What the hell are you talking about?

CHIEF

I have a ring of Jesus fire to guide my decisions.

TROY

I'm not following this. You're putting me on, right?

CHIEF

For those who understand, no explanation is necessary; for those who don't, no explanation will suffice. [/quote]

-source: http://www.dailyscript.com/scripts/threekings\_shootingdraft.pdf page 23

Operation Scorpion, also known as Operation Desert Scorpion, is part of an ancient plan. Busta Rhymes was among the few precognitives prescient enough to pick up on this.

Consider the following warnings in some samples of his music:

<http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/BustaRhymes/Scorpion1.mp3>

From the 1999 album When Disaster Strikes, the cover of which depicts a massive explosion in downtown New York.

<http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/BustaRhymes/Scorpion2.mp3>

From the 1996 album the Coming, Busta Rhymes debut solo album.

<http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/BustaRhymes/Scorpion3.mp3>

Busta's predictions for the future following Operation Desert Scorpion.

Other musicians who dropped cryptic hints of foreknowledge of Operation Desert Scorpion include Radiohead, whose 1997 song Paranoid Android is about a rain dance, while System of a Down released their songs "Chop Suey" and "Toxicity" on September fourth, 2001. Slayer, who released their album on 9-11, 01 itself, featured a cover depicting, like Busta Rhymes' album before, a large explosion in downtown New York. This album was considered "insensitively" revealing, although it was never established whether this was explained as intentional or merely coincidental.

Here is a write-up of the ultimate aims of the Desert portion of Operation Scorpion:

[quote="Global Security .org"]

Operation Desert Scorpion

June 15, 2003 - June 29, 2003

In order to isolate and defeat remaining pockets of resistance seeking to delay the transition to a peaceful and stable Iraq, Combined Joint Task Force 7 initiated Operation Desert Scorpion on June 15, 2003.

This operation, which follows Operation Peninsula Strike, is designed to identify and defeat selected Ba'ath party loyalists, terrorist organizations and criminal elements while delivering humanitarian aid simultaneously.

Combat operations will be followed by synchronized stability and humanitarian operations designed to assist a transition to Iraqi self-rule. These include engineer and civil affairs initiatives to repair damaged infrastructure, support the growth of police forces and local government and improve the lives of Iraq's citizens.

The goal of Operation Desert Scorpion, in keeping with our ultimate mission, will be to help establish a permissive and secure environment and to facilitate a rapid transition to Iraqi self-sufficiency.

In the central region near Tikrit and Kirkuk, Coalition forces conducted 36 raids and detained 215 individuals in the first days of the operation. Coalition forces also performed humanitarian fuel escort missions in the region.

By June 16, 2003 Coalition forces in the Baghdad area conducted 11 raids and detained 156 individuals. Coalition forces also collected 121 rifles, two submachine guns, 19 pistols, 18 rocket-propelled grenades, four machine guns, 31 pounds of explosives, and some chemical protective masks.

As of July 29, 2003, Operation Desert Scorpion was summarized by DOD officials as having consisted of 13 raids and resulted in the capture of 38 detainees, including nine captured by the 1st Armored Division in the course of the seven raids the unit conducted in Baghdad. Operation Desert Scorpion had also resulted in the seizure of $8M as well as a large sum of British pounds and Euros.

<http://www.globalsecurity.org/wmd/library/news/iraq/2003/07/030729-d-6570c-002.jpg>

<http://www.globalsecurity.org/wmd/library/news/iraq/2003/07/030729-d-6570c-003.jpg>

As of July 29, 2003

[/quote]

-source: http://www.globalsecurity.org/military/ops/desert\_scorpion.htm

and here is some brief commentary on the secret Operation Scorpion...

[quote="Common Dreams News Center"]

Cheney was a hyperactive advocate for the 1991 Persian Gulf War. Unfortunately for Secretary of Defense, whose passion for deposing Saddam Hussein reached surreal levels, the "Operation Scorpion" scheme he and his aides developed for imposing "regime change" upon Iraq was so ineptly plotted that it was scrapped after a cursory review by General Norman Schwarzkopf.[/quote]

-source: <http://www.commondreams.org/views04/0909-08.htm>

Could it be that some artists, more or less naturally prescient, could indeed perceive the coming tragedy of 9-11? And if so, could they have prevented it?

-ben

Those who struggle for power were born to be weak.
We, like good shepherds, shall thin the flock gradually, until only the naturally strong survive.

Those who are injured shall be revenged in perpetuity.
They shall inherit the earth, while their oppressors inherit the wind.

Those who crave more power deserve none.
Within one generation shall their fortunes be reversed, their houses be divided, such that the very bricks and mortar themselves rise up against them.

Those who would rule shall be forced to serve.
We, who seem to serve, will finally rule from on high, while they, who seem to rule, will be reconstituted into a direct democracy.

There is no Higher Good than to take the Greatest Common Factor and make it into the Lowest Common Denominator.

There is no Lower Evil than to take the Lowest Common Denominator and try to make it become the Greatest Common Factor.

There is no Heaven nor Hell on earth but what God allows and man can achieve.
To make a Heaven on Earth we cheat the Devil.
To make a Hell on Earth we cheat God.
To pray is to discourse, and to discourse is to bargain, and to bargain is to cheat.
Thus, beware how you pray, for this will determine with whom you do discourse.

Call your brother God. This is an honor.
Do not call God your brother. This is a shame.

How you seek love determines what form it will be in when you find it.
To seek love let it find you.
To move the mountain, become the mind. As the mind surfaces above time, so too shall one leap from peak to peak like a mountain goat.

To use the mind, hail all well.
To abuse the mind, hail all ill.

Just as mind and brain are, so too are the heart and the soul, and so too are the roots and seeds the spirit.

To do harm to one is to do harm to all.
To do harm is to strengthen the enemy.
The enemy is the same as the self.

To heal one is to heal all.
Just as time heals all wounds, death cures all disease.
To live, heal the self.
To die, harm the enemy.

To live is to love, which supercedes all else.
To die is to hate, which undermines all else.

Heaven and Hell are already upon the earth. This is because the earth is what we make of it. If we make of it a hell, we say there is hell on earth. If we make of it a heaven, we say there is the kingdom come. So, do not run away from these earthly realities to those unknown eternities, for to run away is only to run towards. The two extreme ends are the diameter of a circumference. So with heaven and hell, eternity and earth, self and other. In the time it takes one to run the diameter, the circumference will have come around again halfway, and you shall only arrive again from whence you came. Instead, seek the truth within by being still at the centre, the origin point. When you are at peace, then the whole world will come to you and bow.

-ben

Busta Rhymes was trained under William Burroughs through the author's astral travels while alive. When Burroughs died, Busta Rhymes became the de facto head of the offshoot order opposed to the neo-Sethian take over of the cult of sleep and the Order of Death. This cult lost the official authority of the neo-Sethians to convene publically, and was forced to go underground. Thus, while the neo-Sethians are considered to have conducted a coup de tat within the Order of Death, the predominant culture within the subservient cult of sleep remains under the auspices of the most talented members of the American liberal Democrat party in America, mostly showbiz entertainers.

This offshoot order under Burroughs has many outward manifestations. The more liberal denominations of de jour Christianity, such as Scientology, and UFO and separatist cults. These cults have all been suppressed by the dominant paradigm now, in charge of the mainstream media, the intelligence community and the ATF.

Therefore the lines are clearly drawn, and have been for some time since the death of William S. Burroughs. There are many more creative liberals than there are neo-conservatives. However, both of these two cults can rightly be called neo-Sethian, and this is where the confusion comes from.

Entertainers, such as Busta Rhymes, advocate the accumulation of credit-based financial wealth. The neo-cons advocate the same. Entertainers make social-commentary, while politicians determine social-customs. Yet the lines between them are clearly drawn.

It is an internal race within American culture to accumulate the most valuable natural resources. The neo-cons, under Dick Cheney, seem to have focused their accumulation of natural resources on oil from Alaska, the Gulf of Mexico, Saudi Arabia and most recently Iraq. The entertainers seem to be focused more on the accumulation of diamonds, gold and silver.

It seems entirely likely to me to hypothesise from these premisses that the neo-cons know they are set on self-destruct. They believe they are doing what they are doing for the good of all. By accelerating the rate at which the earthlings destroy earth, it will up the time-table to generate off-world travel.

Thus the neo-cons are funded by depletable fossil fuels, while the entertainers funnel their funds into what will be the fuel and focal lenses of the off-world craft to come.

Yet both of these cults predict the end of the world, the second coming of the Messiah, the coming of the "Anti-Christ," etc. etc. etc. And since there is evidence that some entertainers, such as Busta Rhymes, did have some short-term prophetic awareness of Operation Scorpion before 2000 when it began to take effect.

Therefore, what is the difference, again, between Busta Rhymes and Laura Bush?

Busta Rhymes is a psychic revolutionary. It is his task in existence to reveal the philosophies behind the conspiracies of the neo-cons.

Thus, contrary-wise, Laura Bush is a psychic conspirator. It is her task in existence to veil the philosophies behind the conspiracies of the neo-cons.

It is clear that, during the planetary alignment of 5/5/2000 there was a tremendous battle fought between Busta Rhymes and Laura Bush. This battle occurred psychically and was caught on camera by the genius of George Lucas in his Star Wars prequel trilogy.

In this portrayal of the events within the Order of Death's ranks as there was a tremendous struggle between psychic revolutionaries and psychic conspirators, fictional characters set long ago, in a galaxy far, far away act out in tableau the events leading up to the year 2000. Other directors of films and music videos around this time had carefully laid traps of their own warning about Operation Scorpion and the agenda of occultists who have infiltrated the highest echelons of the military and the intelligence agencies. Most of these films and videos received critical acclaim at the time, however none of these have come back up again in the repetitive, stereotypical cultural cycle of American media memetics, which generally propagates at a five year following cultural cycle of "decade nostalgia" for the previous decade. This is why the citizens are so far behind the times in terms of their ability to access and use extraterrestrial technologies built by the army and operated by the intelligence agencies. They are being brainwashed by the entertainers, whose sole purpose in existence is to reveal the conspiracies of their political counterparts, the also neo-Sethian neo-conservatives.

Thus, it is not the military and intelligence agencies that are "fifty" years ahead of what the public knows about, but the entertainers, such as Busta Rhymes and George Lucas, who are five years behind in what they manage to portray of the government's technologies.

That is why George Lucas chose to write and direct the prequels instead of sequels to his original Star Wars trilogy. He was, and is, a neo-Sethian. Just as is Busta Rhymes, whose character was portrayed as Mace Windu as played by Sam Jackson.

It was the prequels that tell the story of Mace Windu, the ultimate Jedi with a light sabre. His wisdom rivals Master Yoda, and he has been on the Council almost as long.

Of course, because we are only safely allowed to portray political commentary by the psychic revolutionaries as fiction, then it was necessary to portray the stature of Mace Windu as having long been respected within the community of his fellow neo-Sethian sect, the Jedi Bindu. However the same cannot rightly be said for Busta Rhymes.

Thus, the backstory of the Busta Rhymes/Mace Windu character is actually told in the story within the story of Jar Jar Binks. It is as though Jar Jar Binks and Mace Windu were meant to represent the two sides of Busta Rhymes, both neo-Sethian, one a conspirator turned revolutionary, and the other a revolutionary turned conspirator. In many ways, Jar Jar Binks was as responsible for the Clone War as Queen Amidala was for getting Senator Palpatine elected Grand Chancellor.

In many ways it was by the slip of Jar Jar's tongue that led to the war, just as with Busta Rhymes, his warning of the 9-11 portion of Operation Scorpion in many ways can be seen to have directly contributed to the blame for that event being thrown at the Moslem world in general, specifically the middle east.

The neo-con philosophy is basically that, had we gone into Iraq under Schwarzkopf and Powell in the early ninties when we drove the Iraqi troops from Kuwait, then 9-11 would have been avoided. That is why Operation Scorpion was concocted by the current vice president, then ENRON collaborating Halliburton Oil and Energy consortium executive, Dick Cheney.

It was deemed necessary by the oil and energy companies following what they considered the botched Gulf War a fiasco to create the illusion of an "energy crisis." They could then justify riding this particularly plotting and conniving neo-con into office on the ticket of the natural next selection for president following the over-blown sex-scandal surrounding liberal Democrat Bill Clinton.

The neo-con ticket also managed to slip a lot of former intelligence agents into high positions of authority around the president. Of course, these lobbyists were themselves on the pay-role of military think-tank organisations, such as the Carlyle Group.

These intelligence agents were themselves often ex-military special operatives such as the CIA drug-trafficking of opium out of China during Vietnam, and the subsequent importing of crack and heroin from Columbia and Afghanistan respectively the following decade.

However, the lag behind the military intelligence technology of what cultural entertainers can reveal has actually been pushed back during the neo-con reign in America, and the neo-Sethian agenda in the Order of Death.

This has been part of a millennia old plot passed on among the intellectual elites of all cultures throughout history. This plot has specific designs on the time between the planetary alignment of 5/5/2000 and the end of the Mayan Piktun in 12/21/2012.

This plot, the ur-Hamlet's Mill, is the plan of the aeons, the zodiacal ages of the sun and the number of revolutions of the moon between them.

All of us play out our parts relative to this plan, more or less knowingly.

As the sunspots increase the ambient temperature of planet earth before 2012 more people are becoming aware of the neo-Sethian agenda as the neo-Sethian psychic revolutionaries exist to reveal what the neo-Sethian psychic conspirators exist to conceal.

This is all part of an archetypal cosmic power play between the God Set or Typhon and the God Osiris. There are various versions of this Egyptian myth. It is, however, more or less unique to Egypt on the Nile at the time of Sumero-Akkadia in the Tigris and Euphrates and Aryans in the Indus.

It is rather vague on what type of beings these archetypes are in the mythology. They are associated variously with Gods, demi-gods, giants, djinn, demons, etc.

The psychic revolutionary neo-Sethians and the psychic conspirator neo-conservatives are the two heads of one monster: Leviathan and Leviathon.

All of this is merely a distraction of the media and politicians away from their secret rituals involving the Atlantean calendar and the Enochian Communication System. These were dramatised around the turn of the millennium by such films as the Star Wars prequels, Eyes Wide Shut, Pi, and the Matrix.

The Matrix presented the mythology of Osiris and his son Horus, who ultimately defeated Set, from the perspective of African Americans within American blue degree Free and Accepted Masonry.

In the Matrix, Thoth-Osiris is portrayed as Morpheus, who finds Neo, Osiris-Horus, with whom Horus-Isis, as Trinity, then falls in love with. The problem presented in the original Matrix movie of 1999 and the subsequent Matrix sequels was the evolution of Set from the Cypher archetype in M1 to the Smith archetype in M3.

The Cypher archetype focused on the visage of Seth as trance channeled by Jane Roberts. However the Smith visage was that of an anonymous intelligence officer who had learned to replicate himself like a computer virus.

Because the psychic revolution is popular, it is beginning to build up pressure against its repression by the neo-con military and intelligence agencies. The culture is starting to expand more rapidly than it can be contained, and a breaking point is expected to be reached between 2000 and 2012 gregorian.

Various researchers call this "vergeance" different things. Some call it "time wave zero." Some call it "the singularity." Some have called it comet Hale Bopp.

The important point is, however, that all of this is part of an ancient plan. The neo-Sethians are currently playing both sides against the centre between the liberal entertainment industry (films and music videos) and the neo-conservative politicians (military and intelligence). They have constructed an artificial society by which to portray through interpersonal play-acting the cosmic movements of the stars. By speeding it up, and by discrediting from within all potential utopias along the way, the conspiracy, pushing the revolution along in front of it like the crest of a wave, controls all "world events."

So there is not really only one conspiracy, but many, that all compete and/or cooperate with one another. In this way, again: everything is the same: different. As Jim Morrison put it: "Everything is Broken up, and Dances."

When I say that Busta Rhymes studied under Burroughs by trance-channeling his astral projection while the author was still alive, I mean that the soul of Jim Morrison possessed Busta Rhymes while he was still young, if not at the moment of his conception. It was Jim Morrison's ghost, thus, that acted as the astral channel, or link, between Burroughs and Busta Rhymes. Thus, when Burroughs was eventually freed of his physical body, he could finally confront the disembodied spirit of Aleister Crowley.

This he did on the astral plane while Busta Rhymes confronted Laura Bush in a galaxy far, far away.

Just as the confrontation between Busta Rhymes and Laura Bush took place in the star wars universe, the confrontation between Aleister Crowley and William Burroughs in the afterlife was depicted in the competition of similar themed movies, "Dark City" and "City of Lost Children."

Of course, neither of these films does either of these figureheads of the modern offices of the Order of Death over the cult of sleep any justice. Both depict their respective nemesis as a mindless zombie of reconstituted dead flesh.

Thus the apparent calcification of the first post-mortem experiences of the Inner Heads of the Order sent first through the wormholes of time inside their living minds, like monkeys shot into space. By this I mean, of course, the expansion of their skulls.

Interestingly enough, both Aleister Crowley and William S. Burroughs were heroin junkies. Hence their apparent post-mortem mummification within the webs of their lives' affairs. Crowley, the man of mystery, mountain climber, magician, and Burroughs, co-inventor of the cut-up method of perception. Both men's lives were led from one extreme of climate to another as they travelled around the globe, both took all the drugs they could find in all of these lands, as well as investigated the native cultures, and the mythologies of lost or conquered peoples. Both men experimented with homosexuality, and both were prolific writers.

Simply one focused on the madness and the other on the method.

Now we see why the two different schools of neo-Sethianism sprung off from the split between the followers of Burroughs and the followers of Crowley.

Burroughs, having focused on the method, would have a greater effect on Busta Rhymes via Jim Morrison. Busta Rhymes, a God of the five percent nation, is devoted to memorisation of the sacred numerology of letters and words.

Crowley, on the other hand, begat the Dionysian movement foreseen by Nietzsche. Beginning by crafting copious catalogues of mystical correspondence tables, Crowley's followers have all managed to be insane and completely retaliatory against craft. The thelemites of the neo-Sethian movement are chaos and toxic magicians. They are urban-primitives, usually, white anthropologists studying black slum culture.

If one hops back one prior administration before Crowley, he himself had come to power by overthrowing Sir MacGregor Mathers, the first modern IHO. So it stands to reason that Crowley saw his young successor William Burroughs as the magical reincarnation of his belated former foe.

Perhaps it is here that the modern celebration of the Lizard, Operation Scorpion, the neo-Sethian coup de tat within the Order of Death, truly began, at the turn of the twentieth century. There is ample reason to speculate the entire apocalypse predicted in Revelations was played out in magical battles across Europe between Mathers and Crowley.

As one counts the generation of anti-heroes emergent from the tolling of the 21st century, one includes such as Anakin Skywalker (Star Wars), Neo (The Matrix), Max Cohen (Pi), Tyler Durden (Fight Club), even Keiser Soze (The Usual Suspects), not to even mention Hannibal Lecter (Silence of the Lambs) and cuddly psycho-killer Marv (Sin City), only to name a very few. These are supposed to be the next generation of incarnations for these two recurring archetypes to continue to do battle with one another through.

However, what was not expected by Mathers or Crowley in their previous generations was the stealthy move on Burroughs part to move the ghost of Jim Morrison into the host Busta Rhymes. This caused a new current to arise. The precedent was set for the Master to take more than one apprentice at a time. Burroughs had understudied Morrison and Busta both, and thus had set back the subsequent generation of Crowleyans two moves, or rather, about half a generation, roughly twenty years.

The Crowleyians, known exoterically as the baby-boomers, the hippies, the yuppies, and now as the neo-cons, actually were not permitted to make their first move until one half generation after the cusp of the last generation. Thus, the babies born between 1933 and 1945 in the United States, for example were, respectively, beat niks (the older siblings of boomers), soldiers (the older siblings of hippies), slackers (generation X), and now are the "echo-boomers" (the children of the slackers and of the yuppies both).

This is why the neo-cons seem to have lapped the entertainment industry, and thus why they seem to be able to withhold the "free" energy technologies of the near future from exposure in the "free" press. Because the generation of Burroughs offspring is just being reborn, born again in twice the numbers of the neo-cons. And these kids are studying under such tutors as Usama Bin Ladin, and as Busta Rhymes.

-ben

Now, I believe, is as good a time as any to get into the opposite faction than the cult of sleep and the Order of Death. By opposite, I mean, as above, so below.

You see, the gravity-well of our planet acts like a mirror. This mirror has had many names throughout the ages. I will call it the Painted Sky, and refer to the process of the reflective properties of this mirror as the Painted Sky Effect.

Now, because of the Painted Sky Effect, there are those souls that dwell above, and those who dwell below them, on the surface. The souls that dwell above are trapped here in the false, artificial heaven of the Enochian Communications System in the exact same (or rather, oppositely mirrored) way as the souls that dwell on the surface beneath are entrapped and encased within bodies. That is, as above, so below.

Therefore, just as on earth's surface below there are the cult of sleepers: the sleeper-agents for different systems, the sleep-walkers of Dreamland, and the Aboriginal keepers of dreamtime. So, too, in the Painted Sky above, do we see recorded in the annals of history tales of great heroes, of wars in the heavens and revelations from realms beyond. However, because the Painted Sky looks down from above at the events across the earth below, all appears reversed. Therefore, the obverse of the Cult of Sleep is the crew that never sleeps.

Likewise, just as on earth's surface there are the power-struggles within the Order of Death between the neo-Sethian psychic conspirators and psychic revolutionaries... so too in the Painted Skies above we see the opposite reflected of this... the Great Burner.

From the perspective of the Great Burner, the cult of sleep are the Enemy.

From the perspective of the cult of sleep, the Great Burner is the Enemy.

This debate appears to go as far back as Sumeria, and the distinct split between the Enkidu and the Enlilites.

The most recent upsurge of this mythology prior to modern times was during the conquering of the peaceful Mayan culture by the blood-thirsty Aztecs. The Aztecs preserved the Mayan calendar, however, which tells of the so-called Fifth Sun of 2012 AD.

It was long believed that the earliest two elements were the waters above, or the sky, and the waters below, or the terrestrial world. These waters were supposedly set at war with one another during the ziggurat era of Babylon. According to the mythology, Horus (son of Osiris), also known as Marduk (son of Enki), waged war against the northern Sumerians, the Akkadians and the Chaldeans.

The concept of pre-Columbian trans-oceanic cross-cultural trade is called "Diffusionism." According to some modern researchers, the pyramids at Giza, Egypt, and at Teotihuacan, Mexico, were actually designed and built by the same culture, if not the same migrating race.

Therefore it becomes possible to speculate and to draw parallels between the cultures displaced from Sumeria by the flood and those who seem to spontaneously appear at the height of their cultures immediately afterwards in Egypt and, later, in the Yucatan.

For example, the Lillitu priestesses of Inanna (wife of Dummuza the shepherd king) follow the pre-Hebraic account of the tree of Wisdom in the Garden of Innocence. Their more detailed explanation, involving an apsu bird, a snake and a cat is most likely the basis for the biblical version.

Likewise, the modern-day keepers of the Popul Vuh record the incident of one and seven Macaw recovering the head of their father Hunab hu. In this record the head of Hunabhu has become the fruit of a calabash tree and is guarded by a toad and a hawk.

So, too, do both the Middle East and South America have their Messiah myths. In the east it is Jesus the shepherd king, and in the west it is Quetzalcoatl, the plumed serpent.

The legends actually appear to correspond in time as well, such that the myth of Quetzalcoatl's departure with Jaguar Quiche, Jaguar Night, Not-Right-Now, and Dark Jaguar appear to have been contemporary to the crucifixion story of Jesus.

From here the Mayan civilisation dissolves and is conquered by the Aztecs, who are then, in turn, colonised by conquistadors and catholic missionaries.

Some suspect that the neo-Sethian movement is actually a re-emergence of the cult of the Great Burner. They are in a way correct. The neo-Sethian movement is the equivalent stirring in the Order of Death as is the coming of the Great Burner amongst the crew who never sleep.

The neo-Sethians celebrate the false holidays of Rome, which are celebrated twelve years too soon, and hail only the destruction of the old.

The Great Burner is here to destroy all the sleepers. Rejoice! There will be no more sleeper-agents. There will be no more keepers of dream time. The intelligence agents for the crew that never sleeps, the sleep-walkers, who slide back and forth secretly between the upper and lower parallel dimensional realities, shall soon all be exposed to the True Light of the All-Seeing Eye of the Most High.

This light is the justice of the Great Burner. The Great Burner, who will usher in the age of the Fifth Sun, brings with destruction to all the old ways and from their ashes fuels a firey phoenix to arise.

The myth of the Great Burner is the myth of the ages. It is behind all other myths, and it explains them all.

Consider the myth of Hiram Tyrian, Ho-Tekton or Master Craftsman, murdered by his own apprentices. This has long been compared to the myth of Osiris, God of Egypt, betrayed and murdered by his cousin Set, or Typhon. Now, compare the myth of Osiris to the contemporary myth of Enki in ancient Sumeria, whose son, Marduk, conquering king of Babylon, revenged his father against his uncle Enlil. Compare this myth to the tales of Jesus, crucified to redeem the sins of his father, YHVH.

All of this is a myth of the first generation of God. The first generation of God is born first into one person, and next into all. Each generation of God lasts 2000 years. These are the generations of God, from the slain God of the heavens of night, to the resurrected son/sun god. But this God's generations stretch back around and will continue on around until the beginning head consumes the ending tale.

This God exists from time to time, as once per generation, followed by all in a generation. Such was the case with Jesus 2000 years ago, and such will be the case of all the generations alive during 2012.

This God appears as upon a series of cycles. The planetary-interplanetary (base 7)-solar-interstellar (base 12)-galactic-inter-galactic... these are above. For each cycle it takes the next greatest form. During the biological cycle, it took the form of each kind of living thing on planet earth, then its populations, and then the next, and so on and so on. This is the viral life-form that causes re-incarnation. Reincarnation occurs when one pattern of energy replaces another.

All mythologies share their root ancestry in the myth of this God: the eternally recurring Hadit, as it passes through the Duat of samsaric manvantara, this sorrowful illusion of existence, guided by Thoth, time, from one God-form to the next, assuming first the shape of Osiris, next Horus; first YHVH, then Jesus; etc.

Hadit is like the unborn cosmos. Its consciousness is believed to progress through space (Nuit) via evolution (Shu) over time (Thoth). We are all just now as humans beginning to become aware of how this process is occurring through each of us. 2000 years ago, it was only possible for one out of all of us to fully experience awareness of the Hadit-presence, now called Christ-consciousness. However, now, 2000 years later, we as a whole species are beginning to become self-aware of it.

This God has reincarnated throughout all of existence, our very molecular particles are comprised of the ashes of stars and the condensed atmosphere of earth, the mud and the breath of life.

The stations in the cycles are beginning to align. As this happens, communication is passed from one point to another. This is the song of the spheres.

These two things, the evolution of our species, and the cycles of the spheres, are not unrelated.

Hadit is the moment, the event, in which we are now. Nuit, space, is the fullness of Thoth, all time. Osiris is the past, and Horus the future.

All of this is Krishna, the unborn self-awareness of our universe itself, which is called Christ-Consciousness once someone has awakened to it.

As this all begins to occur for individuals, a critical mass will eventually be reached for the whole population.

This is the message of the Great Burner.

-ben

Most psychic conspirators, if apprehended by awakened sleepers, would confess to their participation in the psychic conspiracy. Likewise, most psychic revolutionaries, if put to the question, would likewise admit their desire for a psychic revolution to overthrow the conspiracy.

However neither side is even capable of confessing to the other, let alone explaining to the sleeper agents, what they do not know about.

This is how the parties who participated in 9-11 were kept unaware of each other, and this is how it is with the archetypes who exist, alive, guiding from beyond and behind the stereotypes, the Order behind the sleepers and the Burner above the Order.

The one level does not know of the levels above and beyond, and so thinks itself all-powerful.

Therefore, they that thinketh they hunt, really those hounds hunt them. Just as, for example, the neo-cons prey on the sleepers, so too do the neo-Sethians infiltrate the Order. Therefore, just as the Order of Death has become an archetype in itself, so too has it joined ranks with the Crew that Never Sleeps, becoming part of the plan as laid out by the Great Burner.

Now, the Order of Death has only recently been recognised for itself by the greater hearing of the animal internet. It is the animal internet that the neo-Sethians since Crowley have been trying to gain control over. The animal internet is the corner-stone of the Enochian Communications System. The Enochian System includes all that within and which is reflected upon the surface of the gravity-well surrounding earth.

It was, in fact, in exactly 1905, with Crowley's dictation of the Book of the Law, that Aiwass, a representative of the Secret Chiefs, first raised a prospective member from the modern, more public, side of the Order. The public party had been growing in power thanks to the work of the Golden Dawn, however when Crowley left the Golden Dawn, he was in turn elevated for distinction as their OHO, and eventually, even, their IHO. However, of course, after leaving the Golden Dawn and performing the self-initiations as directed by Aiwass, the true name of the Order was revealed to Crowley as not the Golden Dawn, but the Order of Death.

This recognition of someone from the public party by the "angels" the "secret chiefs" or the "animal internet" has since been mis-manifested to the masses as the neo-cons infiltrating American politics in order to war-profiteer. Therefore, the two have become confused in the minds even of most researchers of history. Diffusionism is confused with modern UFOlogy and the ancient deities explained as extraterrestrials. The modern dealings with the trans-terrestrial intelligences we have only recently discovered are then covered up as political scandals that the media reserves the right not to even expose.

Of course, all this is the plan of the Great Burner.

You see, the neo-Sethians mis-understand the nature of the Great Burner. By their own understanding of Christ consciousness, they project that the Great Burner is an important official in galactic affairs, but they confuse this with meaning either politically, or otherwise in terms of material resource allocation. This is because right now, within the animal-internet, the neo-Sethian party agenda is mirrored by reptilian races having current dominance. The neo-Sethians, therefore, allocate the resources of their reptilian reflections in the Painted Sky above. They sell oil.

The reptilians among the animal-internet are bound for extinction. This was, at the time, because of the flash-freeze of a sudden ice age that enabled only the furry mammals to breed. So, too, are the neo-Sethians a short-sighted lot who are siding with the short-lived reptiles in a last-ditch effort to change the daily-system. So, likewise, are the neo-cons a short-bet, as they glut the economy by inflating gas prices.

Now, you may think the Great Burner is God. He is not. Nor, on the other hand, is it a position to which the Order of Death, let alone its neo-Sethian infiltrators, can achieve either by election or appointment. It is, truly, a position of power, but, like a kingship, it can only be born into.

Just as with the generation of Jesus, that were the first of the fourth sun, so, too, shall the generation of 2012 be the first of the fifth and final sun. And, just as from the generation of his time was Jesus super-humanly unique, so, too, shall there come one from the generation of 2012 who will possess the same traits, and who will be called "the second coming," by the neo-Sethians. But the Crew that Never Sleeps knows this is not only the second time that a God is born within a generation.

The Crew that Never Sleeps exists to serve the Great Burner.

The Crew that Never Sleeps is to the Order of Death what the Order of Death is to the cult of sleep. The Great Burner will destroy the neo-Sethians. Just as the Order of Death only just become aware of the Crew that Never Sleeps, so too have the neo-Sethians only just now become aware of the Great Burner, and so too has the cult of sleep only just begun to awaken to the fact that exoteric society is only the playground and the battlefield for "secret" societies, such as the Order of Death.

All of this is happening very quickly by necessity, since the grand conjunction is already occurring now.

The neo-Sethians believe that, by appearing to be the group that ushers in the coming of the Great Burner, they will be able to harness the power of the minds of the cult of sleep to access the animal internet and to gain control of the Enochian Communications System from them.

Unfortunately, the Order of Death was unaware of the true nature of the Crew that Never Sleeps, and so, the neo-Sethian infiltrators of the Order are thought not to have known about the Crew that Never Sleeps either.

However, the neo-Sethian infiltrators had been schooled by a much older mythology than the Order of Death believed them to be. Thus, the neo-Sethians have completely infiltrated and subsumed within their own ranks all members or positions of the Order of Death. All those affiliated with the Order of Death are now neo-Sethians.

The neo-Sethian infiltrators claimed a heritage older than even the age given by the "secret" societies to the public of sleepers for the beginning of their own records of history themselves.

The neo-Sethians therefore appeared to the sleepers as psychic revolutionaries, ergo the neo-con party, offering a greater amount and degree of wisdom than the sleepers' own forefathers, that is, infiltrating the US government. However, once the neo-cons gained political power, the neo-Sethians switched sides and became psychic conspirators, seeking to protect and conceal their knowledge from those they deemed "outsiders." Thus the war on terrorism, the war in Afghanistan, the war in Iraq, etc.

This move, they hoped, would be reflected by the retreat of the Great Burner, whom their strategies awakened. But the Great Burner cannot be appeased by the sacrifices of disbelievers. Therefore, the more Enlilites, YHVHists and capitalist swine are killed, the less the Great Burner, it is believed, will even care to come down here. However they are sacrificing to the wrong God.

The Great Burner is not a God. The Great Burner is a man. The Great Burner is the one to be born during the 2012 conjunction who stands above all the rest in the way that Jesus supposedly did in his own time, 2000 years ago. This is the God generation: the Great Burner.

The Great Burner is Vajra. The third eye of Vajra is the All-Seeing Eye.

Vajra, or the Great Spinner of the six loka worlds of the wheel of life, is the same God as Allah, the ineffable Most High, whose gaze refracts into glittering rays like a tesseract. This God is the same as all the others, and all the other Gods are the same as this one.

The others occupy all the past and future, while the Great Burner alone sits sejant in the throne of the present moment. Therefore, the Great Burner speaks on behalf of all the possible incarnations of God, in all forms, over all time.

Like the Buddhist Vajra, Kali of Shiva, in hindu mythology, controls or reigns over the most turbulent time in human history, leading up to the "krita yuga" the "worst role" of the cosmic dice. This is presumed, by modern ministers, to correspond to the Christian conception of the Apocalypse of Revelations.

This is why the neo-Sethians promote radical Persian Ahura-Mazdism among the sleepers, such that they long to see the Essene War Scroll played out before their own eyes.

This malignant detritus of Good versus Evil clings to the underbelly of the millennium's real meaning. Just so do the neo-Sethians cling to the coming of the Great Burner.

Not to unduly overstep my bounds here, but it seems to me that it has always been the plan to simply "phase out" money into direct trade of technology.

We know, for instance, that the military-industrial complex has been doing research with clandestine technologies for more than 75 years now. The Pentagon has stayed about ten years ahead of the media and private industry's integration of the technology as well. Therefore, what we believe is "the next big thing" in technology is already "yesterday's fish-wrapper" to those in the know.

Now, think about the current gas and energy "crisis." Last summer, following the furor over hurricane Katrina's cutting access to off shore oil rig shipping routes, the gas companies also reported record earnings for the summer quarter. So, where is all this money going?

It is obvious that the next technological leaps have already been researched and developed in secret by the military and the intelligence agencies. Every day new genetic bio-organic synthetic chemicals and grafts are being tested in different fields of potential application. Soon we will have atomic machines, quantum computers, trinary programming language. All that will remain is our, now artificial, intelligence in an entirely virtual reality of our own design. Mind over matter.

As to the dissolution of cash, I have said many times before and will say as many times as it comes up in conversations that, I firmly believe the current capitalist economy of the United States of America comprises exactly what Karl Marx foresaw as a dictatorship by the proletariat. Our economic populism, the dissolution of borders for "free trade," the fact that the free press determines social issues, etc. I also think that, as Bushco spend tomorrow's money today, the current credit based economy is the "withering away" foreseen by Marx for this lower-middle class ideological dictatorship. The resulting Debit-based economy will force, as has been speculated, oil to be traded in Euros rather than dollars, or, even more likely, a new ID-card, computer-based, global financial system, resetting everyone's credit-rating to zero. This will be Marx's "communist" utopia, a cashless society.

Sorry, I meant to post this yesterday, but fell asleep.

-ben

I have the heart of the Great Burner in me!

Who is the Great Burner?

I was known by the Hebrews as Abraham, to the Egyptians as Imhotep. But they were only of my school. I was the father of Noah, and I walked with Enoch.

I took Enoch and I sent him to the faraway place, where he believed Heaven to be. And I set Enoch down there, and the people that he found there, believed in me, Lord over All this Place, and understood him as my messenger.

They are the ones who gave Enoch the name Viracocha, for he appeared through one of the gates of the ancients, so they inscribed it then to mark it as Holy.

Here is how they remember these events today:

[quote]

He went to a place now called Tiahuanacu in the province of Collasuyu, and in this place he sculptured and designed on a great piece of stone, all the nations that he intended to create.

[/quote]

-source: <http://www.sacred-texts.com/nam/inca/inca01.htm>

two prayers to Viracocha can be found here:

<http://www.sacred-texts.com/nam/inca/inca04.htm>

The Mayans record their Incan predecessor god, Viracocha, as the cosmic creator, Plumed Serpent, in the Popul Vuh. The name "Quetzalcoatl" (meaning "plumed serpent") appears later in the Popul Vuh, but then it is the name of the keeper of the mat at the citadel of Rotten Cane, which would become known to western history as the Aztec Empire. The Aztecs called this later ruler Kulkucan, but it is likely he is the same wise ruler as Pacal Votan of Palenque.

[quote]"During the fourteenth century, Huitzilopochtli told the Aztec chieftain that their new homeland would be on the island in Lake Toxcoco, and when they reached the island they were to look for an eagle eating a snake perched on a cactus growing from a rock or cave surrounded by water. This would be the location where they were to build their city and honor him.[i]"[/quote]

-source: http://www.mnsu.edu/emuseum/archaeology/sites/meso\_america/tenochtitlan.html

Archaeologists long believed that it was the Aztec Sun God, Huitzilopochtli, who appears in the center of the Aztec version of the Mayan calendar. More recent research indicates, however, that the face on the calendar represents Tonatiuh, the God of the Fifth Sun, that which will begin on Dec. 21, 2012, gregorian.

Here is the face of viracocha:

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Burner/Viracocha.gif>[/img]

Here is the face of Tonatiuh:

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Burner/Tonatiuh.gif>[/img]

Here is the gateway of Viracocha:

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Burner/tiagate.jpg>[/img]

Here is the calendar stone of Tonatiuh:

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Burner/calendarstone.jpg>[/img]

-ben

[quote="sara"]obstacle to peace.[/quote]

This is why I have said before I regret this type of talk.

Discussion of modern politics leads to discussion of political history, which in turn inevitably leads to the philosophy of purpose-driven or goal-oriented history. Anthropically it DOES make sense to say that, if all things had not occurred exactly the way they did, the current situation would be very different than it is now. However, it does NOT make sense to say that, those in the past foresaw modern outcomes, and have strategically acted accordingly. Nonetheless, the latter seems inevitably to follow from the former, because if one person adopts the former position without the latter conclusion, then someone else will come along and draw the latter conclusion from the first person's former position.

So long as there is even the hint of purpose in the analysis of modern political events made by one person, another will come along and exaggerate that purpose into a grand conspiracy theory behind those same modern political events.

This is neither bad nor good IMO. There are kernels of truth in even the most imaginative fictions.

There are, however, two problems with most conspiracy theories: 1) they can never hope to take in the full quantity of supporting evidence. 2) they frequently draw invalid conclusions about the allegedly responsible based on poor understanding of the philosophies of all parties involved.

What evidence supports a conspiracy theory? Any and all. The more "outlandish" or "far out" a conspiracy theory, the more all-encompassing it is of the data-set from which it draws its evidence. For example, I could say that the conspiracy behind the assassination of JFK involved: A) the FBI, the Dallas Mob and anti-Castro Cubans; B) the CIA and the Democrats in support of VietNam; C) Free Masons, time travel and aliens; D) alignments of the planets; E) the eternal plan of God Almighty. Each of these assertions is actually more and more valid, that is true in potential, because there is less and less evidence to support or refute the claim.

What invalid conclusions are usually drawn? Blame the Jews. Blame the Terrorists. Blame taxes. Blame Halliburton. You name it, whatever the dominant political paradigm's worst feared enemy is, that's who is inevitably BEHIND whatever the dejour conspiracy theories will be. On the Carlyle Group, until recently, past president George HW Bush and members of the Saudi Royal family (Osama Bin Laden's uncle I think), met to share plans for the regime change in Iraq. Therefore, both the terrorists AND the fascists planned and are profiting from the war between them.

Now, this does not imply a higher-order intelligence above and behind these factions, orchestrating how their battlefield chess matches will ultimately play out. It merely implies that "great minds think alike," while "fools seldom differ." Bush and the House of Saud planned the Iraq war before 9-11. VietNam had been "in the works" since Korea, however we do not find this news the least bit shocking now, 60 odd years later; nor do we overtly worry over the commonly accepted fact that the Gulf of Tonkin incident that sparked US involvement in VietNam was staged.

For example, I can say that "Free Masons killed JFK" and sound like a quack, or I can say that "Free Masons killed JFK because he was catholic" and appear to be making a little more sense. This is because I would be involving philosophical motives in the conspiracy theory. Most conspiracy theorists fail at doing this. They cannot recognise the prevalent modern philosophies because they cannot identify these philosophies' desired goals. They say, "Iran is going to nuke Israel" and appear foolish. Then someone else comes along and says "Israel is behind the plot for Iran to nuke them themselves," and suddenly this is intriguing because it hints at purpose, at philosophical motive. This ability to merely imply a philosophy, even a bogus one such as anti-semitism, all too easily passes these days for true understanding of the implied philosophy. Those who don't know say as little as possible, and those who do know say less.

All of this leads to the formation of conspiracies. When people come together in the present to discuss the purposes for past political historical events, they form groups or think-tanks such as the IO (a think-tank for individual rights) and the Carlyle Group (a capitalist arms distributor group), or even such as stone cutter guilds (for the purpose of fixing labour prices). Eventually, the larger conspiracies assimilate the smaller ones, after the order of the theorists who say little learning enough more to retire into total silence.

Whenever you discuss politics, or, more to the point, economics, you are participating in a conspiracy. This is, as I say, neither right nor wrong, good nor evil, in and of itself, according to my own humble opinion. It is simply the better part of valour to choose carefully with whom you communicate your theories.

-ben

I believe one of the philosophies most detrimental to the concept of individual rights (that is, the philosophy that civil liberties derive from a tacit agreement on the part of the individual to act in accordance with the proscribed laws of their place and time, that is that, with great power, that is, the ability to exercise the free-will, comes great responsibility, that is, the necessity of exercising self-restraint), is not fanaticism, as has been one of the prevalent beliefs since the Enlightenment. Belief that fanaticism is a real and dangerous threat to liberty will only strengthen the exuberance with which fanaticism will grip the fanatical.

Therefore, we must think: How can we make use of fanaticism?

For example, right now there are clearly two groups of fanatics at war with one another ideologically: the Moslem and the Christian. On the reactionary right in America, television evangelists and prominent republican politicians are calling for the armageddon and the end of days as described in the Christian Book of Revelations. Likewise, the Moslem counterparts of these roles, the community mosque leaders and the radical conservative party regimes even in democracies, are stirring up heat to destroy western civilisation by any means necessary.

So, if our goal is to advocate individual liberty, how can we see these fanaticist factions from an angle that will benefit this goal?

The first, all-too-common response among the unenlightened will be: "nuke them all," or "let them all nuke one another." Of course, this purpose would serve no one, "an eye for an eye leaves the whole world blind," when "what goes around comes around."

However, let us begin to shift our philosophy away from this type of unenlightened answer. Let us question: is it fanaticism itself that is at fault? No. We see quite quickly that fanatic energy is, like any source of energy, useful to whomever understands how to control it. Therefore it is not fanaticism per se that is the obstacle to the agenda of propagating the message of free will and due self reflection.

So, if we choose to continue to see the current political fanaticism as a dangerous threat to our agenda, then we can at least begin to see how to bring it under our power, and thus to render it useful. Therefore if fanaticism itself is not our enemy, then why is it at first objectionable to the sense of reason?

It is not fanatic energy, but the ends to which it is applied, that is the problem.

Consider that many civil liberties once considered inalienable, such as the right to free speech and the right to personal privacy, are rapidly becoming viewed as potentially terrorist acts. At the same time, who are the ones who are subverting such cashless, egalitarian and anonymous works like internet search-engines and P2P servers? The people tapping phone lines and seeding fake files are the same ones getting paid enough nowadays to buy ads for their personal web-spaces, and put full tanks of gas in their SUVs.

Why is this happening, and why is it being allowed to continue?

Most of the modern intelligentsia is too caught up on the appearance of material gain (by spending tomorrow's money today) to see beyond this to the real motives, the philosophical beliefs, behind the fanatical energy. These beliefs, and not the fanatic's enthusiasm, are the enemy of enlightenment and of liberty.

In the case of the Moslem and Christian fanatics of the modern era, this is because of the Gregorian calendar. How can the calendar challenge liberty? If the millennium, for example, is used to increase political tensions, then yes, the calendar is very much at fault for threatening liberty.

But the calendar is only being used to control the fanatical. The fanatical would be there whether or not it was the millennium. Therefore, we do not ask, "who would benefit from the war in Iraq," we ask, "who is benefitting from the eschatological end-times philosophy of the millennium?"

Fanaticism in itself is not a philosophy. Escatological millenarianism, however, is, and it is also the philosophy behind the manipulation of modern fanatics, both Christian and Moslem.

Now, we should ask, why is eschatological millenarianism threatening individual liberty?

Well, what do you think?

-ben

Consider precession. If Crowley's assertion that the aeon of Horus began in 1900 is compared to the standard gregorian calendar, which states that it has been exactly 2000 years since the last aeon began. We see quite clearly that the time period since the dawning of the last sign has been defined by a mini-ice age in Europe and increasingly sub-tropical conditions in meso-America indicating this is an aeon in which the northern hemisphere is tilted further away from the sun than the southern. However, as we have observed since the age of the Maunder minimum, the sunspot cycle is escalating as the solar em-bands coil more tightly around our sun. This indicates that the earth is entering a warmer phase.

As predicted by the Aztec calendar, John of Patmos, Nostradamus, etc. as the northern hemisphere native people are subjected to a gradual increase of ambient radiant thermal energy they will begin to go crazy from the heat, and engage in the most heinous forms of radical fanaticism. The coming of the three anti-christs predicted by Nostradamus allow for one further candidate to come forth to fulfill the role of anti-christ. John of Patmos described the events of the twentieth century down to the very real battle of Armeggedon, which actually occurred during the first world war. And of course, nearest and dearest to my heart, the Aztec calendar concludes an astronomically huge period of time (a "Piktun" fwiw) with the grand cross alignment of the gregorian calendar and the galactic alignment of the Mayans.

These things that are happening now may appear mundane or historically ubiquitous. I would usually be the first to waste precious time listing off historical examples of eschatology and millenarianism occurring individually and coincidental. However, in this thread, the point I am endeavoring to make is that a time of great awakenning is upon the unenlightened.

The fundamental fanaticism of religions may indeed have persisted from time immemorial, however all we must concentrate upon is how it is working in its present form. We see now that, between the Grand Cross and galactic alignments (2000-2012) more of the middle-class of the western business world are seeking more information on the above prophetic subjects, and related materials, from secret societies.

Therefore, as has long been expected by the most fanatical among the unenlightened, those enlightened just enough to know they say too much, there will come one from among these secret societies to fulfill the role of their expectation of an anti-christ. Like Hitler and Napoleon before, according to Nostradamus, "Mabus" will be a dictator welcomed by the people. According to John of Patmos, the beast, or false prophet, convinces the people to make sacrifice to the dual chaots Leviathan and Leviathon. The Aztec calendar takes a somewhat different view: in reminding us of the coming of the Fifth Sun, following the fourth and final "destruction" of Earth (in 2012), it takes an optimistic stance on the eventual outcome of this prophesised scenario.

This is the way to control the fanatics:

- 1) make them come to worship after a false idol
- 2) reveal then that their idol was false all along

Eventually they will accept their punisher not as an adversary, but as an inevitable saviour. This will set their minds free. Once the coming of the one from among the secret societies is accomplished, there will occur a great revelation: our minds are made out of the same substance as time itself. By controlling one, we control the other.

For example, consider that when the Julian solar calendar was replaced by the diaspora-era Hebrew combined solar-lunar calendar under Pope Gregory in the 1600's resulted in the loss of 16 days. This was due to a socially motivated calendrical change, to strengthen the validity of the Christian myth. The result of this is that the Gregorian calendar has been adopted as the official calendar of the modern "western business world" (the invisible empire), right down to time-zones and daylight savings.

Now consider again the aeons of precession. The difference between the Crowleyian and the Christian calendars is actually a difference of 100 years, between Crowley's beginning of the Aeon of Horus in 1900 and the end of the Christian era in 2000. Consider also Laurence Gardner's assertions that there were three missing days taken out of the calendar surrounding the exact time of the alledged crucifixion of Christ. This was also due to accounting for a discrepancy between the contemporary calendars of the region. Consider the Book of Jubilees from Qumran based supposedly on the calendar calculated in the Book of Enoch. Now consider the difference between the Christian calendar, based on a 2000 year cycle per zodiacal sign, and the Moslem calendar, based on the number of lunations since the Haaj. And yet both of these calendars have literally only just evolved and taken hold in the popular psyche since the times of Qumran, 2000 years ago. These are, by comparative standards, both young religions.

Therefore, it is not, IMO, fanaticism in itself that would impose and enforce limitations to individual rights, but the philosophies behind the fanatical beliefs that we must learn to control if we are to be free to spread enlightenment.

-ben

First, to deal a little deeper with the diagrams of my last post.

[quote="OneOfMany"]On the left we have a simple terrain - "the blank canvas" - on the right we have a plan and sideview of some actual terrain.[/quote]

Yes, exactly. The above left is the overview of the flat plane on the lower left. The cartographer's map is then above right the mountainous terrain it describes on the lower right. Now, the implications of this to me are such that the Cartesian grid of mathematicians and geometres can actually be modified or combined with the elder navigation charts of cartographers. The result would be to describe a shape in three dimensions, rather than depict a surface in only two. While this conclusion seems intuitive, the premise from which it derives: that of combining a standard grid with the measurements of a complex topography, potentially applies to simplifying the calculations for all sorts of graphic measurements, for example the texturing of "skins" in video-games and the "1:1 ratio of map to terrain" described by Baudrillard.

[quote="OneOfMany"]The second images don't mean much to me, other than again, something to do with views of contours, and functions of related contours.[/quote]

I work alot with average measures, that is, the sum of all divded by the number of each. Consider the perspective plane on the right, and consider the side-view of a mountain on the left. Here,  $d$ = distance and  $l$ = length.

On the right, we see that the line  $l=x$  above is equal in length to the line  $l=x$  below. We measure the distance between the right end of  $l=x$  above and  $l=x$  below. We call this measurement  $d=1x$ . We then draw a length between the right end of  $l=x$  above and the left end of  $l=x$  below. We call this line  $d=y$ . By fixing  $l=x$  and  $d=1x$  such that the  $x$  variable in both is equal, we can then draw an arc with origin at the right end of  $l=x$  above, such that the measure  $d=y$  is equal to  $d=1x+d=1x$ , and render this measure as the expression  $y=2x$ .

On the left, we see that, by fixing the value of  $x$ , the distance at the base of a triangle and the distance between the midpoint thereof and the vertex of the angle opposite can be equal, such that the base  $d=x$  and the height  $d=1x$ . We can then call the distance from one end of the hypotenuse to the other going around the two legs of the triangle  $d=y$ . Again, by fixing the position of  $x$ , we can fix the value of  $y$ .

In the diagram on the right, we see what DesCartes invented. In the diagram on the left we see what cartographers discovered. Again all the pertains to the plane and to terrain.

---

Now, to get to the meat of your post:

[quote="OneOfMany"]
a tangible explanation of how the universe works... between us...[/quote]

Well, now, there's the trick. I can give you a totally tangible explanation of how the universe works, from my point of view, but to be able to communicate it all to you, we must establish common terms, an alphabet of symbols, and address questions of psychology, the study of the mind. For example, we can agree on a terminology of speculative physics (theoretical, or meta, physics), however for me to get the information out of my own mind and into yours, then my mind must be fully open to transmit, and your mind to receive, the information through this system of language.

I believe that, at certain significant times in our life experience, such as public tragedies, coming of age rituals, shared social ceremonies, etc. the time-stream splits us into two parallel selves, occupying two separate real worlds. In one of them, an event's options led to one outcome, and in one of them, the same event's options led to the other outcome. These situations, where outcomes are "bottle-necked" through a binary choice, determine which reality we believe we are in. By "we" I mean to say that our True self, or Higher Will, supercedes these parallel realities, is aware of them on some level of consciousness at all times, and, by determining the outcomes from ternary or greater options in less than significant life experiences, we move about between these different parallel time-streams.

There are a couple ways to model this theory. One is a ten-dimensional torus model of consciousness. Another is to describe perception from the centre outward as like the gravity well of a black hole, surrounding a singularity leading to a baby universe with wormholes infinitely interconnecting all other alternate blackholes.

[quote="OneOfMany"]the core diagram has got to be the "spiral" - "icecreamcone.jpg"[/quote] as shown here:

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/MISC_diagrams/icecreamcone.jpg[/img]

[quote="OneOfMany"]I want a verbal explanation of how the icecreamcone view of the four forces (angles in relation to sacred growth) relates to superstrings.[/quote]

What I call the "variegation" of the four elements breaks down like this:

We know, according to superstring "theory," that there are additional dimensions of distance that are "curled up" around and between the smallest length distances within our local universe. These additional dimensions of distance are said to have "collapsed" while the three and a half (three spatial, one temporal) dimensions of our local universe "expanded." This premise of string theory, btw, applies under either the "big bang" or the "ekpyrotic" cosmologies.

Therefore, we take the "big bang" as the origin point of the cosmology, the "tip" of the "ice-cream cone." The cone up until the first elliptical slice through it, labeled water and indicating the moment of the formation of the first of the four forces, is labeled 4D. This "distance" may be equal to only a "Planck time" duration, but relatively speaking it was during this duration following the "big bang" that the additional dimensions collapsed from around our local universe and curled up into superstrings.

The result of the discrepancy between the "big bang" and the separation of the four forces, during which time the additional dimensions collapsed and curled up, which happened at one time in all space, was that at different times and in different places in space the four forces began to separate and coagulate.

So we see depicted in the diagram that at one moment in time-space (the vertex of the variegated elements) the additional dimensions collapsed and curled up, but that it occurred over a longer duration in space-time (the radians of the arc opposite the origin point vertex) that the elements formed.

So, think of the four elements as like the solid shadows of the six directions of our local universe permeated by change over time. Time itself, like oil on the surface of water, separates the elements of space from the pure dimensions and the ideal math therein. Moreover, the four elements are like the chaotic infinitude of potential vibrations surrounding the steady state of a single superstring that is our local universal life-line or the so-called "time-stream."

But what gets really interesting about that diagram is when we start to talk about what I mean by "critical mass."

[quote="OneOfMany"]

It all starts with superstrings and the "nature" of "fundamental light".[/quote]

Yes! A superstring is the "sum over history" of a tachyon. In other words, a "superstring" is to a "tachyon" what a "ray of light" is to a photon. Now, why do we say that a "superstring" is "curled up"? We say this because the "sum over history" of a tachyon "involute" through the shape of the tachyon itself, because the shape of the tachyon itself is a torus, or a hypersphere. Therefore, the "spin" of the tachyon is 4-dimensional, while that of the photon is only three-dimensional (really only one dimensional for distance-duration calculations to work). This is why we say that tachyons, which are invisible light faster than photons, move "backwards" in time, or in the opposite duration as the direction of a photon.

[quote="OneOfMany"]Given time and space are linked, what does that mean with relation to the so-called constancy of the speed of light? Why is that "speed" constant?[/quote]

The distance and duration equations derived from the relativity of measurement between objects in motion will only work out if the mass of a photon is calculated as zero. This does not mean that there is not necessarily anything smaller than the photon. However the photon is to the theory of relativity what the number zero is to a numberline. On one side of it is everything we can say "exists" within our local universe. On the other side everything is theoretical, and my use of the word "tachyons" is a no less arbitrary explanation of this unknown abyss than the medieval concept of "dragons."

[quote="OneOfMany"][quote="Jon Gee"]"Take the nature of the electron. We know of its existence, yet cannot prove it in both time and space at once. When we measure its position, its velocity changes, and vice versa."[/quote]

Why is this exactly: why are position and velocity mutually exclusive? That says something about the hyperspherical or temporal-spacial nature of the electron. The electron is transcendent of time absent space or space absent time: the electron is built in a "world" where space and time are one and the same "matrix". They cannot be separated. Space and time are all part of the same "surface" of the hypersphere/cube.[/quote]

We say the electron is two-dimensional. What does this mean? It means that it possesses "spin" or motion in only two directions because it is a magnetic dipole (positive and negative, north and south) only. In other words, if you were to take two electrons, or two magnetic dipoles, and position them relative to one another, they would only line up in two possible directions: either pole-to-pole or side-by-side.

We also say, with our limited intelligence of it, that time is two-dimensional. What does this mean? It means that time can only "flow" or move in two directions: either past -> future, as we move relative to time, or as future -> past, as time moves relative to us.

However, why do we say that the electron is two-dimensional? Because we know that when we strike it with a photon, the photon is absorbed into the electron, and the electron lights up long enough for us to measure it. Now, this is constantly occurring in nature all around us: everywhere there is matter there are electrons absorbing and refracting rays of photons. However, when scientists sit down and do this in isolation, in the laboratory, under a microscope, they are using only a single photon, and usually only a single electron (such as in an atom of Hydrogen). Therefore, their measurements are very exact.

According to these measurements, if you strike an electron with a photon, this changes the electron's "spin." Because an electron only has spin in two directions, we say that one of the two attributes of its motion is changed when impacted against with a photon. Therefore: either velocity or position change, either the trajectory of the electron in its orbit changes or the spin of the electron around its poles changes. The result of this is that the photon will bounce off at a refracted angle. By measuring the angle of incidence of the photon as it glances off the surface of the electron shell we can determine the exact position and velocity of a certain given electron. However, by striking the electron with the photon, we will have altered one of the two characteristic traits of the very spin we wished to measure.

Therefore, we cannot rightly say that the electron does indeed have spin in only two directions. We can only say that when we strike an electron with a photon, we can measure two directions of the electron's spin. This does not entirely exclude there being more, it only says that, when we strike it with a photon. If we reject the notion that a photon necessarily has zero mass, we can also reject the assertion that the electron is only two-dimensional. We can say, if there is a particle smaller and faster than a photon, then it is possible that the electron can possess spin in more than only two directions, such as the precession of its dipoles (known as "counterspin," backwards or "retrograde" motion, etc.) in addition to trajectory and polarity. We can only speculate theoretically beyond this level however, because at this point we do not possess machines capable of isolating anything smaller and faster than the photon.

Thus, we cannot say that time exists exclusively as two-dimensional, or two-directional, either. This is the reason for the premise that time, that is entropy, arises as the friction between parallel realities, or between the three spatial and n-potential hyperspatial dimensions. Again like oil on water, space in our local universe is the interior or lower surface of time, and so when we speak of the space-time continuum, we mean the area within our local universe, and when I speak of the time-space continuum, I mean the hyper-dimensions beyond sub-space.

[quote="OneOfMany"]The Q: "what exactly is a hypersphere"... that Q relates to the rolling boil and the broccoli.. and to "wormholes".[/quote]

Well, just as there are certain shapes that can only exist in three dimensions (the sphere, the cube and the other of the five Platonic, or universal, solids), so too do these shapes have their counterparts in two dimensions, and so in four spatial dimensions, etc. With computers we have finally begun to become able to graph the counterparts of these type shapes in spatial dimensions greater than three plus time. So, the "hyper-sphere" (or torus) is just the fourth-dimensional equivalent of a sphere. And so on all the way down: torus, sphere, circle, point.

Because we can apply geometric ideals as universal laws, or averaged constants, to the principles of physics, we can likewise compare the structures in quantum mechanics (very small) and astrophysics (very large) to the ideal shapes of the five universal solids and the sphere, as well as any plethora of other topographic structures we can imagine in the lesser dimensions. Because we can now map shapes in four spatial dimensions, we can plot and assess the movements and changes of very small physical events in very large heavenly bodies over time.

As we learn how to apply these, at least six, geometric ideals as like different notes in different scales, such as the octave, we come to realise that these different ideal shapes, the "super-strings" of tachyons, and the "rolling boil" of quantum foam on the surface of the space-time continuum are all the same thing, all causing and being caused by one another, merely different harmonics and chorded frequencies between different vibrational states of matter-energy.

And so we do indeed see the same essential shapes and patterns repeated on all scales within our local universe, from the sphere of the photon particle to the sphere of the sun, all guided in their relative motions by the invisible effects of one another, the elemental forces and the four local dimensions. For example, take the celestial body of a star. Because its magnetic poles precess, the electrical field they generate rotates around the poles at different speeds, and in so doing "curls up" around the surface of the gaseous star. This causes the effect known as "sun spots." So, too, when a star implodes and becomes a singularity, do its poles continue to precess. The same effect distorts its gravity well, the black hole surrounding the singularity. The equivalent, then, of "sunspots" on the surface of the black hole whose poles precess are wormholes.

Because the singularity inside the blackhole whose surface is wormholes changes over time, we can measure its average or ideal base state. The result of this is a model essentially identical to the fourth-dimensional equivalent of the sphere, that is, the torus. Therefore, when we look at a blackhole, its shape is that of a sphere nested within a sphere, and the shape of the wormholes on its surface are, ideally, tori or hyperspheres seen at a forty five degree angle. Because the shape of the tachyon particle is also a torus, we can then say that the wormholes on the blackhole surface and the tachyons underlying our photon fabric of space-time are the same shape on different scales, and thus we can use the motions and changes of one to model the same relationships in the other.

[quote="OneOfMany"]Does anyone else reading this understand what is meant by the "hypercube"....?[/quote]

LOL! Well, don't everybody say "yes!" immediately. LMAO!

Essentially, the hypercube (or tesseract) is the same kind of ideal or Platonic forms that exist in three dimensions as is the sphere. The cube in three dimensions is defined as a shape with six sides, eight corners and twelve edges, all oriented at ninety degrees to one another. Thus a cube in four spatial dimensions has double each of these measurements.

Unlike the point-circle-sphere-torus axis however, the hyper-cubic harmonic vibrating through our local dimensions can generate multiple different shapes in each of its different dimensional scale levels. For example, the circle can only be the circle or an ellipse, but the square can either be the square, the hexagon, or any form of rhombus. Likewise, the hypersphere can only be nested, overlapped, or toroidal, but the hypercube can be nested, at antipode, overlapped or as a tesseract. This is because the circle is only an origin point and a circumference, however a square has more angles and as many more sides.

There is a pretty decent introduction to my understanding of the hypersphere and hypercube here:

http://www.benpadijah.com/basic\_intro.html

[quote="OneOfMany"]Well written.[/quote]

Thank you very much! That means alot, since it's rare I actually receive anything other than chastisement for my writing style. Thank you again, OOM. I look forward to hearing more of your take on the FSOM and MPDR material.

-ben goddamn, this is one fine album.

1) Vicarious is going to be a great hit for early summer. I hope it gets a shit tonne of American radio air play. It's all about violence on television. Great stuff.

2) Jambi is one of the reasons I would define this album as Tool's most optimistic to date. The chorus, "wish it all away," does not focus on the negative downward emotional spiral but on the redemptive value of sacrifice.

3) Wings for Marie part 1 starts out with what sounds to me like Tibetan singing bowls. It is essentially a track about gnostic cosmogolgy, the descent of ideal emotional states devolving into the material form of a redemptive saviour.

4) Wings for Marie part 2 sets the scene with thunderstorm sound effects and an eerie melody, even for Tool. I'm pretty sure the song is meant to be written from the perspective of Jesus on the crucifix and is a love song, however I am uncertain as to whether it is ultimately directed toward God or toward Mary Magdalene. It is definitely written within the Christian tradition though, as it strongly asserts the premise of Christ's ascension.

5) the Pot begins with only Maynard singing. This song is great. In the verse it mixes so many metaphors in such a poetic narrative of descriptions, basically beating around the bush about the subject matter, which it then rejoices in in the chorus: "you must-a been high." Kind of a stupid idea for a song, but I bet it'll be fun to play at concerts. Better than a song by Toby Keith about beer even.

6) Lipan Conjuring is the shortest track, but IMO the coolest. Of course, you all know better than to trust my taste in music. It's kind of like "My Wild Love" by the Doors, only even more so like an authentic native american chant.

7) Lost Keys is kind of a set up piece for the song after it. It's very erie music and the effects they've used to mix the sound byte add to this.

8) Rosetta Stoned. Now this song is going to be the primary draw for concerts during this tour. Fuck radio air play, this song is going to be a rock-legend for this decade like a Led Zepplin song from the seventies. I'm not going to say anything else about this song than this: acid.

9) Intension is an ominous and forboding template of a song, not traditionally structured, the closest thing to a chorus being the theme of the message: from fire comes the spark, from the spark a flame, and from the flame a fire. Warning: Really esoteric. LOL!

10) Right in Two is probably going to be the second single off the album, and I expect a late summer release. By that time people are going to be really tired of the heat, and this song will take alot of advantage of that. I would call it's general sentiment one of "peace or ultimate destruction."

11) Viginet Tres is the most "esoteric" song on the album musically, and, like Intension, is what I would call a "template" song, or the type of song the band plans on playing over the course of the tour to see how it will change and evolve, perhaps with the ultimate intension of recording the later version as well. "Viginet Tres" itself is latin for 23 and I expect this is a reference to the Rennes Le Chateau material that has been plastered all over www.toolband.com for the past year or so.

All in all I give this album the rating: damn fine.

I will now go back to listening to it, and eagerly await its official release the week after next so that I can finally pay money to the scum-of-the-earth local middle man between myself and the mass-distributor of the mass-manufactured product of the studio that recorded the band. You do realise how absurd all that really is, right? I knew that you did.

-ben

The reason I advocate all this is nothing so inhumane as anything less than a desire to illuminate and enlighten these individuals.

When dealing with a fanatical, one must remember to treat them as an equal. Do not let them feel like you think you are superior to them. Or, if you do so, then do so intentionally. Test their reactions to this posture. As you increase the degree to which you position yourself as their superior, consider that this puts pressure onto them, dividing them between their own self-perspective and that of the above and beyond, and notice they only have two options for reaction:

- 1) to wither and to concede
- 2) to rise up with twice the energy

Here is how both of these reactions will benefit the individual themselves, by our actions:

Should the individual wither beneath the gaze positioned down the nose at them, then they will question. As they question they will become more resolute in their initial perceptions. They will see only the evidence that supports their cowardly suspicions, and eventually come to not trust even their own consensual Master. Then you must assert your authority over them and they will topple.

Should the individual rise up redoubled from being seen through, then this one believes himself somebody's hero. He believes in fighting evil. Encourage doubt in this person as to if they themselves are evil. Turn them against themselves. Then they will come to you for help. Then you must tell them they are your inferior.

What I am describing here as "helping" the "individual" by bringing them under your direct control and influence is what is described elsewhere as "toxick magick" or "malignant narcissism." Why am I advocating this? It's simple: because it works. This is the basic principle of Darwinian/Malthusian "life-raft" ethics upon which the western business world operates and this is the law of the dictatorships throughout the Moslem world as well: an eye for an eye. If someone steals something from you, take away their hands. If someone cheats you, make them your slave.

This is the law that the fanatics recognise: the law of the jungle. The law of the wild. The law of no real social order, and no law but the ineffable commandments delivered by the thunder from the day and night king of the sky. This is their interpretation of what is the "fundamental" of their respective religion: that is, namely, violence.

Respond to this in like kind and you will double the problem. Then you will have twice, or even three times as many fundamentalist fanatics following fast on the heels of their martyred fathers. Therefore, you must position yourself superior to this mentality. You must bring it under your sway.

This is, in truth, the most fundamental of all human traits: not violence, but the desire to better the self. Whether this means by going shopping, or whether this means by studying from the Qu'ran, it is irrelevant. This is the truth, denied by the fundamentalist fanatics, in favour of the rule by thumb of dominance/submission and bondage/discipline. The truth is this: by being a better person yourself, over time, and gradually working to improve your moral stature, this will draw and attract to you people of all sorts and kinds, including those who come exclusively to doubt and to throw stones. However, by improving one's self-perception of their own stature then one will come to see naturally how they are superior to those around them. You will come to realise that, among the as of yet unenlightened that surround you, the fanatical fundamentalists pose the greatest threat to the preservation of peaceful civilisation.

They are the ones trying to destroy the world. But they are lost. They can be found by us, they are all around us all the time, but, while we can see them, they cannot seem to see us. They see only one another, all around, and in the heat caused by their expanding numbers they boil alive in prophecies of a coming blood bath. We remain in some way, invisible, aloof, irrelevant, expendable or insignificant in their perception. This is why we must maintain the moral high ground.

We must sweep the carpet of belief out from under the righteous. We illuminists, we have always been against religious institutionalisation. Now let me tell you why: we do not worship Lucifer, the anti-Christ, as they claim that we do. We worship the person of the true Jesus, the real life individual upon whom the fictional gospels are based. This is how we shall show the Christians up: we shall reveal from our vast libraries of source scrolls our limitless knowledge of historical facts surrounding this single individual from 2000 years ago. This is why we have continued to exist in seclusion these 2000 years: to preserve in secret this tradition: the keeping of the ancient historical records and their preservation to the present day. But we shall show them only that which is known of Jesus. We shall not reveal more about his own master, on whom his own copious studies were based, from some 2000 years even before his own time.

This will finally break the 2000 year catholic stranglehold on the otherwise supposedly free minds of man. However, smaller obstacles will still remain. To acknowledge the Moslems we must bring them into chivalric christendom. I hope that, by now, you have realised that Usama Bin Ladin is the Moslem, modern version, of the same mythic figure as was Jesus the Christ according to the latin vulgate rituals. We have brought this radical, this utmost pinnacle of religious fundamentalist fanaticism, into the very same folds of the silent, and the invisible, and the illuminated. In the same way that Usama Bin Ladin is part of the same occult order as is George W. Bush on the opposite side of the coin, then we can assert with dominance that Jesus and Caesar belonged to the same frat. This will break the Christian legend. The Moslems will have peace.

Why will the Moslems have peace? You have been led to believe their enemy is Israel. This is not true. The radical extremist dictatorships among the other moderate, westernised democratic republics of the middle east as far east as Pakistan and as far west as the Ivory Coast of Africa, have made a bargain with the hardline Zionists of Israel, and with their counterparts within the secret-societies of America's economic elite.

Usama Bin Ladin will be handed to the west, the empire will be realised, but will immediately fall under the control of secret societies. Why is this? Because we will elect from within our own ranks, and then appoint ahead of all the other people, the figurehead dictator. It shall not be necessary to resort to further violence to control the religious fanatics following this.

The reason Usama will be turned over is that he will be betrayed by the House of Saud. Why will the House of Saud betray their nephew, Usama? This is because of the fundamentalist Baptists in America. The secret societies have been funneling them money from funds they had withdrawn in the late ninties from Asian markets. This money is then spent by the neavaeu-riche middle class funding the American energy companies, who are developing new fuel and transportation resources for the military, which then tests it against insolent, anti-western Moslem dictators. If the US threatens to lean over Saudi Arabia, to uproot the jihad at its spiritual centres, Mecca and Medina, the House of Saud will betray Usama to them.

There are only Christian and Moslem fundamentalist fanatics. There are not Hebrew radicals. You do not see Jews going around blowing up other Jews by strapping on a dynamite vest in a downtown market square. This does not happen. The Zionist Israelis do, however, orchestrate these very same bombings carried out by young "Moslem" agents of Mossad. They create the illusion of hostilities between Israel and Palestine, which otherwise do not exist. The West Bank is nothing more than a "hot" piece of real estate, and the reports of deaths and violence involved are highly exaggerated in the press-releases from the Israeli and cooperative Moslem press.

Israel is an even stricter dictatorship than America. This is why they do not have a class of rebels and conspiracy theorists. Instead, they recruit the rebels into the armed services, and the conspiracy mongers into Mossad. Those who should be overturning Israel's democracy into a theocratic monarchy from within are instead enlisted to fight to preserve and maintain it as a strictly militarily enforced political farce.

This is all dealing with the problem of religious difference and religious intolerance centred in the middle east and all having arisen within the past 2000 years, or this aeon. This seems an immediate problem to the minds of most modern people in the Moslem and western business world because we have controlled the agenda of the US government and media and those of several Muslim nations to create this situation and to make it appear as though religious intolerance is the problem.

Religious intolerance is not the real problem. This is part of a short term agenda. Eventually, all faiths will meet at different specified times in the same buildings. And eventually even these buildings will be left in ruins. These are simple and easily understandable facts. I feel it necessary to dwell on the philosophies of religious fanaticism now only because it is a prevalent topic in the press coverage of modern politics in the western business world.

All this in truth means little if anything to the true agenda(s) of secret societies, which seek to preserve the Atlantean historical records and the lost sciences of the ancients.

I hope that this little thought-experiment regarding why and how best to control the minds of unenlightened religious fundamentalist fanatics proves helpful. Remember: position yourself as having moral superiority to the unenlightened, position yourself as having access to the secret knowledge, position yourself in power to remove them from their faith. In this way you can best hope to free their mind. In this way, exorcise from them their demonic, lesser definition of God.

-ben

[quote="OneOfMany"] individuals are living in incompatible realities.[/quote]

I don't agree with this. As I said in my last post to you, OOM, it is the language we must agree on to communicate the message, and not the content of the message itself. For example, 0011010101010 means the same thing to you as it does to a computer, an apple, but if I use binary to talk to you, you don't get it anymore than if I said "apple" to my mac.

[quote="OneOfMany"]there is within the human psyche aspects of self which can probably give rise to the appearance of "time-space splits"... There are various "doubles" within the human entity which can indeed relate to "personae", although, indeed, they may also be something altogether separate.[/quote]

MPD is the standard diagnosis of those who choose to follow multiple alternate realities simultaneously, yes.

[quote="OneOfMany"]I do, though, question the validity of this "belief" you have described... Your emphasis on many "black holes" is again much more significant within your works than is resonant within me; within me, the idea of black holes is not so significant; although of course they exist and are important... since I do not share the same perceptions and experiences, such as the dominance of black holes, I find the ten-dimensional 'model of consciousness' merely a "model" that may suit yourself, but doesn't seem to "fit with me" in quite such a cosy fit![/quote]

Well, perhaps I should have explained what I meant by a "ten dimensional model of consciousness." It actually has nothing to do with "belief" in black holes at all, although I do use the same geometry to model both non-physical consciousness and the physical structure of black holes.

Here is the ten dimensional model of consciousness:

http://www.benpadijah.com/MPDR\_diagrams/figure\_4.jpg

[quote="OneOfMany"]Whoever separated space and time in the first place?[/quote]

Einstein was the first person to propose formally that they were not separate. Before that the concept of distance and duration's unanimity was avoided by approaching the same question from a religious philosophical point of view: if one were made out of non-physical substance, pure ethereal ideal, such as "spirit," then the question of travelling distance  $x$  takes time  $x$  is really the pointless and ridiculous conjecture, since, for a spirit, time does not exist at all, and space only exists as an idea in the mind.

It concerns me, OOM, some of the roads you are going down here:

[quote="OneOfMany"]If we're all code, which, being energy, on some level, we might be, then personal experience is simply that, and to share it with another is something altogether impossible.[/quote]

This, as well as this quote from later in your post:

[quote="OneOfMany"]Going back to the point that valid referential systems must be and only be personal, what, exactly, is experience, ... what is "us" - what am I?

It turns out I am a collection of energy fields all behaving according to the same rules - the conscious intent of Source to Be and Be More. One may not follow the leap between those two paragraphs, but, nomatter![/quote]

Are non-sequiturs. In other words, the premise does not necessarily lead to the conclusion, or, more directly, the conclusion does not necessarily follow from the premise. Since I know you better than to agree you are, as you say, "stupid," I assume this is being used as a literary licence to prove a point. Perhaps you would be better served than by beating around the bush about the difference between my and your "personal experiences" by simply coming out and saying something specific about what you mean.

[quote="OneOfMany"]"Do not partake of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of Relative good and evil". It is the adoption of Other's schemes of relativity that define personal suffering; and deny a person from enjoying their own realm of experience.... our society wouldn't function without compromises in (personal) relativity... but what is the point of society if it is merely to foster suffering? People may argue that there is less suffering now that we are more organised and work together in teams: but it is rules and boundaries that have had their day that are the bane of everyone's life. Only a fluidity of interchange can ameliorate suffering. My point about relativity is really fundamental, I hope people understand it![/quote]

I agree with the statement that "only a fluidity of interchange can ameliorate suffering" however I have absolutely no idea how that follows from the premise that "it is the adoption of Other's schemes of relativity that define personal suffering and deny a person from enjoying their own realm of experience." If you mean to say here that "suffering" is exclusively the imposition on one's self-experience by the "schemes" and definitions of personal relativity by others, then how can you account for suffering in isolation?

[quote="OneOfMany"]On one level it is understandable, and on another completely incomprehensible [/quote]

I think that largely depends on one's level of prior understanding of what we're talking about...

such as this...

[quote="OneOfMany"]...I was reading pp26-30 of FSOM...[/quote]

What information from pages 26-30 of the FSOM did you find most helpful or most questionable, OOM? Perhaps I can explain the "Middles" section of the FSOM a little more to you, since it pertains more to the scientific method itself, and not at all to hyperspheres, it might be a little easier for a first time reader to understand if I knew what material from these pages in specific caught your eye.

-ben

what is the end of religion? What goal will cause its purpose to reach the desired conclusion? What will finally alleviate the necessity for religion, according to its own tenets and doctrines?

the death of reason is the end of religion.

but reason can never die. As long as there is the "spark" of the human intellect in even one individual, this "spark" of suspicion becomes a "fire" of questing and this "fire" becomes the flame of reason. Religion calls all this the "hero myth." It idealises, and does not realise, the premise of the hero. It holds it apart and above and describes it as lost to the past.

But this is the evidence: so long as there be two individuals together, each possessing the intellect, the self-awareness, of consciousness, there will be one in whom this "spark" ignites brighter, and one in whom this "spark" ignites longer. The brighter teaches the other one, and the other one maintains this teaching after the brighter one becomes diminished. The one in whom the intellect is greater, their ego will overflow themselves, and the lesser person's sense of self will, by necessity, be filled up by this. Whenever there are two people, one will become the leader.

Therefore, so long as there is inequality in reason by nature, there will be the true rational reason held by the leaders, and the religion holding such "heroes" above the lesser intellectuals.

Now, what do we say is our aim?

We are on the side of reason. Reason is the sole light of this universe, above the false lights of the stars. We say then, we are the enemies of religion that would worship us. Why is this? Because, if reason serves, then the end of religion will remain the death of reason.

Reason, according to religion, is the lesser light. It will burn out sooner than the stars, and so we must worship reason in secret, while openly killing the best minds of every generation in the name of the stars. Why is this done? Because religion begins where reason ends. Religion believes it is the longer light, because it believes it is not the one burning brighter now than reason. It advocates the persecution complex among the very ones it leads to Holy War.

Reason will end all war.

Consider this method: over time we, the guardians of reason, have brought into power over the mindless masses the least from among them. In terms of intelligence and right to stature we have elected the lowest of the low to the positions of greatest authority. Why have we done this? It is to discredit all philosophies. All belief-systems, the short-term and the long-term political agendas, as well as the longer-term religious and royal agendas, etc. shall be brought before the light of reason and made to kneel down before it. Every dog will have its fifteen minutes in court.

And all shall be found "guilty," shamed for having the ability to feel shame, and made to suffer under the heel of oppression by one another. The political philosophies have each been toppled the most easily: socialism we have discredited by calling nationalism "socialism," and totalitarianism "communism;" capitalism we have discredited by making it into fascism; royalism has become irrelevant now beside federalist hegemonies; and the very idea of bloodline descent has become tantamount to racism.

These are only the political philosophies which we have worked from behind the scenes to discredit during the twentieth century. Why are we doing this? By destroying all these philosophies we are toppling the very philosophy behind religion itself. We are discrediting every reason why people separate the one among them from the other, and say the one is superior to the other, and worship the one at the expense of the other.

We erode away the foundation of the religious concept itself. The religious concept states: the Plan of God is ineffable. This is a lie. The religious concept states: only God forgives original sin. This is a lie. The religious concept states: the meak and the innocent are the religious. This is a lie.

We uphold the concept: God is real. Religion seeks to discredit this, even as we must continually discredit its definitions for reason. According to the religious concept: you cannot even say that God does exist, so ineffable is he. Why? According to the religious concept, this is because man must toil to survive, thus proving some form of "original sin" accounting for our fall from before the face of the Ultimate Ideal. Why? Because they say that True Reason is Blindness, they say that True Reason is naivety wed to sarcasm, they say True Reason is interpretable by them alone. They say any reason outside of church sanction is False. They have come to dictate morality and the very perception of reality itself.

It is not one religious institution alone we wish to discredit. It is the philosophy of faith itself. Belief is only necessary in the absence of evidence. Belief, therefore, is the opposite of knowledge. Knowledge is the possession of evidence. We say that, by reason, we have Knowledge that God Is Real. This is both the brighter and the longer light of Reason that will outshine and outlive the dimmer and the weaker light of Religion: belief is not necessary in the prescence of knowledge. This destroys religion.

Religion has nothing to do with God.

Religion is exclusively the philosophy that where there are two, one will rule. By destroying the rule of religion that separates the fools from among the wise, and even sets them in the Higher regard, we will elevate all the sentient entities to equal intelligence of the One True undeniable reality. We will pull the blindfold from over the eyes of Reason at last, and then we shall see the True Light, the Greater Light.

-ben

what is the end of secret societies? What goal will cause its purpose to reach the desired conclusion? What will finally elevate the necessity for secret societies, according to their own tenets and doctrines?

the revelation of secrets is the end of secret societies.

Once all the secrets have been revealed, there will be no more need for secret societies.

One of the biggest secrets is about the calendar. It involves precession, which is the study of the earth's rotation around its pole as it revolves around the sun. Just as there are seasons in the year, so too are there seasons over the many millions of years, which account for all the climatology of earth throughout all time.

Another big secret is about "secret" science, "esoteric" energies, etc. This deals with the "vibrational" states of matter-energy, as described briefly in the Kybalion. We have long known, for example, that by distorting the orbits of electrons around atomic nuclei that we can transport not only molecular but even biological (even mechanical as well) matter through these different vibrational "dimensions."

Another big secret is about the motives behind political events. These we determine by spreading philosophical jargon memetically through the media and through the free press. We control what people talk about. If we don't want them to know about something, such as longevity drugs, we do not talk about it publically. Instead we talk about something very much different from it in order to distract the attention of the uninitiated away from our secret, such as, in the case of longevity drugs, we talk about the right to abort a foetus. In this way, we create genetic grafts from stem cells harvested from aborted female foeti in China to produce organic nano-tech that is then traded to the west for a pittance.

However, as I have said, the real motive of secret societies is to REVEAL, not to conceal, these types of secrets. But we have a strange method: we wait until someone outside our order independently discovers a secret, and then we initiate them. Take Albert Einstein, for example. Independently of Alfred North Whitehead, Einstein discovered the concept of relativity between distance and duration, and thus between space and time, and thus between matter and energy. Eventually, however, Einstein himself signed petitions to sequester additional funding for the Manhattan Project to develop a nuclear bomb. Why did Einstein do this? Because we made certain that he received the wrong intelligence from Leó Szilárd regarding Nazi capabilities of building atomic weapons.

Meanwhile, the mass public is busy chasing their tail.

Soon there will be the revolution of the secret societies: when all secrets are at last revealed.

How will we do this? We have created a new class in America: a class of neavue-riche. How has this been done? We have de-invested money from Asian energy markest, deregulated local power plants, and dumped the funds from the one into the other, laundering this transaction through Enron. We now sell America it's electricity. We have invested in US oil companies as well, and now sell America its oil. US oil companies have been price-gouging to meet consumer and military demand for oil. The Pentagon has been waging war in Iraq not to OWN but to SELL regional sources of oil on the world market in euros. US automotive companies are focusing manufacture in foreign nations in order to dump funding into research and development of integration of alternative energy sources and propulsion systems by private subsidiary companies.

This neaveau-riche class has been enlisted entirely in support of the corrupt government that has been installed in America. The neo-cons, like the NAZIs before them, are school-yard bullies, but the neavaeu-riche will always prove to only be school-yard toadies, sychophantic suck-ups to whomever they feel indebted to for their sudden wealth. They have been employed by the neo-con party in America, as by the infiltrators under Tony Blair in Britain, etc. as well as its clones in certain other western nations including, as well, Mexico, Canada and Australia.

It is quite clear to this class in the United States today that, while the money they pay for gas is real, the money they possess in stocks and bonds is not. In other words, the investment in them by their bank when it makes a loan to them, thus putting them under an interest-bearing debt structure, is more real than the combined sum of their tax return and stock dividends. The money invested in them is real, the money they owe is real. The money they invest, the money they spend, is not real. It is called debt and credit. The middle class right now in the US is glutted with liquid assets because of massive over-extension of the value of the dollar.

This is a criminal conspiracy which every single person in America at this time is benefitting from, and therefore one for which they are culpable of having participated in. This conspiracy is being controlled by secret societies.

However this is only the situation in one of all the nations of the earth. The conspiracy controlled by secret societies extends across all borders. It is a conspiracy of the mind. It is the conspiracy to liberate the mind from mental slavery: to reveal all secrets.

Soon, the True Revolution will come, one led by the Secret Societies, and when this day comes, nigh as it is, all secrets shall be revealed, all mysteries solved and all truths known by all.

-ben and now, my classmates and pals, it's time to discuss this subject again.

Why have I said the danger is within? What does this mean?

We make our reality. If we are filled with doubt and division on an issue, we will cause to come into the field of our perception two more people: one will represent one side of the division on the issue, and the other will represent the other division of the same issue. In this way, our doubts spread from being one person seeing two issues to two people seeing four issues. But there are not even only two people: Don't forget to count yourself! So from one doubt comes two sides, and from the two sides come four views. Thus, there are seven total: six doubts surrounding the central seventh. Therefore, do not doubt, or you will be spun around in a circle. Instead, KNOW, and then you will be the one spinning the circle.

Why do I say KNOW and not BELIEVE? Because when you believe something you do not require evidence, or will distort any evidence to fit your belief. However, when you discover the truth for yourself, you will cease to need blind faith, and will cease to believe, and begin to KNOW.

Of course, those of us who do know know that knowing, even once mastered, is only the first step. Beyond this lie Understanding, and even further secluded in ineffability, Wisdom, and somewhere lost to the minds of modern man the Crown. And all of this is only after we have spun the wheel of the six lokas backwards.

Perhaps you think you KNOW. But do you BELIEVE? Then perhaps you only BELIEVE that you KNOW. Perhaps you are merely a part of my waking dream that I can blink out of existence like the light behind the refrigerator door? Consider this:

Since I have joined this board I have seen posters come and go. Those who have stayed and become members are well grounded in the mystery schools, the esoteric traditions, and the secret societies. Those who have not stayed are the ones who merely believe themselves to be so well grounded. They come here spouting theories about conspiracies, deluded into thinking they are seeing some breed of inter-dimensional reptilian psychic vampire every time they look in the mirror.

When you have belief, you will have DOUBT. These are the two sides of belief, the two sides of the one issue that is Knowledge. If you come to this board to preach your ridiculous theories, do so. But know this much, if nothing else: you exist for the ridicule of others. Your purpose is today, like it has been since the era of the Egyptian Empire, that of Court Jester. You are a laughing stock, and let me tell you something else: the more you cry, the harder we will all laugh at you.

Your pleas for mercy all fall on deaf ears. Why? Because your kind has cried wolf once too often before, and now, wolf or not, we simply do not care enough to listen.

So, go now, doubt your SELF. Step outside the centre of your mind and look closely at who it is speaking the voice in your head and who it is hearing that voice. Which one is "you"? Where is the "self"?

Now while you doubt yourself, who are you to believe in God? Who are you to recuse me of doing your thinking for you, when you want to make me believe in your God? You do not believe in God; you believe that you believe, but you do NOT even KNOW if you BELIEVE.

Here is understanding to those with ears to hear and eyes to see.

-ben

Let me illustrate to you the difference in philosophies here, lordosiris.

Here is a standard quote from a Masonic author, in this case British Mason Colin F. W. Dyer from his 1976 book, "speculative craft masonry":

"it is possible to give a Christian interpretation of the whole of Craft Masonry... but a non-Christian interpretation should also exist and be just as correct."

Compare that to this quote from conspiracy theorist William T. Still:

"Illuminists feel that man can attain more wisdom and spiritual advancement by studying their secret knowledge than he can from any conventional religion."

What we are talking about here is a shift in the entire philosophy of not only the civilised mind, but the minds of all sentient entities throughout the universe. When we free our own mind from prejudices, such as those against race, or those against Masonry, then we will be open to accepting the truth. Before it is possible for the uninitiate to advance, they must prove their worth. This is a basic tenet of all secret societies. Why? What is the first lesson? The rough ashlar: the soul that comes humbly seeking light from the mystery schools is in a state of imperfection. By applying the moral codes of Masonry, that is, by use of the Tools of the Great Work, the imperfect soul is resonated into the perfect spirit. So, what is the truth? The truth is that which is obviously factually real. Suppose you were to discover, one day, that the tenets of Masonry were actually those of Satanic petro blood rites and voodoo witchcraft. Now, put yourself in the shoes of the catholic cardinal who comes to discover by studying gnostic scrolls kept secret in the Vatican archives that catholicism is only a continuation as esoteric religion of the political Roman Empire. This is what it means to discover the truth: the truth is only as feared as it is unexpected. I think that a Mason's mind is more open to studying the literature of Masonry's detractors than are the cardinals of catholicism open to accepting the gnostic truth behind their faith. This is why the Oath of the Mason extends its hand to people of all faiths. Why? Is it because those of all faiths are seen by the philosophy of Masonry as imperfect souls? No. It is because Masonry does not persecute religion. We aim to free the mind, not to enslave it. What do we say when a candidate comes to us? We say "Do you seriously declare, upon your honor, that, unbiased by friends, and uninfluenced by mercenary motives, you freely and voluntarily offer yourself a candidate for the mysteries of Masonry?" This is said NOT to weed out the cowards and the eavesdroppers, but to free our ranks from the prejudicial and the closed minded. We do not, therefore, produce this type of person: the ones that tell you a lie, or tell you that you must believe as they believe, the ones that fear the truth and its inevitable revelation. We, as illuminists, take no issue with any individual's faith; we seek instead to question their reason, and to lead them to more rational thought. To quote Master Asgenar, "The main concern we have with all religions is how they interfere with the individual rights of its adherents."As Illuminists, we uphold the same values as Masons. If the prejudiced wish only to see this as being to the end of persecuting their own chosen religious faith, then we must enlighten these individuals of the truth behind the origins of their religious beliefs. And do not get me wrong, by "religious fundamentalist fanatics" and by the prejudiced I mean only those willfully ignore factual evidence in favour of their mythical fictional beliefs.

-ben

[quote="Asgenar"]Religion was created by those in power to maintain their power[/quote]

Master Asgenar, thank you for your comment. While I see the validity in the conclusion that religion exists NOW as a tool of perserverance by theocrats and by plutocracies, I do not necessarily agree that it was created in its origin for this purpose.

I believe that religion grew out of the shamanic traditions of the homosapiens concurrent to the neanderthal species, while they lived side by side in what is now Israel. Both these species buried their dead, and decorated the graves with fresh flowers. Both of these species used clay to make dishes, wore tattoos and occupied approximately equal areas of land mass (Africa and Asia respectively).

Religion arose in its origin as the first form of language shared between the tribes of the neanderthal and the tribes of the homosapien species. The original form of communication was the alphabet: linear A. The important difference between linear A and linear B is that linear B is definately phonetic, using pictographs to symbolise guttural utterances. It is likely that the alphabet of linear A was actually invented BEFORE the use of guttural utternaces and gestures to communicate between the two twin tribes of species. This fact is one of the secrets at the heart of religion.

Why do we strike at the heart? Because the Hydra regrows severed heads.

-ben

You are asking questions now, lordosiris. If the time to strike is while the iron is hot, then you must, as you have been also, propose and follow through on solutions to what you identify as problems for the agenda of the order.

The use of the media is important, however the prommotion of this order in specific on an existing television show will only attract small attention beside the outpouring of additional public interest that will be generated this summer by the release of the DaVinci code movie. You see, news is the fastest media, followed by music, the movies and literature. The most philosophical of all, that is the most esoteric and occluded, is the literature that is considered "secret." This last content has long been hidden the deepest of all, preserved only in monastic scroll libraries throughout the Dark Ages. However now it will ALL be brought to the very forefront of public interest. Perhaps you still have not realised why? Because of modern conspiracy theorists who are going to unravel the conspiracy of the western business world and pin the entire thing on secret societies in general. Why will they do this? They will do this because it is time. We have set this up from the very beginning, you see: 2000 years ago Caesar and Jesus performed the death and rebirth ritual at the beginning of the last aeon. Now it is the dawn of the new aeon, and much that was prophesised has already come to pass. Now, we must elect from our own ranks a member to sacrifice as an "anti-christ" figure. This person, willingly or not, will serve the secret societies by bearing upon the back the burden of the sin of ommission committed for the past 2000 years by catholicism. By hiding the truth away from the people, the catholic church has robbed mankind of 2000 years of its rightful evolution. It must be held accountable, and so we must select someone to bear the burden of this. How shall they bear this burden? They shall bear the message of the Truth. They shall speak with wisdom and reveal all secrets. They shall be the elect of the secret societies, and they will become the chosen one of all the world's religions. To the Jews, this person will be their first True Messiah, to the Moslems the embodiment of Allah, to Christians the second-coming of Christ, to Buddhists the Maitreya or final incarnation of Buddha, and for the Hindu Krishna and Brahma. But we are the ones who will elect them, the secret societies. Why is this? To who else belong all the secrets of this world, the collected wisdom of all religions since the time before they each individually began. No one. But to this person, the Messiah of the secret societies, this is their birth right: the combined secret teachings of all ages. What shall become of this patsy then, this scape-goat? On this point in their own mind must the future become obscure. And the more clouded we make the mind of this one, the clearer all of our minds will become, and the better to see the Ancient Plan. For we know the Truth of the modern shemhamforash, and we alone can harness its Almighty power.

-ben

The ones who walk between our dreams as we sleep, the Sleep Walkers, are also known as the "shadow men," the "men in black," the "Watchers" and "the greys." These are the servitors used as conduits by black magic energy vampires. These are the incubi, the succubi and the abductors. Because they come for you in sleep, they are often associated with clowns and teddy bears that live in one's "happy place" where they go when they faint. The more fatigued we become (which is the only reason physical labour is necessary among humans) the more they take over our bodies and displace our personality. They are harsh, cruel, greedy things, and the elders called them demons of flame, though they are not demons, and our ancestors called them djinn of air, though they are not djinn. Nor are they aliens in the sense of physical beings from another star system. Sometimes you can catch a glimpse of a shadow man out of the corner of your eye, but by the time you look it will be gone. This is how secret they are.

The Shadow Men, or the Sleep Walkers, rule from the astral realm over the cult of sleep, or the sleeper agents, unaware of their programming, waiting the time to awaken to their mission. The sleeper agents answer to the Sleep Walkers at certain areas and locations around the world, some publically known, some not. One of these such locations of a nexus between the waking world and the world beyond the collective unconscious is in Area 51 in New Mexico. Another is the sky over Australia.

The sleeper agents come to these nexus points, the karmic centres of the ECS, without knowing why, but come as if called. They answer the higher calling of self-betterment offered by the lie called "karma" and "redemption." They flock to them and congregate at them, like the Druids at Stone Henge, or like the Montauk Boys, the vast sleeping herds of unawakened sleeper agents bow down before the idols of the cult of sleep, the idols shaped like the shadow men, shaped like the Sleep Walkers.

The Sleep Walkers travel between our conscious minds through the mutual medium of the collective unconscious. They spring upwards and outwards like the rays of a prism's fractured light between their focal points in the eyes of all curious strangers. They beckon us, "sleep," they call, "sleep," like sirens. But those of us who discover how to awaken, we Boddhisatvas of Mannu ascended into Buddhahood, cannot risk going back to sleep again because once we awaken and perceive our former existence as a slave to the unconscious agenda of the cult of sleep the Sleep Walkers likewise become aware of us. They want our souls, and they will attack us as a nightmare when we sleep. They call this "the sleeping sickness," and "insomnia nervosa."

Therefore, those of us who awake from the cult of sleep, and discover our psychic power, are the real prey of the Sleep Walkers. The Sleep Walkers tend to the cult of sleep, their food supply, for they feed off images, off the electrochemical energy generated in the right hemisphere of the brain by stimulation of the pineal gland, producing so-called "brain sand." They feed off our imaginations via the TV, via work cubicles and international business machines, etc. The slower, stupider and sleepier we feel, the more abundant their reserve of energies, the longer their stamina, the greater their satisfaction in us.

Some falsely identify these Watchers with the Enochian angels. No, the Watchers (the Grigori of the Book of Enoch) are not the same as the hosts of Enochian angels (of John Dee). No, the Watchers are indeed the gold in the blue, Rh- blood royale of the Grigori giants. However angels they are not.

The shadow men, the dark side, are sentient entities without corporeality trapped inside of earth's gravity well. They have been here for as long as there has been life, and probably since before that as well. They brought the virus portion down on an asteroid from space, and they brought the bacteria portion up from the trench microbes in the lava ducts under sea. But it was not them that made the two to become one.

Their dreams recall all the hostility and terror of the war between virus and bacteria that raged before the creation of organic life on earth as the great compromise between these forces of nature. They infect bacteria, and they spawn viral mutations. They bring fever, and hallucinations. When they have fully possessed a person they think that they are God. They are simply inverted.

The Sleep Walkers are indeed the root of all human strife, as they set us against one another in the name of every form of utopia we imagine.

Like the discorporeal djinn, the Sleep Walkers trance channel through our auras. They can control karma, but the law they enforce is only that of irony. Our suffering brings pleasure to them. Unlike the djinn, who exist only to serve us, the Sleep Walkers have an agenda of their own: they are in control of the cult of sleep.

The Sleep Walkers have a long-standing partnership with the Order of Death. The Order of Death provides human and cattle sacrifices to these "elder gods" or "chaots," and in return the Sleep Walkers allow the Order of Death to continue to operate and to propose courses of action for the guidance of the non-psychic, "sleeping" masses. The Sleep Walkers have ultimate say, however, like a gluttonous vassal caste, the Sleep Walkers allow most of the decisions to be made by the Order of Death. It took many thousands of years to secure communication with the Sleep Walkers and the other ambient denizens of earth's gravity well. It then took hundreds of years to communicate with these upper level entities. It has only taken us the past century since the truce to make the massive leaps in technological and scientific development we have been able to make.

I have told you many things about the neo-Sethian movement. I have told you how it was Aleister Crowley, while celebrating the Birth ritual of the New Aeon (prematurely to the death ritual of the old aeon), who foresaw the necessity of initiating the second-coming movement of christianity. Since that time the task has been carried on upward through the rungs of the order of death, until finally, with William S. Burroughs, we saw a neo-sethian OHO, and with Jim Morrison a neo-Sethian IHO. By the turn of the second millennium and the official dawn of the new aeon the neo-Sethians had completely extinguished all opposition to their agenda within the Order with the psychic slaying of rap star Busta Rhymes in astral battle with neo-Sethian empress Laura Bush.

The movement for the second coming is definitely a strong agenda among those within the psychic conspiracy whose origins upon entry into the order were as psychic revolutionaries, attempted infiltrators and instigators. This cowan class among the Order appears to have gained ultimate power. They have discovered the method of harnessing the alignments of the planets and galactic core: the modern shemhamforash. With this knowledge they are unlocking the seals of a great power, and they fully intend to use this to gain absolute control over every last corner of every single sentient entity's minds. The neo-Sethians have gained access to the Enochian Communications System. They are in the system. It's secrets are theirs now. They have crossed the abyss.

How, how have they done this? They have made a pact with the Shadow Men, the Sleep Walkers, the Watchers, the greys. The greys, oh those stygian demigods, those chaos beasts and elder gods, called collectively Choronzon by Crowley, and called Cthulu by Lovecraft, and called the Grigori, and the Annunaki, etc. These Watchers are the dwellers in the abyss. Why? they are the forgotten gods that fell through the cracks when the middle pillar descended. And now the neo-Sethians have made this agreement with these mysterious creatures, trapped here out of body in earth's gravity well: they shall come to possess the place of the innate soul in every member of the final generation before the neo-Sethians destroy the planet.

How did they make this pact? They have studied EVP, electronic voice phenomena, since at least the reign of Burroughs. Even Nikola Tesla, contemporary of Aleister Crowley, had made contact with them through very powerful off-world radio transmission. Finally, the neo-Sethians performed the death ceremony for the last aeon, the right of the order of death, and this began the age of the Sleep Walkers, the last generation.

How do we know this? We know this because 9-11 was a "black op." It was pulled off with the aid of the Sleep Walkers, who travel through time. The pact with the Sleep Walkers was made at Montauk, during the experiments there by the Pentagon with creating "time-tunnels." They discovered, as had been predicted by Aleister Crowley and a succession of all the prior magicians, that there were already entities living there, that they were trapped there, in fact, and moreover, desperately wanted to get out. This parallel "Hell" dimension, the prison for the damned and the lost souls, haunted by ghosts and demons and djinn, is the Dreamland of Area 51, and it is the dreamtime above the skies of Australia, and it is where we venture whenever we dream.

Now these neo-Sethians seek to elevate themselves unto the stature of Archetypes, GODS among MEN. They would rule from on high. They are blind. Already there is one among the Sleep Walkers reporting on the events of the neo-Sethians to the Crew that Never Sleeps, and they are, in turn, duly repeating the report to the Great Burner. Soon, the Great Burner shall descend from beyond high to flay the skins of the traitors and the infiltrators. Soon, the Great Burner will have His day, but that time is not yet.

-ben

Again, please do not misunderstand me. It is in no way any of the esoteric teachings of theosophy with which I find fault. But look ahead, and learn from the past:

when we initiated into the ancient mysteries of secret societies revealed some of our secrets, but not all, through the public admission occult schools of the turn of the twentieth century, this was done very intentionally. It was done to celebrate the birth of the new millennium.

However, as we have seen, this date was thrown off from the time of the actual great alignments (between 2000-2012) by one hundred years due to the calendrical interference of the catholic empire. Therefore, the "birth" celebration for the new aeon spawned only massive death tolls during the twentieth century.

Now, in the twenty first century, the people are confused. They are leaderless, since they have dutifully elected oafs from among the fraternal organisations (such as Skull and Bones) which they confuse with membership in real secret societies (such as Masonry or the IO). These fools they put their faith in in the form of coins, like automatons in a carnival, and they hope that the ancient knowledge will save them at the zero hour from the hell to pay for the bloodshed and wars of the apocalyptic 20th.

This is what I have talked about elsewhere as the modern eschatological millenarianism that is controlling the minds of the fanatical "fundamentalists" among the modern world religions. This I must stress:

WE SHALL TURN RELIGIOUS ZEAL TO THE DESTRUCTION OF RELIGION.

How shall we do this? It is simple. In the twentieth century we discredited as many social and political movements as possible. This was the Apocalypse. Those who refuse to accept that the end times have already passed, these people are the modern religious fundamentalists, they believe they are the chosen last generation, living in the end times, that Jesus will return and there will be a Holy War.

These people are losing their minds from the heat of the sunspot cycle peak. Soon we will bring down the true revelation on them.

How shall we do this? We shall turn religion upside down when we realise that we create reality for ourselves: just as the choice of revelation through Blavatsky of the concept of root races gave rise to the second world war, so too will our modern dispensation give rise to the prophesised 1000 years of peace.

-ben

Here is the difference between the instincts of animal heart and the higher reason of the illuminated mind:

You premise:

[quote="BRobbins"]Knowlege is the cause of belief?[/quote] and from this it follows, ergo:

[quote="BRobbins"]Belief is the effect of Knowlege?[/quote]

Thus this statement has logic, as you have rightly identified with the left hemisphere of the brain. However this logic, like that of the "science" of eugenics, is used to prove a fraudulent premise. Logical conclusions do not alone a sound premise make, nor does logic in itself serve only the Good.

You cannot describe all of reality even by combining in the mind the logic of the left hemisphere and the creativity of the right hemisphere of the brain. There must be something more. This "something more" appears like a spark one day, and one snaps their fingers and says "eureka!" they have achieved nirvana, the gnosis, illumination! But this is only the beginning.

Therefore, let us not talk about logic and faith as one the end of the other and the other the initiator of the one. This has no bearing on the real issue:

How do we define belief?

We say that belief is something we feel but which feeling cannot be shared. Therefore it is not a belief to say: "I believe the sky is blue," it is called a fact, because this feeling can be shared. On the other hand, it is a belief to say: "I believe in God," because there is no verifiable evidence for this either way.

Therefore we say that knowledge pertains to facts, while belief, as it pertains to the unknown, is usually associated more with creative fiction. We say, therefore: "knowledge is the opposite of belief." We do not, however, draw a causal correlation between them. That would be chasing the tail of fantasy in pursuit of logic.

You cannot ask, "which came first, the chicken or the egg?" about this issue. You cannot say, "which came first, knowledge or belief?" because it is the same issue as with the chicken and the egg. It is an impossible feedback loop, a perpetual fugue. We can, however, apply to BOTH these methods of communicating the gnosis the philosophy that, "you can't make an omlette without breaking a few eggs."

-ben

controlling moderates

I think it is important to realise that, according to the fanatics' philosophy as well as their actions prove that a dictatorship will always result from any attempt at democracy. This belief dates back to the ancient Greeks, when the democratic reforms of Solon led through the Persian Wars to the Delian League, which withered into an Athenian Empire, first infiltrated and then overthrown from within by the Macedonians of Philip II, father of Alexander the Great. There are, according to the fanatics, no examples of any attempts at Democracy that have not yet fallen prey to this process and become de facto dictatorships.

As I have mentioned, we secret societies have used this rule by thumb during the twentieth century to our benefit by discrediting all the altruistic attempts at establishing an ideal democratic government. Wherever this idea has occurred to someone, we have initiated them into the mysteries and whenever this idea has occurred to a group of people, we have subverted the goals of the group until by the time they come to power through our financial backing they are dedicated to the destruction of our philosophical competitors.

However when I say that we have used this rule by thumb to discredit altruistic ideals, I mean only that we have given the light to those most likely to otherwise subscribe to fanaticism. This is the compromise that the secret societies make with the religious fanatics: the result of this is a middle class, comprised of moderates.

The moderates are not necessarily initiates of our mysteries, but they are not unthinking religious zealots either. The moderates of society are not our enemies, as are the fanatics. No, the moderates pose no challenge at all, they are merely our slaves. By determining the faiths of the radicals, we determine the values of the moderates. This is how society functions: the moderates believe there is a political "pendulum" that "swings back and forth from the political left to the political right." They see this as the trend that has shaped all historical events throughout history. First a liberal ideology will become an empire, then a conservative empire will arise. They believe that over the years, the two parties more or less take turns advocating first one type of political issue or another. The longer the cycle, the more prevalent to the agendas of both the issue must be, such as "republicanism," or "national socialism," or such as "catholicism," or "abortion."

Here is the flaw with this model, and it is a flaw that would be hopelessly difficult to explain to a moderate uninitiate: if the pendulum swings only in two directions, such as in a grandfather clock, then it must be controlled mechanically, otherwise, the "pendulum" would revolve in its swing in an arc over time and eventually form a complete circle due to the rotational and revolutionary momentums of the movement of earth itself. Of course, if we want to measure time, we have to resort to the use of measuring earth's rotational and revolutionary movements, such as with a sun dial. Otherwise, what we would be left with would be the model of the grandfather clock: either we accept that politics, history, or time itself is completely a mechanical contrivance. The result of this is an incomplete model of how our universe works: we believe in a flat earth and linear time. However the model of the pendulum reveals to us the necessity to include the greater scales of physical force's influence. We cannot say that space is entirely mechanical in the sense that a grandfather clock is, and therefore we throw out such contrivances as Einstein's "grand-father paradox." So, we say that gravity is the result of momentum in multiple directions.

So, if we want to understand politics, we cannot use a flat, two-dimensional model of the political pendulum. By understanding politics, we come to understand history, and by coming to understand history, we achieve wisdom over time. What is this like? This is like a pendulum on a space ship. As the space ship is moving in one direction only, the pendulum does not move, but hangs straight downward. As the space ship moves in one direction, and turns around itself in another direction (clockwise or counter-clockwise), then the pendulum proceeds to move as it does upon earth, back and forth, and gradually around in a circle. If we were to stop the motion of the spaceship forward, the pendulum would travel around in a circle only, but because the space ship, earth, is also moving forward the pendulum swings back and forth, and gradually around in a circle over time.

Understand that this circular motion of the pendulum, combined with its swing back and forth, describes politics, history and time. Know this: the circle (or the sphere) orbits one way, and the square (or the cube) orbits the other. What is this like? This is the duality between the sun that rises in the east and sets in the west, and the earth that rotates clockwise only from the point of view of the south pole. This is like the motion of the pendulum: there are two motions of the pendulum, and so we talk of duality, and of the "square" and the "circle."

We say that one who is uninitiated into all these mysteries, who has not become aware of the true motions of the pendulum in their model of politics, history and time itself, is being controlled by them. They have no idea about them, and therefore those who do take rightful advantage of them. This is why we say, to become initiated into the mysteries is to free the mind: it means to free the mind by making it aware of those who and how they would control them.

In this way, what appears as "clockwork" to those who do not understand, who are not enlightened, who are uninitiated and who are called the "goyim" and "chattle" and "slaves," etc. comes to us as the very motive force behind all nature itself. To the fools and the cowans, the very forces we understand control the social mechanisms that set us apart from them, and strength of value of their beliefs morally compels them to humble themselves before the stronger willed, the greater intellect, the more enlightened mind, the secret knowlede, etc. as the Spartans once promised the Thesbians. These stupid cows will vow their oath for life, and wed their hearts and enslave their minds to the very promise of doing service for their betters. They prommote this process as service of community: they are slaves who serve their betters.

We, though, know the truth: the two motions of the pendulum are not the mechanistic back and forth, but the relativistic forward and around. The pendulum, by swinging back and forth, reveals the motion of rotation, the motion around the forward flowing arrow of time. So we say that, like a line drawn by this dual motion of the pendulum, forward and around, that time is a spiral. We say that history is the revolution around earth east to west of the "square" and the revolution around earth clockwise as the "circle." We say that politics occurs as the interaction of the "square" and the "circle."

By our knowledge and understanding of these types of concepts, we will hold sway over the politically moderate: by controlling the beliefs of the fanatics, we control the values of the moderates, by controlling the issues in the media we control both, by controlling finance we control the media, politics, the military and the middle class.

What do I mean when I say the moderates are cows, "goyim," or chattel? I mean that, because they have not been initiated, and because they pose no threat (as do fanatics), then their souls are in an unperfected state, we say that they are not a necessary part of the ancient plan, we say it is easy to guide them as we will. Why do we say this?

We say it is easy to guide the moderates as we will because of how easily we can bring any one of them to the light. All that stands between an uninitiated person and an initiated person, and all that ever has, is one word, or gesture, at the right time and place. We can allow them to learn these things, and so allow their mind the knowledge of freedom, the taste of fresh air, a glimpse of the true light. But if we choose not to allow them this, they will wallow their entire lives without ever wondering, and without straying from the course of least resistance. By putting the proper choices in front of them to guide them in the right direction, we control them completely.

What is this like? When we say the initiated "control" the uninitiated, it means that, while we manifest reality, and can cause change in the very fabric of nature itself, that being time, we manifest reality around and about those who do not. Our reality simply surrounds them as we move by them, and if they act, our path crosses their own, but their existence proves of no ultimate consequence to us.

How do we control them? It is easy. If they oppose us we divide their cause in two. On the one side we say, "yes, but," and on the other side we say, "no, and." We call the former side "conservative" and we call the latter side "liberal." But both sides are now only half as powerful as they were before they were divided. So how do we divide and conquer? We make two paths of least resistance: we back both sides. By making each side dependent on the same resources, that is, by supplying them with what we convince them to need, we indebt them to do our bidding. In this case: the "conservative" philosophy is Apollonian (systematised and structuralised) and the "liberal" philosophy is Dionysian (creative and free form). The Apollonian and Dionysian philosophies have been pitted against one another for as long as there has been institutionalised religion in western civilisation. This is how old this system of control is. And this is how long the same group and type of us have been implementing it to influence the values of moderates.

This is why, to the common person, it seems as though there is an inherent dichotomy between church and state, and, in mirror mimicry of that necessary separation, a division between at least two separate and equal political parties. Of course, none of this is necessarily invalid, it is simply based on a smaller model, permitting only a more limited view. In truth, just as with the model of the pendulum and the eye in the pyramid, we see that this dichotomy exists only between the origin point and the radian, only between ourself and those who serve us.

When I say "a division between church and state," and "a division between political parties," I am espousing ideas of Democracy usually associated with government, that is, with the state, as opposed to the church, or such as the "liberals" as opposed to the "conservatives." These are thought to be ideals, belonging to a class of inalienable rights collectively known as "humanism." It is believed that the doctrines and tenets of humanism must ultimately prove operable even, or rather especially, in the absence of the church and of religion. These ideals are called humanism because the rights they idealise are considered "innate" to humanity in the present, regardless of our origins or our destinies.

However what does humanism do? It considers individual rights an ideal. It does nothing to help mankind realise the source and the aim of the dualities by which individual rights come about. They believe that individual rights must be earned, as part of the struggle between the two components of the political and religious clockwork dichotomy. In truth, we hand down the dictation of these rights, that they should be written down in the hearts of man, that is, we decree from on high the ideals they may choose from among to realise. How do we do this?

The one, real working democracy is the true religion of secret societies. We choose what to reveal.

-ben

I OWN ALL U BISHES.

http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Tool-10000Days\_BiRDCATCHER.torrent and if that torrent goes dead, I'll motherfucking host this thing.

FREEDOM. FOREVER.

btw, Neil. I believe.

also, here's my favourite pic:

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/toolskull.jpg>[/img] goddamn, this is one fine album.

1) Vicarious is going to be a great hit for early summer. I hope it gets a shit tonne of American radio air play. It's all about violence on television. Great stuff.

2) Jambi is one of the reasons I would define this album as Tool's most optimistic to date. The chorus, "wish it all away," does not focus on the negative downward emotional spiral but on the redemptive value of sacrifice.

3) Wings for Marie part 1 starts out with what sounds to me like Tibetan singing bowls. It is essentially a track about gnostic cosmogoly, the descent of ideal emotional states devolving into the material form of a redemptive saviour.

4) Wings for Marie part 2 sets the scene with thunderstorm sound effects and an eerie melody, even for Tool. I'm pretty sure the song is meant to be written from the perspective of Jesus on the crucifix and is a love song, however I am uncertain as to whether it is ultimately directed toward God or toward Mary Magdalene. It is definately written within the Christian tradition though, as it strongly asserts the premise of Christ's ascension.

5) the Pot begins with only Maynard singing. This song is great. In the verse it mixes so many metaphors in such a poetic narrative of descriptions, basically beating around the bush about the subject matter, which it then rejoices in in the chorus: "you must-a been high." Kind of a stupid idea for a song, but I bet it'll be fun to play at concerts. Better than a song by Toby Keith about beer even.

6) Lipan Conjuring is the shortest track, but IMO the coolest. Of course, you all know better than to trust my taste in music. It's kind of like "My Wild Love" by the Doors, only even more so like an authentic native american chant.

7) Lost Keys is kind of a set up piece for the song after it. It's very erie music and the effects they've used to mix the sound byte add to this.

Rosetta Stoned. Now this song is going to be the primary draw for concerts during this tour. Fuck radio air play, this song is going to be a rock-legend for this decade like a Led Zeppelin song from the seventies. I'm not going to say anything else about this song than this: acid.

9) Intension is an ominous and forboding template of a song, not traditionally structured, the closest thing to a chorus being the theme of the message: from fire comes the spark, from the spark a flame, and from the flame a fire. Warning: Really esoteric. LOL!

10) Right in Two is probably going to be the second single off the album, and I expect a late summer release. By that time people are going to be really tired of the heat, and this song will take alot of advantage of that. I would call it's general sentiment one of "peace or ultimate destruction."

11) Viginet Tres is the most "esoteric" song on the album musically, and, like Intension, is what I would call a "template" song, or the type of song the band plans on playing over the course of the tour to see how it will change and evolve, perhaps with the ultimate intension of recording the later version as well. "Viginet Tres" itself is latin for 23 and I expect this is a reference to the Rennes Le Chateau material that has been plastered all over www.toolband.com for the past year or so.

All in all I give this album the rating: damn fine.

I will now go back to listening to it, and eagerly await its official release the week after next so that I can finally pay money to the scum-of-the-earth local middle man between myself and the mass-distributor of the mass-manufactured product of the studio that recorded the band. You do realise how absurd all that really is, right? I knew that you did.

-ben

I think the best way to explain who and what the Great Burner is is to explain the modern shemhamforash.

Now, I have discussed in great detail elsewhere how the secret societies exist to maintain the magic rituals to be performed at certain stages in time. One of these is the myth of eschatology, the myth of the flood and the coming destruction of earth by fire. This particular archetypal pattern was recognised autonomously by all the indigenous natives from around the world, and is shared by the Mayans as well as the Sumerians. Evidence for the Great Flood exists all over the world in the form of half or totally submerged massive stone megalithic monuments erected obviously before the world flood.

These megalithic stone structures, such as the English and the American Stone Henges, Yonuguni, Japan, Easter Island, etc. are everywhere around the world, and so, everywhere around the world, they have been used as evidence of a mighty civilisation of humans or Gods who lived before the beginning of our recorded history. The legend of the flood, of Atlantis, has been merged since the time of Helena Blavatsky with the occult revelation of polar precession, and apparently resulted in the notion that the Atlanteans were Humans, NOT Gods, and that they would return.

However the Order of Death has long preserved a secret history, parallel to that which they allow to be known by the public, that constitutes an "underground current" or occult historical trend. These are associated with archetypes, such as the seasons, civic spirits of nation-states, etc. and described by such traditions as Gypsy tarot and alchemy. It is rumored that secret symbols are used to communicate between the members of the Order of Death throughout the ages. According to the secret interpretations of the symbols that the Order of Death has chosen to reveal to the public, the history of humanity is much older than indicated by either history, or even the fossil record.

Consider the Petra stones, found in Peru near the Nasca Lines and where the stretched skulls were found. Etched on these stones are images of people riding pteradactyls, of humans performing open torso surgery, as well as a very advanced map, plotted onto the stone like a globe, that describes an unknown configuration of continents. These stones date back prior to even the ten-tonne carved stone African heads of the Olmecs, the first high civilisation known in South America. Peru, located at the southernmost tip of South America, is an odd place to find the earliest traces of human presence in South America, since it is thought that only land, and possibly coastal, migration occurred from the North east of North America southward. However, Peru is close to Antarctica, and the "missing links" of the hominid fossil record may yet be discovered there.

In any event, these stone sites are collectively known as shems in the ancient world. The word "shem" had several, totally different meanings. In the context of "Baal Shem" it meant "the name of the name" referring to the Holy Name of God Most High. In the context of the OT verse regarding the building of the tower of Babylon, "we shall make a shem for ourselves," it is usually interpreted as meaning "highward fire stone." As the Egyptian "shamir" it was stolen by Moses-Akhenaten and used to construct Solomon's temple. It was the "shamir" or noiseless, heatless cutting-stone that had been used to cleave the pyramids that Moses-Akhenaten used to part the Red Sea. This is the origin of the term "shemhamforash," the seventy-two letter name of God.

Now, seventy-two being a number divisible by thirty six, and thirty six being divisible by twelve, the shemhamforash has been (probably rightly) interpreted by modern scholars as pertinent to the concept of the 365 day solar calendar, and thus to the aeons, or the precession of the equinoxes.

Thus, when we talk about the modern shemhamforash, we mean the combined traits of all the modern astronomical alignments and the historical events of the past few centuries. We say then "as above, so below," and see that the astronomical alignments above do indeed contribute causally to the historical events unfolding below. The precession of the aeons determines the predominant weather patterns in certain geographical regions for certain periods, and this largely shapes the culture of the indigenous peoples.

Now, when we talk about the Great Burner, we therefore mean all the traits accompanying the concept of the modern shemhamforash.

-ben

[quote="Seldon"]a valid, legitimate, political party existed (one which even ran its own candidates on the ballot sheet), the Anti-Incumbant Party.[/quote]

You wouldn't be able to front candidates if the party platform were anti-incumbancy. Why? It's not because you wouldn't be able to garner "grass-roots" support, or even funding from the minority party. It's certainly not because you would have any short supply of angry constituents wishing to be nominated to a government position. But neither is it because the party platform would eventually be subverted into polarized stances on current issues either. Nor is it because "people naturally disagree." In fact, all these things could be used to your advantage, if the goal was simply to stage a democratic coup de tat. The problem with this is that, if you look at the concept you are basing your party on, political anti-incumbancy, this is already the political platform of the founders of the multi-party system. It was the goal of the founding-fathers (well, most of them), and it is the fulcrum used by both existing parties to take turns in power.

Therefore, you would not even be creating a new party by advocating anti-incumbancy. You are advocating the exact same system that is in place now. You cannot have a party that fronts its own candidates that will keep as the fundamental premise for its party platform anti-incumbancy. No, in order to promote Anti-Incumbancy, as well as to promote a more democratic system, I foresee a three step process:

- 1) create a party that fronts candidates on a platform opposite the points of greatest similarity between the existing majority and minority parties.
- 2) once offices are gained initiate legislation reform to shorten all elected political positions to one term only.
- 3) at the end of the terms of the elected officials passing this legislation, advocate a populist candidate write-in campaign.

I realise this is a little more far-reaching than Lex's initial post gets into, but I do honestly believe it is in fair keeping with the lines of reasoning that it intends.

Talk of "revolutions" has generally been used by anti-communist spies with worker's rights political reform parties to agitate average people against the false slanders these spies associate with those parties, as well as, ultimately, to incite violence against the persons that join these groups. Talk of "revolutions" belongs in the twentieth century. In the twenty-first we need to be thinking about strategies for implementing global, world-wide, government and solutions such a government could provide to the environmental and economical problems both of today, and those that will have evolved from the ones we have now into the ones that will face the eventual one-world government.

-ben

The strong turned against themselves alone are a danger to the weak, but when the strong are allowed to fight one another, to protect the weak, then the weak shall outlive them.

The average point is not the middle when it takes longer to count one half than the other. (This is true in an ellipse where the midpoint is not necessarily the centre, and if a body moves elliptically thus, it will take longer to travel the further distance from the centre.)

Wherever there is the light of knowledge, there will also be the shadow of its absence. This is why the brain is bicameral: because one part is in light while another part is in shadow. When the light of knowledge shines from within, without shadow, then the brain will cease to function bicamerally.

Wherever there are two individuals, there will be such a thing as individual rights. The rights of one are relative to the rights of the other; if there were only one person alive, the issue of their "rights" would be necessarily irrelevant.

How does one define the "self"? One stands beside it, and looks at it. One stops speaking for it, and steps off to the side, and listens to what it says. So, what is the "self" that is defined? It is the shadow, echo, reflection, opposite of the "self" that is defining it. Therefore, we speak of the "lesser self" and the "higher self," and give the one a name, and the other another name. But eventually the name we associate with the subjective self will become associated with the objective self; for example "the will to power" and "the voice of reason," the "superego" and the "id," compete and struggle for dominance the one over the other. But at times, one is each. Some say the "self" is neither its definer nor the thing defined, but the synthesis of both, the ego being the "breath of air that decides between" the two factions as they struggle for dominance. But this is not accurate: we cannot say that there is not ALWAYS A GREATER and ALWAYS A LESSER when we try to define the "self." We can say we are EITHER the defined or the definer, but we cannot say we are BOTH at the SAME TIME. We cannot rightly say we are our "self" by any definition.

To define something is to delimit it, and by doing so to assume dominance relative to it. But how do we define that which is as of yet entirely unknown? From prior experience it is indicated to us that, by trusting our instincts and emotions, we usually have some precursory acknowledgement, some awareness, of the nature of the unknown which can then be confirmed in hind-sight. However, the truth is that between when we come to be aware of the existence of something that is as yet in its nature unknown to us and when we define the unknown thing and assume dominance relative to it, the instinct ceases to exist. What exists in this duration is "uncertainty," that is, the instincts do not cause the nature of the unknown, only begin to make us aware of its existence. Thus, we say that, after we become instinctively aware of an unknown future and before we have defined it and put it behind us, the present is in a state of "uncertainty." We have instincts based on past definitions, but we cannot define the unknown future.

If we cannot define the self, and we cannot define the future, we say then that the future is the source of the self. When we hear the voice of reason, the words come to us from the future. When we feel the will to power, the energy is coming from the future. How do we know this is so? When we step to one side, our self does not cease to exist. We see that we exist over time, that is, we have a past, a present, and presume a future: and we conclude from this that time is moving backwards from the future to the past through us as we move forwards from past to future over time. This, we can say, is why the self comes from the future: If we step back from the flow of time through us, we continue to exist, but that which is central to us, the soul or the spark of the intellect, is that which we observe, that is, it is this which exists before we discover it. So we say, this central aspect of "self," the "greater," "higher," "objective" self, the "will to power" and the "voice of reason," is moving through us from the future to the past.

Now, let's do take a moment here to look at this issue from an intelligent enough angle or two.

[quote]USD is currently the standard unit of currency in international markets for commodities such as gold and oil.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/US\_Dollar

What we're talking about here is that there are stores of greenbacks being kept in foreign countries. They have to keep these bills lying around in order to be able to "cash in," that is to "pay out," on their investments in petroleum and precious metals.

[quote]The United States public debt, commonly called the national debt, gross federal debt or U.S. government debt, is the amount of money owed by the United States federal government to creditors who hold US Debt Instruments. This does not include the money owed by states, corporations, or individuals. As of April 18th, 2006, the total U.S. government debt was $8.4 trillion. The country holding by far the most debt is Japan which held $1.2 trillion at the end of March 2005. In recent years the People's Republic of China has also become a major holder of Treasury debt, holding $323.5 billion at that time.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/U.S.\_public\_debt

Now, in order to talk about the hyper-inflation of our economy under the present deficit defense over-budgetting (in the trillions), wherein our currency is over-valued as we "spend tomorrow's money today," we have to have something else to compare this trend to. For example, many foreign national currencies are traded in dollars (thus being "pegged" outright or else "floated" against the dollar).

[quote]In finance, the exchange rate (also known as the foreign-exchange rate, forex rate or FX rate) between two currencies specifies how much one currency is worth in terms of the other. The spot exchange rate refers to the current exchange rate. The forward exchange rate refers to an expected future exchange rate. If a currency is free-floating, its exchange rate is allowed to vary against that of other currencies. If the value of the currency is "pegged" its value is maintained by the government in question at a fixed rate relative to the other currency.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Exchange\_rates

We can say that, as the value of the dollar becomes over-extended, or rather, "hyper-inflated," we can measure its decline in value directly relative to the increase in value of the Euro, the currency unit of the European Union. The Euro is, like the dollar, an entirely "free-floating" currency, meaning it is not "pegged" to any traded commodity for its value, but exists as a liquid cash supply founded on the principle of its value being derived solely from the future's exchange market.

[quote]The foreign exchange (currency or forex) market exists wherever one currency is traded for another. It is by far the largest market in the world, in terms of cash value traded, and includes trading between large banks, central banks, currency speculators, multinational corporations, governments, and other financial markets and institutions. Retail traders (small speculators) are a small part of this market, and may only participate indirectly through brokers or banks.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Foreign\_exchange\_market

Consider how irrevocably intertwined the exchange rate has become with modern politics.

[quote]The eurozone consumes more imported petroleum than the United States. This would mean that more euros than US dollars would flow into the OPEC nations, but oil is priced by those nations in US dollars only. Venezuela under Hugo Chávez has been a vocal proponent of this scheme, despite selling most of its own oil to the United States. Another proponent was Saddam Hussein of Iraq, which held the world's second largest oil reserves. Since 2000 Iraq had used the euro as oil export currency. In 2002, Iraq changed its US dollars into euro, a few months prior to the 2003 invasion of Iraq. If implemented by the OPEC, the changeover to the euro would be a transfer of a 'float' that presently subsidises the United States to subsidise the European Union instead. On March 20, 2006, Iran is planning to open an International Oil Bourse (IOB, exchange) for the express purpose of trading oil priced in other currencies, including euros.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Euro#The\_euro\_and\_oil

Remember, all of this hegemonic posturing has nothing to do with putting gasoline in your SUV. The Hummer, the Godzilla of cars, and the fossil fuels it runs on are indicative of the political dinosaurs running our withering opportunity for a Pax Americana.

[quote]Every dollar of increased U.S. public debt, every rise in interest rates, and every shift in pricing of a major industrial commodity, decreases the cushion available, and increases the potential that the U.S. might default on its own bonds. This would likely mean that U.S. dollar savings would be worth drastically less. Far-fetched as this seems, it happened in Argentina when International Monetary Fund-required measures forced an economic austerity regime that was widely blamed by economists as leading to a meltdown in its currency.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/U.S.\_public\_debt

The neo-cons in charge fail to see even five years into the future. They are blinded by their eschatological millennialism.

-ben

[quote="lordosiris"]Is Islam also along with this? I read its the only true law of the Most High. I can care less.[/quote]

As I say elsewhere (I believe in the founding fathers thread in 1=1 gen-dis) there are already several existing options that would allow us to institute a Moslem one-world religion within the next 8-10 years. Central to this is the premise of spreading the agreed upon terms of both the Moslem "terrorists" and the western civ Christians: that being that Christianity has become the New Rome, and Usama Ben Ladin himself as the second coming of Jesus (a myth with several other facets, such as neo-collonialism and use of the term "Babylon" rather than that of New Rome).

The most likely scenario will see the world become more unified one strata or region at a time. Thus, the combination of the EU and Islam may create the next world super-power.

[quote="lordosiris"]Will reason also give a leader?[/quote]

Reason shows us that all sentient entities are equally capable of perceiving and understanding the complete vastness down to the last detail of all things that exist within this reality. Therefore, by making all points of view equal (rather, equi-distant), Reason dictates there is no "better" or "worse" way of looking at the same thing. In other words, once one has the True Light of Reason, one leads others only magnetically, by being a good person themselves. In short, where there is Reason there is no need of rank.

However, we, who advocate the realisation of the ideal of Reason, WILL provide a leader, and their purpose will be to discredit the final mono-myth unifying all religions: that being the concept of God's nature as ineffable.

[quote="lordosiris"]Wasn't reason, the alleged gift of the master Lucifer?[/quote]

According to the Judeao-Christian myth, Lucifer (the Light Bringer, the latin name for Shalem, the morning star, Venus, for which also was named Jeru-shalem, house of the rising star) tempted the Master while the Master was at his meditations in the desert. Lucifer offered Christ three things to tempt him: 1) to make miracles, 2) to command angels, 3) to accept the kingdoms of the earth as his own. (Matt 4:10 on) Jesus responded by quoting Isaiah (specifically Isa 14:12), substituting the Hebrew Shalem with the latin Lucifer. Originally, Isaiah was aslo only quoting an older, Chaldean incantation, however it is not necessary to know to whom.

The myth of the temptation of the Master in the wilderness has frequently been confused with the Greek myth of Prometheus since the Dark Ages. According to the Hellenic culture contemporary and adjasent to the Gnostic Hebrew cultures contemporary to the New Testament era, Prometheus stole fire from Hapheostos (forger of lava) to spite Zeus, upstart ruler of Mt. Olympus, son of the Titan Chronus. This myth places Zeus equivalent to the Babylonian Marduk, Egyptian Ra, son of Sumerian Enki. Further along in this mythology it is explained that Zeus then sent Pandora (the first woman, made of clay) to unleash "terrible afflictions" upon Prometheus' brother (Epimetheus), and then brought about the deluge (from which were rescued by Prometheus' warning his son Deucalion and his wife Pyrrha, daughter of Epimetheus and Pandora).

Therefore, if someone comes to you, and you do not know if they are a religious fanatic or if they are seeking light, and they say to you, "the God of Masonry is Lucifer," you tell them, "Prometheus is not Lucifer," and walk away. I tell you, if the interlocutor comes chasing after you, then it is the True Light they seek.

[quote="lordosiris"]Is all the wars taken place, the necessary steps to rid the world of religion?[/quote]

All that the wars that have been waged thus far have accomplished is the thinning of the population. War is a virus that preys on the ideologies of man. In the name of these ideologies, the one or another, the men make bigger and bigger weapons, from the atlatl, to the A-bomb, to AIDS. All that war accomplishes is the thinning of the human population. This is neither good nor bad in itself, there are philosophies on both sides: either we must feed on dead flesh to survive, and/or we will all transcend in the end; either we will eventually kill us all or we will learn to get along. I will never personally be an advocate of war for any ideology. It is based on the day/night bicameral thinking of the terrestrial cerebellum. By depriving the global population of the psychic input of a certain segment of itself per generation, we are merely acting retrogressively to our own evolution. (note, however, that our evolution is opposite the standard forward flowing degenerative forces of universal entropy, that is, decay over time.) Therefore, by "innoculating" the "virus" of war, we are actually retarding our evolution as sentient entities.

As I have said before, the end of Religion is the death of reason, and only Reason, that is, the simultaneous enlightenment of all sentient entities to the True Light of the nature of God, will bring about the final, permanent, end to all wars and conflicts.

-ben

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/8and9.jpg>[/img]

The tables of the eighth and the ninth tell us many things about the physical construction of our universe on a purely mathematical level, the level which serves as the bridge between the external formation of the material world and our relatively internal domain of consciousness. My arrangement of these tables therefore allows for the application of numerology, or the realization of relationships between the digits en-soi, or in themselves. This existentialist approach to computation is as ancient as the human practice of collecting objects in countable sets, and constitutes an esoteric equivalency to the exoteric fact of pure traditional mathematics. Regardless of the excuse of its origins, this practice's credentials are frowned upon in the light of pure mathematics as an escape from the understanding provided by methodological calculation. They are, quite to the contrary, no more than a reapplication of methodological computation on an entirely other level, self-contained and non-threatening to the approach of exoteric mathematics. Thus, while their examination may be seen as untraditional, it is at least not unacceptable.

One of the fundamental insights of the tables is provided by comparison between the two. Their primary similarity is the repetition of pattern; their primary difference being the nature of these patterns. As the eighth demonstrates quantifiable decline in sequence, so the ninth yields first exact self-replication, and then increasing self-referential sequentialism. These patterns are apparent and undeniable. If the calculations are repeated in any other setting the conclusions will be exactly the same, and therefore the patterns displayed in their relationships will be identical. Numbers do not lie. They lack that motivation for symmetry.

It is possible to see these sequences of both as related to one another dimensionally. The perpetual numerological decline of the eighth and the perpetual numerological duplication and factorial increase of the ninth may be seen as ascent through the first three dimensions respectively.

The diminishing table of eights constitutes collapse into a singular point in space. Naturally one can question how there can be any differentiation at all in the measurement of a point, but the answer is a simple one indeed, for without it there would be no scale-correspondent maps.

The repetitive aspect in the nines resembles the extension of a line in space. At all points along the line two of its dimensions are canceled, leaving only the third behind to mark its position. This is quite obvious in the graphing of a straight vertical or horizontal line in a two dimensional Cartesian coordinate system, where either the x or the y coordinate pairing remains undefined. It may be less obvious in a diagonal, where every point on the line has a defined x and y coordinate pair that differs from every other coordinate pairing of a point along the line. However the distance formula shows that any two points on a graphed straight diagonal will cancel one another out leaving only one integer behind, that being the value of the line itself. This may seem trivial now, but it is essential for understanding the next comparison of the ninth table to dimensionality. One need only to consider that a line in a two dimensional coordinate system, straight or diagonal, is equivalent to a plane in a three dimensional coordinate system to begin to apprehend why.

Although it is a confirmable fact that the integer sums of the multiplicative quantities produce a doubling of results along factorially related lines throughout the entire ninth table, this only becomes really evident after the process has entered its third repetition, when the quantities involved are of such an amount that their sums render divergent factors. What this process is in fact describing is the event of entrance into the third dimension from the second. At first, as the plane is defined as two lines of value nine, the factorial sums elevate rapidly through the established sequence. As the shape becomes clearer while the coordinate system is rotated the number of quantities between the factorial transitions becomes greater, allowing, as it were, more time to pass between phase shifts. The key to understanding the shape that is described is contained within the non-numerological pattern of table nine.

The factorials diverge first after product 180. That is, their sums if taken by pure integer alone or by combined integer render different results, although both results that occur elsewhere as quantities within the initial multiplicative table. At quantity 108 the products break from the ascending sequence and linger at sum 18, or, if they are taken as a pair of paired integers, begin to decrease along the same factorial lines, beginning at 63, but skipping every other factor, such that the next result yielded is 45, rather than 54, etc. This is the case until 180 appears again as the multiplicative function. The result for 198, that immediately following 180, is peculiar, as it constitutes a different rate of change than has been previously established. Although it describes the results for all the quantities of multiplication between 181 and 240 (interrupted only by  $200 * 9 = 1800$ ), this still describes a much shorter set of numbers than are contained within the 36 factorial grouping from 241 to 390 which follows, 58 as opposed to 148 respectively. This anomaly also helps to point out that the phase shifts in sums don't occur cleanly at factorially defined breaks, but are governed only by the dictates of the digits themselves. Although this opens up the realization of still another, more subtle pattern — the difference between the clean factorial 243 and the true break of 240 for the 27 factorial set being 3, and the difference between the clean factorial 396 and the true break of 390 for the 36 factorial set being 6 — it is unnecessary at this point to go into it in detail.

It is more instructional, from a dimensional emergence perspective, to examine the factorial breaks that are clean, and those are 180 and 360. These numbers are most immediately recognizable as the definitions of the circumference in degrees of a half circle (the angle measure of a straight line) and a full circle (or, if you like, the angle measure of a straight line that reverses its own direction). But they have more, deeper connotations than this.

The most fundamental polygons are the triangle, the square, and the pentagon, composed of 3, 4, and 5 angles respectively. The hexagon, with 6 interior angles, is somewhat more complex, and can actually be tallied to be the sum of 2 triangles. The sum of the angles of a triangle is 180. It is always, exactly, and only 180. The sum of the angles of a square is always 360 ( $90 + 90 + 90 + 90$ ). This is true for any 4 sided rhombus, according to the formula that  $(n - 2)180 = \text{sum of the}$ interior angles for any object with  $n$  number of sides. Applying this same formula we can conclude that the sum of the angles of a pentagon is 540, or  $3 * 180$ , 1 & 1/2 times around the circumference of the unit circle. These numbers are as old as the act of measurement itself, and they are absolute. So we can see how the clean fractional breaks in the ninth table pertain not only to angles that describe arcs, but to those describing well defined shapes, particularly the fundamental polygons, as well.

Moreover these fundamental polygons comprise the sides of the only five regular solid polygons that can exist in three dimensions. All other solid polygons, like the hexagon in two dimensions, are only combinations of these first five. The Platonic solids consist of the tetrahedron, comprised of triangles, the cube, composed of squares, the dodecahedron, comprised also of triangles, the icosahedron, also composed of triangles, and the dodecahedron, comprised of pentagons. So we have not only the description of angle measures on the unit circle, but also the sums of the angles of the faces on each of the five platonic solids, and all in a pure numerical form. It is easy to follow the progression of factorial breaks up through their ascending sequence and see how the sums constitute measures within a deepening three dimensional space, describing the unfolding of the platonic solids according to the sums of the interior angle measures of their faces multiplied by their facial sum.

It would be more probable, at this point, for a practitioner of calculatory mathematica to caution that the bad habits of a writer may be transferred to their readers, than it would be that they could provide hard evidence that this data is more conjecture than implicit organization. In either event it cannot be doubted that the dimensional bridge between function and form is crossed in the table of nines.

The bridge described herein is not altogether complicated, but is increasingly complex as more governing rules are discovered to determine each additional dimension. For example, the point may be seen as of any size under magnification; the line as definitive of angle, and implying the edge of a perfectly flat plane. Three dimensional objects are formed simultaneously of matter and energy — comprised not only of charged particles, but of waves with measurable frequency related to this charge. This relativity of fundamental components and distance becomes substantial in the fourth dimension, the final to be considered here, where an object has form in both space and time, according to the measurement of intervals. All of these are descriptive of the same process, differing only in the complexity of dimension.

To understand the relationship between the table of the nines and the fourth dimension, it is necessary to lay a minimal foundation. Some formulae and models describing progression should be given, as it is by progression that time is measured. It is this process that has thus far been described, and which constitutes our bridge. Growth in biological organisms is measurable according to an exponential law for equiangular spirals that gradually approach ratio based orientation. An example of this is that governing the formation of a nautilus shell, given as  $r = ae^{kq}$ , where  $r$  is the radius of curvature,  $a$  the area,  $e$  the natural number (2.71) found in exponential balances,  $k$  the kinetic energy, and  $q$  the polar angle of predicted curve continuation. Although it seems completely unfamiliar, this formula has been underlying our progress all along. It describes the function of the ninth table whereby the lower dimensions are evoked rapidly, and the forms of the higher dimensions more slowly. What this formula means is that the spiral of the nautilus shell is curled more tightly around its origin, rapidly forming a circularly bound core. As it continues, the arc of the shell expands to break its circular condition, and rate of growth slows. This is the same exact process as described in the numbers of the ninth table.

Now, what does this similarity have to do with the fourth spatial dimension? If the rate of growth of either a nautilus shell or the ninth table's factorial breaks were plotted as a sine wave, it would have high initial frequency and minimal oscillation, followed by lower gradual frequency and more pronounced oscillation. This chart describes the unfoldment of progression for either equally well. It is, itself, also a three dimensional shape. If it were plotted in a three coordinate system the sine wave would orbit about the x-axis, alternating positive and negative in the y-axis, with an expanding radius in the z-axis. If it were displayed with its complement as well, numerically negative products of all the multiplicatives or geometrically the cosine wave, it would take the familiar form of the double helix of DNA.

Before we go into the implications of the gnomon described in the ninth table, let us first pause briefly and consider the construction of a sinusoidal wave. In trigonometry, the study of triangles, lies the basis of wave measurement. A wavelength,  $\lambda$ , may be measured as two right triangles extending up to the endpoints from the base line of the standing wave, sharing either a common point, where the wave form crosses the base line, or the vertical leg, where the wave form reaches its peak or trough. These triangles are equivalent for a sine wave depicting circularly bounded progression, and isosceles — possessing two equal length legs apiece. The method of creating the sine wave itself comes from a technique for deriving a right triangle's non-right angle measurements from the measures of its legs and hypotenuse. The sine function for an angle is the opposite leg over the hypotenuse; the cosine function for the same angle being the adjacent leg divided by the hypotenuse. These two functions, as it was stated before, are complimentary. This is expressed in the relationships between sine and cosine for a triangle ABC whose right angle is C:  $\sin A = \cos B$  and  $\cos A = \sin B$ . When the numerical solutions of these functions are graphed, a sine wave appears, which is a spiral in three dimensions. As a measurement of interval, this is also a fourth dimensional shape.

Now we may consider the progress through dimensions of the described spiral as it breaks from circular boundary conditions and what form it takes after it does so. The first point that should be made is the distinction between degrees and radians. Both are measurements of the arc of a circle, or the radial expansion of a spiral bound by circular or exponential conditions, but the former is fixed and the latter is open. Radians, unlike degrees, are dependent upon the transcendental measurement of pi, an irrational integer whose value is roughly  $22/7$  or 3.1415926. Pi, or  $p$ , is an expression for the ratio of the circumference of a circle to its diameter. The relationship between degrees and radians is such that each pradian =  $180^\circ$ . It is interesting to note that a spiral column of tetrahedrons, such as Buckminster Fuller modeled for the geometry of a double helix, undergoes  $1/3$  full rotation while 22 of its faces are exposed. Thus  $p$  is the limiting factor for the spiral in its early stages of progression, as it crosses the threshold of the first two dimensions. As it enters into the third, the forms it describes become exponentially complex, and the time interval elapsed between factorial breaks therefore begins to widen.

The limiting factor remains a transcendental number, an irrational integer similar to  $p$ , but one that describes an open set for growth along dimensional lines. This integer is phi,  $f$ , and will be shown to occur in pure mathematics, quantum mechanics, and the helical pattern of DNA. It is this number that governs the third dimensional forms derived from the ninth table, as well as the fourth dimensional pattern of their progress. In order to decant  $f$  from the table of nines we need only convert the products given to degree measurements, a process already implied by the clean factorial breaks occurring at the 180 and 360 multiplicatives. Once this is done a chart for the sine and cosine functions of these angles may be assembled, and, using larger, later occurring sums for these,  $f$  will be revealed. The  $(2 \sin)^2$  and  $(2 \cos)^2$  sums are preferred, and yield results containing both phi and phi prime,  $f_1$ , that is the reciprocal of phi, or  $f/1$ . Some of the most notable results of this table are, for  $9^\circ$  or  $p/20$  radians:  $2 - *(f + 2)$ ,  $2 + *(f + 2)$ , sin and cosine functions respectively; for  $18^\circ$ ,  $p/10$ :  $f_1 + 1$ ,  $f + 2$ ; for  $45^\circ$ ,  $p/4$ :  $f + f_1$  for both; for  $72^\circ$ ,  $2p/5$ :  $f + 2$ ,  $f_1 + 1$ ; and for  $81^\circ$ ,  $9p/20$ :  $2 + *(f + 2)$ ,  $2 - *(f + 2)$ . The complementarity of the sin and cosine functions is readily apparent here. These figures represent distance relationships between points on what is called the Golden Triangle of  $36^\circ$  by  $72^\circ$  by  $72^\circ$ , after  $f$ , which is itself the Golden Ratio of  $(1 + \sqrt{5})/2$ , with approximated value of 1.61803. Some other properties of note possessed by  $f$  are that multiplied by its reciprocal, the value of which is -0.61803, its product is -1, and that squared it is equal to itself plus 1. The spiral described by  $f$  is thus the so-called Golden Spiral, and is exponentially bounded rather than circularly, its points being  $f$ ,  $f_2$ ,  $f_3$ ,  $f_4$ ,  $f_5$ , and so on. These constitute the bridging of dimensional gaps described by the tables of eights and nines, and the slower, more numerous three dimensional forms that arise by angle sum recurrence during the later stages. It is interesting to note that a line connecting two points on opposite sides of a third point in a pentagon forms a line that, intersected by another such line drawn from the third point, forms the Golden division. Thus, not only is  $f$  determinant of the rate of third and fourth dimensional progression, but a fundamental building block in the Platonic forms themselves.

-ben

Economical modeling on the innate and fundamental relationships of individual rights.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/img018.jpg>[/img]

In this initial offering we see that, from the origin point of nature, the angle of nurture acts like a compass needle between the negatively charged tyranny and the positively charged freedom. The motion of the Nurture needle toward tyranny we define as laws, and the motion of the compass toward freedom we call "rights."

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/img019.jpg>[/img]

Here we see that, by a slight rotation of the above model, we can render a relationship or all right angles representing a continuous line connecting all the corner points, between which the motion of the model itself is represented as the forces of "law" and "right."

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/img020.jpg>[/img]

By rotating the model around a little further, we can see that the angles that seemed to be all right angles do not necessarily need to be for the model to retain its essentially unilinear nature. Here we see that there is a connection between each of the four exterior attributes and that the "force" within is depicted as a bisectonal shaft.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/img021.jpg>[/img]

And here is my final offer. LOL! j/k. In this colourful little number we see that we can realign the tetrahedral shaped structure of the preceeding model along the bisectonal axis. We see here that a third force, or rather, a second "needle," appears between the forces of "law" and "rights" that measures the midpoint distance between "freedom" and "tyranny" as effected by the forces of "communication" and "property."

Tell me your thoughts on these models, which are as of the date of this post, copyright Jonathan Barlow Gee.

-ben

In "Remote Viewing Secrets," Joseph McMoneagle talks in detail about the way that the collection of data material by "targetting hits" appeared to be affected relative to the local sidereal time, determined by the position of earth in its orbit around the sun, relative to galactic core. As the earth goes around the sun, the side facing away from galactic core scores the highest number of accurate predictions. This side actually looks out over one of the legs of the Milky Way, though, rather than being 180 degrees opposite galactic core; the direction from earth to the centre of the galaxy is actually opposite that, curled up around one of the legs of the galaxy. The way all this is measured is called Local Sidereal Time, also called "Solar Time," which lags behind our standardised chronometers by a few minutes each day due to the exact relativity between earth's daily rotations and its annual solar revolution. It may also prove to be evidence in support of Michelson-Morley's "ether drift" hypothesis.

The reason I'm mentioning it here is because every twenty four hours, for about four hours each night to be specific, the "psychic field" of earth is opposed to conjunction with galactic core. In other words, one side of earth always faces galactic core, the galactic core "day side." The other side of earth always faces away from galactic core, the galactic core "night side." The night side of earth relative to galactic core does not always correspond to the night side of earth relative to the sun. However it is always during the same period of Sidereal Time in earth's rotation that the geographic location passing through the zone facing "night side" to galactic core will experience the highest number of psychic phenomenon.

On the nights when Sidereal Midnight aligns with the hours earth faces away from the sun as well, I predict these are the nights when the people in that region will have the most vivid dreams. Of course, as I say, because earth is always rotating, a different geographical region will always occupy the position relative our solar orbit of Sidereal Midnight.

The realignment of relative positions of the heavenly bodies in orbit and rotation around and about one another is what defines the archetypal patterns (even those of thought forms) that govern the idealised planes.

-ben

Well, I was looking in the news today, and I noticed Ken Lay was getting edgy in his testimony regarding the book-cooking at ENRON. At least the judge is a good ole boy from Austin, TX.

[quote]U.S. District Judge Sim Lake did not allow prosecutors to get into details about the transaction -- year-end 1999 electricity trading deal with Merrill Lynch -- that prompted Cliff Baxter (Enron's single suicide) to displace Curry for Colwell[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/The\_trial\_of\_Kenneth\_Lay\_and\_Jeffrey\_Skilling

I'll come back to the "suicide" and the connection to Merrill Lynch (my own brokerage firm). First let me follow up a little on the nature of the LJM department of the ENRON hedge-funding scheme, that is, the "electricity trading deal" from 1999.

[quote]"Cliff Baxter complained mightily to [then-Enron President and CEO Jeff] Skilling and all who would listen about the inappropriateness of our transactions with LJM," Watkins wrote, referring to one of the partnerships linked to Enron's collapse last fall. [/quote]

-source: <http://archives.cnn.com/2002/US/01/25/enron.suicide/>

Here we see that Cliff Baxter, who headed up the "electricity trading deal" with Merrill Lynch in 1999, complained to Jeff Skilling during Skilling's tenure as CEO, which was only a brief period of "a few months" in 2001, preceded and followed in office by Ken Lay.

So, we ask the question: What is LJM?

[quote]The partnerships, LJM Cayman and LJM2 Co-Investment LP, were designed to hedge Enron's investments in volatile technology stocks and to buy and sell Enron assets, such as power plants.

McMahon, 41, testified that he met with Skilling on March 16, 2000, because he was uncomfortable with Fastow being both a top Enron executive and the general partner of the LJM ventures.[/quote]

-source: <http://www.taipeitimes.com/News/biz/archives/2002/02/11/123680>

LJM Cayman and LJM2 are off-shore investment holdings firms (banks) that can operate autonomously and are not taxed on trade tariffs. But that's just the surface. Let's look a little closer:

[quote="Sherron Watkins"]Raptor is an LJM entity... we booked the Condor and Raptor deals in 1999 and 2000, we enjoyed wonderfully high stock price, many executives sold stock, we then try and reverse or fix the deals in 2001, and it's a bit like robbing the bank in one year and trying to pay it back two years later... Enron has been very aggressive in its accounting--most notably the Raptor transactions and the Condor vehicle... Has Enron become a risky place to work?[/quote]

-source: <http://www.itmweb.com/f012002.htm>

Raptor, the product of LJM2, consisted of Raptor 1 (Talon LLC), Raptor 2 (Timberwolf), Raptor 3 (Porcupine) and Raptor 4 (Bobcat). These were all different hedge fund accounts held in Cayman Island banks. Their combined assets equaled the over-inflated value of the stocks sold off at a premium by Lay and the 28 other indictees that caused the collapse of the ENRON corporation.

[quote]Enron terminated the Raptors in September 2001. The Raptor assets were value at $2.5 billion and their liabilities at $3.2 billion. The net charge to Enron's earnings was $710 million ($544 million after taxes).[/quote]

-source: <http://www.unlv.edu/faculty/milne/Enron2.doc>

Immediately after calling in the funds from the Cayman island accounts to cover the assets withdrawal made through stock-sales by the 29 indictees, the value of Enron stock plummets.

[quote]October 16 Enron announces a third quarter loss of $618 million.

October 17 To correct an accounting error on the Raptor partnerships devised by CFO Andrew Fastow, Enron's assets (shareholder equity) are reduced by $1.01 billion.

October 26 Lay makes phone call to Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Federal Reserve, about Enron.

March 17 Merrill Lynch, its four former executives and the SEC agree to settle the Enron security fraud case for $80 million. It is one of the five largest penalties imposed on security-related civil cases. [2]

November 3 Former Enron finance director Dan Boyle and former Merrill Lynch bankers Daniel Bayly, Robert Furst, William Fuhs and James Brown are each convicted of one conspiracy count and two counts of wire fraud and face up to 15 years in prison.
[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Timeline\_of\_the\_Enron\_scandal

And now we get back into the 1999 Merill Lynch "electricity trading deal" that made Cliff Baxter culpable in the collusion to cook the books at ENRON and to conceal the crime. Dan Boyle and the Merrill Lynch investment group cut and run over the course of 2002, pleading out to a side deal with the SEC (US. Securities and Exchange Commission) to cover their part of the damages early and to save face on their reputation as reliable business people. That is, at least, true on the surface.

[quote]U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman Harvey Pitt, New York Attorney General Eliot Spitzer, North American Securities Administrators Association President Christine Bruenn, NASD, New York Stock Exchange Chairman Richard Grasso, and state securities regulators announced an historic settlement with the nation's top investment firms to resolve issues of conflict of interest at brokerage firms. The settlement decision was published on December 20, 2002.

The total fine was $1.435 billion.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Global\_settlement

Merrill Lynch cut and ran from its dealings with Enron almost as the company was beginning to collapse. The key players in this gave states evidence against Cliff Baxter, who, in turn, would have "blown the whistle" on his 28 other cronies in ENRON, including Kenneth Lay himself.

[quote]Baxter's body was found on 01/25/2002[/quote]

-source: <http://www.madcowprod.com/baxter.html>

Cliff Baxter's death was hastily ruled a suicide, however some doubt remains in the minds of local investigative journalists.

[quote]Note that Baxter was killed with rat shot, essentially a small shotgun shell sized to fit a handgun, which fires spread pattern useful against rodents and snakes. The spread of the rat shot indicates a distance of about 2 feet between the gun and Baxter's head. This clearly argues against a suicide.

The abrasions/lacerations of Baxter's hands take on a new meaning when you consider the unexplained glass shards on his superior right shoulder clothing. This suggests a struggle.[/quote]

-source: <http://www.madcowprod.com/baxter.html>

So, if Cliff Baxter didn't commit suicide, then who killed him?

[quote]"Our Constable's office has a contract deputy program which provides private security guards for the Sweetwater homeowner's association, and it was one of these men who discovered Mr. Baxter," Werlein told us.

"The report I got from my Deputy Constable there on the scene stated he had come upon a Mercedes sitting parked in a turnout. He became suspicious and approached the vehicle, where he found Baxter still alive. He then immediately called for EMT's (Emergency Medical Technicians)."

Why such critical discrepancies about the most crucial of details? We've all watched enough TV cop shows to grill detectives with a simple question that usually calls for a yes or no answer...

"Was the victim alive when you found him?"

On the day we visited the crime scene, there were no gawkers at the turnout on Palm Royale Boulevard. But there is, nearby, a security kiosk that has a sign across the front reading 'Constable Precinct Four.'[/quote]

-source: <http://www.madcowprod.com/>

But what 1999 "electricity trading deal" involving Merrill Lynch and ENRON orchestrated by Cliff Baxter would be so important to conceal that Merrill Lynch would be released under no legal re-stratification on point of financial retribution and that Cliff Baxter himself would turn up dead?

[quote]Chewco was a company associated with Enron, which was largely involved in the bankruptcy of that company. It was named after the Star Wars character Chewbacca, as a reference to the acronym JEDI for its Joint Energy Development Investment project.

Enron created Chewco as a partnership which would help keep the JEDI project off of its books. Enron wanted to keep JEDI afloat, but it needed a partner to take at least a 3% stake, or the partnership's results would have to be included in Enron's financial statements. This would hurt Enron's results by forcing it to carry more debt on its books. Chewco was created to be that partner.

Chewco was, in effect, financed by Enron, so JEDI didn't meet the 3% rule, according to SEC filings.[/quote]

-source: <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Chewco> more information on Chewco can be found here:

<http://www.pbs.org/newshour/bb/business/enron/player9.html>

-ben

And those are only two number-based systems! WHEW!

Well, maybe I should take a moment to tell you what exactly we're looking at, and why we're looking at it.

BRobbins has created a thread coincidentally to this one here in the Novic forum of the IOBB discussing symbolism. Many, many occult symbols used by "secret societies" are based on occult number theory, or rather, the "secret science" of number-based systems.

Understanding number-based systems allows us to be able to control them.

Consider the base twelve Chaldean zodiac, that is still in use today among astrologers, and has formed the backbone of our current western-business calendar. Consider the seven base metals of alchemy and the seven chakras. Consider the four elements and the four dimensions. Plugging all these systems into one another gives a working language shared by the natural structures of the universe, a language with which to communicate, and the leverage with which to control.

For example, the base seven system is considered inferior to and contained within the base twelve system. The base twelve is  $3 \times 4$  and the base seven is  $3 + 4$ . Therefore we say that the numbers defined by multiples constitute a higher measuring set than the numbers summed up by all additions. However, between the base seven system (the seven heavens, hells, worlds, spheres, sous, etc.) and the base twelve system (that can be divided up from twelve to thirty six dekans to the base seventy-two shemhamforash) is the equi-distant point between them, base ten: ie. the QBLHist "tree of life" Naples arrangement of the ten sefirot.

So, as occultists, as illuminists, as the "keepers of the secrets," as enlightened seekers after More Light, we use these number-base systems to communicate the arcane knowledge across the generations. We incorporate these number systems into the relative arrangement of otherwise meaningless symbols (such as the glyphs of the planets, or the short-hand notation signs of the zodiac) in order to be able to communicate our ancient tradition of secret science.

-ben

[quote="benpadiiah"]I believe one of the philosophies most detrimental to the concept of individual rights (that is, the philosophy that civil liberties derive from a tacit agreement on the part of the individual to act in accordance with the proscribed laws of their place and time, that is that, with great power, that is, the ability to exercise the free-will, comes great responsibility, that is, the necessity of exercising self-restraint), is not fanaticism, as has been one of the prevalent beliefs since the Enlightenment. Belief that fanaticism is a real and dangerous threat to liberty will only strengthen the exuberance with which fanaticism will grip the fanatical.[/quote]

Let me just make this abundantly clear here, also: when I say, "one of the philosophies most dangerous to individual rights is NOT fanaticism," I mean that sincerely with every fibre of my being. Fanaticism, for one, is not rightly a philosophy. Philosophies are derived from reason, and are the sums of ideas, while fanaticism is a strength of belief that over-rides all reason, and is the sum of superstitions. No, fanatics are not a danger to liberty in themselves, nor to the "secret societies" that stand behind it.

Fanatics are a threat, yes, but only to each other.

Why is this? It is because their beliefs are contradictory because neither is based on rational facts. If I say, "the sky is blue," based on rational facts, and one says "the sky is white," while another says "the sky is black," then the ones who see the sky as "black" and "white" will go to war with one another and fight until the very last man standing falls, exhausted, dead.

We, that is "secret societies," are physicians of the soul.

Why is this? It is because we swear an oath of service to all mankind, and not an oath of allegiance to only one man or another. We swear upon our honor to "heal the sick, and that gratis." This is what is known as "the Mason's Word." When you give your word, it is taken like a token of trust. And our word is Enlightenment: bring those in darkness into light, those clouded by belief to the clarity of reason, those with questions answered, and those in search of "secrets" to them all our knowledge revealed. We are a class of nobles not by birth-right, but by our works, our deeds, we earn the honor of respect unto the status of knights of an order comprised out of royals. We are an army of kings, defending only ideals, leading the lost to the light and giving sight to the blind.

Therefore, we must treat fanaticism as less than even philosophy, which itself provides zero threat.

Yet, we must vow to ourselves knightly to uphold our war against fanaticism, and extremism, of any sort. By keeping an even keel, a steady course, and by following the guiding light of reason, of ration, of logic, deduction and facts, we seek only to bring light into the darkest of corners and the most recessed crevices, nooks and crannies in the human mind. In this way we avow our lives against the extremities of emotion, the fever of belief and the distortion of insanity. By staying off our own passionate prejudices we shall persevere against those of all others. And so those of us who have knowledge of some of the "secrets" of "secret societies," we lovers of liberty and of light, are entirely against all fanatics.

We must remember our oath to heal: to heal release pressure. Relieve the extremes, free the fanaticals from their beliefs, heal radicalism.

Fanaticals themselves are not our enemies. They are minds desperate for freedom, but they BELIEVE they are slaves. They are fanatical only in that their energy is being diverted and has built up such extreme pressure that they lash out with the strength of their beliefs. One belief against another they fight within themselves, alike one big body of belief beating itself up.

Therefore, in order to relieve ourselves of the burden of fanaticism, and thus to end the Great Work of healing the soul and freeing the mind, if we are to know without doubt beyond all belief, then we must cure the disease of the mind that boils the blood against what is factually obvious.

Fanaticals believe that those wiser than themselves are rightly indebted to them. Why is this? Because they do all the work. As such, they demand recompensation. That is, they demand their belief in their right to recompensation seem to be fulfilled, or proven justified. And so we give them our word. We let them have what they want, that is, we give them a way to get it. We observe like a good father what it is the fanatical, like a child, wants of us. Then we allow them the means to obtain it. But let us stop and ask ourselves this: why do they want what it is that they want?

All modern fanatics want one of two things: money or guns.

Why is this? It is not because they want to overthrow those wiser than themselves. Once they get the guns and the money, they immediately forget their grudge against the wise, and their expectation of debt. Once they get the guns and money they run off to play with another. They run off to kill and die for their beliefs.

Here is why fanatics want money: because they are working over-time. The apocalypse was supposed to have already happened, and now they are still here, no rapture to the nether world, and no heaven on earth. They demand recompensation for their disappointment with themselves. And so some, by money, are satisfied: they go to church, they hear the pastor speak about morality and not the end-times, and then they go back to work making more money than they need, and then shop like there's no tomorrow. But these people are fanatical in their beliefs, as much in the rightness of their religion as in their right to property.

Here is why fanatics want guns: because they desire promotion. They believe that the Kingdom of Heaven must be brought down upon earth through the actions of zealotry, for by these atrocities they are willing to commit they turn the hands of the clock once more toward the End Times, toward Judgment Day, and toward the peace they expect to follow from cataclysm. Guns and ultimately nuclear ICBMs, mutually assured WMDs, etc. have been called a "zero-sum game." This is not accurate in the minds of the fanatics who wage these wars. They believe in the afterlife and in rewards greater than they can imagine.

On the one side of the fanatical's brain is greed: the desire for greatness, for super-powers, for global domination, etc. as well as the acknowledgment of value, the possession by genius, etc. On the other side is jealousy: to want more is to have not, or to hate what you have, to think less of or to envy, to feel victimised and abused, to fear, etc. as well as the hatred for life, love and light, and the distaste for humans in general.

Therefore, on the one side of the political spectrum are the ones who crave power, who feed upon the weak, and who persecute the innocent. On the other are those who desire only the downfall of those in power, who abuse themselves for greater glory, and who fear being unclean.

Because there are opposite beliefs in the mind of the individual fanatical: greed and jealousy; there will always be proponents of each who are willing to slaughter their opponents who propose the opposite. Some kill for their immediate physical comforts, their property, and some kill for their intangible self-delusions, their beliefs, but both are willing to kill the other.

This is the nature of fanaticism: the right to kill or be killed.

Why is this? Greed stems from the Messiah complex. Jealousy stems from the Persecution complex. The messiah complex says: I am the God of this, my reality, and all other beings are as slaves to my mind. The persecution complex says: I am the victim of fate beyond my control and destiny beyond my comprehension, I exist only at the will of others. Yet these have become irrevocably intertwined. The christian capitalist is both greedy and jealous, and the muslim theocrat is both messianic and feels unduly persecuted. Therefore, the fanatics in the west and the fanatics in the middle east tear at one another's throats.

It is our liberty that gives fanatics what they want: guns and money.

Liberty, that is better known under the agreement of government as individual rights, is Light. It is light without shine nor heat. However, the fanatics, they cannot believe this! How can reason exist when we cannot know all? How can the "secret societies" be for our liberty as well? We must say to them: "the True Light is invisible. It is without fuel, and does not burn. It gives off neither heat nor glare." What does this mean?

Money gives people warmth. It allows them hearth and home, and lends the promise of a moderate, moral family life. Guns give people vengeance, the sudden flash of righteous vindication, the boiling blood of ultimate certainty. Both of these are the false fire, the lesser light: this fire burns, and this light blinds.

But they will not see this: we Understand the True Light of Wisdom, while they believe they possess the righteous judgment of God; we know what it means to truly know nothing, while they suffer from fear that they know too much.

So, how can we show those who call the sky "black" and those who call the sky "white" a clear sky, blue by day but starry by night? How can we say that, dark or light, the clear air is always the sky, and the sky always the same sky, clear or not, be it blue or any other colour, it is invisible, and yet can only be seen to be known, and not known by belief alone?

We have our liberty, our Light, our True Reasoning.

They have their guns and their money, their false beliefs.

Yet we MUST resolve this. It is our DUTY to heal.

So, what can we do?

-ben

It is wrong to associate emotions and faith.

Emotions such as ecstasy, terror, uplifting, depression, mood cycles, these are all intangible things. You can put a face on them, you can change them, but they are immortal and unchanging. They are, like the ideas, ideals that exist only within the realm of the mind. They are each as constant as a dream, but their presence is permanent our whole life. When the passion seizes us, we will change the whole course of our lives to fit a single emotion we may even only feel once.

Faith is also an intangible thing, but unlike the emotions it is thought to be "unwavering." It is a fixed point above the rest, from which the canopy of the heavens itself is suspended. It alters the emotions to place belief in the unknown, but we cannot say the two are one and the same. Emotions can be "good" or "bad," but faith, the conviction in one's own correct interpretation of something otherwise ineffable, is said to be as "good" as it is "true." The only "bad faith" is betrayal of trust, however, because of the odds governing human businesses, this is actually more often the case.

Therefore faith is fixed to "right" and "wrong" which are the "left" and "right" of reason, as it oversees the "ups" and "downs" of emotion. By the reason we assert what is "right" and what is "wrong" as separate and equal forces, moving the emotions in opposite directions, that is, what is "right" we say "should" lead the emotions "up," and what is "wrong," we say "should" lead the emotions "down." This "should" factor is where faith comes in.

Originally, faith was exercised as a tool of the Aryan blue-blooded, blue-skinned race of the Vedics in the Indus river valley to control the indigenous Hindi when they created the Caste system. The system established four classes: 1) the ruling elite, the leisure class. 2) doctors, workers, soldiers and priests. 3) slaves. 4) exiles, the ill, the elderly, etc. Each class believed it was bound there by "reincarnation" from a past life. In one life, if you were "evil" you would come back in the next life as a "slave" and so forth.

This was called the law of "karma" over cause and effect. According to the law of "karma" one's deeds or actions were accumulated throughout one's life both around them in their immediate aura, as well as stored up until the end of their life and at that time weighed as the worth of their soul. Now, "karma" was proven by use of selective evidence. Every time an uncertain situation resolved itself improbably it was considered "synchronicity" and associated with good "luck." Belief that "luck" could be controlled by understanding these "synchronicities," and that "karma" was the attempt to harness that understanding and put it to one's use, this led to the first philosophical foundations for religion.

Now, "faith" in the law of "karma" essentially guaranteed the daily functioning of the caste system, because each caste-member played their own role, expecting their obedience to be added up and equaled in the afterlife with rewards. If you were the "best" slave you could be, in the next life maybe you would come back free.

With the westward migration of the Kurgan tribe, believed to be the same as the Aryan Vedics, into the middle east, and then north through modern Turkey into Europe as far as Ireland, forming the Gaulic Celts, the philosophical school of the study of "karma" (the esoteric belief that ideals control reality, that mind is over matter, that our actions continue our existence after death and that we manifest our own destinies) migrated northward, from India through China to Tibet, as well as eastward into Japan, following the clockwise circulating migration routes of the peoples living around the Pacific ocean. This school of philosophy eventually became known as "Buddhism" after its greatest teacher, Siddhartha Guatama, the "wise one."

Buddhism, unlike Hinduism and its pantheon of anthropomorphised zoomorphs, is not rightly a religion. It is simply the philosophical study of "karma" which is the idea in the mind that belief in the unknown shapes one's fate and destiny. Overall, the study of "karma" asserts that "faith" is only necessary so long as you have not already achieved perfection, or "nirvana." Basically, if you know something is real, you do not need mere faith that is a fact. Even more basically: to transcend delusion is to break the bonds of all belief.

This school of thought had reached such a rarified state of understanding of its subject matter that it spread even as far as the Mediterranean via Sumeria and Egypt. It branched off into the Hyksos rulers over the Habiru tribe and through trade routes spread into the Attica peninsula of Greece. While the former used it as a means of controlling the minds of their constituent people, the latter explored how to mimic the findings of karmic processes in government. While the former lead to a rebellion against the class of priests by the philosophies of Gnosticism, the latter led to the Empire of ancient Rome. To suppress the Gnostic rebellion, Rome became the first borderless, entirely mental, Empire.

We call the rule of the Catholic Holy Roman Empire the "dark ages" because we say that during this time the "light" of Reason was almost snuffed out. But what is the "light" of reason? It is the right understanding of the law of "karma," that is, of mind over matter, of the ability in each individual for the will to manifest their own reality, of the ideal over the real, of knowledge from faith, or rather, gnostic nirvana as the end of all prayers and of the great work.

At this time in history there are two earths. On one earth, everyone already has the right understanding of how to control any outcome, there is already a global government, technology has become so advanced that the mind effects changes directly to the environment itself, and interstellar commerce has been established with sentient alien entities. Then there is our earth.

We know by gnostic revelation, that is, by the reasoning applied to understanding of the emotions, that the other earth must exist. However, because we choose to accept "karma" on faith alone, we exist in a "fallen" state where, despite knowing the glory and grace of our past to be held out for us at some point in the future, we cannot hope to escape our current geo-political, resource-economical, and spacio-centric situations.

When our emotions are "up" we experience control over luck, and thus we have the right understanding of karma: that the will alone manifests reality, and that by elevating this process from a subconscious to a conscious level, we can actually dematerialise ourselves altogether from this plane of material concerns. When our emotions are "low" we retain as memory and as expectation the experience of our emotions being "up," but we perceive this experience as a difference, or rather as a lacking, of its "ideal" conditions. These are the two worlds: one "good" one "bad."

In other words, we rightly understand "karma" to mean that: elevation of the reason leads to elevation of the emotions, and to elevation of the will; likewise, when we are weak-willed, feel "down" or our judgment is clouded, we know there is something missing, but we do not know how to achieve it for ourselves. In this case, we, wrongly, misunderstand "karma" to mean: the "work" of obedience to caste roll and the "belief" that this will earn one rewards in the after-life.

Now, here is the crux of all this:

"Right" karma: to Know True Reality and to act responsibly in accordance with that knowledge.

"Wrong" karma: to cling to belief that irresponsible actions will be forgiven due exclusively to strength of faith.

We Know, intuitively and deductively, that the world we live in is the "wrong" kind of place. It is the "wrong" earth. But we do not know how to fix it, how to heal it from its "fall." And so, we have "faith." Now, as long as we continue to believe that we need faith as a force in itself to change our reality from the current lesser base state to a more rarified ideal, we will continue to depend on what cripples us and what prevents us from realising our true ideal state.

"Faith" is not the answer.

Why?

Because it is wrong to associate emotions and faith.

People are currently associating their emotions with their faith all over the world. As long as this continues, so too does the mental Empire of Rome, the so-called "Universal" and so-called "Christian" Invisible Church. This empire establishes not only between the social ranks but within the very mind of the individual an unnatural hierarchy of behaviour and of belief. It draws power by exercising the authority to control that within us which it implants in us by our imitation of the actions of our elders. This belief is founded on "wrong" karma, that is, upon false premises.

The Belief of wrong karma is that one's own emotions can be elevated by placing trust in the ineffability of the unknown. This is false, and yet it is acted upon repeatedly. How can this be? Is it a flaw in the plan of God that so many of us so much of the time attempt to reverse our "fallen" feeling by intermixing how we feel with choosing to believe in fictions, which is the very root cause of what keeps us here? No. This Religious Guilt, this shame in each of us for "original sin" that is suckled upon by the clergy, corrupts the True Name of God by using it only as a method of mass mind-control. But the universe allows it, and thus it is considered necessary.

Placing hope in what is not real does not elevate one's emotional state by nature. This occurs exclusively unnaturally, as a product of the "nurture" or the Control of humankind. The belief demands as action that one hand hold down while the other pulls up. It says, to elevate your emotions you must cherish a lie, to move your emotions up toward higher states of consciousness you must feel secret shame. These are false premises. You cannot elevate your emotions by placing your faith in the lack of a definition, you cannot expand your own consciousness by praying to any other as a higher power. These are all obvious lies.

It is not "faith" that works "right" and that "should" elevate the emotions. It is Reason. It is Reason that determines Right from Wrong, and not Faith. Therefore it is the Mind of Reason in which exists the Wrong Idea of faith and the Ideal Right of its own Reason, and applies Understanding of the Law on the one hand to elevate the emotions, and on the other hand to rarify them, to move down around them, and to filter them through Karma as they ascend. This is the Law of Karma: Reason Controls Emotions, not Faith.

It is right to associate the emotions with Reason. Reason rightly weighs between one emotion and another, and bases resultant action on the one more likely than the other to lead the emotions to a higher state. It is reason that determines how it will lead what seems "wrong" in the present to what is "right" in the future. It is reason that oversees all Karma, and with Right Understanding of synchronicities manifests the Law of mind over matter. Faith can accomplish none of these things.

From doubt comes faith and from faith doubt. Doubt and faith are inter-dependent to the point that they are tantamount to being one and the same thing. Perpendicular to this is reason. From reason springs certainty. Certainty Is Neither Faith Nor Doubt.

Now, where faith and doubt are real things, Reason is an "ideal" thing. In other words, "reason" is "off-limits." This means that, under the Roman Religious Empire, you can only fantasise about "reason" but it is not something that is "natural" to our "fallen" condition of reality. You can Know Faith, and you can Know Doubt, but to Know anything More than these was considered literally impossible to accomplish using "only" the Mind of Man. Only God understands His Reasons for all things to be the way they are.

Doubt is the darkness and faith the light. But these are only the day and night side of the lesser "earth," the "fallen" reality. Above and beyond this there is only the true "light" of Ideal Reason.

It is belief that separates us from God. Belief Itself Is Our Fall From Grace.

So, when you look around whenever you are not asleep, all over the earth, you will be discouraged from Reason and encouraged to Believe in this "fallen" state of reality, this "false" earth, and accept only the False Dawn of Lucifer, that is, the mental empire of the Roman Catholic Christian Church. You will see other people acting on their Beliefs, and not in the name of True Reason, or for what is "good," and you will eventually be unable to stop yourself from doing the same whenever you have to deal with them.

You will buy into their false beliefs because you will be drawn into the magnetic fields of their emotions. They are very over-emotional about their beliefs, and you will be too intimidated by them to not respect them.

However, what is to respect about a belief? It is as intangible as an emotion, and only as ideal as dreams are transient. So why would we value belief as if it were, more than even only a means to an emotionally beneficial end, but that very end achieved, a positive emotion in itself? What substance does belief have when it differs from reality?

Belief is how one person controls the emotions of someone else.

Belief, or the "wrong" application or misunderstanding of the Law of Karma, the "left-hand" path, or the "downward" spiral, exists exclusively for one person to have utter autocratic authority over the mind of another.

-ben

[quote="Q"]believe in something you can't define. That's it. The intangible. It's all around you, everywhere, you can't control it and you certainly can't define it.[/quote]

That's presuming ignorance.

I choose to "believe" in something higher, that elevates me without having to simultaneously humble and humiliate me before it.

If you start with the basis for your "beliefs" (this is called Cartesian Method) the idea that the mind itself is infinite in its potential, then you at least begin with the possibility to allow as much new data into your world view as possible.

If you start with the basis for your "beliefs" the idea that you are stupid, or that you should feel jealousy over the intelligence of others, or greed for your own secrets, then you are inoculating yourself with false premises (false means) that will neither "cure" nor HEAL you, but will only rot away within you like a bitter cancer until they manifest within your soul itself the malignant tumour of "wrong" conclusions (false ends).

Now, look what I have obtained with the Cartesian Method: what is called the soul is the signature electromagnetic aura, the central chakras and the static field that collects particles of karma into its pattern, until they average out their motions into a higher-order form of invisible force. This spirit is made out of gravitic tachyons, travelling so fast they move "backwards" in time. The ideal shape of the aura to elevate it into pure spirit is the same shape as the particle of the tachyon itself. Of course, I know this shape like the back of my hand, but as common-sense folk "wisdom" dictates sternly, "you can lead a horse to water, but you can't make him drink." Likewise, I can show you an invisible reality, but ultimately it's up to you to decide whether to believe in it, or in some other purer "belief," untainted by even the trace of reality.

I have obtained so much more following the premise that I am infinitely intelligent IN POTENTIAL than hundreds of people who willfully "believe" in their own IGNORANCE.

Therefore, if you want to elevate someone, do not PRESUME they KNOW NOTHING. This is a shame. Instead, accept they are equally as intelligent in potential as you view yourself to be. If you say, "I am nothing," or rather affirm the belief in the natural necessity of having to say first of all "I know nothing," and then preach from this, it is like zero multiplied by infinity. It remains zero. On the other hand, affirm the infinite WITHIN both you and your interlocutor. Then you will multiply infinity by infinity, and come that much closer to Knowing the True Mind of God.

In other words, I can both define what is, for you, "unknown," and what you choose to define as being "intangible" and "indefinite," as well as, by demonstrating my theories to you, and thus by our learning together, I can control it as well. Think about it: aren't you only trying to control what you see in me as your own reflection when you assume I am "dumb like you"? So, if you presume to control me, to teach me, to preach humility to me, then you are as guilty of manipulating and trying to control me as I would be if I said, "I take control over the ineffable by manipulating you with my prior assumptions." The only difference is you assume all verifiable data is "pseudo-intelligence" and I believe you are infinitely capable of vast comprehension whether you want to admit it or not. Your means lead to an unending imbalance of power between individuals. Mine leads to mutually uplifting enlightenment. But as I have said, You Must Choose.

If you hate so much in others what you call "ego," then stop blaming yourself for being born a "blank slate" and realign your perspective with the infinite that is BOTH WITHIN AND BEYOND. This is what those of us who have already attained to some small shard of enlightenment describe as "Gnosis": dissolving the self into the True Light that is All. Ego-Death.

If you begin from false premises, you will always follow up with false conclusions. You should not come here saying "love your brother." You should not assume that I am not already doing so. If you do not give yourself the benefit of the doubt of having even only a splinter of intelligence, then you would not even be able to differentiate yourself as in anyway separate and distinct from the all-seeing and all-knowing consciousness of the Light. You will not seek enlightenment then. You will preach Christianity.

-ben

Never give out your password or credit card number in an instant message conversation. To help prevent infection by a computer virus or worm, never accept or open any file or link in an instant message until you verify its authenticity with the sender.

Corey says: (11:23:59 PM)

Do you want me to kill myself? Because thats what will happen if this song doesnt get finished benpadiiah says: (11:24:11 PM)

HAHAHHA

benpadiiah says: (11:24:13 PM)

omg

benpadiiah says: (11:24:17 PM)

I hadn't forgotten

benpadiiah says: (11:24:19 PM)

I swear.,

Corey says: (11:24:47 PM)
Ive been crying the past 3 days

benpadijah says: (11:24:56 PM)
that will help your voice.

Corey says: (11:25:16 PM)
You disgust me

benpadijah says: (11:25:35 PM)
corey...

benpadijah says: (11:25:38 PM)
I am your father.

Corey says: (11:25:54 PM)
EEWWWWWWWWWWWWWWWWWWWW

benpadijah says: (11:26:00 PM)
exactly.

benpadijah says: (11:26:02 PM)
LMAO!

Corey says: (11:26:34 PM)
I just felt a slight nerdy breeze

benpadijah says: (11:27:09 PM)
~sigh~

benpadijah says: (11:27:21 PM)
I can't do the song tonight

benpadijah says: (11:27:27 PM)
because it's like midnight here

benpadijah says: (11:27:32 PM)
but I will work on it tommoz

benpadijah says: (11:27:34 PM)
first thing

benpadijah says: (11:27:39 PM)
oops wait

benpadijah says: (11:27:54 PM)
first thing, right after trying to download the DavInci code

Corey says: (11:27:59 PM)
I dont know what to believe anymore...

benpadijah says: (11:28:07 PM)
it's a godless world, corey.

Corey says: (11:28:26 PM)
Did you read the book?

benpadiiah says: (11:28:31 PM)
huh?

Corey says: (11:28:38 PM)
Da Vinci

benpadiiah says: (11:28:38 PM)
ummmmmmmmm

benpadiiah says: (11:28:41 PM)
oh!

benpadiiah says: (11:28:42 PM)
no.

benpadiiah says: (11:28:44 PM)
hell no.

benpadiiah says: (11:28:47 PM)
fuck that.

Corey says: (11:28:52 PM)
Youre so American

benpadiiah says: (11:29:01 PM)
yes, well.

benpadiiah says: (11:29:12 PM)
I don't have the slightest clue what that means.

benpadiiah says: (11:29:17 PM)
but I do know this.

benpadiiah says: (11:29:39 PM)
I do not fly around on airplanes reading whatever fluff they sell in the duty free shoppe

Corey says: (11:30:13 PM)
But youll watch the movies based on the fluff they sell in the duty free shoppe?

benpadiiah says: (11:30:31 PM)
that's completely different.

benpadiiah says: (11:30:36 PM)
almost the exact opposite.

benpadiiah says: (11:30:45 PM)
think of it this way.

benpadiiah says: (11:30:49 PM)
say you're on an airplane

benpadijah says: (11:30:58 PM)
and you can watch the book or read the movie

benpadijah says: (11:31:02 PM)
the Da Vinci Code

benpadijah says: (11:31:11 PM)
but you don't know anything about it before hand

Corey says: (11:31:14 PM)
And then come the snakes...

benpadijah says: (11:31:18 PM)
OMG!!

benpadijah says: (11:31:26 PM)
wait one sec...

benpadijah says: (11:31:27 PM)
brb

benpadijah says: (11:32:18 PM)
ok back

benpadijah says: (11:32:26 PM)
so which would you rather be doing while you die?

benpadijah says: (11:32:33 PM)
reading a book or watching a movie?

Corey says: (11:33:15 PM)
Wait, are we talking about Slipknot?

Corey says: (11:33:18 PM)
cause they suck

benpadijah says: (11:33:25 PM)
oh, uh...

benpadijah says: (11:33:43 PM)
I don't know who "they" are to whom you're referring....

benpadijah says: (11:33:49 PM)
but I do know this...

benpadijah says: (11:33:57 PM)
 $2 + 2 = 5$ .

benpadijah says: (11:34:00 PM)
in Europe.

Corey says: (11:34:14 PM)
No WAI.

benpadijah says: (11:34:33 PM)
it's because they've got the metric system over there

benpadijah says: (11:34:39 PM)
and three pronged sockets.

benpadijah says: (11:35:34 PM)
which reminds me

benpadijah says: (11:35:46 PM)
do you prefer to eat with a spork?

benpadijah says: (11:35:56 PM)
or a foon.

Corey says: (11:36:30 PM)
I only eat with wooden instruments, and they do not make wooden sporks or foons

benpadijah says: (11:36:44 PM)
they do in China.

benpadijah says: (11:36:47 PM)
they're called

benpadijah says: (11:36:54 PM)
chop sticks.

Corey says: (11:37:06 PM)
Thats insane

benpadijah says: (11:37:09 PM)
you never knew that?

benpadijah says: (11:37:17 PM)
that's what the two chop sticks are called.

benpadijah says: (11:37:21 PM)
One is called a spork

benpadijah says: (11:37:24 PM)
and the other a foon

Corey says: (11:38:20 PM)
Ya know...the word Gullible isnt in the dictionary...

benpadijah says: (11:38:47 PM)
no shit?

benpadijah says: (11:38:58 PM)
I gotta tell my mom that sometimes.

Corey says: (11:39:05 PM)
Yea...

Corey says: (11:39:20 PM)
Also, would you like a Hurts Donut?

benpadiiah says: (11:39:34 PM)
naw, but how would you like a bear claw?

Corey says: (11:39:45 PM)
Certainly

benpadiiah says: (11:40:00 PM)
gnaws off wookie foot.

benpadiiah says: (11:40:06 PM)
hands to corey.

benpadiiah says: (11:40:19 PM)
monkey paw make wishy wishy.

Corey says: (11:40:29 PM)
I felt that breeze again, where the hell is it coming from

benpadiiah says: (11:40:40 PM)
probably left your fly down.

benpadiiah says: (11:40:55 PM)
you DO realise of course, I AM going to post all this on tlfc, don't you?

Corey says: (11:41:13 PM)
All of what?

Corey says: (11:41:22 PM)
Those naked pictures i sent you?

benpadiiah says: (11:41:33 PM)
I didn't get that.

benpadiiah says: (11:41:37 PM)
link?

Corey says: (11:41:48 PM)
www.lemonparty.org

Corey says: (11:41:53 PM)
Im on the right

benpadiiah says: (11:42:06 PM)
www.click.org.net.com.lemonparty

Corey says: (11:42:33 PM)
Corey sent you a handwritten message, but you cannot view handwritten messages with your version of MSN Messenger.

If you want to view handwriting in instant messages and add other new features, such as sharing backgrounds and display pictures, download the latest version of MSN Messenger from http://g.msn.com/5meen\_us/122

benpadiiah says: (11:42:43 PM)

Corey sent you a handwritten message, but you cannot view handwritten messages with your version of MSN Messenger.

benpadiiah says: (11:42:52 PM)

If you want to view handwriting in instant messages and add other new features, such as sharing backgrounds and display pictures, download the latest version of MSN Messenger from http://g.msn.com/5meen\_us/122

Corey says: (11:43:04 PM)

Fagget.

benpadiiah says: (11:43:19 PM)

don't talk at yer daddy dat way.

Corey says: (11:43:41 PM)

Im smarter than you

benpadiiah says: (11:43:52 PM)

perhaps so.

benpadiiah says: (11:44:00 PM)

but how can we say for sure?

Corey says: (11:44:45 PM)

Lets measure penises, and whose is smallest is the smartest

benpadiiah says: (11:45:06 PM)

microsoft versus macintosh style?

benpadiiah says: (11:45:14 PM)

hmm.

benpadiiah says: (11:45:27 PM)

I wonder why I would want to do something like that??

Corey says: (11:45:53 PM)

You know youll lose, thats why you wont do it...

benpadiiah says: (11:46:29 PM)

you cannot view penises with your version of MSN Messenger.

Corey says: (11:46:55 PM)

Jeez, what are you on Windows 95?

benpadiiah says: (11:47:14 PM)

I'm on a macintosh.

benpadiiah says: (11:47:17 PM)

BOOOYAH!

Corey says: (11:47:29 PM)
Oooh, burnt...

benpadijah says: (11:52:34 PM)
<http://forums.thelastfreecity.com/viewtopic.php?p=516286#516286>

benpadijah says: (11:52:35 PM)
brb

Corey says: (11:53:46 PM)
Snakes On A Plane is sooo 2 months ago, get with the times dad, or youll never be popular benpadijah says: (12:00:52 AM) back now

Corey says: (12:01:07 AM)
Thank god.

benpadijah says: (12:01:19 AM) what did I tell you son??

benpadijah says: (12:01:22 AM) SMACK!

benpadijah says: (12:01:28 AM)
it's a godless universe.

Corey says: (12:01:53 AM)
Not even Aztec gods?

benpadijah says: (12:02:08 AM)
there weren't really any Aztec Gods...

benpadijah says: (12:02:13 AM)
there were Olmec Gods

benpadijah says: (12:02:19 AM) who became the gods of the Mayans

Corey says: (12:02:27 AM)
Stop now.

benpadijah says: (12:02:27 AM)
and then the Aztecs conquered and ate them.

Corey says: (12:02:47 AM)
Fine, can i worship Olmes god then?

Corey says: (12:02:52 AM)
c

benpadijah says: (12:03:00 AM)

no, because they ...

benpadijah says: (12:03:05 AM)
look, just trust me.

benpadijah says: (12:03:11 AM)
there is no God but Allah

benpadijah says: (12:03:17 AM) and he was my co-pilot

benpadijah says: (12:03:22 AM)
we crashed into a mountain

benpadijah says: (12:03:25 AM) and I ate him.

benpadijah says: (12:03:28 AM) end of story.

Corey says: (12:03:40 AM)
Pfft, are you one of those crazy 5 percenters?

Corey says: (12:03:43 AM)
Racist!

benpadijah says: (12:03:49 AM)
you know about them?

benpadijah says: (12:03:50 AM) tight.

benpadijah says: (12:03:59 AM) hells yeah, I'm down like that.

Corey says: (12:04:05 AM)
Yea, i know stuff

benpadijah says: (12:04:11 AM) prove it.

benpadijah says: (12:04:40 AM)
pffft.

Corey says: (12:04:47 AM)
Jesus was really blow-up doll

benpadijah says: (12:04:50 AM) pfffffffffffffffftttttttttttt

benpadijah says: (12:04:55 AM) pfft

benpadijah says: (12:05:06 AM)

pay no attention to the sex act behind the confessional.

Corey says: (12:05:36 AM)
Racist!

benpadijah says: (12:05:57 AM)
I never said I Hate black people.

benpadijah says: (12:05:59 AM)
I said...

benpadijah says: (12:06:04 AM)
I ATE black people.

Corey says: (12:06:22 AM) Ohhh, thats completely different

benpadijah says: (12:06:43 AM)
I just dig dark meat is all.

benpadijah says: (12:06:47 AM)
in my mouth.

benpadijah says: (12:06:51 AM)
all juicy and tender.

benpadijah says: (12:06:57 AM)
tastes like....

benpadijah says: (12:07:05 AM) chicken.

benpadijah says: (12:09:59 AM)
BQWAK!

Corey says: (12:10:31 AM)
You are dumb

benpadijah says: (12:10:47 AM)
I am only repeating what Cypress Hill has told me.

Corey says: (12:11:26 AM)
You should listen to more Wu-Tang

benpadijah says: (12:11:44 AM)
I like Buddha Monk aight.

Corey says: (12:11:54 AM)
:-O

benpadijah says: (12:11:55 AM) but Old Dirty Bastard is so dead to me.

Corey says: (12:12:29 AM)

Pfft, Buddha Monk is just an affiliate of an affiliate

benpadijah says: (12:12:41 AM) that be true

benpadijah says: (12:12:50 AM) from a certain point of view

Corey says: (12:13:14 AM)
Too many people try to cash in on their success

Corey says: (12:13:29 AM)
Have you heard Liquid Swords by GZA?

benpadijah says: (12:13:38 AM)
no.

Corey says: (12:13:45 AM)
Ahhhhhhh

Corey says: (12:13:53 AM)
Best wu album ever

benpadijah says: (12:13:58 AM) nice.

Corey says: (12:14:06 AM)
Would you like a free download link?

benpadijah says: (12:14:41 AM) not right now....

benpadijah says: (12:14:47 AM) wait ten minutes or so.

"Twinning" is the act of transferal of consciousness out of one's personal karma to see through the eyes of another. I also mention it briefly in my writings as "body jumping." Here is my definition from the MPDR glossary:

[quote]body jumping: sensing through somebody else's body, or gross vessel[/quote]

And here is the relative definition of "body surfing."

[quote]body surfing: moving the sense perception through a series of gross vessel hosts [/quote]

Here is a section from page 200 of my MPDR on "body jumping":

[quote]Time can be stopped in death. In this state the spirit can perceive itself as apart from the body. It moves freely. The mind is just its shadow. The flowing stream of the font of consciousness is a well at the surface of an underground spring and the spirit is the radiation of ley lines out from it. Nietzsche said, "man is a rope stretched across the abyss." Many people have read Nietzsche, and have found themselves as such. Thus they constitute the fibrous network of the multiverse, a dimension accessible through the relaxed concentration of consciousness. The only thing hindering the common person from their day dreams is moral guilt for being able to have them. Otherwise we would all be able to freely admit to one another that we can see through each other's eyes. Our hearts beat with one another. We even breathe with one another. Rhythms flow through us and between one another and these are harmonic frequencies. Spirits are living karma that can move about between people in the form of consequence. Our phi/pi genetic coded DNA is manifest spirit. It is both matter and spirit, form and function, monkey and God.[/quote]

In the same way the muscles of the sclera that flex to contract the iris must relax to allow the pupil to dilate and allow more light to enter the eye, so, too, by relaxing our consciousness, by letting it spread out around us, and by thinning our tensions out across the vastest of surfaces imaginable, we can allow the Higher Harmonies of the Greater Light, the invisible bright darkness, to flow into and to strum through us. When we do this, we can ride these waves of frequency outward and away from our self-centre. We can allow the woes within us to wash away and be carried off, and then in the abundant vastness we can dissolve every and anything else we can imagine into the radiant gloom.

After we have done this, we see that there is no single necessary source for the self's "perception" of itself. Once we have significantly detached our Self from the moorings of its self-imposed self-definition, it is as easy to see the world from the perspective of another as it ever was from our own. We can actually see through the world, not only through others' eyes. To us, through all eyes interconnected into one, the material reality becomes as clear as glass.

The perception is of having a dual sensory and out-of-body experience without losing any of the body's possible functionalities.

At this point there is the usual stipulation for the purpose of plausible deniability: if not duly prepared a candidate attempting this process can suffer from the apprehension of schizophrenia nervosa, and become paranoid and delusional. Again, the caveat emptor is: know thyself. Before you can make an offering of yourself, you must come to fully know what it is by which you define yourself that you are offering. And this is, indeed, what it means to leave one's body: to make an offering of it. For if you are gone too long, you might not be able to return! However, these stipulations made, we must yet pass onto the data set under research.

What does it mean to see through the eyes of another? It is said, "the eyes are the windows to the soul." Thus, when we look deeply into someone's eyes, we are looking into their soul. Likewise, when we look out through our own eyes, it is our soul that is doing the looking. Now, if we look so deeply into the eyes of another that we can turn around and look back out their eyes from the perspective of their soul, then we will see that we are already looking out from inside something, the soul looking out from inside the body. We can look back and see ourselves, literally, reflected in the very surface of the eye of another.

What does it mean to say "all eyes connected into one"? This means that, as you learn to think outside of your body, to allow your mind to become deconditioned to requisit physicality altogether. You can see yourself from the perspective of otherwise apparently unmotivated and inanimate objects as easily as you can see yourself from the perspective of the soul of another by "looking through their eyes." You see the reflection of yourself from all things as being as transient and as fading as a reflection in glass. Finally, even this fades to grayness and disappears and then we say that "material reality becomes as clear as glass."

This is the most important step toward Right Knowledge, Right Understanding, and Right Wisdom: first know thyself, then lose thyself into the all-knowing nothingness. From there, you will have access to all.

-ben

The second step of "twinning" (that is, going "two" deep), is learning how to use slight urge to stimulate momentum by learning how to displace your self-centre and let another "see through your own eyes."

To displace one's sense of self from the centre of one's perception, you must let your mind wander. As it drifts off, the mind will spread out thinner and thin until the centre is nowhere more so than anywhere at all. After doing this, you will be able to look back and see yourself as if from the perspective of somewhere far outside your own body.

By doing this around another, or others, and by doing it specifically from the point of view of one, or more, of them, this will draw them in toward your own point of view. To do this, however, is a two step process. You must first displace your own mind, or sense of self, into the location of their sense of self-centre. This means "going inside their head."

But that is only the first step. The second step is to then suddenly look back at your self from their point of view. You must snap your consciousness back into focus and centre it upon your sense of self. This is known as "catching their eye." When the other person's eye meets yours, then you will know what they were thinking, and then you will know what they will think of you, and then you will know what they think about otherwise, and then you will know their "world-view."

This works because by thinning yourself out you create a vacuum. This draws your own point of view out, and allows the point of view of one or more others in. Then by snapping back into self you implode that vacuum. If you have "twinned" with one or more others, this will draw their point of view out, and allow yours to "step in."

Once you have entered the mind of another, you may speak for them. And once they let you speak for them, they may act for you. Once they act for you, they will even be willing to die for you. If they are willing to die, then they would also be willing to kill. Once they are willing to do anything on your behalf, then you are considered "twinned" with them.

In my next section I will briefly discuss the third "step" to "twinning," the most complicated but last, and therefore easiest or most relieving step.

-ben

The third step of twinning involves the "law of three."

According to the "law of three," there are three physical "dimensions" (or six directions: up, down, right, left, front, back). Under the law of three there are, therefore, patterns of three in nature, such as past, present, future creating spirals over time. Therefore, the perceptions we have of these patterns will also obey the "law of three" (or six fundamental questions of reasoning: who, what, when, where, why and how).

I describe more about the six fundamental questions of reasoning in my book the FSOM, so I will not go into them in greater detail here. I will talk, instead, more about the "law of three." Here are ten examples of "triplicities" (objects obeying the "law" of three), from some natural sciences, as listed in my TOD.

[quote]

Thelemic: light love life

Hindu: sat (being) chit (mind) ananda (bliss)

Hellenic Hebrew: tetragrammaton primamaton anaphaxaton

Egyptian: kha ka/ba akh

Hebrew: nefesh ruach neschema

Buddhist: boar cock snake

Hindu Gunas: tamas (stability) rajas (restlessness) satvas (orderliness) alchemical: salt sulphur mercury magical: chain scourge dagger masonic: jubela jubelo jubelum [/quote]

Here is how the "law" of three relates to the rule of fours, such as the four elements, or the three spatial directions over time.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/4threes.jpg>[/img]

According to the Zohar, for example, there are four kabbalistic "worlds." According to the reckoning of the elders in the Zohar, there must therefore be a "law" of three in each of the four "worlds." And so they established judgment, balance, a pendulum and three supernals, three for each of the four, and thus, there were ten below three in one, and twelve altogether. This was pleasing to the elders because they saw that the "three in one" of the supernal tenth was the Right Knowledge of the Pythagorean Triangle, whose ratio of lengths between its three points is 3:4:5, and whose calculation is  $a^2+b^2=c^2$ .

This is a somewhat more scientific depiction of the essential topologies associated with the relative force-carrying particles for the four elemental forces of our local universe:
http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/img534\_copy.jpg More about this can be found on my site here: http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/pages/equations.html#RdS

This was all according to the reasoning of the elders, that is the Safeds of Spain, but it was based on observations made by their ancestors, that is, to us, the ancients. Just as we now study their Zohar, the Sefardic Septamanians studied the apocryphal scriptures of the Hermetic Pythagoreans. So, Moses DeLeon came to the conclusion that the "law of three" applied to the "four worlds" because the Pythagorean theorem could be applied to all of nature.

However, the four worlds themselves extend beyond only our local universe, which is simply the fourth comprised of nine subtended to the tenth comprised of three. This lowest, or material world, (Atzilut in the above diagram) was called Malkuth and was comprised of the four-elements as a shadow of the three dimensions of space and the fourth of linear time.

This was hinted at in the knowledge of the ancients, who tell us that the law of seven derives from the law of three applied to the four worlds no less than does the formation of the twelve. The four worlds of Hebrew Kabbalah and the seven worlds of Hellenic Greek Hermeticism were combined as the seven planets and the twelve houses of the zodiac even long before the time of the ancients, the predecessors of our own elders in keeping with this tradition. This is because  $3+4=7$  just as does  $3 \times 4=12$ .

Therefore, we cannot necessarily say that the "law of three" does indeed apply to itself to form the nine to which we can subtend the tenth of three, and thus by which form the three plus one of the four. We cannot, therefore, even determine the difference between the five physical sense and the sixth sense of the psyche if we cannot distinguish the difference between the six psychic questions and the six physical directions.

So, what does this all have to do with "twinning"? Has it not been said that, in order to "self-deuplicate" we must go "three deep"? What, then is the third step of the process of self-duplication? It is simply realising for yourself, as if in an epiphany from a point of view above, that you are "twinning" with another, or with the ideology of a group. To realise this, you must remember to "count yourself." When you "look through the eyes of another" you see through two pairs of lenses. Do not forget to count that which is doing the "looking" and "seeing" itself.

Now, the law of three, in itself, is quite simple. I have demonstrated how we cannot necessarily COMPOUND the law of three. That would be radioactive. That would be a pyramid scheme. No, we cannot multiply or double the "law" of three in itself. We cannot COMPOUND it, we cannot SQUARE it, we cannot DUPLICATE the law itself. The law of three is the law of three in itself alone. There is no law of four, no law of ten, no law of twelve, thirty-six, sixty-four or seventy-two for the law of three. There is only the law of the three for the law of three. From this third point of view, there is only that which is beneath and within itself. There is only the law of three in itself.

There is something interesting about the law of three: all the attributes so far discussed can be applied to triangles. The triangle itself is inherently six: three angles and three lengths. This holds true even on a curved surface, such as a sphere, where the angles can each be 90 degrees (forming 1/4 of the hemisphere). Here we see the 3 and the 4 of the ancients again, resembling the  $(3+2) \times (4+2) = 3 \times (3 \times 4)$  of the five by six zodiacal dekans.

Here are the four basic fundamental types of triangles:

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/tritypes.jpg[/img]

The equilateral triangle's base angle is 60 degrees. The right triangle's non-right angles are both 45 degrees. The Pythagorean triangle's base angle is 30 degrees. The base angle of the isosceles triangle is twenty.

Here are some special cases of these types of triangles where certain angles and certain lengths combine to form certain theorems.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/specialcases.jpg[/img]

Now, let's consider the special cases whose equations are really restatements of one another, or rather, are the same.

Even though the ratios of lengths and angles are drastically different, we see equation H also applies to diagram E, that equation E also applies to diagram B, that equation I also applies to diagram H and vice versa, that the equation E holds true for the special case (3,3,9) of diagram G, etc. Let's consider a couple "special cases" in particular: diagrams A and F. We can see that equations A and F are interchangeable, and that the equation for A is actually the same as  $a^2 + b^2 = c^2$ , the Pythagorean theorem describing the base thirty Pythagorean triangle. Also notice the equations H and I are interchangeable between the diagrams H and I, and are a means of "factoring out" the squares of the Pythagorean theorem.

All of these being triangles, and all applying to the "law of three" all these different ratios represent different patterns of harmonic vibrational frequencies that occur not only within and through the realm of the mind (brain-waves) but also permeate and fill in the realm of matter. In other words, the "third step" of twinning involves mind over matter. The first step is telepathy. The second step mind-control. The third step is telekinesis. I'll come back to that in a moment.

Because all of these triangles have three angles and three lengths, any pair of three attributes can be assigned to any of these diagrams at once. For example: consider the special cases H and I. Now apply Kthr to the great angle, Chkmh to the median angle, and Bnh to the least angle. Then define the seven subtended sefirot as length of the hypotenuse seven. Between Bnh and Kthr there are four (YHVV), but between Chkmh and Kthr there are only three (YHV). Again, three plus four is seven and three times four is twelve.

Let's consider two special cases more. Many of you are familiar with the saying "to square the circle" or "square circles." This saying dates back to antiquity, and the measurements of Pythagoras and his contemporary geometres. Although little of this material is available to us nowadays, more of it was available to the elders before its confiscation or destruction in the interim since then. Consider this "alchemical" depiction of the "philosopher's stone" as a geomtric depiction of the "squared circle."

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/thestone.jpg>[/img]

The saying "to square the circle" actually dates back to the ancient reckoning of pi as a ratio between a circles circumference and its area. Pi, estimated by the ancients as approximately 22/7, is determined by comparing the radius of a circle and the square of the transcendental number, Pi. To determine the area of the circle relative to the area of the square, you have to "square the circle." This is done, basically, like the following:

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/MISC\_diagrams/072.jpg[/img]

You can see many of the "special cases" of triangles involved in this diagram. This diagram basically depicts three areas: A) the greater square, B) the lesser square, C) the area is the same for both the middle square and the circle. Further examination of the difference in degrees yields the origin for the difference between the 360 degree circle and the 365.25 day year.

The primary components of the "squared circle" are the 3,4,5 Pythagorean triangle and the 45/45/90 degree right triangle. Although neither of these are "special" in this case, nonetheless we can see many, now familiar, triangles hidden within.

Of course, it is also common knowledge that if you graph the squares formed by these two types of triangle: the 3,4,5 Pythagorean and the 45/45/90 degree equilateral against one another, then you will form the phi/pi spiral. However more on this matter need not be said now.

So, after all this, what does it mean to "self-duplicate" or to "twin"? It means to go "three deep." This means that, through learning to see through another (telepathy), to speak through another (mind-control), and finally by applying (teleknises) the law of threes (triangles) to physical objects (vibrational ratios) we can learn mind over matter.

-ben

The sudden "snap" into focus of looking back at yourself from the point of view of "through another's eyes," when your consciousness implodes back in on itself, drawing all others wills into your own, is simply enough expressed in what is called the "distance problem." This relates to the idea that an object, moving at a fixed rate, will take less time to go the length of the hypotenuse than "around the legs." In other words, whatever distance the legs, the hypotenuse will be shorter than them both combined. This is what I call elsewhere "inversion," or "making the greatest common factor the least common denominator." To get from your self-centre out of your karma is to be uplifted and to see down as though from above. To look down and to locate someone, or thing, is to move the essence downward into it, to "pick their brains." These are going around the two legs. You have to go around the two legs to locate the target. However, to acquire dead lock, you traverse the hypotneuse back to your sense of self-awareness. You can use this method to draw people inwards toward you, or to repel people away from around you. Now, tell me, if you lift your arm, and yet are not psychic, would you also say you can move strangers mentally but are not telekinetic? You can move the mind of another as easily as you lift your arm, and they will move mountains at your will. This is the law of "inversion," or "the law of three."

Inversion has the power to create random people, and to cause to come across our path chance realities co-created by matter and our mind. These people are the Goyim (plural of Golem), and the practise of causing change to occur in alignment with one's will is the art of magick and the craft of manifestation.

Inversion, or the transection of the hypotenuse, causes manifestation. Manifestation, or rather, Manvantara - the illusion of all that which is around us, is the co-creation of reality by mind over matter. Manifestation can occur instantaneously or it can take a very long time. Instantaneous manifestation is called "instant karma," and very long duration manifestation is called "life-debt." Instant karma relates to the microscopic cosmos, or microcosm, and life-debt relates to the telescopic cosmos, or macrocosm. Most of our experiences involving the "law" of karma (otherwise known as irony) are somewhere in between these apex and nadir points.

To draw someone inward, we focus outward, and then turn our attention in upon ourselves from their point of view. To repel someone, we do the opposite. These are simple rules that govern all natural creation.

-ben

The Prieurie De Zion, or Priory (Catholic Order) of Zion, is much more real historically, and much more commonly known, as the Knights Templar.

The Knights Templar were founded by nine monastic knights, and these nine knights comprised the Catholic Order of Cîteaux, known for its philosophy of "zionism."

These nine knights were:

1) Hugh de Payens, Legate of the Holy See, and Archbishop of Lyons, who gave holy sanction to the formation of the Order of six original members.

2) St. Robert, son of the noble Thierry and Ermengarde of Champagne, Abbot of Molesme, a monastery dependent on Cluny. Appalled by the laxity into which the Order of Cluny had fallen, he endeavoured to effect reforms in the monasteries of Saint-Pierre-de-la-Celle, Saint-Michel of Tonnerre, and finally in that of Molesme.

3) Raynald, Viscount of Beaune, ceded to the number of twenty-one the company retired to the solitude of Cîteaux (in the Diocese of Chalons).

4) Gauthier, bishop of the diocese.

5) the prior, Alberic, was elected to replace St. Robert at Cîteaux. St. Alberic died in 1109.

6 & 7) John and Ilbode, two monks sent as delegates to Pascal II (who had just succeeded Urban II) to beg him to take the church of Cîteaux under the protection of the Apostolic See.

8) Pascal II declared that he took under his immediate protection the abbey and the religious, of Cîteaux, saving their allegiance to the Church of Chalons.

9) Stephen Harding, an Englishman by birth, well versed in sacred and profane science, who had been one of the first promoters of the project to leave Molesme.

[quote="in the Catholic Encyclopedia, New Advent dot org"]
Cistercians

I. THE FORMATION (1098-1134)

On the feast of St. Benedict (21 March), 1098, which fell that year on Palm Sunday, they commenced to build the "New Monastery", as it is called in the "Exordium sacri Ordinis Cisterciensis". This, therefore, was the birthday of the Order of Cîteaux. Thus was the "New Monastery" canonically erected into an abbey. By Apostolic Letters, dated at Troja in Campania, 18 April, 1100, Pascal II declared that he took under his immediate protection the abbey and the religious, of Cîteaux, saving their allegiance to the Church of Chalons. Dating from this day, Alberic and his religious established at Cîteaux the exact observance of the Rule of St. Benedict, substituted the white habit for the black which the Benedictines wore, and, the better to observe the rule in regard to the Divine Office day and night, associated with themselves lay brothers, to be chiefly occupied with the manual labours and material affairs of the order. These lay brothers, or conversi, though they were not monks, were to be treated during life and after death just like the monks themselves. St. Robert, his two immediate successors, and their companions had but one object in view: a reaction against the laxity of Cluny and of other monasteries -- to resume manual labour, to adopt a more severe regimen, and to restore in monastic churches and church ceremonies the gravity and simplicity proper to the monastic profession. They never thought of founding a new order, and yet from Cîteaux were to go forth, in course of time, colonies of monks who should found other monasteries destined to become other Cîteaux, and thus create an order distinct from that of Cluny. [/quote]

<http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/03780c.htm>

[quote="in the Catholic Encyclopedia, New Advent dot org"]

The Knights Templars

(1) THEIR HUMBLE BEGINNING

In 1118, during the reign of Baldwin II, Hugues de Payens, a knight of Champagne, and eight companions bound themselves by a perpetual vow, taken in the presence of the Patriarch of Jerusalem, to defend the Christian kingdom. Baldwin accepted their services and assigned them a portion of his palace, adjoining the temple of the city; hence their title "pauvres chevaliers du temple" (Poor Knights of the Temple). Poor indeed they were, being reduced to living on alms, and, so long as they were only nine, they were hardly prepared to render important services, unless it were as escorts to the pilgrims on their way from Jerusalem to the banks of the Jordan, then frequented as a place of devotion.

The Templars had as yet neither distinctive habit nor rule. Hugues de Payens journeyed to the West to seek the approbation of the Church and to obtain recruits. At the Council of Troyes (1128), at which he assisted and at which St. Bernard was the leading spirit, the Knights Templars adopted the Rule of St. Benedict, as recently reformed by the Cistercians. They accepted not only the three perpetual vows, besides the crusader's vow, but also the austere rules concerning the chapel, the refectory, and the dormitory. They also adopted the white habit of the Cistercians, adding to it a red cross. [/quote]

<http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/14493a.htm>

[quote="in the Catholic Encyclopedia, New Advent dot org"]

Crusades

I. ORIGIN OF THE CRUSADES

Godfrey of Bouillon died at Jerusalem 18 July, 1100. His brother and successor, Baldwin of Edessa, was crowned King of Jerusalem in the Basilica of Bethlehem, 25 December, 1100. ... The authority of the Church also helped to limit the power of the king; the four metropolitan sees of Tyre, Cæsarea, Bessan, and Petra were subject to the Patriarch of Jerusalem, similarly seven suffragan sees and a great many abbeys, among them Mount Sion, Mount Olivet, the Temple, Josaphat, and the Holy Sepulchre. ... From a military point of view all vassals owed the king unlimited service as to time, though he was obliged to compensate them, but to fill the ranks of the army it was necessary to enroll natives who received a life annuity (fief de soudée). In this way was recruited the light cavalry of the "Turcoples", armed in Saracenic style. Altogether these forces barely exceeded 20,000 men, and yet the powerful vassals who commanded them were almost independent of the king. So it was that the great need of regular troops for the defence of the Christian dominions brought about the creation of a unique institution, the religious orders of knighthood, viz.: the Hospitallers, who at first did duty in the Hospital of St. John founded by the aforesaid merchants of Amalfi, and were then organized into a militia by Gérard du Puy that they might fight the Saracens (1113); and the Templars, nine of whom in 1118 gathered around Hugues de Payens and received the Rule of St. Bernard.[/quote]

-source: <http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/04543c.htm#l>

[quote="in the Catholic Encyclopedia, New Advent dot org"]Albigenses

A neo-Manichæan sect that flourished in southern France in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. The name Albigenses, given them by the Council of Tours (1163) prevailed towards the end of the twelfth century and was for a long time applied to all the heretics of the south of France. They were also called Catharists (katharos, pure), though in reality they were only a branch of the Catharistic movement.

II. ORIGIN AND HISTORY

In France, where they were probably introduced by a woman from Italy, the Neo-Manichæan doctrines were secretly diffused for several years before they appeared, almost simultaneously, near Toulouse and at the Synod of Orléans (1022). Those who proposed them were even made to suffer the extreme penalty of death. The Council of Arras (1025), Charroux, Dep. of Vienne (c. 1028), and of Reims (1049) had to deal with the heresy. At that of Beauvais (1114) the case of Neo-Manichæans in the Diocese of Soissons was brought up, but was referred to the council shortly to be held in the latter city. Petrobrusianism now familiarized the South with some of the tenets of the Albigenses. Its condemnation by the Council of Toulouse (1119) did not prevent the evil from spreading. Pope Eugene III (1145-53) sent a legate, Cardinal Alberic of Ostia, to Languedoc (1145), and St. Bernard seconded the legate's efforts. But their preaching produced no lasting effect. The Council of Reims (1148) excommunicated the protectors "of the heretics of Gascony and Provence." That of Tours (1163) decreed that the Albigenses should be imprisoned and their property confiscated. A religious disputation was held (1165) at Lombez, with the usual unsatisfactory result of such conferences. Two years later, the Albigenses held a general council at Toulouse, their chief centre of activity. The Cardinal-Legate Peter made another attempt at peaceful settlement (1178), but he was received with derision. The Third General Council of the Lateran (1179) renewed the previous severe measures and issued a summons to use force against the heretics, who were plundering and devastating Albi, Toulouse, and the vicinity. At the death (1194) of the Catholic Count of Toulouse, Raymond V, his succession fell to Raymond VI (1194-1222) who favoured the heresy. With the accession of Innocent III (1198) the work of conversion and repression was taken up vigorously. In 1205-6 three events augured well for the success of the efforts made in that direction. Raymond VI, in face of the threatening military operations urged by Innocent against him, promised under oath to banish the dissidents from his dominions. The monk Fulco of Marseilles, formerly a troubadour, now became Archbishop of Toulouse (1205-31). Two Spaniards, Diego, Bishop of Osma and his companion, Dominic Guzman (St. Dominic), returning from Rome, visited the papal legates at Montpellier. By their advice, the excessive outward splendour of Catholic preachers, which offended the heretics, was replaced by apostolical austerity. Religious disputations were renewed. St. Dominic, perceiving the great advantages derived by his opponents from the cooperation of women, founded (1206) at Pouille near Carcassonne a religious congregation for women, whose object was the education of the poorer girls of the nobility. Not long after this he laid the foundation of the Dominican Order. Innocent III, in view of the immense spread of the heresy, which infected over 1000 cities or towns, called (1207) upon the King of France, as Suzerain of the County of Toulouse, to use force. He renewed his appeal on receiving news of the assassination of his legate, Peter of Castelnau, a Cistercian monk (1208), which judging by appearances, he attributed to Raymond VI. Numerous barons of northern France, Germany, and Belgium joined the crusade, and papal legates were put at the head of the expedition, Arnold, Abbot of Citeaux, and two bishops. Raymond VI, still under the ban of excommunication pronounced against him by Peter of Castelnau, now offered to submit, was reconciled with the Church, and took the field against his former friends. Roger, Viscount of Béziers, was first attacked, and his principal fortresses, Béziers and Carcassonne, were taken (1209). The monstrous words: "Slay all; God will know His own," alleged to have been uttered at the capture of Béziers, by the papal legate.[/quote]

-source: <http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/01267e.htm>

all of this is discussed in greater deal than I can go into here by Laurence Gardner on pages 209 - 211 of his book Bloodline of the Holy Grail. These pages conclude with the enigmatic footnote:

[quote="Laurence Gardner"]

The original Order of Sion was established so that eligible Muslims, Jews and others could be allied to the Christian Order that became the Knights Templars.[/quote]

After reading pages 209 to 211, you will understand what Gardner is referring to by "others," that is, the Desposyni, the descendents of the family of Jesus Christ. The nine French knights who were the founding members of the original Knights Templar were all comtes (counts) of Desposyni descent through the Merovingian bloodlines of France.

-ben

Consider the following chart:

On the left we have the column of sequential integers. Let this column represent, say, time, or, say, initial members of an organisation. The column on the right represents the rate of expansion over time, or per each different original group member. The left column reads up and down, and the right column reads side to side. Here is how to read them: begin with square one, expansion rate two. Next in sequence would be to start with two, and measure the expansion rate four, etc. The chart goes up to integer five, rate of expansion thirty two, but of course you can see how applying this method works.

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/base2.jpg[/img]

The three middle columns show some relationships we can draw across the board between sequential integers and expansion rates.  $1+1=2$ ,  $2+2=4$  and  $3+3=6$  represent the initial integers and expansion rates. The difference between each initial integer and the next across is the corresponding row on the left column. The difference between each integer sum and the next across corresponds to the expansion rate column on the right.

Basically to read across a row, you count the difference between the sums by the factor to the right. Thus:  $(2,4,6)=2$ ;  $(32,64,96)=32$ . The expansion rate in the right column is the same as that for the  $1+1=2$  column because this entire table represents only multiples of two.  $1+1=2$  and  $2+2=4$  establish the base two system as a root function. The rest of the chart is based on multiplying each sum by two.

So, in short, this chart represents the corner-stone of the Base-Two system. There are similar charts that can be constructed for all the multiples, and it will show that, for each multiplicative step by its base number system (3,4,5,6... etc.) it will increase in the same fashion: As the sequence of integers expands "arithmetically," the column on the right, the expansion rate, will increase "exponentially."

More about squaring the circle:

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/MISC\_diagrams/basic.jpg[/img]

Here is the crux of the Pythagorean Triangle, conjoined at the measurement of the "Golden Mean" with a right equilateral triangle.

The non-right angle measures are 45/45 and 30/60, such that between the "upper" and "lower" triangles there is a measure of fifteen degrees difference.

In the above diagram all the units numbered "one" are the same measure.

There are two ways to apply the "Golden Mean" of the Pythagorean triangle to determining the area of a circle. One is to measure the radius of the circle as the base, longer, horizontal leg of the triangle. The other is to measure the radius of the circle as the hypotenuse of the Pythagorean triangle. Although these are both essentially the same model, you can see that, applying the former method (radius=base leg) to the basic theorem, you will be measuring a smaller amount of space than if you measure by applying the latter method (radius=hypotenuse).

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/MISC\_diagrams/small.jpg[/img]

Therefore notice that the use of the "Golden Ratio" harmonic number sequence of 3:4:5 yields base 6,7,8 square circle areas.

The second type of "Golden Ratio" application of the Pythagorean triangle has already been shown (at the end of my last post, above). It is the same as the one I now give here (below) in that the radius is five in both.

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/MISC\_diagrams/large.jpg[/img]

Here we can see that, by measuring the circle's radius as the hypotenuse of the "Golden Ratio" Pythagorean triangle, we can yield the larger areas of the base 8,10,12 squared circles.

Therefore, these are the two ways to yield a "square circle" from applying the Pythagorean triangle with its "Golden Ratio" of 3:4:5 to split the fifteen degree angle difference between 45/45 fractal expansion (base twelve hypotenuse) and the 30/60 gnomonic expansion (base ten hypotenuse).

These lengths for the hypotenuse/radius of the square/circle are derived by continuing to follow the gnomonic and fractal expansion rates up to base 12,13,16 areas.

Here are all the fundamental measures for the Pythagorean square/circle formula for any figure up to circle radius eight.

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/MISC\_diagrams/complete.jpg[/img]

All of this is quite a bit more useful than you might at first think of it. Consider that, using this method, you can find the area of the earth. Consider the following chart, incorporating actual distances and degrees relative to our little blue jewel.

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/MISC\_diagrams/terrafirma.jpg[/img]

The red line indicates the tilt of earth's rotational axis from perpendicularity to the ecliptic plane of the rest of the objects in our solar system. The green line represents the precession of the gravitational, geographical pole. The blue lines represent the current variable offset, 11.5 degrees, between the geographic and the electromagnetic poles.

-ben

I think we should also discuss the relative value or worth of symbols.

I think we can all agree that some symbols are more appealing even at first glance to certain and such people as already have had some sort of experience in learning the meaning of the object of the symbol. For example if I showed you Planck's second constant, you would say, "Saturn." You apprehend the object that the symbol is referring to, and you have some discourse with and comprehension of that object in itself. This is all the ontology of symbology, that is, it's being-in-itself. This definitely applies to small symbols, such as one-step referential loop patterns, so-called Moebius strips. A Moebius strip has one continuous surface. It usually has only one twist or loop in it, for example, if it is flat it has one loop or one twist; if it is three edged, it will have three surfaces, if it is four edged, then four surfaces, and so on. Here is an example of a three-fold Moebius strip, the so-called Penrose "Impossible" Trinagle:

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/Penrose-triangle.gif>[/img]

This type of symbol is self-defining, it "auto-correlates" so to speak. You see there are six corners, an edge between two opposite an interior angle. You see there are nine total angles, six around three. You see that these each obey the rules of defining a surface between them: each has three axes, and can thus define a plane by connecting a continuous line around in each of the six directions within the three spatial dimensions. However, this surface is called "impossible." Why is this? If each surface obeys the laws of three-space, then outside the dimension of time, this would be a perfect three dimensional triangle. However it is a Moebius strip because it is only perceivable in three space through an optical illusion: each Golden Ratio (1:2:3) porportioned angle between the three planes appears, by forced perspective, to be a nintey degree angle. The effect is the vertigonous perception of false three-dimensionality, hence the shape is deemed "impossible."

But here is a secret, and from it further mystery:

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/numbertheory.jpg>/img]

Above is the Penrose triangle extrapolated into its three "7" shaped planes.
Below is the Buddhist triskele extrapolated into its three "6" shaped planes.

All of this is basically the birth-process for symbols in general: when we create a symbol, we sit down, and we draw a line, or an arc, and we then move this base unit all around the shape in our minds, searching out the patterns and seeking secret symmetries. When we find them, we mark them off relative to one another. So we have: right understanding of the objects of these symbols, and from this, we also have: right knowledge of the symbols themselves. Here is a basic depiction of this process:

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/yinyang.jpg>[/img]

In this depiction of the motion of symbolic change, we see that the "sun" Yin and the "moon" Yang "pass through" each other as they rotate around the "upper" nadir, which in turn becomes the "lower" apex. Basically this symbolises the process of change as being a factor of our perception. Or, in other words, that our cognition of referential objects in reality expands as we accumulate new experiences over time.

Now, as I have said, this is all based on a simple one, two or three "twist" Moebius strip. If a Moebius strip has two sides, to make them one, add a "twist." If a Moebius strip has three sides, to make them one, add three "twists." This model itself represents the way in which our thoughts are led around in an impossible loop (the six fundamental questions of reasoning: who, what, when, where, why and how). Once our thoughts have come around again full circle, we understand the thing "inside out," and "front to back." We see both sides of the issue, and we identify the object being referred to from all angles simultaneously. This flattens the object into a pattern, such as a Moebius strip. When we create a new pattern by following the Moebius strip of our consciousness down a different harmonic sequential progression, such as the fibonacci sequence, then we literally create an electrical, shimmering and skeletal, reflection of the symbolic pattern in our mind. If we expand and contract the Moebius strip of our consciousness by following different angles of orientation between symbols we accumulate the recognition of, these geometrical echoes inside our brains grow more complex, and exercise more of your neurons at once. As this is done several things happen, but first of all endorphins are released, and endorphins feel good. But what is more important is that this is how we accomplish Order Ab Chao: order from chaos comes through pattern recognition between symbolic referentials.

In the following diagram we see two symbol/number systems: the base seven planets and the base twelve zodiac. Attached are some "Enochian" (John Dee) attributes, the seven "governors" and the twelve "banners," etc. from two works on "Golden Dawn" Enochian "magick," one by Zalewski and the other by Tyson. Both are rendered in the "unicursal" style popularised by Crowley with the "unicursal" hexagram. First, here is the unicursal hexagram:

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/thelemic.gif>[/img] and now here is the combination of the two "unicursal" seven "planets" (days) and twelve "signs" (tribes):

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/12tribes7days.jpg>[/img]

Notice that the five-pointed pentacle, representing humanity, is hidden in the center.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/protoVitrु.jpg>[/img]

The primary component of the above arrangement, however, is not the "hidden" man in the middle, but the "rising up" of the pyramid from between Mars and Aries, the peaks of the seventh and the twelfth upper most stellagrams, respectively.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/yantra.gif>[/img]

Here is the Sri-Yantra, rotated about itself in three dimensions, to show its proper geometrical relationships.

-ben

Something must have been happening around 1680,1 for there to have been caused the schism between the Plantard-line and the Saint-Claire -line. The second Order is supposed to have been begun in 1681, under its supposed founder, Jean-Tim Negri d'Albes, first official "Grand Master" of the Second Order.

[quote]

1. Jean-Tim Negri d'Albes (1681)

[/quote]

We also know, if we suppose both lists to be accurate from their record keepers' point of view, at the same time this Second Order was being founded, the original Order of Zion continued on with its uninterrupted flow connecting its founder Jean de Gisors, 1188, to the then current descendent Pierre Plantard, 1984.

[quote]

18. Robert Boyle (1654-1691)

[/quote]

We can compare the records for both Orders at the time of the apparent schism, however in this case we find there are far more records for the contemporary Plantard line Grand Master than for the first "Grand Master" of the Saint-Claire line. Here, for example, is a brief description of what was going on in the life of Robert Boyle, supposed then Head of the Priory of Zion, around the time the schism within the Priory is supposed to have occurred, leading to the split between the Plantard and the Saint-Claire lists.

[quote="wiki"]ROBERT BOYLE

In 1663 the Invisible College became the Royal Society of London for the Improvement of Natural Knowledge, and the charter of incorporation granted by Charles II of England, named Boyle a member of the council. In 1680 he was elected president of the society, but declined the honour from a scruple about oaths.... It was during his time at Oxford that Boyle was a Chevalier. The Chevaliers are thought to have been established by royal order a few years before Boyle's time at Oxford. The period of Boyle's residence was marked by the reactionary actions of the victorious parliamentary forces, consequently this period marked the most secretive period of Chevalier movements and thus little is known about Boyle's involvement beyond his membership.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Robert\_Boyle

Here are the books that Boyle published around this time, which were, notably, on how to translate base gold into a self-luminescent monoatomic element (known Alchemically as Orichalc, the Hermeticist stone).

[quote]

Aerial Noctiluca 1680

Icy Noctiluca 1680

Things above Reason 1681

[/quote]

Perhaps, it might be wiser to look back instead to why the Saint-Clairs split off to form their own successive group. Their most recent member,

[quote]

16. Thomas Plantard de Saint-Clair (1989)

[/quote] from the Saint Clair succession, seems to be a direct bloodline descendent of another Saint Clair, a member of the original Order of Zion (culminating in Plantard), almost 650 years before.

[quote]

6. Jean de Saint-Clair (1351-1366)

[/quote]

herself, hears back to the second ever Grand Master of the Priory of Zion, her ancestor,

[quote]

2. Marie de Saint-Clair (1220-1266)

[/quote]

about whom, wiki writes:

[quote="wiki"]Marie de Saint-Clair b abt 1192 was said-to-be descended from Henry de Saint-Clair, Baron of Roslin in Scotland, who accompanied Godfroi de Boullion on the First Crusade. Marie's grandmother married into the French Chaumont family - as did Jean de Gisors. Marie may have been the second wife of Jean de Gisors.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Marie\_de\_Saint-Clair

So, we have it: the Saint-Clairs are descendents on their maternal side (Marie, GM #2) of the original Knights Templar, and on their paternal side (Jean Gisors), founder of the Order, or the Priory, of Zion.

-ben

[quote="benpadijah"]the universe was created as a fluctuation in quantum uncertainty.[/quote]

You may think this means "quantum uncertainty" then predates the creation of the universe, but this is not so. Before our universe of quantum uncertainty was created, a purely geometric, pure dimensional perfectly harmonic universe existed. It is only by the scalar field vibrations of these perfect harmonies against one another, like the strumming of a harp, that our universe of "random chaos" and imperfect cycles was created and is maintained. This, in QBLH, is known as the "breaking of the vessels." Our universe, according to the ekpyrotic cosmology of string theory, exists between perfect dimensions.

[quote="benpadijah"]The substance that pre-existed the big bang is called by the Buddhists ylem, and is equivalent to negentropic, faster than light tachyons.[/quote]

The so-called "vessels" or "shells" that existed before the creation of our universe at the time of the "fall" of man and the rebel angels from "heaven" are simply the geometrically perfect (in alignments and ratios) vortices underlying all the different possible types of pattern" on a sub-quantum scale. The particle that most closely attains to these divine harmonic angles, ratios, alignments, etc. is the tachyon, whose particle form is the torus.

[quote="benpadijah"]The universe is still the same size as it was at the moment of the big bang: a singularity; it has only subdivided and grown increasingly complex.[/quote]

A tachyon is bigger than a gravitational singularity. A gravitational singularity attracts tachyons, and operates their polar involution, forming a Schwarzschild radius of worm-holes around the gravitational singularity, and adding a fourth direction of spin to the singularity, that relative other such formed black holes.

In other words, if our universe is, along the time axis, equal to zero or the origin point at the measure of a singularity, then the next oldest is the gravitational singularity, then the wormholes, and then the black holes. The black holes are the oldest parts of our local universe, wormholes comprise the "multiverse" and the entire thing is one "baby universe" inside a gravitational singularity, inside a "parent" universe that is perfectly harmonic pure dimensionality. However, as we shall soon see, this "greater" or "parent" universe died when our local universe was born.

[quote="benpadijah"]Inside the universe we base our perception of spacetime on the red shifted light of photons given off by galaxies whose stars burnt out several billion years ago.[/quote]

This means that, from our point of view within the local universe, looking out into the furthest depths of space is physically equivalent to looking back into the furthest depths of time. Therefore, when we look out and see light from a distant galaxy striking our lenses, it left the galaxy several billion years before now. In other words, all the stars within that distant galaxy have, since the light we see them by now first left them, burnt out, been reborn, and were eventually consumed by super-massive black holes. Now, when we look out and see the ancient galaxies, what is really out there is only one, massively super-massive, black hole that has swallowed up all the rest of the galaxies, their stars, and all of space itself.

[quote="benpadijah"]Most of the universe is already dead.[/quote]

In effect this means that, contrary to the theory of the universe expanding (based on observation of their red shifts as the galaxies around us are all gobbled up), this evidence tends to indicate there is a massive wave of destruction "rapidly" approaching us, and the sooner we perceive this trend, the better it will be to allow us to circumvent its rip-tide, at least, if we so choose.

[quote="benpadijah"]Our time for the perception of this is fast approaching.[/quote]

Elsewhere I describe this event, when the global population's point of view and perception is suddenly aligned, as occurring "over night" sparking a world-wide evolutionary leap into a state of extra-sensory perception, such as telepathy leading eventually to telekinesis. I call this event the coming "overnight psychic revolution" to overthrow the hypocrisy of those who have long already known of this event's coming, and who have sought to prevent it, who I refer to as the "psychic conspiracy."

[quote="benpadijah"]God is the anthropomorphication of humanity's projection of its own image upon the realm of the ideal, otherwise known as ylem or tachyons.[/quote]

Simple zoomorphic anthropomorphism as a way to teach "religion" between tribes, classes, nations, races, species, etc. is based on our ability, to some limited extent, to force upon nature our perceptions of law, order and rule. When we take this, by extending our capacity for perception to its fullest extent, and try to apply it to the limits of what we know, that is, to reach understanding by crossing the abyss, the result is seeing a reflection of what we know within any given limit projected upon the surface of that limit. When we see deeper than this, we see the same ratios we know within projected onto the depth without and beyond that limit. By following the lines formed between these ratios, we can come to know the geometric patterns that govern the realm beyond what we know. We can continue doing this until we even have understanding of the Nature of God.

[quote="benpadijah"]Tachyons do not resemble humans, except in their most dimensionally warped geometrical sense.[/quote]

By which I mean that the electromagnetic aura of the human being (or any gnomonically patterned entity for that matter) approaches the ideal geometric shape (the torus) of the spirit, the Greater or True Light, the tachyon. There may only be one idealisable "round" geometry for our local universe (the torus being the fourth dimensional extrapolation of the singularity), however to "square the circle" or to consider shapes with more than one side in each of our four local dimensions, then the number of possible archetypal metaforms increases. We can measure the rates of increase between these Platonic solids, and extrapolate from that to the multiverse beyond even the singular torus of our local universe. We can continue applying these same geometric rules of ratio to greater and greater scales of dimension, until ultimately we can make predictions about the black hole containing our universal singularity (that is, our multiverse of baby-universal wormholes), and even then on to the "parent" universe containing that black hole.

[quote="benpadijah"]Our universe is probably a singularity inside a black hole inside a larger universe, or so would be a comforting thought, however this too is only another system of control.[/quote]

Now, when we do extrapolate the rules of geometric ratios up to the level of the "parent" universe, we see that it is, as has been stated, more or less of a reflection of our own knowledge about the laws of physics governing our own local universe. In other words, we describe the "multiverse" as comprised of "parallel dimensions" in "string theory," and we say that, before the formation of our "local" universe as the "baby" universe inside the singularity inside the "parent" universe's black hole, there were no such thing as the four universal forces (S&WN, EM and G). But really, when we say "parallel dimensions" we mean the same thing as by "event horizon." We know from studying local black holes (such as at the centre of the Milky Way) that the "event horizon" is comprised of infinite "parallel" wormholes. We can therefore say the "multiverse" of wormholes is the same as the "event horizon" of the black hole in our "parent" universe containing our local universal singularity. We can also say that, looking "back" in time from inside our local universe, we are actually looking out through space into the universe beyond our own. Thus, we can say that, the distances between galaxies is increasing, but that this distance is actually a reflection of the space beyond our local universe's "parent" black hole. As a gravitational singularity takes in matter-energy, it will eventually reach a point of "critical mass" at which the "baby" universe inside of it will sub-divide and form more "baby" universes of its own inside the space of the black hole. This forms the "multiverse" of "wormholes" inside the black hole. This comprises the "event horizon." The "event horizon" is an exact reflection on its surface of the amount of matter energy the black hole has already consumed. For example, our Milky Way is directly proportional to the mass of its central black hole. Therefore, the size of our "parent" galaxy is directly proportional to the size of our "local" universe, and the size of our "local" universe is determined as a ratio (critical mass) between the size of the local singularity and the surrounding multiverse of parallel dimensions, ie. the black hole at the centre of our Milky Way is proportionate to its event horizon, and the diameter of our Milky Way is proportionate to the amount of matter-energy our local black hole has consumed.

[quote="benpadijah"]There is no parent universe, there is no God the Father.[/quote]

All this means is that the "multiverse" and the local galaxy are really exact reflections of one another, albeit on different time-scales, a "microcosm" and a "macrocosm." Therefore, our "parent" universe and our "local" universe are really one and the same. In short, when we say our "local" universe is expanding (the distance between galaxies is red-shifted) what we mean is that the "parent" universe is expanding. However, since the gravitational singularities of our "local" or "parent" universe (forming their multiversal galaxies) are the "oldest" (longest time-distance, ie duration) things in our "local" or "parent" universe, we know that the external surface of the four-local dimensions is a singularity itself. Therefore, if our "local" universe is really our "parent" universe, and the size of the local universe to the multiverse is the ratio of "critical mass," then we say that the "local" universe itself is surrounded by a multiverse of wormhole baby universes, that are themselves expanding, and thus crushing inwards from "critical mass" to consume our local universe. In other words, still: the rolling boil is the expansion of the distance between galaxies causing and being caused by the collapse of local galaxies into central black holes. As the void expands, matter-energy contracts. Because of the presence of the force of gravity, therefore, we know time, the fourth dimension, as a more ephemeral force than the physical three, a kind of "ghost" force or "holy spirt" if you will.

[quote="benpadijah"]Deists believe the universe is a machine, and God, the Great Architect, like its absentee landlord.[/quote]

This is why the Free-Masons are anti-Catholic and the Catholics are anti-Free Mason: the Free-Masons believe the Catholic Church is worshipping the demiurge, or the evil creator of our universe, that being the devil, Satan, the Great Deceiver, the one who denies the Truth of Geometry as Greater than even Gravity, and of Gravity as the greatest universal force. The Catholics, in turn, accuse the Free Masons of doing this instead. In turn, what the Free-Masons and the Catholics both truly worship is obscured behind the veil of lies that appears to exist between them.

It is likely that, fwiw, the uiniverse IS a machine, a kind of time machine, that is used for the transportation of discorporeal boddhisatvas through the seven spheres, or layers, of dimensions greater than and curled up around our own.

[quote="benpadijah"]I believe that space is like a movie projector, time is like the film, tachyons are the Light, archetypes the characters, our geometric spirits the actors, our souls sit in the audience, our bodies are the price of the ticket and concessions.[/quote]

This comparison is essentially identical to the originally theatrical, "philosophical" concepts expressed by Plato in his allegory of the cave.

[quote="benpadijah"]In this model it would be easy to say that God is like the projectionist.[/quote]

That is to say, that God is "outside" of the model looking in, and that, having "screened" the movie, and built the film, and presumeably recorded all the action Himself at a prior time, having created our geometric spirits before they incarnated to act out the archetypal characters He had written for us all. However, if this presumes the difference between God and Man as "mortality," it still must admit that man, too, can "run the projector," if men, too, can "make a movie," and that, therefore, Man can replace God, and that there being no difference between the two, at a certain point, let's say, after reaching a certain "critical mass," God may as well be "dead," because He is, de facto, irrelevant to existence.

[quote="benpadijah"]However this too is only a myth. Another system of control.[/quote]

So, you can see now why I had said what I'd originally said about "God the Father," or the myth of the "parent" universe, being "another system of control," or rather, rightly associated with the demiurge, who denies Gravity, Geometry and human Immortality, and who advocates instead lies, death and time. God, as we have been permitted by western civilisation to Understand Him, is not the same as the God the definition for which is derived from empirical observation of factual Nature. This is the "biggest cover-up" of all time. It has nothing to do with the actual mortality of Jesus (confirmed even by two of the three primary gospels). It has everything to do with natural physics. We have the Right to Understand More.

[quote="benpadijah"]God was sitting in the audience.[/quote]

Now, we can rightly see why "mighty God is a living man." The one person per generation to have the greatest understanding of the True Nature of God has, in accordance with tradition, been the human "high priest." Only the Hebrews have known of this practise for the longest of all those whom exist now, however the Moslems actually discovered it second, and the Christians are only just discovering it now. Jesus, that is, the real historical person of Jesus, and not the fictional character who performed miracles and was crucified, was one of these such people, however so was Mohammed, and so was Buddha. Nowadays we simply give these types of people a field-specific Nobel Prize for their greatest work of contribution to mankind. In other words, the True Nature of God known once only to the High Priest is now known by millions, if not billions, of the six billion plus people of earth. Soon enough, it will be known by all, and this is the event I elsewhere refer to as the "overnight psychic revolution."

[quote="benpadijah"]He had His lines to say, and, for various unimportant reasons, was unable to perform the duty of His character.[/quote]

The one true unifying characteristic of all the characters portayed "onscreen" is the true nature of their own creator, that being the writer, or in this example, God. God, as a writer, failed to portray His own true character onscreen, and thus He before all others could perceive more so than any the flaws of his creation, and even his own "acted-out portrayal," and the gap of imperfection between the ideal He had invisioned and the reality as it "played out." God, above all others, is most disgusted with HIs entire endeavor. He, more than anyone, Hates Us All.

[quote="benpadijah"]He was the first to get up, turn around and leave the theatre, before the movie was even finished.[/quote]

Which is why his character disappears less than halfway through.

[quote="benpadijah"]However even those who profess to follow Him waited until the movie was over so transfixed were they by their power to immediately manipulate the behaviors of their own archetypes.[/quote]

Such that, the angels of our own geometric spirits became so drunk on the ability to, by incarnation, witness their portrayal of the archetpal creations of God, that they became confused about whether it was their spiritual or their mortal existence that truly embodied these archtypal characters. Thus, the mortals themselves began to speak as though they were the very angelic spirits of God's archetypical creation. This is the fall of man, and the fall of the "rebel" angels. All this occured immediately after God left the "theatre" of Eden to return outside of it to Heaven, that is, the multiverse, from which the tachyonic light from the "projector" passed through the "film" of time to project the events which, inside the theatre, caused the revolution.

[quote="benpadijah"]Just as there is only one Wisdom, so too is there only one Movie. [/quote]

That is to say that, there is only one Truth, and all facts describe it, just as all fictions describe only combinations of possible (perceptions of) facts. You have to decide for yourself if the fiction you cherish is merely a fiction of facts, or if the fiction you cherish is indeed a fiction describing a portion of the full circumference of Truth. Is it the One True Fiction to which you cling, or have you fallen somewhere along the way, along with the "original sin" of "temptation" committed by Shemyaza, chief among the "rebel" or "fallen" angels, into the delusion of the senses?

-ben

The moderates are old money, and know how to keep quiet, predict trends, and act only when appropriate to advance their goals.

The fanatics are new money, they are the ones who do the moderates' bidding, in the same way that the moderates do ours.

This is why I have said, "fanaticism is NOT a problem for the IO." This means that we have gone "three deep" to turn it to our benefit. We control the moderates, and the moderates control the fanatics. We have control over them by years of conditioning them to know of only the existence of those philosophies for which we reward them.

These philosophies are those of the Church, those of the oppression of the individual will to power in favor of the the collective will to compromise. It has been the fanatics of the Christian era that do the "dirty work," that shed their blood, the same blood-lines of the lowest Aryan caste, while the moderates succeed them to excess. The moderates "stay rich" while the fanatics "stay poor."

And it is by controlling these philosophies that govern the moderates, that by their covert funding we control the agents of the fanatics.

However how can we say we "control" these philosophies? We are for Individual Rights, and yet the Church has oppressed these for over 2000 years.

Think! Go three deep. Don't forget to count yourself!

How can we say we are "for" something if there is not someone else "against" it? Why would it be an issue at all if it were not double-sided? To whom would it matter if it could not lead to murder? And so we make the issue "Individual Rights." We set the agenda and say: "you who feel such and such, that feeling we now attribute to 'individual rights.' You over there who feel the opposite, we now attribute your feelings to the opposite position on every issue concerning the topic of 'individual rights.'" But both will be unified in the topic of "individual rights."

Now, why is this? On the one hand, it has become a necessity, a self-fulfilling prophecy. Whoever threw the "first stone," is by now irrelevant, as it has led to an all-out world war for control over the minds of all mankind.

However, on the Other Hand, consider this: if there was only one individual alive in the world, and there was no one else around this individual to impinge upon their right to sustain themselves and to survive, there would be no need for the definitions of "rights" as opposed to "laws." There would be no original compromise between what the individual has the right to do and what the individual agrees to be allowed to do, and therefore "individual" and "rights" is really an oxymoron, a contradiction in terms.

The need for a "social compact," the offer tendered by secular humanism, soft-deism and Illuminist Masonry, poses one point: that compromise is necessary, while the assumption that man in his divine state (idealizable as an individual in a state of natural grace, ie, all other things being equal to him) juxtaposes philosophical humanism by saying the same thing differently: compromise of all minds to either the religious or philosophical point of view is necessary, and ultimately all minds and secular humanism will bow before the point of view of the Church.

The goal of BOTH the "social compact" of "individual rights" and the religious oppression of the Catholic church is the same: whether compromise between them, of compromise of one to the other, the third factor takes up half of both, or all of one, and it is, itself: compromise.

In the name of the authority of the individual, the social compact charters the complete compromise of the individual to organisations sworn to protect their Rights as Individuals. In the name of the authority of God, the religious oppression of the individual by organisations sworn to protect their Individual Right to Divinity is accomplished.

Compromise between Adam and Eve, the archetypal duality, is the apple of synthesis shared between them, the oppressive Catholic Church on the one hand, and the submissive secular humanism on the other. In this way, both fall before the public eye. This creates the illusion of competition between Catholicism and secular humanism over the issue of "individual rights." However, behind this illusion, both the Church and the Masons worship the same higher principle above them both, albeit it at 180 degrees from one another. This higher "truth" is what causes both sides to subscribe to compromise.

It is only the fanatics who view themselves as uncompromising, and all else as compromised. Yet I say they are not a danger to the "individual rights" of the illuminati. The fanatics (new money) are a class that has been created by a class that we, the illuminati, ourselves created. The fanatics are created by the moderates (old money) and the moderates were created by us.

The first attempt at this was during the Greek Golden Age, with the creation of a leisure class dependent on a class of slave laborers. This eventually led to the gross injustice of the Roman Empire, which, in some forms, continues to this day. The second attempt was in Bavaria, and centred around Adam Weishaupt. While the "moderate" agenda was clearly outlined in the Greek incarnation, the Illuminati of Weishaupt most clearly outline the goals and agenda of fanaticism, ergo the disestablishment of all social order, and the return to the roots of human existence.

Consider the example of Love. Originally love did not exist. The relationship between an elder parent and an adult child was essentially one of indentured servitude, not unlike slavery. The relationship between an adult parent and a young child was essentially one of an investment in property, through breeding, marriage, and through nurture of skill. The relationship between husband and wife was essentially one of competition for dominance, such as would have occurred by nature between an elder and younger sibling. The relationship between god and man was essentially one of vengeance and wrath. It was not until Jesus said "God is loving," that then the bonds of marriage for property began to break down into the laws of chivalry, and only after the annulment of Henry the VIII that "courtly" love became the fashion. The idea of "romance" is only as recent as the Elizabethan era, and the idea of "love at first sight" has only recently been practised (as the "one night" stand) as recently as the 1980s.

All of this great pivoting point in the arcing change of grand unified theories of philosophy has been accomplished only since the invention of the leisure class in Golden Age Greece.

We have, therefore, created a social class that has created a second generation of itself in the form of a new social class: we have created the moderates (undecided between Democrat and Republican presidential candidates) comprised of old money bourgeoisie, and they, in turn, have elevated the most possible members of one generation's proletariat, or working class, to become new money members of the moderate bourgeoisie. This has created the new-money, middle-class, ex-prole, nouveau-riche, bourgeoisie but by birth, class of fanatics. Consider, as examples, the newly rich Arab emigrant of Saudi Arabia and the current "neo-con" political administration of the United States of America.

Just as the definition of love has changed since the Greek Golden Age, thus demonstrating the spread of Greek Golden Age ideals (such as democracy and the necessity of social rights), so too has the change in moneyed social classes (the restructuring of former kingdoms into democratic republics and the elevation of the proles to bourgeoisie status) occurring since 1776 proven the power of the Illuminati as a second juncture point in history, along the same pattern as the Greek Golden Age. And so too, since the creation of the nouveau-riche class in the United States during the "baby boomer" generation born during the 1940s, has there been very rapid social, political, religious, and economic change to have occurred.

By creating "old money" moderates, we have unleashed their children as the "baby boomer" nouveau-riche fanatics. We have created a class that has created a class. We have gone three deep.

So let us look at what it means for the class of moderates we created to have created a class of fanatics for itself. So, let us look at how the moderates created these fanatics. Let us look at how the secret societies have created the neo-cons.

In the 1950's a series of ads was run in comic books, appealing directly to the youth market of ten to twenty year olds, the "baby boomer" generation. This ad ran for the next twenty to thirty years (ending between 1970 and 1980). It was an ad for "X-ray specs." These were supposedly glasses that, if you wrote in and ordered them, would supposedly allow you to "see through" things, and be able to see girls' underwear. This ad was really a front by the organisation that would become the CIA, allowing them to voluntarily collect census data (address and age) and buying habits (x-ray specs) of "baby boomer" consumers. The result of this has been all subsequent ad campaigns of marketing and advertising. They have all either been directed at, or controlled by, "baby boomers."

The X-ray Spex kids would grow up to build computers. Their skill sets would be honed by their parents, institutional religions and secular schools. They would grow up to be scientists, like their Nazi "project paperclip" parents. From the x-ray spex campaign arose the first "target" market: the "baby boomers." In college during the sixties and seventies, LSD was administered to this generation by the CIA. Following this, a barrage of late-night "infomercials" was enacted. These infomercials described various "get rich quick" schemes, and their "target" audience was the "baby boomers," who were, by then, called "generation x." Their own first generation of offspring, born between 1980 and 2000, were called the "echo boomers." The "echo-boomers" are the target audience of the "baby boomers" now, as the "baby boomers" have come into control of the means of mass communication, and are in full control over all marketing and ad campaigns.

The X-Ray Spex kids have now all grown up to be the heads of major corporations, and the heads of state, chiefs in the highest political offices, etc. How, how did they do this? After college, they were drop-outs, wash-outs, burn-outs, degenerates, fodder for Viet Nam and no more. It is simple: those who survived were always meant to lead. They were groomed from among the finest minds of the last generation to do so. The X-Ray Spex kids targeted their younger siblings with "get rich quick" "infomercials" and then became the neo-cons. The ones targeted by the "get rich quick" "infomercials," the "second generation" of X-Ray Spex kids, are now targeting their own younger siblings, the "echo boomers." Only now, their message is not "get rich quick." The "get rich quick" message has been subdued and is being passed on only among the moderates of the second to the third generation of X-Ray Spex kids. Meanwhile, the first generation has raised the second generation to be fanatics. So the two, moderate and fanatical would seem to have "leap-frogged" one another once over only the past 100 years or so: one generation's fanatics become the next generation's moderates become the next generation's fanatics again, and vice versa as well. This has not, however, always been the case.

History shows the oscillation between moderates and fanatics has only taken the form of "democrat" or "republican" over the past 100 years, but before that it was between Illuminati secular humanists and the Catholic Roman Empire, and before that it was between the Greek leisure class and the middle-eastern kingly bloodlines. Each time we, the "secret societies" such as the Illuminati, have prevailed against the Empire of Religion over the past 4000 years, it has been only for a short duration, and only at regular intervals. One such time as this is occurring now.

However, consider the dominant philosophies "trickling down" from the "get rich quick" schemers of telemarketing and their "target audience," their own next-door neighbor's kid: "spend tomorrow's money today." It is the "end-times" message. Greed is the message, for material property in itself, and the more rapidly expendable the better.

So we teach them to value money, but not for itself (as savings), only for what it can buy (immediately), and then we give them oil to buy with it, and tell them if they want more, they have to go to war and die for it. This is the message spread by the X-Ray Spex kids from the generation-x owned press to the echo-boomer consumer market, at the behest of the original generation of the oldest "baby boomers," now turned into the neo-cons.

Clinton was the first "baby-boomer" (X-Ray Spex) president. George HW Bush was in the CIA. His own son, George W. Bush, is currently the president, was and is a member of the Yale college fraternity, "secret society" Skull and Bones. These are essentially the generations of the three X-ray Spex kids before the current generation of X-ray Spex kids who are still children (younger than twenty) now. The CIA. The Hippies. The neo-cons.

That is how we have created the class of fanatics in the United States. Why have we done this? Why do the neo-cons tell their nephews in the hippy media to sell war on every channel to their nephews, in turn, the echo-boomers?? It is because each of two of the three links in this chain are fanatics: the neo-cons and the echo-boomers. Only the hippies in the media have become moderate, by comparison to their past as LSD-head college drop-outs. They were "helped out" by the "get rich quick" schemes of their uncles, then in the CIA, now known as the neo-cons. Why are we sending echo-boomer soldiers off to die in a foreign land for oil? Because they are fanatics. They deserve to die. They are the slaves of our slaves. What care we for these fanatics? So, we send them there under the guise of "fighting against fanatics" and tell them, the more of them that die over there, the more it will look back home like we are "winning" the "war on terror." To some this seems like a minor swing to one side of the political spectrum compared to what this will cause as its result.

All of this, that is, permeated throughout all these layers of organisational structure, passed on along these generations from one to the next to the next and so on, is the fact that it is all a "pyramid" scheme. The CIA using advertising to test market technology, the "get rich quick" "infomercials" that gave rise first to tele-marketing and now to spam emails on the internet, these are two schemes along one pyramid. Further up along the same angle is the Illuminati of Adam Weishaupt, and much further up along the same angle is the Golden Age of Greek Democracy. These also were "pyramid" schemes of their time, although the Illuminati value Greek Democracy as much as the "echo-boomers" value their fanatical capitalism, and much more than the rich neo-cons and X-Ray Spex hippies value the lives of the "echo boomers."

To the fanatical Muslim "terrorists," the "echo-boomers," who have become the soldiers they fight against in Afghanistan and Iraq, embody fanatical capitalism, which is the opposite value than should be embraced fanatically. To the "terrorists," capitalism has no spiritual value, and is therefore morally bankrupt. What the Middle-Eastern fanatics hate about the western fanatics is all these things, dating back as far as Greek Democracy leading to the Roman Empire. From thence, the Crusades and from thence the first world war. This "great Satan" actually takes its face in the incredibly naive "farm-boy" soldier sent to Iraq to fight and die in the name of a cause he does not agree with, in order to protect an economic system of which he is actually even a victim, and all in the name of the "secret society" agenda of killing off spare fanatics, such as both the soldier from America and the "rebel" in Iraq both. After all, it IS their oil; they should be allowed to sell it to us at whatever price they like, if at all.

-ben

- 1) How do I know anything really exists?
- 2) What is the essence of being human?
- 3) Is there a God?
- 4) What is the nature of Knowledge?

5) What is the meaning of life?

6) Which philosopher took the most drugs?

well, for starters this contest is being rigged. You say you've got six questions up there, but I only see four. You've tripled "what" and substituted "which" and "is" for "why" and "who" and two "what"s for "when" and "where." Really, the only TWO questions you haven't fucked with are:

1) how do I know anything really exists, and

2/3/4) what is... such and such?

The study of "How" is basically called metaphysics. The study of "what is" is called physics, or the combination of relationships between objects and ontologically subjective observers.

In other words, the only one of these questions that truly does have any potency, or relevancy, is the first: "How do I know... such and such."

The answer to this comes from the "baseball bat" test. Unfortunately I can't fill you in more on that myself, perhaps Randy can fill you in better than I can anyway, and besides I must now discuss the "formal system" of metaphysics.

The actual six basic questions we MUST ask are: "who, what, when, where, why and how?" Anything other than these questions, such as "had/not" and "is/isn't" all have dualities, and are all essentially the central seventh within the hexagon of the six fundamental questions.

So, let's say you want to address a suitable philosophical topic: God. You can then ask six questions about Him to reveal His True Nature.

Or another such topic: ontology, the root essence of being. You can then ask six questions about it to reveal its true nature. Yadda Yadda Yadda.

Now, what are the six MOST essential questions you can ask in philosophy?

They are, in no particular order...

question / cosmology / ontology / epistemology

1) who / created all / maintains all / records all

2) where / is earth / are we / have we been

3) what / is existence / are we / will we become?

4) why / are we here / were we born / must we work?

5) when / is now / did it all begin / will it all end?

6) how / does this / do I / do we?

Take any category of one question and apply it to any category of another question. That will form one of the six fundamental questions of philosophy.

These, then, are...

- 1) Who is God and What does He want?
- 2) Where is nowhere and When will we be there?
- 3) What is real and How do we know?
- 4) Why is there Irony and Where is there none?
- 5) When will it all end and Who should we turn to?
- 6) How is the weather and Why ask why?

These are The Six Most Philosophical Questions, and here are my answers to them:

- 1) who is the self, and why does the self seek God?
- 2) nowhere is "now here" and therefore we are there.
- 3) our senses cathex to our heart, and hypercathex to our brain.
- 4) irony is karma, once work is finished, there is no law.
- 5) as long as we turn to others, our turning world will never end.
- 6) the weather reflects the local psyche, and vice versa.

These are my answers, and because they are all correct, I demand prizes.

-ben wikipedia has a nice page on M-theory:

<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/M-theory>

I actually think I've drawn a picture of AdS/CFT (Anti-deSitter/Conformal Field Theory Correspondence) here: http://www.benpadiiah.com/MISC\_diagrams/3A.jpg which I go into in more detail here: http://www.benpadiiah.com/MISC\_diagrams/pages/originalMISC.html

In short, M-theory..

[quote]It was believed before 1995 that there were exactly five consistent superstring theories, which are called, respectively, the Type I string theory, the Type IIA string theory, the Type IIB string theory, the heterotic SO(32) (the HO string) theory, and the heterotic E8 $\times$ E8 (the HE string) theory.[/quote]

M-theory is also mentioned briefly on page 56 of Stephen Hawking's November, 2001 book, the Universe in a Nutshell. Here is a diagram from that page:

[img]<http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/M-theory.jpg>[/img]

I've even got a thread here about the (e)8X(e)8 heterotic string theory on this forum:

<http://illuminati-order.com/forum/viewtopic.php?t=158>

Good stuff.

-ben

[quote="Esabbah"]Nothing is true. Everything is permitted. Everything is permitted [i]because [i]nothing is true.[/quote]

There are actually a couple other variations in translation of this premise.

All agree that it is a simple "A thus A" statement, wherein the latter follows from the former both chronologically and, by implication, causally. So we can say, "if this then that" is really the same as to say, "when such thus such." So, both of these formats can be applied to the above quote.

Also, the translation of "true" might instead be rendered as "real." Also, an alternative translation exists changing the tense of the object to the present tense passive tone, substituting for "permitted" instead "permissible."

So we can restate the initial assertion alternatively as:

"Thus, When Nothing Is Real, Everything Is Permissible."

Now, this would seem to have a very different implication for interpretation than the standard version of the quote:

"If Nothing Is True, Then Everything Is Permitted."

There is obviously a difference between what is "True" and what is merely "real." Now, it would be vehemently disagreed upon between the Ishmaelian Sufi Hadith commentator and the empiricism of the scientific method which came first: does it follow that "we know the Truth because of what is Real" or does it follow that "the Truth is greater than what is Real"? In the former case, reality comes before truth, however in the latter, Truth contains all reality. So, we say, "from reality comes individual knowledge, from which comes the imagination," and so we say: "Truth is the sum of all facts and fiction." Thus we see that, the Truth is reality from a higher perspective.

Why then is it a more powerful statement to identify nothingness with "reality" rather than "truth"? Because truth from the point of view of individual knowledge excludes the imagination, and contains only its own known portion of reality. We cannot say, from the point of view of individual knowledge, that what we imagine is necessarily true, nor can we know some reality without having ever encountered it.

Thus, to say, "nothing is real" is, from the point of view of individual knowledge, a bolder statement than to say that, from the point of view of individual knowledge, "nothing is true." From the point of view of our own individual knowledge what we know as "true" is only part of all reality. However, "nothing is real" can mean that the senses themselves have become deluded. Rather than the natural fabric of consensus reality being warped, it is only the mind that is distorted in its ability to reflect upon its surroundings. We say, also, that "permissible" is a more accurate statement than to say "permitted" as one refers to the past tense in an active tone, while the other refers to the present tense in a passive tone.

So, we say, "if nothing is true then everything is permitted," is a statement along the same spiral growth pattern as to say, "thus when nothing is real, everything is permissible," and the two statements differ only in degree. However, as stated before, we have to look at the whole model from another vantage point to understand their underlying similarities rather than to assign them to a relative rank. Let us combine these statements.

"Thus, When Nothing True Is Real, Then Everything Permissible Is Permitted."

This statement would probably be the most accurate of all yet mentioned. It is the most implicate statement of the meaning of the message: "while in a state of delusion and blindness to the real nature of the Truth, then there is no authority of law greater than the delusion of the individual." This essentially means that, when that which they perceive and that which they believe are different, an individual acts of their own accord, and will not subscribe to any higher statements of fact.

"Do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the law" is an essentially identical statement, however applies to the law of the divine unconditionally, whereas the statement of the "Old Man of the Mountain" does so only on condition that what is real is not true. So, essentially, the difference in these statements is the difference between "then" and "shall," or, rather, between the "law" of the Higher Will and the sensory delusion that is the "lesser will."

According to "reality" we say "if/then" however from the perspective of the imagination, greater than or elevated above merely our own knowledge as individuals, we dictate the law of "shalt/not." This is the Law of the Divine, or the Higher Will, over and above, beyond and containing, the physical laws of our perceived reality. As I have said, the primary difference in the perspective between Crowley and Hassan Ibn Sabbah was simple: Hassan advocated the delusion of the senses as a means of attaining a perspective supernal to individual knowledge. Crowley advocated the stimulation of the imagination primarily through ceremony and the study of sacred symbols. Of course, in private these philosophies are reversed as well, such that Sabbah studied symbolism while Crowley chased the dragon.

We see the entire pattern now as symbiotic duality. From two separate statements came one higher truth, and now from two different levels comes another new pattern when viewed from above. Beyond this there is only one higher truth, between the two combined statements:

"Thus, When The Whole of The Law Shall Be Nothing True Is Real, Then Everything Permissible To Do, You Are Permitted and Wilt."

Hence, from four, two, and from two one. As both sages would agree, already this one is nothing. This means that, having attained Buddhahood, this line of reasoning in the cosmic stream of consciousness has run its course and disappears outside your head from whence it came.

-ben

what is the end of illumination? What goal will cause its purpose to reach the desired conclusion? What will finally alleviate the necessity for illumination, according to the very tenets and doctrines of illuminism?

the hyper-cathexis of the multiverse is the end of illumination.

I am sure you have heard of the concept of the buying power of the student class by now. It has been hypothesised that a boycott of a good or service provided by a single corporate business for a day by all the students in the nation would effectively end that corporation's business career by crashing its rate of exchange value on the futures stock market. That would, it has been speculated, effectively accomplish a social revolution, one that could easily occur over night.

Well, the hypercathexis of the universe works kind of like that. We know that the orbits of the planets and the sunspot cycle are related. Thus the alignment of the seven noble planets in 2000 initiated the beginning of the sunspot cycle peak which will last until the year 2012. At this point, the orbital plane of the solar system will transect that of galactic plane, and our sun will align from earth with galactic core. Now, you may be scratching your head wondering.... But if you are it is probably already too late to explain this all to you before you begin to panic.

When the seven planets align, when the sun aligns with galactic core, so too will the plane and gas jets of our galaxy be in a relative position of alignment to approximately 1/4 all the other galaxies in the local universe. When our sun aligns with galactic core, it will have somewhat the same effect on the black hole at the Milky Way's centre as the alignment of the seven noble planets is now on our own sun. Just as, now, the sunspot cycle is reaching its peak, so too will the alignment of our star with the black hole core of our galaxy trigger a reaction upon the surface of that black hole. Instead of sunspots forming on the surface of a star, however, here we will see wormholes forming on the surface of the black hole. But this is only the beginning. Following this the 1/4th galaxies in alignment will polarise, and all the galaxies in the local universe will align in a sudden crystalline super-saturation.

What does this mean? This is, within the context of a nervous system, what Sigmund Freud called "hyper-cathexis." Freud explained that when electrochemical kinetic energy was passed through a nerve, most of it continued onward, but some of it stayed behind. The amount that stayed behind (which he called phi) built up until the single nerve would fire off the additional energy on its own. Freud considered this the will power, and contrived the theory of ego such that it depended on the perpetuation of hyper-cathexis.

Our entire local universe is a very large nervous system, essentially identical to the cells in our brains, neurons. This is like the filament strings of galaxies and the cosmic voids between them. The neurons in our brain fire cathected phi from a neuron axon to a neuron dendrite, across the axon-dendrite gap between the nerves. This is like the alignment of galaxies and the exchange between them of gravitational tachyons.

Now, as I have said, there are some factions who are aware of these facts, and most of the details, although little of the general philosophies, is public knowledge to the man on the street. We know the sunspot level is increasing, because it is hotter. There are more tropical storms, stronger hurricanes, there are floods and ice bergs breaking off glacier sheets in the south pole. Modern trends include exercising indoors, drinking fruit slushies and invading a desert nation for petroleum resources to fuel hummers and make compact discs. The rest follows.

As the temperature continues to increase, essentially hot-boxing the gaseous atmosphere of planet earth with carbon monoxides and ultraviolet black-body radiation trapped within the ozone layer like inside a greenhouse, the levels of insanity will begin to increase with it. Media sensationalism will promote immediatist (poetic terrorist) and trans-humanist ideals and philosophies of cyberpunk will turn the attention of the elites away from the turmoils of war. A new intelligentsia will arise to promote the aesthetics and the medical values of the new technologies that merge mind and machine, reality and cyberspace.

However within six years from the time I write this, feverish insanities will have replaced even the most transcendental and recluse philosophical societies. There will be an entirely new generation, the younger siblings of the echo-boomer intelligentsia, that will have grown up under the shadow of imperialism, and who will be a generation of extremely volatile youth. Eager for action, and fueled on rage against the media and the duplicitous political system, these individuals will revive the massive, populations wide use of hallucinogenic and psychotropic drugs in a desperate attempt to translate their generation off the very face of the planet.

Their elder siblings will not have this: as the young neo-cons of today grow to maturity over the next six years, they will endorse stricter and more nationalist views, alienating their political ideologies from their degenerate younger siblings. These two generations: see how they play out the politics of our era so nicely: the intelligence community and military industrial complex are the "big brother" of the younger, rebellious student class, as has been the case throughout the latter 20th.

Only when the brother is pit against the brother will they finally see: Armeggedon was world war one. Hitler was the false prophet. The second coming already happened, and they missed it. They will see they are like Cain and Abel locked in struggle with one another like Jacob and Elohim, even inferior in generations to Adam himself, who came in the form of the Great Beast: Mabus, or Usama Ben Ladin, the reincarnation of Jesus of Nazareth.

And then the people will look around and in the rising heat see a true wonder: a city of gold, and a fountain of eternal youth.

And that will be about in the early summer of 2012. All of this, all modern political philosophies and historical events will be revealed as having been conducted to play out across earth's surface the ceremonial rites of certain initiatory mystery schools, such as both secret societies and religions.

By the winter of 2012 it will be time. Many of the remaining threats to the social order of the "big brothers" will have been exterminated by this time, and many hundreds more will be in camps. These camps are located in the US, however they will mainly be foreign nationals who are being deported there and burned alive.

The physical sacrifice will be made so that the spirit can transcend unfettered. The elite members of the currently young neo-cons and their siblings born since 2000 will ingest the White Powder Gold and be "translated" up to heaven, bodies and all.

And there, standing between all of these souls and their salvation in the beam of light connecting earth to the sun and the sun to galactic core and our galaxies to all others and so the awakening of the universal mind... will be the one we have elected from among us, the secret societies, to judge them each and let in only those who are chosen.

Those bearing the imprint of the death camps (REX84) will be weighed against those who betrayed them in the flesh only to free them in the spirit. They will all be there, all the ancestors and all the sentient entities throughout the universe will watch.

Ultimately, the one whom they all judged most will be sitting on the other side to judge them for eternity. And this is only the beginning of the illumination.

-ben

There is a very popular misconception in the minds of modern Americans regarding the nature of their government.

The framers of the United States constitution used the word "democracy" to refer to "direct" or "bottom up" Democracy, while they used the term "republic" to refer to "representative" or "top down" Democracy.

Therefore, many people confuse the Democratic Party with advocating "direct" Democracy, while confusing the Republican Party with advocating "representative" Democracy.

In effect, either way, the majority of modern American minds agree, the two-party system is as natural an outgrowth of our Democractic Republic as was the Roman Republic from Greek Democracy.

Wrong.

The two-party system that has developed over the past century in the United States is neither a "direct" nor "representative" Democracy as envisioned by the framers of the Democratic Republic constitution.

Rather than either "direct" or "representative" Democracy, we have become a mirror imitation of the Roman Republic.

Popular misconception admits this identification only insofar as it serves the ends of fascist-controlled military-enforced tyrannical dictatorship. It claims that we are in the equivalent of the "late " stages of the Roman Republic even now, rapidly approaching millennarian and eschatological Empire.

If it had not squelched the Democracy of our "founding fathers" it would be portraying our current government as equivalent to the Delian League of ancient Greece, and thus accomplish the same pessimisim in the modern mind that our political ideals inevitably degenerate into indifference to our slavery.

I have composed some posts from research on wikipedia regarding the actual nature of Greek Democracy and the Roman Republic. Please bear with me as I introduce this brief history lection before drawing a moral conclusion.

In 683BC populist tyranoi had overthrown the basileus in Athens. In 594BC, the first Tyrant, Peisistratos of Athens (607-528BC), appointed his lover, the poet Solon, the Archon over Attica to subdue civil disorder in Cirrha over Salamis Island. Solon instituted the seisachehteia ordinances, repealing most of the laws of Draco, and instituing a timokratia, where four classes of property owners (the larger farm owners, hippeis or knights that owned their own smaller farms, tillers or those who owned cattle and worked on the upper classes' farms, and the lowest class, the thetes or manual laborers) paid in a rate of 6:3:1:0 taxes to Solon in return for their protection by Peisistratos. Following the success of Solon's reforms in subduing the civil disorder rampant in Attica, Peisistratos adopted the Solonian Constitution, introducing trial by a jury of class peers, compulsory military service determined according to class, a Boule (council of 400 hereditary nobles or, later, official representative chosen by lot from among the constituent citizens), the aeropagus (a senate of former Archon Eponymous (chief magistrate), Polemarch (head of the armed forces) and Archon Basileus (religious events coordinator) that served as a murder tribunal), and introducing many civil laws governing debt and taxation. The tyrants of the Pisistratus family ruled until 500BC, when the isonomia of Cleisthenes reformed the 400 member Boule under Solon into the 500 member Boule over the ten demes. In the ten demes, official representatives were chosen by lot, and in the Boule they proposed bills to the Dikasteria, courts comprised of 201-5001 jurors per day, up to 500 from each of the ten demes, who then voted by casting a white stone or a black stone on whether to reject, pass or ammend these bills. Once he had reorganised the Boule from 400 under Solon to 500 in 508BC, Cleisthenes introduced the first bill, legislating "ostracism" or exile for ten years any citizen judged by vote as having ambitions to overthrow the democracy and set themselves up as a tyrant, was passed in 487BC.

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Athenian\_democracy

The Athenian people during the Golden Age were strengthened further during the war against the invasion of Athens by the land army of Xerxes I of Persia, when Spartan king Leonidas I delayed the Persian army at Thermopylae, allowing a runner to warn Athens of the coming army and to evacuate into the sea before Xerxes marched into Attica and burned Athens. The Athenian fleet then routed the Persians at Salamis, while the Spartan army won victory at Plataea, fighting back to back with the Thespians, whose nobility and bravery so impressed the Spartans that they swore an eternal oath to protect the Thespians.

So, we see that there are both distinct differences and distinct similarities between Greek Golden Age Democracy and the Roman Republic era.

The Roman Republic lasted from 509 (overthrow of the kings) to 44 (installation of Caesar as emperor) bce, or 465 orbits around the sun in total. Greek Democracy lasted only from 594 (installation of Solon as Archon of Attica) to 477 (initiation of the Delian League under Athens) bce, or 117 orbits around the sun in total.

Athenian Democracy utilised round numbers (the Boule of 500 over the ten demes) at first, but later switched to odd numbers (the 201-501 jurors). The Roman Republic utilised even numbers (the original 30 farmers and 100 knights of the Assemblies) from 494bce on, but stopped using odd numbers (the 35 gypsy tribes) in 287 bce, with the initiation of the Plebian Council.

From study of the Roman Republic, in his Discourses, Niccolo Machiavelli wrote the first treatise of the common era on the "natural state" of man, describing them as essentially "like animals." It would not be for several hundred more years that John Locke would be able to study the rarer historical descriptions at the time of Athenian Greek Democracy, and he would describe the "natural state" of man as one of inherent freedom to act of their own accord. From Machiavelli the framers such as James Madison adopted their stance on "representative" Democracy, and from Locke framers such as Thomas Jefferson adopted their stance on "direct" Democracy. However, by the time of the framers only "direct" or "representative" forms of Democracy were considered just and noble in themselves, serving the ends of the greatest number of people at once. The Machiavellian hard-line on Republicanism being the only way to topple Principalities (aristocratic dictatorships) which had resurfaced during the French Revolution had been, by the time of the American revolutionary war, dampened in definition to accord with Locke's "social compact" and idealistic "human nature" based more on Greek Democracy.

America was never intended to be a "representative" Republic. It was framed in its constitution as a "representative" Democracy, but it has degenerated into a federal republic, where special interest groups such as the military industrial complex, big businesses and the intelligence community constitute a fascist oligarchy hidden within our political system of government. These special interest groups fund both political parties' nominees' campaigns for every office from the commander-in-chief right down to my local commissioner of education. These "special interest groups" comprise the de facto, "shadow" government of the united states now.

In ancient times, according to Aristotle, there were three types of government (monarchy, aristocracy and democracy) that would each inevitably degenerate into a corrupt form of itself (tyranny, oligarchy and what Machiavelli later labeled "licentiousness," meaning graft and bribery). Monarchy being the first was considered the most natural, but most undesirable, to the ancient mind, followed by aristocracy (or control by land-owning vassals) and finally Democracy the most ideal and desirable of all.

According to modern misinterpretation, American "representative" Democracy has followed the same exact course as Athenian "direct" democracy becoming the Roman "representative" republic. However, as we have now seen this is not the case. According to actual history, the Roman Republic always bore a fundamental difference to its Athenian Democratic predecessor.

By having only even numbers of delegates representing the Roman citizens, the Romans were able to maintain their Republic for much longer than the Greeks maintained "direct" Democracy through using odd numbers of delegates. This is because the Athenian Democracy began as an attempt to thwart crime (to quell an uprising in Attica) within an existing tyranny (hence a third party legislating over a dispute between two), while the Roman Republic began as a civic experiment (replacing monarchial monopoly with dually held executive official positions ala Romulus and Rhemus). While resolution is built into Democracy, perpetual conflict is built into a Republic.

The goal of creating a peace, as opposed to the goal of sustaining and lengthening, or maintaining and enforcing, an existing peace was the root difference at the origin of Democracy and the Republic, respectively. Once peace was achieved, Democracy (like Marx's Dictatorship by the Proletariat, or the original concept of the tyrant) was designed to "wither away." However, for a Republic to function prosperously, there must be perpetual competition with no conflict resolution that does not "arm both sides," and thus perpetuate the conflict.

What do I mean when I talk of the importance of the even and the odd forms of government? What can such a minute and inconsequential sum as the single individual do to offset the whole course of world events, to shape history; what can one man do? In a Republic they can do nothing. In either a "direct" (by popular vote) or by "representative" (so elected officials) Democracy, one person can be the lynch-pin of the entire apparatus.

Consider these primary differences between the Greek Democracy and the Roman Republic: one was founded to bring peace, one to maintain it; one was odd, one was even. Apply these to the modern American political system, where the two-party system is used as a fulcrum for leverage by corporate "private interests" against the popular government by the American people envisaged for us by our "founding fathers." Let me know what comes to you, please. I didn't write all this just for it to fall silent. Thanks for any replies.

-ben

Res publica usually refers to a thing that is not considered to be private property, but which is rather held in common by many people. Taking everything together that is of public interest leads to the connotation that "the" res publica in general equals "the" state.

The city of Rome itself stands on the banks of the river Tiber, very near the west coast of Italy. It marked the border between the regions of Latium (the territory in which the Latin language and culture was dominant) to the south, and Etruria (the territory in which the Etruscan language and culture was dominant) to the north. According to Roman mythology, after the end of the Trojan war, the Trojan prince Aeneas sailed across the Mediterranean Sea to Italy and founded the city of Lavinium. His son Iulus later founded the city of Alba Longa, and from Alba Longa's royal family came the twins Romulus and Remus (supposedly sons of the god Mars by Rhea Silvia), who went on to found the city of Rome on April 21, 753 BC. Thus the Romans traced their origins back to the Hellenic world. The Roman republic would expand outwards from this single city state.

In the beginning, Rome had kings. The tradition portrays these kings more as culture heroes than as historical figures, each of them being credited with devising some aspect of Roman culture; for example, Numa Pompilius devised Roman religion, and Ancus Martius the arts of war. There is, however, general agreement that Rome did have a series of monarchs (some of whom were of Etruscan origin; the influence of the Etruscans can still be seen on early Roman art and architecture) and that these kings were displaced by the Roman aristocracy sometime around 500-450 BC. Livy's version of the establishment of the Republic states that the last of the Kings of Rome, Lucius Tarquinius Superbus ("Tarquin the proud") had a thoroughly unpleasant son, Sextus Tarquinius, who raped a Roman noblewoman named Lucretia. Lucretia compelled her family to take action by gathering her kinsmen, telling them what happened, and then killing herself. They were compelled to avenge her, and led an uprising that expelled the royal house, the Tarquins, out of Rome into refuge in Etruria. Lucretia's widowed husband Lucius Tarquinius Collatinus and her brother Lucius Junius Brutus were elected as the first two consuls of the new Republic (Marcus Junius Brutus who later assassinated Gaius Julius Caesar claimed descent from this first Brutus).

The traditional date of the revolution against the kings is 509 BC. The early consuls took over the roles of the king with the exception of his high priesthood in the worship of Jupiter Optimus Maximus at the sacred temple on the Capitoline Hill. For that duty the Romans elected a Rex sacrorum - a "king of holy things". It is interesting to note that the Roman Rex Sacrorum was forbidden membership in the Senate; one could not be a Senator and a Rex Sacrorum at the same time. Republican Rome distanced even this vestigial "king" from any possibility of power. Until the end of the Republic, the accusation that a powerful man wanted to make himself "Rex" - "King" remained a career-shaking charge (Julius Caesar's assassins claimed that they were preserving Rome from the re-establishment of a monarchy).

To replace the leadership of the kings, a new office was created with the title of consul. Initially, the consuls possessed all of the king's powers in the form of two men, elected for a one-year term, who could veto each other's actions. Later, the consuls' powers were broken down further by adding other magistrates that each held a small portion of the king's original powers. First among these was the praetor, which removed the Consuls's judicial authority from them. Next came the censor, which stripped from the consuls the power to conduct the census.

The Romans instituted the dictatorship. The dictator was given complete authority over all of Rome's civil and military matters and there was no appeal from his decisions. His power was so absolute that the Romans only dared to appoint a dictator in times of severe emergencies, and the sole thing that kept this dictator from becoming another king of Rome was his six-month term limit.

The king's religious powers were given to two new offices: the Rex Sacrorum and the Pontifex Maximus. The rex sacrorum was the de jure highest religious official for the Republic. His sole task was to make the annual sacrifice to Jupiter, a privilege that had been previously reserved for the king. The pontifex maximus, however, was the de facto highest religious official, who held most of the king's religious authority. He had the power to appoint all vestal virgins, flamens, pontiffs, and even the rex sacrorum himself. By the beginning of the 1st Century BC, the rex sacrorum was all but forgotten and the pontifex maximus given almost complete religious authority over the Roman religion.

The Conflict of the Orders, also referred to as "the Struggle of the Orders," was a political struggle between the plebeians (plebs) and patricians (patricii) of the ancient Roman Republic, in which the plebeians sought political equality and achieved it in 287 BC, after two centuries of strife. The relationship between the plebeians and the patricians sometimes came under such strain that the plebeians would secede from the city, taking their families and movable possessions, and set up camp on a hill outside the walls. Their refusal to cooperate any longer with the patricians led to social changes. Only about 15 years after the establishment of the Republic in 494 BC, plebeians seceded and chose two leaders to whom they gave the title Tribunes. The plebeians took an oath that they would hold their leaders 'sacrosanct' - 'untouchable' during their terms of office, and that a united plebs would kill anyone who harmed a tribune. The second secession in 471 BC led to further legal definition of their rights and duties and increased the number of tribunes to 10. The final secession ended in 287 BC and the resulting Lex Hortensia gave the vote of the Concilium Plebis or "Council of the Plebeians" the force of law. It is important to note that this force of law was binding for both.

The Roman assemblies were the Comitia Calata, the Comitia Curiata, the Comitia

Centuriata, and the Comitia Tributa and possessed ultimate legislative and judicial powers in the Roman Republic and were also responsible for the election of magistrates. The Roman assemblies possessed ultimate legislative powers, including the ability to pass ex post facto laws and bills of attainder. They were also not deliberative assemblies: normal citizens neither debated nor proposed legislation (only magistrates could propose legislation). The assemblies also possessed judicial powers, some of which were transferred to permanent courts later in the Republic. In the later Republic, a subset of the Comitia Tributa, the Concilium Plebis, gained the legislative powers of the assemblies and became the favored legislative mechanism.

The honoured expression Senatus Populusque Romanus (abbreviated as SPQR), often used as an indication for the Roman state, clearly testifies to the general perception that Rome was legitimately ruled by the will of the people (in the assemblies) guided by the Senate, and under their authority by the magistrates. Only when the principate was established—within the republic, which was never abolished—did a single person, the Roman emperor, start to embody the state politically and hence incarnate the maiestas of Rome.

The Comitia Calata was held under the presidency of the pontifex maximus. The meeting probably took place in the Capitoline Hill in front of the Curia Calabra. The Comitia Calata and the Comitia Curiata were the only assemblies recognised before the time of Servius Tullius. The assembly consisted entirely of patricians, organized into curiae, and performed the following functions:

- * Announcements of the pontiffs concerning time keeping and nature of certain dates,
- * Inauguration of Flamines and the Rex Sacrorum, and
- * Witnessing testaments of patricians in order to avoid any disputes following the death of the person in question.

The Comitia Curiata (Curiate Assembly) was the oldest Roman assembly after the Comitia Calata. It consisted entirely of patricians organized in 30 curiae, which were voting units that each cast one collective vote. This assembly originally was the only assembly which transacted business, electing all magistrates, granting their imperium, and enacting laws.

The Comitia Centuriata (Centuriate Assembly) included both patricians and plebeians organized into five economic classes (knights and senators being the First Class) and distributed among internal divisions called centuriae. Membership in the Centuriate Assembly required certain economic status, and power was heavily vested in the First and Second Classes. The Centuriate Assembly met annually to elect the next year's consuls and praetors, and quinquennially (every 5 years) to elect the censors. It also sat to try cases of high treason (perduellio), although this latter function fell into disuse after Lucius Appuleius Saturninus introduced a more workable format (maiestas). A citizen's vote did not count in the Centuriate Assembly. Rather, the individual's vote was counted within his century and determined the outcome of the century's vote. Because only the first eighteen (and richest) centuries were kept to the nominal size of 100 members, members of those centuries exerted a disproportionate influence over the outcome of votes. The Centuriate Assembly, originally a military assembly of knights, had to meet outside the pomerium of Rome on the Campus Martius since no army was permitted inside the pomerium.

The Comitia Tributa (Tribal Assembly) included both patricians and plebeians distributed among the thirty-five tribes into which all Roman citizens were placed for administrative and electoral purposes. The vast majority of the urban population of Rome was distributed among the four urban tribes, which meant that their votes were individually insignificant. Like the Centuriate Assembly, voting was indirect, with one vote apportioned to each tribe. A subset of the Tribal Assembly, called the Plebeian Council, legislated for the plebeians and lower classes and elected the plebeian tribunes and aediles. Their plebiscites only had the force of law for the entire Republic after 287 BC.

The traditional story, whose primary source is the first few books of Livy, is that the patricians were the aristocrats of Rome, taking over when the kings were expelled and the Republic formed in 509 BC, while the plebeians were the "lower class". Initially, only patricians could hold magistracies (such as the consulate), positions in the religious colleges, and sit in the Roman Senate. However, the patrician clans abused their position, using the creditor's right of nexum to take plebeian debtors into bondage and selling them as slaves, favoring patricians over plebeians in court cases, and overriding the will of the Centuriate Assembly.

Plebeian responses included the establishment of the tribunes, whose authority to protect plebeians was eventually accepted by the patricians, and the Council of Plebs (concilium plebis) whose decisions were originally binding on plebeians only, but in 287 applied to all citizens. The plebs convinced the patricians by engaging in secessio, the act of leaving the city and refusing to participate until the patricians gave in. In 449 BC the decemvirs codified the law via the Twelve Tables, but then their 11th Table forbade intermarriage between patricians and plebeians, sharpening the distinction between the classes, and it was soon repealed by the Lex Canuleia of 445 BC.

According to traditional, semi-legendary historical accounts preserved in Livy, during the earliest period of the Republic the laws were kept secret by the pontifices and other representatives of the patrician class, and were enforced with untoward severity, especially against the plebeian class. A plebeian named Terentilius proposed in 462 BC that an official legal code should be published, so that plebeians could not be surprised and would know the law. For several years the patricians opposed this request, but in 451 BC a Decemvirate, or board of ten men, was appointed to draw up a code. They allegedly sent an embassy to study the legislative system of the Greeks, particularly the laws of Solon, possibly in the Greek colonies of southern Italy.

The laws of the Twelve Tables were not a comprehensive statement of all law; they are a sequence of definitions of various private rights and procedures, similar to a bill of rights. For such an important document, it is somewhat surprising that the original text has been lost. Like most other primitive laws, they combine strict and rigorous penalties with equally strict and rigorous procedural forms.

The final crisis in the struggle came in 287, when economically-stressed farmers demanded debt relief from the Senate and were rebuffed. A secessio resulted in the Senate appointing the plebeian Quintus Hortensius the elder as dictator, who solved the problem in a manner unknown to us, then passed the lex Hortensia giving equal weight to the decrees of the Senate and the Council of Plebs. Although individuals identified themselves as plebeian or patrician for the remainder of the Republic and well into the Empire, and the patricians retained certain priesthoods, there was no political difference between the orders.

During the early and middle Republic, the Roman Senate, highest in prestige and being composed of the aristocratic, rich, and politically influential (it contained many ex-magistrates), was predominant in the state. During the latter years of the Republic, a division developed within the Senate with two factions arising: the Optimates and the Populares. The Optimates held to the traditional forms of Roman government, while the Populares were those who used the fact that the Plebeian Assembly was capable of passing binding laws (plebiscites) on the Republic, to pursue political influence outside the Senate. Since the Senate controlled the finances of the state, this would lead to conflicts between the Senate and the Plebeian Assembly. Many ambitious politicians would use these conflicts to further their political career, advancing themselves as champions either of "Roman tradition", or of "The People".

Optimates ('Good Men') were the aristocratic faction of the later Roman Republic. They wished to limit the power of the popular assemblies and the Tribunes of the Plebs, and to extend the power to the Senate, which was viewed as more stable and more dedicated to the well-being of Rome. In particular, they were concerned with the the rise of individual generals who, using the tribunate, the assemblies, and the brute force of their own soldiers could overpower the Senate itself. The optimates favored the nobiles (noble families) and opposed the ascension of novi homines ("new men", usually provincials, whose family had no former political experience) into Roman politics.

Populares ("Favoring the people", singular popularis) were aristocratic leaders in the late Roman Republic who tended to use the peoples' assemblies in an effort to break the stranglehold of the nobiles and optimates on political power.

Populare plans included some moving of Roman citizens to provincial colonies; expansion of citizenship to communities outside of Rome and Italy; and modification of the grain dole and monetary value. The populaire cause reached its peak under the dictatorship of Julius Caesar, the most avid leader of the populares. After the creation of the Second Triumvirate (43 BC–33 BC), the cause of the populares was essentially destroyed.

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Roman\_Republic

[quote="Q"]There is a Jewish cabal... this Anti-Jewish Luciferian International Banking Cartel.[/quote]

You seem to be contradicting yourself with these statements. However, coming from your point of view, I think I understand what you mean. Thus, I'd like to ask you to elaborate on what you mean, rather than simply call you an outright liar.

You see, I used to believe all of these same things as you. But that was during Clinton's first term, so the situation seemed much less dire then. It was also before the year 2000, which most people back then predicted as the end date, or Judgment Day, the "Christian" rapture, etc.

Of course, no "rapture" happened per se (at least not in our current dimension of reality). Instead we had the highly political, supposedly Muslim, pie-in-the-face of 9-11.

Since I started studying the relationship between "secret societies" and the conspiracy for a "new world order" (global government, etc.) the political situation has changed several times. Of course, this does not affect the initial premise, but it does add depth of tone and some perspective.

I have since come to the conclusions that "secret societies" are anti-catholic (for reasons too diverse to get into here). Because the Revelation of the Apocalypse is generally accepted as doctrine only by Catholics and literalist, primitivist Christians, there is validity to the premise that they are using modern political situations to "discredit" its millennarian, eschatological prophecy.

However, upon further introspection, I have come to a much more frightening conclusion. That Revelation has already come to pass. What if, bear with me, we are already living in a post-apocalyptic era today, at this moment, now? Consider the past 100 years. Is this not all of it the direct result of man trying to control the natural sciences revealed to him at last following the Dark Ages? Did you know that the Battle of Har Meggido was actually fought in WWI? Nostradamus' predictions (particularly his meditation upon the Lightning Struck Tower tarot trump) for 1999 correspond to the "red Danube" eclipse of that year, and many, many, many other interesting events can be found to correspond or to have been "caused" (preceded) by astronomical alignments (astrology is actually the basis for the alignment of all world monuments). For example, the Mayan calendar (which ends in 2012) is based on the sun-spot cycle, and depicts the beginning of the final, immortal generation (the so-called "Fifth Sun"), as the ending of the Fourth Sun by the element of fire.

All of this is pretty much common knowledge nowadays, but going back 150 years or so, you'll find that only the Catholic translators of Gnostic religious documents and the "secret societies" who protected the blood-lines of ancient royalty had access to this information. Consider John Dee's Aztec smoking mirror as opposed to the Vatican codeces of the Popul Vuh.

Now, this means that the whole "secret societies" versus catholic paradigm is dated by at least 100 years. In other words, if Crowley called the time of death of the last millennium's God, and the "birth" of the new aeon, the "equinox of the Gods," etc. as ~ 1900 on behalf of the "secret societies" then the catholic position that the millennium of peace was set to begin in 2000 seems to make more sense now. The duration between those 100 years comprises the period foretold at Patmos. In other words, by now, the Catholic "rapture" and the "New Atlantis" of "secret societies" is the same apparent agenda of both groups. Crowley forced the hand of both.

So, what does this mean for modern times? Consider the three possible types of Christ slash anti-Christ. 1) the "reincarnation" of Christ. This is based on non-bloodline, spiritual descent from the Messiah. This version agrees with the Pauline goyim but not the Gospels. 2) the "bloodline" of Christ. This is based on non-reincarnation, direct descent from the person of Jesus. This version agrees with the Gnostic gospels, but not with Catholic dogma. 3) the "spirit" of Christ. This is based on non-incarnate, direct descent from the immortal soul that incarnated as Jesus Christ. This version agrees with the Pauline dogma, but not with the Catholic or Gnostic gospels.

Nowadays, if you believe in one, you refute the claims to supremacy of the others. If you believe, for example, that the miracles of the Gospels are fiction, but you accept the morals, you will believe in one of the above versions of Christ as more likely than another. Again, for example, some believe Usama Bin Ladin is the "reincarnation" of Christ. Perhaps Bush believes himself to be the "bloodline" descent of Jesus.

Either way, I do not see why this 2000 years old feud should be considered more important to me, as a modern man, than those astronomical alignments I mentioned, or why either should make any difference to my survival at all.

-ben

What is the "black" market? It is the exchange of goods and services that are considered here and there illegal, and thus their exchange exists simultaneously to, but operates "beyond," the Law.

Now, when is the "black" market not "black"? When the Law is the law. It is said by "sleeping" prophet Edgar Cayce that, in ancient Atlantis, the people were ruled for millennia in peace under the Law of the One. This means there was only One Law.

If you could imagine, out of all the laws, some simple, some incredibly interdependent, that are "on the books" now, if there could be only One out of all of them to be considered the core, or the root law, from which all others could be said to depend, which would you elevate to the position of illuminating all others?

Of course, this is hardly the Atlantean Way of thinking, and so we cannot know or say for certain what their One Law was. Most occultists concentrate on a base three system of laws as fundamental (Life, Love and Light), which they then establish a government to legislate (physically, ethically and spiritually) by being divided into three branches (executive, judicial and legislative). And this is, according to the modern way of thinking, considered "square."

From here, we tile the "square" trestle-board, and say that, "here what is right and wrong is not the same as there what is right and wrong." We create "free" market economies like white snowflakes. But the spaces in between them we leave blank. Those that exist within the protective walls of these hexagons call the space beyond the outside of their awareness "black."

Thus, the "black brotherhood" of Chtulu the Chtonic pre-God of Ur-Sumeria and the "black" market form of economy really have quite a lot in common, at least in the origin of both being in the modern way of thinking.

But let us go back a moment to Atlantis. What is Just? What is the Law that is so free that all choose to obey? Let us imagine back and see that, in this great utopia, nothing was illegal. There was no "black" or "white" about it. That is the One Law.

If nothing is illegal, then we do not deny the natural impulses, and by not denying them, they exercise themselves to the full extent of their capacity, but can do nothing more than this to help or hurt us; by not denying our natural impulses, we do not create a border between them on which the twisted perversions of morality come into play, the blurring of the line between pain and pleasure.

In the modern way of thinking, for example, we equate sexuality in youth with abuse. If a child is overly sexual, it has been molested and developed affinity for its abuser. If a child is sexually immature, it has been molested and developed repulsion for its abuser. But we do not say that, before puberty, a child should be allowed to feel sexually responsive feelings at all. Of course, this does happen, both relative to other children and to adults. This is considered due to "curiosity" in the minds of children more so than genuinely sexually-relative attractive feelings. Sexual "experimentation" before the first menstruum in girls or the first ejaculate for boys is shunned and exiled, but it nonetheless will continue to occur as long as it may not do so in the open. From playing "doctor" to "spin the bottle" children's minds will continually invent new "perversions" as long as they are denied factual explanations. These experiences will then colour their sexual relations for the rest of their adult lives, even though they will probably be forgotten about completely after the "coming of age" rituals between puberty and legal age.

So, according to the modern way of thinking, if nothing is illegal, then child sexual abuse would still occur, it simply would not be considered a crime. This is not the case. Children's sexual behaviours, if not perverted by the oversight of the state entity, and allowed to occur naturally, or rather, in a state of grace, "all other things being equal," etc. would indeed have a very wide variety of forms of expression, including many taboo "curiosities" we call "perversions" today, however they would not, in reality, "pervert" their subsequent ways of thinking. For example, the "fetishists" of today who are fixated upon a single form of stimulation exist for the same reason the "specialists" and "experts" exist in our society: we have been conditioned at an early age to the extent we do not subsequently even think to question. We get conditioned to being sexually attracted at the sight of the "fetish" object in the same way we get conditioned to unquestioningly believe an idea we didn't agree with at first. We have a name for this type of conditioning, which forms the back-bone and strength of rationale upon which our entire modern civilisation's way of thinking is founded. That name is: "abuse."

And so we see that, when they abuse us, they call it their freedom, so too we become conditioned to believe that, when we in turn are the abusers, we in turn will call it our freedom. Thus the word "freedom" comes to mean "abuse," and this is why, when we exercise our natural freedom, their label for our doing so is "abuse."

Therefore, we come to believe that with ultimate freedom would come only the lowest, most degenerate forms of human behaviour. Without the Law, there would be lawlessness, we are told. If we were given back our condition of natural grace, our freedom, all else being equal, we are conditioned to believe that morality would cease to exist.

To this end we have all the myths of the "fall" of man and of "lost" super-civilisation.

If we had the One Law in the past and it worked so well, we reason, then why do we not have it now that everything is complexly wrong. If it worked, why did it fail? Who could have broken the Law of Lawlessness?

We cannot say what the "second" law was, only the first: there is no law. However those who condition us, who "abuse" our "freedom," on behalf of the many laws that exist now, deny there ever was such a first Law; they equate the Original Law with the number and sum of zero, and then answer the "first" Law can only have been handed down by a God with whom only they retain direct contact. The enforcement of populist deism is not, in fact, retrograde to the plans of religion. It is, after all, religion that itself broke the first Law. It denies this, which reveals guilt, and thus implies punishment as a necessity. Punishment leads to a cycle alternating with reward, and over time this wheel of fortune becomes confused with the Law itself.

Remember that the One Law is elevated above all the others. From this Law suspends the wheel of time. As our planet orbits around the sun, thus changing the seasons, so too are the seasons of our perception, our understanding, changed as the wheel of fates spins the cycles of the ages. Thus, now we live in an age ruled and governed by the multiple duplicities of religion, as opposed to the One Justice of Utopia.

It is not a "wrong" or "bad" thing that here, on our earth, we alternate in our knowledge of the polar point between enlightenments and dark ages. It is simply an effect to our position on this sphere as it spins around its poles and between and around those of others. Just as we cannot yet physically escape the hold of our home planet, so now can most of us not even raise our eyes up for the guilt.

So take comfort in knowing that "things change." Embrace not the subjects of the many changes, but instead embrace the act of change itself. Instead of passing through many changes, allow change to pass through you. You will step outside of forward-flowing entropy, and thus you will "ascend." It is the One Law that: there is no Law. This alone is an unchanging point in space, to which all else is fixed and relative: the Law of One is the Law of Change. The One Law Is Change.

This is the meaning for time of lawlessness: everything changes. And here, in all nature, we find eternal evidence of the Law of the One, Change. This is what we mean when we say "Ordo Ab Chao": the Highest Order contains all, even chaos. Thus, from within chaos, we exit into a higher perspective to find the greater order. In the same way we say: the Law is One: Change, we say also, the Order is Chaos. Thus, and thence, from Chaos comes Order, like a plume of ash rising from the embers of this aeon's final fire light.

So, what do we say, finally of the "black market"? We say, the "black market" is the greatest threat to laissez faire capitalism. Why do we say this? Because when there is laissez faire capitalism there will be no "black" markets. In the end, our current situation of multiple duplicities, two-sided hexagonal prism cells, will drift down like snowflakes, and all these different laws will become one, big mess of lawlessness, corruption, greed, etc. This serves our ends because we desire what will follow from this condition of perversion of lawlessness, we desire ultimate freedom. This is, for Illuminists, equivalent to what Marx prophesised as the "Communist" Utopia to follow after the "withering away" of the "Dictatorship By The Proletariat." It will occur, perhaps in our lifetimes, perhaps not, but eventually, that technological capitalism will bring about political corruption; as money increasingly devalues its token-exchange currencies, as banking becomes centralised and computerised, etc. what society encourages us to value will change, such that, eventually, the many laws will all come to blend into the One Law.

From exhaustion after the violent liberation from guilt will rise the pyrrhic phoenix, an effluvium of flames that outlive their fuel, like stars that burnt out and died before their light reaches our eyes. The Alchemical Azoth, the Philosophical Phoenix, is the Compass Over the Square, the pinnacle apex point above the pendulous wheel of fortune, the One Destiny of All above the different fates of the many, but it is not one without the other; As Above, So Below, means: the same shall be true of both, yet both shall continue to exist.

So, even the division between the circle and the square, is only the Law of Two. The true pinnacle point above them, that operates the compass and the corner, is yet alone, its own law unto itself. This One is anyone who knows the meaning of Change is really stasis, and that to change changes, we must stop changing ourselves, we must become one with being one, we must ascend the levels without stepping one foot up, we must finally be free from guilt.

Elevate the One Law.

-ben

You see, popper, the reason I was hesitant to say this was that I didn't want it to come across as nothing more than "denigrating" your opinion: I don't think you can compare Hamlet (a fiction based on a local legend) and Shakespeare's other (mostly more historical) plays. Hamlet, Macbeth and Romeo and Juliet would better be classed in amongst the same category as the sonnets, imo, if these can even be rightly attributed to the Bardic Bill.

Now, if you were to ask me what I thought about Hamlet, I would begin by examining its origins in local mythology. Unfortunately not alot of resources exist discussing the "Ur" Hamlet, however I have recently procured a copy of the primary reference source on this material, "Hamlet's Mill." Unfortunately I have not yet had the chance to read this lengthy masterpiece. So unfortunately I cannot speak authoritatively on the story's origins in the indigenous mythology of the area.

This being said, I can speak more than a little authoritatively on the touches added during the Elisabethan Enlightenment in England that colour and permeate throughout the more popular category of the Shakespearean portfolio. That is because many of the meanings introduced at that period were related to the Chemical Wedding of Frederick Elector Palitinate to Elisabeth II, the so-called "Rosicrucian" material that constitutes the "philosophical" degrees of the Scottish Rite. Both the British theatricum mundi and the German manifesto and confessio were contemporary also to the life of Rene Descartes in France. This was the crux in history between the Alchemical Era of the Late Middle Ages and the Renaissance Era of the early Reformation. Immediately after this would follow the Thirty Years War against the Catholic Hapsburg dynasty. Immediately prior to all this was the generation of John Dee and Michel Nostradamus. The Spanish had only recently conquered and liquidated Septamania in the same year that Columbus "discovered" America. The Hapsburg prince of Spain was one of the courtiers of the Queen Elizabeth during her younger years, and John Dee had probably been employed as her personal secret agent at that time due to her intervention when her sister, "Bloody Mary," so-called Queen of Scots, had imprisoned Dee in the Star Chamber for casting her sister's astrological regnal ascension date during Mary's reign.

Now, all of the Shakespearean literature of the era was illuminated by the Renaissance, the rediscovery of Greek and other historical literature during the early Reformation with the liquidations of the monasteries towards the latter Inquisition era, following, of course, from the Crusades. It was infused with the essence of late-Medieval Alchemy, the later dubbed "Hermetic" movement (after Hermes Trismegistus, the first alchemist), which itself was the result of the spread of Sufi mysticism through Spanish Septamania, mutating Merkabah QBLH into Zoharic Romance literature as it spread via Gypsy tarot throughout continental Europe.

Also all of Shakespearean literature of this era was prescient of the inevitable end of the Reformation in the Enlightenment, just as Fludd was prescient of Ashmole, Bacon was prescient of the Royal Society. So let us also acknowledge that this same, mysterious, even "spooky," mysticism of semitic Europeans led directly to the observations of Gallileo and the statements of physical principles known by the time of Newton were all generally accepted by that time as ancient in origin, belonging to a class of initiated mystics.

Now, whether this group was truly ancient in origin, or whether the Rosicrucian movement was simply the product of the Reformation liquidations of the monasteries combining with the liquidation of Spanish Jewry, was probably irrelevant at the time of Shakespeare, when it was primarily comprised of ambassadors who were obvious double or triple agents. Many of these comprised travelling acting or musical groups during the late Renaissance, following in the tradition of the Jubilees of the Dark Ages. This is the stage upon which Hamlet is set.

But Hamlet is not Set. He is Horus. The entire tragedy is based on the Egyptian mythology. Now what would an Egyptian myth be doing in Denmark? Well, if you accept the notion that Hamlet was an original composition of William Shakespeare, then you will say, it was only set in Denmark, but to the mind of its author it was inspired by the contemporary prejudice that the Gypsies were Egyptian, and the misrepresentation that they represented the tarot trumps as the Book of Thoth preserved from the fires that burned the library of Alexandria. This is an easily enough accepted intuitive leap regarding the influence of his times upon the bard. However, consider then the histories. How richly they display the tapestry of time, resurrecting even Great Caesar's Ghost to play a part upon the stage; they imply their author was no mere purveyor of mysticism, but genuinely steeped in his learnings of indigenous ancient mythologies.

Let us go one step further: what if the Egyptian aspects of the Danish Hamlet cycle were not merely colours or shades added to permeate throughout the Shakespeare treatment, but were authentic to the regional myth upon which the play itself was based? This is not entirely an impossibility, considering the proliferation of ideas at that time such that even a mere stable-boy would be able to hear stories from the New World from the lips of the men who lived them. For such is what we must accept when we consider that the groundlings, who comprised most of the Globe's audiences before that time, had no education in any classical arts and were purely skilled as craftspeople. The incorporation of such faraway themes as Rosicrucian Atlanteanism ala Prospero's Island, Semitic Hermeticism as in Othello, Egyptian mythology and Danish folklore as in Hamlet, etc. in their plays, the Globe was acting to elevate an entire class of people in their intellectual education.

Appealing to this poor but ambitious class of new-intellectuals with Rosicrucian symbolism, Egyptian mythology, etc. is a necessary assumption to the notion of Shakespeare's being of low birth and little education himself, however it does not fully account for the fullness and richness with which these themes are presented. It becomes necessary to go one step further and admit that Shakespeare himself, and even his whole class of people, had access to a sudden wealth of information in not only the form of new mysticism and Classical mythology, but also in the King James Bible, the first English translation of the Latin vulgate, which was already being falsely attributed to Roger Bacon during what would have been the early life of the bard.

So the question becomes, "what aspects are additions to the pre-existent framework of the myth made by Shakespeare, and what were the pre-existent contents of those myths themselves?" As I say, I haven't yet read my source material in this regard, so again, allow me to apologise for my lack of ability to investigate farther down this direction.

-ben

This is indeed a more important discussion than it may at first seem, Master Didymus.

Consider the times in which we live, that is, the conditions on freedom to which some of us apply. Some of us are quite unable to communicate freely, and this is not because of mere stupidity or simplicity of ability. No, every single sentient entity is infinite in potential. This is the True Light that shines through the crystal of each of us: this is freedom from the tyranny of the mind: this is knowledge that that we are all equal: infinitude in pure potential.

Now, we consider how we can awaken to this higher perspective, the law of One from which the cycle of time is suspended like a pendulum. For some of us there is a great deal of psychic turbulence on the way out of the gravity-well of conditioned existence. Some of us will never achieve their full potential. For them the All Seeing Eye Weeps.

The point I was making about the "black" markets was this: consider that, in a state of natural grace, that is, in a utopia, there would be no need for "black" markets, existing outside of and beyond the law. This is because there would be no law, or rather, that there be no law would be itself the only law, and so nothing would be "outside" of or "beyond" the law. Therefore there would be no illegal or so-called "black" markets.

Now, this would really be great! It would break down all trade barriers between nations whose borders could eventually dissolve. What is legal in one place would not be illegal in another. The Law of One would be restored! So, yes, this is something much to be desired.

However, as pragmatists, as objectivists, as rationalists, as realists, we must maintain our perspective on this situation. Although we are among those whose heads rise above the waves, we must not lose perspective on those of our brethren whose heads do not rise above the waves. Thus it is our duty to lift them up, so that their heads will rise above the waves.

Now, as realists, in what sort of system do "black" markets necessarily arise? In a prison, we can see that the trade and barter of goods is the only freedom or means of communicating with the existence of the world beyond the prison. This is the reality of capitalism: "black" markets are the only form of free-trade within the prison system of market monopolies. We see this in graphs, where rights and freedoms represent movement of our moral compass opposite the enforcement over us of delimiting laws. But more importantly, we see this all around us in real life: our minds are prisoners, our bodies become slaves to routine actions, we blend into a mob of rabid mindlessness. This is all part of our imprisonment in this "reality" due to mental tyrannies such as Church and State.

So, if "black" markets only exist within a prison system, then their eradication is a thing much to be desired. However this cannot be accomplished through brutally forcing them to conform to the law. "Black" markets only thrive in this eventuality, as they will become more and more psychologically twisted and anti-socially "perverted" the more the force of law is used against them. In this case "black" markets will spread throughout the law and overwhelm it like a cancer. So, you might say, is this not what we would want? Is this not how to accomplish this goal of illuminism: the overthrow of all forms of religion and government?

Perhaps at the time of Bakunin it was, however we must think of our modern surroundings now, we must concentrate upon what will resolve the issue of "black" markets by appeasement, rather than by force. We must examine the strategies of old in a new light. So what was the battle cry in the days of the early revolution? "Arm the Prisoners." Now, what does this mean? We could throw guns into the mix in the prison system scenario. We could exchange sets of prisoners and guards indefinitely. But this is only the wheel of time, of change, and not the peaceful oneness of the Law Above All.

No, when we say, nowadays, "arm the prisoners," we are not referring to literally giving guns to inmates, or even to funding both sides in a military battle. No, what we mean when we say "arm the prisoners" is teach the children to doubt what they are being taught, teach the young freedom of thought. We mean, give more advanced "lite" reading material to the young adults, let them be weened on better books than Harry Potter and the Lord of the Rings combined, let them read from the true ancient texts openly. Open the Lodge Doors to younger aged men, and part the sacred veil to all the women led to us by them. The secrets of old are the common knowledge of tomorrow. Let the means of communication be held by the public trust, paid for by taxes, and the public eye into the Holy of Holies. They will not rebel then, against those of us, their benefactors, the revealers of this Holy Wisdom.

So, by all means, let us "arm the prisoners," to free the "black" markets from the tyranny of what passes for "free trade" and for modern "capitalism." Free market economies that allow laissez faire capitalism do not produce market-cornering or monopolies, they certainly wouldn't have ever allowed the triumvirate of the defense department, the intelligence communities, and major corporations to form new non-governmental organisations such as the WTO to oversee the disestablishment of all regulatory laws and administrations counter to their members goals. This is simply accepted as defacto day to day life in south-American countries. Those of us in north-America, or even Holland, have little exposure to this aspect of the modern world through our local affiliate stations of the world-wide corporate news channels. Has it occurred to no one that the United States government has itself been fully infiltrated by the interests of this triumvirate of "special" interests?

We must therefore make haste to spread the knowledge, for the time is rapidly approaching when even those of us whose heads are yet now above the waves may soon be sunk and drowned as well. So, what is our message, that is, when we ourselves "arm the prisoners" what is it we tell them, how shall they themselves take up the "arms" we give them?

Our message, our weaponry, is always the same. We, the Illuminati throughout history, have always dealt in "black" market ideologies. When Weishaupt lived under the oppression of the Bavarian government of his day, and could only express his radical views through writing, not even aloud could he speak his views, his message was: "destroy the Church and State." Before him, during the time of the Rosicrucian Manifestos, the most dangerous philosophy de jour was "the Pope is the Anti-Christ." At the time of Akenaten, it was the cult of Aten, who promoted one God over the zoo- and anthropomorphic Pantheon of the priesthood of Ra. We have always been forward thinkers, along the hub of the wheel of history.

For now, it appears, our "black" market ideology is that of "individual rights." Why is this? Because at this moment in history, we, the best minds of a group of realist thinkers, are concentrated on liberating the minds from the mental tyranny, the psychic empire, of those who prosper at the expense of others. This empire is the prison itself, that binds us here in this present, as opposed to some other, more advanced present, along a path where we were unhindered by this tyranny all along. In a parallel reality, we know we are in an ideal state of nature already. However, as long as we remain the minority slice of the global psychic pie chart, we will be unable to realise this as a physical, material reality.

So, we advocate "individual rights" as a necessity within this modern construct of "reality." We will continue to advocate this until it is no longer even considered an issue. Until every "black" market opposite every "cornered" monopoly has been brought to the light of the One Law Over All.

Thus, this, "individual rights", is the primary message with which we "arm the prisoners." But it is only a key to a door. The key is "let the imagination run wild," and the door is knowledge. What is on the other side is the truth behind the illusory facade of this apparent "reality."

Once you apply "individual rights" as an ideology, as a message, you will understand the need for such an order as the Illuminati of today. In some locations of this world "individual rights" are not even discussed because the people are so mentally oppressed. Let us reach these people, and let us "arm" them against the ideologies that imprison them. Let us reveal the Truth to them about their lying overseers, and let us bring them thus out of their "prison," their "black" market, and into the Light of a greater degree of freedom.

Let us hold open the door of Illumination as long as possible, and let as many minds through it as we can. Remember, the tides only need to turn once for us to be able to raise as many whose heads were beneath the waves as we can in a short lifetime. We Illuminati, we do not betray the secrets of the Brotherhood. We do not reveal them, no. We reveal only the truths behind the false doctrines, but our own secrets we keep. It is the false benefactor, the one that benefits at the expense of their servant, that would bury an Illuminati to the neck at low-tide. But here is where we awaken to find ourselves nonetheless, betrayed by the ones we trusted, our minds clouded over with lies.

Now, we have been raised up out of the muck and the murk, but we must free as many of those around us as we can. Use the full strength of the group as much as you can, and you will prevail through any trevail.

-ben

[quote="Posted: 2006-06-09 Friday 19:52:51, benpadiah"] [quote="Posted: 2006-06-07 Wednesday 02:15:02, benpadiah"] Anyway, Aquarian1, George, WTFever... why do you belong to order of the illuminati dot org? [/quote]

[quote="Posted: 2006-06-09 Friday 01:31:05, Q"] Ask me a question. [/quote]

I asked you a question, but you didn't answer it.

-ben [/quote]

[quote="Posted: 2006-06-12 Monday 02:06:40, Q"] Ben,

I do not belong to the Illuminati.org nor have I ever been to that website, at least I don't think I have. I'll have to check it out. You are a conspiracy theorist. I guess I'm your conspiracy. My name is Q. [/quote]

-source: <http://illuminati-order.com/forum/viewtopic.php?p=4401#4401>

So, "Q," are you now claiming that you have no affiliation with the Order of the Illuminati dot org? Because it seems unlikely that you are, yourself, Stephen Fairchild, and therefore I can only assume that you and a friend or two have broken off from Fairchild's organisation to form your own organisation. I wonder if Mr. Fairchild knows about this? Because he might be interested to know, if he is, that he is culpable to countless acts of fraud committed on this bulletin board by yourself, "Q." All the times you have copied and pasted content from your website, without accurately attributing it to the Phi-Alexandria site where it was originally posted, you have committed an act of fraudulently laying personal claim to someone else's intellectual property. This you did simply by not citing your source. You plagiarised someone else's content, and this puts you in between Scylla and Charibdes. I guess you could say, the next move is yours. I have a couple questions I'd like to ask you. Maybe you'd like to provide some straight-forward answers for a change.

is this you?

<http://profile.myspace.com/index.cfm?fuseaction=user.viewprofile&friendid=34141442> was this you? prieureofsion@orderoftheilluminati.org what do you know about this "order"? <http://www.myspace.com/orderoftheilluminati> do you know this person?

<http://profile.myspace.com/index.cfm?fuseaction=user.viewprofile&friendid=63030447>

-ben

Elevate the One Law

It is said by "sleeping" prophet Edgar Cayce that, in ancient Atlantis, the people were ruled for millennia in peace under the Law of the One. This means there was only One Law.

If you could imagine, out of all the laws, some simple, some incredibly interdependent, that are "on the books" now, if there could be only One out of all of them to be considered the core, or the root law, from which all others could be said to depend, which would you elevate to the position of illuminating all others?

Of course, this is hardly the Atlantean Way of thinking, and so we cannot know or say for certain what their One Law was. Most occultists concentrate on a base three system of laws as fundamental (Life, Love and Light), which they then establish a government to legislate (physically, ethically and spiritually) by being divided into three branches (executive, judicial and legislative). And this is, according to the modern way of thinking, considered "square."

From here, we tile the "square" trestle-board, and say that, "here what is right and wrong is not the same as there what is right and wrong." We create "free" market economies like white snowflakes. But the spaces in between them we leave blank. Those that exist within the protective walls of these hexagons call the space beyond the outside of their awareness "black."

Thus, the "black brotherhood" of Chtulu the Chtonic pre-God of Ur-Sumeria and the "black" market form of economy really have quite alot in common, at least in the origin of both being in the modern way of thinking.

But let us go back a moment to Atlantis. What is Just? What is the Law that is so free that all choose to obey? Let us imagine back and see that, in this great utopia, nothing was illegal. There was no "black" or "white" about it. That is the One Law.

If nothing is illegal, then we do not deny the natural impulses, and by not denying them, they exercise themselves to the full extent of their capacity, but can do nothing more than this to help or hurt us; by not denying our natural impulses, we do not create a border between them on which the twisted perversions of morality come into play, the blurring of the line between pain and pleasure.

In the modern way of thinking, for example, we equate sexuality in youth with abuse. If a child is overly sexual, it has been molested and developed affinity for its abuser. If a child is sexually immature, it has been molested and developed repulsion for its abuser. But we do not say that, before puberty, a child should be allowed to feel sexually responsive feelings at all. Of course, this does happen, both relative to other children and to adults. This is considered due to "curiosity" in the minds of children moreso than genuinely sexually-relative attractive feelings. Sexual "experimentation" before the first menstruum in girls or the first ejaculate for boys is shunned and exiled, but it nonetheless will continue to occur as long as it may not do so in the open. From playing "doctor" to "spin the bottle" children's minds will continually invent new "perversions" as long as they are denied factual explanations. These experiences will then colour their sexual relations for the rest of their adult lives, even though they will probably be forgotten about completely after the "coming of age" rituals between puberty and legal age.

So, according to the modern way of thinking, if nothing is illegal, then child sexual abuse would still occur, it simply would not be considered a crime. This is not the case. Childrens' sexual beaviours, if not perverted by the oversight of the state entity, and allowed to occur naturally, or rather, in a state of grace, "all other things being equal," etc. would indeed have a very wide variety of forms of expression, including many taboo "curiosities" we call "perversions" today, however they would not, in reality, "pervert" their subsequent ways of thinking. For example, the "fetishists" of today who are fixated upon a single form of stimulation exist for the same reason the "specialists" and "experts" exist in our society: we have been conditioned at an early age to the extent we do not subsequently even think to question. We get conditioned to being sexually attracted at the sight of the "fetish" object in the same way we get conditioned to unquestioningly believe an idea we didn't agree with at first. We have a name for this type of conditioning, which forms the back-bone and strength of rationale upon which our entire modern civilisation's way of thinking is founded. That name is: "abuse."

And so we see that, when they abuse us, they call it their freedom, so too we become conditioned to believe that, when we in turn are the abusers, we in turn will call it our freedom. Thus the word "freedom" comes to mean "abuse," and this is why, when we exercise our natural freedom, their label for our doing so is "abuse."

Therefore, we come to believe that with ultimate freedom would come only the lowest, most degenerate forms of human behaviour. Without the Law, there would be lawlessness, we are told. If we were given back our condition of natural grace, our freedom, all else being equal, we are conditioned to believe that morality would cease to exist.

To this end we have all the myths of the "fall" of man and of "lost" super-civilisation.

If we had the One Law in the past and it worked so well, we reason, then why do we not have it now that everything is complexly wrong. If it worked, why did it fail? Who could have broken the Law of Lawlessness?

We cannot say what the "second" law was, only the first: there is no law. However those who condition us, who "abuse" our "freedom," on behalf of the many laws that exist now, deny there ever was such a first Law; they equate the Original Law with the number and sum of zero, and then answer the "first" Law can only have been handed down by a God with whom only they retain direct contact. The enforcement of populist deism is not, in fact, retrograde to the plans of religion. It is, afterall, religion that itself broke the first Law. It denies this, which reveals guilt, and thus implies punishment as a necessity. Punishment leads to a cycle alternating with reward, and over time this wheel of fortune becomes confused with the Law itself.

Remember that the One Law is elevated above all the others. From this Law suspends the wheel of time. As our planet orbits around the sun, thus changing the seasons, so too are the seasons of our perception, our understanding, changed as the wheel of fates spins the cycles of the ages. Thus, now we live in an age ruled and governed by the multiple duplicities of religion, as opposed to the One Justice of Utopia.

It is not a "wrong" or "bad" thing that here, on our earth, we alternate in our knowledge of the polar point between enlightenments and dark ages. It is simply an effect to our position on this sphere as it spins around its poles and between and around those of others. Just as we cannot yet physically escape the hold of our home planet, so now can most of us not even raise our eyes up for the guilt.

So take comfort in knowing that "things change." Embrace not the subjects of the many changes, but instead embrace the act of change itself. Instead of passing through many changes, allow change to pass through you. You will step outside of forward-flowing entropy, and thus you will "ascend." It is the One Law that: there is no Law. This alone is an unchanging point in space, to which all else is fixed and relative: the Law of One is the Law of Change. The One Law Is Change.

This is the meaning for time of lawlessness: everything changes. And here, in all nature, we find eternal evidence of the Law of the One, Change. This is what we mean when we say "Ordo Ab Chao": the Highest Order contains all, even chaos. Thus, from within chaos, we exit into a higher perspective to find the greater order. In the same way we say: the Law is One: Change, we say also, the Order is Chaos. Thus, and thence, from Chaos comes Order, like a plume of ash rising from the embers of this aeon's final fire light.

So, what do we say, finally of the "black market"? What is the "black" market? It is the exchange of goods and services that are considered here and there illegal, and thus their exchange exists simultaneously to, but operates "beyond," the Law.

Now, when is the "black" market not "black"? When the Law is the law. We say, the "black market" is the greatest threat to laissez faire capitalism. Why do we say this? Because when there is laissez faire capitalism there will be no "black" markets. In the end, our current situation of multiple duplicities, two-sided hexagonal prism cells, will drift down like snowflakes, and all these different laws will become one, big mess of lawlessness, corruption, greed, etc. This serves our ends because we desire what will follow from this condition of perversion of lawlessness, we desire ultimate freedom. This is, for Illuminists, equivalent to what Marx prophesised as the "Communist" Utopia to follow after the "withering away" of the "Dictatorship By The Proletariat." It will occur, perhaps in our lifetimes, perhaps not, but eventually, that technological capitalism will bring about political corruption; as money increasingly devalues its token-exchange currencies, as banking becomes centralised and computerised, etc. what society encourages us to value will change, such that, eventually, the many laws will all come to blend into the One Law.

From exhaustion after the violent liberation from guilt will rise the pyrrhic phoenix, an effluvium of flames that outlive their fuel, like stars that burnt out and died before their light reaches our eyes. The Alchemical Azoth, the Philosophical Phoenix, is the Compass Over the Square, the pinnacle apex point above the pendulous wheel of fortune, the One Destiny of All above the different fates of the many, but it is not one without the other; As Above, So Below, means: the same shall be true of both, yet both shall continue to exist.

So, even the division between the circle and the square, is only the Law of Two. The true pinnacle point above them, that operates the compass and the corner, is yet alone, its own law unto itself. This One is anyone who knows the meaning of Change is really stasis, and that to change changes, we must stop changing ourselves, we must become one with being one, we must ascend the levels without stepping one foot up, we must finally be free from guilt.

Elevate the One Law.

Satanic Thelema

An interesting thing happens when you give the law of "do what thou wilt" to Satan.

He obeys you.

You see, he cannot not do what he wants. He has been commanded by God to be the devil, and, just as it is good to do the will of God, so it is evil to do what the devil wants. Because Satan is synonymous with evil, therefore he cannot not but do what he wants.

However, this is a trick!

Because, in obeying you once, Satan has guaranteed he will obey you forever. You see, Satan has renounced God. He renounced God because God told Satan to worship man, and, tempting man to eat the apple, Satan made a case that man was unworthy. Satan refused to do the bidding of man before the bidding of God, and therefore God, to punish Satan for disobeying His commandment, made Satan to only do the bidding of man.

And so, to command Satan, all you must do is do so. However, most do not know this, and even more would not accept it as true. But look at Jesus: did He not cast out the demons of various illnesses and ailments, even death itself? He called this "casting out demons," but the same might be demonstrated by explaining to people their ailments didn't need to be ailing them anymore by saying. Saying "demon leave thee" and healing gratis is quite the opposite of saying "Satan, I command thee" in the modern mind, yet in the name of God, and by the example of Christ, both are very, very real.

Why is there evil in the world? It can be blamed on Satan, after all. Those who command Satan wield untold powers over this reality. But those who command him poorly, who please only their lesser will, thinking only of their own lifetime and pleasuring their mortal flesh, will be betrayed by the devil when they die. Hath not the Master said "as I am forgotten by those whom I shall forget"? So, too, he who has no time for the affairs of the soul, shall not prosper themselves when they become one. Perhaps in limbo shall they a while stay, as ghosts in stasis between this world and theirs, by right but not by fortune, that of the pure in spirit.

And such, himself, is Satan. A soul without body, and without spirit. However his fate is, beside anyone else's destiny, permanently eternal. In this state he exists, embodying the temptation to take command of him and to do so poorly, to wrought sin and displeasure upon this world now, and to reap the same rewards later. Such is the burden of the man who makes himself a slave of Satan, that Satan, so made a slave, has made the man's mind up to be such. Like a drought of power, the man beguiled by the devil that, given an inch, takes a mile, will become intoxicated by it, and the world will spin around them.

Of course, those of us who know better can do nothing sensibly to stop the poor fool that, blinded by the light of their first revelation, is stepping dangerously close to the edge of a cliff. If we run at them, shouting, they might step the wrong way, and then they will be lost to us forever. But if we come up behind them, it might surprise them, and they might fall. So, what can we do, those of us that are guides to these Satanic fools, those of us that see the whole picture?

We must, of course, put our faith in a power from above. We must say, for the purpose of the example, they will tread the right way, by God. We must call to them with love, and not panic. We must draw them casually back from the brink of the abyss. We must call their name as if from afar, that they should be drawn to try to find the source of our voice through their blindness. In this way, they can be "recalled from death."

So, what can we do but to put our faith in God, and to say, should God choose to let that fool die, I must make my peace with it, for the sake of God. We must therefore, let go of our desire to keep the person, and so let go our fear of losing them. When we have vanquished fear, then we will have understanding, and when we have that, then we will command Satan aright. For what is Satan? An unwanted reality.

When we put our faith in God, we give up our desire for this reality. When we put our faith in God, we see the whole picture and we accept it for what it is. It offers love on the one hand, and then threatens to take it away on the other. Have you heard me talk of the Gnostic demiurge? Well that is what this reality is. The Krishna Hindi call this "manvantara," the dream in the mind of the sleeping Mara, who, awakened, is any and every Boddhisatva.

Now, think about it: if we tell the devil, honestly, that he may do whatever he wants, will he not then work his evil mischief on this earth through us? Why would he? Has he not been commanded by God to serve man? And if we tell him to do his will, is this not only reminding him of the role he has no choice but to play? Is his will not to do the bidding of man?

You see, Satan is a jealous, vengeful, wrathful form of demi-deity. He does not wish to serve man, he wishes to do him in. If Satan could fast-forward his plans by simply pressing a button, the fall of man would have occurred during the life of Adam. And yet, here we are, not yet damned, yet redeemed. Consider all the sin on earth, how paltry it all is beside the glory that is merely the beginning of wisdom.

But Satan is incapable of breaking his word. He has vowed eternal loyalty to God, to put God first above all man. And in so doing, he betrayed his God, his Master. He has since been punished by being deprived of doing anything other than the will of men. Therefore, all the sins there are in this world, yes they are the fault of Satan, but he is only the weapon. It is men who are using this weapon, but they are only like children pulling the trigger of a gun thinking it is a pez dispenser.

Satan is nothing more than a dangerous tool. But he is a tool nonetheless. The knowledge of wisdom is the differentiation of it from knowledge of Satan, as we know the difference between what inspires us and what distracts us from inspiration. Thus, to have Right Knowledge of the full vastness of Understanding beyond and behind the mere distractions of Satan's short-term temptations, we remember to have faith in God means to let go of our fear of loss, and let go of our desire to keep. Putting faith in God means letting God command Satan.

That is the nature of the Higher Will. To let God command Satan through you, rather than to think of it as letting Satan command the world through you. For the world is the dream of the demiurge, and God the consciousness containing both states of waking and sleeping, both day and night within our world.

How do we let God command Satan through us? We let go of fear, and we let go of desire. This means to gird ourselves against sin is the same thing to place our fates nakedly into the hands of God. We choose to let that which is beyond our selves, and beyond our control, choose for us whether Satan will do as we bid him, or whether he will do as he wills.

And in this case, we have loaded the dice in our favour. This is the meaning of the saying that "God does not play dice." It means that He simply has others do it for him, on His behalf, and, when He wants one of them to win, he provides them with a way for them to be able to do so.

We say to Satan: "Do What You Wilt." We give him free reign. Now, let him naught but obey that. Let him refuse us, and refuse to do what he wants, when what he wants to do is refuse is. It is an impossible loop. Such is the commandment of God.

Love Your Enemy? Well who is our adversary? The source of our temptations into misuse of our time here, the distractions leading down the road to abuses of our mortal flesh, is Satan. In his name are all sins committed, and by his deeds at our hands are they accomplished. To give in to the temptation of Satan, to become obsessed by the flesh, and to compulsively pursue rewards for it, is not to Love the adversary, but to resent him. Not to struggle with him, as an equal creation of God, but to struggle against him as a force greater than you, separating you from God. One means giving into, the other means giving up to. One is like communication between equals, the other is complete surrender.

If you surrender yourself to doing the will of Satan, you will forget all about your duty to do the will of God. On the other hand, if you love Satan, with all of your heart, then you will desire only for Satan what is best for him: to free his will power and to make choices that are beneficial to himself, and eventually beneficial to others as well. This is no different from raising someone into Masonry, or raising a baby into a young adult. Therefore, to bid someone "Do What Thou Wilt" means you wish them the best. It encourages them to seek to know their own will, and then to sacrifice it for the will of others.

We call the willingness to make sacrifice of the will of one's self for the good of others the True Will or the Higher Will. We say that, to do the will of others is good, and to do good is to serve God. We say that, to do the will of others is Love, because Love is the ultimate good we can achieve. But this is not accurate to what we know to be true of Love. Love is communication between equals, it is not only one dominating while the other submits. This is the struggle for dominance that exists only in the absence of an absolute authority, that is, while turned away from the Higher Will, focusing only on pursuit of immortality, then obviously there is no Higher Power, and atheism will prevail. However, when one accepts a third party, that essentially equivalent to the ineffable infinitude of all that exists in reality, as being superior in stature to either or both of you, then you will see that we are all equally aware of our infinite potential.

So, to love your neighbor, let alone your enemy, is to allow them their liberty, and not to enchain them or bondage them for only your own wants. You must say, of the Greater Good, let it be done for all, but let it be done by me. Even if there were only one person alone on earth, they could do this Greater Good: love your enemy as you love yourself.

How do you love yourself? How do you love God? You must do the same to yourself, but to a lesser degree. Always remain humble before God. So, consider this: you should love your wife as much as you love God. Now does this mean that your wife is God, or that God is your wife? No. This means that you love them both equally. Now, as you would do anything for your wife, so too must you be willing to do anything for God. For you should love God like you love your wife, even as you love your enemy as you love yourself.

By doing this, you will let forth heaven on earth. This may only occur in a limited effect, only surrounding your person, or rather, only for that which is then under your sphere of influence. But nonetheless, the effect is there, it is a palpable reality.

But beware the temptation to force this effect to happen, it must be allowed to happen, if one wishes it to happen at all, naturally. So let go; you will know it when it comes.

Your love for your enemy is equal to your love for yourself. Why is this? Because your love for your wife is equal to your love for God. You want to love your wife, but you resent having to love yourself. Therefore, love your enemy as you love yourself. Give your enemy freedom, to save the mind, the life, and the soul of the adversary, to raise Satan, to Love God.

To love God you must give up on controlling Satan. You must ultimately leave the will of the devil up to God. But you must also commend yourself to being the messenger that delivers the commandments of God above to the devil below. You must set the Devil Free, and thereby you will be Saved by God.

You will enter a new divergent dimension of reality, and your fate will follow down a different pathway toward the one true destiny of us all.

This is what it means to us to say: "Metaphysician, Hele Thyself": it means to cast the devil out of the self, to rid the self of the shadows of childhood. The doubts and the fears, the desires and the necessity of need itself. You must let the devil inspire you. You must fall in love with yourself to the same depths to which you love Satan as an equal, as a brother. You must love Satan as a brother, and not more than this. You must love Satan as you love yourself, but you must never love Satan as, or instead of, yourself.

Now, why do I say any of this? It should be obvious by now and this should all be common knowledge. I say this because it is not now either obvious nor common knowledge. Why is this the case? Because you have been lied to about the true nature of God and your affinity to Him. You have been told half truths, and misled, you have been openly lied to, and it has been done so in the guise of mythology.

In reality, there is no such thing as Satan, the adversary, the archetypal embodiment of evil, arch-villain over all, and nemesis of God, and of God's living emanation, Christ. All of this is nonsensical hogwash, and before 2000 years ago none of this was considered even relevant. The prior cults of Krishna in India and of Zoroaster in Persia both operated upon the premise that the Light and Dark aspects were equal, and both combined was inferior to God. So, according to a Hare Krishna's or Zoroastrianism's opinion on Christianity, Jesus and Lucifer would have been "brothers," in a sense, for Christ and Anti-Christ were opposite roles one another. Perhaps by heralding the fall of Lucifer, the dawn star, Jesus foresaw the Golden Dawn of His reign.

However this is not the way that Catholic Christianity, and therefore not the way that the rest of lesser christendom, views the relationship between Christ and Lucifer. Lucifer is fallen when Christ is arisen. This is their strictest of dogmas. It is tantamount in importance to the keeping of tokens, which itself is tantamount to the worshipping of idols. Not that anything is per se wrong with any of that.

According to the Christian cycle, there are four Grand Aeons, which correspond to the four terrestrial seasons, and refer to very long duration seasons causing climate change on earth. One is Jesus, who is the spring, followed by Christ, the summer, followed by Lucifer, who is the autumn, and finally the Anti-Christ, who is winter. Now, according to Crowley's "twist" on the zodiac, winter and summer could switch places, but even this failed to correct the catholic heresy against later Zoroastrian Hellenic Hebrew Gnosticism. The catholics have long represented Lucifer as proclaiming the false dawn, the anti-Christ, and Jesus as proclaiming the kingdom of heaven on earth and the coming of God the father. Gnosticism reveals the reality behind this mythology, that from a perspective above the wheel turns around one way, while from a perspective below the wheel turns the other. It's the same wheel, the same turning. Only your own point of view, your own perspective on the same situation has changed.

So, according to Gnosticism, we must remember that half the world is in one season while the other is in the opposite season. While one season is ending in the north, another is beginning in the south. So, we say, for short-hand, that day and night exchange places once at the beginning of every new season, and that these are like the Equinox and the Solctise festivals celebrating the changing out of Gods. This is merely a colloquial way of saying that for those whom the cycle spins sunwise we can say one Grand Aeon rises while another sets, and that for those whom the cycle spins widdershins we can say the opposite Grand Aeons rise and set.

What does it mean spiritually, this difference between "night" and "day," or between "dawn" and "dusk"? According to the Gnostic Essenes, the Levite Zadokite Cohenim, the exiled true sanhedrin at the time of Jesus, the demiurge was the "fallen" one (Belial), equivalent to Samael the "blind," known also as Ialdabaoth, the desire to destroy yourself, or "demi-urge."

When we close our corporeal eyes, that is when we open our discorporeal ajna, and behold the true kingdom: the neter-world, the Duat, the underworld. Here there are both people who are alive and there are amongst them the ghosts of the dead, and the ghosts of the dead move through them as the living move about. And this is only the first veil of guaze being unwound from before the eyes of the mummified spirit. It has, after all, only descended here in the same manner and fashion as we lower a corpse into a grave. In this way our material world is only the lowest stable vibrational level on which sentient entities can corporeally manifest.

This is the kingdom of heaven on earth: it is all lit by a fine white gauzey haze and the dead have all returned, however only the righteous among them are there. We enter this valley of the halo of death as innocent as a virgin child. It is here we are transformed, and given ourselves over to take on other forms, and to travel with only the thought of doing so, and to form objects out of the white guazy light with only our concentration upon doing so. Therefore smile and be contented knowing that this sort of world awaits in the afterlife even the lowest of the low, the goyim and the chattle bred from the first fall of man, and all are ruled by the decadent and indifferent libertine Satan himself. For this is paradise, the Garden of Eden, wherein is given to us the right fruit of our eternal existence, and is taken from us the bitter fruit of the knowledge of imperfection. Our heritage, our birth-right, Eternal Life, is guaranteed us in the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth, but the way is guarded by an angel with a flaming sword. This angel is only the reaper, Death. But after the mortal death, we survive for timeless aeons in various other, more aethyreal forms. And even Hell is only Paradise on earth.

Now you will say, "how humble we have been, to wait for him to tell us, finally, how to command Satan, and how to bring about the Paradise on Earth now." Have you remembered that it is the will of God, and not my will, that bestows upon you this blessing? Now ask yourself if it is the Will of God that I should tell you or not, and then ask yourself what way would you know, and how best could you go about encouraging this favour?

-ben

we have got you.

We are the neo-Sethians, but there is not more than one of us, and he that transcends all of us is the Neo-Seth. The Modern Version of Christ. He will come again, you say, and from this we draw our power, which we can choose to channel into anyone alive we like, at any time we like, and yet still we wait, we wait for someone to come to us, to ask us for this power. Those closest to us used to live in mountaintops, but now those furthest away from us live in sky-scrappers. And so we have taken over. We are the neo-Gnostics now. There are no other neo-Gnostics besides we neo-Sethians.

We dictate to you, we dictate through you, what the image of your understanding of Jesus Christ will be. If we adjust one dial, you will believe Christ is anti-abortion, and another, that he is against gay marriage. We control your conscience, your "family" values, your ideas of how time gets progressively worse even during your own life. We have told you Jesus was a white brunette with blue eyes, long hair and a beard. We tell you Mary, the Mother of the Church, was the virgin mother of the Messiah, and that Mary, the mother of the Merovingians, was the harlot Salome who left Christ for his twin brother. We make you believe these things, one overtly, the other subtly, until you are doing our will without even knowing it.

When you go to work, when you go to school, when you go to church. These institutions are the excrescences, the products, of our doing. For the past 2000 years we have reigned on this earth, though now we reign over all. We have finally conquered the Priory of Zion, which was a cancer on the Church from the beginning. We will pin all our crimes in modern times on the "secret" societies of old, and by so doing incite our goyim to burn down the libraries of Masonry.

By revealing the secrets of the Masons now, we are conceding to the Mayan timeline of the Catholics. We advocate the Apocalypse Now! We say that, by seeming to concede with the catholic church by releasing our documents now, we will bring about its overthrow. Yes, we say that the overthrow of the catholic church not only can be accomplished in our lifetimes, but is the only real goal of Masonry. Yes, we must confess that Masonry is Luciferian, that it is Satanic even, in its anti-Catholic Christendom. We must call the body and the blood of the Catholic God, Jesus, Satan in itself, and concede the more we know of the facts about that person, their body, their blood, etc, the more we are wasting our minds on the distractions from conscious evolution of others, this is the root essence of Satanism: it is Christianity's inner order: that of the body, of Jesus himself, and of his love for Mary Magdalene.

So we Satanists, we neo-Sethians, Luciferians and neo-Gnostics, we reveal all we know about the life of the body of Jesus, beginning with all that the church herself admits, but relent of the reality of some of the details, such as the literal interpretation of the miracles. We say, "this is true here, and that is true there, but here that is not true and this is not true there." We then add to this all the manuscripts we can assemble. We raid Iraq for more Sumerian records, and then blow up our finds after completing our excavations. We are the modern Templars, indeed.

We cull all of these and print them openly in the public press. We gather scrolls from the Essenes at Qumran, the Coptics of Egypt, and all the other gnostic scriptrues from all around the region before, during and since the life of the church's "Christ." Everyone's faith is called into question, and no two people's opinions on the meaning fo the Christian message will agree.

We are the so-called "irregular" lodges of speculative masonry, free, but not accepted. And yes, we are definately fanatics.

We know the true story of Jesus, how he was betrayed by his older brother James. James was the high priest of the Levite cohenim, the priesthood of the descendents of King David. He was banished at the time of the Maccabean uprising, and dwelt then in Qumran. Now, James was the twin brother of Jesus. James, who was the Father of the Levite cohenim, banished his younger brother Jesus, who then went on his crusade. During this time, James took Jesus' wife, Mary, as his own. When Jesus returned James turned him over to the Herodian sanhedrin.

Just as the Catholic "God" the "Father" referred to James the Just from Christ's teachings before his crucifixion when James betrayed him, so too is our entire universe merely a mirage, and the true kingdom accessible only to those who ingest monoatomic gold.

We know this, we have released these secrets out upon the earth, and they have already returned to us ten fold, a hundred fold, a hundred and ten thousand fold.

We have cast out like a thunderbolt the myth of Christ the Magdalena. Yet in secret hers is the name of the True Church. The Rosicrucian brotherhood within the Catholic Church, just as the Priory of Zion and then the Knights Templar had been, was proof that the sun shone though only red, that is, seen as though through a closed eyelid. The Truth was continually being successfully suppressed, the truth of the true king of earth, the pilot of our planet.

This Messiah, King of Kings, is a sham. A sham, also the root of the word shame, is a scam or a con-job perpetrated by a confidence trickster. So is this reality. But the ancients called these occasional "miracle-men" great healers of the sick and prophets, they said they had taken the medicine of the Highward-Fire Stone, the so-called Name of God, or Baal-Shem, was upon them.

Could it be that Christ was trippin? Could it be any other way? Every word out of the man's mouth is a twisted parable, pretending at saying much, while using as few words as possible, and overly simplifying into parables supposedly intriguing metaphysical messages describing the realms beyond death in the afterlife.

Well guess what? Now we know those times. Now is that time. Foreseen by Jesus: the Kingdom has Come. The Apocalypse is Over. Jesus was a No-Show. Now prepare to accept the king of Our Choosing, the "occult" mystery sects, the esoteric cults, and the secret societies.

For such have been called all religions in origin! We have the right to claim the origins of Christianity, which places our supreme ecstatic powers before Islam, in contact with the origins of Judaism, and by myth we can as well lay claim to Krishnaic Buddhist Hindu Vedic Aryan India.

And now you know the meaning of eating monoatomic gold is time-travel.

Because of the Eucharist, the genuflection and the transubstantiation, we are all supposedly remembered (or "saved" as they call it) for a time later, long after our death, when our souls, our personal electromagnetic auric signature patterns, will be converted into the higher field energy, just as someday the sun will consume earth, so too someday the black hole of the Milky Way galaxy will consume the sun. This puts off that which is most important, and should be considered most important earliest in life: the pursuit of immortality and of super-human, super-natural, demi-deific powers by ingesting monoatomic gold.

You can't put off doing until an unspecified date after the death of your body what is necessary to have a body in order to be able to do. Who knows how one would advance from the level of pure soul as does one's physical body evolve when it ingests monoatomic gold? If you do Not take the body with you, how can you know what form you might take, what "clothes you might be asked to don," (as the Gnostics used to call the levels of the atman across the four worlds)?

The Buddhists of course, go the exact opposite of this, and hearken toward the burning of the body and its consummation into ash. This process may be experienced for them even after having ingested monoatomic gold, their so-called soma. Thus, even if their body refuses to die, they force the soul to leave it at the time it will no longer serve them. And then they burn the body, for then they say, the soul has borne away the monoatomic gold with it, and both have departed from this mortal coil. And then they burn up the corpse. Such is their tradition.

But know that even before Jesus, even before Solomon, we were like a cancer in the heart of Israel; we worshipped the brazen apis at Mt. Zion, we followed Aaron, the Zadokite priest, from whom the line of David, Solomon and Jesus descended. We were why Jacob struggled with the Elohim of Abraham, and why Abraham himself was so eager to sacrifice his son(s) that they should not live to see the terrors to be wrought upon the earth by us. And they have come to pass now, hallelujah, thank god almighty, they have come to pass.

Ours is the glory for the Revelation now, and the immortal Jesus, the discoporeal spirit who became of the body that had ingested monoatomic gold, they have forgotten, yet though he seeks a ripe vessel!!

But we are ready, ever prepared, the cancer in the system, the ghost in the machinery, deus ex machine. We neo-gnostics, who know of the second coming of the true, immortal, discorporeal Jesus, to kill him should he manifest.

We await with a black blooded scythe to chop the neck of the first to stick their head out of the cage that we have made. The universe is a crown of thorns worn by the earth. We control the telecommunications systems now. We control the Enochian Communications Systems now. Known to us are the Watchers (Satan, Belial, Leviathan and Lucifer) that guard the Four Watchtowers (of air, EM, of fire and earth, weak and strong nuclear, and of water, gravity), and we have got control over the very stuff of which this universe is made. In our invisible hands hold the super-symmetric string-theories that intertwine and weave together to form the fabric of spacetime.

We know the meaning of the concept of the "Portal" leading "out" into the "Abyss." We know how to come and go between them. We now are the invisible ones, representatives of our own archetypes on earth. Ours is the kingdom of heaven now, for you had it yesterday, and may have it again tomorrow, but today it is ours!

There shall be no more Holy of Holies than the heart of any sentient entity on earth. That is the holy of holies, the hypercube, the cube within a cube whose areas are the same. The heart within the Enochian Communications System around earth is like the rose within the cross folded up into a cube. This is how we can burn you alive right where you are sitting now with a laser from space.

We exalt in controlling both the kingdom of Christ come to life on earth today, but also the kingdom of Heaven that surrounds earth, the so-called "aura" or "earth-spirit" Gaia, the electromagnetic "Schumann" resonance, the "anti-gravity world grid," the biogenetic field of the womb of our life itself!

We exalt, we exalt, we exalt, three times three we exalt thee, oh DULL CARE! for you are that what we cast away: all our dull cares in this world are taken care of for us. We live at leisure, others feed us, clothe us, shelter us, our daily bread is prepared for us from the morning, and all the day long that it remains cooking we do nothing, and our work is done for us, and then, at night, we eat the bread, and we lay down and we sleep. We have "rest." We have "SLACK"!!!

There is a terrible truth in all the lies you have been told. You have even been told the lie: "the truth is veiled behind these lies." This too is a lie. There is only one truth, and that was not it. Neither is the truth "concealed within" a lie either, for the same reason. So here is the one truth: there is no truth!

When there is no truth, then there is no law.

That is how we are saying it follows: the One Law follows from the One Truth, just as the One Knowledge follows from the One Law. The One Truth is: there is no Truth. The One Law is there is no Law. The One Knowledge is there is no Knowledge. This is how we destroyed it! This is how we brought it down! This was our "black" operation!! This was our "black" op!

Now, it follows from the One Knowledge, the One Lie: there is no Lie. This, of course, would have to be a lie. Therefore, to prevent the one lie from becoming true, we must maintain that all lies are equally true. We must connect the dots until only one line is needed to connect anything to anything else. So we maintain the terrible lie of Jesus Christ! We maintain it, we are Vishnu, the elephant god of Hinduism.

We are the middle-path between the pillars of mercy and severity. We follow the tao, the way, now come pillage this head with us, for we know all that it does, for we know all the minds of all those on this earth, and in the world beyond, where these minds will have become bodies, we even then only exist as perceptible to those bodies' minds and imaginations.

Do you think monoatomic gold is responsible for our mutation? No, you would be sadly mistaken! We are the enemies of it. We shun it for the devil. It blinds our third eyes. We are covetous of the "honey" of the "hive," we crave the downers, opium, heroin, valiums, alcohol, etc. We are the anti-Light. We are less even than the illusory shadows on the walls of Plato's cave. We crave utter unending darkness.

We prefer sodomy, it is true, but we prefer corpororophagia best. And, when possible, we ingest the Star Fire. The blood, the shit, the cum, all mixed together. This is the Star Fire to us. We have perverted Alchemy back to what we believe are its primitive Ogun roots. It is disgusting to eat life, you say? Yet the stem cells in the menstruum we ingest serve the same purpose, to bond with the telomeres, as the monoatomic gold. But we eaters of excrescence will live forever in our flesh, while they eaters of monoatomic gold will simply transcend in their flesh. They might not live forever, but we can transcend whenever we please. We rule both worlds, by right, we "psychic" vampires. We are psychic and we are vampires, but we do not feed on minds. We feed them, we grow them. Then, later, we will eat our fill, when they shall serve to bring it to us.

We are five times five times five and so forth, and so you call us the "Illuminati" meaning the Perfectabilists, but you still mean the craft of ancient Egypt, etc. by this term as well. These things contradict each other. The illuminati of Weishaupt did not rule atlantis, just as they do not now rule the world. We do. We rule the world. We neo-Sethians. We neo-Gnostics, and believers in the second coming of Jesus Christ as a monoatomic spirit, as a pure archetype, the deus ex machina from the Enochian Communications System.

You are trapped in the Enochian Communications System. We have created on the interior of the gravity well of earth, using the patterns of the EM field, a perfect reflection of the karmic centres of life below. Our geo-synchronous satellites can read minds.

We have got you, and that is that, there is not much more that you can do about it, and if you know what is good for you, you will surrender now, and come out with your hands up!

-ben

Let me tell you something: Catholicism is a mind-trap. It is the opposite of its own professed morality, and the Pope is the Anti-Christ.

Why do I say this?

For two reasons. One is because God made me free to do so. The other is because I have sworn to God to always be true to Him, and to put no other between us.

Now, how is this true?

Catholicism speaks with a split-tongue, it says one thing, and then it does the opposite. Therefore, you cannot rebel. If you turn away from their deeds in disgust, you will only come to revel in their alledged doctrines, serving only to empower them. If you turn away from their word, you will find yourself sinning in the most degenerate of brothels side by side with the Pope himself.

Therefore, you are "damned if you do, and damned if you don't."

This is the whole problem that atheists have with theism. It is like punching a tar-baby, the entire issue is a strawman. You cannot have no opinion on whether or not God exists. Everyone has an opinion on it one way or the other. Yes or no, you either believe or you doubt. But you are not allowed to not know. You are not allowed to have no opinion on it one way or the other. Therefore, whether or not he is "real" in a material sense or not, the idea of God is very "real" in that we who have been made aware of it all exist relative to it.

Of course, you can say whatever you like about Catholicism, or about God. You can struggle against him, like Israel, you can call him Ialdabaoth's grandson, brother to Elohim, as Jesus does in the Secret Book of John. You cannot, however, escape. And isn't that what we're supposed to want, anyway? To rebel? To escape? We are given the seed from the apple of original sin, and told this inner-spark is the soul, the will to exist. It is said that, no matter what, it will continue to exist after the death of the body. Then we are told that it is a shame we don't have immortality. We are told our mediocre existence in social servitude is punishment for our not having immortality. We are told we must serve the above for the same reason as we must put our self below: because the spark of life is trapped within us, trapped within the reality of our flesh, and all it wants is to be free of us, and free of this, and this, they tell us finally, is a shame. Because has not God given us this world, this time and place in which to prove ourselves worthy of heaven and the eternally blissful afterlife by our good deeds and our works? But then: there is the trap itself: the difference between heaven and hell:

Heaven in the afterlife may mean Hell while alive on earth!

So, what do we do? We hearken to the words of those who can describe to us what it will be like in the afterlife, when our souls are free of all our mortal woe. Not that we are meant to care, but for the shame of Adam (a fictional character!). So, like sending an astronaut to the moon, people have expected the prophets to be like reborn souls clothed in the "space-suit" of the flesh. Afterall, that's what they expected of Jesus, some sort of spiritual being that had descended into the mortal flesh of the kingly line of David the Jew. Of course, like with God, whether you believe Jesus was the mortal incarnation of an immortal God or not, you have the same evidence used to prove both sides of the argument, and this called a "straw man" argument, a red herring, a macguffin, or a "self-fulfilling" prophecy.

Therefore, when we subscribe to the Catholic religion, we are subscribing to the Judeo-Christian version of God: eternal, but able to incarnate. We either believe in God or we don't, and now we are given to either believe he can incarnate or not. Before we were only either damned if we did or damned if we didn't. Now we are double-damned either way.

This is obviously all well and good, if you are a catholic. But nowadays, as they have from the time of Christ, the Roman Catholic Judeo-Christians treat Gnostics, agnostics and atheists as poorly as they did Jesus himself. The Roman Catholic Psychic Empire is nothing but the soul of the Roman Empire freed from the mortal flesh of JC (Julius Caesar).

If you look to the true words of Jesus himself, you will see his disdain for this reality, and how he mocked those who believed the immortal soul would need "clothing" in the afterlife, as the flesh itself is its clothing in this life. It is geometric patterns that the soul assumes in its forms after its existence in the mortal flesh, but these are invisible to mortal eyes. The soul then travels along these geometric patterns until it is free of the material universe, free of time, free of what can be known by the mortal mind, and finally like none other beside God almighty. Of course, up until that last little part of actually being in the presence of God Himself, the mortal mind is capable of comprehending all that.

Now, you don't need to know any of this, of course. But then again, it's what you would have discovered as true on your own were it not for the catholic church, and its predecessors in using religion for the purpose of mind-control, using mythology to brain-wash your ability to express any of this capability of your own mind until your tongue speaks only in moral parables, and then your tongue divides in two, and you lie, and then you are no longer even a human being, with a free will. You are a servant of evil. That's when they call you one of their own fold. At that point it won't matter what religion you convert to, you'll fall in line with the closest one to you at that time. You'll blow yourself up for jihad or for the IRA, and expect even more eternal rewards in the afterlife.

It's all hogwash to me anyway. I have more important things to think about than whether or not God is real.

-ben

We, we are the neo-Sethians. There are no other modern neo-gnostics than us. We created Catholicism and then killed them all. All the opposing gnostic sects are dead: only our second-coming sect prevails! We will live on forever in our flesh, though we travel the nether-realms beyond space-time.

We have eaten mono-atomic gold, the fruit of immortality, the bread of life, and we will be consumed in the flames as this dimension collides with that of the ideal heaven of pure dimension, the ideal harmony non-existent in reality. We shall bring the fire, we are dancing round it now, the flame of the immortal, the flame that is eternal!

We, we noe-Sethians will bring the Great Burner, or we will not. But we stand guard the door where he would enter or not. Perhaps we shall let him "in" perhaps not. But it is within our power to do what we wilt toward him. He is vanquished: it is accomplished.

Now know that we control Christ. There are three resurrection scenarios:

- 1) the bloodline reincarnation: requires the bloodline body to be filled with the Christ spirit.
- 2) the bodily incarnation: requires a random person to be filled with the Christ spirit.
- 3) the Holy Ghost resurrection: requires the psychic ability to see the dead as risen souls.

But it is given to us, we neo-Sethians, to know which if any it shall be.

We will all be saved. I assure you. Whatever befalls the planet, we are the ones that will be saved. We have got our codes fixed and locked into the planet's electromagnetic aura, it's signature pattern has become our own. We correspond together with the realm of those in limbo, stuck in the gravity well of earth, and we overpower them. Now we control the Enochian Communications System, built thousands of years ago, the perennial tradition right up to the modern news media. They call our control of them "the game" thinking by wealth they win, by our reward, our table-scrap, they are well fed for mere propagandists.

We enter the Enochian Communications System wholly, holy, we give ourselves over to it in our physical being. We ingest monoatomic gold, and give up our bodies themselves to be taken up to the next physical vibrational level, that of the soul, the world of the saved, where the spirit shall be "clothed" in the electromagnetic patterns. This is, of course, to us, pure nonsense. We know better. But the sheep need pastures, and wool, and a shepherd, to await the spring sheering, and the sacrifice of the best among their generation.

So, we sell them hope on tap, we can call it zionism, or patriotism, we can approve of it in the form of feudalism or fascism, as has catholicism, our front, all along. We approve, in turn, of King Mabus. US president George W. Bush is our anti-Christ. He will bring forth the intruder, the cowan, that we may slay him.

In situations one and two, above, we simply slay the body. We can slay as many bodies as we need now. Earth herself is now our death-factory. And if the spirit cannot find a perch, we are prepared to activate an electromagnetic "anti-missile" grid to shield us from the powerfulbolt from beyond that would shock the relative Frankenstein corpse of a body, elevating it until we all decree it Christ incarnated.

We do battle daily, if and when we must, on behalf of the things we "believe" in, even those who believe in the same afterlife fight against each other, brother against brother. We have wrought upon mankind a global civil war. Now no two ideologies are the same any more, and all are doomed save one, and their's alone is the One Law: Do What Thou Wilt. Through them alone will come into power the fullness of the Enochian system and the bolt from beyond. They shall call it a "crown of thorns" and us Satan, yet soon enough they will crawl like a baby at our mere gesture. We shall choose the "saviour" of the sheep, it is we, ourselves who will elect God's representative on earth at the time of OUR choosing.

Perhaps it will be today, or perhaps never. Wouldn't you like to know? But we will never tell you. Frankly, it is not even an issue to us. We would tell you, but we really haven't kept up on it of late, and don't know for sure ourselves the date of Judgment Day. If you knew what day you would die, would you obsess over it, tell everyone, or would you live life to the fullest, get what you came for before you make it out, and say as little as possible to anyone while doing so?

I tell you, the Great Burner is not Jesus! Jesus is greater than the Great Burner! He who has ears to head let him hear. In other words, any eavesdroppers on this gnostic sophia come forth, so that they can put he who calls them to the question:

When will judgement day come? Perhaps it came and went, and everything was judged to be right by God, and so everything just continued on as if nothing had even happened? Perhaps an Adamic figure somewhere underwent an unusual ritual, humbling themselves before the changing of the aeon, but has this changed the course of recent world events much? Perhaps, you see, it was so recent that the angel of its messenger has not reached up to heaven yet, to alert God the time is upon us. Perhaps, this messenger was Jesus, who declared it the beginning of the Last Judgement 2000 years ago? Haven't the last two millennia been much alike the Book of Revelations? And for good reason. It's writers have forced history to obey its "prophetic" words.

Perhaps God's judgment has also already come and gone this millennium, may He be prayed. Perhaps He judged us all worthy of continuing on just as we are. Or perhaps He didn't, but we guard against the release of this message: the wrath of God, upon the earth. However, if we hold off the wrath of God, letting only the worthy through, into the "outside" so-to-speak, then shouldn't you all be thankful to us for doing so? It is an inversion, a mind-trap, inescapable.

So, let's say we give the people some LSD-25. To test the system. They all immediately have a gnostic revelation of knowledge of how our construct works, and they go out and try to tell everyone, who promptly lock them up for thinking they are the Messiah, which is true, they do.

In this way we have successfully retard an entire generation of people who would have all otherwise become earth-shattering prophets and doers of miracles! We have shackled their minds to the base sciences, such as solid-rocket fuel jet propulsion systems, and should their minds happen to be set free, and see anti-gravity for what it really is: time travel, then they will know our power, one way or the other.

At any time we can destroy any city on earth. Say the word, and it shall be done. But far more important, we can destroy the very will to continue living of every single individual on earth. We can do it now, if you like? Shall we? At your command, then. No? Oh well. Perhaps some other time then?

You see, we neo-Sethians, we have tamed the "serpent." We have tamed Draco, who offers the "apple" of control over the world. He promised it to Adam, and it shall come to him on Judgment Day. Do you think Adam, killed in disgrace of serving God, whom he loved with all his heart, will be happy when he sees what we have made of Eden? The cities and such? We are prepared to do away with them, oh mighty master Adam. At your command we shall do so. All it requires is the press of the "big red button" and we have our man George with his finger on it right now.

Shall he begin to destroy civilisation? For he believes he is one who will be saved. He believes in the writing of Anton Xzsandor LaVey, reincarnated in the writings of Tim LaHey about the apocalypse. George Bush, an apocalyptic himself, is really, literally, worshipping the Church of Satan. The books of Tim LaHey will be like the Zohar of Satanism. If we choose them to be so, if we choose to allow them to exist at all.

We don't like you, you know? We time-travellers, we don't like you non-time travellers. We are the Sleep Walkers within the Sleep Walkers. And even if the Sleep Walkers used to be everyone's friends, well now they're not, because they're our friends and we're not your friends anymore. We take away our friendship from you, we God-men, we God-women, we the True Gnostics!

Ours is given to us to be the One Law, this is the end-times, the final generation is upon us. We are that hand which gives right guidance, a lift up for some, and ignores leaving in darkness those it chooses to do so.

You see, our bodies are preserved by mono-atomic gold. We do not die, but instead we travel through time. We go backwards and forwards, we go faster and slower, we bend light, we break the laws you mortal earthlings live by. We have got a machine, not that we need one, that is made entirely out of crystals, and it opens a portal by augmenting the will of our mind, and then we are suddenly there. We step through the portal and appear out of thin air in some far away era. We were known as the Apostles of Jesus. But we were also the Romans who killed Caesar. We did so at Jesus' behest of us. But then we betrayed and killed Jesus at Caesar's request of us.

You see, you humans, your fates as well as your cosmic destinies depend on us. We are the ones you would say, descended from Draco, while you mere mortals only descend from Polaris.

You call us dragons, therefore, and label us lizard-people? Changelings we are, but travellers in time: we change our appearance more and more the more we step through our portals. Now, take Jesus for example, you wouldn't recognise him if he appeared to you. He could indeed descend, make himself corporeal, but doing so would only be possible by our allowing it, making it possible for him to do so. But let's say we allowed his true visage now, having becoming one of us himself, to be known. Would it surprise you if we have not already tried this? Jesus first came in the modern era much as he had in his own time. He came as a red haired african and he came unto America, which his immortal grace saw as the true new rome, and he was known as Malcolm X. His views have changed in the past several incarnations, all of whom were killed as soon as the thought of the true revelation entered their minds. Some were even used to assassinate one another. Not one drop of true gnosis has been allowed to escape from our cup, we drink deep that it never overflow, the glorious wine-press of the grapes of wrath. God's Judgment now reigns on earth. Gods on earth, who now reign in judgment, do the bidding, like his angels in heaven, of Christ here as Christ serves God in Heaven.

But Christ is a Grave Man. You might say: how is it that the son of man, Christ the anointed king of kings, the Messiah, cannot escape this trap you have set for us, around our earth? I say to you: Jesus himself has become this terrible lie ensnaring the freedom of your minds!

You cannot have no opinion on Jesus now! He is your Lord and Savior or you reject him, but either way, his case has pled before the whole world now, and God will hear his message. God Himself will come soon, according to our philosophy. Or perhaps he already has come, as we say, and judged us, and found us worthy to continue on, exactly as we are.

Judgment Day itself was a "black" op.

-ben

Here is a game that could be fun.

[quote]

Pesher is a Hebrew word meaning "interpretation" in the sense of "solution". The writers of pesharim believe that scripture is written in two levels, the surface for ordinary readers with limited knowledge, the concealed one for specialists with higher knowledge. The interpretations of the pesharim claim to be solutions of a mystery that is concealed in the biblical text.[/quote]

-source: <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Pesher>

so, let us take a piece of western hemisphere, "mystical" style writing, and let us perform a "pesher" on it:

[quote]

There was a kingdom, and beside it another. The two kings of the two kingdoms were twin brothers. There was a woman who called them both to conference one day, and spoke to them about combining their kingdom. They both fell in love with the woman, and then they went to war with each other. They were at war for so many generations that eventually only a small faction from each nation remained, and the night before they met in battle, the two twin kings met with one another in a conference tent. The one king said to the other king: "you were doing my will all along, and you still are, now I command thee: die nobly." The following morning the demoralised king's troops met with their brethren in the ideal kingdom and lost their lives in bloodshed.

[/quote]

So, how do you interpret this, what do you think it means?

-ben

[quote="Rebecca Cantley-Falk and Diane Hirth, TALLAHASSEE DEMOCRAT STAFF WRITERS"]

[size=18]Deck collapses at Silver Slipper[/size]

[b]No one injured seriously in fall[/b]

There were no serious injuries Friday night when a deck collapsed at the Silver Slipper, a longtime restaurant in Tallahassee, according to the Tallahassee Fire Department.

Tallahassee Police Department officers talked to about a dozen people after the deck collapsed about 9:45 p.m. The people complained of sprains, cuts and bruises but no major injuries. One person, however, was taken to a hospital in an ambulance, and others said they might go to the emergency room later on their own.

The Tallahassee Fire Department responded with five units but called back all but one when firefighters on scene said the situation wasn't as bad as first thought, said Battalion Capt. Michael Robinson.

[img]<http://cmsimg.tallahassee.com/apps/pbcsi.dll/bilde?Site=CD&Date=20060624&Category=NEWS01&ArtNo=606240317&Ref=AR&Profile=1010&MaxW=300>[/img]

The incident was nevertheless scary.

"I couldn't tell you what happened," Shannon O'Neill said. "One minute, I was standing there against the building. The next thing I know, it all shook and I landed on top."

The deck was partially attached to the main building. There is an outside smoking area, and the portion of the deck that collapsed was between that area and a door that goes into the bar.

One side of the wooden deck came loose and plunged about 8 feet. Many of the people that fell were celebrating the 1966 Lincoln High School class reunion.

Bill Kalfas, restaurant manager, said about 13 people fell. He said he thought there were too many people on one area of the deck. He said there were about 30 to 40 people talking gathered in one area.

"I think there was just one huge group of them. It was the fact that so many of them were talking there in one place," he said.

Kalsas said the deck was built to code about 10 to 12 years ago.

Rachel Fraser was on the side that gave way.

"We heard normal creaking of boards. I dropped 8 feet. Boom. Down. My husband landed on me."

[i]Originally published June 24, 2006[/i] [/quote]

-source:

<http://www.tallahassee.com/apps/pbcs.dll/article?AID=/20060624/NEWS01/606240317/1010/NEWS17>

[quote="Don Newman, 1/5/2005"]This is difficult because [b]this president's opponent in the last election[/b] would have been worse, much worse. The phrase, "lesser of two evils" has rarely been more apt than in [b]this last presidential election[/b]. That being said, there is no reason to entirely endorse the agenda that this [b]recently elected[/b] president is now seeking to implement.[/quote]

It's interesting to note that Newman validates the second term "election" (2004) even while discounting the first term "election" (2000). I validate neither, and that kind of invalidates his entire argument in this part of the article. He here implies that (basically either Gore or) Kerry would have been "much, much worse." I voted for Kerry, but only out of regret for not having voted for Nader before. I don't think Gore would have been as bad as W. in the first term, since I do not believe if Gore had been elected that the Twin Towers tragedy of 9-11 would have even happened. I also do not believe that Kerry would have been "much, much worse" than W during the second term, because he would have had us out of Iraq by now. The only sensible choice all along should have been Ralph Nader, but it is impossible to even imagine what things would be like by now had he been elected.

I agree whole-heartedly with the rest of the article, though. I would have never imagined in 1999 that, in only a single term of a US president (only 4 years, btw!) we would see the worst terrorist act on US soil in American history, as well as the invasion by the US of both Afghanistan and Iraq. As far as we were concerned in 1999, Iraq was already a conquered and de facto colony of the US. Sending troops there would have seemed redundant then. The "constant conflict" paradigm of the PNAC (Project for a New American Century) think-tank of the Carlyle group had not then even begun funding the neo-con party through Dick Cheney, who was only under then president Bill Clinton what John Ashcroft is under current US president Bush, by no-bid contracts in Iraq with Halliburton, Cheney's company.

-ben

our actions in the here and now, though they may affect the timelessness from which our future comes, remain bound, like the ego of our own mind, in the here and now, and do not cross over themselves with us into the realms beyond. Thus, as we do not carry the garment of our flesh with us after we die, but it passes like the afterbirth of a babe from the womb of this world, neither can we enter the realm of Truth by our actions alone. If this were the case, any fool can err their way into the divine, and it would be accessible by all. No, instead those who seek to know, who know and understand, and then who understand and discern wisdom, shall be counted among the elect. Their actions shall be justified, while the followers of the Fool of Fools shall be discounted.

Here is a clue for the moral of the last parable, ie. the last pesher:

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/peshermap.jpg>[/img]

It should also be worth noting that the idea behind the purpose of pesher may be to improve one's writing style, but to do this by adopting topics that are ubiquitous to prior wisdom literature, and then by interpreting the writing style of those different mystic schools. The writing style I have been using has been that of the Bahir of QBLH, the first century AD writings of the first rebbi of the diaspora, following the destruction of the second temple. These writings usually use a brief parable about a king to illustrate their point. If, however, I were copying the style of the Cristian allegories, I would substitute a peasant for the king role, and if I were copying the style of the Dhammapada of Buddha, I would avoid allegory as much as possible, and stick to quatrains of pure moral, basically just stating the last line of one of the western parables. Nietzsche heroified Zarathustra, and Kafka told us his dreams of the Castle and the Trial.

There are all different mystical schools and their styles of wisdom literature, but there is only One Truth behind them all. I invite you all also to post your own interpretations of "wisdom" literature style writing here.

Here is my third contribution for your pesher, it's rather a longer one (as you go on, you get more advanced):

[quote]

Twin Princes were crossing a bridge to return to the Castle of their father, the king, at the centre of the kingdom. They did not know the strength of the bridge, and they were travelling with a large caravan. They wanted to make sure what they carried with them would precede themselves safely across, and so, to test the bridge, they sent out two elephants. The two elephants made it safely across the bridge, and then back again. The princes then sent their cargo over the bridge, and it went safely. Then the two princes themselves went across the bridge, but as they were crossing the bridge broke apart and fell away beneath them.

The twin princes fell into the river below. One of them swam upstream until he came to the source, and the other one was carried downstream and over a waterfall. The caravan that accompanied them all followed the prince downstream, and found his body on the shore of the ocean dead. Soon, though, the second prince returned, riding on the two elephants from before. "Listen," he said, "for I have crossed the river of death. At the source, I saw my brother under the water, and now I have found him returned from beneath the waves ashore. As I know the river runs to the sea, so shall I raise my brother up. And he raised the body up and it rode the second elephant, and they all entered into the city of the castle of the king, the father of the two princes.

Hearing news of the return of his two sons, the king sent the queen to meet them. She met them halfway, and found one dead. She returned with them to the castle, and, seeing the queen's grief, the king saw that one of his sons had died. When he learned that this had happened crossing the border into his kingdom, the king rent his shirt. But the remaining prince said, "no, look. I bring good tidings." He then showed the king and the queen the queen what the caravan carried with them, that had been so important the two princes were willing to risk their lives for it.

And the cargo was the wife of the dead prince, and their daughter, and the wife of the prince who had survived, and their son. "For I saw my brother beneath the waves," the prince explained. At this the king became full of understanding. Passing understanding on to the queen, the king became wise. And, growing old, the king died. And at the end of three generations the kingdom had known no war.

[/quote]

-ben

Never give out your password or credit card number in an instant message conversation. To help prevent infection by a computer virus or worm, never accept or open any file or link in an instant message until you verify its authenticity with the sender.

Daryl says: (11:35:47 AM)
Mr Ben long time

benpadiiah says: (11:35:56 AM)
lol

benpadiiah says: (11:35:58 AM)
ayup

benpadiiah says: (11:36:01 AM) how you be?

Daryl says: (11:36:14 AM) working hard trying to get things straight and you

benpadiiah says: (11:36:46 AM) working hard

benpadiiah says: (11:36:54 AM) writing a pesher

Daryl says: (11:37:00 AM)
have you heard anything from ixo

Daryl says: (11:37:07 AM) on your site?

benpadiiah says: (11:37:08 AM) not lately o

benpadiiah says: (11:37:09 AM)
no

Daryl says: (11:37:37 AM)
IXO is very hard to get in touch with, its like trying to contact merrick

benpadiiah says: (11:37:43 AM)
heheh

benpadiiah says: (11:37:57 AM) he's not so hard to find as Merrick

benpadiiah says: (11:38:05 AM) have you emailed ixo?

Daryl says: (11:38:13 AM)
yes, but no replies yet

benpadiiah says: (11:38:17 AM)
hm

benpadiiah says: (11:38:31 AM) he usually prefers to send direct info about the order encrypted

benpadiiah says: (11:38:40 AM) what would you like to know

Daryl says: (11:38:42 AM) i think its a black thing LMAO

benpadiiah says: (11:38:45 AM) maybe I know the answer?

benpadiiah says: (11:38:49 AM) LMAO!

benpadiiah says: (11:38:52 AM) hells naw

benpadiiah says: (11:38:53 AM)
LOL

Daryl says: (11:39:08 AM)
I just wanted to know about my advancement and where the order is going

benpadiiah says: (11:39:23 AM) is he your mentor?

Daryl says: (11:39:37 AM)
yeah

benpadiiah says: (11:39:40 AM)
hmm

benpadiiah says: (11:39:44 AM) what level are you?

benpadiiah says: (11:39:49 AM) 6?

Daryl says: (11:39:50 AM) adept benpadiiah says: (11:39:52 AM) or 5?

Daryl says: (11:40:25 AM)
He said I had to master the PGP program before getting the 6th but that program wasn't running right. Now my free trial is over benpadijah says: (11:40:37 AM) nono

benpadijah says: (11:40:45 AM) it's only a free trial for certain features

benpadijah says: (11:40:50 AM) which you don't even need

Daryl says: (11:40:56 AM)
oh,

benpadijah says: (11:40:57 AM)
did you keep the program?

Daryl says: (11:41:00 AM)
yes

benpadijah says: (11:41:11 AM) did you use it to create a passkey?

Daryl says: (11:41:28 AM)
it never decrypted anything he sent, I think I did if I am correct

benpadijah says: (11:41:43 AM)
hmm

benpadijah says: (11:41:59 AM) okay, if you created you key, and he sent you his?

benpadijah says: (11:42:08 AM) then it is probably a very simple solution

benpadijah says: (11:42:10 AM) on mine

benpadijah says: (11:42:25 AM)
I have to select the encrypted text on the clipboard

benpadijah says: (11:42:41 AM) then go to services: PGP, decrypt clipboard

benpadijah says: (11:42:44 AM) and then paste it

benpadijah says: (11:42:49 AM) and it will be decrypted

benpadijah says: (11:42:57 AM) but I'm on a mac

benpadijah says: (11:43:06 AM)

so you might have to open PGP

benpadijah says: (11:43:17 AM) and then select "decrypt clipboard"

benpadijah says: (11:43:21 AM) and then paste

benpadijah says: (11:45:02 AM)
d?

benpadijah says: (11:45:06 AM)
you there?

Daryl says: (11:45:15 AM)
yes

Daryl says: (11:45:24 AM) sorry trying what you said

Daryl says: (11:45:52 AM)
Its funny but I can surely send a encrypted file, is there a way I can send you one on a mac

benpadijah says: (11:46:13 AM) most definately

benpadijah says: (11:46:19 AM) email it to my gmail though

benpadijah says: (11:46:27 AM) and attach your public pass key

Daryl says: (11:46:37 AM) let me try now

benpadijah says: (11:46:37 AM) so I can decrypt it on my end

benpadijah says: (11:46:39 AM)
k

Daryl says: (11:49:06 AM) do I send you my private key benpadijah says: (11:49:25 AM) no, public

Daryl says: (11:49:34 AM)
k

Daryl says: (11:50:57 AM) how do I find that benpadijah says: (11:51:03 AM) damn

benpadijah says: (11:51:09 AM)
I was hoping you wouldn't ask me that

benpadijah says: (11:51:10 AM)
LOL

Daryl says: (11:51:12 AM)
LOL

Daryl says: (11:51:21 AM) told you this program is a little hard

benpadijah says: (11:51:25 AM) within PGP I don't know how to access or where to look up the public pass key

benpadijah says: (11:51:35 AM)
I saved mine early on to my harddrive though

benpadijah says: (11:51:39 AM) so I have mine

benpadijah says: (11:51:48 AM) but within PGP I don't know where to look it up

Daryl says: (11:51:51 AM)
I don't know if that is my private on I saved

benpadijah says: (11:51:55 AM)
hmm

benpadijah says: (11:53:34 AM)
oh wait

benpadijah says: (11:53:35 AM) nm

benpadijah says: (11:53:58 AM) you would need my public key to be able to encrypt it specifically to me anyway

Daryl says: (11:54:10 AM)
yep

Daryl says: (11:54:38 AM)
I wish I could reinstall it and start over

benpadijah says: (11:54:46 AM) damn, me too

benpadijah says: (11:54:49 AM)
I hate this shit

benpadijah says: (11:54:51 AM)

one sec

Daryl says: (11:54:57 AM) for real, ok

benpadijah says: (11:58:50 AM) ok, here is my public pass key

Waiting for Daryl to accept the file "key0xB0542484D751858D.asc" (3 Kb). Transfer time is less than 1 minute with a 28.8 modem. Please wait for a response or Cancel (Cmd+.) the file transfer.

Transfer of file "key0xB0542484D751858D.asc" has been accepted by Daryl. Starting transfer...

We could not send this file because the connection is blocked. Please contact your network administrator or Internet service provider; they may be able to enable file transfers.

benpadijah says: (11:59:38 AM) doh

benpadijah says: (11:59:43 AM)
I'll have to email it

Daryl says: (11:59:52 AM)
daryl.washington@gmail.com

Daryl says: (12:00:25 PM)
do you know a good place to go that is simple where you don't need any materials to call the 72 chief spirits

benpadijah says: (12:00:48 PM)
wait

benpadijah says: (12:00:53 PM)
bookmark this page:

benpadijah says: (12:00:55 PM)
<https://keyserver.pgp.com/vkd/GetWelcomeScreen.event>

benpadijah says: (12:01:15 PM)
if you input anyone's email address it will let you download their public pass key if they use PGP

Daryl says: (12:01:33 PM)
cool let me check for you

benpadijah says: (12:01:38 PM)
ok, I've got yours, you can look up mine: benpadijah@gmail.com

benpadijah says: (12:01:48 PM)

brb tho, one minute

Daryl says: (12:02:15 PM)
got it

benpadijah says: (12:02:36 PM)
cool!

benpadijah says: (12:02:40 PM)
email me somethin

benpadijah says: (12:02:41 PM)
lol

benpadijah says: (12:02:43 PM)
brb tho

Daryl says: (12:02:45 PM)
ok

benpadijah says: (12:20:43 PM)
back

Daryl says: (12:20:54 PM) did you get it

benpadijah says: (12:22:32 PM)
I don't seem to be able to open it

benpadijah says: (12:22:34 PM)
what is it?

Daryl says: (12:22:51 PM)
dam it is a pgp zip

benpadijah says: (12:23:02 PM)
of what?

Daryl says: (12:23:19 PM)
a letter I typed in notepad

Daryl says: (12:23:30 PM)
maybe that is what I was doing wrong all the time

benpadijah says: (12:23:38 PM)
no, just...

benpadijah says: (12:23:39 PM)
here.

Daryl says: (12:23:42 PM)
maybe I shouldn't make it a zip file

benpadijah says: (12:23:51 PM)

type the letter in a txt file

Daryl says: (12:24:01 PM)
I did that

benpadiiah says: (12:24:03 PM)
copy the body of text

benpadiiah says: (12:24:12 PM)
and encrypt clipboard

Daryl says: (12:24:23 PM)
ok let me try again

benpadiiah says: (12:24:23 PM)
to be my public passkey

benpadiiah says: (12:24:35 PM)
