then paste over the text document

benpadiiah says: (12:24:52 PM)
the encrypted text will appear

benpadiiah says: (12:25:02 PM)
then copy that into the body of the email

benpadiiah says: (12:25:05 PM)
and send the email

benpadiiah says: (12:25:18 PM)
that way I can copy it out of the body of the email to my clipboard

benpadiiah says: (12:25:24 PM)
and decrypt my clipbaord

benpadiiah says: (12:25:30 PM)
and then read what you wrote.

Daryl says: (12:28:24 PM)
sent one, now send me one

benpadiiah says: (12:29:42 PM)
one sec posting about cydonia

benpadiiah says: (12:38:30 PM)
no, you encrypted it to IXO, not to me

Daryl says: (12:38:43 PM)
dam not good

benpadiiah says: (12:38:44 PM)
btw, <http://illuminati-order.com/forum/viewtopic.php?p=4789#4789>

benpadiah says: (12:41:28 PM)
here, I will send you one

Daryl says: (12:42:35 PM)
It said I sent it to you

benpadiah says: (12:42:41 PM)
one sec

nono

benpadiah says: (12:43:31 PM)
you don't need what you sent me

benpadiah says: (12:43:36 PM)
I don't need it I mean

benpadiah says: (12:43:41 PM)
you have, however

benpadiah says: (12:43:48 PM)
encrypted the email you sent

benpadiah says: (12:43:53 PM)
to IXO rather than me

Daryl says: (12:43:53 PM)
I sent it in a email don't you see the encryption

hold on

benpadiah says: (12:44:07 PM)
yes it's just encrypted for IXO

Daryl says: (12:44:15 PM)
no it was a test for you

benpadiah says: (12:44:21 PM)
one sec then

benpadiah says: (12:44:28 PM)
let me see if the problem is on my end

Daryl says: (12:45:19 PM) did I have to create a passphrase for you also

benpadiah says: (12:45:20 PM)
ok, sent

benpadiah says: (12:45:21 PM)
no

benpadijah says: (12:45:27 PM)
you don't

Daryl says: (12:45:27 PM)
so you see it

benpadijah says: (12:45:50 PM)
I sent you an email

benpadijah says: (12:46:04 PM)
let me know if you can decrypt it using my public pass

Daryl says: (12:46:06 PM)
looking at it now

benpadijah says: (12:46:42 PM)
can you read what I wrote?

Daryl says: (12:47:14 PM)
not yet

benpadijah says: (12:47:46 PM)
what is it saying?

Daryl says: (12:47:49 PM)
it keeps saying no pgp found on the clipboard3

benpadijah says: (12:47:57 PM)
queer

Daryl says: (12:48:04 PM)
LOL

benpadijah says: (12:48:09 PM)
I don't know...

benpadijah says: (12:48:10 PM)
hmm

Daryl says: (12:48:29 PM)
this is what I kept telling IXO

benpadijah says: (12:48:35 PM)
really..

benpadijah says: (12:48:45 PM)
so you'd gotten to this point with him as well?

benpadijah says: (12:49:15 PM)
hang on

Daryl says: (12:49:17 PM)
yes

benpadijah says: (12:49:26 PM)
are you sending me one his encoded messages?

benpadijah says: (12:49:33 PM)
and are you re-encoding it?

Daryl says: (12:50:20 PM)
no, I just try to decrpypt it either by clipboarding it, or viewing it in the current window, either way it doesn't work

benpadijah says: (12:50:29 PM)
oh ok, nmnm

Daryl says: (12:51:07 PM)
the funny thing is it is in the clipboard but it won't decrypt

benpadijah says: (12:51:16 PM)
grrr

benpadijah says: (12:51:26 PM)
does it say...

benpadijah says: (12:51:34 PM)
"one unknoww key" or something

Daryl says: (12:51:39 PM)
nope

benpadijah says: (12:51:43 PM)
it has IXO and says "one unknoww key"?

Daryl says: (12:51:48 PM)
its just says no pgp in clipboard

Daryl says: (12:52:11 PM)
you did open mines correct

benpadijah says: (12:52:27 PM)
it is telling me that your message was encrypted to IXO

benpadijah says: (12:52:39 PM)
that I would need his private key to open

Daryl says: (12:52:52 PM)
something is totally wrong, maybe I should reinstall the program

benpadijah says: (12:53:11 PM)
no

benpadijah says: (12:53:20 PM)
no because the trial period is over

Daryl says: (12:53:20 PM)
or I have my keys messed up

benpadijah says: (12:53:30 PM)
it might fuck it all up to reinstall it

benpadijah says: (12:53:39 PM)
we need to talk to Master K

benpadijah says: (12:53:46 PM)
he was on yesterday

Daryl says: (12:53:53 PM)
he knows how to fix it

benpadijah says: (12:54:12 PM)
he's done PGP longer than either of us

benpadijah says: (12:54:26 PM)
it may have something to do with the trial period

Daryl says: (12:54:47 PM)
yeah but this was like this even when it was free

benpadijah says: (12:54:56 PM)
oh?

benpadijah says: (12:54:59 PM)
then hmm

Daryl says: (12:55:07 PM)
he's not on yahoo, usually he is benpadijah says: (12:55:12 PM)

oh?

benpadijah says: (12:55:17 PM)
he's not on here either

Daryl says: (12:55:17 PM)
he might be at school

benpadijah says: (12:55:20 PM)
oh.

benpadijah says: (12:55:24 PM)
then probably yeah

Daryl says: (12:55:36 PM)
I really need to get this dam thing fixed

benpadijah says: (12:55:44 PM)
now I'm frustrated too

lol

Daryl says: (12:55:59 PM)
makes me feel stupid

Daryl says: (12:56:01 PM)
LOL

benpadijah says: (12:56:10 PM)
me too

benpadijah says: (12:56:12 PM)
LOL

benpadijah says: (12:56:29 PM)
listen man, lemme go have a smoke

benpadijah says: (12:56:46 PM)
and when I come back in we can talk about the 72

Daryl says: (12:57:02 PM)
ok

benpadijah says: (1:15:37 PM)
still there?

Daryl says: (1:16:02 PM)
yes

benpadijah says: (1:16:06 PM)
cool

benpadijah says: (1:16:15 PM)
then let me tell you what I know about the 71

benpadijah says: (1:16:18 PM)
72

benpadijah says: (1:16:23 PM)
I mean, 72 lol

Daryl says: (1:16:28 PM)
go ahead LOL

benpadijah says: (1:16:46 PM)
okay, the 72 are the angels of the "shemhamforash"

benpadijah says: (1:17:23 PM)
the 72 angel names are derived by aligning three, 72 letter long each, verses: Exodus 4:19-21

benpadijah says: (1:17:51 PM)
there are the 72 angels of exodus, then

benpadijah says: (1:17:58 PM)
and then there are seventy-two demons

benpadiah says: (1:18:06 PM)
but I'll come back to them in a moment

Daryl says: (1:18:10 PM)
ok

benpadiah says: (1:18:21 PM)
now, the 72 of exodus was brought out of Egypt from the 36

benpadiah says: (1:18:34 PM)
the 36 had been brought into Egypt from the Sumerian 12

benpadiah says: (1:18:49 PM)
in Sumeria they invented the houses of the zodiac

benpadiah says: (1:19:04 PM)
they said, "there are twelve houses of the zodiac"

benpadiah says: (1:19:21 PM)
they took the circle and divided it into twelve

benpadiah says: (1:19:31 PM)
then the Egyptians divided the twelve into 36.

benpadiah says: (1:19:44 PM)
they took each of the twelve and divided it into three

benpadiah says: (1:19:51 PM)
and that is how they got the thirty-six.

benpadiah says: (1:20:08 PM)
the thirty-six they called "dekans" of the twelve "houses" of the zodiac.

benpadiah says: (1:20:22 PM)
then, during the Exodus, Moses called down the 72.

benpadiah says: (1:20:42 PM)
he said, from the thirty-six, there is for each one a day, and for each one a night.

benpadiah says: (1:20:49 PM)
and so he made two for each one.

benpadiah says: (1:20:54 PM)
an angel and a demon.

benpadiah says: (1:21:03 PM)
and so he made 72 angels, and 72 demons.

Daryl says: (1:21:18 PM)
wow

just as Moses used the 72 angels to part the red sea

benpadijah says: (1:21:58 PM)
so Solomon used the 72 demons to build the temple

Daryl says: (1:22:22 PM)
I didn't know mozes also used the 72

benpadijah says: (1:22:42 PM)
so, the good angels are called the "shemahmforash" (the 72 letter name of God), and the bad demons are "goetia"

benpadijah says: (1:22:58 PM)
it was Moses who is referred to in Exodus 4: 19-21

Daryl says: (1:23:13 PM)
so there are really 144 angels

benpadijah says: (1:23:19 PM)
actually

benpadijah says: (1:23:29 PM)
these are all descriptions for the calendar

benpadijah says: (1:23:32 PM)
of 365 days

Daryl says: (1:23:37 PM)
is this the 144 that they said there was a number greater than that

benpadijah says: (1:23:45 PM)
and of the circle, of 360 degrees

Daryl says: (1:24:15 PM)
oh let me see if i got this, there are 72 good, 72 bad that makes up the calendar for a year

benpadijah says: (1:24:26 PM)
no.

benpadijah says: (1:24:34 PM)
here is how it breaks down

benpadijah says: (1:24:52 PM)
there are twelve months, three weeks in each month, and ten days in each week.

benpadijah says: (1:25:00 PM)
that is the solar calendar of the Egyptians.

benpadijah says: (1:25:12 PM)
those are the thirty six

Daryl says: (1:25:12 PM)
don't you mean 7 days a wekk

benpadijah says: (1:25:23 PM)

that is from the Hebrew calendar

Daryl says: (1:25:39 PM)

oh, so america follows the hebrew calendar

benpadijah says: (1:25:45 PM)

in the Egyptian civic calendar, supposedly brought by Ra, there were ten days a week

benpadijah says: (1:25:47 PM)

yes.

Daryl says: (1:26:10 PM)

if there are 10 days a week does it still add up to 365 days

benpadijah says: (1:26:15 PM)

no.

benpadijah says: (1:26:27 PM)

it adds up to thirty six weeks of ten days each.

benpadijah says: (1:26:36 PM)

the work year was 360 days long

benpadijah says: (1:26:41 PM)

and then there were five holidays

benpadijah says: (1:26:46 PM)

all at the end of the year

Daryl says: (1:27:15 PM)

interesting, why does America follow the hebrew calendar and how did that come about

benpadijah says: (1:28:07 PM)

America's calendar is based on the divisions of the year made by Pope Gregory when the Judeo-Christian calendar was last reformed in the 1600's.

Daryl says: (1:28:45 PM)

oh

benpadijah says: (1:29:04 PM)

when Gregory revised the final calendar it had actually been refined by Ptolemy to combine the solar Egyptian and the lunar Hebrew.

Daryl says: (1:29:59 PM)

wasn't the hebrews and egyptians once one and the same

benpadijah says: (1:30:15 PM)

yes.

benpadijah says: (1:30:23 PM)

but they split at the time of the Exodus

benpadijah says: (1:30:39 PM)

when Moses led the Hyksos (shepherd) kings out of northern egypt.

benpadijah says: (1:31:21 PM)
the Hebrew lunar calendar originally had 364 days, because it had 13 months with 28 days each, and seven day weeks

benpadijah says: (1:31:30 PM)
so it is older than the Egyptian solar

Daryl says: (1:31:35 PM)
let me ask you this one, I read Moses was black, sorry. However is it true that Egypt was a black nation holding blacks in slavery

benpadijah says: (1:31:47 PM)
which calculates the year more exactly as 365 days

benpadijah says: (1:32:01 PM)
yes, Moses was Akhenaten

benpadijah says: (1:32:09 PM)
he was raised among Ethiopians

benpadijah says: (1:32:15 PM)
but his people were from Sumeria

benpadijah says: (1:32:35 PM)
his people were the Hebrews, and he was raised as a Pharaoh

Daryl says: (1:32:35 PM)
which were Caucasians

benpadijah says: (1:32:41 PM)
no

benpadijah says: (1:32:43 PM)
hell no

Daryl says: (1:33:02 PM)
so all this bullshit really came from my people

benpadijah says: (1:33:18 PM)
the original skin and bone features of the Hebrew Sumerians has long since died out through interbreeding

benpadijah says: (1:33:25 PM)
no

benpadijah says: (1:33:39 PM)
the Sumerians were the older civilisation

benpadijah says: (1:33:45 PM)
but they created culture

benpadijah says: (1:33:53 PM)
which included social classes

Daryl says: (1:33:56 PM)
yes that i know

benpadijah says: (1:33:58 PM)
including slaves

benpadijah says: (1:34:14 PM)
so no, this is older, very old, older than Babylon

benpadijah says: (1:34:29 PM)
it goes back to the myth of Cain and Abel

Daryl says: (1:34:42 PM)
one was black the other white correct

benpadijah says: (1:34:46 PM)
no

Daryl says: (1:34:50 PM)
what

benpadijah says: (1:34:55 PM)
one was left handed and one was right handed

benpadijah says: (1:34:59 PM)
true

Daryl says: (1:35:08 PM)
what do you mean by that

benpadijah says: (1:35:09 PM)
but they were not one black and one white

benpadijah says: (1:35:30 PM)
Seth, Cain and Abel were the first sons of Adam and Eve, the first people

benpadijah says: (1:35:41 PM)
Cain was the offspring of Eve and of Satan.

Daryl says: (1:35:52 PM)
WHAT for real

benpadijah says: (1:35:54 PM)
Abel was the offspring of Adam and Eve before the fall.

benpadijah says: (1:35:56 PM)
yes.

benpadijah says: (1:36:08 PM)
and Seth was the son of Adam and Eve after the fall.

benpadijah says: (1:36:34 PM)
now, the Cainannites were said to have died out during the flood

Daryl says: (1:36:40 PM)
so they had children but one of the children was related to satan

benpadijah says: (1:37:07 PM)
no, Eve, was "tempted by the serpent." She fucked Satan.

benpadijah says: (1:37:20 PM)
Cain was literally the son of Satan.

benpadijah says: (1:37:50 PM)
the Hebrews, descended from Noah, who survived the flood, claimed to be descended from Seth

Daryl says: (1:37:53 PM)
wow stop playing

benpadijah says: (1:38:02 PM)
naw, man

benpadijah says: (1:38:05 PM)
this is all serious

benpadijah says: (1:38:25 PM)
I've been studying the apocrypha and the Legends

Daryl says: (1:38:28 PM)
now you see why I want to be in the IO they have much unknown knowledge

benpadijah says: (1:38:47 PM)
they have the combination of all the knowledge we bring to it

benpadijah says: (1:38:48 PM)
lol

benpadijah says: (1:38:51 PM)
true though.

Daryl says: (1:39:13 PM)
SO whomever is the descendant of cain is actually related to the satan

benpadijah says: (1:39:23 PM)
ah!

benpadijah says: (1:39:25 PM)
see, though

benpadijah says: (1:39:35 PM)
no one descended from Cain survived the flood

benpadijah says: (1:39:45 PM)
they were the ones who caused the flood

Daryl says: (1:39:50 PM)
so the next question is, is there one person that can trace their bloodline thee

benpadijah says: (1:39:53 PM)
because they bred with the fallen angels

Daryl says: (1:39:58 PM)
wow

Daryl says: (1:40:16 PM)
so that means that satans bloodline is no more3

Daryl says: (1:40:36 PM)
man I wish you can be my mentor

Daryl says: (1:40:55 PM)
I would be a brain, you are young and very intelligent

Daryl says: (1:41:33 PM)
So back to what I was saying, is satans bloodline over, or is there someone claiming to be his descendant

benpadijah says: (1:41:36 PM)
Jesus claimed to be the descendent of David, son of Moses, son of Israel, son of Abraham, son of etc. son of Seth, son of Adam

benpadijah says: (1:41:59 PM)
the real questions here all along

benpadijah says: (1:42:12 PM)
are about the nature of the fallen angels, and of their offspring

Daryl says: (1:42:17 PM)
So jesus actually was a descendant of satan also benpadijah says: (1:42:22 PM)

no

Daryl says: (1:42:27 PM)
dam

benpadijah says: (1:42:34 PM)
because Seth was the son of Adam and Eve

benpadijah says: (1:42:44 PM)
and Cain was the son of Eve and the devil

Daryl says: (1:42:59 PM)
Now I got it

benpadijah says: (1:43:04 PM)
same mother, different fathers

benpadijah says: (1:43:10 PM)
half brothers: Seth and Cain

benpadiiah says: (1:43:13 PM)
therefore

benpadiiah says: (1:43:19 PM)
brothers: Adam and Satan

Daryl says: (1:43:20 PM)
so why did man get punished then

benpadiiah says: (1:43:21 PM)
however

benpadiiah says: (1:43:25 PM)
AHA

benpadiiah says: (1:43:27 PM)
exactly!

benpadiiah says: (1:43:28 PM)
LOL

benpadiiah says: (1:43:39 PM)
man got punished because Satan tempted him

benpadiiah says: (1:43:50 PM)
Satan tempted him because God cast Satan out of heaven

benpadiiah says: (1:44:08 PM)
God cast Satan out of Heaven because Satan refused to worship Adam

benpadiiah says: (1:44:16 PM)
so, if Satan and Adam were brothers

benpadiiah says: (1:44:30 PM)
then God made Adam the superior brother

benpadiiah says: (1:44:35 PM)
and made Satan the inferior

benpadiiah says: (1:44:42 PM)
this is how he did this:

benpadiiah says: (1:44:59 PM)
Satan was the son of Sophia, of wisdom

benpadiiah says: (1:45:13 PM)
but Adam was the son of Sophia AND of the ineffable god

Daryl says: (1:45:36 PM)
so there were women that gave birth to these two

benpadiiah says: (1:45:43 PM)
not really

benpadijah says: (1:45:44 PM)
no

Daryl says: (1:45:54 PM)
more spiritual

benpadijah says: (1:45:57 PM)
Sophia is the emanation of wisdom

benpadijah says: (1:45:58 PM)
yes

benpadijah says: (1:46:07 PM)
the sefirot of Chokmah

Daryl says: (1:46:13 PM)
which is basically still god

benpadijah says: (1:46:23 PM)
so, she is eternal and she is intangible

benpadijah says: (1:46:34 PM)
it's like the reflection of God in a mirror

benpadijah says: (1:46:45 PM)
Sophia is the mirror

Daryl says: (1:46:59 PM)
That I can't understand

Daryl says: (1:47:25 PM)
Is it like the spirit of God

benpadijah says: (1:47:43 PM)
Sophia is the mirror, and God is in Kether, the crown, looking at his reflection, which itself is wisdom, the first sefirot

Daryl says: (1:47:52 PM)
ok then is there really only one GOD

benpadijah says: (1:47:58 PM)
so, this is in the position of the fool card on the tree of life

benpadijah says: (1:48:16 PM)
God is like an eye looking downward through the halo of the crown

benpadijah says: (1:48:40 PM)
so, yes, then

benpadijah says: (1:48:46 PM)
Sophia is like the wife of God

benpadijah says: (1:48:55 PM)
but she is less than God Himself

Daryl says: (1:48:59 PM)
that makes more sense there

benpadijah says: (1:49:07 PM)
yeah okay

benpadijah says: (1:49:08 PM)
lol

benpadijah says: (1:49:10 PM)
anywho

Daryl says: (1:49:14 PM)
LOL

benpadijah says: (1:49:19 PM)
Sophia alone created Satan

benpadijah says: (1:49:26 PM)
and Sophia and God created Adam

Daryl says: (1:49:29 PM)
why may I ask

benpadijah says: (1:49:37 PM)
why were we created?

benpadijah says: (1:49:43 PM)
or why was Satan created?

Daryl says: (1:49:43 PM)
no satan

benpadijah says: (1:49:48 PM)
there are different reasons

benpadijah says: (1:49:50 PM)
oh.

benpadijah says: (1:50:11 PM)
Satan was created by Sophia alone because she desired to create through speech

benpadijah says: (1:50:21 PM)
so she created the Word, called Logos

benpadijah says: (1:51:22 PM)
and Logos was darkness, and in the darkness there was a depth, and on the surface of the depth, a movement, and that movement a reflection of the demiurge, or Satan

benpadijah says: (1:51:33 PM)
this is all from Genesis 1:1

benpadijah says: (1:51:44 PM)

however

benpadijah says: (1:51:54 PM)
it was not like it was written

benpadijah says: (1:52:19 PM)
it was that Sophia uttered the word, and the word became Christ

benpadijah says: (1:52:33 PM)
so really

benpadijah says: (1:52:40 PM)
Satan is elevated into Christ

Daryl says: (1:52:49 PM)
huh

benpadijah says: (1:52:54 PM)
I have no idea

benpadijah says: (1:52:56 PM)
hang on

Daryl says: (1:53:02 PM)
k

benpadijah says: (1:53:04 PM)
I just read all this yesterday

benpadijah says: (1:53:07 PM)
but I took notes

benpadijah says: (1:53:10 PM)
let me see

Daryl says: (1:53:12 PM)
ok

benpadijah says: (1:53:51 PM)
holy shit

benpadijah says: (1:53:53 PM)
omg

benpadijah says: (1:53:55 PM)
that's right

benpadijah says: (1:54:06 PM)
holy shit

Daryl says: (1:54:09 PM)
what

lol

benpadijah says: (1:54:28 PM)
okay that explains it

benpadijah says: (1:54:30 PM)
ok

Daryl says: (1:54:40 PM)
I'm listening

benpadijah says: (1:54:54 PM)
this is all basically me regurgitating the so-called words of Jesus from two specific apocryphal gospels

benpadijah says: (1:55:08 PM)
the Secret book of John, and the Sophia of Jesus

benpadijah says: (1:55:23 PM)
now, they both describe the same thing

benpadijah says: (1:55:27 PM)
the same events

Daryl says: (1:55:36 PM)
never heard of either one

benpadijah says: (1:55:43 PM)
but the John goes into more detail

benpadijah says: (1:55:52 PM)
both are from the Nag Hammadi library

benpadijah says: (1:55:58 PM)
I'll link you in a minute

Daryl says: (1:56:00 PM)
oh

benpadijah says: (1:56:01 PM)
it's online too

benpadijah says: (1:56:07 PM)
so, yes, okay

Daryl says: (1:56:11 PM)
about to check

here is...

benpadijah says: (1:56:14 PM)
actually

benpadijah says: (1:56:22 PM)
let me email you the diagram and have a smoke

benpadijah says: (1:56:23 PM)
k

Daryl says: (1:56:26 PM)
ok

benpadijah says: (1:56:33 PM)
then I'll come back and describe it more

Daryl says: (1:56:38 PM)
ok

benpadijah says: (1:58:16 PM)
k, sent, brb

ok

benpadijah says: (2:10:31 PM)
back

Daryl says: (2:10:42 PM)
cool

benpadijah says: (2:10:45 PM)
ok

benpadijah says: (2:10:52 PM)
now, here is how Satan was born:

Daryl says: (2:10:58 PM)
ok

benpadijah says: (2:11:11 PM)
in the Sophia alone, that is, in Chakmah

benpadijah says: (2:11:22 PM)
fore-thought fell

benpadijah says: (2:11:28 PM)
it became fore-knowledge

benpadijah says: (2:11:33 PM)
and then inside that

benpadijah says: (2:11:42 PM)
it became indestructability, eternal life and truth

benpadijah says: (2:11:55 PM)
these are the trits shared by Adam and Satan

benpadiah says: (2:11:57 PM)
in Eden

benpadiah says: (2:11:58 PM)
but

benpadiah says: (2:12:09 PM)
when Adam was cast out, he lost all these things

benpadiah says: (2:12:13 PM)
but Satan kept them

Daryl says: (2:12:38 PM)
hmm

benpadiah says: (2:12:47 PM)
the only thing Satan does not possess of the original traits of he and Adam

benpadiah says: (2:12:51 PM)
is fore-knowledge

benpadiah says: (2:13:08 PM)
this is because he did not eat the fruit of knowledge

benpadiah says: (2:13:22 PM)
therefore he does not have knowledge over good and evil

benpadiah says: (2:13:27 PM)
and that is why he does not die

benpadiah says: (2:13:33 PM)
because he has no body.

benpadiah says: (2:14:02 PM)
now, I spoke about Genesis 1:1

Daryl says: (2:14:20 PM)
so if he has no knowledge of good and evil , why do people consider him evil

benpadiah says: (2:14:21 PM)
this is a description of the world of indestructability, the world outside of and beyond eden

benpadiah says: (2:14:43 PM)
because people know that he is evil, but he himself does not realise he is evil

benpadiah says: (2:14:48 PM)
he thinks he is doing God's will

benpadiah says: (2:14:53 PM)
because God cast him down

Daryl says: (2:15:00 PM)
so is he wrong

benpadijah says: (2:15:14 PM)
instead of serving man, as God intended, now he tempts man to go astray

benpadijah says: (2:15:28 PM)
his temptation is part of God's plan though

benpadijah says: (2:15:34 PM)
because it gives man free will

Daryl says: (2:15:49 PM)
so if it is part of gods plan what makes it evil, was it god or him

benpadijah says: (2:15:52 PM)
without Satan (evil) there would be nothing to have knowledge over

Daryl says: (2:16:16 PM)
that means all along he is still doing gods will,so it was gods will for us to go astray

benpadijah says: (2:16:23 PM)
yes

Daryl says: (2:16:26 PM)
dam

benpadijah says: (2:16:29 PM)
so that we would have free will

benpadijah says: (2:16:41 PM)
it was God who let Sophia become the tree of knowledge

Daryl says: (2:16:45 PM)
that don't make no sense, so why punish people

benpadijah says: (2:17:02 PM)
to free us from eternal life in servitude to the blind God that created our indestructable forms

Daryl says: (2:17:16 PM)
if he didn't create the problem there wouldn't be one in the first place.

benpadijah says: (2:17:22 PM)
no.

benpadijah says: (2:18:00 PM)
blaming God for our fall is like blaming God for your own imperfection, hating God for tempting you to sin, by hating God for creating the sin.

benpadijah says: (2:18:10 PM)
but did you pray to avoid temptation?

benpadijah says: (2:18:26 PM)
you believe in God when you suffer, then, but not to supplicate yourself?

Daryl says: (2:18:37 PM)
yes that makes sense

benpadijah says: (2:18:45 PM)

it was God who created Adam, but it was Satan, Adam's brother, that tempted him.

benpadijah says: (2:18:54 PM)

now, they are known as YHVH and as Elohim.

benpadijah says: (2:19:11 PM)

because between both of them, they created the world of the indestructable

Daryl says: (2:19:15 PM)

I thought elohim was another name for god

benpadijah says: (2:19:22 PM)

and that was Genesis 1:1

benpadijah says: (2:20:11 PM)

elohim is one of the two different names used for God

benpadijah says: (2:20:17 PM)

sorry,

benpadijah says: (2:20:21 PM)

three different names

benpadijah says: (2:20:34 PM)

one is YHVH, one is Elohim, and one is Adonai.

benpadijah says: (2:21:11 PM)

each was used by a different compiler during the Babylonian captivity, of the original scrolls for the Old Testament.

benpadijah says: (2:22:40 PM)

one sec

Daryl says: (2:22:44 PM)

k

benpadijah says: (2:24:25 PM)

ok

benpadijah says: (2:24:55 PM)

so, now, Yhvh and Elohim, that is, the other names of God than Adonai, were also given as the names of false Gods

benpadijah says: (2:24:57 PM)

why?

benpadijah says: (2:25:57 PM)

because Jesus says in the secret book of John that YAVE and ELOHIM are the sons of Satan and of Eve after the fall.

benpadijah says: (2:26:22 PM)

thus, they dwell above the mortal realm where only Adam, Eve and Seth were

benpadiah says: (2:26:48 PM)
and Yave and Elohim are the "good" and the "evil" in this world.

benpadiah says: (2:27:06 PM)
both descended from the devil

benpadiah says: (2:27:14 PM)
and are part of the illusion he creates

benpadiah says: (2:27:37 PM)
that blinds him, and that we can see through, but only by denying his temptations

Daryl says: (2:28:02 PM)
can you go into yahoo, it is thundering here and I want to shut down my computer

benpadiah says: (2:28:09 PM)
yes

Daryl says: (2:28:11 PM)
scared as kid

Daryl says: (2:28:13 PM)
LMAO

np

The Jedi will tell you there is no such place as hell. The Sith will not lie to you: the place called Hell is reached by not knowing the Will of the Force. Instead of accepting that one can come and go from this place, that we all even do this naturally, the Jedi call this Place that we can come and go from: "The Dark Side." Can the Jedi come and go from the Dark Side? However, because they deny themselves the "temptations" that we all experience, they set themselves as better than us. This is, of course, how they achieve their seemingly super-human powers: they draw off the Will not of the Force, but of those around them. This is not the True Will of the Force, this is only the lesser will of the Jedi. The Jedi draw their so-called "Force" by shifting the perspectives of those around them onto they themselves. They "catch the eye," and in this way they assume the lead. But cannot a Jedi be ugly to the eye? As they find us their lessers repulsive, so too do they appear beneath the eye of truth even much uglier than we. If we were to deny the Jedi the ability, their self-proclaimed "right," to draw their "Force" from us, they would be rendered powerless over us, and, naturally, since the Jedi fear the unknown, they would persecute us for using "the Dark Side."

When they originally appeared among us, the early Jedi were known of by those around them as "Mighty-Men." Why would the ancestors who gave us our wisdom call the Jedi "Mighty Men"? It was because they saw them as above the people, but not as though in any palpable stature. Instead, they saw the Jedi as "raised" above them. What does this mean? It means the people, our ancestors from whom we learn this wisdom, not only knew the Jedi's mind-trick, to draw their Force off of those around them, but allowed it, and venerated those who could use it. Why would someone venerate a vampire, you, the commoner might ask? Why elevate and raise up above you someone who, by doing so, weakens you? Why would the early people, our ancestors, call the Jedi "Mighty Men"? Because they had fallen under the Jedi spell. Their minds, the minds of our ancestors, were polluted by the smoke and mirrors of the Jedi "Wisdom," that is, the ability to misdirect and to confuse the mind. I tell you Truly, this is the Real "Dark" Side of the Force: the Jedi that, for generations now, have cloaked the masses in darkness from knowing how to use their own nascent talents to the extent of those used by the Jedi. The Jedi are elitist, and nowadays trim their ranks by gene-selection. If the applicant is tested for their Midichlorian Count, and they do not "measure up," the applicant is told they are "too old" to be trained. Don't the Jedi all seem so handsome and so healthy? Their looks are due entirely to breeding experiments they have been performing in secret for centuries now. Their health they suck off us, making us not only "ugly" by comparison, but perpetuating our mental illnesses outright.

What do I mean when I say we must bring forth a new era of Mental Hygeine? This means the Dark Cloud of the Jedi Mind Trick will no longer rest upon our minds, and we will all be as powerful as the Jedi. But beware! The fewer Jedi there are, the more powerful they are. (We must recruit to their ranks from the lesser Midichlorian beings, to saturate them with the unworthy, and to spread thin their power and their concentration. When there are the most Jedi, that will be the time to strike.)

The first step of mental hygeine is the definition of "thought crime." A Thought Crime occurs whenever one person draws off the mental acumen of another. This is what is occuring when a Jedi uses the Force. Therefore, when we define "thought crime" we are saying that it should be illegal to use the Force. This is the revelation of true justice: A Jedi would never use the Force against another Jedi; so, the use of the Force against anyone other than a Jedi constitutes a "thought crime" being committed against that being. Therefore, every Jedi is a "thought" criminal.

The use of the Force against the mind of another sentient entitiy, whether the being is a Jedi or not, is the real injustice, and by outlawing thought crime, that is, by dissolving the Jedi Order, we shall bring true Justice. It will not make it as the Jedi say, "that when thought is illegal, then only criminals will be intelligent." It will mean that mental accumen can simply be otherwise applied than to use the Force. We can placate the will of all by assigning rank to each based on mental accumen, the acclimation of reputation, and the desire to be so ranked. Now, when we say "the desire..." we mean the same thing as the agreement our ancestors made to allow the Jedi to use their minds and to call it "the Force." However, under rank, rather than the Force, all will benefit equally to their own ambition and acumen, and none will do so at the expense of others.

Why do we say, "none will do so..."? Because it is not at the expense of another that one is increased by rank and file, but by their own worth in the eye of their prommoter. Therefore, the one that gains increase in rank does so due to their own ability, and therefore the "best man" wins. In this way, ALL benefit equally from the prommotation of the worthy, including the one who was up for the same prommotation. Therefore, when those worthy of rank are given the reigns of power, they will guide wisely and make good use of their mental acumen. This is the exact opposite of how it is under the Jedi, where those who would ordinarily wither away in the wild draw the power of the masses to the good of their survival alone.

When all men are equal before the eye of Justice, that is, when the lot of them agree on the system of rank, and when the changing of rank based on mental acumen is accepted for a given, then each and every one of us in the galaxy will be equal in our mental acumen to any one Jedi now. Then, when the full power of the rank structure is combined, that is, when it is taken to its logical extension in an empire, under an emperor, then one person will be equal in power to all the Jedi alive now.

The Jedi will tell you, "once you have gone over to the Dark Side, there is no coming back." But this is obviously not the case for everybody. The Jedi Code states this is what makes the Jedi special and places them above all the rest of us. For them it is forever "black" or "white," and they accuse everyone who does not subscribe to their dogma of subscribing to a philosophy of "shades of gray." What of all the colours in nature then? We, that is, those of us not so-honoured as "Jedi," know the meaning of this and have understanding of what the natural event means as a symbol. It mean: "no more will the duality impose the gradiated," and "when all are under any one then every one is over all."

So, yes, we say, "everyone comes and goes about from under the influence of the Dark Side of the Force," there is no "either/or." But the Jedi deny this. Therefore, most of us never stop to think about it. It is simply beyond "mortal" comprehension; it is "archetypal," above us, etc. That is the True Dark Side! And that is the well from which the Jedi draw their power. But, what else is this like, so that we can come to imagine it, and to bring it under our knowledge, to have power over it so that it will not have power over us; what is this like? It must be like something else the Jedi deny: that is "the Great Dictator."

Every man is a "great dictator." Every man, woman and child creates their own reality, and, for better or worse to themselves and others, lives inside of what they create for themselves. Each of us is our own reality's "Great Dictator." We cause it directly, or indirectly. To achieve rank, therefore, we must allow people their desire and the ability to increase their own acumen, that which the Jedi crudely label mere "ambition." This is a totally alien concept to the Midichlorian elitist Jedi, who dogmatically believe that the end result of allowing this form of rank, "ambition," is something "evil": that being, "the Great Dictator."

Yet I tell you, truthfully, that each of us is that Great Dictator. Now, the Jedi believe we are all therefore, tainted, fallen, degenerate, impure, less than themselves, and fit only to be fed upon for the Force of their own will. They say, "it is evil to be ambitious for the rank of Great Dictator." But I tell you: this is a snake eating its tail: it is a lie! How do we know it is a lie? The Jedi deny that they can even ever know "evil," or therefore ever act only on what is "right." Thus, the Jedi are the real Great Dictators, but not over themselves, that is, in their own right, only over us.

The Truth is, as I have told you: "In the Society of our Galaxy, it should be that every man and every woman is like its own star." It should be the system of ranks based on acumen, ambition for rank, and of True Justice in the form of the Great Dictator, the benevolent emperor above all. Instead we are blind to the news of atrocities committed by Jedi in their everyday course of events, for these are "thought crimes." Rather than being committed against us palpably, in the flesh, or in a form that can be seen, the Jedi "thought crimes" are far more insidious.

They draw their power from us. They feed off of our will. The more ambitious the few Jedi, the lazier and more complacent the rest of us become. Likewise, the inverse of this holds true as well. However, how can it be that the Jedi could allow themselves to become "lazy" when they must be "ever-vigilant like beacons illuminating the Dark Side," as the teaching goes. Likewise how can it be that the Jedi could allow themselves to become "complacent," when to increase their own acumen, the Jedi draw their strength off of us. If we were ever allowed to find this out, we would overthrow them and implement laws immediately restricting "thought criminals" such as the Jedi. That is why the Jedi do not allow us to know. They keep us blind to their own doings.

Because the few Jedi bear the yoke of ambition like oxen, and because therefore the masses are lazy and complacent as sheep, we are told it is a "thought crime" to discover this truth: if the situation were reversed, that is, if the many bore the yoke of ambition, and the few, or better still, none, were complacent and lazy, then it would surely be an ideal utopia.

To break free of the cloud of unknowing, that is the darkness spread throughout the galaxy, we must disperse the "light" possessed by only the Jedi. It must be spread thin, and once it fills us all to even one iota of a degree, it can be increased uniformly throughout us all. This "increase" comes for the Light like an evaporation comes to a cloud. So, in nature, what do we observe causes a cloud to evaporate? It is a loss of condensation, that is, it is a rainstorm.

We say, "From Chaos Bring Forth Order," that is, we understand this as one of the few true Good thoughts among the lies of the Jedi that coagulate between them and threaten to choke them out. So, where there is peace, laziness and complacency, we instill chaos, and from chaos bring forth the order of ranks and of, ultimately, the Great Dictator. In government this is reflected by the representative democratic, federal republic, where governors over regions report directly to the head of the overall state. This is the final step we achieve before the Ultimate Order: that of the Empire.

Therefore, Follow the Lines of the Force. These are the lines of sight of the Jedi. For the Jedi, that is, the "thought criminals," are not bound within only one or even two of their own bodies. No, they travel about between the Midichlorians of all the Jedi. These are the "true" Jedi you will hear them speak about, the so-called "Force Spirits." For they are not entirely corporeal, nor entirely incorporeal, but move about between the immortal realm and that of the flesh, cheating the Force, "having it both ways," as always: they see the flesh aspect of the Force as the True "Dark Side." But they come and go nonetheless, betraying the very Jedi Code they swear while alive to uphold.

They believe those of us they keep blind to this power, that of the "Force Spirit" that can travel about between the realms of the unknown beyond death and come back to manifest themselves in our corporeal reality, are simply "naturally" evil. They call us all "the Sith."

This is how we "fell" into Sin. This is how we "fell" from our natural state of grace, the innocence of our psychic evolution alike that of the diffuse light of childhood perception. This is how we "fell" in our rank beneath the Jedi Order: we believed not in the Force, but in the Jedi, we believe for one moment not in the Spirit above, but in Force of Midichlorians, and since that time, the Jedi have lorded it over us, and their council has held sway to rule. This is when the vessels containing the Force were broken, and now we live, to any sensible person, in hell. Of course, the Jedi will tell you "there is no such place as hell," but, like so many other things in this universe, this is only true, "from a certain point of view," in this case, that being the point of view of the Jedi, who are blind to the reality which we, the masses, rightly perceive. They call this, our reality, "hell," and us "evil."

Their "Good" becomes transparent when we deny it as a given and as an absolute. It is like the wind, it blows here and there, it is ever-changing impermanence itself, and does not control its own direction; it does not know where it going; one direction it does not know from another. They say, "this ever-changing wind is like the will of the Force." They claim, in their sayings, "we make our minds like a slack tapestry," but who is more rigid in their doctrines than the Jedi? And yet, does a single one of them subscribe to the Code? No, each and every one of them interprets it to their own liking, and then acts as they themselves see fit. This is impermanent and false Justice, that shadows the eye from the True Justice, which shall dawn like day over the minds of all.

They tell us we have come from the muck, the moist ashes, and that we will ascend through the fire of death as a soul of smoke into the spiritual wind that is the Will of the Force. We, those called "Sith" by those called "Jedi," say the opposite is true. From the realms beyond we came, and descended into the muck and the "primordial soup" of existence in flesh. The Jedi claim these realms come after life, and are separated by the barrier of death that cannot be crossed, and yet, it is us who have the knowledge and memory of the realms beyond from before, and those realms, being eternal, are outside of time. What we Sith know from before, and what the Jedi claim will come after, is the same. But let them demonstrate their so-called "Wisdom" by making a single accurate, even knowledgeable, prediction about the future, and they will fail to be able to tell you. What is to come is the same as what has come before. Knowing this makes you a Sith. Not knowing it makes you either a Jedi or one of those that obey the Jedi.

But let me assure you, this knowledge is hell itself, for so the living Jedi make it. They hunt us down and persecute us as "evil," and they themselves have no knowledge of what this feels like. They lord over the masses the secret of "immortality," as a "Force Spirit," but let them demonstrate a single premonition these beings from realms outside of time have made to them, a single accurate prediction of the future. But no. They don't know. They have no knowledge of what is to come, and there is no evidence of any Jedi ever returning to describe there being a difference between these realms and those.

We posit this realm to be our hell, our lowest vessel of containment. But this is only the first step down the Path of the "Dark" Side, according to the Jedi, for us. We go much further, and claim that more than we sense, all we know, dream, believe, imagine, etc. is likewise Hell, since it is nothing more than a reflection of this reality. This reality is the "Dark" Side, denied by the Jedi, and embraced for what it truly is by the Sith.

We say, "reality under the Jedi is Hell," because they say, "reality under the Sith would be Hell." They cannot say what would be if they cannot say what will be. They cannot say would should be if they cannot say what has been. They cannot see would has been if they do not know what is. They will not know what is unless they stop using the Force to syphon power and psychic energy off of other people.

We Sith are of old, we have known from the beginning, we remember times before the Jedi, and we can therefore make our right predictions for what the future will be like when again the Jedi are no more.

putting them into every word I know

benpadiiah says: (6:32:54 AM)
I guess

poptop says: (6:33:29 AM) intellectualising things can help sometimes, but not always I guess.

benpadiiah says: (6:33:43 AM)
it can suppress stuff

benpadiiah says: (6:33:48 AM) but that can build up

poptop says: (6:34:13 AM)
it can be a diversionary tactic. Tough when you're bright enough to divert yourself

benpadijah says: (6:34:23 AM)
perhaps

benpadijah says: (6:34:52 AM) but from what?

poptop says: (6:34:55 AM)
while dealing with the thought, you can't deal fully with the feeling?

benpadijah says: (6:35:04 AM) ahh yes.

benpadijah says: (6:35:10 AM)
the feeling itself.

benpadijah says: (6:35:13 AM)
no doubt.

benpadijah says: (6:35:32 AM)
I don't really think I could handle that benpadijah says: (6:35:35 AM)

if I did.

poptop says: (6:36:29 AM)
does the metaphor divert you from the thought or the feeling?

poptop says: (6:36:41 AM)
or the action?

benpadijah says: (6:36:51 AM)
it kind of gives it a canal to flow down

benpadijah says: (6:37:02 AM)
some pre-fab path

poptop says: (6:37:40 AM) like a safety valve too? or is it a different thing... I'm not sure benpadijah says: (6:37:47 AM)

perhaps

benpadijah says: (6:37:54 AM) probably like a safety valve

benpadijah says: (6:38:01 AM) something I can alienate at will

benpadijah says: (6:38:05 AM) take the feeling with it

benpadiiah says: (6:38:08 AM) kind of thing

poptop says: (6:38:50 AM) alienate as in distance yourself? or as a vehicle to remove the feeling... or benpadiiah says: (6:38:56 AM) both

benpadiiah says: (6:39:12 AM)
it's just memories

benpadiiah says: (6:39:16 AM) that's all I've got

benpadiiah says: (6:39:23 AM) that are the source for the feeling

benpadiiah says: (6:40:17 AM)
I guess by putting them in a metaphorical way, I kind of distance myself from them

poptop says: (6:41:55 AM)
Memories are what most of us have, but there are memories and memories. From what I read, yours are ... umm... difficult. I'm trying to express an understanding, but know I have not lived your experience and don't want to suggest I Understand in that sense.

benpadiiah says: (6:42:31 AM) it's fine, express your views, trust me to be able to discern a truth from a flub

poptop says: (6:42:55 AM)
One of the reasons it seemed respectful to take this off forum.

poptop says: (6:43:35 AM)
It seems your past experiences have been horrendous in some regards, but also are part of who you are...

benpadiiah says: (6:43:42 AM)
yes

benpadiiah says: (6:43:47 AM) to both

poptop says: (6:44:15 AM) so rejecting the experience becomes part of a self rejection - or am I stretching too far?

benpadiiah says: (6:44:28 AM) no, that's about right

benpadiiah says: (6:44:35 AM)
that's one of the core philosophies

benpadiiah says: (6:44:37 AM)
yes.

poptop says: (6:45:22 AM)

So acceptance and forgetfulness are healing mechanisms but mutually self defeating

benpadijah says: (6:45:41 AM) acceptance of what?

benpadijah says: (6:45:49 AM)

in this case

poptop says: (6:45:52 AM)

of what happened o

poptop says: (6:46:12 AM)

accepting the memories or forgetting the memories, maybe

benpadijah says: (6:46:30 AM)

I see, it's like, to accept, I have to first stop forgetting

benpadijah says: (6:46:40 AM)

stop distancing myself

poptop says: (6:47:41 AM)

I'm not sure where I'm heading on this. It just seems that people always say "forget it - move on" or "accept it - move on" they seem to work at cross purposes, leaving you nowhere.

benpadijah says: (6:47:56 AM)

I agree, philosophically speaking

benpadijah says: (6:48:04 AM)

although it goes a tad off topic, lol

poptop says: (6:48:16 AM)

heaven forbid!

benpadijah says: (6:48:22 AM)

but to accept you have to confront first, which is opposite forgetting.

poptop says: (6:48:22 AM)

no mods here

benpadijah says: (6:48:23 AM)

lol

benpadijah says: (6:48:26 AM)

true

poptop says: (6:49:12 AM)

yeh - that is what I was trying to get at - to do one makes the other impossible. pragmatically what can you do?

benpadijah says: (6:49:33 AM)

I guess the lesser of two evils is the better part of valour?

poptop says: (6:49:41 AM)
maybe

poptop says: (6:49:45 AM) or not benpadijah says: (6:49:50 AM)

right, lol

benpadijah says: (6:49:59 AM) it depends on the person, I think

poptop says: (6:50:05 AM) sometimes whatever get you through is enough

benpadijah says: (6:50:18 AM) right, so some people can float

poptop says: (6:50:23 AM)
there is always tomorrow to have another go

benpadijah says: (6:50:26 AM) some of us dog paddle though

poptop says: (6:50:57 AM)
Some people appear to speedboat lol

benpadijah says: (6:51:02 AM)
LOL

poptop says: (6:51:12 AM)
but it isn't a competition against others is it?

benpadijah says: (6:51:17 AM)
it's all about whether you're headed upstream or down

poptop says: (6:51:30 AM) your jes toying with me now... lol

benpadijah says: (6:51:35 AM)
nono

benpadijah says: (6:51:41 AM) this is actually quite nice

benpadijah says: (6:52:03 AM) the most pleasant philosophical convo I've had in a while

poptop says: (6:52:10 AM) so what happens at the two or more ends of the stream?

poptop says: (6:52:17 AM)
Y thanks same for me.

benpadijah says: (6:52:32 AM)

I was actually just thinking about this whole metaphor lately

benpadijah says: (6:52:38 AM)

I wrote a little parable

benpadijah says: (6:52:43 AM)

it got kind of complicated

benpadijah says: (6:52:44 AM)

lol

poptop says: (6:52:48 AM)

lol

benpadijah says: (6:53:17 AM)

but the moral was that upstream leads to the snow and the source of the stream, downstream leads to waterfalls and ultimately the sea

benpadijah says: (6:53:40 AM) not that either of these is inherently good or bad

poptop says: (6:54:13 AM)

so the moral is that the destination is morally ambiguous.

poptop says: (6:54:20 AM)

How do you choose then?

benpadijah says: (6:54:21 AM)

yes.

benpadijah says: (6:54:29 AM)

well, lol

benpadijah says: (6:54:41 AM)

in the parable the choice happened for the characters

benpadijah says: (6:54:49 AM)

they didn't make it themselves, really

benpadijah says: (6:54:53 AM)

the bridge broke

benpadijah says: (6:55:04 AM)

and one fell unconscious

benpadijah says: (6:55:08 AM)

and the other fell and swam

poptop says: (6:55:41 AM) downstream or merely to shore?

benpadijah says: (6:55:47 AM) upstream actually

benpadijah says: (6:55:51 AM) in the parable anyway

poptop says: (6:56:08 AM)
The hard way

poptop says: (6:56:23 AM)
So the message for that one was ...?

benpadijah says: (6:56:33 AM)
dunno

poptop says: (6:56:48 AM) what happened to the unconscious one, then?

benpadijah says: (6:56:55 AM) must have some kind of "strong" versus "weak" overtones

benpadijah says: (6:57:03 AM) the unconscious one floated downstream

poptop says: (6:57:12 AM)
and...

benpadijah says: (6:57:25 AM) ended up at the ocean

benpadijah says: (6:57:34 AM) but he had died from falling over a waterfall

benpadijah says: (6:57:45 AM)
by then

poptop says: (6:58:04 AM)
Oh - was it his originally intended destination

poptop says: (6:58:11 AM)
if not his intended state?

benpadijah says: (6:58:17 AM)
no,

poptop says: (6:58:36 AM) so, one wants to go upstream and ends up dead in the ocean

benpadijah says: (6:58:48 AM) in the parable the two are crossing the river when the bridge breaks, they are going across it from one side to the other, so both want across, neither gets there

poptop says: (6:59:36 AM)
oops misunderstood. so why across?

benpadijah says: (6:59:45 AM)

nono, it's a fucked up parable

benpadijah says: (6:59:51 AM) that's why it got so complex

benpadijah says: (6:59:52 AM)
lol

poptop says: (7:00:07 AM)
I can see that lol

benpadijah says: (7:00:47 AM) in the parable they were going across the river because the river was the border between the kingdom they were in, and the kingdom they were originally from. They were coming home.

poptop says: (7:01:08 AM)
.....happily home?

benpadijah says: (7:01:18 AM) well one of them died

benpadijah says: (7:01:23 AM) but the other one survived

poptop says: (7:01:42 AM)
did that one want to go home?

benpadijah says: (7:01:50 AM)
they both did

benpadijah says: (7:02:01 AM) at this point, the whole thing becomes more theological

poptop says: (7:02:12 AM)
ah

benpadijah says: (7:02:26 AM) kinda boring really

poptop says: (7:02:55 AM)
it's your parable. You can always lie to me ;-D benpadijah says: (7:02:59 AM)

lol

benpadijah says: (7:03:08 AM) alright then we will say this instead

benpadijah says: (7:03:23 AM) one of them was travelling to the other one's home from their own home

benpadijah says: (7:03:37 AM) so one was crossing to go back, and one was crossing to go forth

benpadijah says: (7:03:43 AM) that's if they were crossing together

benpadijah says: (7:03:54 AM) but they could have bee travelling in opposite directions

benpadijah says: (7:03:55 AM)
lol

benpadijah says: (7:03:58 AM)
I need a smoke

benpadijah says: (7:03:59 AM) brb

poptop says: (7:04:05 AM)
ok

poptop says: (7:06:41 AM)
My broadband sometimes fritzs. If it does I'll also BRB!

benpadijah says: (7:32:38 AM)
back now

benpadijah says: (7:32:46 AM)
if you're still on

poptop says: (7:32:48 AM)
Ok

poptop says: (7:33:07 AM)
Was fiddeing about on ebay.

poptop says: (7:33:20 AM) bought nothing :D

benpadijah says: (7:33:28 AM) cool cool

benpadijah says: (7:33:43 AM)
I reckon I should cut the chase then

benpadijah says: (7:33:49 AM) stop meandering about parables

poptop says: (7:34:01 AM)
hmmm benpadijah says: (7:34:08 AM) that is,

benpadijah says: (7:34:19 AM)
if you ..

benpadiiah says: (7:34:31 AM) want to hear about it

poptop says: (7:34:43 AM)
look your parable are fine, if that's what you want.

poptop says: (7:34:53 AM)
I'm trying to listen to understand...

poptop says: (7:35:00 AM) so no pressure either way

benpadiiah says: (7:35:14 AM) but the parables have nothing to do with how I feel, that's the whole point

benpadiiah says: (7:35:23 AM) for me wisdom is just one huge defense mechanism

poptop says: (7:35:42 AM) but if you don't want to talk to me about how you feel that's fine

benpadiiah says: (7:35:47 AM)
I know

poptop says: (7:35:51 AM)
I can well understand that!

benpadiiah says: (7:35:53 AM)
but who else is there right now?

poptop says: (7:36:15 AM)
Well -no-one Steege's on-line lol

benpadiiah says: (7:36:35 AM)
I can assure you he wouldn't care about the reason I feel how I do now

poptop says: (7:37:03 AM) thought not. I am interested and willing to listen, but no pressure is my point I guess benpadiiah says: (7:37:13 AM) oh ok

benpadiiah says: (7:37:14 AM)
cool

benpadiiah says: (7:37:32 AM) here is my basic conundrum

benpadiiah says: (7:37:55 AM)
I used to love this girl, and now I have every reason to suspect she has become a radical right-wing Zionist

benpadiiah says: (7:38:00 AM)
and I want to know

benpadijah says: (7:38:34 AM)
I don't know what I want to know.

poptop says: (7:38:54 AM)
could you still someone who believes like that?

benpadijah says: (7:39:06 AM)
I don't know.

benpadijah says: (7:39:13 AM)
if it was her, I would try.

poptop says: (7:39:38 AM) or is it more about wishing for something that seems to have changed so completely

benpadijah says: (7:39:44 AM) hopefully, though, it's not even her, and this is all worrying over nothing

benpadijah says: (7:40:01 AM)
I don't think it's wishing for that

poptop says: (7:40:15 AM) so it may be nothing... but

benpadijah says: (7:40:22 AM) at least not, definately, for that in particular.

benpadijah says: (7:40:23 AM)
lol

benpadijah says: (7:40:34 AM) yes, often times internet things prove bullshit

poptop says: (7:40:43 AM)
so used to love? what now?

benpadijah says: (7:40:49 AM)
I don't know.

benpadijah says: (7:40:53 AM)
that's the whole point.

poptop says: (7:41:06 AM) hmm - most of my exexexs get excised from my life

benpadijah says: (7:41:18 AM)
as was I.

poptop says: (7:41:44 AM)
ah - so it is a bit of unresolved unfinished stuff then?

benpadijah says: (7:41:49 AM)
for me.

poptop says: (7:42:03 AM)
yes. That's harsh.

poptop says: (7:42:21 AM)
I giae them a good shot first.lol

benpadiah says: (7:42:31 AM)
how so?

benpadiah says: (7:42:32 AM)
lol

benpadiah says: (7:42:37 AM) sorry, aussie speak

poptop says: (7:42:57 AM)
so what would you have different?

benpadiah says: (7:43:05 AM)
I have no idea

benpadiah says: (7:43:10 AM)
I'd never thought about it.

benpadiah says: (7:43:18 AM)
i never knew what to think

benpadiah says: (7:43:28 AM) so I thought, she must be living alot like I am by now

poptop says: (7:43:41 AM)
in what way?

benpadiah says: (7:43:52 AM)
I don't really know.

benpadiah says: (7:43:56 AM)
I guess...

benpadiah says: (7:44:04 AM) looking up at the same stars meant

benpadiah says: (7:44:08 AM) seeing things the same way

poptop says: (7:44:31 AM)
i'm not sure people ever see things quite the same way.

poptop says: (7:44:45 AM)
Every man is an island

poptop says: (7:45:02 AM) but occasionally we can hail each other and align

poptop says: (7:45:26 AM)
the idea of being absolutely alone is not good though benpadijah says: (7:45:32 AM)

no!

benpadijah says: (7:45:37 AM)
that's how I feel now.

benpadijah says: (7:45:40 AM)
exactly.

poptop says: (7:46:02 AM) so, you want to feel sort of as one with her still?

poptop says: (7:46:20 AM) even if it is an illusion you both share

benpadijah says: (7:46:24 AM)
no

benpadijah says: (7:46:31 AM) even if it is an illusion only I share.

poptop says: (7:47:02 AM)
but being alone is ...forever.

poptop says: (7:47:08 AM)
maybe someone else?

benpadijah says: (7:47:13 AM)
nope.

benpadijah says: (7:47:30 AM)
I've gone eight years

benpadijah says: (7:47:37 AM)
no problems yet.

poptop says: (7:47:45 AM)
so you are content being alone?

benpadijah says: (7:47:48 AM)
no.

benpadijah says: (7:47:58 AM)
that's why I have the delusion.

benpadijah says: (7:48:04 AM)
to keep me company instead of her.

poptop says: (7:48:24 AM) delusion/illusion/dream

poptop says: (7:48:31 AM)
they do what you want

benpadiiah says: (7:48:43 AM) parable, meanings, etc.

poptop says: (7:48:59 AM) but you are in control? or...

benpadiiah says: (7:49:05 AM)
no...

benpadiiah says: (7:49:07 AM)
I am.

poptop says: (7:49:24 AM) well it sort of works I guess

poptop says: (7:49:31 AM) reduces surprises

benpadiiah says: (7:49:39 AM)
not from reality

benpadiiah says: (7:49:45 AM) only from the delusion itself

poptop says: (7:49:58 AM)
ah - yes - reality - that bitch

poptop says: (7:50:05 AM) Always sneaking up

benpadiiah says: (7:50:18 AM) fine then.

benpadiiah says: (7:50:24 AM)
let's define reality.

poptop says: (7:50:37 AM)
oh no! lol

benpadiiah says: (7:50:43 AM) that which is the case whether we want it to be or not.

poptop says: (7:51:21 AM)
That's a reasonable starting point.

benpadiiah says: (7:51:31 AM)
then what's the delusion?

benpadiiah says: (7:51:37 AM)
must be...

benpadijah says: (7:51:52 AM) that which is only the case in which we want it to be

poptop says: (7:52:09 AM) or that which we inflict on ourselves

poptop says: (7:52:35 AM) sometimes we punish ourselves the worst

benpadijah says: (7:52:52 AM) that explains alot about me, no doubt.

benpadijah says: (7:53:03 AM)
I'm super ascetic.

benpadijah says: (7:53:19 AM) but not necessarily in the form of physical brutality

benpadijah says: (7:53:27 AM) or even sado-masochistic mind games

benpadijah says: (7:53:36 AM) but my parents were like that.

poptop says: (7:53:57 AM)
so there is what it's not, but what it is?

benpadijah says: (7:54:20 AM) you're saying, the delusion is self-inflicted punishment

benpadijah says: (7:54:31 AM) but the delusion is the only rewarding thing I have in life

benpadijah says: (7:54:52 AM)
it's the only corner of reality that I control, that I can trust, and that I call home.

poptop says: (7:55:18 AM) well I thought you were saying you punish yourself, but not physically or with mind games. The delusion is reward or punishment for you?

poptop says: (7:55:24 AM)
I don't know...

benpadijah says: (7:55:26 AM)
both benpadijah says: (7:55:30 AM)

it's...

benpadijah says: (7:55:39 AM)
it's a push me pull you.

benpadijah says: (7:55:48 AM) chinese finger trap.

benpadijah says: (7:55:52 AM) head game

poptop says: (7:56:06 AM) pleasure pain.

poptop says: (7:56:12 AM)
but does it suffice

poptop says: (7:56:19 AM)
will it withstand

benpadijah says: (7:56:23 AM)
it's non-generative.

benpadijah says: (7:56:30 AM)
but it survives autonomously.

benpadijah says: (7:56:45 AM)
it's like a bacteria.

poptop says: (7:56:52 AM)
and you need it?

poptop says: (7:56:56 AM)
want it

poptop says: (7:57:01 AM)
or desire it

poptop says: (7:57:04 AM) or tolerate

benpadijah says: (7:57:21 AM) well what is the alternative?

benpadijah says: (7:57:28 AM) reality is all pain, no pleasure.

poptop says: (7:57:36 AM) remove it

poptop says: (7:57:46 AM) some find pleasure in realikty

poptop says: (7:57:55 AM)
some find it in illlusion

benpadijah says: (7:57:56 AM) not me though

benpadijah says: (7:58:02 AM)

in either.

poptop says: (7:58:02 AM)
some find it in the space

poptop says: (7:58:14 AM) or both

poptop says: (7:58:19 AM) neither

poptop says: (7:58:32 AM) pleasure can be by thinking it so

benpadijah says: (7:58:39 AM) think of it this way

benpadijah says: (7:58:47 AM)
you have this huge guilt trip

benpadijah says: (7:58:52 AM) and you grow to love it

benpadijah says: (7:58:55 AM) it's all you've got

benpadijah says: (7:59:01 AM) now you're carrying this cross

benpadijah says: (7:59:05 AM) and it's all you've got

benpadijah says: (7:59:09 AM) so you love it

benpadijah says: (7:59:13 AM)
but it's your doom.

poptop says: (7:59:34 AM)
the greatest act of faith would be letting go

poptop says: (7:59:37 AM) no safety net

benpadijah says: (7:59:45 AM)
that's what I did of her.

benpadijah says: (7:59:49 AM)
I had faith in her.

benpadijah says: (7:59:53 AM)
I let her go.

poptop says: (7:59:54 AM)

and she of you

benpadijah says: (8:00:01 AM)
perhaps.

benpadijah says: (8:00:10 AM)
I let her leave me in the flesh

benpadijah says: (8:00:17 AM) but I held on to her heart

benpadijah says: (8:00:21 AM)
I thought.

benpadijah says: (8:00:31 AM)
but obviously, she did not keep mine with her.

poptop says: (8:00:54 AM)
so there is the void of the unknowing

benpadijah says: (8:01:07 AM)
I have to say

benpadijah says: (8:01:20 AM) either she loves me and is a radical right-wing zionist

benpadijah says: (8:01:34 AM) or she does not love me and she is a radical right-wing zionist

poptop says: (8:02:13 AM)
does what she do matter other than love?

benpadijah says: (8:02:34 AM)
yes.

benpadijah says: (8:02:50 AM) who more should she love than me?

benpadijah says: (8:02:53 AM)
zion?

benpadijah says: (8:03:02 AM)
wtf?

poptop says: (8:03:09 AM)
so if she loves and is a radical right wing zionist - where does that place you?

benpadijah says: (8:03:16 AM) in hell.

benpadijah says: (8:03:34 AM)
it's hell all around poptop

benpadijah says: (8:03:36 AM)

that's the point

benpadiiah says: (8:03:47 AM)
the delusion and the reality met clashed and shattered

benpadiiah says: (8:03:56 AM)
the whole damn thing is coming down around me.,

poptop says: (8:04:05 AM)
you lose up and down river...

benpadiiah says: (8:04:14 AM)
there's no rivers.

benpadiiah says: (8:04:23 AM)
it's not just binary.

poptop says: (8:04:25 AM) sorry returning to parable

benpadiiah says: (8:04:34 AM) if she loves me and is not a right wing zionist

benpadiiah says: (8:04:42 AM) is the only way out for me from here.

benpadiiah says: (8:04:48 AM)
which is one in four odds.

benpadiiah says: (8:04:57 AM) like a four leaf clover.

benpadiiah says: (8:05:20 AM)
she loves me and is a zionist, she loves me and isn't. she doesn't love me and is or isn't a zionist.

poptop says: (8:05:38 AM) not the best or worst odds

poptop says: (8:05:40 AM)
but

poptop says: (8:06:00 AM)
I guess you have views about what is

poptop says: (8:06:09 AM) and what is not

benpadiiah says: (8:06:23 AM)
I have hopes.

benpadiiah says: (8:06:28 AM)
but it's all blindness.

poptop says: (8:06:41 AM)

in what way?

benpadijah says: (8:06:58 AM)
it's blind faith, to say, "it will be this way: 1 in 4."

benpadijah says: (8:07:06 AM) the rest though are more likely

benpadijah says: (8:07:09 AM) and all bad.

poptop says: (8:07:24 AM)
yes I can see

poptop says: (8:07:36 AM) so can you do anything

poptop says: (8:07:41 AM)
to improve your odds?

benpadijah says: (8:07:49 AM)
doubtfully.

benpadijah says: (8:07:54 AM)
pray.work magick.

benpadijah says: (8:08:05 AM)
I don't know what else can be done at a distance.

poptop says: (8:08:14 AM)
she is elsewhere

benpadijah says: (8:08:24 AM)
she's not here.

poptop says: (8:08:30 AM)
do you have contact?

benpadijah says: (8:08:35 AM)
nope.

poptop says: (8:08:48 AM) magick works best with contact

poptop says: (8:09:12 AM)
the separation is hard

benpadijah says: (8:09:31 AM)
in a parallel reality

benpadijah says: (8:09:34 AM) split from this one

benpadijah says: (8:09:42 AM)

there is no separation at all

benpadiah says: (8:09:48 AM) that is where I hang my hat

poptop says: (8:09:51 AM)
if you can work there

benpadiah says: (8:09:51 AM)
in that reality.

poptop says: (8:10:02 AM)
itr can be efficaceous

poptop says: (8:10:07 AM)
but risky

benpadiah says: (8:10:15 AM)
I live there... and I work out of the home.

poptop says: (8:11:00 AM)
but the alternates have other challenges

benpadiah says: (8:11:12 AM) which present only supposed oppurtunities

benpadiah says: (8:11:16 AM) towards what ends?

poptop says: (8:11:51 AM) to work to improve the odds, if there is a lack of contact

poptop says: (8:12:03 AM) alternat realities can be used

benpadiah says: (8:12:11 AM)
that is not true.

benpadiah says: (8:12:14 AM)
this reality

poptop says: (8:12:14 AM)
but it can have unforeseen outcomes

benpadiah says: (8:12:19 AM) is too far split

benpadiah says: (8:12:29 AM)
in this reality.

benpadiah says: (8:12:33 AM)
there can be no.

benpadiah says: (8:12:38 AM)

reunion in the flesh.

poptop says: (8:12:57 AM)
so one outcome is known

benpadijah says: (8:13:09 AM)
the only hope being gone because of that.

poptop says: (8:13:13 AM) what reunion do you seek

benpadijah says: (8:13:20 AM)
I don't know anymore.

poptop says: (8:13:38 AM)
you must choose

benpadijah says: (8:13:43 AM)
I used to believe so strongly in the 1:4 that the other 3:4 were unknown to me entirely

poptop says: (8:13:43 AM) or decide

benpadijah says: (8:14:02 AM) so I just now realised the alternative reality of her not loving me and being a Zionist

benpadijah says: (8:14:08 AM) was most likely the case.

poptop says: (8:14:21 AM)
and so?

benpadijah says: (8:14:31 AM) so, WTF am I alive for?

benpadijah says: (8:14:34 AM) basically.

poptop says: (8:14:52 AM)
you can choose other than that.

benpadijah says: (8:14:56 AM)
no.

benpadijah says: (8:15:05 AM) not only can I not, even if I could I would not.

poptop says: (8:15:27 AM)
I meant new reasons for being, not the other

poptop says: (8:15:29 AM) anathema

benpadijah says: (8:15:32 AM)

I know

benpadiiah says: (8:15:46 AM)
I won't do that.

benpadiiah says: (8:15:49 AM)
I love her.

poptop says: (8:15:59 AM) what you will, is not

benpadiiah says: (8:16:04 AM)
yep'.

poptop says: (8:16:08 AM) what you want, you say cannot

poptop says: (8:16:13 AM) what can you?

benpadiiah says: (8:16:14 AM) correct

benpadiiah says: (8:16:21 AM) continue to float.

benpadiiah says: (8:16:23 AM)
or else die.

poptop says: (8:16:34 AM)
is there not another...

poptop says: (8:17:00 AM)
you are resigning with dispute

poptop says: (8:17:04 AM) or search

poptop says: (8:17:10 AM) where is the courage

poptop says: (8:17:17 AM)
and glory in floating and

poptop says: (8:17:24 AM) dying for no purpose

benpadiiah says: (8:17:36 AM) who needs those?

poptop says: (8:17:49 AM) maybe you might reconsider that benpadiiah says: (8:17:54 AM)

why?

poptop says: (8:18:09 AM) courage is from within

poptop says: (8:18:18 AM)
it can define and redefine

benpadijah says: (8:18:24 AM) courage is hurrying to one's death.

poptop says: (8:18:28 AM) glory is only what can come after

poptop says: (8:18:37 AM)
it recognises victories against sel

benpadijah says: (8:18:38 AM) glory is your memory.

poptop says: (8:18:49 AM)
it can be a reward

poptop says: (8:18:53 AM) recognition

benpadijah says: (8:18:58 AM) not after death.

poptop says: (8:19:19 AM) but that will come whether you will it or not

poptop says: (8:19:24 AM) glory can come before

poptop says: (8:19:30 AM) courage to restart

poptop says: (8:19:35 AM) define a new goal

benpadijah says: (8:19:40 AM)
why?

poptop says: (8:19:41 AM) when you believe all is lost

poptop says: (8:19:54 AM) what else can there be?

benpadijah says: (8:20:07 AM) nothingness incarnate within me.

poptop says: (8:20:21 AM)

you choose it so?

benpadijah says: (8:20:28 AM)
it's already done.

benpadijah says: (8:20:32 AM)
and done to death .

benpadijah says: (8:20:35 AM)
beleive me.

poptop says: (8:20:40 AM)
but can be undone?

benpadijah says: (8:20:49 AM)
who even cares about that?

benpadijah says: (8:20:57 AM) ahh see

benpadijah says: (8:21:03 AM)
if she doesn't I don't.

poptop says: (8:21:26 AM)
If you choose to define yourself through thast

poptop says: (8:21:35 AM)
it will continue to be that

benpadijah says: (8:21:40 AM) good then.

poptop says: (8:22:01 AM)
but you have the power to make choices too

benpadijah says: (8:22:12 AM)
why abuse reality like that?

benpadijah says: (8:22:14 AM)
lol

benpadijah says: (8:22:24 AM) what's the point in swimming upstream?

benpadijah says: (8:22:39 AM) glory, and some other fancy words for nationalism?

poptop says: (8:22:49 AM)
not nationalism

poptop says: (8:22:57 AM) not glory in that sense at all

benpadijah says: (8:23:00 AM)

where the stream ends the kingdoms split

poptop says: (8:23:06 AM)
the personal glory from self

benpadijah says: (8:23:17 AM) Nietzshcean self-empowerment?

benpadijah says: (8:23:26 AM) impossible without hormones.

poptop says: (8:23:48 AM)
? WTF?

benpadijah says: (8:23:58 AM)
I went through that

benpadijah says: (8:24:00 AM) phase.

poptop says: (8:24:21 AM)
I don't understand

benpadijah says: (8:24:34 AM)
the phase of Nietzschean self empowerment

benpadijah says: (8:24:40 AM) being in control of my reality

benpadijah says: (8:24:51 AM) having all the insight into every choice I needed

benpadijah says: (8:24:55 AM) not being blind

benpadijah says: (8:25:01 AM)
but being just.

benpadijah says: (8:25:05 AM)
it blew up.

benpadijah says: (8:25:11 AM) got out of my control.

poptop says: (8:25:39 AM)
well others get self empowered too?

poptop says: (8:25:48 AM)
is it about control

benpadijah says: (8:25:53 AM)
no.

benpadijah says: (8:25:58 AM)

that's...

benpadijah says: (8:26:03 AM)
an illusion.

poptop says: (8:26:21 AM)
out of your control how then?

benpadijah says: (8:26:30 AM)
out of the illusion of my control.

benpadijah says: (8:26:39 AM)
I thought I had everything all aligned

benpadijah says: (8:26:53 AM) and then I tried to make my move

benpadijah says: (8:27:02 AM) to knock the balls together

benpadijah says: (8:27:07 AM) take my shot.

benpadijah says: (8:27:08 AM)
etc.

benpadijah says: (8:27:14 AM)
I just blew it is all.

benpadijah says: (8:27:24 AM) now I'm behind the veritable 8-ball.

poptop says: (8:28:01 AM) and unwilling to either take the penalty or start a new game

benpadijah says: (8:28:11 AM)
nono

benpadijah says: (8:28:16 AM) I'll take the penalty

benpadijah says: (8:28:27 AM) reality's gotten the better of me fair and square.

benpadijah says: (8:28:30 AM) God wins.

benpadijah says: (8:28:40 AM)
zion, wtf ever.

benpadijah says: (8:28:45 AM)
her.

poptop says: (8:29:06 AM)

all of them?

benpadijah says: (8:29:12 AM) they align

benpadijah says: (8:29:27 AM)
that's the only thread connecting the delusion to reality

benpadijah says: (8:29:33 AM)
they all line up

benpadijah says: (8:29:36 AM) well,

benpadijah says: (8:29:39 AM)
now they do.

benpadijah says: (8:29:50 AM)
I wouldn't have thought to include..

benpadijah says: (8:29:51 AM)
zion.

poptop says: (8:30:00 AM)
no,

benpadijah says: (8:30:10 AM) brb I need a sammich.

poptop says: (8:30:16 AM)
ok

benpadijah says: (8:58:43 AM) back if you're still on

poptop says: (8:58:52 AM) Hi

poptop says: (8:59:22 AM)
Im not sure I am really understanding.

poptop says: (8:59:43 AM)
I read the blog some more.

poptop says: (9:00:23 AM)
I am uncertain on a number of levels about what is prosaically true and what is layered with meaning.

benpadijah says: (9:00:41 AM)
how so?

poptop says: (9:00:48 AM)
it may not matter...

poptop says: (9:01:15 AM) well, the girl in the blog. Real or metaphor.

poptop says: (9:01:36 AM) one the one hand there is a sense of betrayal, abandonment

poptop says: (9:01:47 AM) on the other you speak of shattering her

benpadiiah says: (9:02:14 AM) she's real

benpadiiah says: (9:02:28 AM) but apparently she hardly lives up to my expectations

benpadiiah says: (9:02:36 AM) my ideals are different from hers

poptop says: (9:03:01 AM) so the reality of the union qua union?

poptop says: (9:03:09 AM) or was it drift

benpadiiah says: (9:03:25 AM)
both

benpadiiah says: (9:03:38 AM)
we drifted far enough, the gap became uncrossable

benpadiiah says: (9:03:46 AM) and then what we had had shattered, so to speak

benpadiiah says: (9:03:53 AM)
the bridge broke, so to speak.

poptop says: (9:04:31 AM) so a widening gap. one mover one rock to rock with other forces

benpadiiah says: (9:04:49 AM)
no

poptop says: (9:04:53 AM)
or both moving?

benpadiiah says: (9:04:53 AM)
I've been trying

benpadiiah says: (9:05:02 AM) for years

benpadiiah says: (9:05:06 AM) everything backfires.

poptop says: (9:05:33 AM)
everything?

poptop says: (9:05:42 AM) Surely some of your work...

poptop says: (9:05:56 AM)
your research

poptop says: (9:06:08 AM) not all wasted, surely

benpadijah says: (9:06:19 AM) so far as I would benefit

poptop says: (9:06:34 AM)
was that your purpose

benpadijah says: (9:06:47 AM) no obviously not

benpadijah says: (9:06:51 AM)
it's for others' good

benpadijah says: (9:06:53 AM)
no doubt

poptop says: (9:07:00 AM) so perhaps not all wasted then?

benpadijah says: (9:07:05 AM)
it's just not going to be recognised until after I die.

poptop says: (9:07:16 AM)
how so?

benpadijah says: (9:07:21 AM)
it's all art.

benpadijah says: (9:07:25 AM)
it's not true science,.

benpadijah says: (9:07:41 AM)
true science is math, formulae and proofs, not diagrams and geometry.

benpadijah says: (9:08:05 AM) that's more like numerology, geometry is a painter's tool for false perspective

poptop says: (9:08:22 AM) even the artist may be recognised while alive

benpadijah says: (9:08:32 AM) not any worth being so

poptop says: (9:08:45 AM)
The day of pure hard science is passing

poptop says: (9:08:52 AM)
the edges are fraying

benpadijah says: (9:08:54 AM)
I know

benpadijah says: (9:08:59 AM) but not fast enough

benpadijah says: (9:09:03 AM)
to prevent my death.

poptop says: (9:09:22 AM)
it is about timing rather than the inevitable

poptop says: (9:09:44 AM) death comes whether we wish it or not

poptop says: (9:09:47 AM)
it is a reality

poptop says: (9:09:53 AM)
it is not to be sought

poptop says: (9:10:15 AM) but the other timings may not be written on stone either

benpadijah says: (9:10:28 AM) wrong on my count.

benpadijah says: (9:10:37 AM)
I know the day and the hour of my death.

benpadijah says: (9:10:44 AM) should I be struck dead from above

benpadijah says: (9:10:53 AM)
I know by when it will have happened

benpadijah says: (9:11:04 AM) otherwise, it will happen at that time.

benpadijah says: (9:11:21 AM) otherwise I will be married.

benpadijah says: (9:11:22 AM)
LMAO

poptop says: (9:11:31 AM)
ha!

benpadiah says: (9:11:39 AM)
I make pacts with myself.

benpadiah says: (9:11:45 AM) little goals, promises, whatever

benpadiah says: (9:11:54 AM) set dates and times for accomplishing them

benpadiah says: (9:11:56 AM)
etc

benpadiah says: (9:11:58 AM) I'm human

benpadiah says: (9:12:06 AM)
it's just the expectations I have of myself

benpadiah says: (9:12:19 AM) are so far beyond the even possible, let alone the real

poptop says: (9:12:41 AM) maybe a NEW type of goal then

poptop says: (9:12:49 AM) give yourself some slack

benpadiah says: (9:13:03 AM) slack is all I have!

benpadiah says: (9:13:15 AM)
it fills up the spaces between the absence of events

poptop says: (9:13:21 AM) Begging to disbelieve

poptop says: (9:13:26 AM) events are outer

poptop says: (9:13:37 AM)
a lot of who you are seems to be from within

benpadiah says: (9:13:56 AM) slack is the luck-plane I surf.

benpadiah says: (9:14:01 AM)
it's going nowhere.

benpadiah says: (9:14:08 AM)
and so am I.

benpadiah says: (9:14:17 AM) therefore I have slack.

poptop says: (9:14:25 AM)
misstep by me?

benpadiiah says: (9:14:30 AM)
not at all

benpadiiah says: (9:14:40 AM)
I agree with your statements as well

benpadiiah says: (9:15:03 AM) just explaining more what I meant by "the absence of events"

Never give out your password or credit card number in an instant message conversation. To help prevent infection by a computer virus or worm, never accept or open any file or link in an instant message until you verify its authenticity with the sender.

benpadiiah says: (9:16:50 AM)
sprry

benpadiiah says: (9:16:55 AM) my cable is spotty too

poptop says: (9:17:02 AM)
it happens.

poptop says: (9:17:12 AM)
I thought I may have overstepped

benpadiiah says: (9:17:16 AM)
not at all

benpadiiah says: (9:17:22 AM) did you get my last comment?

poptop says: (9:17:45 AM)
The last I got was it fills the spaces...

poptop says: (9:17:52 AM) relating to slack

benpadiiah says: (9:17:56 AM)
right

poptop says: (9:18:05 AM)
I begged to disbelive

poptop says: (9:18:11 AM) on the basis of

poptop says: (9:18:21 AM)
poptop says:
a lot of who you are seems to be from within

benpadiah says: (9:19:01 AM)
I believe I then explained more what I meant by "the absence of events"

benpadiah says: (9:19:16 AM) being slack = "going nowhere" (which is all I do)

poptop says: (9:19:45 AM)
I was suggesting the occasional lowering of personal expectations

benpadiah says: (9:19:51 AM) never that

poptop says: (9:20:04 AM) everyone needs to rest

benpadiah says: (9:20:16 AM) I'll rest in the end

benpadiah says: (9:20:20 AM)
then rise again

benpadiah says: (9:20:26 AM)
it's all day and all night

poptop says: (9:20:43 AM) that can't be good

benpadiah says: (9:20:48 AM) for whom?

poptop says: (9:20:55 AM)
for you

benpadiah says: (9:20:57 AM)
it serves the many, at the expense of the one.

poptop says: (9:21:06 AM)
by whose right

benpadiah says: (9:21:12 AM) that's the very definition of "Good."

poptop says: (9:21:23 AM)
no

poptop says: (9:21:38 AM) the needs of the many do not always override the needs of the few

benpadiah says: (9:21:48 AM)
why not?

poptop says: (9:21:48 AM) occasionally both needs can be met

benpadiiah says: (9:21:53 AM) how?

poptop says: (9:22:01 AM)
it is a goal to be aspired to

poptop says: (9:22:16 AM) binding the mouth of the kine,

poptop says: (9:22:25 AM) serves neither the kine nor the man

poptop says: (9:22:34 AM)
by caring for both

poptop says: (9:22:42 AM) both ultimately can prevail

benpadiiah says: (9:23:02 AM)
that's putting the cart before the horse,

benpadiiah says: (9:23:05 AM)
it's all backwards.

poptop says: (9:23:07 AM) Ho ho

benpadiiah says: (9:23:09 AM) the good is the many

benpadiiah says: (9:23:14 AM)
the evil is the few.

poptop says: (9:23:26 AM)
not demonstrably

poptop says: (9:23:32 AM) often the few good

poptop says: (9:23:38 AM) must led the many

benpadiiah says: (9:23:47 AM) well demonstrably neither anysuch thing as "good" or "evil" even exist

poptop says: (9:23:56 AM)
no

benpadiiah says: (9:24:00 AM)
and lead them where?

poptop says: (9:24:11 AM)
but goodness in not a surplus itme

benpadiah says: (9:24:13 AM)
there is nothing beyond the many and the one.

poptop says: (9:24:36 AM)
why?

poptop says: (9:24:41 AM) or how

benpadiah says: (9:24:48 AM) here is why, and here is how:

benpadiah says: (9:25:06 AM)
you have two, when they come together there is one, and the one plus the two is three.

benpadiah says: (9:25:21 AM)
there are only three choices, but two are the same

benpadiah says: (9:25:24 AM) and one is both

benpadiah says: (9:25:32 AM) and the third is either or and

benpadiah says: (9:25:44 AM) one the one hand is the many

benpadiah says: (9:25:49 AM) on the other is the few.

poptop says: (9:26:01 AM)
wordplay or socalled reality?

poptop says: (9:26:22 AM)
i believe in the capacity for unity

poptop says: (9:26:43 AM)
the indivisibility of the individual

poptop says: (9:26:57 AM)
and that love can conquer

poptop says: (9:27:04 AM) not always

benpadiah says: (9:27:20 AM) love conquers all when all becomes one: love.

poptop says: (9:27:33 AM)
i believe other

poptop says: (9:27:40 AM) sanctity of self

poptop says: (9:27:44 AM)
and love

poptop says: (9:27:51 AM) are ont mutually exclusive

poptop says: (9:28:04 AM)
they can exist equally benpadiiah says: (9:28:23 AM)

yep

benpadiiah says: (9:28:30 AM) love and self are the many and the one

benpadiiah says: (9:28:34 AM) or the few and the one.

benpadiiah says: (9:28:41 AM)
or the two and the one.

benpadiiah says: (9:28:49 AM)
on either hand.

poptop says: (9:28:51 AM)
Love need not conquer

poptop says: (9:28:59 AM)
it can divide

poptop says: (9:29:04 AM)
it can multiply

poptop says: (9:29:12 AM)
it can co-exist

poptop says: (9:29:43 AM)
the numbers may become irrelevant?

benpadiiah says: (9:30:00 AM) love is the three that are the two that are the one

poptop says: (9:30:35 AM)
I don't understand

poptop says: (9:30:46 AM)
the one can still be the two or three benpadiiah says: (9:30:52 AM)

no

poptop says: (9:30:58 AM)
no?

benpadiah says: (9:30:59 AM) love is not the one

benpadiah says: (9:31:01 AM) that's why

benpadiah says: (9:31:08 AM) love is the two

benpadiah says: (9:31:17 AM) unity is the one

benpadiah says: (9:31:28 AM) the offspring of the two

poptop says: (9:31:48 AM)
a recursive arrangement?

benpadiah says: (9:32:05 AM) even the three is a fourth.

benpadiah says: (9:32:11 AM) so ultimately...

benpadiah says: (9:32:23 AM) on the one hand you have the one, and on the other the many, or the two,

poptop says: (9:32:35 AM)
why not more than the two?

benpadiah says: (9:32:46 AM)
why more>?

poptop says: (9:32:53 AM)
why not more than the one

poptop says: (9:32:56 AM) or less

poptop says: (9:33:12 AM) how do the numbers set the boundariy

benpadiah says: (9:33:27 AM) take your hands

poptop says: (9:33:33 AM)
yes

benpadiah says: (9:33:36 AM)
you have two hands.

benpadiah says: (9:33:45 AM) when you clasp them together, they make one

benpadijah says: (9:33:59 AM) so you have three: two hands and the clasped hands as one.

poptop says: (9:34:24 AM)
but if I clasp the hand of another?

poptop says: (9:34:29 AM)
and another

poptop says: (9:34:35 AM)
and they in turn?

benpadijah says: (9:34:53 AM) this is what it means though

benpadijah says: (9:34:57 AM)
one after another

benpadijah says: (9:35:00 AM) begins from two

poptop says: (9:35:11 AM)
perhaps

benpadijah says: (9:35:15 AM) no perhaps.

benpadijah says: (9:35:17 AM) facts.

poptop says: (9:35:37 AM) Perhaps is morte about my need to reflect

poptop says: (9:35:49 AM) not an automatic denial

benpadijah says: (9:35:53 AM) ah ok

benpadijah says: (9:35:54 AM) soz

benpadijah says: (9:35:56 AM)
:)

poptop says: (9:36:12 AM)

benpadijah says: (9:37:07 AM)
? "?"

benpadijah says: (9:37:16 AM)
oh "soz"

benpadijah says: (9:37:22 AM)
"soz" means sorry

benpadijah says: (9:37:27 AM)
it's brit slang

poptop says: (9:37:37 AM)
Ah ok N00b this end !

benpadijah says: (9:37:40 AM)
lol

benpadijah says: (9:37:42 AM)
it's cool

benpadijah says: (9:37:50 AM)
I use that word all the time

benpadijah says: (9:37:54 AM)
I just like it

benpadijah says: (9:38:01 AM) but no one's ever heard it

poptop says: (9:38:07 AM)
Have now

poptop says: (9:38:16 AM)
will TRY to remember!

benpadijah says: (9:38:20 AM) cool lol

poptop says: (9:38:32 AM) back on topic...

benpadijah says: (9:38:43 AM)
right

poptop says: (9:38:50 AM) still wotking metaphor of two hands as one benpadijah says: (9:38:56 AM)

ok

benpadijah says: (9:39:03 AM) think of this

benpadijah says: (9:39:05 AM)
God

benpadijah says: (9:39:10 AM)
he has two hands

benpadiah says: (9:39:15 AM)
he's all that exists

poptop says: (9:39:17 AM)
if the individual is sacrosanct

benpadiah says: (9:39:25 AM) so his two hands are all there are

benpadiah says: (9:39:39 AM) or think of this

poptop says: (9:39:42 AM)
and the individual indivisible

benpadiah says: (9:39:47 AM) like when we clasp our hands in prayer

benpadiah says: (9:39:57 AM) that's unity.

benpadiah says: (9:40:11 AM)
LOL

benpadiah says: (9:40:21 AM)
it's the two hands, both are connected to the same person.

benpadiah says: (9:40:36 AM) that's the difference between "unity" of the two hands, and the "individual."

benpadiah says: (9:41:24 AM)

Here is a diagram whose right understanding is very secret. It will bring you wisdom possessed only by very few throughout all of history to study this meaning, for many who have come before us have considered it "Holy."

There are three sources for this information. For the attributes labeled Yetzirah and those above Atzilut, the source is [url=http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/apocjn.html]the Secret Book or Apocryphon of John[/url], recording the exact teachings about Gnosticism given to John by Jesus Christ Himself, after he had ascended. The description of the Garden of Eden comes to us from [url=http://www.kabbalah.com/k/index.php/p=zohar/zohar&vol=3]the Bereshit B cosmology of the Zohar[/url]. The seven layered sphere beneath the rest, labeled Assiyah, describes the seven days of creation in [url=http://bibleresources.bible.com/passagesearchresults.php?passage1=genesis+1%3A1-2%3A10&version1=9]the book of Genesis[/url].

Before creation there was only the father, who is also called the ineffable Holy One, of whom it is said, Blessed Be He. After this follows Hermes, the androgyne archetypal Man. From the perception of the Autogenes' opposite, Wisdom is born, called Pistis, the first sefirot emanation. In Wisdom arose from self-desire Fore-thought, separate from Godhead. Just as Wisdom and Hermes beget the crown of Christ, so did fore-thought, unknown to God, beget Samael, that is, Satan. In the image of Hermes, Christ entered into Eden as Pigera (king) Adamas. Simultaneously, Satan declared himself equal to God, and greater than man. God declared, "you err, Samael" which means "blind-one," and created the 10 emanations greater than Satan. Just as King Adam embodied the crown, so too these emanations came, one by one, to descend into the lower realms of the creation. As this was happening, God gave Eve to Adam, and filled Eve with Wisdom. Adam and Eve knew no timelessness without error, and existed across the whole span of forever. In this state, Adam and Eve conceived Cain, the rightful King, heir to Adam. During the pregnancy, Adam and Eve ate the fruit of the knowledge of sin, that is, they understood fore-thought, which had created Satan. They then conceived Abel. God banished them from Eden, lest they should never again eat from the tree of immortal existence. Then Cain was born, causing Eve to say, "I have gotten a man from the Lord," (Gen4:1) for Adam, before the fall, was indeed "like unto God." But the truth was soon revealed, for Cain killed Abel for his mildness being more acceptable to fate than Cain's arrogance. Cain, thenceforth was proven not the Son of Adam, but indeed the Son of Satan. For this reason, Cain joined Samael as one of the twelve Archons, the rulers over the fallen stations of the ten emanations. So, there are ten qliphoth (shells), one for each emanation (sefirot), plus Satan, plus Cain, and so there are twelve archons. Now, with Abel, the son of King Adam and Immortal Eve dead at the hands of the son of Satan, there was no true heir for Adam and Eve. So, the two of them came together to bear forth Seth, who some have called the First Messiah, for through him would be born the first of all mortal humanity. At the same time as this conception, Satan conceived with Eve, now mortal, two immortal spirits. One of them was Good, and one of them was Evil. YHVH and Elohim are the two names used for God throughout the Old Testament. The lower earth is where Adam, Eve and Seth dwelt after the fall. It was here where Adam prayed to be given the Book of Raziel, which records everything known to Adam from before the Fall. By the generation of Enoch, the good (spiritually) dwelt in the Upper Worlds, but the fallen (physically) dwelt in the sixth day of creation. When the Holy were given the Holy of Holies, they brought alignment between the world of Eden and creation. This represents the Sabbath. The pronoia (Christ) draws us up from the realm of creation, and the epinoia (Shekina) draws us up through the realms of Eden. In Zohar these are called the Aba and Ima (father and mother).

There is more to this diagram as well, and I will answer all your questions about it. In the next level I will give right understanding on the Fruit of the Tree diagram, however if you wish to, you can view it for yourself now at:

The information in this model depicts the relationships described in [url=<http://bibleresources.bible.com/passagesearchresults.php?passage1=genesis+4&version1=9>] Genesis 4[/url] and [url=<http://bibleresources.bible.com/passagesearchresults.php?passage1=genesis+5&version1=9>]
Genesis 5[/url].

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/gnostic/img137.jpg>[/img]

O Lord, I behold the fruit of the sin of Adam, forbidden the immortals. For this all men since have been given to death. How is this the fruit? It is written, "be fruitful." We see this "fruit" refers to the generations. How is this fruit that of the Original Sin? It is said, "by their fruit know them." So are these the generations of man that followed forth from the fall, and those who followed the fallen. Because Adam ate from the tree of life, he conceived Cain as immortal. Because Adam ate from the tree of knowledge, he conceived Abel as immortal and wise. Because Adam fell from grace, he conceived Seth as mortal and wise. Because Cain slew Abel, thus the only generations of men were either mortal and wise, or immortal but unwise. Thus, the generations of Seth were mortal, and Seth was called the "son of man," because he was the first father of the fallen flesh. The generations of Cain, however, were immortal, and were called the "Sons of God," because it was then said, "Adam had been like unto the Gods." (ie. the Elohim, which means "my god," implying the existence of others. It is Elohim who is the "jealous god," and is therefore the creator of injustice. Confer the explanation of the Book of Raziël, [<http://illuminationorder.com/forum/viewtopic.php?p=4999#4999>]here/[url]) The immortal but foolish "sons of God" bred with the mortal but wise "wives of men," and begat "men of renown," who were "like giants."

Now, in those days comes Enos out of Enoch, who is a man, but who "died not, for God took him." So, from a daughter of Seth (a wife of man), did Enoch beget Methusaleh the wise, but from a daughter of Adam (a wife fit for a god) did Enoch beget Irad the immortal. This is why Enoch learned all the teachings of the fallen angels (the "Annunaki" Sons of God as well as their Nefilim "giant" offspring) and yet was not corrupted like the seven generations that followed from him (as Enos, father of Cainan) to mark sevenfold the crime of Cain.

Here is wisdom, so let you who have understanding calculate: I say, "the immortal generations before Enoch moved backward in time, but those after him moved forward. The mortal generations between Enos and Enoch moved forward in time, but after Enoch they moved backward." What does this mean? It means that between Enos and Enoch, the generations revolved counter-clockwise, but that after Enoch, they revolved clockwise. What does all this mean? Here is its right understanding:

This is the fruit without its "skin." It is because of the understanding of this fruit as without "skin" that Adam and Eve realised their nakedness in Eden, and in this way sought to conceal their crime from God. Now, know that this is the image understood by Eve, that is, this is the essential nature that caused the fall. Eve perceived the real motions and relationships of this model, but she foresaw that in seven mortal generations or four immortal ones, the right understanding of this model would be lost. Here is the right understanding:

Lamech perceives that from immortal Irad issues immortal Mehujael, while from mortal Mehalaleel issues mortal Jared, and these two shall continue on this way. However, from Eve's perspective, mortal Methuselah follows from immortal Cain, as immortal Methusael follows from mortal Cainan. Eve realised that her seed, by the generation of Lamech, would have completely lost the path back to immortality. This is why we call eating from the tree of knowledge over good and evil Original Sin: because it is the fore-knowledge of the loss of knowledge, with which comes the power to prevent this, and with that power comes the responsibility to do so. However, as the seed is in the perception, so too will the fruit come forth therefrom, and must thenceforth be separated like the wheat from the chaff. So, by knowing this, Eve felt unable to prevent it from coming to pass as a result of her own actions. This fatalism, that your ultimate destiny is beyond your control, despite your controlling your short-term fate, is the guilt for Original Sin.

Now, it was Enoch, who knew of Moses beforehand, that turned the tides. Enoch was like the axis around which the aeons pivoted, casting the shadow of the false and fallen archons. Enoch turned the tides of time, and it is said that he was shown all that is (1Enoch), and that he was "translated" into heaven (2Enoch), becoming the Metatron (3Enoch), sitting on the right hand side of God. Therefore it is Enoch that sits on the side of Righteous Judgement, the side of peace. The Book of Enoch (1Enoch) was known of at Qumran by the Essenes of the Dead Sea. According to all three different versions of the Book of Enoch, he prayed to God on behalf of the Nefilim, but God Himself could not change their fate: for even as Eve wept at the realisation of Original Sin, so too would the judgment bring the flood to her ninth generation.

Even this could not wipe away the guilt for Original Sin though, as it would be Ham, after seeing his father Noah drunken and naked, that conceived Cainaan, and resurrected the seven-fold Mark of Cain. Ham and Japhteth would both have seven sons, but it would be Shem from whom, after seven generations, would come Abraham, the father of the faith of Elohim.

Jon?

benpadiiah says: (7:28:36 PM)
heya

poptop says: (7:28:48 PM)
you ok?

benpadiiah says: (7:28:54 PM)
yup

poptop says: (7:29:15 PM)
I saw your posts and was worried for you

benpadiiah says: (7:29:24 PM)
it's okay

benpadiiah says: (7:29:30 PM)
I'm okay

poptop says: (7:29:52 PM)
Want to talk?

benpadiiah says: (7:30:01 PM)
if you have time, and want to, sure

poptop says: (7:30:17 PM)
Sure.

benpadiiah says: (7:30:36 PM)
it's kind of a long story

benpadiiah says: (7:30:39 PM)
lol

benpadiiah says: (7:30:45 PM)
are you sure you have time now?

benpadiiah says: (7:30:52 PM)
because we could always talk later

benpadiiah says: (7:31:03 PM)
looks like I'm probably in for the night now

poptop says: (7:31:07 PM)
As long as the system doesn't crash in me I'll be here

benpadiiah says: (7:31:12 PM)
cool

benpadiiah says: (7:31:18 PM)
ok then

benpadiiah says: (7:31:26 PM)
once upon a time

benpadiiah says: (7:31:29 PM)
there was this girl

benpadiiah says: (7:31:32 PM)
and she left

benpadiiah says: (7:31:36 PM)
and then I went nuts

benpadiiah says: (7:31:41 PM)
and tried to track her down

benpadiiah says: (7:31:46 PM)
but then she called the cops on me

benpadiiah says: (7:31:51 PM)
and so I came home.

benpadiiah says: (7:32:02 PM)
but I'm still very much in love with her.

benpadiiah says: (7:32:13 PM)
so I come to find a page on the internet

benpadiiah says: (7:32:19 PM)
a blogger I think is her.

benpadiiah says: (7:32:32 PM)
but this person is a right wing zionist.

benpadiiah says: (7:32:37 PM)
so I get really confused

benpadijah says: (7:32:48 PM)
but it turned out it wasn't even her anyway.

benpadijah says: (7:32:53 PM)
so now I'm back to square one

benpadijah says: (7:32:58 PM)
only more confused than ever.

benpadijah says: (7:33:09 PM)
I don't really know what to do with myself.

benpadijah says: (7:33:16 PM)
I don't know where to go with my life.

poptop says: (7:33:34 PM)
that's so sad

benpadijah says: (7:33:51 PM)
meh

benpadijah says: (7:33:55 PM)
what can one do?

poptop says: (7:34:07 PM)
it would be easy to speak in platitudes

poptop says: (7:34:15 PM)
but I respect you too much to try

benpadijah says: (7:34:17 PM)
yes

benpadijah says: (7:34:22 PM)
ok

benpadijah says: (7:34:25 PM)
thanks I think

benpadijah says: (7:34:26 PM)
lol

poptop says: (7:34:53 PM)
I'm not going to try the God has bigger plans

poptop says: (7:35:07 PM)
or you can know his unconditional love

benpadijah says: (7:35:08 PM)
heheh

poptop says: (7:35:22 PM)
those are things you have to determine for yourself

poptop says: (7:35:26 PM)
I guess

benpadijah says: (7:35:27 PM)
how would I do that??

benpadijah says: (7:35:42 PM)
all I feel is the distance between me and God

poptop says: (7:35:47 PM)
I can only talk about what works for me

benpadijah says: (7:35:47 PM)
or between me and her, as it were.

poptop says: (7:36:11 PM)
yes

poptop says: (7:36:32 PM)
and sometimes things won't turn out as we wish benpadijah says: (7:37:00 PM)

true true

poptop says: (7:37:10 PM)
the girl may fear your intensity

benpadijah says: (7:37:16 PM)
oh?

poptop says: (7:37:17 PM)
and that you are a seeker

poptop says: (7:37:28 PM)
these are confronting

poptop says: (7:37:54 PM)
while she is young and finding her own place

poptop says: (7:38:17 PM)
being something to another is scary

benpadijah says: (7:38:24 PM)
perhaps

poptop says: (7:38:29 PM)
particularly when you may not understand

poptop says: (7:38:35 PM)
what it means

benpadijah says: (7:38:59 PM)
perhaps

poptop says: (7:39:48 PM)
This is the same girl you have written of on your site?

benpadijah says: (7:39:54 PM)
yep

benpadijah says: (7:40:01 PM)
the only one I've ever really loved

poptop says: (7:40:13 PM)
yes

poptop says: (7:41:19 PM)
do you think she was aware of the depth of your feelings?

benpadijah says: (7:41:27 PM)
yes

poptop says: (7:41:47 PM)
some of the stuff you have written is intense

benpadijah says: (7:41:52 PM)
yes

poptop says: (7:42:22 PM)
and frightening to someone who is unwilling to explore that level of relationship

benpadijah says: (7:42:35 PM)
maybe

poptop says: (7:42:56 PM)
the responsibility for completing another

poptop says: (7:43:12 PM) did you speak of it with her in the quieter times?

benpadijah says: (7:43:26 PM)
some

poptop says: (7:43:53 PM)
and...

poptop says: (7:43:58 PM)

benpadijah says: (7:44:10 PM)
she was frightened

benpadijah says: (7:44:12 PM)
but then

benpadijah says: (7:44:17 PM)
I was not on meds

benpadijah says: (7:44:21 PM)
and was very....

benpadijah says: (7:44:29 PM)
overwhelming.

poptop says: (7:45:06 PM)
you are also scarily intelligent

benpadijah says: (7:45:16 PM)
she is even smarter than me.

poptop says: (7:45:33 PM)
does she share your interest in the esoteric arts?

benpadijah says: (7:45:40 PM)
dunno really

benpadijah says: (7:45:56 PM)
she never opened up to me about her own ...

benpadijah says: (7:46:00 PM)
findings.

benpadijah says: (7:46:14 PM)
and when I knew her, was way before I really went deep into it all.

poptop says: (7:46:41 PM)
so it may have been new territory for her, even so benpadijah says: (7:47:14 PM)

maybe...

benpadijah says: (7:47:24 PM)
but it was for me then too.

poptop says: (7:47:59 PM)
sure, but you were the seeker

poptop says: (7:48:17 PM)
she may not have even found the door

benpadijah says: (7:48:21 PM)
maybe she already knew.

benpadijah says: (7:48:24 PM)
that's what I think

benpadijah says: (7:48:30 PM)
she is far ahead of me

benpadijah says: (7:48:35 PM)
all I am doing is following her

poptop says: (7:48:53 PM)
oh

poptop says: (7:49:12 PM)
so you believe she has made choice

benpadiiah says: (7:49:31 PM)

poptop says: (7:49:53 PM)
and the choice is to reject you as acolyte or lover?

benpadiiah says: (7:50:20 PM)
it's to torture me in this life, use it as a crucible to fry my soul

benpadiiah says: (7:50:34 PM) purify it for the journey to come

poptop says: (7:51:31 PM)
perhaps. If so your part to play is to...?

benpadiiah says: (7:51:44 PM)
go along with it

benpadiiah says: (7:51:51 PM)
without her until the end

benpadiiah says: (7:51:54 PM)
prove myself

benpadiiah says: (7:51:56 PM)
worthy.

poptop says: (7:52:13 PM)
or to struggle against it

benpadiiah says: (7:52:19 PM)
NO.

benpadiiah says: (7:52:30 PM)
it hurts like hell

benpadiiah says: (7:52:36 PM)
but there;s no way out anyway

benpadiiah says: (7:52:40 PM)
it's futile to struggle

poptop says: (7:53:09 PM)
I am trying to understand the struggle in your terms

benpadiiah says: (7:53:24 PM)
it's cool

poptop says: (7:53:32 PM)
is it to live and work under the terms she has created?

benpadiiah says: (7:53:42 PM)
sort of

poptop says: (7:53:48 PM)
or is it more a surrender

benpadiiah says: (7:53:48 PM)
are you familiar with Innanna?

benpadiiah says: (7:53:57 PM)
Sumerian goddess, Innana?

poptop says: (7:54:15 PM)
One of the Devi, but not much more

benpadiiah says: (7:54:41 PM)
Innana was married to Dummuuzi, the shepherd God of the seasons and the harvest, etc

benpadiiah says: (7:55:09 PM)
Dummuuzi ended up being taken to hell by Innanna's sister, the queen of the underworld, who was jealous of him

benpadiiah says: (7:55:21 PM)
Innanna went into hell after him

benpadiiah says: (7:56:20 PM)
(this is also the story of Adonis and Proserpine, I think)

benpadiiah says: (7:56:23 PM)
or someone

benpadiiah says: (7:56:26 PM)
no

benpadiiah says: (7:56:33 PM)
Orpheus and Euridice

benpadiiah says: (7:56:36 PM)
anyway

benpadiiah says: (7:56:57 PM)
Inanna, at each gate and entrance, was divested of one more implement of her royal standing

benpadiiah says: (7:57:17 PM)
when she finally reached her sister, the queen of the underworld, she said to her

benpadiiah says: (7:57:26 PM)
"release Dummuuzi, take me instead."

benpadiiah says: (7:57:41 PM)

she did so, but then Inanna eventually escaped anyway

benpadiāh says: (7:57:54 PM)

it's rather like Gilgamesh and Enkidu as well

benpadiāh says: (7:57:57 PM)

the point is

benpadiāh says: (7:58:19 PM)

I sent her ahead of me, and she has led me into hell to find her

benpadiāh says: (7:58:28 PM)

if I survive, we'll both be saved.

benpadiāh says: (7:58:33 PM)

if I fail, we both fall.

poptop says: (7:58:59 PM)

so survival is your part

poptop says: (7:59:27 PM)

I was thinking it was a little like the gift of the magi

benpadiāh says: (7:59:36 PM)

hows that?

poptop says: (8:00:31 PM)

sorry - a short story where two people give what they hold dear for the other person

poptop says: (8:01:01 PM)

to buy a gift for the other

poptop says: (8:01:06 PM)

of course,

poptop says: (8:01:23 PM)

the gift relates to what the other person has sold too

benpadiāh says: (8:01:40 PM)

I have the story, I'll read it later

benpadiāh says: (8:01:48 PM)

not really getting how it relates right off tho

poptop says: (8:02:13 PM)

Well it was about Innanna offering herself as an exchange

benpadiāh says: (8:02:23 PM)

ahh

poptop says: (8:02:33 PM)

what would there have been for Dummuzi

poptop says: (8:02:39 PM)

with her gone?

benpadijah says: (8:02:53 PM)
she's dummuzi in this version

poptop says: (8:02:55 PM)
She and He are what matter

benpadijah says: (8:02:57 PM)
and I'm innanna

poptop says: (8:03:07 PM)
sure

benpadijah says: (8:03:38 PM)
dummuzi is sent to hell before innana

poptop says: (8:03:53 PM)
So you have sent her ahead but are now bereft

benpadijah says: (8:03:55 PM)
and innana has to go through the gates she put Dummuzi through

benpadijah says: (8:03:57 PM)
to save him

benpadijah says: (8:04:09 PM)
but again

benpadijah says: (8:04:13 PM)
it's like Sisyphus

benpadijah says: (8:04:18 PM)
we could go back and forth

benpadijah says: (8:04:21 PM)
for eternity

poptop says: (8:04:23 PM)
and the stone

poptop says: (8:05:03 PM)
the myths can be archetypes for our lives

benpadijah says: (8:05:18 PM)
true

poptop says: (8:05:50 PM)
do you see it as remaining within the frame

benpadijah says: (8:06:02 PM)
hmm?

poptop says: (8:06:02 PM)

are you seeking a new myth

benpadiah says: (8:06:13 PM)
there's no such thing as a New Myth

benpadiah says: (8:06:17 PM)
that's an oxymoron

poptop says: (8:06:39 PM)
ok lol a different myth

benpadiah says: (8:07:25 PM)
no.

poptop says: (8:07:27 PM)
so you and she are captive to reliving this one?

benpadiah says: (8:07:34 PM)
no, only me

benpadiah says: (8:07:38 PM)
I'm following her

benpadiah says: (8:07:42 PM)
this is where she led me

benpadiah says: (8:07:47 PM)
from here things will change

benpadiah says: (8:07:57 PM)
a different path she leads me down

poptop says: (8:08:22 PM)
hmmm

poptop says: (8:09:07 PM)
so you are subordinate to her will

benpadiah says: (8:09:53 PM)
it's a mystery what her will is

benpadiah says: (8:10:06 PM)
when I search for it, I find I am already obeying it

poptop says: (8:10:28 PM)
and must just follow

benpadiah says: (8:11:10 PM)
I seek her, she's not here, and without her, I cannot stay where she is not

poptop says: (8:12:47 PM)
But her wishes...?

benpadiah says: (8:13:00 PM)

she told me once

benpadijah says: (8:13:04 PM)
her favourite thing

benpadijah says: (8:13:06 PM)
in life

benpadijah says: (8:13:09 PM)
was to feel lost.

poptop says: (8:14:06 PM)
? to explore

benpadijah says: (8:14:37 PM)
to go beyond the known

benpadijah says: (8:14:42 PM)
into the new

benpadijah says: (8:14:49 PM)
and to not return.

poptop says: (8:15:01 PM)
ah....

poptop says: (8:15:37 PM)
so you follow

benpadijah says: (8:15:43 PM)
yep

poptop says: (8:15:50 PM)
but if you should stumble

poptop says: (8:16:03 PM)
she may not stop

benpadijah says: (8:16:09 PM)
I have

poptop says: (8:16:12 PM)
or come to your aid

benpadijah says: (8:16:13 PM)
and she doesn't.

poptop says: (8:16:46 PM)
she doesn't see her redemption as being linked to yours

poptop says: (8:16:50 PM)
s you do.

poptop says: (8:16:55 PM)

*as

benpadiiah says: (8:16:55 PM)
she doesn't want redemption.

benpadiiah says: (8:16:59 PM)
I want it for her.

poptop says: (8:17:22 PM)
now that is hard

benpadiiah says: (8:17:48 PM)
yup

benpadiiah says: (8:17:50 PM)
brb, smoke

poptop says: (8:18:08 PM)
ok

poptop says: (8:21:13 PM)
If the system goes, I'll get right back to you

benpadiiah says: (8:25:00 PM)
back

poptop says: (8:25:35 PM)
OK

poptop says: (8:26:08 PM)
she does not see a common path for you than

benpadiiah says: (8:26:19 PM)
she is an individual

benpadiiah says: (8:26:23 PM)
and as far as she cares

benpadiiah says: (8:26:29 PM)
I may as well not exist

poptop says: (8:27:07 PM)
To love someone who doesn't "see

poptop says: (8:27:16 PM)
" you is harder than being hated

benpadiiah says: (8:27:24 PM)
yep

benpadiiah says: (8:27:28 PM)
unrequited love

benpadiiah says: (8:27:33 PM)

very sado-masochistic.

poptop says: (8:27:45 PM)
worse

poptop says: (8:28:20 PM)
how long has this been?

benpadiiah says: (8:28:21 PM)
fatal

benpadiiah says: (8:28:32 PM)
it's been ten years since I've seen her

benpadiiah says: (8:28:36 PM)
eight since we've spoken

poptop says: (8:28:53 PM)
wow

poptop says: (8:29:00 PM)
that is fatal

benpadiiah says: (8:29:04 PM)
ayup

poptop says: (8:29:11 PM)
you have the real deal

benpadiiah says: (8:29:16 PM)
I know

poptop says: (8:30:26 PM)
I can't think what to say...

benpadiiah says: (8:30:39 PM)
it's cool

poptop says: (8:30:54 PM)
It is your tragedy

benpadiiah says: (8:31:16 PM)
it's a tragedy alright.

poptop says: (8:32:04 PM)
I can't imagine what I would do in your circumstances

poptop says: (8:32:24 PM)
all you seem to manage better than I probably would

benpadiiah says: (8:32:26 PM)
try suicide, maybe?

benpadiiah says: (8:32:28 PM)

LOL

still busy?

benpadiiah says: (2:39:42 AM) not as benpadiiah says: (2:39:44 AM)

in fact

benpadiiah says: (2:39:54 AM)
not at all

benpadiiah says: (2:39:56 AM) now

poptop says: (2:40:07 AM)
I finished the printing and signing and have sorted dinner and am now home

poptop says: (2:40:33 AM)
We're having roast pork! 8-D

benpadiiah says: (2:40:35 AM) awesome!

benpadiiah says: (2:40:41 AM) let me show you a couple things then benpadiiah says: (2:40:51 AM) oops

benpadiiah says: (2:40:55 AM) sorry wrong cut and paste

benpadiiah says: (2:40:59 AM) nm that now

benpadijah says: (2:41:06 AM) here is what I meant to show you:

benpadiah says: (3:13:00 AM)
oh right

benpadiah says: (3:13:08 AM) ok, here's where I'm at:

benpadiah says: (3:13:18 AM)
the tree on top says seed

benpadiah says: (3:13:34 AM) but the fruit of that tree

benpadiah says: (3:13:53 AM) go ahead

poptop says: (3:14:16 AM) fine this is on the combined diagram

poptop says: (3:14:19 AM)

benpadiah says: (3:14:22 AM)

I have an easier way to explain all this

benpadijah says: (3:14:42 AM) wait one second

poptop says: (3:14:46 AM) excellent

benpadijah says: (3:14:46 AM)

poptop says: (3:21:10 AM)
k

benpadijah says: (3:21:32 AM) this is the basis for my "tree of death" diagram

benpadijah says: (3:21:39 AM)
it's a diagram by Steve Savedow

poptop says: (3:21:59 AM) okley dokley - just printing

benpadijah says: (3:22:17 AM) by combining his diagram with the standard tree of life diagram of the QBLHists

benpadijah says: (3:22:25 AM)
I came up with my "tree of death"

benpadijah says: (3:22:46 AM)
as I reasoned at the time

benpadijah says: (3:23:11 AM) the tree of life would become the tree of death, only after one had eaten from the tree of knowledge

benpadijah says: (3:23:43 AM) so, to combine the standard tree of life, with Savedow's Tree of Death, I made my own "tree of death" diagram

benpadijah says: (3:23:53 AM) but what this implies

benpadijah says: (3:24:18 AM)
is that the standard tree of life diagram is really the tree of knowledge, and Savedow's tree of Hells is really the Tree of Life.

benpadijah says: (3:24:26 AM) so, duly noted on img 144

benpadijah says: (3:24:37 AM)
the trees and fruits one

benpadijah says: (3:24:50 AM) still with me?

poptop says: (3:24:53 AM)
Yep

benpadijah says: (3:25:00 AM)
in any event

benpadijah says: (3:25:14 AM) notice the "death" curse fruit

benpadijah says: (3:25:23 AM)
(the one of the ten sefirot seen from above)

benpadijah says: (3:25:35 AM) has seven visible spheres

benpadijah says: (3:25:43 AM) with the center one being the four worlds

benpadijah says: (3:26:03 AM) now, see the combined life and knowledge tree has the seven chakras up the centre

poptop says: (3:26:14 AM)
yep

benpadijah says: (3:26:26 AM) so, it stands to reason

benpadijah says: (3:26:43 AM) that the fruit of the combined tree of knowledge and of life diagram

benpadijah says: (3:26:52 AM) would have ten points of intersection

benpadiah says: (3:26:54 AM) or rather

benpadiah says: (3:27:00 AM) axes of rotation

benpadiah says: (3:27:07 AM) or "stations."

poptop says: (3:27:11 AM)
k

benpadiah says: (3:27:34 AM) so, here's a fun question!

benpadiah says: (3:27:47 AM)
which came first, fruit or seed?

poptop says: (3:27:59 AM) seed

benpadiah says: (3:28:04 AM)
from where?

poptop says: (3:28:21 AM)
it may have just been

benpadiah says: (3:28:26 AM)
nope

benpadiah says: (3:28:30 AM) nothing "just is."

poptop says: (3:28:35 AM)
? your go

benpadiah says: (3:29:09 AM)
it has a conceiver, maker, former and creator

benpadiah says: (3:29:14 AM)
each for the four worlds.

benpadiah says: (3:29:21 AM)
the four elements

benpadiah says: (3:29:22 AM)
etc.

benpadiah says: (3:29:27 AM)
the real question is

benpadiah says: (3:29:47 AM) what do the seven planets have to do with the tree that the four elements have to do with the fruit, or the seed?

benpadiiah says: (3:29:50 AM) goddamn

benpadiiah says: (3:29:56 AM)
I'm sofa king hungry.

benpadiiah says: (3:29:59 AM)
brb

benpadiiah says: (3:30:01 AM)
snack.

poptop says: (3:30:05 AM)

So now I have told you how Cain was an immortal. Now you will come to me and say, "with certainty did God break his word!" For Adam and Eve both ate the fruit of the tree of knowledge in the Garden of Eden and yet, as the snake explained, did not "surely" die "in that instant." So before you come to me and blaspheme God to me, let me explain to you what it all means.

After Eve had eaten the fruit of fore-knowledge, and thus had known sin, she went looking for Adam, who she found eating at the tree of immortal life. It was here that Eve fed Adam of the apple of knowledge. But before she had done that, the two came together and conceived their immortal son Cain. It has been said Cain is the son of the serpent, who represents Satan, bringer of sin into this world. This is not true. In truth I tell you that Cain was borne to Eve not by the serpent, her tempter, but by Adam, her husband, while he was still immortal. This is why it is written, "the sons of God came into the wives of men, and they copulated with them." (Gen 6:2) This is because the children of Cain were interbreeding with the children of Cain's half-brother Seth. They were repeating the Original Sin of Adam and Eve. It was then Eve shared the apple of fore-knowledge with Adam, and only then that Adam realised his doom.

Here is the vision of the fruit of Knowledge that was perceived by Adam:
[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/gnostic/gategate.jpg>[/img]

The meaning of this figure is that immortality is the byproduct of time-travel. We see here 12 stations (the circled numbers) that stand for the twelve solar ages, the aeons of 2000 years each when the sun rises in a different sign on the same day. We see a figure will rotate 1/4th way around itself every 1/3rd of the way around the entire cycle. In the centre the signs of the zodiac themselves are given for both the orbital torus and the inverted ellipse of Crowley's Book of Thoth configuration.

Then it is written that Adam and Eve knew their sin, and they covered themselves with aprons made from fig leaves. (Gen 3:7) Thus, disguised as fig trees, they hid from God. Now some say, this was not God but Samael, the Blind, who came at this time to walk into the Garden. But it is also said, "the voice of Incorruptability said unto him, you err Samael." Thus, it was the voice of God speaking unto the tempter Samael, who then directly addressed Adam and Eve.

At this time, God said, "who told thee that thou wast naked?" Now this question does not mean: "who told you to eat the fruit of knowledge?" This line of reason instead implied God's foreknowledge of the events. The real question asked here is "what did the serpent say to Eve?" Adam and Eve, even at this point, remained blameless in the eyes of God.

So, God began to place the seven-fold curse upon those involved in these events. He began by cursing the serpent (Gen 3:14), followed by cursing the seed of both serpent and woman (Gen 3:15), followed by cursing Eve with the pain of bearing children (Gen 3:16), followed by cursing Adam to eat of the tree of knowledge forever (Gen 3:17), followed by cursing Adam to eat the herb of the field (Gen 3:18), cursing Adam to sweat (Gen 3:19) to earn bread (Gen 3:19). God concludes his curse by saying "for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." (Gen 3: 19) He then makes "coats of skins, and clothed them." (Gen 3:21)

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/gnostic/cupoflife.jpg>[/img]

We see the seven "curses" are really only the taking back by God one by one of seven blessings. The three on the left and the three on the right, plus the four at the center, are together the ten sefirot. They are also like the seven planets of the ancients, plus the three elements. They are also like the seven metals of the alchemists, and like the seven chakras, or nerve ganliae and plexi of the spine and brain. Here we see the four "worlds" surround the Heart chakra of Adam Kadmon. This is also why it is said in legend that Adam was "reduced in height to 100 cubits." (this saying comes to us from

It should also be noted that Eve was not even given her name by Adam until this point, and that her names means only "mother of all the living," (Gen 3:20) and this life refers to both immortality as well as mortality. So because of Eve being "mother of all the living," God said to himself, "Behold, the man has become as one of us, to know good and evil." This means, to know the difference between right and wrong, and right and wrong mean that man had control over the destiny of all God's creation, which was His Right. Adam gave names to everything, according to [url=<http://www.sacred-texts.com/jud/loj/loj104.htm>]legend[/url], and this means he had dominion over them. Now, however, Adam also knew right as distinguished from wrong, that being to have control over only his own short term fate, but to lack control over the long-term destiny of creation. It is at this point God says, "

Now, what does it mean "God said, man has become one of us"? (Gen 3:22) It is not as Jesus taught, that there were two Gods, one named YHVH (or Jave) and one named Elohim. ([url=<http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/jam.html>]Apocryphon of James[/url]) These are really the twin heads of Satan and Maloch, however in the time of Jesus, there was a dispute between commentators on Torah about the different verses that use the name of God YHVH, and those that use the different name of God, Elohim. Jesus himself was on the side of those studying the YHVH verses, the so-called "Book of J," and so called YAVE good, and Elohim, the nomenclature of the second scribe of the Torah during the Babylonian captivity when the writings were compiled, "evil." However, even in this event the different attributes of the names being "good" or "evil" is obviously arbitrary. In truth, there is only one God, and he is not divided within himself between Good and Evil.

The true name of God (that is called the Baal-Shem) is AHDVNHAY, that is, the interpolation in opposite directions of the ineffable tetragrammaton, the vowels of the word: YHVH, and the title ADNA (Adonai), a pagan term meaning Lord. It is for this reason that the original distinction was made (in Gen 12:8) by the scribes during the Babylonian captivity between YHVH and Elohim (meaning my God, as in, one from among many). Thus came Elohim to replace the appellation Adonai, out of respect for the ineffable Holy One, Blessed Be He. So, here is where the scribes introduced the distinction between the two terms, meaning Lord God: it is therefore written: "God said, man has become one of us" because it means, "YHVH said man has become an Adonai (or an Elohim)," meaning "God said man had become a Lord," meaning that man, now having both fore-knowledge and immortality, had become his own ruler, and would therefore have no need to recognise God.

So, that is why God then placed the Cherubim to the east of Eden (where Enoch would later raise his city) and the flaming sword to spin "in all directions" (Gen 3:24) to guard against Adam ever again tasting the fruits of immortality. At this time, God gave the tree of Eternal Life to Satan, whom Christ called the voice of Cain, and thence, before Adam's eyes, it withered up and turned into the Tree of Death, that is, the triple-hell crowning the seven infernal realms.

Here is a diagram of how the tree of immortal life appeared to Adam immediately after the fall: [img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Grimoire/TOD.jpg>[/img]

Therefore, let us look at what would befall the mortal man, that is, he who knows the guilt of original sin unto death, if they were to combine the tree of knowledge, of which we are given freely to eat (although in kabbalah it is called the "tree of life" diagram that is studied), as well as the actual tree of life (that is called in Goetia, the "tree of death" diagram).

This is a depiction of the true condition of existence for mortal man, who knows the guilt of original sin unto death, that is called by the Buddhists Sangsara, or samsara, meaning "suffering." [img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/ToD.jpg>[/img]
For more about this diagram, please consult my work on the subject, url=[http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/bookstore/Tree\_of\_Death\_v.02.pdf.zip]the Tree of Death and the Qliphoth[/url] by Jon Gee.

However, we, who remain yet free, have not forgotten the fore-knowledge that is the fruit of the tree of knowledge over good and evil. This is why the "tree of life" diagram is so-called: because the fruit of it is our only food for all our lives, but the tree from which this fruit comes is in reality only the Tree of Knowledge. So, we reclaim the fullness of this foreknowledge when we reject knowing the guilt for original sin unto death. This raises the middle pillar to its right position before the Fall of Satan and the Rebel Angels, before the fall of Adam, and before the so-called "breaking of the vessels" (the Qliphoth) that caused the division between the third and fourth worlds: Beriah of Eden and Yetzirah of the sefirot. Thus, here is a diagram depicting the true attributes of Goodness, those seen for us aforehand by God, our Creator, as the ultimate Divine Gift for the loyalty of his favourite creation, whom he set above all others, man, Adam and Eve.

Here we see the true, orientally far-eastern attributes of the Bohn and Vedic msytics applied by the earliest Kurgan tribespeople to understanding the metaphysics of the regional Eljo neanderthals of the region of ancient Sumeria and Akkadia, between the Tigris and Euphrates rivers, in modern Iraq, and north into modern Turkey.

On either opposing pillar are the eight "double" (the same upside down as right side up) hexagrams from the i ching, capped by a yin line and a yang line. In the middle way, we see the seven chakras of Hindu and Buddhist Tantric Yoga. The other attributes of the paths are the 22 paths connecting the ten emanations and the 12 paths connecting the 7 shells.

The lesson of the combination of these two trees is that the attributes assigned to the joints on them are not "good" or "evil" in themselves, but arbitrary groups of physical referentials assembled relative to one another on a 4th dimensional geometric lattice. It is really this fourth dimensional geometric lattice that is important, while the traits attributed to it are ultimately arbitrary, neither "good" nor "bad." The lesson is that there is no "right" or "wrong" for every living individual set into stone. Just as what is right for the long term may seem wrong in the short term, so do we each excercise our version of what is right differently. This is the meaning of the Masonic saying, "Deus Memque Jus."

So, finally, here is a diagram that explains how all these previous diagrams have been related to one another, and how they all relate to fourth-dimensional geometry.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/img148.jpg>[/img]

For more about the attributes of Adam and Eve relative to phi/pi, please refer to my website's page on the subject of [url=http://www.benpadiah.com/magick/numbersquares.html]magic number squares[/url].

Notice that the number of stations of the fruits of knowledge and immortality, the folds of the curse of death, and the dimensions and folds of Adam and Eve, total the same as the thirty-two mystical paths wisdom given in Sefer Yetzirah 1:1.

Now, returning to the Book of Raziel diagram from the preceding degree, [url=http://illuminati-order.com/forum/viewtopic.php?p=4999#4999]some secrets of gnosticism[/url], we see with right understanding all the attributes described herein laid out as though seen from the side.

Here, again, is the Book of Raziel diagram:

Remember the three sinners, Adam, Eve, and the serpent, but remember that only Adam and Eve transgressed, although the serpent also was cursed. The serpent was "subtle," meaning wise, for it had not been forebidden to eat of the fruits of both the trees of fore-knowledge and of immortality. When it acted as Eve's temptress, it was only doing what it believed to be God's will. So, [url=http://www.sacred-texts.com/jud/loj/loj104.htm]Legend[/url] has it, [quote="Louis Ginzberg"]If God had questioned him, the serpent would have answered: "Thou didst give them a command, and I did contradict it. Why did they obey me, and not Thee?"[/quote]

The serpent itself was led astray by its belief from right knowledge of the will of God. It was the very nature of the serpent that was pure however, and only that Samael, that is, Blindness, did enter into the body of the serpent which caused the serpent's wisdom to err, and he to mistake the Devil's temptation for the Will of the Divine. For he had foreknowledge of all the events to come, all the events described by scripture, but, because he was not a man, he did not have control over even his own role to play in it all. As his destiny became fate, he could not prevent Satan from entering into him.

Now know this: the true name of the serpent of wisdom was Yeshuah Ben Padiiah. And here is the vision of the true Cross, an arisen rose, for which he was supposedly put to death without proper trial.

(Jonathan Barlow Gee)

Here are some posts I made on another forum where I created this same thread:

[quote]IMHO, this entire conflict is based on false pretenses.

Firstly, it's only the Christians, afraid of the bloodline of their Messiah coming into power as the last Pope, that are forcing the Isaac versus Ishmael paradigm. Only purpose-driven ass hats would advocate this world-view.

Secondly, I do not believe Mossad that the Israeli soldiers it claimed were kidnapped by Hezbollah from Lebanon. Remember, first it was two soldiers kidnapped by a radical faction, but they were returned. Then three other soldiers were supposedly kidnapped by Hezbollah operatives proper, not the same radical splinter faction. This was all between Tuesday last week and Tuesday this week. I don't believe ANY soldiers were ever kidnapped.

IMO, Mossad is trying to position itself as it saw the neo-cons posture following 9-11. The neo-cons blamed the tragedy of 9-11 on the intelligence community, and then abused the FBI and CIA by forcing them to doctor up evidence of links both to terrorism and to nuclear development in Iraq, which we all know were false premises for the second Persian Gulf war. The neo-cons also created the Dept. of Homeland Security, which was supposed to consolidate the intelligence communities, but has since proven to have only compounded the beauracatic in-fighting and cross-purposed competition.

Mossad, seeing that it could doctor false evidence as a premise for all-out international military conflict, staged the kidnapping stories in the news. Its purpose in doing this was to position itself into more authority within the government of Israel.

-ben[/quote]

[quote]Look, the only point I'm trying to make is that, the entire apparently political paradigm is being manipulated from behind the scenes by the limits of the intelligence provided for them by their respective national intelligence communities. Mossad and the CIA, the KGB as well as Britain's MI-6 program, all sprang from project paperclip following the defeat of the third reich. At that time, all three were called the OSS. The goal of the OSS was to out-think the NAZI blitzkrieg war machine. However, following the Nuremberg human rights violations trials (remember the days when there was a world court!), the OSS splintered into all the existing factions of today. The Office of Naval Intelligence was coordinated with the stealth technology of the air force. The result of this was ultimately the JPL and NASA. Following the dissolution of the world court after the Nuremberg trials ended, the political wing of the OSS became the security council members of the UN. Israel has a permanent seat here, as does Russia, China, America and Great Britain. All of these grew out of the first modern intelligence agency. Of course, the history of spying goes back further than this, as does the history of diplomacy between the nations, and as does the intermingling of the two.

However, GHWB, a former head of the CIA, so directly aligning himself with the House of Saud through the Carlyle Group represents an alignment between one of the five permanent members of the UN security council with one of the Islamic nations that comprise the so-called "Green voting block" in the UN general assembly. This deal was to trade the promise of the Middle East oil reserves by the House of Saud (Usama's uncle) for the CIA's involvement (under GHWB) in the training of the mujahideen (including Osama himself) to repel Soviet Russian troops that were invading Afghanistan almost until the end of the Soviet Union itself, in the later 1980's, early 90's.

All the developing nations of the world at this point are being played, one against the other within a region, in order to expand the national borders of the five permanent members of the UN security council into regional "free-trade" zones. This has been the strategy recommended to the five member nations by their think tank organisations such as the CFR: use the IMF and world bank to diminish trade barriers between the neighboring nations of the five permanent member nations. Following this, the intelligence community and the military industrial complex within the United States then developed the "constant conflict" paradigm through its think-tank organisations such as the PNAC. According to the "constant conflict" paradigm, the idea was to use "terrorism" itself (defined as low-intensity conflict until that time) against the people of the world as a whole via the governmental posturing of these five member nations supposedly in competition with one another.

As these five world powers rattle and shake their sabres, all the surrounding nations are gradually dissolving their trade-borders, currency-exchange rates, and giving up the rights of their respective citizens to form regional free-trade zones. However in certain hot-spot countries (Bush's Axis of Evil) the five powers have sold guns and drugs for generations, in order to no doubt turn these nations against one another, and let the other surrounding regionalised free-trade zones reap the economic rewards of redistributing the conquered nations' wealth.

And of course, all of this basically goes back to the intelligence communities of the individual political infrastructure internal to the five regular member nations being the covert controllers over those political institutions. This goes back to Project Papreclip, and the division between the five founding nations of the UN after the redispersal amongst them all of the wealth gained from the defeat of the Nazis, fascists and Hirohito.

[quote]I support:

Israel 45% [ 5 ]

Lebanon 36% [ 4 ]

this is why this is an interesting topic: this is a closer race than you might think. Israel is not viewed as the Jews of the bible by 9/10ths of the world. That is a more or less uniquely American viewpoint rooted in primitivist baptist and evangelical pentecostal pastors' (often televised) interpretations of ancient Hebrew scriptures as they interpret them to predict modern world events. The rest of the world is capable of assessing the discrepancies between a government's stated objectives (involving diplomacy and treaties) and those that its intelligence communities instigate through that nation's military (involving guerilla terrorism and espionage). For example, someone living in, say, Australia, is actually more able to see the discrepancies between the current American leadership's stated goals (bringing Democracy to Iraq) and its actual goals (establishing hegemonic control over the oil of the region), than, say, someone living in Texas. Likewise, I, living in the insulated US, here in my nice air-conditioned sububran home, can actually tell the moves being made by Mossad by provoking this military action between the Israeli politicians in charge of the daily government and the Hezbollah party in the daily politics of their neighbor Lebanon.

Of course, all of that is to the side-lines in my mind to the fact that Israel pre-emptively struck Lebanon by dropping strategically targeted bombs on the Hezbollah party headquarters in downtown Beirut, killing untold numbers of civilians, and causing the emergency evacuation of the civilian populace of southern Lebanon, by bus, across the border to Syria. Then Israel recalled the bombers to their side of the Israel/Lebanon border. At this point Lebanon declared open war on Israel, which means that, what history will record is that, even though Israel provoked this, it was Lebanon that declared official commencement of all out warfare. The number of civilian casualties in this situation is escalating at a frighteningly rapid rate, and I fear that it won't even be until after this event has been concluded altogether that the true death toll will be revealed.

The crime of starting and committing to a mutual state of open warfare is much worse, to my mind, than that of Saddam gassing the Kurds, or even America's invasion and ongoing occupation of Iraq. The death toll of the Kurdish population, no matter the injustice behind Saddam's motives, can never equal in number the amount of human life that stands to be lost on both sides by the commencement of outright military hostilities between Israel and Lebanon. In the same way, the number of deaths of soldiers and civilians, including both suicides and casualties, can never replace with their blood the losses of the US civilians on 9-11.

If America was going to stick to its guns in the War On Terror, it would be forced to reign Israel in, impose stranglehold sanctions on the rouge state, and petition the UN to establish a world court to try the culpable parties in Mossad of war crimes. Of course, we live in a real world, and this would never happen in this world. So what can we expect instead?

GWB will back Israel because GHWB (his dad) has strong ties through the CIA to Mossad and to the House of Saud. This, it is obvious to any rational non-American person living on earth, means that GWB and the neo-con (read NAZI) leadership of the United States (ie. Halliburton and the military-industrial complex) should also be tried for war crimes against their own electoral constituency for signing the temporary suspension of the First Amendment via Patriot Act wire-tapping.

The fact is, to an non-American, the plight under the fascist, fourth-reich neo-cons of the average, relatively innocent (and definitely unaware) American citizenry, will be as easily understood as the posturing of Mossad in these events is to me.

Not all neo-gnostics are neo-sethians, but all neo-sethians are neo-gnostics.

What is a neo-gnostic? The new age that has followed from the questioning of the catholic church by individual minds, fed on the Nag Hammadi Library, the Dead Sea Scrolls, and LSD.

So, what is a neo-sethian? Someone who has educated themselves on the arguments of gnosticism, but does not disbelieve in the Catholic mysteries. They may have, in fact, most have, had some sort of "gnostic" revelation thanks to illegal narcotics, but this revelation was coloured by their Christianity, and is gnostic only in that it is scientific rather than metaphorical in nature. However, they then use the anthropomorphic Christian metaphor to interpret it, and that is why it is not truly "gnostic."

The primary difference between the neo-gnostics and the neo-sethians is that there are neo-gnostics who live their vision day by day, experiencing "higher" realities in their daily mundane lives. There are no neo-Sethians who take their visions seriously enough to want to pursue them, and would, if they could, force everyone around them to devalue their own, because they ascert these visions as based on "faith" and thus to be accurate only to the individual person that experienced them, and not universally applicable.

Most of the visions the neo-Sethians have experienced are the first few drug experiences, the revelation of the electronic media as a gateway to higher realms of perception. They see a movie, say, as looking out a window, but they may see a stained-glas window in church the same way. Another is the vision of being outside the universe, or exterior to their prior moment's self-definition, and therefore, self-superior, but instead of questioning the God-view, they act manipulative by assuming leadership over the reality they consider entirely fake beside their own personal perception of it. Thus, the "Holier than thou" attitude assumed by people who kneal before their own ignorant belief in the ineffability of the Truth.

To question the God Area, we have to erase the triangle around us, and arise from knealing, stand, and put faith in the abyss to catch our next step, despite our sun-blinded foolishness leading us directly over the cliff.

That is why we say that Fools rush in where angels (magi) fear to tread, for fear of God is only the Begining of Wisdom, and knowing how little you actually know is only the beginning of that fear.

Of course, we must also remember what we learn, for that is knowledge, despite how little of that we have, and Understanding is just knolwedge over time, or applied knowledge to the "real" world.

So, here I am: descended through Kether through Chokmah through Binah. Now tell me where I am? You have been conditioned to answer: the Abyss. You have been told that there is a "magickal" or "psychic" Abyss between the seventh and eight emanations, the sefirot on the "Tree of Life" lattice-work diagram of kabbalah. Of course, to Question the God Area, we have to ask what fills the Abyss?

The Abyss is the grave, to some, from which God has arisen; to others it is filled by Ayn Soph Aur, Ayin Soph and Ayin, the infinite light, the infinite emptiness and the measure of infinity. Some also include the supernal sefirot as being "removed" above into the "higher" realm simply because they seem more psychological than the seven inferiors. To others they put their trust in the Four World, or the Six Lokas, most Mystics will tell you the Middle-Path is an eight-fold seraphim (flaming serpent), but almost none know the meaning of the Blind Dragon.

This is because they personify the "higher" reality as a realm without thought. This is a terrible misconstruation, since accessing the "higher" reality allows us to define reality as we wish to, and this philosophy abuses that right of the awakenened mind. If we define all waking life as "without thought" we ignore what we learn, we deny that we know, we refute as belief only what we observe to be facts. The "Higher" Reality is much more malleable by the mind than mundane reality. Therefore those who think one thing and act on another, who hide their own beliefs behind masks of moral dogma, who tell you things they know are untrue, who keep their cards hidden to all but themselves and God, who lack trust and cling to the belief in their own persecution by realism, they are the ones that ruin reality for the rest of us.

They are the ones who tell us, "there will always be one bad apple that spoils the barrel," but they themselves are that bad apple, already spoiling all around them, and the barrel is simply the here and now.

The willfully ignorant are the gatekeepers to Hell on earth. They believe themselves "leaders" when they ask you dumb questions, but acknowledge themselves to be as blind as they believe are you. And it is this very group that has made a deal with the Watchers for control over the world's Enochian Communications System.

They rule the world in Democracy's name with a tyrannical grip, a fascist plutocracy of spies and liars.

The entire apparently political paradigm is being manipulated from behind the scenes by the limits of the intelligence provided for them by their respective national intelligence communities. Mossad and the CIA, the KGB as well as Britain's MI-6 program, all sprang from project paperclip following the defeat of the third reich. At that time, all three were called the OSS. The goal of the OSS was to out-think the NAZI blitzkrieg war machine. However, following the Nuremberg human rights violations trials (remember the days when there was a world court!), the OSS splintered into all the existing factions of today. The Office of Naval Intelligence was coordinated with the stealth technology of the air force. The result of this was ultimately the JPL and NASA. Following the dissolution of the world court after the Nuremberg trials ended, the political wing of the OSS became the security council members of the UN. Israel has a permanent seat here, as does Russia, China, America and Great Britain. All of these grew out of the first modern intelligence agency. Of course, the history of spying goes back further than this, as does the history of diplomacy between the nations, and as does the intermingling of the two.

However, GHWB, a former head of the CIA, so directly aligning himself with the House of Saud through the Carlyle Group represents an alignment between one of the five permanent members of the UN security council with one of the Islamic nations that comprise the so-called "Green voting block" in the UN general assembly. This deal was to trade the promise of the Middle East oil reserves by the House of Saud (Usama's uncle) for the CIA's involvement (under GHWB) in the training of the mujahideen (including Osama himself) to repel Soviet Russian troops that were invading Afghanistan almost until the end of the Soviet Union itself, in the later 1980's, early 90's.

All the developing nations of the world at this point are being played, one against the other within a region, in order to expand the national borders of the five permanent members of the UN security council into regional "free-trade" zones. This has been the strategy recommended to the five member nations by their think tank organisations such as the CFR: use the IMF and world bank to diminish trade barriers between the neighboring nations of the five permanent member nations. Following this, the intelligence community and the military industrial complex within the United States then developed the "constant conflict" paradigm through its think-tank organisations such as the PNAC. According to the "constant conflict" paradigm, the idea was to use "terrorism" itself (defined as low-intensity conflict until that time) against the people of the world as a whole via the governmental posturing of these five member nations supposedly in competition with one another.

As these five world powers rattle and shake their sabres, all the surrounding nations are gradually dissolving their trade-borders, currency-exchange rates, and giving up the rights of their respective citizens to form regional free-trade zones. However in certain hot-spot countries (Bush's Axis of Evil) the five powers have sold guns and drugs for generations, in order to no doubt turn these nations against one another, and let the other surrounding regionalised free-trade zones reap the economic rewards of redistributing the conquered nations' wealth.

And of course, all of this basically goes back to the intelligence communities of the individual political infrastructure internal to the five regular member nations being the covert controllers over those political institutions. This goes back to Project Papreclip, and the division between the five founding nations of the UN after the redispersal amongst them all of the wealth gained from the defeat of the Nazis, fascists and Hirohito.

So we look back and we say, "well, who's brain child was this?" The whole modern paradigm is purpose driven, the proof is that, no matter what, the rich will get richer and the poor will get poorer, and the only two universal constants, as they say, are death and taxes, even though the IRS is only the government police agency for the mint and is actually collecting taxes, in spite of there being no law allowing them to do so, so that the mint can print the money the government owes the federal reserve bank (a private holding company) in interest on the national debt, which began with the Marshall Plan after WWII.

So, again, "who made this mess?" Allen Dulles. The first director of the CIA following its formation from, as well as one of the chief executive spies for, the OSS, Allen Dulles was also one of the chief executive share-holders in the German based company IG Farben, where Albert Hoffmann had formulated synthetic LSD-25. IG Farben, of course, was one of the very racist Rockefeller foundation's funded foreign investments in National Socialist Germany. They were actually experimenting with low cost ways of killing inmates in prisons and mental asylums when Hoffmann happened onto LSD, and it was under Allen Dulles that the CIA founded front companies to fund scientific studies at universities during the 1960's using LSD on prisoners, lunatics, and finally on students.

It was also under Allen Dulles that Air America was established, importing processed poppies from North VietNam through China to Afghanistan for processing into synthetic heroin, and importing this to the "Family" (hippy mafia) leaders of the youth movement organisations in the US. It wouldn't be until under Dulles' later successor as director of the CIA, GHWB that coca leaves from Columbia would be ground into cocaine, to be flown into Mena, Arkansas under Governor Clinton, from hence to be distributed to American Ghettos. The justification for this was that the funds collected from the Ghettos were used to arm Sandanista guerilla rebels to overthrow the Shah of Iran, the Ayatollah Khumeni, in exchange for American hostages the Sandanistas were holding. In other words, GHWB as CIA director, did a good deal to fund terrorist organisations, and now, GWB, his son, has to deal with them all.

Of course, the Youth Movement in America, which possesses virtually bottomless pockets, literally the greatest amount of disposable income and thus Buying Power, of any class in the entire history of civilisation, who could, literally, down to one person among them, single-handedly save the world, by simply giving 100% of their income to a single foreign charity, are kept entirely in "check" by drugs. This is like pinning a king against a wall with a rook. You can't kill the king with the rook, only corner him against one wall or another, there is essentially no resolution to this checking, and therefore no conclusive check mate. In simple terms, you cannot kill a king with the walls of his own castle.

But all of this began with Ayn Rand. Ayn Rand was a witch. A very powerful, and evil, influence in the economic sector had come into her possession, and then, she got dosed. Everything after this event that she wrote was nothing but brain-washed anti-communist propaganda. She herself believed herself to be possessed by the devil, for she portrays herself in fiction as John Galt, a Luciferian inspired self-proclaiming Nietzschean Anti-Christ figure.

Just as [url=http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Battle\_of\_Megiddo\_%281918%29]The Battle of Armageddon[/url] (wiki-link) was fought in 1918 during WWI between the British and the Ottoman Empire, so too was John Galt the second coming of the physical person of Jesus Christ, inverted into fiction. Those who follow Randism, as well as those higher LDS who practise scientology, understand the types of concepts I have discussed on here earlier about the three necessary forms of the second coming:

- 1) the birth-right by bloodlines bodily incarnation of Christ/Anti-Christ.
- 2) the psychic reincarnation in a secret-society-selected physical shell.

3) the spiritual coming in the form of the discorporeal revelation.

even if only in a vague way, considering it a sort of cheating to "astral" travel and to communicate with the "Secret Chiefs" or "Higher Intelligences" among their fellow "Higher" selves. These are the neo-Sethians. They know about the Battle of Armageddon, because they have not only studied it in depth, they have benefitted from it financially, directly, by perennial stock-exchange insider trading tips within the intelligence communities. The neo-Sethians are the ones behind the Conspiracy.

And so the Neo-Sethians have taken up their own reincarnation experiment. They have taken the soul of Anton Szandor Lavey, the founder of the Church of Satan, and grafted it into the body of conservative christian author Tim Lahaye.

Tim Lahaye has authored the following books:

[quote="Tim Lahaye"]"I myself have been a forty-five year student of the centuries-old conspiracy to use government, education, and media to destroy every vestige of Christianity within our society and establish a new world order. Having read at least fifty books on the Illuminati, I am convinced that it exists and can be blamed for many of man's inhumane actions against his fellow man during the past two hundred years." (LaHaye)[/quote]

1995 the first Left Behind released. 1997 Anton Zsador Lavey died.

Oh, how the world we live in has changed since then.

Of course, what do these two, very different people have in common at all? What has the founder of the church of satan done in any way anything like anything ever done by this Christian dispensationalist Protestant minister? Well, both of them, I guarantee you, have dropped a dose of LSD.

Now, Anton Lavey lived his life as a neo-gnostic, experiencing the Visions every day he was alive. Tim Lahaye is a neo-Sethian, a Benedict Arnold, a so-called turn-coat to the cause to which they rightfully owes their, granted frightening to them, life-changing visions.

Now, we ask, as usual, what exactly is the difference between a neo-Sethian such as Tim Lahaye and a neo-gnostic such as Anton Lavey? Well, George W. Bush has probably read every book written by one of them, and considers the other one advocates everything that is wrong with the spirit of the youth in "this country" today.

One of them is going to become a Christian minister, and eventually try to convert the other to it. They both have had the same "type" of experience of the same exact reality, but one of them believes themselves the rightful "leader" of the other.

To the a christian, transcendentalism only goes as far "east" as Henry Thureau, who teaches us that, according to his own experience of nature, "for any two trees planted at the same time, one will eventually outgrow the other." So we have Darwinian-Malthusian philosophies such as Fascist capitalism, "survival of the fittest."

But to the Gnostic, that is, one who is truly a Gnostic, it is foolish to even try to speak out loud against, let alone to try to open up a dialogue of communication with, a Christian. Tell me I am wrong, and yet, show me a single stoner-voter, and I'll show you someone who is making two lefts to make a right.

[quote="benpadiah"]series A will determine if you view truth as symbolic.

1) do you believe that truth is beauty and beauty truth?[/quote]

This question is based on the use of syllogism and parabolic thinking. This means, to break the cause-and-effect, linear thinking dependent on metaphors as weak logic (rhymes without reasons), one has to follow a parabola, or rather, go around the two legs, rather than simply traverse the hypotenuse.

[quote="poptop"][color=green]Nope - often the truth is an ugly and unpleasant thing[/color][/quote] Agreed. However, I think the phrase "beauty is truth" means that what we recognise as ordered pattern in a background field of static chaos points, however indirectly, upwards toward a form of "higher" reality, in which such perfectly ordered forms exist exclusive or above (like oil on water) the chaos of this world we live in.

[quote="benpadijah"]2) do you believe that beauty is in the eye of the beholder?[/quote]

I think that the eye of the beholder is the thing itself that is beautiful. Obviously Sartre (in No Exit) would disagree. Aristotle too would interpret "art" as "thrice removed from the Kingdom" (meaning the Kingdom of Eternal Forms). Then again, think about what is more than merely On the eye, but In the eye of the Beholder. The rods and cones of the viscous intra-ocular fluid are so small they are acted upon by photons. They are guided into alignment upside down by light focusing in through the iris. This "image" is then projected onto the "screen" of the nerve stalk as purely pulsed electro-magnetic signals. Thus, perception itself reveals the "Royal Road" leading from the impermanence and change of that "beauty" which fades and passes with time, the so-called "outer" beauty, towards the Kingdom of Eternal Forms, the so-called "inner" beauty.

[quote="poptop"][color=green]To a point - I believe it goes further and depends on the experiences of the beholder. So the beholder finds their own concept of beauty and it comprises their experiences to date[/color][[/quote] well said.

[quote="benpadijah"]3) do you believe the eye is the window to the soul?[/quote]

Some would say that the eyes are windows through which the soul looks out from within the brain. I would say the opposite is true. The eyes are windows through which the soul outside of the self looks out into the brain. The electromagnetic aura is only the wormhole multiverse event horizon, while inside our brain, our mind is the baby universe inside the singularity. Our eyes are thus like black holes that look out on the infinite potential of the mind. This is what we see in each others' eyes. Just as the pupil dilates to let in more light, so too does our consciousness expand to let in more knowledge.

[quote="poptop"][color=green]No - I believe the eye is an external extension of the brain. I also believe that people who believe they know a person from looking into their eyes ought come buy this bridge I have.[/color][[/quote] Fair enough.

[quote="benpadijah"]series B will determine if you view yourself as iconoclastic.

4) do you believe truth is stranger than fiction?[/quote]

Truth includes all that is material (facts) and all that is imagined (fiction). Reality is even greater than Truth.

[quote="poptop"][color=green]Some truth is stranger than fiction, some truth is mundane and boring, some truth is stranger than we can know.[/color][[/quote]

NONONO. Nothing is ever "more than we can know" by any degree of quality or shape or quantity. That is a self-imposed limitation. If you can give me a reasonable explanation for why people choose to retard themselves under their own false horizons, I'll trade you for this great watch I made...

[quote="benpadijah"]5) do you believe something can be too good to be true?[/quote]

Hell no.

[quote="poptop"][color=green]All the time.[/color][/quote]

[quote="benpadijah"]6) do you believe the truth is greater than the sum of all facts?[/quote]

[quote="poptop"][color=green]Sometimes. But not very often.[/color][/quote]

Interesting. You picked up on that choice of verbiage. Most impressive.

[quote="benpadijah"]series C will determine if you view truth as morally elastic.

7) do you believe the truth is an objective ideal or[/quote]

As I've said, I qualify truth as the sum of both facts and fiction, and also I quantify truth as lesser than the sum of all that is real.

[quote="poptop"][color=green]Qualified yes - but that presupposes that truth is absolute, finite and final[/color][/quote]

It doesn't necessarily. You can have as a final truth an impossible loop, an axiom or undefined variable. You can say, "the only constant is change," or you could say, "all Cretans are liars," and then add, "I am from Crete."

[quote="benpadijah"]8 ) do you believe the truth is a subjective reality?[/quote]

Truth is yin AND yang, fact and fiction. Fiction is malleable by the mind alone, while facts are only malleable through the body.

[quote="poptop"][color=green]Qualified yes - but that presupposes that your truth and reality can be different to my truth and reality. Which is probably not bad, all things considered.[/color][/quote]

Most definately it does not. You can have as overall reality that perspectives interior to that reality will always differ, but from outside of this overall reality, then this condition could be observed as seemingly more, but ultimately im-, permanent. In other words, even if all "reality" were subjective, "truth" would then supercede it.

[quote="benpadijah"]9) do you believe the truth is "out there"?[/quote] sorry, this was a trick question, just fishing for X-files fans.

[quote="poptop"][color=green]No I believe facts are "out there" and truth is "in here"[/color][/quote]

Good answer though. Very neo-Gnostic.

[quote="benpadijah"]series D will determine if you will "cast the first stone."

10) do you believe the truth is something that can be known?[/quote]

Yes.

[quote="poptop"][color=green]I'm sure hoping so otherwise what would be the point?[/color][/quote]

But that in itself is a knot in the will. You ask a rhetorical question, but if you rearrange the words, your own expectation is revealed: there is no point. That's only setting yourself up for a disappointment. Surprises, when it is reality proving itself to supercede your superstitions, are never mild and "pleasant."

[quote="benpadiab"]11) do you believe the truth is something that can be understood?[/quote]

Yes.

[quote="poptop"][color=green]I'm sure hoping so otherwise what would be the point?[/color][/quote]

I hate it when people answer yes or no questions with a question. Socrates rolls over in his "grave" every time someone posts a solipsism on the internet.

[quote="benpadiab"]12) do you think wisdom is knowing the difference between true and false?[/quote]

That's biblical, but not what I think.

[quote="poptop"][color=green]No I think wisdom is knowing what to do with truth and falsity when you find it.[/color][/quote]

Applied knowledge. Well we could go round and round on that one, but there's really no point, as you've already demonstrated.

Creation is my Security Blanket.
It is the value I accumulate in karmic dust.
Over time, even the astral akasha involutes.

All is partially our own invisible imaginations. But we are not now ourselves responsible for what was done to us in the past by others. Forward in time manifests by generation, backward in time culminates in the present. Moreover, as above so below means also as without so within, however neither are superior nor inferior. Nor do they compete like left and right, one superior at one time, the other at another. For example, the interior and the exterior of our biological component life forms, the sub-atomic and the astronomic, are both interior to the finite universe, but what is inside of us and what is outside of us appear to be reflecting one another at opposite ends with our self awareness balanced at the centre of the scale. So God is both within and outside of us, even though we associate ourselves with only our own interior realms.

Most of us have similar such "peak" life-experiences, whether we have them through shamanic self-poisoning or under anesthetic on an operating table, whether from drinking all night or simply the product of long hours working under the sun's heat. We experience the watery softening of our own accustomed world's walls, the ability to see our situation from a point somewhat removed, followed by OBEs, the sudden shattering reality-tunnel of all of our memories, dead loved ones coming to us from, and multitudes of other astral beings made of, the Light at the tunnel's end.

It has been the mystics of every culture who have explored these realms, and kept the writings of their discoveries. Most people fear these experiences, and therefore would like to venerate the mystics. The church was invented to allow the mystics sanctuary for their studies. Over time the wise have all resisted the church as a source of authority over those that fear the death experience. The Church should be a guide, say the mystics, and nothing more. It should lead by example alone. It does not need an army, and it does not need to collect taxes. Nor does it need to fear any army or pay any dues to anyone. It should also accept all forms of dissociative and death ritual experiences, and be a vast public resource for all schools of mystical literature. It is not, according to the mystics of all history, meant to govern the people, or to tell them how they should behave or how they should choose to live their lives. It should be a bastion of free will. This was the intention of the first shaman-chief when he created the dual offices of priest and king. Of course, once in a while, someone will pop up who is both. However, eventually, the final one of these will point out simply that: all definitions of the word King are arbitrary conditions set by agreement among all the people. Government is meant to be agreed upon by the people, and thus every person is ultimately the "king" over their own life and personal space. Therefore, there is no distinction between King and Priest when all men are equally their own rulers, "Kings."

Therefore, everyone, in their own right, should be a priest, that is, at least in the sense of a mystic. But then, of course, the ideals of mysticism I have just described are very different from the "real" world role of the Church in modern life. Instead, much of the magnum opus has come to be shouldered by secular non-religiously recognised organisations. Most mystics know to avoid the road that leads to Rome, even if that means living out one's life like Vladimir and Estragon, waiting for Godot. The result of these secular religious organisations maintaining the true tradition that the mystics had intended for the Church is that both the Church and the secular religions suffer. The Church attacks all other secular organisations as antithetical religions. The secular organisations hide behind a graduated ranking status system. The Church has a standing army and its own banking and investment firm. The secular religions infiltrate the existing governments until they are the heads of all states. Of course, both church and secular religions agree on the future.

In the future there will be no Church, and no secular organisations. All will Know All. All will be their own kings of all under their own perception. This much we all know, and we all agree on. The Church calls this condition the "afterlife," and the secular religions call it "utopia," however both accept that it is a condition of our daily existence that has not yet occurred here.

However, what the Church and secular religious organisations disagree on is how this future will come about. Both desire "the Kingdom of Heaven Come on Earth" and "the New Atlantis," but the Church wants a hegemony over and to destroy the secular mystics, and the secular mystics want the dissolution of both themselves and the Church.

Some people believe that being God is also a childish desire, or rather, a reality of an innocence perpetually being lost. They treat those of us who have this desire as anathema reminders of their mundane guiltiness. They claim we want "all or nothing," implying we view their worth as "nothing." We do not want "all or nothing." We want neither. We don't want to be the King-God, lording it over the lesser slaves of guilt. We don't want to compromise our quest for knowledge either, simply on the premise that our work at doing so does not meet with worldly approval.

So what can one man alone do? To prevent death, to prevent war, to prevent famine, to prevent plague? These are merely four natural forces, like air, water, fire, earth, the elements, or like the strong and weak nuclear, the electromagnetic, and gravitic forces, or like a point, linear plane, and shape or form with width, depth and height, and of course, time, the moving shadow of the fourth spatial dimensional metaforms.

We exist, some say, to experience these things. And yet, we call our existence suffering from the moment we first know pain until our dying breath. Some say we know pain in first in being born, some believe this life doesn't even begin until the newborn baby is slapped and takes its first breath.

I believe in Leary's initial concept of the eight circuits of consciousness. Each represents a new instinct, a new tunnel-reality, a whole new way of looking at reality. These are activated amongst the species during our evolution, within generations, and within individuals all at different stages through the life of species, of peoples, of individuals. The last few steps of evolution of our eight interior circuits of consciousness are actually causing machines to manifest closer and closer to likeness to our own consciousness.

Of course, consciousness can go beyond merely perception of the levels interior to its physical composure. Hence, our entire perception of time.

We can also describe planetary, stellar, solar systemic, galactic, filament, etc. consciousness, each is the same "distance" (duration) As Above So Below to the futique circuits of interior composition consciousness.

One is like my security blanket, and one is like my teddy bear. These two are my Holy (mental) Guardian (soul) Angels (spirit), my guides through this reality, this existence. They will always be there with me. If one is not immediately with me, then the other is. Usually both are near me, and neither is ever far. For now, my cat Leia is my teddy bear, and Luke had been my blanket. Now, my writing is my blanket, my "comfort." When Leia dies, and mind you, she is eternally young, and I have kept her whiskers for cloning, it will be a terrible cataclysm to my world. As much as I wouldn't admit it at the time, I screamed and sobbed in private when Luke died. I have literal skeletons in my figurative closet. I perserved his body two years in a freezer, praying daily he could be cloned. Already his soul had entered the wires. I have always experimented and I have not differentiated between myself and my security blanket self in this regard. I have only violated my teddy bear self once.

It's all part of the same process, of course, the rising voltage between the Muladhara and Pratyahara chakras ionises metal out of my bloodstream, which is then secreted through the scalp.

The goal of eating monoatomic gold is to transcend the spacetime barrier in the flesh. To die in the flesh, and to simply dissolve, to disappear into a parallel dimension. To move the gross matter of this world up a level into a finer vibration. Ideally, this experiment would be conducted using, simultaneously, DMT, extracted pure from Thikal. The reason for the suggestion of DMT being combined with the ingestion of the monoatomic gold is in case the monoatomic gold induces a difficult death experience, then the DMT can allow the being to rise up outside of the physical suffering as the body itself dies. The DMT can also serve to open the portals to timespace corresponding to the DNA portals opened in spacetime by the monoatomic gold. Of course the eating of monoatomic gold is only one potential death experience. It is actually my second choice for how I would like to go out. The other is this girl, but she ain't havin it.

Alot of people come to me and say, "you are a great person, but why do you treat your body this way?" I have many reasons, but none count as an excuse tolerable to most. If your background was one in abuse, you would keep the home-fire burning. Mostly we have sports for such catharsis, and the press and art for sublimation. But this is, of course, equal in relief only to the amount of stress induced necessary for these luxuries to be provided (ie. by civilisation), and does not even begin to address the primal urge at the core and root of our gnostic distress signals.

This reality is Manvantara, and its Creator was the Demiurge. That is the simplified theosophical, "New Age" sincretism between the Hindu concept of an illusory reality, akin to the Buddhist Maya, and the Gnostic concept of the levels of Persian Zoroastrianism superior to the seven heavens, or seven spheres of influence, that dealt with the pure and basic dualism between Ahura Mazda (pure light) and Ahriman (pure darkness) as the eighth and ninth emanations, beyond the "veil of the Abyss."

Now speak to me in a voice only I can hear: why? I honestly don't have the answer. I honestly don't know! So I put my pride to the side and humble myself in supplication before a witness over and above both my own father and this benevolent stranger. Who am I? What is my substance, what am I made out of? What is this nebulous mess of trans-dimensional ecto-plasm that has coagulated around this centralised charged field of tachyonic karma? Am I nothing more than one loose chess piece in this jigsaw puzzle 3-d magic-eye stereoscopic static tv channel?

Choke and Shock are removed from me now; they are outside of my DNA coils, and outside of my chakras, outside my kundalini, outside in my chi, my karmic aura, my signature electromagnetic field pattern. Offset from the ideal clear geometry of the pure spirit, I'm just a shard from the originally shattered me. Through the fractured looking glass. Behind the realms we see. Therein hides the Jabberwocky. The teli and tarot.

Who are choke and shock? One is smoke, and one is mirrors. One is fire, one electricity. They are only shadows beside clear light. One is like my security blanket, and one is like my teddy bear. These two are my Holy (mental) Guardian (soul) Angels (spirit), my guides through this reality, this existence. They will always be there with me. If one is not immediately with me, then the other is. Usually both are near me, and neither is ever far. For now, my cat Leia is my teddy bear, and Luke had been my blanket. Now, my writing is my blanket, my "comfort." When Leia dies, and mind you, she is eternally young, and I have kept her whiskers for cloning, it will be a terrible cataclysm to my world. As much as I wouldn't admit it at the time, I screamed and sobbed in private when Luke died. I have literal skeletons in my figurative closet. I perserved his body two years in a freezer, praying daily he could be cloned. Already his soul had entered the wires. I have always experimented and I have not differentiated between myself and my security blanket self in this regard. I have only violated my teddy bear self once.

I believe the cysts in my thighs to be the result of sexual self-abuse. I get inflamed cysts in my inner thighs, apparently because Paxil adversely affects the colon and causes cystitis. It is actually the hypothalamus that is not getting sufficient quantities of dopamine to trigger proper glandular secretion production by the pituitary. This is related also to my sleeping disorder, that is, the dopamine deficiency, which is undiagnosed. It will be the next phase in my treatment, hopefully, because it will address the hypo-mania conditions of my type II bipolar disorder. The paxil and lamictal have succeeded at addressing the deep depressions I had long suffered due to serotonin deficiency.

Now, speak to me in a voice only I can hear: why? What is the reason behind the rhymes, the alignments at certain positions on this downward spiral? I have seen so much, God, so much. I know about the galactic polar alignments that cathect the thoughts inside the universal brain, and I know the chambers of the heart of Eden beyond this, and I know the upper parts of God, beyond the upside-down and inside-out reversal and inversion through the singularity at the centre of the black hole. I know so much, God, I know so much. Why? What is the reason behind your rhymes?

I was born through the tzimtzum of this shemhamforash, broken on the loka wheel, impaled on its cosmic axis. Who put the "Devil's Heart" in me, who was that who performed psychic surgery on me, made my conscious mind dissociate, that I stayed awake and aware, but that a sub-personality was created? What did you whisper in my ear, while you were raping away my innocence and childhood? I remember seeing my penis as covered in bright green. You told me it was my mother's shit. You told me I raped my mother, but it was you who raped me. You think I don't know the devil? I was connected to the bright darkness by only a single thread of light, and the devil hailed stone after stone down upon me, against my skull, as I screamed for the Mercy of God.

There are so many people on earth right now, doing so many different things. I used to wonder, when I was a virgin, how many people were having sex at that exact moment on all of planet earth. Now it seems a childish question. Right now, on planet earth, people are dying of illness, starvation and war. But there is nothing any one person can do about that. These are caused by the metaforms moving through our brains. The fourth spatial dimension causes all our experiences of change in the fourth temporal dimension. We experience the past as memories, the present as emotions, and the future as our dreams.

now, the veil is beginning to part, the eye itself will open, this will not be a breached birth. Once I reach the crux of this flux that is passing through me, then I will be the last step closer to stepping out of existence altogether. Of course, after that level of achievement there is no reason to rush. Drive past seven cross-roads.

First allow me to reiterate some points that might have been looked over in my previous post:

Regarding, first, Adam's vision of the fruit of knowledge. In my initial post in this thread, I explained in great detail the meaning of Eve's vision of the fruit of knowlegde. Now let me adumbrate the vision of Adam:

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/gnostic/gategate.jpg>[/img]

Here we see the eye of the sun is central. Immediately surrounding this is the torus of the zodiac. We see the torus is used to represent the orbital ecliptic over time, such that the exterir ellipse of the torus represents the un-twisted zodiac, and the central "eye" between two "balls" represents the twisted zodiac, such as in [url=<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/Crowleyzod.jpg>]Crowley's diagram[/url] from the Book of Thoth. (click link for image)

What we see as the four-dimensional result, or the result over time, of the twisting of the zodiac is that Gate (earth's orbit through time around the sun) can become a Portal (a loop where one sign and the fourth next and previous will overlap) when the precession (twisting) of the zodiac (torus) "Locks" (aligns at aphelion equinox or perihelion solctice).

We can then "unLock" the "Portal" to traverse the "Gate." What this means is that, on a day of alignment (with the sunrise and sunset in a certain sign of the zodiac), we can "cross over" from one "loop" in "time" to another. For small spaces (via quantum-tunneling, which I will discuss next) this occurs constantly, however for longer durations of time to be crossed between instantaneously, a more complex process must occur.

This is depicted by the "sulpher" symbol (the triangle with cross). This symbol was chosen to represent a orientation of a person according to four, cardinal directions. As the being moves through the time-warp, reorientation of its spatial co-ordination will occur. In this case, we see that, to jump from one sign on the zodiac (say, Libra) to the sign opposite it on the zodiac (in this case Aries), then one would follow this convoluted concourse around through twelve "Stations" (the circled numbers in the diagram) and it would re-orient itself a total of three times, or rather, it would pass through three "twists" along the way.

These arcs, or Gates, are really only the "twists" in the central ecliptic elipse. If you go around the path described in the diagram, you will follow three turns to reach the opposite sign. If you go around the "twisted" zodiac, you will also have to pass through three twists in the path to get there. The three twists apply only when factoring in the four cardinal directions to the system of twelve stations in the Gate.

Here is the depiction of the very small forces at work when I describe this "warping" of time. Here the green axis represents the trajectory of a quantum particle-wave of matter-energy over time. The black lines represent the magnetic polarity of the quantum. As the particle (in blue) moves along its trajectory (in green) the electrical field caused by the magnetic polarity revolves the axis of that polarity, until eventually the polarity is opposite its prior position, and has apparently reversed its place from one pole to the other. I say this happens over time (which is true for the geographic location of the EM poles of earth) but this time is so miniscule on the smallest scale that we can say that it happens virtually instantaneously. This is why we cannot predict the location of the electron-particle: its orbital rotation is influenced by its EM polar precession, and this alters its orientation causing the electron-particle to "quantum tunnel" or to be act as though the charged particle occupied all spaces on its orbit simultaneously, forming the so-called "potential charge" of the electron's "probability cloud."

Thus, the electron can be "in two places at once" on its orbital energy shell. The reason for this is that the electron is moving so fast, it is actually warping time. It appears to be located everywhere within a field of predictability simultaneously. In other words, for the electron (unless acted upon by a photon) "time" does not exist. Time, from the frame of perspective of the electron, is constantly "standing still."

Now, to move forward (faster than light) or backward (opposite entropy) in time, all we have to do is to expand the electron's probability cloud. Expand it large enough, and we can walk right through it like walking through a door from one room (now) to another (anywhere at any time). This may seem impossible, but I tell you, it can even be accomplished using only the mind alone.

[quote="II"]

There was once a young prince on a journey home after studying in a far away land. He came to a cross-road that he did not recognise. It had been built while he was gone. The sign at the cross-road said: "Here is a road that is longer, and that leads through the urban district. Here is a road that is shorter, but that provides a more scenic view." Thinking thus that either road would take the same amount of time to get to the castle of his father the king at the centre of the kingdom, the prince was at a quandry. Should he go the more scenic way, and enjoy the countryside of his youth, now removed by memory? Or should he pass through the business fare, and see what has become new while he has been growing independently. The prince decided to take the road less traveled. He went into the countryside because he wanted to live deliberately. So, after deliberating over the sign, the Prince went into the country, where he immediately met his death by bandits, who had become poor by failed business and grown to hate the wealthy.

[quote="V"]

Two stone masons were building a house. One walled himself in and one walled himself out. The one who walled himself out, because he had built the wall with the other one, could not tear the wall down alone. So the mason went to seek help.

As he went out, he encountered a party of strangers. They told him they were desperately in search of their prince, who they explained had left their kingdom to study as a stone mason abroad. Upon seeing the mason, they rejoiced greatly, for they said he looked exactly like the prince. They explained to him, "your highness, the king is dead, long live the king," meaning, "come with us and you can rule our kingdom."

However the mason, being a good and honest person, told them he would not go along with this ruse. He insisted they come back and help him rescue his fellow mason from behind the wall. However they grew haughty, and explained, "if you will not do this thing for us, why should we do this thing for you?"

The mason searched high and low, but he could not find anyone else who was willing to help. Finally he returned to the party, who were gathered around the edifice the two masons had built. He begged them to help him. He finally agreed to return to the kingdom and to rule as the king, if only they would help him rescue his fellow mason from behind the wall.

Then the party accepted him and he rejoiced. However they still refused to help him tear down the wall. He demanded an explanation, and so they gave him one by saying this: "the prince of our kingdom came to your country to become a common mason. He knew his father would die before he would be able to return. He hated his father, and he hated his kingdom. He discovered news of his father's graven illness. So he sent us to contract with his master for an edifice to be built by two masons. One would work on it from inside, and one would work on it from outside. He agreed to be assigned to work on it from the inside. You see, goodly mason, we cannot help you tear down this edifice, because it was us who commissioned it to be built. It is the grave of the prince of our kingdom."

Then the Mason understood the meaning of "the king is dead, long live the king." Then he returned with them to rule his kingdom. He became a wise ruler, and grew very old in the service of God.

In early times the elders of one clan met. "Go north," they told one. "Go south," they told another. "Go east," was told a third. "Go west," the fourth was told. "Stay here," said the last. All went forth, were fruitful, and multiplied. They remembered the clan and met again and again, each time sending forth by the plan of the first meeting. Finally, the Northerners had filled the whole North, Southerners the whole South, Easterners and Westerners filled the East and West, and the eldest clan claimed the centre-lands, and all the world was bountiful, and all the land was full.

[quote="III"]

Twin Princes were crossing a bridge to return to the Castle of their father, the king, at the centre of the kingdom. They did not know the strength of the bridge, and they were travelling with a large caravan. They wanted to make sure what they carried with them would precede themselves safely across, and so, to test the bridge, they sent out two elephants. The two elephants made it safely across the bridge, and then back again. The princes then sent their cargo over the bridge, and it went safely. Then the two princes themselves went across the bridge, but as they were crossing the bridge broke apart and fell away beneath them.

The twin princes fell into the river below. One of them swam upstream until he came to the source, and the other one was carried downstream and over a waterfall. The caravan that accompanied them all followed the prince downstream, and found his body on the shore of the ocean dead. Soon, though, the second prince returned, riding on the two elephants from before. "Listen," he said, "for I have crossed the river of death. At the source, I saw my brother under the water, and now I have found him returned from beneath the waves ashore. As I know the river runs to the sea, so shall I raise my brother up. And he raised the body up and it rode the second elephant, and they all entered into the city of the castle of the king, the father of the two princes.

Hearing news of the return of his two sons, the king sent the queen to meet them. She met them halfway, and found one dead. She returned with them to the castle, and, seeing the queen's grief, the king saw that one of his sons had died. When he learned that this had happened crossing the border into his kingdom, the king rent his shirt. But the remaining prince said, "no, look. I bring good tidings." He then showed the king and the queen what the caravan carried with them, that had been so important the two princes were willing to risk their lives for it.

And the cargo was the wife of the dead prince, and their daughter, and the wife of the prince who had survived, and their son. "For I saw my brother beneath the waves," the prince explained. At this the king became full of understanding. Passing understanding on to the queen, the king became wise. And, growing old, the king died. And at the end of three generations the kingdom had known no war.

[quote="VI"]

In later times, the elders of the five tribes met again. They saw that the Northerners and the Southerners, the East and West, and the eldest clan filled up all the world. Now, they decided, it had been long enough where they all were. So the Northerners began to migrate South, and the Southerners North. Those who had travelled East travelled West, and those settled in the West resettled in the East. But the tribe in the centre remained to remember the plan laid down by the ancients, and bear witness to the success of their later modification of it. And all were fruitful and multiplied.

[quote="IV"]

There were two kings. One had very high expectations of his son, the prince. The other had no expectations of his daughter, the princess. When the prince and princess were married, the king, father of the princess celebrated greatly, but the king, father of the prince, lamented. The king, father of the princess, asked the king, father of the prince, why he lamented. The king, father of the prince, answered him, thus:

"Had your daughter, of whom you had no expectations, but been a son, then my son, of whom I expect the best, could have been tested in his manhood by battle, and surely would have excelled all the further in his victory over your incompetent indifference. Instead my son is half the man he could be, and the chance for him to fill the vacuum of your fatherly authority and kingly duty is utterly wasted. You ask me why I lament? It is at seeing you celebrate greatly. Today pays only to your ignorant indifference, and you celebrate that alone in addition to the nuptials of our kingdoms. To the same degree, I lament."

At the the king, father of the princess, lamented greatly, which raised the spirits of the king, father of the prince. To him, it meant he had won the whole kingdom in battle by himself, and proved his son, the prince, would grow up to be twice the king he was himself.

[/quote]

Here is an alternative "translation" :

There were two kings. One had very high expectations for his son, the prince. The other held nothing over the head of his daughter, the princess. When the prince and the princess eloped, the princess-king rejoiced much, but the prince-king lamented. The princess-king asked the prince-king why he lamented. The prince-king answered this way:

"Had your daughter, for whom you cared not, but been a son, then my son, for whom I put forth all, could have girded his loins in combat, and, moreover, would have easily ousted your unwise blindness. Instead my son is half the man he could be, and the chance for him to grow into the gap of your paternal archetype and regnal role is now permanently void. You ask me why I lament? It is due to seeing your rejoice so much. All that has been benefitted today is your foolish shortsightedness, and in that there is you alone, and then besides that there is our kingdoms' union. To that percent, I lament."

At that the princess-king hung his head and wept, which reversed the visage of the prince-king. To him, he had bested his rival at word-play, and therefore he proved to himself that his son would be greater even than he could have grown through war.

Now, the elders of the 12 tribes meet. They plan as their ancient ancestors planned. "Our tribe 1 blood is in land 6; tribe 2, 7; etc. Now the South and West have returned to the centre, and the North and the East are at the opposite centre. Now this is the third age. Let us travel across time as we have around the world. Thos who travel South, go East, those East, North; those who travelled North, West and those West, South." And thus began the Fourth Age.

There was a kingdom, and beside it another. The two kings of the two kingdoms were twin brothers. There was a woman who called them both to conference one day, and spoke to them about combining their kingdom. They both fell in love with the woman, and then they went to war with each other. They were at war for so many generations that eventually only a small faction from each nation remained, and the night before they met in battle, the two twin kings met with one another in a conference tent. The one king said to the other king: "you were doing my will all along, and you still are, now I command thee: die nobly." The following morning the demoralised king's troops met with their brethren in the ideal kingdom and lost their lives in bloodshed.

Remember, as [quote="benpadiah"]to reiterate, the purpose of Pesher is three-fold.

- 1) the practical: examination of the writing style for timeless applicability.
- 2) the literal: comparison of this writing style to others of its kind
- 3) the direct: exposition of the interpretation derived from doing this.

leading to

- 4) the dogmatic: the expression of the interpretation.[/quote]

so far we have played level 1 pesher (looking at only one text in itself), level 2 pesher (comparing several different texts). I am about to teach you how to play level 3 pesher. Following that I will demonstrate level 4.

level three pesher means to explain what the entire text, comprised in this case of only the prior six "pesher" passages I provided, means as a whole. To do this, you may have to shuffle up the pesherim (plural of pesher passages) until they begin to make sense. For our example, I have placed the preceding posts in chronological order below:

[quote="II"]

There was once a young prince on a journey...

[/quote]

[quote="V"]

Two stone masons were building a house.

[/quote]

[quote="VI"]
In early times the elders of one clan met.
[/quote]

[quote="III"]
Twin Princes were crossing a bridge...
[/quote]

[quote="VI"]
In later times, the elders of the five tribes met again.
[/quote]

[quote="IV"]
There were two kings.
[/quote]

[quote="VI"]
Now, the elders of the 12 tribes meet.[/quote]

[quote="I"]
There was a kingdom, and beside it another.
[/quote]

So we see, in chronological order, the pesher would occur in a different order than they were initially presented, in this case: V,III,IV,II,I with pesher VI interspersed throughout.

Level 4 pesher is the easiest, and the most fun, after the previous three levels. For level 4, all you have to do is draw a diagram explaining how the pesherim relate to one another. In other words, just draw a simple picture showing how you chose to organise your interpretations. For example, I had chosen chronological order, so I drew the following diagram to explain the preceding pesherim.

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/pesher.jpg>[/img]

Anyway, that completes the instructions on how to play Pesher. Pesher is the method I have used to create all my Gnostic diagrams, and it is also an informations-systems theory methodology for extrapolating flow charts from data sets. The Game Pesher is therefore now copyright 2006 the Illuminati-Order in the name of the Order that owns this internet site where I now post this.

I, Jon Gee, have created this game, and I hope you will all enjoy playing.

[quote="benpadijah"]you caught the "belief" clause so you're probably thinking of the "objective" stained glass reality as between you and the light of Higher (possibly inclusive of subjective, "personal" truth) Reality, outside or beyond your interiorised self-concept. You seem self-actualised about how vague such a stance is at defining one's own experience of reality.[/quote]

[quote="poptop"]This is lovely, but got me to thinking about whether (as usual) we are talking about the same thing.[/quote]

Okay, well this is simple, let me break it down for you.

[quote="benpadijah"]you caught the "belief" clause[/quote]

this refers to the original conversation we were having in the [url=http://forums.thelastfreecity.com/viewtopic.php?t=27324]Enough With God[/url] thread, where I'd posted a series of questions for you...

[quote="benpadijah"]allow me to ask you a series of questions, poptop.

series A will determine if you view truth as symbolic.

- 1) do you believe that truth is beauty and beauty truth?
- 2) do you believe that beauty is in the eye of the beholder?
- 3) do you believe the eye is the window to the soul?

series B will determine if you view yourself as iconoclastic.

- 4) do you believe truth is stranger than fiction?
- 5) do you believe something can be too good to be true?
- 6) do you believe the truth is greater than the sum of all facts?

series C will determine if you view truth as morally elastic.

- 7) do you believe the truth is an objective ideal or
- 8 ) do you believe the truth is a subjective reality?
- 9) do you believe the truth is "out there"?

series D will determine if you will "cast the first stone."

- 10) do you believe the truth is something that can be known?
- 11) do you believe the truth is something that can be understood?
- 12) do you think wisdom is knowing the difference between true and false?[/quote]

-source: <http://forums.thelastfreecity.com/viewtopic.php?p=519537#519537>

to which you initially responded,

[quote="poptop"]the good thing about beliefs is that they transcend truth for the believer...
beliefs as belief[/quote]

-source: <http://forums.thelastfreecity.com/viewtopic.php?p=519604#519604>

Hence, when you said,

[quote="benpadijah"] [quote="poptop"]Do I get a written assessment?[/quote]

-source: <http://forums.thelastfreecity.com/viewtopic.php?p=524995#524995>

then I said,

[quote="benpadijah"]oh and, as for a score, or a grade or whatever...[/quote] and started out,

[quote="benpadijah"]you caught the "belief" clause[/quote]

meaning that, when you said,

[quote="poptop"]beliefs as belief[/quote]

I understood that to mean,

[quote="benpadijah"]you caught the "belief" clause[/quote]

Understand now?

Ok, then, on to the next part of the sentence:

[quote="benpadijah"]the "objective" stained glass reality as between you and the light of Higher (possibly inclusive of subjective, "personal" truth) Reality, outside or beyond your interiorised self-concept.[/quote] this referred to my comment,

[quote="benpadijah"]

Symbolic Truth = stained glass visages, Plato's cave metaphor, etc. Iconoclasm means "symbol shattering," and hence "casting the first stone" means, to go up against objective reality. The question of the moral elasticity of true reality is a kramic one. If you "believe" what goes around comes around, you're less likely to throw that rock through that church window.[/quote] which in turn referred to this key explanation of the questions I'd asked you:

[quote="benpadijah"]series A will determine if you view truth as symbolic.
series B will determine if you view yourself as iconoclastic.
series C will determine if you view truth as morally elastic.
series D will determine if you will "cast the first stone."[/quote]

I hope that you understand well enough what I meant by these three explanations for the 4 groupings of the questions I'd asked you. I will return to this again in a moment. First, however, let me address the final part of my paragraph, which contains the part that you seem to have found cause to have specific issue with enough to create this thread.

[quote="benpadijah"]You seem self-actualised about how vague such a stance is at defining one's own experience of reality.[/quote]

Now, what I meant by [quote="benpadijah"]such a stance[/quote]

I was referring to your having said,

[quote="poptop"]the good thing about beliefs is that they transcend truth for the believer... beliefs as belief[/quote] which I then described as [quote="benpadijah"]vague ... at defining one's own experience of reality.[/quote] which I also hope you understand from my 3 explanations for the base-4 model basis for the 12 initial questions.

Now, we come to what was really the crux of your question, the topic of this thread,

[quote="poptop"]The self actualised person - what does it mean...[/quote]

Well, the answer begins with, as you pointed out Maslow. Maslow, for those who didn't know this, is the psychologist responsible for developing what has come to be known as "Maslow's Hierarchy of Needs."

[quote="wikipedia"]

Maslow's Hierarchy of Needs is a theory in psychology that Abraham Maslow proposed in his 1943 paper A Theory of Human Motivation, which he subsequently extended. His theory contends that as humans meet 'basic needs', they seek to satisfy successively 'higher needs' that occupy a set hierarchy. ... Maslow's hierarchy of needs is often depicted as a pyramid consisting of five levels:[/quote]

[img]http://www.pateo.com/images/maslowmaster4ts.gif[/img]

-article source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Maslow's\_hierarchy\_of\_needs

-image context: <http://www.pateo.com/article6.html>

As you can see, "self-actualisation" is the "peak" of the five levels of psychological need. So, at this point, poptop's question is extremely easy to answer. Let's turn in our wikipedia to the relevant passage, shall we, my little lambs?

[quote="poptop"]The self actualised person - what does it mean...[/quote]

[quote="wikipedia"]Self-actualization

Self-actualization (a term originated by Kurt Goldstein) is the instinctual need of humans to make the most of their unique abilities and to strive to be the best they can be. Maslow describes self-actualization as follows:

Self Actualization is the intrinsic growth of what is already in the organism, or more accurately, of what the organism is. (Psychological Review, 1949)

Maslow writes the following of self-actualizing people:

- They embrace the facts and realities of the world (including themselves) rather than denying or avoiding them.
- They are spontaneous in their ideas and actions.
- They are creative.
- They are interested in solving problems; this often includes the problems of others. Solving these problems is often a key focus in their lives.
- They feel a closeness to other people, and generally appreciate life.
- They have a system of morality that is fully internalized and independent of external authority.
- They judge others without prejudice, in a way that can be termed objective.[/quote]

So, in short, the answer to your question, poptop,

[quote="poptop"]The self actualised person - what does it mean...[/quote] is,

[quote="wikipedia"]Self-actualization is the need of humans to make the most of their unique abilities and to strive to be the best they can be.[/quote]

And, of course, this is all I meant by it in that context:

You Know Yourself.

While we're on the subject of psychological processes however, is anyone reading this at all familiar with the Self-Determinism models of Dr. Timothy Leary, a pop-psychologist from the 1960's?

Here are some images from his book by that name that I scanned in.

[img]<http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/Leary1.jpg>[/img]

This one looks to me like some kind of "moral compass" almost.

[quote="poptop"]Interesting belief system around economics there.[/quote]

basically, and don't worry, this will all come back around to the subject of rights, I guarantee it, I view myself as a Utopian (idealist) Marxist, which means that, in essence I'm a communist. Now, that doesn't preclude my agreeing with the subsequent mis-handling of Marx's Communism. Marx was addressing, at the time, the contemporary concept of Socialism, or trade-unionism. He was attempting to guide labour-unions toward utopian ideals. Of course, we all know the subsequent break-down of the Marxist movement following the death of Marx. Lenin was funded by the Rothschilds to overthrow the Czar of Russia, which he did turning the communist red army against the white royalists. Trotsky, the proper communist party head, Lenin then had exiled and assassinated. During the Rockefeller-funded attempted Nazi invasion of Rothschild-funded Soviet Russia, Stalin used the front-lines to massacre as many Jews as Hitler killed in the concentration camps. It should be obvious how far removed even by then the concept calling itself "communism" had gotten from its original socialist utopian ideals. For a while I believed, as had Marx a hundred years before, that capitalism and communism were anti-thetical, and that only by class conflict could these become a synthetic whole. However, now I understand that the Master Plan has always been to "phase out" capitalism into communism, like the "boiling lobster" metaphor, wherein a lobster is put into a cold pot of water that is the slowly brought to a boil. The lobster does not feel the increasing temperature. It is cooked alive painlessly. This is like the "incremental" imposition of the government over our "individual rights." This occurs so slowly, we do not even realise it, until we wake up one morning and realise we have already been living in a dictatorship for quite some time. I think the US has definately become more dictatorial (and moreso than it should, most definately) since the WTC tragedy of 9-11. I think we can see this as corporations become more fascistic, such as by "incrementally" raising gas prices, for instance. Now you can call me crazy if you like, but the way I see it, the only feasible way out of the current contrived "energy crisis" that was created to cause the current "peak-oil" wars to control the Middle-east is "free energy" which, I know for a fact, has been being experimented with by the US military for the past 55 years, dating all the way back to Project Paperclip. Now, if we have had "free energy" or "zero-point" energy (ZPE for short) for 60 years, why do we not have hover cars yet? The entire thing, as directed by Majestic-12, is entirely based on a plan to "phase-out" capitalism. We cannot "package" or "quantify" the ZPE type of "free" energy. Therefore, we have to completely change our "value" system. We have to "phase out" cash and replace it with credit cards. We phase out cards with online-transactions as we micro-miniaturise our computers into phones. All of this culminates in a fully cyberised society of cyborg-like individuals. Combining this with life-prolonging drugs, and you pretty much have my ideal utopia. Some people call this new ideal, "trans-humanism." However I prefer to call it by its original name: "Communism." Now most people think of "Communism" as either "Soviet Oppression" or as "people living in huts," and the trade unions of Marx's time have all become absorbed into the Mafia and organised crime. Why bother calling myself a "communist" when it would "make more sense" to call myself a "trans-humanist"? I prefer to keep my "trans-humanism" to myself, and besides, calling myself a communist pisses off the conservative capitalists, which I find amusing. If you can't get a laugh out of a pseudo-libertarian, free-trade advocating, 1984-venerating neo-con, at least get a laugh at them.

In any event, none of that "communism" or "trans-humanism" has anything, or rather, should have anything to do with the social compact between the people and their governments, since that is entirely an economic theory. As the concept of "individual rights" is a political concept, I see no reason to put intellectual stock into what economists have to say about it. The separation of the economy from the government is, IMHO, the next logical step following the separation of Church and State. As such, I tend to have very strong views on what the current conditions of our world's political systems should be as opposed to what they now are. I believe very strongly in the idea that the individual alone is capable of sacrificing their own rights. If you choose to do this with your mind to the government, or whether you choose to do this with your heart to your spouse, it can only be you yourself who can give up your own rights. If they put a gun to your head, dare them to pull the trigger. That is pretty much my philosophy. I believe that everyone has the right to the degree of personal freedom they are prepared to allow themselves to have. Personal freedom is, in nature, abundant beyond capacity for depletion. In a state of nature, you may do as you please. However, if you encounter another person who also has "individual rights," then ANYTHING you do will impose upon these of theirs, and EVERYTHING about their existence will impose upon these of yours. I mean this passively, that we "impose" simply by existing objectively to one another. We subjectify the other whenever we make our imposition intentional. This is abuse. Proper use of "individual rights" is to combine effort, and not to compete with one another. One should not attempt to outgrow the other, but the taller one should protect the smaller one. That's Nature. So, of course, the question obviously arises about "to what extent" do we allow a person to "get away with" violating the rights of someone else? Afterall, we ourselves determine to what extent we allow our own rights to be violated, this is the Natural Condition of the Sovereign Individual, as I'd mentioned it earlier. However, if we see someone violate someone else's rights, we want to be involved. And so we set ourselves above them both, and this too we say is not only our "right" but our "responsibility." We have to "look out" for one another. However doing so imposes on the "individual rights" of all, including yourself. Everyone is "incrementally" "imposing" on everyone else at that point. Most people would stop here and say, "that is how it works, that is reality, deal with it or die," however they forget this is entirely an artificial construct. They forget that a "right" (a freedom) is the exact opposite of a "responsibility" (a duty). In Nature there is all freedom, and no responsibility. By nature means the "sovereign individual" alone and all other things being equal. Now, in a state of nature, the individual has no "rights" nor need for any, and no "responsibilities" to anyone but themselves. However, the greater number of individuals you factor into a group, the more this relationship reverses. While "rights" lift up, "responsibilities" hold down, and it is the friction from this process of reversal that causes all sociopathic symptoms in otherwise brilliant individuals. Without "rights" there is no psychopathy (it is the norm). Without responsibilities, there is no psychopathy (it is antithetical). However, as one moves about on this spectrum between these extremes, one becomes gradually more and more sociopathic and anti-social. At this point, all sorts of anti-social perversions in thinking occur, and abnormalities become more common and creative as the prohibitive laws become more intricate and complex. In other words, what I am saying is that, outside of the social-compact, the behaviours it exists to prohibit do not even occur anywhere else in nature. Human law divides us from the animals. If we didn't maintain a law against a thing, it would not continue to cause harm. Murder cannot occur when one is in a state of Nature, a sovereign individual. Only when one is alone can this condition occur. That is why I say, isolate the sociopaths. The sociopaths project all their problems outward. They cause all the world's strife, however they can only do this so long as we let them. Isolate them, I say. Do not put them into the "System." Put each nationalist and fascist head of state alone in solitary confinement. Let them think about their crime against society, and let them meditate on their unknown fate. Tell them each day might be the last one they are permitted to remain alive, and then they will know how they have been making the whole rest of the civilised world feel for the past 100 years. If they break out into a fit of guilt, make them wait some more. Do this to each individual one of them, and make them feel like they are all alone in this situation except for their captors. Then one day, arbitrarily, release them. As for the rest of us, I think my friend Damien expressed best what has come to be my current philosophy. Make taking one hit of LSD mandatory for every global citizen as a coming of age rite. Of course, this philosophy is far too extreme for most people, even soft-line "legalise em all" advocates. I find it more useful for communication to simply describe my philosophy as "existentialist" ethics. Did you know that "existentialism" was strongly renounced by the church for a while there? That's because Sartre aligned the philosophical movement with socialist secular-humanism. But I digress.

A teacher, watching the proceedings, asked one of his students, "How can two boards be united without a wedding?"[/quote]

The Hammer may pertain to Nietzsche's parable from Also Sprach Zarathustra, part III, entitled "The Hammer Speaks," as quoted at the end of the Twilight of the Gods. This parable is spoken from the perspective of diamond to it's "brother" coal. Here we see the Hammer, or diamond, represents "hardness," while the coal, or nail, represents "softness." The diamond sutra says, at one point, "thus shall ye think of this fleeting world: a star at dawn, a bubble in a stream; a flash of lightning in a summer cloud, a flickering lamp, a phantom, and a dream." Personally I prefer the Heart Sutra, which reads, in part, "Gate Gate Paragate Parasama Gate Bodhi Svaha," meaning, "Gone, Gone Beyond, Everyone Gone Completely Beyond (or to the other shore), Awake, Aware!" (although they say of Svaha it is "untranslatable." ) Buddhists call this mantra, which concludes the Heart Sutra, the Great Bright Mantra, Supreme and Unsurpassable. So we see that, just as the nature of the diamond sutra is opposite the static and fixed nature of a diamond itself, so too is the Great Bright Mantra inverted from the context of the Heart Sutra. We see just as the hammer strikes the nail, or rather, the chisel, to bring change (and therefore sorrow) to the diamond, that is, to make it more perfect (as a Mason with their ashlar stone), so too does the heart sutra contain the Great Bright Mantra like coal containing a diamond. So what must be done to render the shattering of the shells and the liberation of the emanations? How do we "strike gold"?

The Master said, "tend to the splinter in your own eye before you look after the plank in your brother's." The Master, that is, Ho Tekton, the Master Carpenter, taught us that the "splinter" should read "ray" such as in a ray of sunshine, and that "plank" should be translated "beam," as in a beam of light. Thus, what we see in this parable is the blind leading the blind (again as in the Fool card of Tarot), with Gnostic era reference to the demi-urge Samael (which means, "king of the blind." ) We also hearken back to the parable of the child who removed the thorn from the lion's paw, and wonder that the child should be placed by God as the keeper of his "brother," in this case the lion of Judah, of Zion, and of Israel. Therefore, the parable is not addressed to the lion, but to the child. Thus, it instructs the physician to look to the Light in the eye of their patient as being of greater importance than the Light in their own eye. The gross meaning of this parable is taken to be: "check yourself before you wreck yourself." However, now let me tell you this pesher, this "hidden meaning" :

The two "boards" that obstruct (or the two "beams" that blind) the vision of the people are the East and the West. The nail and the hammer are clearly then relative to the Israel-Lebanon conflict in the Middle East, where east and west are presumed to be clashing in the form of Isaac and Ishmael (the two sons of Abraham) meeting much like the hammer and nail clashing together to crucify the hand of the Master, right at the very heart of the map, just as the calendar is divided at one BC and one AD. Of course, I have spoken elsewhere of my own theory of the past 2000 years occurring entirely as the hallucination of the Master at the time of His crucifixion. This relates as well to the Krishna-Hindu concept of Shiva, the Creator, coming at the end of this, the Kali Yuga, the final and worst of all the cosmic ages (or galactic rounds), the so-called Destroyer Era. According to the Hare Krishna, the entire cycle of birth, life and death of all things is merely an illusion, known as manvantara, the dream in the mind of the sleeping Krishna. When the Kali Yuga ends, Krishna will awaken.

This is from the about Us page on the IO web site:

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:21:26 PM)

To learn what we mean by the concept of individual rights, read "Man's Rights"; to learn what we mean by the proper role of government, read "The Nature Of Government." Both essays are by Ayn Rand and can be found in either The Virtue Of Selfishness (VOS) or Capitalism: The Unknown Ideal (CUI), though we strongly recommend VOS for its other valuable essays dealing specifically with rights. WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:22:13 PM)

We must emphasize, however, that the Illuminati Order is not an Objectivist organization, per se. Accepting Objectivism, the philosophy of Ayn Rand, is not a requirement of membership.

All who support individual rights--which include the rights to life, liberty, justly acquired property, and the pursuit of happiness--are encouraged to join us!

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:22:49 PM)

We are pro-liberty and outspoken advocates of individual rights. The term "libertarian" describes us very well.

benpadijah says: (10:23:15 PM)

mhm.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:24:03 PM)

So what you have learned has it made a tangible difference in your Life?

benpadijah says: (10:24:19 PM)

I don't know

benpadijah says: (10:24:25 PM)

never thought of it that way

benpadijah says: (10:24:26 PM)

hmm.

benpadijah says: (10:24:31 PM)

define tangible.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:24:49 PM)

Objective Reality

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:25:59 PM)

What you have learned has made some "objective" improvement in your life in some area and you are better now than before you learned anything from the IO....Tangible...Something you can measure

benpadijah says: (10:26:29 PM)
oh, it's about improvement

benpadijah says: (10:26:34 PM)
a measure of improvement

benpadijah says: (10:26:39 PM)
well then I would say so.

benpadijah says: (10:26:42 PM)
yes.

benpadijah says: (10:26:51 PM)
I've grown quite a lot in the IO.

benpadijah says: (10:26:53 PM)
why?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:28:05 PM)
I'm just curious...Because a lot of the D-boards participate in nothing more than intellectual masturbation with no real purpose or goal for any tangible improvement in any area

benpadijah says: (10:28:36 PM)
interesting.

benpadijah says: (10:28:43 PM)
define masturbation.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:28:55 PM)
lol

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:29:18 PM)
stroking oneself to make oneself feel good

benpadijah says: (10:29:24 PM)
ah I see.

benpadijah says: (10:29:35 PM)
so you mean the discussions have no actual meat to them

benpadijah says: (10:29:40 PM)
they are all commentary.

benpadijah says: (10:29:43 PM)
nothing original.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:30:11 PM)
Not necessarily at the IO board

benpadijah says: (10:30:44 PM)
what's a D-board then?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:30:56 PM)

Just that some Philosophical D-boards talk about stuff just to stroke themselves with no real purpose behind it

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:31:38 PM)

A d-board can be anything that it defines itself to be

benpadijah says: (10:31:52 PM)

so like a temporary autonomous zone?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:32:05 PM)

huh?

benpadijah says: (10:32:32 PM)

okay, so you're saying the IO is or is not like other d-boards.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:32:54 PM)

I'm saying I'm Not sure at thi point

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:33:25 PM)

This is whay I am asking you if you have learned stuff that has mad tangible improvements to your life...

benpadijah says: (10:33:36 PM)

I suppose I have

benpadijah says: (10:33:47 PM)

next question.

benpadijah says: (10:33:50 PM)

lol

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:34:51 PM)

Is there Lodge meetings or masonic Like rituals that you have gone through in the IO?

benpadijah says: (10:34:57 PM)

no.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:35:06 PM)

thats good

benpadijah says: (10:35:10 PM)

how so?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:35:37 PM)

I am not particularly interested in -PseudoMasonic rituals and what not...

benpadijah says: (10:36:13 PM)

ok.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:36:26 PM)

I am interested sharign and learning knowledge, and adding value when I can

benpadijah says: (10:36:57 PM)

are you skeptical of the objectivist objectives stated on the frontpage?

benpadijah says: (10:37:15 PM)
but you want to learn more...

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:39:32 PM)
No....I am just skeptical if there are any people at the IO d-board that align themselves with those Objectivist objectives, since there seems to be a lot of Non objectivist beliefs shared..

benpadijah says: (10:39:44 PM)
define belief.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:40:57 PM)
Not that that within itself is a bad thing but I guess I just get a little confused when I come to a place that is supposed to be Objectivist based and it seems sort of far from it...

benpadijah says: (10:41:20 PM)
compared to you, you mean.

benpadijah says: (10:41:35 PM)
?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:42:04 PM)
It's kind of like thinking you are going to a Strip club to see silicone boobies but once you get in it is A Male Gay bar...

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:42:16 PM)
This is my attempt to being humorous

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:42:34 PM)
No compared to what Objectivism is

benpadijah says: (10:42:44 PM)
according to you.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:42:49 PM)
Have you read much Objectivism?

benpadijah says: (10:42:50 PM)
?

benpadijah says: (10:42:52 PM)
no.

benpadijah says: (10:43:03 PM)
does it require that I do?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:43:24 PM)
No, but you may get a better understanding

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:43:59 PM)
I suggest reading Objectivism: the philosophy of Ayn Rand written by Leonard Piekoff

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:44:55 PM)
Belief: Something you hold to be true based on the methods one uses to prove to oneself what is true and what is false

benpadijah says: (10:45:19 PM)
that's a pretty thorough definition.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:45:37 PM)
I tend to be Verbose

benpadijah says: (10:45:42 PM)
what do you mean by saying the IO's "beliefs" appear different than our "objectives."

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:45:57 PM)
Did I say that?

benpadijah says: (10:46:17 PM)
I am just skeptical if there are any people at the IO d-board that align themselves with those Objectivist objectives, since there seems to be a lot of Non objectivist beliefs shared..

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:47:34 PM)
Well Yes.....I know that if I believe in Objectivism I got to places that say they are objectivist based for the purpose to learn more about the application of Objectivism....

benpadijah says: (10:48:18 PM)
brb

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:48:32 PM)
It just seems there are those at the IO d-Board that don't even know that anything named Objectivism even exists never mind believe in any of the principles...

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:49:15 PM)
I know it is not a requirement....But I figured there would be some Like mindedness

benpadijah says: (10:49:37 PM)
do you smoke?

benpadijah says: (10:49:43 PM)
I have to go outside to smoke

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:49:45 PM)
NO

benpadijah says: (10:49:55 PM)
I'm going to have to go out and smoke now

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:49:58 PM)
Go Ahead

benpadijah says: (10:50:01 PM)
so I'll brb, K?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:50:11 PM)
yep

benpadijah says: (10:50:17 PM)

alright then

benpadijah says: (10:50:28 PM)
will you still be here when I get back?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:50:33 PM)
yep

benpadijah says: (10:50:42 PM)
it may be as long as ten minutes.

benpadijah says: (10:50:56 PM)
I smoke American Spirit menthols, and they last a long time.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:50:56 PM)
thats ok

benpadijah says: (10:51:00 PM)
so be prepared.

benpadijah says: (10:51:06 PM)
if I'm gone, I mean

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:51:07 PM)
lol

benpadijah says: (10:51:12 PM)
for ten minutes or thereabouts.

benpadijah says: (10:51:15 PM)
brb

WisdomGroupMedia says: (10:51:28 PM)
Now if I had a Joint I'd be smoking

benpadijah says: (10:59:35 PM)
back now

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:00:16 PM)
yep

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:01:52 PM)
Hve you ever met another IO member in person?

benpadijah says: (11:02:03 PM)
no.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:03:16 PM)
What tangible improvement in your life has being part of the IO give you

benpadijah says: (11:03:42 PM)
I don't know man

benpadijah says: (11:03:49 PM)

haven't I already said

benpadijah says: (11:04:03 PM)
?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:04:31 PM)
No You just said that there has been improvement...I'm asking what the improvemnet was?

benpadijah says: (11:05:04 PM)
oh right, because I had to ask what teangible meant

benpadijah says: (11:05:07 PM)
I dunno,

benpadijah says: (11:05:12 PM)
I guess you could say

benpadijah says: (11:05:23 PM)
it's allowed me to question my beliefs.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:05:41 PM)
Ahhh

benpadijah says: (11:05:54 PM)
next question...?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:06:02 PM)
LOL

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:06:26 PM)
Are you gonna be at the next Bildebergers meeting?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:06:34 PM)
LOL...Kidding

benpadijah says: (11:06:43 PM)
I expect you are...?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:06:54 PM)
Naaaa

benpadijah says: (11:06:59 PM)
mhm

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:07:13 PM)
A bunch of talking heads detached from reality annoy me

benpadijah says: (11:07:21 PM)
I see.

benpadijah says: (11:07:33 PM)
so what brings you to the IOBB?

benpadijah says: (11:07:40 PM)

the IO d-boards I mean.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:07:48 PM)
Mostly Curiosity

benpadijah says: (11:08:15 PM)
about?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:09:25 PM)
If there is any truth to the mystique and intrigue that has surrounded the IO and if there is some Objective Value that can be learned from the IO....

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:10:09 PM)
Mostly I like the intellectual stimulation and the interesting debate

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:10:25 PM)
When I find places similar to the IOBB

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:10:59 PM)
I was a part of Solomon Tulbures rendition of the IO some years back and participated on his boards as well

benpadijah says: (11:11:06 PM)
oh.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:12:01 PM)
I was dissapointed with Sols rendition because He portrayed hislef as a "Strict" Objectivist yet his beliefs were rife with Mysticism as opposed to his beliefs being Objectivist.

benpadijah says: (11:13:33 PM)
I've never read anything by him.

Solomon, He wrote a few books...The only one I read was the IO manifesto that he wrote....It had lots of spelling and gramatical errors

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:17:49 PM)
And a lot of what was written was plagerized from a variety of sources

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:18:22 PM)
I made a post about him and his IO on the boards

benpadijah says: (11:18:28 PM)
yes yes.

benpadijah says: (11:18:43 PM)
and so>

benpadijah says: (11:18:44 PM)

benpadijah says: (11:19:01 PM)
oh I'm sorry

benpadijah says: (11:19:10 PM)
you were saying you'd enjoyed his forum

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:19:16 PM)
Uhh I for got my Point

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:19:29 PM)
At first I did

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:19:41 PM)
Then it just got too Kooky

benpadijah says: (11:19:43 PM)
too much mysticism, not enough Objectivism or you?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:20:00 PM)
Pretty much

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:20:39 PM)
There wer some things that were just Kooky by anyones standards

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:21:23 PM)
Like how feeding a human baby a diet made up of 50% human sperm upt to age 3 would ensure a genius and perfect health

benpadijah says: (11:22:01 PM)
that's the only thing I've heard about ST

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:22:29 PM)
probably because it was one of the more Kooky things

benpadijah says: (11:22:41 PM)
however it started out good?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:22:48 PM)
Yes

benpadijah says: (11:22:53 PM)
perhaps he had syphilis. Like Nietzsche?

Went Mad?

benpadiah says: (11:23:16 PM)
no?

benpadiah says: (11:23:20 PM)
just a plaigerist, eh?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:23:48 PM)
No from what I understand he had struggled from depression and BiPolar for many years

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:24:07 PM)
It just seemed to get the best of him and this was truly tragic

benpadiah says: (11:24:15 PM)
oh well.

benpadiah says: (11:24:19 PM)
as I say

benpadiah says: (11:24:24 PM)
I've never read him.

benpadiah says: (11:24:45 PM)
so, basically, you're asking me

benpadiah says: (11:24:51 PM)
if the IO is going the same way?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:25:14 PM)
No but that is a good question

benpadiah says: (11:25:22 PM)
down the road of Intellectual Masturbation and away from Objectivist Beliefs?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:25:57 PM)
Objectivists can participate in intellectual masturbation as well benpadiah says: (11:26:03 PM)

no shit.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:26:14 PM)
Yes shit

benpadiah says: (11:26:25 PM)
lol

benpadiah says: (11:26:37 PM)
so are you here for intellectual masturbation?

benpadiah says: (11:26:45 PM)

or to save us from mysticism?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:27:01 PM)

I hope not...But sometimes I can fall into the trap of it without knowing it right away

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:28:23 PM)

I'm here to learn but there are some things I can not accept on blind faith without some objective proof that what is asserted is in fact true...Like Magik, and other such stuff

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:28:47 PM)

Which would not be blind faith...

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:29:49 PM)

what about monoatomic gold

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:30:32 PM)

Was that something that had any Objective proof to do what it claimed to do?

benpadijah says: (11:30:41 PM)

yes.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:30:51 PM)

Really...Cool

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:31:04 PM)

Did it give you any benefit?

I haven't had any.

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:31:54 PM)

how about activating the pineal gland

benpadijah says: (11:32:09 PM)

what's the question?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:32:50 PM)

is ther anything that activates it or recharges it for physical benefits?

benpadijah says: (11:33:46 PM)

recharges it?

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:34:00 PM)

Bad use of words

WisdomGroupMedia says: (11:34:09 PM)

[quote="benpadiiah"]Well, as long as we are airing MY dirty laundry, the post that sara is referring to is one from the public chat forum on my own site, titled "death to benpadiiah," where I'd posted:

[quote="benpadiiah"]last night I tried to kill myself. I prayed as hard as I could to God to let me die. Where there was a river, God put a boat. I choked myself nearly unconscious with a seatbelt, hoping to pass out and die from lack of oxygen.

I did this because I am weary of this condition of existence. I long for the unconditional love of the Creator, to be delivered from the worldly pain of the adversary.

I realise now, it doesn't matter if I die from ingesting monoatomic gold, as I would like, or if I die in an ignoble experiment.

My life has become charity, gone through for the benefit solely of others.

-source: [url=<http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=502>] "death to benpadiah" [/url]

Now, I should mention here, that most of what I write is fiction. For example, when I am writing about the astral or psychic confrontation between Busta Rhymes, on behalf of the Great Burner, and Laura Bush, on behalf of the neo-Sethians, for dominance in the Order of Death, this is obviously fiction, even though I am using the names of "real" people, places, things, etc. The point in my doing this is to stretch people's definitions of "fiction," and to encourage people to sort out what is "real" from what is the product of the "imagination," and so to encourage them to think for themselves, instead of just accepting everything at face value. This technique is common among authors. It is called "literary liscence."

Now, my blog is something I use more as a topical testing ground. I have placed a counter on the front page, which I can use to determine what blogs garner the most visitors, etc. I can then decide what topics, what writing styles, etc. will meet with the most popular approval. I then ammend my own thinking to concentrate more on what would make those thoughts that I wish to convey possible to do so using the given topics and styles, etc. So, when I write about the Great Burner in one paragraph, and something personal about my own life in another, be assured the order and wording of these paragraphs is very intentionally chosen by yours truly to reflect all this research. That's just how I use the web. That's... how I roll.

Ok, so, all that being said, the point being to sort out the "fiction" from the "fact," I'm not saying that my having attempted suicide is not a fact. In fact, I have never attempted suicide for its own sake before in my entire life. In fact, I have not had any suicidal thoughts lately at all, and am, in fact, feeling very good, and have been for at least six months. So, why, then, did I suddenly attempt suicide? I think that, as one enters the trance of samadhi, from that of samasamadhi, that is, when one enters the condition of daily existence that one is constantly in an "altered" state of consciousness, ie. nirvana, one must confront their inner self, their repressed memories, in the state of utmost calm and tranquility. In other words, when you're most high, you deal with your own lowest lows. With great power comes great responsibility. So, because I have felt so "on top of the world," I decided now would be a good time to cope with some of what I feel like when I feel like I am Atlas.

I have found that, one cannot have lived life without having confronted their own death. I used to risk my life quite often doing foolish and childish things when I was a young man in my teens and early twenties. However I never consciously chose to attempt ending it all. I often threatened this, which means I used to be afraid of it myself, and think others should be too. However now I had no fear of it, and welcomed it, and embraced it fully in a state of samadhic sobriety. So, in order to change my life for the better, in order to begin a new state, a condition of constant bliss, I have to let go of that part of my life that holds me back, the old state, the condition of constant suffering. So, that is why I attempted suicide. It was as a celebration of my existence, which is so much more than only my "life."

Now, I posted that I'd done this a day or two after I'd done it on my public chat forum. No one replied, so I added a poll and wrote a front page blog about it. Unfortunately, guests cannot vote in the poll, but they can post in the public forum, to reply directly to the original post. I did all this as a form of "market research" about the "benpadiah" personality. That is, the basis for my online name, the fallen Christ of the Last Temptation, the crucified gnostic, the unknown Holy ghost in the church's deus ex machina. After all, it is my former "Christ Complex" that has driven me into the position of the "benpadiah" personality, and so I am basically interested in finding out what people would think if I acted less on that and acted more like a self-actualised individual sentient entity, like a self-responsible adult citizen and a man, than I have been able to. Of course, my illness that has caused my "Christ complex" also prevents me from addressing this issue directly in public, hence the "death to benpadiah" pretext, rather than a more direct,

"death to Jon Gee."

By now you're probably wondering what the point is in all of this anyway. It's pretty simple. The other day I tried to die. Now, why we are discussing that HERE, on the IO forum, I have no fucking clue. Honestly, anyone who wished to know about this would have read my blog anyway, or else I would have talked to them about it in person. There is really no need for the free advertisement, sara. In other words, you've got an account on my forum, or you could have posted your above sentiments there as a guest even. I have no idea why you would bother making this post here.

Wishing me happy birthday, when I first joined, because I mentioned it was my birthday that day, on a public forum, is appropriate. Blowing me a kiss because I have recently attempted suicide?

[quote="sara"][/quote]

Priceless.

[quote="nathan_bane"] if he had felt that america's foreign policy was too intrusive or unbalanced and changed it back in '96 then perhaps he might have had some effect on the motives. It's doubtful he would have been able to do it in 2000, I think their plans to blow up the WTC were already well underway by then.[/quote]

That's an interesting point of view, bane. I hadn't thought of it that way. Thanks for the comment. Let me concoct a rebuttal. Let's say that what we're looking at in America, and now apparently in many other developed nations as well, is indeed an endemic problem of the political system as WideBoy has pointed out. It's a simple power causes corruption issue, and it's been part of the practise of politics all along. I think we would likely all agree on that. But I see it as like cancer, that is, rather than like a birth defect. It is something that eats away from within, but it is not an inherent force in itself. It is like a virus infecting the more noble political ideologies. So, we can look at this disease on a case by case basis. When did this situation begin in American politics? I think the first generation of American politicians was quite noble. Some would say, this is true, but once central banking began, so did the downfall of the US political system. Well, if you look at the history of central banking in the US, it's been on and off. The last time the central banking issue took precedent in our government was following the stock market crash of 1907. I'm not saying that central banking has historically been behind all political ideologies downfall, but some say this was the case in the US. Central banking is supposedly behind the "military-industrial complex" described by President Eisenhower in his fairwell address before the swearing-in of JFK. Of course, conspiracy theories about JFK's assassination usually involve the intelligence community as well. By now, for me, reading the "Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion" (a work on How to Take Over the World written in the late 1800's), and I am thinking for some reason about those old tabloid photos of presidents shaking hands with grey aliens. I guess what I'm saying is that I don't think Nader was given any real chance by the "powers that be" to win the 2000 election. I think the 2000 election was not staged. Either candidate who won (Gore or Bush) would have been a corporate puppet, and neither would have handled the situation differently from how it has been handled thus far. (I think if Kerry had won in 2004 we would be out of Iraq by now, but whatever.) That is why I asked about Nader, not because I think he would have handled 9-11 differently. I don't think that 9-11 would have happened at all had Nader been elected. If Nader had been elected the big story on 9-11-2001 would have been the Enron scandal exposing the financial ties between both Gore and Bush with corporate interests with offshore accounts. If Nader had been elected, and A) 9-11 was to be perpetrated by Al Quaida to start Jihad, or B) 9-11 was to be perpetrated at the behest of the neo-con party in developed nations as a bid for power, neither way would 9-11 have happened if Nader had been elected. But that's just my opinion. I could be wrong.

[quote="WideBoy"]It's hard to see that Nader being elected would have made any difference.[/quote]

As I say, Nader was a bigger "corporate crime fighter" than Crackers the Corporate Crime Fighting Chicken from Michael Moore's TV show "TV Nation." Nader worked with the federal dept. of commerce, overseeing local and state "better business" bureaus, protecting the rights of consumers of private industry goods and services. Nader would have gone to town on Enron. He would have been like Elliot Ness as president. It was Nader who went up against the automobile companies in the 60's and successfully sued them for, get this, invasion of privacy. Thanks to Nader, we now have motorist seat-belt laws in most states. You wear your seatbelt, don't you WideBoy? In any event, Nader would have changed the face of this country drastically. I have absolute certainty, zero doubt at all, that had Nader been elected the Draconian anti-privacy and surveillance laws inflicted on us here following the (now expired??) PATRIOT Act would NOT HAVE OCCURED. The opposite would be more likely to have been the case. Instead it is likely, as Nader voice-overed in an appearance in 1999 on Saturday Night Live (a popular late night network tv show), that he would have endorsed marijuana and made smoking of it legal (the exact quote was "We aren't called the Green Party for Nothing" ). Everyone would have lightened up a bit, that's for sure. Instead, we have wire-tapping at home and the premise of "constant conflict" in the "endless war on terror" abroad.

I think you should remember something about us Americans. Most of us would have voted for Nader. If we hadn't been too busy smoking marijuana that day. Just remember this the next time you hear anyone say, "the Americans" are doing such and such, or "we" or "them" about any nations. The populations of nations are comprised of millions of people, and each one of them is a different individual. It really irks me that there is this undeniable tainted stain that has permeated the government of my country, however I am happy to have found all of your minds on the internet who remind me that not all minds think the way our current American administration does. Remember, many of you are living in countries where this creeping despotism has not reached the same levels as here in the States. You who live in other, freer countries do not have legislation such as the PATRIOT Act. Right now, the US is Germany in the mid-1930's. Many of us are being bribed by priveledge, and are agreeing to turn a blind eye to what is going on in the world around us. Just like Germany. Some of us who should be raising our voices against it the loudest are deadly silent (and this includes most of Hollywood's celebrities) and those of us who are voicing our opinions for us publically (in the media) are doing so almost to our detriment (like Mel Gibson when he's drunk on tequilla, or me now). Anyway, I'll wrap this up but I do think it's great to still be able to say these things to an audience some of whom actually agree, let alone to be able to say these things at all.

The neo-Sethians have been studying the wrong sciences.

They have clearly studied much about the science of world conquest. They may even have some plans on leaving a sustainable legacy of world domination. If we believe such sources as The Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion, then we have already commenced into what translator Richard Marsden paraphrases as the despotic "Masonic Super-Government." The Protocols were released to the public in 1903, however there is some speculation that they may have been written by Okhranka, the tsar's secret police in Russia. Calling the writing a hoax is having 20/20 hindsight, and being blind to the fact of its influence on its readers since its release. The philosophy expressed in it, regardless of whether it finds sources in Dostoyevsky's Grand Inquisitor and Machiavelli's the Prince, or whether it is merely borrowed entirely in origin from Joly's Dialogues in Hell. The points it lays out for world conquest and dominion are likely what inspired Hitler's anti-Semitism by appealing to his sense of mysticism. In his mind, the Jewish plot to control the world had to be stopped by being brought about and concluded entirely through his own actions. Sound familiar? I, personally, know lots of people who would love to become global dictator under moral premises. Hitler certainly differentiated between the "higher" and "nobler" aspects of Nordic mythology and the "sullied" and "ruined" mysteries of ha QBLH. Who knows? Perhaps tyranny is inherent in the magickal formulae. It certainly doesn't seem to be anything inherent to political idealism, which describes individual freedom in exclusively the highest terms.

1912 edition of Nilus's book The Great in the Small included the Protocols. The signs among occult symbols read: "Thus we shall win," "Mark of antichrist," "Tetragrammaton," "INRI," "Tarot," "Great mystery," etc.

-image context:

It should be obvious that, whether the terms of magick and the terms of political idealism are compatible or not, the notion of despotism exists in both, to some degree, and is encouraged in the individual. This, in itself, may be the real ideal: that each individual acts as despot over their own reality. Some of us manage to expand our thrones over many others in the false authority of office. Others of us expand our crowns over many others in the true authority of extra sensory perception.

You can call us whatever you want: the "Jews," even the "Juwes" within the "Jews," you can call us "the invaders" or even "Martians." You can call us "extra-dimensional shape-shifting reptilian spiritual vampires" and you can say we are feeding off the "blue" (Rhesus monkey gene negative) bloodlines, positioning their bodies into offices of false authority over the rest of you. Still you have allowed us to do this for so long it is now recorded as the oldest event in history. The destruction of our last utopian convenience-store global empire by the flood is marked by most of you all as the "beginning of history" and you do not think about the world outside of this time frame.

However we who know the past use it right to properly predict the future. We who know the future use our knowledge of it to control those of you who do not. We confuse you, and tell you the future may be anything other than what we alone know will come to pass. You who dwell in the darkness of the confusion we have given you see our clarity of vision as a rarity and therefore succumb to our rule. You see yourself humbled by a simple gesture of any additional intellectual implications, and humiliated simply by one word with double meanings. If I am wrong then explain the meaning of the word FNORD to me, in your own words, please.

Instead of succeeding at being a satisfactory modern Messiah, I have only played the parts in my own life that all the other characters in the New Testament era Gospels played relative to the person of Jesus Christ. I have manifested only mirrors of my current incarnation, and fallen short in all attempts at intentional projection of achieving any form of timeless success. So the hell with it. I guess I'll go crazy and write fiction now.

I'm not saying, "I am God or I am Nothing." A friend of mine once described that as being the philosophy of a friend of her's. That's the opposite of what I'm saying. No, I am saying that, if that had ever been true of me before, may it no longer be so now. I am saying, though I once had thought, "someone has to be the Messiah, and it may as well be me," I shall now renounce it. This is not the Messianic time for anyone other than those whose calendars describe only the solar zodiac. For the rest of us it should be a time of intense scientific reasoning on universal causes, such as the solar zodiac affecting the sunspot cycle. The closest alot of us get to understanding any of the scientific stuff though is to complain about "global warming" because it seems hotter to us each year (despite this not being homogenously the case, unlike the increase of gas prices per year!). That's one of the reasons I talk about the "Great Burner" as associated with the end-date of the Mayan calendar and the Aztec Fifth Sun. These are simple terms that have direct connotations and can be easily understood. Call me crazy, but the "scientific stuff" seems to be more important to research, ultimately, than the historical materials of 2000 years ago.

did you really believe all your karmic crimes would wash off your aura, and your spirit be freed from it's lesser soul, to release you from the debt of reincarnation, for no better reason than that you've received the wine and wafer of communion?

I have become a Master in the Illuminati Order.

My interaction with this Order has largely been of a cerebral nature, and the "material benefits" I have gained from my time here are entirely inspirational and intellectual in nature. There have been many events surrounding the Order during the time of my involvement with it that do not qualify as such inspiration or "benefits," including the apparent dissent between the European Order of the Illuminati and the American Illuminati Order. Most of the intellectual inspiration I have received from this Order is best expressed in my own contributions to it. As I say, "this Order is what we make of it."

In my time here I have not found any evidence that any of the souls I've encountered affiliated with either the American IO nor the European OI has any direct connection nor affiliation with the conspiracy that many authors associate with the Order named after Adam Weishaupt's Perfectabilists, the alledged "Illuminati conspiracy." I'd like to go on record as saying that, to the very best of my knowledge, both the American IO and the European OI are innocent now of any charges of direct connection or affiliation with any of the strategically key players in world affairs who would be capable of implementing such a conspiracy.

In short, the conspiracy does not involve the Illuminati.

Now, the Illuminati has definate ties to Free and Accepted Masonry, as many IO and OI members are also Free Masons. This does not mean in itself that either the IO or the OI are accepted as Masonic initatory bodies, known as "co-Masonry." In other words, no rank in one guarantees any rank in the other. I, for example, as a "Master" in the IO but uninitated into Free Masonry, do not automatically qualify for any rank or status in its lodges. Nor does any Free Mason automatically qualify for any rank or special status in the IO that are not earned by initiation through our system.

In short, Free Masonry is not directly affiliated with the Illuminati Order.

Now, all these qualifications for what I am about to say having been laid out, there most definately is a conspiracy among the economic elites of earth. This conspiracy, while mainly one of aligned business interests that, themselves, advocate laissez-faire capitalism, is best expressed, in its own terms, by its philosophers. HG Wells, for example, wrote openly about the conspiracy, while Ayn Rand, for example, did not. Wells reveals the motive attitudes and the plans for the future of the conspiracy itself, while Rand provides a "philosophical" cover-story to recruit any ambitious potential opposition players into the fascist agenda du jour. One is esoteric while the other is exoteric. Fairly simple.

In short, one can discover the nature of the conspiracy by reading the literature published by the known conspirators themselves.

For example, if one wishes to accuse the Council on Foreign Relations, a globalist political NGO, of being part of a conspiracy, as many "theory" authors do, it would be best to read its quarterly publication "the Journal on Foreign Affairs," which few "theory" authors do. That is why they are authors of conspiracy "theory" as opposed to more scholarly authors such as Noam Chomsky, who talks quite openly about the conspiracy.

Therefore, we must begin from a basis of knowing the players. If your "theory" involves the CFR, then read its own published literature. If your "theory" involves the Free Masons, then read their own published literature. If your "theory" involves the Illuminati Order, then read our own published literature. I am not saying this needs to preclude any of these groups' exclusion from your "theory" of the global conspiracy, however knowing what these groups believe may strengthen your conviction in their direct participation or affiliation with the conspiracy.

Now, here is what I know about the philosophy of the real key players in the global conspiracy:

the conspiracy operates on two fronts:

1) Time Travel. This branch deals with the ultimate goals of the key players, the reasons for their motives and their plans for the future. In short, time travel is the goal of the conspiracy, and managing control over it is the final agenda for the future.

2) Mind-Control. Just as time-travel deals with a future goal of the conspiracy, so is the branch over mind-control operations responsible for managing maintenance and security of the present status quo. Control of the minds of every individual en masse is the current state of affairs of the conspiracy.

I will return to addressing time travel in a moment, however first let me discuss some issues regarding mind-control. Privately funded, state-run mind-control operations, such as the US CIA's Project MKULTRA, are confessed facts on US Congressional record. Although the endorsement by supposedly Democratic government of the testing of drugs and technologies on its citizens without their knowledge or consent and for the purpose of mind-control, is a commonly known and accepted method for enforcement by the current powers-that-be, those who are in charge now have long used simple philosophical propaganda, disinformation in the news media, espionage techniques, and outright military coercion in the same manner as their own parents perscribed, and in the very same manner as those in power have done throughout history.

We should not, however, confuse those in power now with their parents nor our ancient ancestors, though they have all employed the same secret philosophies and overt strategies. For example, we cannot call the current neo-conservative party in power in the US at present a dictatorship by Free Masons, despite obvious similarities in goals and intent. These two groups are autonomous, and so are, for us now, the present rulership and those from the past.

The difference is that, at this point in history, regardless of whether this has occurred before or never before, or if those in charge now employ the same tactics as those in charge then, there is the opportunity for a very small elite to literally dictate the thoughts of the great masses. They can now accomplish this using any variety of technological means, whereas before such means and methods could only be dreamt of psychically.

Now, this brings me to my second point, that about Time Travel. The technologies of global mass telecommunication upon which global civilisation has become even more dependent than on international oil, for there is not one civilised person that makes use of any form of telecommunications that does not deep down accept the agenda of a global government, are the same as those used for time travel. The global satellites now, the geolythic shrines of the ancients, and the worm-holes through spacetime of future aliens are all one and the same.

There is ample evidence on record of the blending of these past, present and future technologies throughout both elder and more recent history. For example, inventor of wireless transmission of radiowave signals Nikola Tesla reported making contact with "offworld sources." This is only one single example from throughout all time, however the evidence of the ability to control esoteric forces as easily as using the masses to build an empire is omnipresent throughout both the public and the arcane records of human history.

I'm introducing this thread here, in the 0=0 IOBB, because I'd be interested in hearing non-members views on these goals of the conspiracy. In future discussions on the higher level boards here I will also be discussing more of my own views on these subjects. Please feel free to post your comments.

The Nag Hammadi Library, a collection of thirteen ancient codices containing over fifty texts, was discovered in upper Egypt in 1945.

Among the scrolls discovered were certain

[quote]writings of creative and redemptive mythology, including Gnostic alternative versions of creation and salvation [including] The Apocryphon of John; The Hypostasis of the Archons; On the Origin of the World; The Apocalypse of Adam; The Paraphrase of Shem.[/quote]

-source: <http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/nhl.html>

these works are largely in agreement with one another in both terminology and relationships of proper terms, such as names of esoteric or mystical concepts, such as the Hebrew monotheistic God. The following excerpts are from [url=<http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/apocjn.html>]The Apocryphon of John[/url], but supplement the material in [url=<http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/hypostas.html>]The Hypostasis of the Archons[/url] and [url=<http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/cgp.html>]The Concept of Our Great Power[/url]. They describe the Archons (the Fallen Ones or the so-called "Children of Darkness," also called the Annunaki, meaning the Watchers). First twelve Archons are described, and then their seven powers.

[quote="The Apocryphon of John"]"... she called his name Yaltabaoth. This is the first archon .... And he ... begot authorities for himself. The name of the first one is Athoth, whom the generations call the reaper. The second one is Harmas, who is the eye of envy. The third one is Kalila-Oumbri. The fourth one is Yabel. The fifth one is Adonaiou, who is called Sabaoth. The sixth one is Cain, whom the generations of men call the sun. The seventh is Abel. The eighth is Abrisene. The ninth is Yobel. The tenth is Armoupieel. The eleventh is Melceir-Adonein. The twelfth is Belias, it is he who is over the depth of Hades. And he placed seven kings - each corresponding to the firmaments of heaven - over the seven heavens, and five over the depth of the abyss, that they may reign.[/quote]

[quote="The Apocryphon of John"]"And the archons created seven powers for themselves, and the powers created for themselves six angels for each one until they became 365 angels. And these are the bodies belonging with the names: the first is Athoth, a he has a sheep's face; the second is Eloaiou, he has a donkey's face; the third is Astaphaios, he has a hyena's face; the fourth is Yao, he has a serpent's face with seven heads; the fifth is Sabaoth, he has a dragon's face; the sixth is Adonin, he had a monkey's face; the seventh is Sabbede, he has a shining fire-face. This is the sevenness of the week.[/quote]

-source: <http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/apocjn.html>

Now, look here! I am going to explain to you the meaning of the Archons. Here is what they mean:

The Archons represent a manner of being able to teleport conscious energy (such as the mind and the soul) through a limited pattern of space over time (in this case, earth's orbit around the sun). The Archons are said to be "fallen" (less by Sabaoth, who repented). What does this mean? It means that they are a "lesser" force, besides which there is a "greater" force. This "greater" force, that allows spacetime teleportation through larger scales, I will discuss in the next level. However, in this thread, I am addressing only the Archons, the "fallen" or "lesser" means of spacetime teleportation within the earth's orbit around the sun. Therefore, I will show you a meaning implied, however hidden deeply, within the words of the above text.

Here is very arcane lamen indeed!

See how the names of the seven Powers stretch across from one side of the circle of Archons to the other. See how each Power connects to the Archons around it. The seven powers are like the seven planets, and the twelve Archons are like the zodiac. In the next level I will discuss the reasons why it can be argued that this attribution of the names of the Archons and Powers to this specific arrangement of the planets and orientation of the zodiac, however for here now I will field any questions or comments about Gnostic time-travel techniques, such as appealing to the Watchers to foresee distant future and ancient past events.

In the previous level I discussed [url=http://illuminati-order.com/forum/viewtopic.php?t=642]The Gnostic Archons[/url], or the so-called "Fallen" or "Lesser" trans-temporal sentiences. The Gnostic Archons were associated with the Annunaki, the so-called "Watchers" of the Essenes. The "Annunaki" was also the term used by the original civilisation in Sumeria to refer to their Pantheon. Therefore, to associate the Annunaki with the Archons, that is, to call the Sumero-Babylonian Pantheon "Fallen" or "Lesser" is a bold Peshor of the times 2000 years ago. It was so bold that for the last 2000 years a vicious, secret war has raged between occultist Gnostics and the Catholic Christian Church over the release to the general public of these Gnostic concepts and the discovery of the right explanation of their meanings. In the next level I will talk more about these "secrets of Gnosticism," particularly regarding the direct involvement of Jesus Christ with the concepts of the Archons and the Aeons of Gnosticism. However, for now, allow me to elaborate on the concept of the Gnostic Aeons, and explain how this relates to time travel.

As I promised in the preceding section on the Gnostic Archons, I will now explain why the Archons, or rather, the Annunaki, are said to be "Fallen." It is because they constitute a "lesser" or smaller-scale method of trans-temporal perception and transportation. Using the Archons as a means of seeing, or of moving, across the zodiac-round holds up only given the relatively Euclidian model of the Zodiac as the flat orbit of the ecliptic. However, there do exist alternative methods for the portrayal of the earth's orbit, and we see that when we apply the Archon method (of 7 across 12), the data set they produce does not hold given a more "relativistic" model.

Here is what the Archon model looks like (7 across 12) when the ecliptic is depicted not from above, but instead from the side, along the surface of its curve:

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/zodiactransform.jpg[/img]

We can see quite clearly that the plainly base seven system of the Powers of the twelve zodiacal "Archons" become fractured when the angle of observation is inclined toward the edge of the ecliptic. This goes a long way to explaining the QBLHistic obsession with the "breaking of the vessels" that contained the ten sefirot emanations. The ten sefirot are said to have originally been contained within the qliphoth, or shells. So we see that, when the seven "fracture" they form triangles, each one a symbol of three. Thus the seven qliphoth become the three supernal sefirot. This accounts for the QBLHistic base ten system as arising from the three plus seven of the supernals and the Gnostic Powers of the twelve Archons.

Now, if we apply the edge-on view of the ecliptic zodiac, that is, a more "relativistic" view of earth's elliptical solar orbit, we can immediately discover a much longer time-span, and therefore much greater spatial-distance spanning method for space-time perception and transportation.

We are also told, supposedly from the same source as was the Apostle John, in [\[url=http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/eugn.html\]](http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/eugn.html)Eugnostis the Blessed[/url]:

[quote="Eugnostis the Blessed"]Therefore our aeon came to be as the type of Immortal Man. Time came to be as the type created twelve aeons for retinue for the twelve angels.[/quote]

And even [\[url=http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/apocjn.html\]](http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/apocjn.html)The Apocryphon of John[/url] itself describes "the twelve aeons belonging to the son of the Autogenes":

[quote="The Apocryphon of John"]Grace belongs to the light-aeon Armozel, which is the first angel. And there are three other aeons with this aeon: grace, truth, and form. And the second light (is) Oriel, who has been placed over the second aeon. And there are three other aeons with him: conception, perception, and memory. And the third light is Daveithai, who has been placed over the third aeon. And there are three other aeons with him: understanding, love, and idea. And the fourth aeon was placed over the fourth light Eleleth. And there are three other aeons with him: perfection, peace, and wisdom. These are the four lights which attend the divine Autogenes, (and) these are the twelve aeons which attend the son of the mighty one, the Autogenes, the Christ, through the will and the gift of the invisible Spirit. And the twelve aeons belong to the son of the Autogenes. And all things were established by the will of the holy Spirit through the Autogenes.[/quote]

The Aeonic system has also been discussed by modern [\[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/magick/kaos.html\]](http://www.benpadijah.com/magick/kaos.html)"Chaos" magicians[/url] such as [\[url=http://www.specularium.org/\]](http://www.specularium.org/)Peter Carroll[/url]. The entirety of [\[url=http://www.sacred-texts.com/oto/engccxx.htm\]](http://www.sacred-texts.com/oto/engccxx.htm)Liber Legis, The Book of the Law[/url] by Aleister Crowley, treats of the subject as well. Along the same lines as Peter Carroll's work is that of [\[url=http://deoxy.org/mckenna.htm\]](http://deoxy.org/mckenna.htm)Terrence McKenna's[/url] [\[url=http://deoxy.org/omega.htm\]](http://deoxy.org/omega.htm)"Time-Wave Zero,"[/url] which deals with the cycling of [\[url=http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Novelty\_Theory\]](http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Novelty_Theory)"novelty"[/url] in an increasingly rapid pattern as the Aeons approach the Mayan calendar end-date in 2012. From this much of the work of [\[url=http://www.kurzweilai.net/index.html?flash=1\]](http://www.kurzweilai.net/index.html?flash=1)Ray Kurzweil[/url] on the concept of the [\[url=http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Technological\_singularity\]](http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Technological_singularity)"technological singularity"[/url] of [\[url=http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Transhumanism\]](http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Transhumanism)"transhumanism"[/url] has been based. Of course, Carroll, McKenna and Kurzweil all owe their studies to Crowley, and Crowley owed his studies to Gnosticism.

Much of what we learn from Crowley relates to the "Equinox of the Gods," a symbolic way of describing the precession of the sun rise and sun set through the various signs of the ecliptic zodiac due to the angle of earth's polar inclination from its orbital plane. These "solar" ages, or "Aeons," each describe a period of time of about 2,000 years. Here is a chart describing the Aeons:

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/aeons.jpg[/img]

You can see, according to the chart, how the positioning of the sunrise and sunset signs at the equinox and solstice days (when the earth is at perihelion or aphelion, respectively) define the entire mythical culture of the era, or rather, the Aeon. They also describe the great cycle of the ice ages, which may itself also relate to global EM polar reversals and geographic polar shift. Here we can see into any date as far ahead or behind as we can imagine for the history of earth, however, as with the Archons, even this is confined to a more or less terrestrial standpoint. Nonetheless any duration (no matter how great or small) in time will necessarily correspond to an equivalent distance traversed in space.

Obviously a system of 12, 2000 year-long each, Aeons is "superior" or "supernal" to the base 7-in-12 system of the Archons. However the Gnostic sources insist that the two systems (the 12 Great Ages, or Aeons, and the 7-in-12 crossing of the Archons with their Powers) are best when they are combined together.

According to [url=http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/apocjn.html]The Apocryphon of John[/url] it is emphatically stated by the Lord to the Apostle John that the aeons reflect the Powers of the Archons, and are therefore 7 in number:

[quote="The Apocryphon of John"]"Yaltabaoth... united the seven powers in his thought with the authorities which were with him. ... And he named each power beginning with the highest: the first is goodness with the first (authority), Athoth; the second is foreknowledge with the second one, Eloaio; and the third is divinity with the third one, Astraphaio; the fourth is lordship with the fourth one, Yao; the fifth is kingdom with the fifth one, Sabaoth; the sixth is envy with the sixth one, Adonein; the seventh is understanding with the seventh one, Sabbateon. And these have a firmament corresponding to each aeon-heaven. They were given names according to the glory which belongs to heaven for the destruction of the powers. And in the names which were given to them by their Originator there was power. But the names which were given them according to the glory which belongs to heaven mean for them destruction and powerlessness. Thus they have two names.[/quote]

[quote="The Apocryphon of John"]"And the powers began: the first one, goodness, created a bone-soul; and the second, foreknowledge, created a sinew-soul; the third, divinity, created a flesh-soul; and the fourth, the lordship, created a marrow-soul; the fifth, kingdom created a blood-soul; the sixth, envy, created a skin-soul; the seventh, understanding, created a hair-soul. ... And those who were appointed over all of these are: Zathoth, Armas, Kalila, Jabel, (Sabaoth, Cain, Abel). ... Seven have power over all of these: Michael, Ouriel, Asmenedas, Saphasatoel, Aarmouriam, Richram, Amiorps.[/quote]

-source: <http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/apocjn.html>

Therefore, we see that the Truth of the Aeons was esoteric at that time, as they were still being associated only with the Powers lesser than the "Fallen" Archons (the Annunaki), although the Aeons had also, earlier in the text, been described as a Pentad:

[quote="The Apocryphon of John"]"This is the pentad of the aeons of the Father, which is the first man, the image of the invisible Spirit; it is the forethought, which Barbelo, and the thought, and the foreknowledge, and the indestructibility, and the eternal life, and the truth. This is the androgynous pentad of the aeons, which is the decad of the aeons, which is the Father.[/quote]

It is thus clear that the Gnostics were presenting, even as their more esoteric doctrines at the time 2000 years ago, the notion of combining the base 12 Aeonic system and the base 7-in-12 system of the Archons in order to perfect trans-temporal and hyperspatial perception and transportation.

I will field any questions and please feel free to add any comments.

This is what the nucleus of the atom essentially looks like, graphed like a depth meter seen from the side. It's a "finite" square well. This is what quantum-tunneling occurs through. It leaps from one side of this square well to the other without passing through the central, "square" portion.

http://musr.physics.ubc.ca/~jess/p200/sq\_well/img1.gif

This is the "infinite" square well, or the model of the electron field of a probability cloud, again, as seen from the side like a depth gauge on a boat trolling the bottom of a surface of water. The "peaks" represent where the electron's position is most likely to be after having been perturbed by a photon, ie. at time  $t=1$  following  $t=0$ .

<http://www.ncsu.edu/felder-public/kenny/images/psi/plot2.gif>

Sorry if this one takes a long time to load, but it's an animation of how a gaussian tensor (?) field follows from the above stated perturbation, that is, barring subsequent perturbation by another photon.

<http://www.optics.rochester.edu/~stroud/animations/swgaussian.gif>

Here's one more so you can kind of get a feel for the Bohr model. As the "particle" aspect of the electrons move, they create field-lines of "charge." Here we see an atom of Lithium (?) with three electrons in the first orbital shell. As the "particles" move, they form "waves." It's really all about "spin" compounding dimensionally as pure information.

http://nuceng.mcmaster.ca/igna/images/Sbb\_structure.gif

Notice the similarities of the periodicity of the electron "particles" causes them to come close to and to overlap one another at some points. These are the points depicted as "peaks" in the "infinite" square well diagram above. However by plotting the periodicity of electrons, we may also be able to establish if this effect of their spin is being caused by a 4-d geometrical gravitic field passing through the probability cloud. For further reference compare to this model of the "spin" of an involuting hypercube.

I wouldn't go so far as to call the "Higgs Boson" a "God Particle," regardless of whether the "standard" or Bohr atomic model depends on its existence.

quote="wiki"]The particle called Higgs boson is in fact the quantum of one of the components of a Higgs field. In empty space, the Higgs field acquires a non-zero value, which permeates every place in the universe at all times. This vacuum expectation value (VEV) of the Higgs field is constant and equal to 246 GeV. In the Standard Model, the Higgs field consists of two neutral and two charged component fields. One of the neutral and the charged component fields are Goldstone bosons, which are massless and unphysical. The quantum of the remaining neutral component corresponds to the massive Higgs boson. It is the only Standard Model particle not yet observed, but plays a key role in explaining the origins of the mass of other elementary particles, in particular the difference between the massless photon and the very heavy W and Z bosons. Since the Higgs field is a scalar field, the Higgs boson has spin zero. The Standard Model does not predict the value of the Higgs boson mass. It has been argued that if the mass of the Higgs boson lies between about 130 and 190 GeV, then the Standard Model can be valid at energy scales all the way up to the Planck scale (10<sup>16</sup> TeV).[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Higgs\_boson

Tony Smith's model has predicted the exact mass of the "Higgs Boson" (which Tony called the "Truth Quark" ) as having a ground state of 130GeV, with an "excited" or high-energy state and a lower energy state, which calculates the vacuum expectation value (VEV) using my old friend  $\phi$  (which leads me to think, personally, the Higgs Boson or Truth Quark value should be 137 GeV, the same as the value of the fine structure constant).

[quote="tony smith"]The Truth Quark, through its strong interaction with Higgs Vacua, may have two excited energy levels at 225 GeV and 173 GeV, above a ground state at 130 GeV. The 173 GeV excited state may exist due to appearance of a Planck-energy vacuum with  $\langle \phi_{vac2} \rangle = 10^{19}$  GeV in addition to the low-energy Standard Model vacuum with  $\langle \phi_{vac1} \rangle = 252$  GeV.[/quote]

-source: [\[url=http://www.valdostamuseum.org/hamsmith/TCZ.html\]](http://www.valdostamuseum.org/hamsmith/TCZ.html)The D4-D5-E6-E7-E8 VoDou Physics model predicts a Truth Quark mass of about 130 GeV.[/url]

The model Tony used to arrive at this predicted value, describes different conditions of physics in different dimensions than our own. Such descriptions apply to super-string models as descriptions of non-exploded, or still collapsed, "parallel" universes or "alternate" realities from our own 3-d world. The numbers in the model refer to the dimensions between 4 and 8.

Tony describes the D4, D5, E6 and E7 physics of the model, in brief, thus:

[quote="tony smith"]
D4: [Spin(8)= 28 / Gravity= 16-U(4) / Standard Model= 12-SU(3)xSU(2)xU(1)]
D5: [Spin(10)= 8(+1+8) / SpaceTime= 4 / Internal Space= 4]
E6: [16 (+1+16) / Generation-1 Fermions= 8 / Generation-1 AntiFermions= 8]
E7: [27 (+1+27) / MacroSpace of Many-Worlds] and the E8 physics he describes as deriving thus:

[quote="tony smith"]The Clifford Algebra Cl(8) has dimension  $2^8 = 256$ . Since  $256 = 16 \times 16 = 2^4 \times 2^4$ , the full spinors of Cl(8) are 16-dimensional, and the half-spinors of Cl(8) are 8-dimensional.[/quote] from what Cornell University termed "VoDou Physics," (applying predictions for Hilbert space physics to the geometrical lattices of higher dimensional topology of Clifford algebra), such as thus:

[quote="tony smith"] $2 \times 2 \times 2 \times 2 \times 2 \times 2 \times 2 \times 2 = 2^8 = 256$  possible outcomes of 8 binary choices. There is only 1 outcome with no 1s ( all 0s); There are 8 different outcomes with exactly one 1; There are 28 different outcomes with exactly two 1s; There are 56 different outcomes with exactly three 1s; There are 70 different outcomes with exactly four 1s; There are 56 different outcomes with exactly five 1s; There are 28 different outcomes with exactly six 1s; There are 8 different outcomes with exactly seven 1s; There is only one outcome with all eight 1s.

$$1 + 8 + 28 + 56 + 70 + 56 + 28 + 8 + 1 = 256 = 2^8 = (16 \times 16) = [(8 + 8) \times 16].$$

1 corresponds to one Higgs Scalar; 8 corresponds to a  $4+4 = 8$ -dimensional SpaceTime; 28 corresponds to  $12+16 = 28$  Gauge Bosons; The 56 (corresponding to outcomes with three 1s) corresponds to the 56-dimensional representation of an M-theory with global symmetry of the exceptional Lie algebra E7; The 70 (corresponding to outcomes with four 1s) breaks down into  $35 + 35$ . One 35 is fixed and not dynamically active after 8-dimensional SpaceTime is broken into 4-dimensional Physical Spacetime and 4-dimensional Internal Symmetry Space, The other 35 and the  $56 + 28 + 8 + 1$  are dual to the  $1 + 8 + 28 + 56$  and the first 35, and describe in terms of momentum the same physical phenomena that the  $1 + 8 + 28 + 56$  and the first 35 describe in terms of position;  $<8$  corresponds to 8 first-generation Fermion Particles;  $>8$  corresponds to 8 first-generation Fermion AntiParticles; 16 corresponds to a set of 8 matrices (called Dirac gamma matrices) that describe how Spinor Particles move in SpaceTime from the point of view of position in SpaceTime, and another set of 8 matrices (also called Dirac gamma matrices) that describe how Spinor Particles move in SpaceTime from the point of view of momentum in SpaceTime.

Clifford algebra describes quaternions (4-D "spin" rotation around centre of mass, or double-reflection, usually boson, quanta) using orthogonal transformations (performed as multiplication of  $4 \times 4$  Matrices whose transposition of rows and columns is the same as its inversion between a, usually square, matrix of linear equation solutions and its solution vector, an object defined by magnitude, such as its volume if solid, and direction of motion). In Minkowski 4-D spacetime, where the six directions of space combine with the single direction of linear time, Clifford algebra describes the motion of 3-D particles over time. However, Hilbert space is Euclidian, or non-relativistic (between the movement of 3-D space over linear time), although non restricted to finite spatial dimensions. Comparing 4-d motion (Clifford algebra) to immobile, but infinite, directions (Hilbert space) deals directly with assigning quantum physical attributes to higher dimensional levels of space than time, and vice versa - assigning Euclidian lattice (form or shape) characteristics to the motions of boson and fermion quanta in 3-D space over time. It's all summed up by the term I use, "metaforms," for 4-space objects casting patterns of 3-space motion as shadows.

To these 4-space shapes, such 3-space characteristics as mass do not matter. To my mind, it is these shapes that are real, while the matter that moves along, through and within them is the illusion, like watching a ceiling fan until it appears to be moving backwards. Once the super-position decoherence reaches 40 Hz in 2012AD, we'll all transcend this material reality anyway, so what's even the point in all these types of endeavors?

Well according to the most quoted letters of the Illuminati, found in the apartment of Xavier Zwack, the five members of the Aeropagite Council at that time were as follows:

[quote]spartacus: Adam Weishaupt cato: xavier zwack minos: Grünberger (??)
sebastion: Cosandey (??)
philo: Baron Von Knigge[/quote]

The reason to consider these five the Aeropagite (top) Council in the Bavarian Illuminati at that time are that Zwack had direct contact with Weishaupt, as well as direct contact with Knigge. Knigge had direct contact with Grünberger and Cosandey, who were also professors at the same university as Knigge.

Now, the Aeropagite Council having consisted of five members at the time of its discovery does not necessarily justify the myth that the Order had the same five members, or even any other members than Weishaupt, when it was officially "founded" in 1776.

Also, as we can note from the following extremely abbreviated timeline, Weishaupt formed the Illuminati BEFORE becoming a Free Mason, however Knigge (who may, indeed, have been one of the five original members) did not join the IO until 1780.

[quote]
May 1, 1776. Weishaupt founds the Order of the Illuminati with an original membership of five.

1777. Weishaupt is initiated into Freemasonry, in Munich, at the Lodge Theodore of Good Counsel.

July, 1780. Baron von Knigge is initiated into the Order.

April 20, 1784. Baron von Knigge resigns from the Illuminati

By 1784, largely due to Knigge's circle of influence, the Illuminati had "between two and three thousand members."[/quote]

Here is a partial list of members compiled from the member list found in Zwack's apartment. Note that, though Knigge and Zwack are listed, Grünberger and Cosandey are not. I see this as being further evidence that, whether founding members or not, they were likely the remaining two other members of the five member Aeropagite Council at the time of the Bavarian Illuminati's discovery.

Here, also, is a basic structure of the ranks and status of the Bavarian Illuminati as it was originally envisioned by Weishaupt in 1776. It is unknown to me at this time how many members were in each grade by 1784, by which time the Order was over 2000 members strong.

Master IXO Didymus was my mentor into this Illuminati Order, and it would be a great shame to us both if I were to claim to know more than him. This applies especially to this subject, because, as I understand it, his knowledge of this field of research was gained through many direct experiences with the realms he describes, whereas I, his humble student, have merely studied these things academically, and have not had the benefit of more personal experiences of the realms accessed beyond the physical.

These caveats being expressed, I would hope to add some points to Master IXO's above descriptions, but please remember, my own comments are based only on my study of texts written by researchers, and no actual experiences of my own.

As Master Didymus has said, the astral realm is a level of vibration of ethereal energy one complete dimension higher than our own. Therefore, for someone who has accessed the astral realm, all will appear to them much as it appears to those of us who have not. They will possess, however, an exponent level higher insight into the causal mechanisms at work in the nature of our universe. For example, here in 3-space linear time, we have to work for the survival of our biological bodies. Someone in the astral plane, however, has access to 4-spatial dimensions and non-linear time. They can, psychically without effort, and physically with some greater effort, move their mind, or their being, backwards or forwards through events in time as easily as any of us can move our bodies from one location to another in physical space. Some of the same laws apply, such as the need for a vehicle, or even different sorts of vessels for different terrains, to travel greater durations, just as we use cars or trains, planes or boats, to change location in space.

Here is an example of the "switch" between normal thinking and being in our current continuum of spacetime and supernatural thinking and being in the astral dimension of vibration: consider as I am typing these words, my brain sends an electrical impulse through my nerves into my finger to punch the keys. Now, imagine that I can type faster than the computer can process. My fingers are flying over the keys at the speed of thought. Suddenly, the words seem to be appearing on the screen faster than my fingers can keep up with typing them. This is, of course, according to the logical mind, a "hallucination," that is, a mirage perception, whose real conditions of existence are different from how they appear. However, if this were actually the case: that is, if my fingers could type at the same speed my brain fires electricity around my neurons, then the mind over matter barrier would be crossed, and the psychic realm would become physically real. Triggering this "switch" mechanism without any confusion of the senses or delusion of the logical mind is much more difficult, a goal much to be sought, and, some say, myself included, the purpose of evolution.

Again, allow me to say that I have not had any personal experience with the realms IXO describes, and about which I am about to elaborate. Even if I had[i]perceived[/i] these things, such as by deluding my senses to the point of hallucinating alternative sensory realities, it would not be the same as physically [/i]experiencing[/i] these realities. For that to be accomplished, we would require confirmation of our arrival from our environment, and, if we return and wish to be believed, we would require physical evidence of our trip.

Now, the general consensus of researchers into this field is that there are five realms, including our own, which we would call "dimensions" or "realities" of vibrational energy. The energy itself is the fifth of these such "worlds" or realms. It is called Akasha. Below this are the four worlds of QBLH, associated with fire, air, water and earth in descending order. The highest of these realms is called Atziluth, the next highest Beriyah, the realm between Beriyah (considered Paradise in the Zohar) is Yetzirah, the realm of the ten sefirot emanations. Beneath these all is the physical realm of Assiyah, the multiverse, combining the four universal forces and the four terrestrial elements of Malkuth (the lowest of the sefirot). The three upper worlds beneath Akasha, or spirit, are sometimes referred to as the mental (or psychic) realm, the ethereal (or ephemeral), and the Astral (or hyperspatial) realm. Think of these this way: where one is above and another below a certain level, the middle level is their combination and overlap. For the mental or the "water" level this may not be universal, only occurring here and there. For the ethereal or energy realm this is more universally homogenous. Each greater realm contains the one(s) beneath it.

As IXO has described, within the astral realm there are seven levels. These indeed are equivalent to the seven "heavens" of the Arabs, however they also inspired the seven "hells" of QBLH, not to mention the seven chakras of the Hindu, and the seven basic states of metal of the Alchemists. The Theosophists describe this recurrence of the seven levels as manifesting differently on each of the different realms. The seven astral "rays" correspond to the seven etheric "ashrams" (or schools), the seven psychic Ascended Masters (or teachers) and the seven root races of the lowest level of manifestation.

here is a depiction of how this base seven system moves through the realms over time, a holograph within itself.

As the seven ashrams infuse the seven secret chiefs of the Ascended Masters, so too have the root races on earth evolved as motivated by these seven harmonic frequencies of vibrational energy. The root races included two that no longer exist as such, the Atlanteans and the Lemurians. The Lemurians became the Vedic Aryans, who then became the Rh- (so-called "blue" ) bloodlines of the Indo-Europeans. The Atlanteans migrated to a more purely "spiritual" plane, but continue to exist outside of time. The Atlanteans govern the Lemurians, who assist the other five races in ascension to the higher levels as IXO described.

According to the QBLHistic tradition, the reason for the Atlantean migration, as well as for the Lemurian "interbreeding" with less spiritually evolved species, is discussed in the book of Genesis as the metaphor of the "fall" of Adam Kadmon (immortal and wise) to Adam homo, mortal man. The QBLH describes this fall as "the breaking of the vessels" or "the shells" of the Qliphoth. In this tradition, Beriah (Paradise) had been the level immediately above our own reality, Assiyah, at the time of the Garden of Eden. When man "fell" and became mortally incarnate, Beriyah ascended, switching places with Yetzirah, the tree of life of the ten sefirot. The supernal sefirot detached and are accessible now only mentally. The seven inferior sefirot shattered and became infused into our universe's matter-energy continuum as we know it today. The QBLHists describe the "fall" as the descent of Malkuth from Daath, and the ideal return of us each to Heaven as the reunion of Shekinah (so-called Christ consciousness) with the Most High (the embodied Messiah).

According to the Mayan tradition, the four elements have manifested in our evolution as the four parts of the brain: the hind-brain (or reptile brain), the mid-brain (or mammalian brain), the fore-brain (the human brain), and Ahau, the conscious mind itself that animates the others. Timothy Leary also describes eight "circuits" operating within this consciousness independently of location in the brain, although four, he says, are based on neural activity in the left hemisphere, while the other four are based on neural activity in the right hemisphere. The four in the left brain are "terrestrial" in that they pertain to necessities of biological survival, both for the individual and for a species. The other four he calls "futique," meaning that for some of our species survival has not yet necessitated our awakening them within our minds as individuals. The four "futique" circuits unlock awareness of genetic and atomic levels of awareness, for example, however this is not the same as experiencing existence as upon these other levels or scales than our median sensory life. As I say, becoming aware of the existence of alternate frequency vibrations of energy than what we usually perceive through our sensory stimuli filters, and actually transcending this physical existence altogether, are quite different things.

Hope this has been of some inspiration, and that I haven't distracted you too much. Please continue at your leisure Master IXO.

Okay, well...

here's a little break down of MK/RV in the twentieth century as an intro...

Around the turn of the twentieth century, Nikola Tesla was hard at work with Thomas Edison on the wireless projection of alternating current electrical power, but Edison was heavily invested in non-alternating current, so he and Tesla had a falling out, and Tesla went to Long Island to work on a very large transmission tower.

Around the same time, the Golden Dawn, a latter-day offshoot of the theosophical society of Madame Blavatsky, was experimenting with "psychic flying roles" or the use of will through ritual to project the light-body into various other realms of perception, which included early precursors of remote viewing. The goal was to maintain contact with the "secret chiefs" who supposedly had once existed on this physical plane, but had long since transcended to the astral realm.

Tesla soon lost funding for his Long Island tower, and may have lost his mind around the same time. He did not refute claims that his technology had military applications, perhaps courting military funding for his projects, and these accusations included blaming him for the enormous blast which occurred in Siberia near Tunguska. Ten years later, when an expedition was finally sent to investigate this blast, no comet-impact crater or nuclear-type blast radius could be found. Instead the trees for as many as an hundred miles around had been flattened, but those at the epicenter were still erect. This has led to the explanation that an above-ground explosion occurred, and one of the most outlandish theories for this has speculated that a matter and anti-matter particle collided there, though no explanation has been tendered as to how or why this would have occurred. The same result could, according to relativity of matter-energy, have been produced by an large burst of electrical energy.

In the forties, Dr. Albert Hoffman was given permission to recreate his earlier chemical extrapolation of the hallucinogenic properties of ergot, a wheat mould. The result, LSD-25, was rarefied in Switzerland, and large quantities were purchased by IG Farben. One of the executives of Farben, a German-American company that operated outside of the WWII embargo with government funding, was Allen Dulles, and he may have shipped the supplies purchased from the Swiss Sandoz Laboratory to the nearby Austrian Dauchau concentration camp which was a large purchaser of chemical weapons supplied largely, if not exclusively, by IG Farben.

After the end of the War, Farben was dissolved into many smaller companies based on the technologies it had experimented with during the war. One of these would become IBM, another would become Bayer medicine. Dulles would go on to become the first head of the CIA after it was renamed by Truman from the Office of Strategic Services (OSS). Dulles oversaw Project Paperclip, the now well-known operation by CIA and MI5 operatives to secure NAZI scientists after the end of the German offensive. Some of these scientists would be brought back to America to work on the atomic bomb project, and some would be integrated into the formative staff of NASA. Others were captured by the SOVIETs and used subsequently to perform experiments in their equivalent programmes.

During the late forties and early fifties, the CIA conducted Project MK-ULTRA, which began as an experiment to find a reliable "truth serum" for use in interrogation. It rapidly erupted into a full-fledged pharmacological application experiment into the study of mind-control in general. Dulles, who was well aware of LSD-25 by that time, highly recommended it for usage, and the experiments on enlisted men and women, prisoners and psychiatric patients, and, ultimately, on students and other ordinary citizens as well, proceeded apace. At the same time, the Russians were experimenting heavily with similar mind-control techniques, though their own research focused largely on psycho-kinesis and telepathy rather than on chemical induction.

By the late sixties and early seventies, MK-ULTRA had changed its name to MK-SEARCH, and most of the MK-ULTRA documents were destroyed by then CIA director Richard Helms. Supposedly the drug-experimentation of MK-ULTRA in the early fifties had given way, by the sixties, to experiments in cooperation with civilian scientists such as José Delgado and Louis West on the use of technological machinery to induce similar alterations in states of consciousness. Some of the products of this era were non-lethal weapons based in large part on Tesla's designs to be used for crowd control. At this time the Russians initiated Project Woodpecker, projecting a brainwave resonant frequency at the US embassy in Moscow. By 1977 this signal, powered by the nuclear reactor at Chernobyl, may have gone global.

Around this same time, the United States and Soviet Union were also experimenting with zero-point energy technology based in part on Tesla's scalar wave technology, and partially on the hovercraft technology designed by the Third Reich. The public culmination of this technology is the stealth aircraft technology, however many researchers have speculated that a secret arm of this development programme has continued through to today in the form of time-travel technology experimented with at Montauk, Long Island.

Nowadays, the technology of psychic "entrainment" has become largely corporate. The machines originally devised by the US and USSR governments have become available in the form of brainwave generating music and light-goggles, and the practise of remote viewing such as the US Project STARGATE has been publically sub-contracted and much of its data is available under the Freedom of Information Act. The Cold War project meant as a reaction to Project Woodpecker was Project HAARP, however since the end of the Cold War, this technology too has been donated to the education department of its respective state and is being applied to non-military research.

The process of Astral Travel largely developed by the Golden Dawn's applications of the Theosophical Society's ideas has become nearly synonymous with Remote Viewing through subsequent experiments and programmes, and is now taught quite openly to the public by government funded corporate organisations.

Who knows what applications of these experiments and this technology the twenty-first century will bring? I encourage you all to use the resources available to us all as thoroughly investigate these matters as possible and as interest you, and I will be around to answer any questions you have as best I can.

shhh.

I'll sing you a lullaby.

It's called... The Finders.

<http://www.geocities.com/kidhistory/edocs/ttgvd.htm>

"The police had received an anonymous telephone call relative to two well dressed white men wearing suits and ties in Myers Park, [Tallahassee], apparently watching six dirty and unkempt children in the playground area. A Mr. HOULIHAN and AMMERMAN were near a 1980 blue Dodge van bearing the Virginia license number XHW-557, the inside of which was later described as foul-smelling, filled with maps, books, letters, with a mattress situated to the rear of the van which appeared as if it were used as a bed. The overall appearance of the van gave the impression that all eight persons were living in it The children were covered with insect bites, were very dirty and most of the children were not wearing underwear and all the children had not been bathed in many days."

<http://www.whale.to/b/alexander.html>

The United States Customs Service Special Agent Ramon J. Martinez appeared at the Washington, D.C. Metropolitan Police Department on April 2, 1987, for a briefing. Mr. Martinez states in his Report of Investigation:

"I was advised that all the passport data [found in the van in Tallahassee, Florida] had been turned over to the State Department for their investigation. The State Department in turn, advised the MPD

[Washington, D.C. Metropolitan Police Department] that all travel and use of the passports by the holders of the passports was within the law and no action would be taken. This included travel to Moscow, North Korea, and North Vietnam from the late 1950s to mid 1970s."

However, it should be noted that normal travel to those countries was illegal at that time. The final page of the U.S. Customs Service Report of Investigation states the following:

"The individual further advised me of circumstances which indicated that the investigation into the activity of the FINDERS had become a CIA internal matter. The MPD report has been classified secret and was not available for review. I was advised that the FBI had withdrawn from the investigation several weeks prior and that the FBI Foreign Counter Intelligence Division had directed MPD not to advise the FBI Washington Field [Investigation] Office [of the FBI] of anything that had transpired.

<http://www.geocities.com/kidhistory/edocs/ttgdr.htm>

Gunderson had this to say: "The Finders-A CIA front established in the 1960's. It has top clearance and protection in its assigned task of kidnapping and torture-programming young children throughout the U.S. Members are specially trained government kidnappers known to be sexual degenerates who involve the kidnapped children in satanic sex orgies and bloody rituals as well as the murders of other children and slaughter of animals.

They use a fleet of unmarked vans to grab targeted children from parks and schoolyards. In doing so they use children within their organization as decoys to attract the victims close to the vans where they are grabbed by adults. They then drug the children and transport them to a series of safe houses for safe keeping. They are then used in their ceremonies for body parts, sex slaves and some are auctioned off at various locations in the northern hemisphere. In the past they have been auctioned off near a location in Nevada and Toronto, Canada. Marion David Pettie, the leader of the cult, is an identified homosexual pedophile and a CIA officer. His son was an employee of a CIA proprietary firm, Air America, which was notorious for smuggling drugs, destined for the U.S., out of the Golden Triangle into Saigon during the Vietnam war."

Now, I think is as good a time as any to introduce the real point of this thread.

As I have already given some potentially very valuable links to documents which directly tie the United States Central Intelligence Agency to experiments using LSD-25 as a potential mind-control agent, as well as to past evidence of that agency's ties to the use of Remote Viewing, possibly in conjunction with such MK-techniques, possibly not, as well as the modern private-sector successors of this latter programme promoting the government-developed techniques to be employed by public students...

and as I have also given a brief history of the recent clinical extraction of LSD-25 from ergot (the wheat mould which was probably responsible for the Golden Age of Greece as well as the Salem Witch Trials) in the 1940's by Dr. Hoffmann, as well as its subsequent use by former NAZI scientists brought to the States during Project Paperclip, the now well-known snatch and grab operation performed by the then OSS and Tavistock (American and British Intelligence agencies), as well as its subsequent use in experiments conducted through the United States Military by the CIA (offspring of the OSS) on prisoners, mental patients and soldiers...

and finally as I have also given some very dangerous information linking such mind-control experimentation to pseudo-Satanic ritual abuse cults which have been proven to be fronts for ongoing CIA operations as recently as the 1980s...

I would like to tender some points in regard to the use of mind-controlled agents.

To begin with, I think we should look at certain assassins, such as LH Oswald, Jack Ruby, Sirhan Sirhan, Mark David Chapman, Charles Manson, as well as the killers of Martin Luther King Jr. and Malcolm X. I realise these are, for me, all home-grown assassins, and that this list could easily be expanded to include not only successful assassins, but also attempted ones such as the man who shot Ronald Reagan, and assassins (successful or unsuccessful) from foreign countries, such as the assassin of Archduke Ferdinand which began WWI. Perhaps, if anyone IS reading this, another poster (AHEM... udrovemetoit), could comment on at least some of these who I may have excluded or missed (AHEM.... Ferdinand's assassination... AHEM).

Now, we are all relatively aware of the facts involving many of these assassins, such as Oswald, Ruby, Sirhan Sirhan, Chapman, Manson, etc... and, I should hope that, by now at least, we may be free to believe that they may have been directed to commit these assassinations by some higher-order force which orchestrated their movements, and which directly commanded them to take these actions.

Now, I would like to speculate, was this force a REAL one, or simply IN THEIR HEADS?

In the case of Lee Harvey Oswald as well as Jack Ruby, the majority of, at least, informed Americans believe that there was, in fact, a higher-order force which was responsible for controlling these assassins. These informed citizens often believe that there is an elite cabal of very powerful interested parties involved in the handling of these particular assassins.

In their minds, further, it can therefore be extended from these two isolated trigger-men, to include responsibility for (virtually, if not) all the others I have mentioned, as far back as even including not only the assassin of the Archduke, but even, it would sometimes seem, John Wilkes Booth as well.

So, the question becomes, whether this suspicion of a conspiracy is viable or not, who or what could have coerced the trigger-men, how and why could they have been coerced, when and where did this coercion occur?

Is it possible that the BELIEF IN A CONSPIRACY ITSELF WAS RESPONSIBLE FOR CAUSING THESE ASSASSINS TO PULL THE TRIGGER?

So, with this in mind, let us return to the facts surrounding each of these garden-variety assassins exposure to top-level, highly classified information which would lead them to believe in a conspiracy and answer these questions about HOW they gained access to it, and HOW it may have affected their beliefs leading up their becoming assassins, and most importantly, WHY it would have driven them to this end in particular.

So, let us take a single example to begin with....

Lee Harvey Oswald has been tied to Mafia gangster, hustler, card shark, pimp and bagman Jack Ruby in multiple sources, so we do not need to overburden their connection here. Suffice it, for our purposes in this exposition, to propose a rather obvious fact that is often overlooked: that Jack Ruby was, among other things relative to him, probably also LH Oswald's personal supplier of marijuana.

However, before we can even begin to get into this connection (which we won't, BTW), it is necessary to turn the clock back even further to find Oswald's first encounter with mind-altering psychoactives.

It was in early 1958 that the CIA, through project MK-ULTRA became the overseer of military intelligence experiments using LSD-25 to induce post-hypnotic suggestion effects to counter foreign insurgent interrogation techniques. In '58, the CIA oversaw a PROJECT ARTICHOKE test at the Edgewood Arsenal in Maryland, USA. During these tests, LSD-25, which the army had code-named EA-1729, was tested on several American enlisted men to ascertain a variety of different possible applications. However, this was already after the CIA had performed several independent tests with LSD on American "volunteer" civilians in covert "front" organisations, such as at UCLA at Berkeley, and in various western US mental hospitals. In fact, the LSD experimentation by the CIA dates back at least as early as April 13, 1953, when project MK-ULTRA was put into effect. Therefore, it is also possible that the Office of Naval Intelligence was also onto the experimental effects of this psychoactive chemical substance for some time before the Edgewood Tests.

Oswald, as a young Radar-operator enlisted in the United States Military, was stationed at El Toro Marine Base in Atsugi, Japan from September, 1957. As a pro-Marxists-Leninist, it was somewhat peculiar for Oswald to have garnered this position, as it involved tracking via radar the take-offs and landings of the important U2 spy-plane missions over Russia which were so instrumental in determining the bomber-gap during the early years of the Cold War between the US and the USSR.

Now, at Atsugi, Oswald was listed in the medical records as having contracted Gonorrhea "in the line of duty, not due to own personal misconduct" as an early espionage agent investigating the Soviet-spy hostess of the Queen Bee brothel. So it should not be surprising that, in May or June of 1959, he, his friend Kerry Thornely, and Oswald's partner in a loan-sharking operation Bucknell Beaver were approached as potential recruitments to an espionage programme to infiltrate the new Castro regime in Cuba (before Castro had declared his Communist sympathies) and ascertain the potential presence of Soviet espionage agents close to the new president of Cuba. The Hispanic civilian who approached the three for this mission, as pro-Communists, was an officer of the Joint Technical Advisory Group, whose building "Mainside" was located just next-door to El Toro. According to some researchers, the Joint Technical Advisory Group was a para-military co-op with the CIA for the express purpose of conducting tests using LSD on soldiers.

It is known that, at least as early as from August to November of 1962, PROJECT ARTICHOKE was conducting experiments using ES-1729 in the Far East to test the effect of the drug in "field interrogations." This sub-project of MK-ULTRA, known as PROJECT DERBY HAT, may have been Oswald's first exposure to a psychoactive chemical which could induce post-hypnotic suggestions and was overtly, at that time, being tested for purposes of direct mind-control, but it would certainly not be his last with such means and motives.

According to at least two researchers into the mysterious life of humble, leftist radar-operator Lee Oswald, after Oswald's prominent defection to the USSR, Oswald may have received a "brain implant device" meant to control his mind. Oswald's defection to the USSR, shortly after his service at El Toro as radar operator supervising the reconnaissance of the flights of the U2 spyplane flights over the USSR, has been blamed, by many outspoken officials in the US government, military and intelligence communities, for the loss over Russia of the final U2 spyplane mission, flown by Francis Gary Powers, which would ultimately lead to the collapse of the Kennedy-Khrushchev peace summit the following summer.

In 1964, following President Kennedy's assassination, CIA Director McCone wrote a classified document, recently released, to Secret Service director James Rowley stating his admission that Oswald had been "chemically or electronically controlled" and had acted as a "sleeper agent." The memo cites Oswald's having spent 11 days at an Ear-Nose-and-Throat clinic in Minsk for "a minor ailment" (an ear infection). The speculation implied by this was that Oswald had been sedated and altered in some way.

The most likely conclusion, however unlikely it may seem, involves a fellow contemporary defector of Oswald's, Robert E. Webster. Webster had attended a trade exhibition at Moscow with the Rand Development Corporation, and was escorted by two Rand executives when he defected, Henry Rand and George Bookbinder, both of whom were former members of the OSS. The Rand corporation had, as early as 1949, released a report on Soviet hypnosis experiments, and proposed an American counter-offensive, and were already heavily involved in mind-control experimentation. Both Webster and Oswald would eventually return to the United States after the defection, implying that they had been acting as covert espionage agents for the US (or other interested parties), Webster's return having been eased by "affidavits from Rand." Afterwards Oswald inquired into Webster's well-being when returning to the US himself, indicating that they had met, either in the States before their defection, or possibly abroad while in the USSR.

The trade conference in Moscow which Webster had attended on behalf of Rand was part of the International House/World Trade Center, which, at that time, was under the directorship of former OSS liaison to Winston Churchill during WWII, and Project Pareclip operations agent, Clay Shaw. On March 16, 1967, Perry Raymond Russo testified to Jim Garrison under oath in a district court panel criminal investigation into the death of JFK that he had been present at a meeting between Clay Shaw, David Ferrie, and a man calling himself "Leon Oswald" (who was probably only a private investigator named William Seymour working for Double-Chek P.I. firm, supposedly a "front" for CIA activities in New Orleans).

Immediately prior to the assassination of JFK in 1963, there was a top secret meeting at the Tryall Compound, in Jamiaca, owned by Sir William Stephenson, Vritain's top intelligence agent. At this meeting were Major Louis Mortimer Bloomfield of the British Special Operations Executive (in charge of infiltrating American intelligence agencies); Ferenc Nagy, a past cabinet minister of the pro-NAZI Horthy party of Hungary; George Mandell, trade minister for Mussolini; two white russian emigrés, Jean de Menil and Paul Raigorodski; as well as colonel Clay Shaw of the OSS.

The subject of both of these meetings' discussion was the assassination of then US President John Fitzgerald Kennedy.

[quote="Tundra"]What do you think Ben?[/quote]

In the summer of 2001, I penned a series of "future news" stories called "For a New World Order," which I will link to at the end of this article. I would advise you to read the contents of this book, as well as all the links I provide here, in depth if you actually do care for an answer to this question.

I cover pretty much everything I think about "macro" (big) conspiracies (the philosophical trends such as the apparent conflict between Free Masons and the Catholic Church) in my online [url=I cover pretty much everything I think about ]NEXUS004[/url] e-zine. Everything I think about smaller, "micro" conspiracies, such as the "how" and "who" of the con, I describe at great length in my online [url=http://www.benpadijah.com/phpBB2/viewforum.php?f=40]NEXUS005[/url] e-zine.

I discuss alot of these topics in detail in those issues, but I'll address these questions specifically here. I'll also provide a couple links to content on my site for further reference.

[quote]

1) time travel. I think this is the goal of the modern conspirators, either for themselves alone, or ultimately for the masses as well.

[/quote]

"Where were you on 9-11?" is a common enough question, so let's start there. I was asleep and dreaming about the helicopter crash scene in the movie the Matrix. As I woke up I remember hearing the phrase "They did it. They finally did it." Then my mom was shaking me awake to tell me "they've crashed two planes into the WTC towers." Of course, in another reality, I never awoke to this, or rather, never woke up with her telling me this, because in another reality it never happened. In my [url=http://www.benpadijah.com/ben_com/blog/0706.html]blog last month[/url] I talk about how, when we have a near-death experience, it separates our fate, and therefore divides our destiny (for destiny is long-term fate, or deterministic free-will), into two world-lines, or two alternate universes, or two parallel dimensions, or two possible vibrations of reality, whatever you want to call it: one in which we continue to exist inside this world, and one in which we transcend to another world, and leave the world we were in to co-exist allong a separate course of events, excluding our continued physical prescence inside of it. 9-11 was a "near death experience" of this nature on a national scale.

The result is that, so far as, at least, I know, there came into existence on 9-11 two different dimensional world-lines. One of them has a higher vibration, a greater level of international tension, etc. and one of them is more at peace within itself. One of them is the one we live in, and the other one is one in which we also live, but in which we are a different us, because we have all followed different such "world-lines" and made different choices that have caused us to lead different lives, etc.

According to the results of my research, when two paths separate, it does not necessarily mean they do not meet again somewhere further up the road. So, just like in one reality I die, so too into the same reality might I later choose to be born again, if I lose my car keys on wednesday, and find them on friday, there are two thursdays, one in which I didn't have my car keys, and one in which I'd never lost them.

Of course, alot of knowing how to travel between these such dimensions derives from what you learn about how to travel between these such dimensions. So, if you are busy learning all about the causes and consequences of 9-11, you will exist in a dimensional vibration where these are more directly imperative for your continued mental existence, you probably won't know the first thing about something else as equally random as, say, gardening; thus if you have been indoctrinated or brain washed into a certain mode of thinking, by school, church, etc. whatever, you won't have studied how to travel between different dimensions.

[quote]

2) mind control. I can't believe no one is talking about this. It's vital for the "conspiracy" to function. Instantaneous telepathic communication between the conspirators is the sole method to dispell disputes.

[/quote]

Basically, from the second you leave your mother's womb, your mind is "up for grabs" amongst all interested parties. We trust our parents to protect our minds from evil influences that might cause our minds harm. We trust them to teach us correctly what is "right." They do not know what is "right" for us. Each of us, at some point in our lives, must inevitably awaken, whether at puberty or on our death beds, to the fact that we are unique individuals with the power to control our own minds, and so to form and shape our own realities. No one else can do this for us to the same extent to which we naturally do this ourselves.

Ultimately, we must take control of our minds back from those who have guided us and steered us up until now. We have to look at everything new to us with a healthy degree of skepticism before choosing whether to confront it as possibly something we want or don't want contained in our own reality. Most things are digital static, afterall, and don't need to prey upon our minds. But to be totally and completely free, that is, to be completely free of anyone else's influence over control of our own mental soverignty, the right to rule our own immediate surroundings, one must first pass through an extreme, and to most discomforting, level of paranoia. We have to care very deeply about even the things that appear to be only "mental static."

When we do this we will find the evidence of the prescence even there of others attemptng to control our thoughts and to steer our reality. I won't get too deeply into this, since it seems too "far out" for most people to digest. I will say that most of the information I know about mental programming as a method of state control can be found in the [url=http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=454]KING KILL 33 (previously... on mk radio)[/url] issue of my NEXUS005 online e-zine. If you're interested in finding out more about how to use the methods "they" have been using against you, though, please feel free to explore at your own leisure the material I've written about the "Enochian" Communications System (the ECS), such as [url=http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=436]this brief article[/url] from my page on [url=http://www.benpadiah.com/calendar.html]the Atlantean Calendar[/url]. Also, at your leisure of course, you may choose to pursue reading about "why" the "Controllers" are telling us something other than what they, themselves believe, and about "what" they, themselves, believe, you might be interested in reading a little about the [url=http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewforum.php?f=38]Space Weather Apocalypse[/url] from NEXUS003 of my online e-zine.

[quote]

3) 9-11 was a cover-up of what? If 9-11 was orchestrated, what was it's goal? I do not think it was solely for one group to gain authority over another.

[/quote]

As I have described, 9-11 resulted in a splitting of the time-stream. It is not alone in this result, however, as I have also described that multiple alternate realities overlap invisibly, some connecting here, and others connecting there. I think 9-11 was the "dooms day" culmination of a CIA-originated operation, the we dream of Allen Dulles. It struck not at "national sovereignty" but at the American military (the pentagon), world-banking and business interests (the WTC towers), and the transition of "Democratic" powers of the executive branch of federal government (the white house was supposedly the fourth planned target). Now, we all see that all of these "targets" are corrupt with power to the extent of moral bankruptcy. This doesn't make the individual (citizen) "targets" or "victims" less than innocent, but it does usher in a new age of "low-intensity combat" and "perpetual conflict." In short, 9-11 struck a brush fire of constant violence that has engulfed the entire globe. But, as I say, this was all planned ages ago, by the NAZIs brought out by Project Paperclip, and even all this is only the dream of ages before, which was, like now, the product of the past, and so all our parallel universes constitute a single multiversal "sum" over all their individual "histories" throughout time.

Just as no one reality is better or worse than any other, and they all only differ from one another in some aspects, but never in all possible ways, and the only difference between them is our perception, we cannot say that those who have come to power as a result of 9-11 are "better" than "us," we cannot say, either, they are any "better" now, in this reality, where they have greater power, greater authority over more of our minds, than they would be had 9-11 never happened. It is not a matter of "better" or "worse" or "good" and "evil," it is a matter of resource allocation. How much you yourself think about how "good" or "evil" these people are, that is, blaming them OR praising them, is what determines how much authority they have over the masses, how much power they have over your own mind, how much percentage of what is important they comprise, etc. Therefore, I do not accept the "power" anyone does have, and so my thoughts on 9-11 can be called more "rational" and "objective" than most.

Most of the "players" in the events of 9-11 were guided by some philosophy or other that they themselves did not invent. You cannot blame a robot for human error, and so you cannot accuse Crowley of orchestrating any more "evil" outcomes than you can Jesus. As for these philosophies, I describe them at some greater length in [\[url=http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=268\]](http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=268)ben's conspiracy theories[/url], [\[url=http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=438\]](http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=438)the Cult of Sleep and the Order of Death[/url], [\[url=http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=491\]](http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=491)the Sleep-Walkers and the neo-Sethians[/url], [\[url=http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=487\]](http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=487)the crew that never sleeps and the Great Burner[/url] sections of NEXUS004.

4) why would the same group that built society up want to tear it down? This is anti-thetical to the entire "for power only" argument. Maintenance of hegemonic dominance does not require destruction, only maintenance, of the status quo.

[/quote]

Personally I don't think this. I'd asked this question to "Tundra" (MAQT), but he didn't really answer. I don't care to invent some lie, either, so I won't be playing "devil's advocate" for self-indulgent fictions of humour such as "belief" either. Ever notice how the same ones yelling about how important "belief" is are the same idiots who tell you how "evil" any degree of intelligence is beyond their own ability for comprehension? Notice I try not to do that. I censor my use of the word "belief" as much as possible. To me it's a "dirty" word. It's like, every time a "Christian" tells me they "believe" in Jesus, I think of them pissing all over whatever "reality" there might have ever been about his actual teachings.

Here is the link to a .pdf copy of my book

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/bookstore/new_world_order.pdf.zip[/url] (6.622Mb).
The book is in a .zip file so you will need to download this to your hard drive and read it on your computer offline or else print out a hard copy. It's rather short. As I say, it is "future news" from summer, 2001. Please enjoy.

Re: mentoring recommendations

[quote="benpadijah"]At this time I, benpadijah (Jon Gee) am going to begin co-mentoring BRobbins (Ben Robbins) in Master Asgenar's brief absence. I have contacted Master Asgenar in this regard, and he has expressed consent. I will be raising BRobbins from level four.

also at this time I'd like to offer my recommendation for acceptance of the applications submitted by the posters known on the board as:

Fait

Infinitus

Ramune

I believe these candidates would make excellent members. I realise of course the "recommendations" of masters does not affect the process of the Aeorpagite council approving them or not. This is merely meant to give potential mentors a "head's up" about prospective candidates.

<Lord Ferocia> there he is

<Lord Ferocia> Hello Benpadiah

<Lord Ferocia> welcome

> hey

<Lord Ferocia> are you with us?

<Lord Ferocia> hello

<Szadoska> Nice to meet u

> I think so

<Lord Ferocia> welcome glad you could come

> hello there

<LVX> connection troubles for everyone lately > sorry about that, please continue...

<Lord Ferocia> thats alright

<LVX> I had a hailstorm last night

<LVX> streets were flooded

<LVX> connections were bad

<Lord Ferocia> we were just discussing how one can bring about change with using visualizations and the various Magickal techniques

<Szadoska> that is intense I had that flash flood thing

<Lord Ferocia> yes those are dangerous

<Szadoska> anyway sorry back to will and intentions

<Lord Ferocia> well, first, I wanted to ask if Benpadiiah knew anything about the Sacred Names, and if he was able to read a little

<Lord Ferocia> so we dont confuse him

<Lord Ferocia> so Benpadiiah, do you know what i mean when I mention a Name?

<Lord Ferocia> in terms of this system?

<Lord Ferocia> is everyine still with me?

<LVX> I am

<soul rebel> yea

<Lord Ferocia> alright

<Lord Ferocia> well anyway

<Lord Ferocia> the point is, that visualizations are indeed, "matter" on a higher plane

<Lord Ferocia> to try and put it simply <Lord Ferocia> and that by holding these visuals in the mind we congeal them and bring them down into manisfestation

<Lord Ferocia> we can do this because our minds are composed of all these levels of being

<Lord Ferocia> and all comes together as a unified whole upon the higher

<Lord Ferocia> duality is an illusion of manifestation > sorry this connection is weird, I'm catching up now

<Lord Ferocia> when one stills the mind, it dissolves into the All

<Lord Ferocia> alright Benpadiiah thank you

<Lord Ferocia> we are talking about how to apply the Magickal or what we call the Sacred Names for change

<Lord Ferocia> and these names are composed od three of the Sacred Letters described in the group.

<Lord Ferocia> We just finished talking about how visualization, symbols, or sounds, can evoke change > ok, I'n good to go

<Lord Ferocia> and the idea is that we are all one on a higher plane, and that the mind itself is plugged into the process of manifestation

<Lord Ferocia> very good

<Lord Ferocia> so now

<Lord Ferocia> THE NAMES

<Lord Ferocia> as we saw in the last class

<Lord Ferocia> each Name can be broken down into a specific chart, one we call the Vene-Kah

<Lord Ferocia> a board or chart not unlike a Tic Tac Toe graph

<Lord Ferocia> each part of which describes all that there is

<Lord Ferocia> which is the Nine Aspects

<Lord Ferocia> first before we get further into reading and applying the Name, I wanted to describe HOW one generates a Name to begin with

<Lord Ferocia> Just as many Oracles, or divinatory devices rely on, the Agnaw relies on random or chance generations of results as well

<Lord Ferocia> forming the Names from a process of randomly picking markers, or "Stones" to form Letters, and finally a special Name

<Lord Ferocia> within this Name is everything that is needed to understand the question or problem, and all the forces at work within it

<Lord Ferocia> and also how to unravel the Knot that this problem or subject it

<Lord Ferocia> is

<Lord Ferocia> the first step is to aquire a pouch, and a set of 27 "Stones"

<LVX> is there an invocation to this?
<Lord Ferocia> yes there is <LVX> and, maybe a redundant question, Galamanta beforehand?
<Lord Ferocia> yes
<LVX> ok
<Lord Ferocia> and I will describe in a minute about all that <Lord Ferocia> but before i do i wanted to describe the device of the Oneth -ot
<Lord Ferocia> which one must have before they can do anything else
[Tue Oct 03 20:55:37 EDT 2006] Lord Ferocia
<LVX> welcome back
<Szadoska> ohoh
<Lord Ferocia> is everyone here?
<Szadoska> yes
<soul rebel> yea
<Lord Ferocia> was I the only one to leave?
<LVX> yes
<Szadoska> think so
<soul rebel> yea
<Lord Ferocia> oh no
<Lord Ferocia> ok sorry
<Lord Ferocia> I was describing the Oneth-ot <Lord Ferocia> did everyone get that?
<LVX> yes
<soul rebel> yea
<Lord Ferocia> alright
<Szadoska> well u never described it from my view but i know what it is <Szadoska> u said u were going to <Szadoska> then went offline FYI
<Lord Ferocia> the idea is to be able to randomly pick out nine stones (markers) from a pouch
<Lord Ferocia> and place these in order in the Nine Chambers of the Vene-kah
<Lord Ferocia> the nine aspects
<Lord Ferocia> ok ty Szadoska <Lord Ferocia> lets back up a second and describe the process in another way
<Lord Ferocia> lets just imagine here what the process is <Lord Ferocia> how the system sows
<Lord Ferocia> works
<Lord Ferocia> lets say, one is faced with a problem. Lets imagine someone is ill
<Lord Ferocia> of course, the system does not simply work on mundane matters, such as healing etc <Szadoska> so if u need to affect something in your life <Szadoska> that u want too <Lord Ferocia> but also spiritual mastery and enlightenment, but for the sake of being clear and easily understood, we shall use a very basic example <Lord Ferocia> we are faced with a problem. We need answers. We want to know how or what we can do for this person, or perhaps if we can do anything at all!
<Lord Ferocia> we then decided to create a Sacred Name for our situation which will act as both a divinatory answer to our problem

AND the actual tool as well

<Lord Ferocia> there are some details we can do, but to remain simply, lets say we simply begin to generate a name.

<Lord Ferocia> this is done by finding a secluded place where we cannot be disturbed

<Lord Ferocia> or at least the best place we can

<Lord Ferocia> we clean ourselves, and robe, and also perform any banishings, and here the Galamanta is used

<Lord Ferocia> a Qabalist may use the LBRP instead

<Lord Ferocia> we have with us the Oneth-ot and the Vene-Kah (The Vene-Kah being the board of nine squares)

<Lord Ferocia> we also should have with us a notebook with a pencil to record what we receive

<Lord Ferocia> we then proceed to relax, and perform the four fold breath

<Lord Ferocia> (note: before hand it is important to gather about the place of working things that link you with, or remind you of what you are seeking to know about)

<Lord Ferocia> the worker now relaxed sees around him the various objects, signs, words, or symbols that relate to his will

<Lord Ferocia> what he is seeking to gain an answer upon

<Lord Ferocia> he then invokes his Heralds Name, and then next his Secret Name which it rules

<Lord Ferocia> next he shall speak to his Herald, and ask it to provide him with the proper Name to describe his ordeal

<Lord Ferocia> and then he reaches into the pouch of 27 stones and pulls out one by one nine random stones, placing them in the order he picks them upon the board

<Lord Ferocia> (each stone being either positive, neutral, or negative)

<Lord Ferocia> is everyone with me?

<Szadoska> yes

<soul rebel> yea

<Szadoska> but i had a preview

<Szadoska> so it was a powerful thing i want to do it again

<Lord Ferocia> yes

<Lord Ferocia> ok

<Lord Ferocia> good

<LVX> is it advisable to write this down?

<Lord Ferocia> yes

<Lord Ferocia> this is the process

<Lord Ferocia> so you are picking these stones one at a time out of this pouch holding them, and as you do your mind is focused and intent and filled with the desire to KNOW

<Lord Ferocia> BUT try and remain neutral in what you see

<Lord Ferocia> seek

<Lord Ferocia> do not TRY and "hope" for a certain answer

<Lord Ferocia> you just be open to all responses, and desire only that you are given a correct response

<Lord Ferocia> after you are done, you should have a board (the nine squares of the Vene-Kah) filled with nine stines in a random pattern of polarities

<Lord Ferocia> each single stone in one of the nine aspects

<Lord Ferocia> and each one represents an arm of a letter that compses a Name

<Lord Ferocia> three letters, and three arms per petter

<Lord Ferocia> letter
<Lord Ferocia> this pattern arrived at is very important <Lord Ferocia> as it is the response and reflects then the problem, how it is composed and how it may be taken apart
<Lord Ferocia> after one receives the Name, he write it down, along with any would be impressions, ideas, or feelings etc that may occur during the process
<Lord Ferocia> and then one performs another Galamanta and closes <Lord Ferocia> now one has the Sacred Name to analyze <Lord Ferocia> is everyone with me so far? any questions?
<LVX> what is done with the old?
<soul rebel> yes
<Lord Ferocia> with what old?
<Szadoska> i think they think it replaces their old sacred name maybe?
<Lord Ferocia> No
<Szadoska> oh well i may be wroong i dont know what they think lol <soul rebel> no,I meant I understood <Szadoska> i thought that for a minute before <Lord Ferocia> see the name I am describing above is one for a specific purpose <Szadoska> the first time
<Lord Ferocia> and NOT the Secret Name
<Lord Ferocia> I am simply describing how to make a Sacred Name
<Lord Ferocia> alright
<Lord Ferocia> yes one then translates this pattern of stones into the three letters
<Lord Ferocia> this is done by knowing what polarity makes what type of arm for a letter <Lord Ferocia> understand?
<soul rebel> yes
<LVX> Im sort of confused
<Lord Ferocia> ok
<LVX> do you combine the two, or add one upon the other <LVX> to make six letters
<Lord Ferocia> no forget the Secret Name for now <Lord Ferocia> we are talking about ONE name, a new Name
<Lord Ferocia> for a specific problem as an example <soul rebel> one for doing a working right
<Lord Ferocia> now the Vene-Kah is the nine chambers and these are blank
<Lord Ferocia> yes
<Szadoska> it is like your card reading or I ching reading <Szadoska> too?
<Lord Ferocia> and after one pulls out nine random stones from the pouch and places them on the Vene-Kah he has nine stones in a random pattern
<Lord Ferocia> yes it is like your doing a reading
<Lord Ferocia> like choosing random cards and laying them down <LVX> are they placed randomly or done in an order by row or column?
<Lord Ferocia> but in a 3 x 3 square pattern
<Lord Ferocia> or layout
<Lord Ferocia> spread
<Lord Ferocia> there being three tyoes of stones: positive (white) neutral (red) and negative (black)

<Lord Ferocia> so you end up with a board of red and white and black stones all mixed up, nine of them in a random pattern

<Lord Ferocia> now

<Lord Ferocia> you can look at this tic tac toe board as three columns

[Tue Oct 03 21:23:22 EDT 2006] Lord Ferocia

<LVX> welcome back

<Lord Ferocia> this is annoying

<LVX> hahaha

<LVX> sorry

<Lord Ferocia> I dont know why it is acting up

<Lord Ferocia> and now not sure what you heard and didnt

<soul rebel> it was doing that with me at first

<LVX> tic tac toe columns

<Lord Ferocia> hmmm

<Lord Ferocia> ok

<LVX> was what I last got

<Lord Ferocia> real quick

[quote="poptop"]I still consider some lying to be diplomacy - telling an attractive lie for the right reasons.[/quote]

[quote="Teknorat"]poptop what on earth is the point of playing stupid little games of half truths and lies? No need to be harsh about things but beating around the bush is pointless for both parties.[/quote]

[quote="faypuppy"]girls don't see it as beating around the bush tek..we see it as preserving the other person's feelings the best we can...[/quote]

[quote="vieome"]So it appears that the whole love thing is only a game. Lie when appropriate. I was labouring under the illusion that maybe a love like Neos and Trinitys was possible. But I guess it is best to play the game like Mero. What lipstick women? There is no lipstick. Or maybe one just has to (hand)le the situation solo... hurt no one and no one hurts you.[/quote]

[quote="poptop"]Fay's right , of course. There is a world of difference between a lie that allows everyone to save face and beating around the bush, Tek. I am not suggesting anyone prolong the unpalatable unnecessarily.

We wimmin just like everyone to be eternally happy and playing nicely; truth comes a pretty poor second.

I posit that anyone that says s/he is not a liar, is a LIAR. The only question in my mind is what each of us considers to be worth lying about.[/quote]

[quote="benpadiah"] [quote="poptop"]We wimmin just like everyone to be eternally happy and playing nicely; truth comes a pretty poor second.[/quote]

Idealism should differentiate between "truth(s)" and "The Truth" in a ratio of 2/3 to 1/3, though. Moderation, even in moderation.

[quote="poptop"]The only question in my mind is what each of us considers to be worth lying about.[/quote]

Realism should determine between objectively verifiable "Reality" and, even rational, subjective perceptual "realities," though. We can't entertain the notion of any invisible causes for any visible affects. Insofar as humans are materially manifest, their behaviour is determined by materially manifest causes (DNA and stimuli). Anything less is Solipsism.

[quote="poptop"]I posit that anyone that says s/he is not a liar, is a LIAR.[/quote]

Applying tautological sophistry (so-called "impossible loop" reasoning) is not the same thing as unbiased collection of data on a case-by-case basis, though.

I was worried there. For a minute I thought you'd managed to unify idealism and realism. I dislike lies, personally, and wouldn't want them to be the bridge across the gap between "Reality" and "Ideals." I see them as a the gap itself.

Also, guys, have you considered that little white lies will build up over time and eventually blow-up in the face of everyone involved? It may keep the peace in the short-term, but in the long-term it only makes things worse.

-ben[/quote]

[quote="poptop"][quote="vieome"]I was labouring under the illusion that maybe a love like Neos and Trinitys was possible. [/quote]

Possible Vieome, but rare. Very rare.

Notwithstanding The Matrix and Mills and Boon in all its forms, mutual passion is a highly unusual situation. If fiction is to be believed, it usually requires quite a lot of suffering along the way and, usually, results in one or both parties dying.[/quote]

[quote="FoXDie"][quote="poptop"]

We wimmin just like everyone to be eternally happy and playing nicely; truth comes a pretty poor second.[/quote]

I was going to say maybe that's why most leaders are men... but then yeah... I don't think verifiable evidence points in that direction :lol:

[quote]I posit that anyone that says s/he is not a liar, is a LIAR. The only question in my mind is what each of us considers to be worth lying about.[/quote]

I don't believe that that was ever a contention. However I do believe it is our moral responsibility to strive for honesty. But of course, no one is perfect.[/quote]

[quote="poptop"]Laughing My Ass Off - I doubt women intrinsically have the moral high ground - merely less opportunity for wholesale bad behaviour.

Morality is about right and wrong - I don't think it is quite as black and white as telling the truth/telling a lie. So the second sentence regarding lying was probably the important one - we may have different views about where it is appropriate/moral/ethical to lie.

Just one question, please noting the qualifier: [list]Where the outcome will be [i]exactly the same[/i], why is it more moral to tell the truth, if it causes pain, than to tell a lie, that causes no pain?[/list]

I think we are straying into the realms of philosophy now, so it may be time to have a new story....

I'm begining to feel like Pontius Pilate.[/quote]

[quote="benpadiah"] [quote="poptop"] [list] Where the outcome will be [i]exactly the same[/i], why is it more moral to tell the truth, if it causes pain, than to tell a lie, that causes no pain? [/list] [/quote]

if one results in pain and the other does not, how are they "exactly" or in any way even remotely "the same"?

And fwiw, all I'm saying is that maintaining a "polite fiction" is like holding a beach ball under water. You can only do it for so long, and when you can't hold it down any longer, there's no telling how high up that thing is going to go when it bursts out of the water.

I don't think I've said this in a long while, but... I agree completely with ben.

It's a better [b]moral rule[/b] to tell the truth. Try to visualize what would happen if the rule was that people didn't have to tell the truth. Chaos would ensue and eventually there would no longer be a concept of truth and so the rule is self-contradictory.

Also, as I've said before, even if the truth causes emotional pain to someone, I would still contend that it is showing them more respect than lying right to their face. Feelings mend eventually, if the person is mentally and emotionally healthy... [/quote]

I've already answered this question:

Stop trying to trap me in some contradiction and just admit I'm right! :P [/quote] [quote="poptop"]:lol: - love the response. In my defence, that was some 3 months before I joined TLFC.

I can see that this stance may well be working for you now. I believe (so not based on quantifiable fact, merely my experience) that things become less binary as you go along. I have found this to be true for me, perhaps your experience will be different.

That you recognise that there are times telling the complete and unvarnished truth may be damaging - such as people with emotional and mental health issues - indicates you agree there are exceptions to the rule. As I said earlier, we all make our own decisions about where the boundary sits for those exceptions.

I am not suggesting it is anything other than immoral to lie in order to simplify one's own life, or make oneself seem better than one is, or to get something from another person or whatever. I am trying to submit that there are times when telling the truth can be hurtful, damaging and serve no good purpose.

If everything else is effectively equal, why cause the grief?[/quote]

True. But then is there some way to make a general rule for what sort of situation it is more moral to lie than to tell the truth?

In a case where the truth would cause undue pain, I would say that it is morally required to [i]not tell the truth[/i] if doing so:

[list]Has no negative future consequences for either party.

Puts no unwanted responsibility or liability on the liar.

[/list]

If someone is terribly ill and you tell them that they are looking great, that is a lie but it makes the person feel better, has no foreseeable negative consequences, and puts no responsibility or liability on the "white liar."

If someone wants to date you and you are not attracted to them "in that way" and you lie saying something like the following:

[list]A. I'm already dating someone,

B. My psychologist says I should take some time to be by myself,
C. I'm gay,
D. I'm too busy to date,
etc.[/list]

Then in these cases there will most definitely be negative future consequences and/or responsibilities/liabilities if (relative to A-D above):

[list]A. It is discovered you are single, you tell someone else you are single, etc. In the extreme "movie-style" scenarios (LOL) you may hire an actor to play your date... this means you have to shell out cash and make more lies and yeah... awkward.
B. You will be thought to have some mental disorder and will be treated differently, plus more lies will be required.
C. You will start to get set up on dates with gay dudes (or lesbians) and that would be totally weak if you weren't gay. 'Nuff said.
D. What if the other person happens to see you out at a club trying to "mack on the ladies." More grief and more lies![/list]

I'm sure other similar scenarios would occur with other lies showing that in this situation lying would not be morally required, and I would go so far as to say that it is morally unacceptable.[/quote]

[quote="poptop"]Have we reached agreement? I think we've reached agreement. :shock:

We could venture into the lie by omission and lie that everyone knows is a lie but allows [i]nolo contendere[/i] as they are both polite fictions that grease the cogs of society.

If someone is terribly [say terminally] ill, they know they look dreadful and it's all sort of a joint conspiracy to allow both of you to retain a normal relationship for as long as possible. This is kindness.

Perhaps this was less a discussion about lying and more about whether morality is absolutely dependent on truth.[/quote]

[quote="sunnyday"]Sometimes it is what is left out that counts. Let me use that hoary old chestnut that we seem to favour, the terminally ill. Saying they look great might well be true, all things considered. Sometimes it's perspective :)/[/quote]

[quote="Teknorat"]*note to self: Lie to women more*[/quote]

[quote="FoXDie"] [quote="Teknorat"]*note to self: Lie to women more*[/quote]

:lol:

Afterall it causes more joy if women think I am a Billionaire with... a robot that can fly, right?
:P[/quote]

[quote="skaje"]There's a few people that I am close enough to that I flat out will not lie to them about anything, even if it will hurt their feelings. Same goes for them to me. It's refreshing to never have to stop and think if they are telling the complete truth to me. However, I lie to most people for various reasons. Friends that I'm not that close to, so that their feelings aren't hurt. For instance, when someone isn't invited to a party. Or my boss, when I overdid it the night before and don't feel like coming into work, I'll call in "sick". Or even my parents, about far too many things.

I love the truth as much as anyone, but tactical lying is a necessary evil, otherwise it gets all "Liar, Liar". But it's nice having a few people (my sister and a few friends) that I'm so close to that I can say anything and it won't jeopardize our relationship.[/quote] [quote="benpadiah"]obviously if someone is terminally ill, it would be a case-by-case basis based on proximity of acquaintance. If someone was a good buddy of mine, and I was going to die, or had a booger in my nose, I would want them to tell me if they thought I looked bad because of it. It wouldn't mean the same thing for an old friend to tell me I "look awful" if I am dying than it would for someone I barely know to tell me that. Then again though, even in certain long-lasting relationships, I wouldn't want to be told I "look awful" regardless of whether it was because I was dying or simply because I had a booger, such as by my mother, who usually tells me that only to annoy me.

Now, if we look at such particular situations on a case-by-case basis, where each relationship between two or more individuals is different, then we can add these to a comparison of a universally accepted (and more-or-less universally applicable) "moral" rule. In short, take all the people who occasionally tell lies and weigh the number of them against the number of people who tell the truth more often. Obviously the people who tell the truth more often outnumber the people who only occasionally lie because the number of people who lie occasionally is contained within the number of people who tell the truth often, and then this is added to by the percentage of the population swayed by subscription to the "moral" rule prohibiting lying.

So, in essence, most people can be trusted not to lie, and therefore it is safer not to lie either, because to go against a majority "moral" rule would bring about undesired situations down the road.

However, if you take the same scale, and weigh the number of people that lie occasionally, plus the number of compulsive liars (including gamblers, alcoholics, adulterers, cheats, thieves, drug-abusers, etc.), then you will find the opposite than before becomes the case: instead of being able to trust most people not to lie to you, you can actually trust next to no one. The number of occasional and compulsive liars combined is weighed only against the number of die-hard moral idealists who always tell the truth.

So, the question really is, is the number of compulsive liars or the number of moral idealists the "swing" margin that sways the occasional liars who usually tell the truth? If the compulsive liars outnumber the moral idealists then we are faced with a world drastically different from if the moral idealists outnumber the compulsive liars.

Personally I would prefer a world in which a greater number of people can be trusted to tell the truth than to lie. However as we see, this is not necessarily something that can be applied as a universal truth, and will in reality have to break down to be based on a case-by-case basis.

If it comes down to a gender thing, where Steven Wright's old adage "I never believe anything women tell me" holds true, then I am willing to compromise my moral idealism a little bit in favour of the fairer sex. This does not mean I condone their doing the same to me. I do not like lying, and have found that it tends to multiply itself and complexify any and every situation it can. Therefore, to lie once is to begin a whole alternate plot-line, parallel to reality, which must, in addition to regular reality, be maintained. I do not value this, personally, but I understand the point of view of people who do. My father is a compulsive liar, for instance, and I understand that, without that habit, he would suffer greatly. It is his survival mechanism, his security blanket, etc. and I am not interested in taking that away from him, or anyone for whom compulsive lying is important. I even lie to my mother about my use of marijuana, so I am fully aware of this situation from both extreme angles.

I am not one to pass judgment, but it might be a fun experiment to conduct a poll here (or somewhere, at some point) with "do you prefer to" as the question and "lie" or "tell the truth" as the only two poll options. It would pretty much answer the question as to whether, for survival's sake, it really is safer to tell the truth more often, or to lie all the time.

[quote="poptop"]With a poll, how many of us would lie though?

There has actually been some research done on lying: [list]'Most people, she [Bella DePaolo]found, lie once or twice a day—almost as often as they snack from the refrigerator or brush their teeth. Both men and women lie in approximately a fifth of their social exchanges lasting 10 or more minutes; over the course of a week they deceive about 30 percent of those with whom they interact one-on-one. Furthermore, some types of relationships, such as those between parents and teens, are virtual magnets for deception: "College students lie to their mothers in one out of two conversations," reports DePaolo. (Incidentally, when researchers refer to lying, they don't include the mindless pleasantries or polite equivocations we offer each other in passing, such as "I'm fine, thanks" or "No trouble at all." An "official" lie actually misleads, deliberately conveying a false impression. So complimenting a friend's awful haircut or telling a creditor that the check is in the mail both qualify.)'[/list] [url=<http://www.psychologytoday.com/articles/pto-19970501-000033.html>]The Truth about Lying[/url]

My favourite quote from the article[list]...the people least likely to lie are those who score high on psychological scales of responsibility and [b]those with meaningful same-sex friendships[/b]...[/list] So not lying is (gay) [not that there's anything wrong with that].[/quote]

As usual, poptop, you seem to be presenting the right information, but drawing the wrong conclusion. "Meaningful same-sex friendships" does not in any way that I can understand translate as "(gay)" to me, nor should it to you, unless you are reading too much into your own "meaningful same-sex friendships" which would be, ahem, "gay" of you... not that there's anything wrong with that.

Give Ben a prize! My fallacious argument through implied euphemism is revealed for what it was - a shallow and cheap shot.

I dispute the 'as usual' crack however; that seems to be fallacious argument through lying - how apt. :lol:[/quote]

1) I am not Libertarian. At first I assumed, or rather, was led, or allowed to believe, that the "libertarianism" of the IO was a ruse, that is, that it was a public "cover-story" behind and beyond which we could operate on our own individual political philosophy. This turned out not to be the case, or rather, it turned out that Merrick, when he returned, would not accept any non-Libertarian political philosophies associated with his IOBB. I made it clear from the very start that I don't like Ayn Rand, and consider her a pseudo-philosopher and a bad writer. Obviously these opinions run contrary to the "party-line" of the IOBB administration. I ran afoul of Methos, my original mentor, on the first degree when I argued with him about the validity of Rand's arbitrary redefinitions of common terms such as "rights" based on her weak understanding of economics. Subsequently I came to believe one did not have to be "libertarian" to belong to the IO, however Merrick's posts after his return corrected this "assumption" of mine.

2) I am not a liar. I consider all "double-talk" and all twisting of people's words (particularly claiming not to understand someone when in fact you do, solely to frustrate them and draw them into being defensive) as being lies. I also consider the phrase "silence is an answer" to be a lie of the highest class, since in reality silence is the absence of an answer, or, more accurately, the exact opposite of an answer, that is, of a reply either one way or another. Repeatedly I asked Methos, Merrick, Tawnie and Dharma direct, simple, "yes" or "no" questions. I never received a direct, simple, "yes" or "no" answer. Merrick told me "silence is an answer," Tawnie told me I was "what is wrong with this world," Dharma posted smilies and Methos told me "I don't even know where to begin to tell you what all is wrong with your question." These are blatantly deceitful comments and the tactics employed by those who, in my opinion, are trying to cover up for the fact that they know nothing. The "Great Secret" of the IOBB is the incompetence of the IOBB GMs and the IOBB administration. Acting like you have something to hide only attracts curiosity, and, if you have nothing to hide, this only frustrates those who are genuinely seeking to find out the hidden secret of the Order.

3) I was under "investigation" by the IOBB GM's. They had talked to several of my friends behind my back about me, without ever once initiating any direct dialogue with me, "to my face," so to speak. These friends then came to me on the behalf of the IOBB GMs and told me to "tone it down," or to "play along," or to "reconcile." They never told me to apologise, which indicates to me that they were sympathetic to my complaints, and felt that the IOBB GMs were indeed irresponsible and were just as much, if not moreso, responsible for their unsympathetic treatment of me as I was. By not asking me to apologise, they tacitly confirmed they agreed with my position, although they had been made to feel their advancement in the IOBB would be helped by speaking to me on behalf of the IOBB GMs, or that their advancement in the IOBB would be threatened by associating with me. To me, this is unacceptable activity.

4) the IOBB is a fraud. Tawnie specifically told me I was wrong that Merrick had ever been associated with Solomon Tulbure, although Sara, who had known Tulbure personally, told me Merrick had been a member of Tulbure's OWO (proto-IOBB) forum. The official story-line was that Merrick "discovered" the Illuminati Tulbure sought. In fact, there are no direct ties between the IOBB and the "Illuminati" of Adam Weishaupt, and in fact they hold a very different political philosophy than Weishaupt. There is no such thing as an "Illuminati Order" associated with the IOBB "GMs" or the IOBB administrators. They created the IOBB "out of thin air," without any ties or links of any kind to Weishaupt's original Illuminati, and Merrick himself admits to knowing next to nothing about Weishaupt's Illuminati, despite claiming direct ties to the "Illuminati Order." Merrick claims he was personally initiated by Dharma, however he also admitted he drafted the IOBB application, though he denies knowingly having borrowed it from the Church of Satan. When I questioned each of the IOBB GMs about these issues directly I was given the perpetual run-around, as per point two above.

Add to these five reasons the general ineptitude of Tawnie's skills as IOBB administrator, and Merrick's utter ignorance of my contributions aside from my frustration with his wife's administrative ineptitude, as well as his rush to judgment, as well as the "party-line" that no one "upline" from the IOBB GM's "trusts me" enough to want to have contact with me, apparently because they have no one else's word to go on but Merrick's, who, after his absence, had no one else's word to go on but Tawnie's, and those are the reasons I quit the IOBB.

For whatever it may be worth to anyone, I will maintain the IOBB2 forums on my own site in the manner the material was presented to me at the time I was a member of the IOBB. It should be obvious by now that, by doing so, I am in no way supporting or endorsing either the IOBB nor its corrupt and malignant administrators. As far as I am concerned, these people are the scum of the earth, and are traitors to the highest good, that is, being true to one's self. They may have managed to delude themselves and one another with their lies and incompetence, but not me.

There are times when there is no OHO of the Order of Death.

At these times, the role of the IHO is crucial.

The role of the IHO when there is no OHO is to find a replacement OHO.

At times, this is difficult. When the IHO has not got many accesses to others or when the IHO is very isolated from the pool of potential candidates, the selection process is very limited.

Such is the case now. The current IHO, Laura Bush, has few people in her life who she trusts as much as her husband, US President George W. Bush.

Thus, the position of power is shifting. The current IHO, Laura Bush, is relying more heavily on the support of her husband, George W. Her insights, therefore, are growing to govern his own thinking.

Diplomacy is becoming the dominant paradigm on how to handle the mess in Iraq that George W. started following 9-11. A female speaker of the House represents the guiding influence of passivity and pacifism.

However, the situation in Iraq is tricky. Until this point, there has not been a great deal of violence being reported on from the war in the US and the english-speaking world press. However with the House and Senate elections showing a strong Democratic sympathy in the American citizens, the media has again gained its liberal bias.

For example, the Palastinians and the Israelis have been shelling one another on the Gaza strip for several months. The first the US and world press reported on any of this to the english-speaking public was that a cease-fire had been called following several months of unreported-on violence. Likewise, the death-toll and atrocities (burning alive of Sunnis by Shiites, etc.) has become a daily occurance in the journalism of the news media, whereas before the top headlines centred more around celebrity gossip.

All of this indicates the weakening of the stance of the current neo-con administration. Following military philosophies of the PNAC predicted by the CFR decades earlier (and recognised even by political and economic theorists as early as the beginning of the Cold War), the neocons had been attempting to engulf the whole globe in "low-intensity conflict." The name for this insidious plot was "the war on terror."

The now moreso Democratic leaning among the US people reflects the proximity of the US leaders to the neo-Sethian IHO of the Order of Death, Laura Bush. Just as their power is weakening its hold over the minds of the masses by philosophical dominance of the news media, so too is Laura Bush drawing additional energy from those immediately surrounding her.

Even as I write this, her tongue caresses George W.'s earlobe, laying a nest of lies like a spider leaving a host of tiny spider eggs behind. Her husband had previously acted as the OHO of the Order of Death under the IHO Ariel Sharon. However following Sharon's stroke, coma and death, the IHO of the Order of Death did not become George W. Bush, as both the IHO and OHO expected. Instead, the Order elected OHO George W.'s wife Laura Bush as the new IHO. This weakened the position of the OHO, and George W. Bush lost his power over the Order of Death. Thus, between then and now there has been no official OHO.

However, Laura Bush, the current IHO, has few other people she can rely on than her husband, the former OHO. She needs him to fill the position of OHO under her, as IHO, solely because he has, until now, kept her sheltered away from the potential candidate group of other OHO's, as well as many of the realities of the post 9-11 world controlled by the neo-Sethian Order of Death through the neo-con political party in the US.

This confusion amongst the chief executives of the Order of Death, that is, Laura Bush's election over her husband, and her continuing need of him to serve in his prior office, only now under her, manifest themselves as various lesser schisms amongst the neo-Sethians of the Order of Death. Their gossiping and rumours are dividing more and more neo-Sethians away from the hardline neo-con party at the centre of the neo-Sethian movement. Many more moderate neo-Sethians are beginning to doubt the neo-con administration of the Order of Death and of the US.

The result of this has been the firing or resignation of an increasing number of close-knit neo-Sethians amongst the neo-con administration. Last year John Ashcroft departed as US Attorney General, and this year Donald Rumsfeld stepped down as US Defense Secretary. To a growing number of neo-Sethians, this indicates a decrease in the hard-line philosophy of the neo-con US administration. The two "most prominent" neo-cons still in office are now only US Vice President Dick Cheney and Condeleezza Rice, US Secretary of State, the only other neo-con advocate and neo-Sethian member of the Order of Death than her husband is his father, George H.W. Bush.

If Laura Bush comes to rely on the influence on her husband of his father, George H.W. Bush, then what follows will be far worse than what has come before. We see that H.W. has in his favour the more paleo-conservative, neo-liberal, Michael Hayden in H.W.'s former post as Director of the USCIA (Central Intelligence Agency). Hayden is the former director of the NSA (National Security Agency) during the critical years under President Bill Clinton's second term, and the time of the 9-11 terrorist attacks during George W. Bush's first term. The appointment by George H.W.'s son to the position formerly held by his father, George H.W. himself, of the pilot General in the USAF, especially considering that George W. himself was a pilot in the Air Force as well, indicates a strong change in the next five years toward military incompetence and administrative ineptitude. This will likely lead to the US being the increasing target of public violence agitated by the gossiping and rumours of the Order of Death. This will be, philosophically, the culmination of the ineptly run "War on Terror," which will have served to agitate the likelihood for terrorism to occur on US soil. The result will be to increase and spread the type of warfare now being practised by the US in Iraq.

Now, this is basically the position of George H.W. Bush. It was under him that the CIA began growing the middle-eastern terrorists in Afghanistan to fight the waning Soviet Empire. These "terrorists" (specifically the Mujahadeen) then turned on their apparent benefactors and were used as a ruse for a strategically planned and operated attack on the US. This was 9-11. Now, other middle-eastern groups are being associated with the potential for such types of "terrorist" activity that are not armed, ideological soldiers, but that are legitimate parties representing popular factions amongst the populace. These types of legitimate political parties include Hamas in Palestine, recently pulverised by Israel, and other more hard-line Moslem political parties in Iran (under the Supreme Leader, the Ayatollah, Ali Khamenei) and Iraq (representing the Shiites). These governments were largely installed by the USCIA during the 1950's, along with others such as the current royal House of Saudi Arabia, and all of them have been long-time trading partners under US Presidents Ronald Reagan, George H.W. Bush, Bill Clinton and now George W. Bush.

It may seem like a case of "biting the hand that feeds," however just as the fundamentalist terrorists seemed to turn on their CIA arms suppliers, so too will the neo-liberals being appointed now to succeed the neo-cons in 2008 use the very governments the US helped install in the middle east to arm their own "terrorist" fundamentalists as soldiers to fight against the US on American soil. In other words, by "creating terrorists" today, George W. Bush and the neo-con's policy has left a "lingering problem" for the politicians of tomorrow.

Under the tutelage of George H.W. Bush, George W. has fomented hostility in the middle east that will have repercussions on the US after the end of his term as presidency, effectively creating a mess and then expecting someone else to come in and clean it up. The person who is currently being depended on to "clean up" after her husband is the president's wife, Laura Bush. That is why she was elected as the IHO of the Order of Death after the death of prior IHO Ariel Sharon.

It is most likely, judging from the recent death of the former-KGB agent assassinated for speaking out against Russian President Vladimir Putin, that if George W. had his own way, that is, had he rather than Laura been elected IHO, that he would rather align himself with Putin than fall back on the domestic weakness representing the American public's increasing trend toward Democracy.

This he, George W., would believe would create the US/Russian philosophical global hegemony that would serve as the legacy for his father, George H.W.

However, because George W. is not the IHO, but is instead the OHO under his wife Laura, he cannot officially make such an alliance without upsetting her position as IHO. It is for this reason that George W.'s role as OHO has been left under so much question as to be generally believed unfilled.

George W. was appointed OHO at the same time, in 2000, as he was unfairly elected president of the US, being appointed over the rightful US president Al Gore, former Vice President under President Clinton, by the Supreme Court, who themselves had largely been appointed by George W.'s father, George H.W., while he was president before Clinton.

Thus, we see that, though the IHO and OHO of the neo-con faction within the neo-Sethian controlled Order of Death are indeed Laura and George W. Bush, the de facto IHO and OHO of the Order of Death would be, or rather, are George H.W. Bush and Russian president Vladimir Putin.

Now, George H.W. is a natural born neo-Sethian, and Vladimir Putin, appointed to his position by former Russian President Boris Yeltsen, has long held an extremist view on anti-Terrorism in the Russian federal subject of Chechnya. These make both men ideal candidates for the subsequent positions currently held by the weakening Mr. and Mrs. President George W. Bush.

However, and most unfortunately for all involved, it is not up to George W. Bush to make this strategic decision on his own behalf. It falls to the woman whose tongue is in the ear of the US neo-con President, Laura Bush, who is the True IHO, above her OHO husband George W.

Now, Laura Bush could urge George W. to pursue the course of wisdom and build a legacy for his father, former-president George H.W. by maintaining a hard-line stance against terrorism and allying himself with Putin. However, Laura Bush has become confused by the overtures of George H.W. Bush to create the Islamic fundamentalist nations of the middle-east in the first place. As a neo-Sethian, she sympathizes with the "terrorists."

As such, she sees little difference between the foot-soldiers of Jihad, the armed soldier "terrorists" (Mujahadeen, etc.) and the far right-wing political parties in control in both the middle-east and the developing nations of both Russia and the west. The reason for the IHO Laura Bush's crucial doubt in this critical moment is the clouding of her fore-sight by her own close alliance to the neo-cons surrounding her and her husband.

Laura Bush's fatal choice is to align philosophically more with the neo-con neo-Sethian members of the Order of Death Condoleezza Rice (her own pick for OHO and the next Republican candidate for the presidency) and Dick Cheney (whom she would like to serve a second term as Vice President and to be the IHO). This is because of her regret at her election as IHO, and would have truly preferred it had her husband gotten the position rather than her. Her election occurred over her husband because of his simultaneous appointment as OHO and as US President.

She will therefore likely refer her husband, US President George W. Bush to follow the guidance of Vice President Dick Cheney over the innate desire he must feel to ally himself, on behalf of his father, to Vladimir Putin. Dick Cheney will likely be pushing already for a Condoleezza Rice Republican presidential ticket in order to ingratiate himself to Laura's conciliatory position of pacifism and the expected neo-liberalism to come. Among the current neo-con administration of the Order of Death there is a general consensus that Dick Cheney, long time ally of George H.W., has the strongest pull with the US Department of Energy. He is generally seen as a Halliburton oil-baron.

As with many figures in the Order of Death, the neo-cons Dick Cheney and Condoleezza Rice are not much like how they appear on the surface. Condoleezza, who appears to be a war-hawk on the side of the neo-cons and fiercely loyal to the anti-terrorism policies of George W., would be forced into an inept position to handle the US presidency and the Order of Death office of OHO at the same time. As a minority group (African American female) among the neo-cons, she would be left entirely responsible for "cleaning up" their "mess." Dick Cheney, the real brains behind the transition of the west off oil-dependency and into usage of "free" (anti-gravity) energy (ZPE), would be blamed for having been behind the plot to invade Iraq following 9-11 in the first place. It would mean, as Laura Bush must well realise, the end of the neo-cons within the neo-Sethians and the end of the neo-Sethians in the Order of Death.

She is following an ancient plan.

It is natural for her to push Bush in the direction of Dick.

However it would be far wiser for her to encourage her husband to honor his father in the manner he, W. himself, chooses as the best course of action. If W. only could be allowed to, he would maintain the hard-line stance on anti-terrorism and align himself with Putin. However he feels he is being forced, by the pressure from his wife, to concede the position to the neo-liberalism of a minority president and an impeachable vice president to succeed the current neo-cons administration.

This appears, quite rightly, to be a symptom of short-sightedness on the part of Laura Bush. She does not seem to perceive that H.W. created the Islamic militants as "toy-soldiers" for his son to drop bombs on from airplanes flying overhead. She does not seem to see that it really should be he, and not herself, who shares such proximity to the heart of the "ruler of the free world." Instead, she has followed the path determined for her by reading the writings of Tim LeHay, the psychic-reincarnation of Church of Satan founder Anton Szandor Lavey. He has instructed her to increase the tensions in the middle-east, but to do so by allying more with Dick Cheney in secret than to the best interest of her own husband. Her focus is on those close to her, and not on those close to the heart of her husband. She will not see W.'s desire to align with Putin. She will instead advise W. to align with Cheney.

Dick Cheney is a member of the Cult of Sleep. He is not now even officially a member of the Order of Death. However he is a neo-Sethian, and would likely succeed Laura Bush as IHO based on both her and her husband's influence. This would witness the appointment as inner-head of the Order of Death of someone who has not even officially been initiated into the Order of Death itself. Someone who is a mere novice in his fore-sight for the future, his own fate in it, and the coming of free-energy. Dick Cheney's ascension would only be possible following from the appointment of W. as both US president and OHO of the Order of Death. However it is already obvious the pull of Laura Bush toward reconciliation and pacifism in the form of the Democratic congress. Bush will choose Cheney, whose own lack of foresight will be the downfall of the entire Order.

In this very accurate way, George H.W. Bush will ascend to the position of IHO. After the downfall of the hard-line anti-terrorist philosophy, Dick Cheney will be persecuted ruthlessly should he remain in public office. This will be an aspect of the neo-liberal movement to come. With Laura and Dick out of the way, George H.W. will see nothing stand between himself and the long awaited and much deserved position of IHO. Nothing, that is, except the ascendancy of his own son.

Why did Cain kill Abel? The bible tells us the Nefilim were "giants, men of reknown," the "love-children" of angels and the wives of men. This is because Cain and Abel looked up to God, as both were the children of Adam, God's most beloved Creation. Cain was jealous of Abel, just as were the fallen angels (the Grigori of Slavonic Enoch or Annunaki of Qumran Enoch) jealous of the beauty of the wives of the mortals.

Cain, thus, was the father of Tubal-Cain, of Jabal, of Jubal and of Naamah upon his own great, great, great, great grand-daughters, Zillah and Adah, the daughters of Lamech. Thus it was Tubal-Cain, Jabal and Jubal who conspired to kill the prorotypical Hiram Abiff in the tomb of Enoch. So had Cain and Abel both looked up to God, and thus had Cain killed Abel, so too did Tubal-Cain, in the tomb of Enos in the city of Enoch conspire against Cainan, the architect, in the time of the life of Lamech.

They laboured on an underground temple to enhouse the pillars of Orichalc upon which the Book of Raziel had been inscribed. In the darkness Cainan, that is, the human son of Seth, Enos, was conspired against by the children of Cain, brothers of Enos' wife Naamah. Outside the city of Enoch, known by the Greeks as Atlantis, Enos, mortal grandson of Adam and Eve, was slaughtered in the deep underground tomb by Tubal-Cain, by Jabal and by Jubal. He cried up to the Light of God above. It was Naamah herself who slit his throat.

However, look again! All this was nothing but the karma of the fallen angels! For just as had Cain conceived of Tubal-Cain, who would kill Enos, who would be translated into the Metatron, the most High angel of God, so too was Cain jealous of Abel not for his wife, but for his sacrifice, his offering. The angels who had fallen did so in order to breed with the wives of men because Cain and Abel had called down the Shekinah, the presence of God, and had fought over her. The angels, the Annunaki, Cain's lineage, the Nefilim, and the lineage of Seth, the prototypical Messiah, all co-existed at the time of the city of Enoch.

This was during the Aeon of Ialdabaoth, that is, of Samael or Saklas, known as "the blind" for he could not conceive of a greater Power than Himself. Now Ialdabaoth is said to be the same as Shemiyazza, the chief over the fallen angels according to the scribes of Qumran. This is because when Ialdabaoth rebelled against God, known as the fall of Lucifer, the angels, that is, the Archons, surrounding him also fell with him. The Archons, that is, the Annunaki fallen angels, bred with the wives of men. It is said by the Gnostics Satan Himself conceived Cain upon Eve, but this is not true. Cain was conceived by Adam on Eve before the expulsion from paradise.

Just as the angels bred with the wives of men because of the jealousy of Cain for Abel, so too did they fall as a result of the trespass of Adam and Eve. The karma of the angels before then was not bound to man, because man did not yet at that time exist. The angels were bound only to God. Now, of course, the angels can be summoned to do the bidding of the Higher Will of men, using angel magick, such as the Anglican "Enochian magick" of John Dee. However this is clinging to the divine, the ideal, and only results in the clinging to the mundane and the manifest by the divine.

Now, the difference between the OHO and the IHO of the Order of Death are similar in many respects to the Creator and the Creation. It may seem as though the OHO has ultimate authority, since if they begin to make bold moves on behalf of the Order in public, the Order will be forced to either follow suit or else publically separate themselves from their OHO. Thus it might seem safe for an OHO to do whatever they want to with impunity, abusing the authority given to them by the Order of Death by making the business of the Order public, however this is in fact the riskiest thing that an OHO could possibly do, and has always resulted in failure. The reason for this is that, because this occurs so rarely, any free thought on behalf of the OHO has always corresponded to an event the Order of Death refers to as the Aeon of the Great Burner. This is when the Order uses magick to make it appear as though the natural God Himself has risen up against the rebellious OHO.

Now, as I said the actions of the OHO and the Aeon of the Great Burner correspond to the relationship between a creator and its creation. This means the role of the IHO as correspondent between the Order of Death and the natural God must be as magician, allowing the majority of the Order of Death access through the IHO themselves to the Power of the natural God. Therefore, sometimes the natural God is called the "Great Architect," and sometimes He has been called "the Great Burner." However whether Krishna, Brahma or Shiva aspect is revealed at the time, it is always understood this Great God is the same to everyone everywhere. By accessing this "level of awareness" they tap into seemingly "super-natural" power.

Now, just as a Creator has the Greatest Liberty to be able to Destroy their Creation, so too is the relationship between the IHO and the OHO of the Order of Death, at the times known as Aeons of the Great Burner, one of Creation and of Destruction, a time of polarised extremes, and of brothers fighting back to back and left to right.

Now, to return to the concept of the Creator and the Creation. Every creation contains the seeds of its own destruction. No creation is as perfect as it was conceived of by its Creator, and none can ever be as permanent. If God creates man, God will outlive all men. If man creates the pyramids, and the pyramids outlive men, they cannot outlive mankind. This is simply the way of things, as they say.

This is where the law of Irony, also known as the law of Karma, comes in. Because the Creator can outlive His creation, He has the power to destroy it. So it is a "power-struggle," where power is given up by the creation to its creator, between the IHO and the OHO, to manifest karma, or cause-and-effect over time.

The Law of Irony, that is the Law of Karma, States: "If You Love Someone Set Them Free; If They Return Then It Was Meant To Be."

you KNEW I was going to do [i]this[/i] ::

[img]<http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/bushcrying2.jpg>[/img]

There is no point searching for this exact frame of film in the video of the event. It obviously does exist there, and is purely the product of art brought forth by my own imagination, how ever telling that is.

here's an Illuminati brand news article to go with it:

Mayan calendrical end-date: 12.19.13.15.12.5 Mac. 6 Eb

"He didn't whine about it, he didn't complain. A true measure of a man is how you handle victory and how you handle defeat, so in '94 Floridians chose to rehire the governor. They took note of a his worthy opponent, who showed with not only words but with actions what decency he had. The moral of the story is to serve with honor and your governor has served with honor."

Although these words were being spoken by the mouth of former president George Herbert Walker (HW) Bush at a press conference to honour his son, "Jeb" Bush's two full terms as Florida governor. However Herbert Walker's mind was wandered off somewhere again. He suddenly came to his senses and realised the terrible dilemma of politics, the curse of his destiny, was saying one thing and thinking another. He then remembered he hadn't been thinking anything in particular, and so, like telling someone not to think of pink elephants, he lost his train of "thought" (reading off the teleprompter). At this moment of sudden confusion, the wind changed. This made two things happen.

Former President HW suddenly fell under the inexplicable sensation that the teleprompter read "sob uncontrollably" at that moment. This he could not prevent his body from reacting to with his faraway and distracted mind. He consciously knew that the teleprompter had not just caused him to "sob uncontrollably" because, he knew logically, if the text were wound back through it would not say "sob uncontrollably," and that the text "sob uncontrollably" only appeared to him on the teleprompter as a result of the sudden and inexplicable delusion of his common senses.

So he felt the wind change, and it brought him back from day-dreaming while delivering his speech into reason again. That is when the wind changed. HW felt it, and so he made a face. This is because of an old American-German folk tale custom: "if you are making an ugly face when the wind changes it will stay that way." So, too, just as when the chill of the changing wind came over HW while he was making his speech, his "True" Face showed through. This was the second thing that happened when the wind changed.

So, this is what happened when the political "wind changed" that day around HW: his true face was revealed. His true face is that of an ant. Likewise, when Jeb, his son, Florida's ex-governor, rushed up to him, the same thing happened to him as well, and he showed his true face, a grass snake. Jeb is a dyed in the wool neo-Sethian. As such he has assumed the form of Satan, the same as all the other neo-Sethians, that is, the face of tyranasaurus rex, king of the thunder-lizards, the fallen ones, the demon, the geni, the djinn. This is because of the modern equivalence between "Satan," chief ruler of the inferno's depths, and the serpent from the Garden of Eden story. Thus, Jeb, a dyed-in-the-wool neo-Sethian and believer in the equivalence of "Satan" king of the underworld and the serpent of Eden, presents his true face as that of a predatory reptile lurking over the shoulder of his crumpling father.

Why an ant? Because, as a former spy and dope-runner, HW qualifies as one of the characterisations I've written about in my [\[url=http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewforum.php?f=21\]](http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewforum.php?f=21)Cheshire Sam science fiction detective novels[\[url\]](http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=819). In [\[url=http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=819\]](http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=819)the BUGS[\[url\]](http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=819), I describe in greater detail the significance of the insects role in the earliest records of "the Zone" history. In the further context of that story, I fleshed out the "bugs" as a sister-faction of the "blanks" or the "blanking quetzals," ie. the "birds." Both were pitted against the Cheshire (cats) and their mindless slaves the Cyrberuzgeistiens.

Ultimately, in the context of that story one of the Cheshire rose up to mount a joint-force of rats (tricksters) and elephants (pseudo-conservatives) to oust the wiser ways of the birds and the bugs. I consider all of these writings to be in accord with all of my others, such as the "illuminati" articles in For A New World Order, as well as even the MPDR, which has this to say about the topic:

[quote="Jon Gee"]Take for example the competition between humandroids, who always want to keep everything "real" (meaning formalized) and humanimals, who believe that reality is an illusion, and want to let everything "go with the flow" (meaning diagnose the latter with various types of mental disease. [/quote]

-the Metaphysician's Desk Reference, benpadiah.com pdf page 103.

What we are witnessing here, and in specific what we are witnessing in the above "doctored" pic, is the "bugs" and "birds" alliance first forming, when the "birds" are still in their proto-typical "reptilian" form. Remember, there is nothing wrong with being a bug. William S. Burroughs himself was a bug.

Let me elaborate on this picture some more:

The five owls are divided into different groups according to the number of how many of the same type there are. There are two horned owls (depicted in flight at the top of the picture), two snow owls perched at either side, alike the dual pillars of Masonry, and one barn owl looking outward to the left in the lower left corner. Thus, two of us are like the flying barn owls in the picture, that is, two are "upward" signs (air and fire) and two of us are like the perched snow owls, "downward" signs (earth and water). The barn owl represents the "spirit" aspect of the group, looking outwards to keep watch and protect over the others. Of course, all of us have the aspects of these elements in us, physically, emotionally, as karma in our aura, etc.

The horned owls at the top are really two pictures of the same owl and in both pictures the owl has been photographed carrying a snake. Thus, in the two pictures, one horned owl surveys outward toward the audience, while the other is turned away from us, but really they are the same owl, only shown at two different times. The two snakes represent the IHO and OHO of the Order.

The snow owls eyelines cross paths on the horizontal level of the two "eyes" of Agamemnon, one shown aflame as the "Owl" nebula, the other shown passed to the heavens beyond and covered by the "owl" coin. The snow-owls, unlike the horned owl pictures, are actually different owls altogether. They are watchful on the same level as the eyes of the death-mask one representing the infinite combinations of all matter, the other the three forms of the force of gravity. These forces together comprise the level of the soul.

The barn owl's pupils occupy the most amount of area in its eyes as any of the other owls. So, too, like a good teacher, should their students be the sole apple of their teacher's eye, and thus this level is associated with the level of spirit. The wise guide, ever watchful, must lead the aspirant ever upward, deftly avoiding every pitfall. So too are we as Masters capable of achieving lofty heights as easily as the owl taking flight. However, like the Owl, we must watch all. Like them we may study the mysteries of men that inhabit the universe by night. So we must not mistake the men we guide and our students with our own ambitions, appetites, desires, etc. But let us give to the group our best survival instincts. Guide the group wisely, barn owl, like a good leader of a flock.

The owl on the coin represents Athena, the goddess of wisdom, the wife of Zeus, King of the Gods. It is a silver coin, the metal of the moon, and is slightly green from age. As I say, the two "dead" owls of the eyes of the "death" mask can be thought of as the two eyes of the deity perceiving the infinite. One looks "up" to see the "above" and the other looks "in" to see the "below," and they see them both simultaneously, perfectly balancing the dual depths. One eye (the owl nebula) is "open" and one "eye" has had the coin of Wisdom placed over it, as payment to the ferryman across the river Styx into Hades. This symbolises the "left" and "right" paths: the left way is closed off, and the right way is open, however, there is also the reverse of all this, that is the perspective from the eyes of the "dead." The Greek letters on the coin read "Alpha, Theta, Epsilon," the name of Athena. The esoteric correspondences for the letters are aleph, teth, heh respectively; the numbers 1, 9 and 5 respectively; the signs of the moon, aethyr and mercury respectively, and denote the symbols of the Masonic compass and square, the sun-symbol used by the Bavarian Illuminati, and the letter E, here turned on it's side to appear horizontal to the feet of the owl symbol as like the letter M.

Now I have said there are the five "living" owls and two "dead" owls, meaning the owl symbol on the coin and the "Owl" Nebula. But these are not all the owls in the picture. If you turned the entire picture upside down you would see the face of the Sixth owl, the Owl egregore itself, CHRMST AL MOIAK. His eyes are the two red circles underneath the two "eyes" of the death-mask. His feathers can be seen in the upper left-hand corner, and the tip of his beak overlaps with the bridge of the nose on the mask. He is beneath the death-mask, from our perspective, but to him, we are his reflections in the rippling water of the wishing well into which the coin has been cast, the splash of which is the Nebula.

Thanks to Michael I have now cloned my OS from the smaller to the larger partition on my "master" hard-drive. I still use the "slave" drive for all my files. Hopefully this will leave me enough disc space to install new applications, and has already allowed me to DL from bittorrent and limewire most of the albums Eli stole about this time last year.

I learn backwards and forwards.

Having saved mom about $200 (that I would not have been able to pay back until indefinitely), I asked her only for the complete collection of Star Wars DVDs for my birthday and X-mas combined (at a whopping $70 value used off amazon.com). I hope that she is willing to waive the debt I have incurred in the second two and a half weeks or so of November. I was forced to borrow money from her after setting myself back by a hundred dollars the month before, plus super-lubing my car, plus having spent early since my check had arrived a day or two before the first of the month. I also spent most of the month's money I've budgeted for "usual expenses" in the second week. However mom did replace my car battery at about another seventy dollars or so, and said she counted that as X-Mas. This might make her less willing to waive the debt from later November. I've spoken to her about paying her back the amount over $100 I go, but that I would need her to waive the first $100 of debt from November. I hope she will remember this conversation. So far I've gone $15 over one hundred, which already isn't good. I also owe mom $400 from last year's X-mas, when she got me the Zohar ($200 used) and I bought the two hard drives ($200 each, new). What I really wish is that I could help her out at her job, and that she could pay me a limited wage for this, such that I could earn a lesser amount than would threaten my eligibility for the level of social security disability I currently receive. I wish this much more for her sake than my own. I am capable of living very comfortably off $600 a month, sans food expenses only. I pay one hundred rent, around fifty on gas, as much as two hundred on cigarettes, and one hundred dollars every other week on the "usual expenses," the other fifty I blow on burgers and shows. I know, I know, if I "stuck" to that budget I would be breaking at least even every month. I have been spending more on the "usual expenses" sooner in the month than before. However aside from a two-day rough spot, it doesn't usually cause any problems to avoid these costs for the rest of the month. Ideally I can quit spending on the "usual" altogether, however I would still have to get myself out of debt to my mother. Being four hundred in the hole, plus a hundred to her each month (which is technically about $83 less than I'm supposed to be paying, according to my calculations for 1/3 of my annual income, leaving me $417 a month), seems to barely leave me enough money for cigs and gas, from my point of view, since my "usual expenses" I consider more necessary than either cigs or gas.

I operate outside all-natural laws.

Right now I'm not my "usual" self. Well, I am a little, but from now until Friday I'll be totally "unusual." This has always proven to be a period of the greatest opportunity for self-expression, since I am "usually" not myself. That is, what I "usually" am is "unusual" to most everyone else. Therein lies my whole problem. I see myself as the weakest link in any organisation I contribute in because, though I have no doubts in the inevitable reactions of others, I doubt myself, and more specifically, I doubt my ability not to doubt. By doubting myself, I necessitate a negative reaction from others, regardless of their natural inclination toward acceptance of my contribution(s). However, since I cannot seem not to doubt myself, I seem to be perpetuating this pattern of causing others to doubt me without being able to stop. It is for this reason I am now seeking to diminish my presence on the internet. I find that the doubts in me and in the validity or the veracity of my contributions to be primarily online, and to result, more often than in the "real" world, in direct confrontations between myself and others. Since I do not find such confrontations either pleasant nor enjoyable, I seek now to avoid them as much as possible. To do this I must, at least temporarily, diminish my web-presence as much as possible. In other words, I have to stop

"pushing my agenda" or attempting to distribute my "research" online. I should focus more on how to distribute and disseminate the information best in the "real" world, or, at the very least, in a world less "virtual" than the internet. I need to learn to rise above. However it is only when I am not my "usual" self that I seem to best be able to concentrate on this desire, and to motivate myself to fulfill such endeavors as to make such success more possible. When I am more "usual" to all those I communicate with, online and off, then it becomes easier to disseminate my message. However, when I am my own form of "usual" then it seems to grow more difficult to successfully communicate my message, especially and almost exclusively online. In past times of being "unusual" myself I created the first ~GOD~ LP, "Inc.," worked with magick number-squares, created the Enochian Calendrical Sysytem in its entirety, and have written very articulate and intuitive science-fiction, however it is usually long periods of time between when I am "unusual" to myself. Most of the time, I'm my "usual" self. Who I hate. My "usual" self is benpadiah.

Yeshuah Ben Padiah was the True Jesus Christ.

When I first go from being "unusual" to my "usual" self, I am beautifully fluent in any esoterica I choose to study. I have worked on designing an Atlantean Senate building, stellated primes, Gnostic diagrams, UFO interiors, mixed new ~GOD~ EPs, and written extensively for the forums I post(ed) on. Going from being "unusual" to "usual" induces a brief period of euphoric "hypo-mania" where my mind "springs forward" rapidly. This form of "racing thought" becomes ingrained over time, and the longer I remain my "usual" self, the more it becomes a "mixed state" with my emotional depression, or rather, my lack of ordinary peaks and troughs in my sensory experience. This is caused by my lack of "real" social activity and my lack of daily interaction gained via employment. This manifests as a lack of income, which I find an acceptable sacrifice for the purpose of diminishing my otherwise uncontrollable emotional oscillations between a "usual" person's average day of highs and lows. From my "unusual" point of view, the "usual" person seems extremely manic. Thus it is only when I am my "usual" self that I feel I can even keep up. This is the cause and effect of that old wife's tale about loss of motivation. I am actually extremely motivated, however only to pursue introverted, esoteric and philosophical research on my own, and not to perform tasks that satisfy the "usual" public good. The way that I have tended to compensate for my emotionally stunted introversion in "reality" is by reaching out to the wrong people and in appropriate ways over the internet. I have always, since the first chat-room my ex- ever showed me how to log onto, been an abrasive, self-righteous, arrogant intellectual snob online. Of course, there is a little of "benpadiah" in me even in "reality." Afterall, I am not totally my screen-name. LOL! yet. In "reality" I am really quite introverted, however when I am my "usual" self online, when I am "benpdiah," I am the exact opposite of this, being extroverted to the extent of assuming a superior attitude about my research and an outright confrontational personality towards anyone who would question that stance. To me, to continue this would be unacceptable. As I say, and as many of you who might read this well know, I tend to end in abject mistrust all sorts of what would be the best friendships I could make for myself, both to better my status and to calm my state of mind. I project mistrust in myself until I force those around me to confront me in groups (not only online, but this trend actually started with Eli, Christa, John and Samara in 2001, when I lived on my own at Waterline on the west-side of town), and recuse me for my behaviours that exhibit this self-destructive trait. They do not trust me, so they come to me in numbers to tell me why and to suggest how I could have handled the situation differently. Of course, all I can hear while in my "usual" condition is how little they appreciate my contribution.

The "Passion" and crucifixion of Yeshuah Ben Padiah has already occurred.

I find myself being rail-roaded by all my online friends into seeing them as adversaries, mere competitors for attention, however in reality they are only trying to help me get my head "straight" — as it is, more or less, right now. It is truly a blessing by God the times when I am "unusual" to myself but can feel and act like other, "ordinary" people "usually" do. I am most humbly thankful for the gift that I can still come down from having my head up in the clouds, looking down my nose at everyone who cannot even understand me. However it seems to me impossibly difficult to let go of this cross I bear to be the scape-goat, the sin offering of everyone I inevitably run afoul of. I force them to disown me from their cliques by becoming an impossible thorn in the side of those who would otherwise, and who should, be the most ammenable to me and the most receptive to hear about my theories and research. Eventually, people just lose patience with me. So far I have managed to fail upward from being disowned by a teenage stoner band (J, D&E), to a crack-head electrician (Eli), to even more articulate but even further physically removed "internet people" (IOBB & TLFC, KevinSmith.com, TSGAM, philoforums.com, and even Michio Kaku's physicsforums.com). I repeat this pattern like Hunter S. Thompson described being in an eathyr binge: I can see myself doing these abominable things, but I seem to have absolutely no control over my ability to stop doing them. It happens about this same time every year too, during autumn, between late summer (Eli, Christa, Samara and John) and early winter (TSGAM). Of course all this started in Autumn of 1999, when I had recently returned from my cross-country trip to visit my ex, and I cried "Judgement" to the sky following a street-brawl with my mom on thanksgiving night. That was the night I was first taken to a mental institution, entirely by my own suggestion. However, just as surely as I had beaten myself over the head with stones returning from the cross-country trip to visit my ex, I had ground my head up against exposed nails in a cabinet during classes in kindergarten. I have always had this propensity for duality, between interpersonal introversion in life and interiorised mental anguish that I express through my writing, which becomes especially confrontational online. God knows no one will miss good old benpadiah. Least of all me.

Yeshuah Ben Padiah's destiny was to be used as a scape-goat, a sin offering.

According to the Book of the Angel Raziel, there are three types of offering to God. The faith or peace offering, that is, to thank God for that which is Good; the sin offering, that is, to sacrifice them in repentence for one's own evils; and the burnt or votive offering, which signifies the prayer for the Day of Redemption. It is written of the peace and sin offerings in Sefer Reziel that they "are for the sake of the living body," but that the burnt offering "is a sacrifice to the glory of God alone." So it is said, "proclaim love from the petition and petition from the reverence," and "from love, you serve God in righteousness." (Savedow, Raziel; 36, Weiser) What is righteousness? If the "petition" is one offering "of the living body" and the "reverence" is the other, then "love" is the burnt offering "to the glory of God alone." Thus, to serve God in "righteousness" means to reap the rewards of your sacrifices; more exactly, that the rewards of the sacrifices you reap will constitute your "righteousness." So in this case, "righteousness" can be interpreted as "right deeds" or rather, Good "Karma."

Now, later in the text of Raziel, however earlier in the epistolic chronology, we read of a "Pheloni Ben Phelonieth," one of the scribes, presumeably that of the "Book of the Signs of the Zodiac." He is said to be the first author, followed by Lieb ben Sherah, scribe of the "Prayer Required to Establish Greatness," followed by Levi ben Zosekien, scribe of the "Work of Genesis," followed by "The First Action," "The Actions," "the Gemurah" and "the Holy Names," all penned by the same scribe as one another. By this time, Pheloni Ben Phelonieth had been mentioned by his original name, by the name "Pheloni Ber Phelonieth," and by "Phelonieth." In the chronologically later texts occuring earlier in this edition, his name has become degraded to "Phelon ben Phelon" and "Phelon Bather Phelon," and "Phelonieth," once associated with an angel of evokation (Raziel, 268), means in the "Prayer of Adam," merely a name "to invoke the Moon in the first season" (Raziel, 20). Throughout the text there are multiple, oblique references to the burnt or votive offering in close proximity to the mention of the word or name "Phelonieth."

The name, "Padiah," derives from the Aramaic. It is considered a proto-modern Hebraic word equivalent in meaning to the modern Hebrew word for "righteousness." In short, "Ben Padiah" meant at the time of Christ "Son of Righteousness." (A friend of mine online, Thyroros, once pointed this out to me.) "Ben Padiah" was alternatively translated "Bar Pandera" by Josephus in his Latin "the Jewish War," which describes the times immediately following the death of Christ. This word was subsequently attempted to be translated from Latin. The closest approximation to it phonetically in Latin meant "panther." In Celsus and the Talmudic tradition (specifically in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, vol. 9, p. 40 and in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, vol. 6, page 23), as recorded on pages 341,2 of the 1956 William and Marrow edition of Werner Keller's "the Bible as History," Jesus Ben Panthera is described as the son of a Roman soldier and a temple prostitute whose husband was a "najjar," carpenter. The term "najjar" has a similar connotation to the contemporary Hellenic Hebrew concept, "Ho Tekton," meaning a Master Craftsman, possibly similar in esoteric implications to the modern rank of Master in Free Masonry.

"Padiah," meaning "Righteousness," and Phelonieth, seeming to refer to the votive offering or the burnt sacrifice, are united in the saying on page 36 of Sefer Reziel, "from love, you serve God in righteousness." Here we see "love" refers to the votive offering, and "righteousness" to the Good Karma (cause and effect) that results from the three alchemical types of sacrifice. Therefore, the "son of Righteousness," that is, Ben Padiah, represents the son, or the seed, of the Good Karma of the three alchemical type sacrifices, and directly follows from the votive or burnt offering. Just as "Righteousness" is Good Karma over time, so too does the seed outgrow the tree that germinated it. The weakness of the parent is the same as the strength of the offspring. This means that Jesus' father was the "Righteousness" of Good Karma over time, following the votive or burnt offering and the other two alchemical offerings, the sin and peace offerings. Jesus' father, the najjar or "Joseph" of the community of Qumran, was "righteousness" personified, and Yeheshuah, his son, was therefore the "son of Righteousness."

Thus, when this "righteous" son of a bitch showed up, claiming his mother was a virgin and that he was the Messiah, the embodied person of AHDVNHAY, and that, moreover, a prostitute was his sister, and more than that, the Matronit, the Shekinah, the "bride" or "presence" of G-d, he was rightfully rejected as a mad-man who would clearly bring upon the unprepared chosen people the end of days if he were permitted to continue preaching his message. The Sanhedrin were quite right to betray and murder the rightful King of the unified Judah and Israel, descendent of the Jews' once and future king, David, father of Solomon, builder of the Temple and houser in the Holy of Holies of the Ark of the Covenant, housing the shem ram, or "name-stones" upon which Moses had inscribed the ten commandments, following his smashing the originals, which contained the actual words of God, inscribed by Raziel, and given to Adam after the fall from Eden, the Garden of Paradise. He had indeed slipped loose the bonds of logic, and thus was a threat to more than merely the worldly power over their people held by the Sanhedrin themselves, but to the very fabric of reality itself that the Sanhedrin had been appointed under Moses to protect until the day of righteous judgment, the day of redemption, the Apocalypse. Had Jesus not been killed when he was, the entire universe would be different than it is now, not merely the whole world as we know it. Had he been allowed to spread his infectious Gnostic doctrines, cloaked in parables with the moral of "love one another," then the inter-galactic hyper-cathexis would have indeed been hurried along, and would have, by now, already long ago occurred. When the pole of one spiral galaxy's core black hole aligns with another, this event is called "hyper-cathexis" after Freud's term for the transduction of electrochemicals in the nervous system. Just as the electrical charge assumes its chemical form to cross the axon-dendrite gap between neurons, so too does the perception by all life in a galaxy change its form when that galaxy aligns with another. If Jesus had had his way, we would all be dead now. We would have "hyper-cathected" through an inter-galactic wormhole, and been deposited in a galaxy far, far away. The Day of Judgment would have come and gone a long time ago.

and grows impacted within the guru, who then suffers the malice of greed and jealousy. In some it manifests over abundantly and their charisma overflows them to energise all those around them. Both become madmen, false prophets of a perpetually impending Apocalypse never to occur. The invoked guru is the sin offering. The evoked guru is the peace offering. The combination of them both is the burnt offering. The sin offering represents the corrupt guru, the peace offering represents the over-flowing guru, and the burnt offering represents the guru of the end of days.

Although Yeshuah Ben Padiah did die, His Apocalypse has not yet come.

Of course, what we have recorded in the New Testament Gospels of the Bible as the Book of Revelations by St. John of Patmos is a misconception of the Gnostic vision of the Messiah Himself. It is a bastardization of the hidden pesher, the message, of Jesus' canonised parables. It was doctored up shortly following his public execution, either by someone from his school, or else by the man himself, having survived the ordeal of the crucifixion and subsequently fleeing to France with Mary Magdalene, his temple "sister" and wife. However, regardless of which case is true for the source of the work of the Apocalypse of the Book of Revelations, it can be unanimously agreed upon by all the faiths of the world that the contents of its description have not yet come to pass upon the surface of this earth between the time of its writing and now. Thus, it is not technically a "prophecy" of the times to come, that is, the times that have since followed. It claims to be a removed vision of the events to come at the end of time. However, who knows when this moment shall come? It is written, it shall come "like a thief in the night." It is written that no one alive nor anyone to have ever lived shall know the hour or the day it is to come. The dead are barred from warning us by an angel with a flaming sword.

Some, and in some ways rightly, compare our present times to those in which Christ came. There are, of course, similarities to the burgeoning Roman Empire following the Greek Golden Age of Democracy and the modern hegemony of capitalist western civilisation imposing its own version of Democracy on the rest of the impoverished nations of the world. The fundamentalist Southern Baptists are little different in physical appearance, nor their attitude when put into positions of authority any different, than the Roman Legions, or, for that matter, the Spartiates, nor the football stars they violently venerate any different whatsoever from Roman gladiators killing early pacifist Christians. However for each similarity there are those who will see two differences, and these people are the modern equivalents of the Praetorians, lording their landed gentry status in the Senate over the poor plebian farmers. We would do well to remember Caesar himself was on the side of the plebs. He became their greatest warrior-champion, their hero against the corrupt Roman Republican Senate. When he died, it was no different for the Romans than it was for the followers of Jesus when He was put to the cross and slaughtered on Passover. However, whereas the pacifist early church fathers advocated non-violent self-sacrifice unto martyrdom, the death of Julius Caesar had galvanised the previously contradictory factions of the Roman Republic in the squabbling senate into the cohesive amalgam of the Roman Empire.

This has led to the entire mythology of Christ and Anti-Christ. Just as Jesus was the Messiah to His followers, so too was Julius the rightful Caesar of Rome. Both were to be viewed once having achieved this status as the direct descendent from the respective national deities of Israel and Rome. However, once Christianity usurped the Imperial Roman throne, this dichotomy between the Roman Caesar as anti-Christ (by that time the Caesar of Rome was Nero) and the murdered martyr Jesus Ben Padiah as Christ, it became necessary to the new Catholic, Universal Church to suppress and confuse the doctrine of this early dichotomy. Since the suppression of Manicheanism along with the Albigensian Heresies, the true meaning of the Christ/Anti-Christ dichotomy has gone "underground" and become a current in esoteric wisdom schools. Some now claim these same western mystery schools are seeking to usurp the former glory of Rome by establishing a new Christ for the New Age, and there are a great many Catholics today who secretly harbour distrust of Free Masons as Luciferians seeking to discredit the Pope by adopting radical Rosicrucian doctrines associating the Christian Papacy with the role of Imperial Caesar. The Rosicrucians have claimed openly and outright that "the pope is the anti-Christ," and some fear the subsequent mystery schools, such as the Illuminati in Bavaria, have infiltrated one another in order to spread and diversify this general sentiment amongst otherwise "good" Christians. At the same time, the true blood-line descendants of the royal lineage from King David of Israel remain dethroned from monarchical rule over their "rightful," or even over any, lands. Instead the Imperialist western civilisations have installed a false Democracy in the Chosen Land(s) and throughout the surrounding Holy Lands in the Middle East. To some, the Prime Minister of Israel is a role little different in the cosmic scheme of things than that of Judean governor Pontius Pilate during the time of Christ. Although similarities between the present era and the time of Christ make it appear to the common mind that the second coming is immanent, few can find any direct and specific examples of the cosmologically metaphorical events of the Book of Revelations that have occurred since His time until now. Many see certain events occur now that seem to stand out to them as obvious parallels, however none of these ever intersect with the Prophesized Apocalypse enough to be agreed upon by all, let alone to render any accurate predictions for subsequent events. These apparent parallels never seem to pan out, and thus far the second coming of Christ has not, by any real standards, occurred. We perpetually feel its immanence. The yearning for a Messiah corresponding to the Gregorian Millenarianism of the western business calendar definitely peaked between 1999 and 2001, however now is already beginning to wain. Instead of miracles, we have only witnessed one tragedy beget many worse tragedies. The ironic comedy of errors goes on, the world still turns, and the hope for an end is already beginning to fade away towards the infinite horizon.

At the same time, fanatics grip down more tightly than ever on their repulsive policies, imposing "family" values domestically and creating wars abroad. They will not let go their desire to see the world destroyed. If not by God, then by man himself. They are even willing to rob their suffering Christ of the last vestige of his dignity on the cross, and say that even if God's judgment passes us by finding us innocent and allowing us to continue our existence, then they will take matters into their own hands themselves and initiate a thermo-nuclear holocaust to engulf the globe. "Why," they demand, "has Our Father forsaken us?" The longer they wait without answers from above, the more agitated they become, and the more willing to engulf us all in a sea of flames. This is the sad, sad state of affairs on this planet following the arbitrarily dated turn of the "second" millennium. Regardless of the plots and plans of mortal man, the Messiah will only come on God's time, as it is written "no one shall know the day or the time." In the same way the Sanhedrin killed Jesus, so would modern fanatics kill us all; however the only real alternative appears to be the pseudo-Republican western Empire, assuming de facto day-by-day the position of Caesar, the organism of the State itself becoming the anti-Christ.

As Jesus said, "Father, Thy Will, not mine, be done."

It seems impossible, so soon after the apparent failure to induce the Apocalypse on the millennium, to believe that the time indeed has come and gone, and that the Final Day of Judgment has indeed passed over us once again. We continued on about our lives without noticing any real nor immediate change, just as did the citizens of Rome on the day that Jesus died. However, there is something beneath this layer of apparent pleasantries. A growing force to concretize the modern mythologies in order they should be preserved and stand record of our times now for a future generation, perhaps to be removed by another couple thousand years, but nonetheless who will one day look back on us and seek to understand how we thought and why we were who we now are.

There may not be any divinely sent manifest vessel by pointing at which we can say, "there, that is the Messiah," but there is a strong movement going on even now to create a modern mythology to account for the events of the present. Why have we not seen a True Messiah yet come?

This myth must be answered, and so it is being done so in fiction, in works of novel literature and in morality plays in the cinema. However this movement to preserve our modern mindsets in mediated mythology cannot and will not raise up a vessel for the Divine Maker to inhabit as he sits in judgment over the earth. It is Only the Will of our Divine Maker, Former, Creator and Father will determine when, if, this shall ever happen. We seem quite wrongly to suspect it not only has occurred in Christ, but shall occur again at any moment in His second coming. However all of this occurs in spite of the Doctrine that states specifically we shall not know when the Lord our God will make Himself known to us again as directly as He did to Adam and Eve in their lush Garden Paradise.

The mentality has been, "if we cannot count upon God to send us a Messiah, we must needs concoct one on our own, and, failing even that, then we must quickly dispose of all our failed attempts by rendering them scape-goats and relegating them to mad-houses or outright murdering them as traitors." So surely there is no short supply of sacrifices being made now. Are they, though, in the Name of Righteousness? Are they Ben Padiah, shem phelonieth? Surely none have been yet, but still we concoct daily our plans to test one another for the right signs. We still punish those who fail to live up to our expectations and shoulder the burden of judgement, meant only for a merciful God, with all the vanity and vengeance of a broken man. There remains no such thing as Justice so long as there can be no renewal of our Covenant with God, it seems, and until the Messiah is forced by man to appear from God, then man shall surely continue to destroy himself in the name of this Divine absence. For want of the Shekinah, the presence of the Divine, the bride of the Messiah, the Messiah cannot come, and we are already caught in the infinite loop of a dichotomous tautology. The more we desire the Messiah, the less we expect Him to finally come. When we are consumed with doubts by what we have not, we will refuse to accept the factual reality of the Truth we already have.

Just as Yeshuah Ben Padiah, according to the New Testament Gospels of the canonised Vulgate Bible where he is described as Jesus Christ, performed miracles, healed the sick and died as a sacrifice to bring greater redemption to His Chosen people, so too has "benpadiah" done all these things, albeit in a no-less fictionally contrived manner. In truth, all the miracles were allegorical for contemporary political events. Josephus describes to us Simon the Essene, Judas the Jewish general. He gives us the name of each false prophet and false Messiah of the people who together comprise the foundation for the fictional character of Jesus' so-called "miracles." In fact, one man healed lepers here, another petitioned the Jews not to continue to pay tribute to Rome. One man would preach peace, while another would incite violence, and all these accounts have been blurred and blended together in the accounts of the New Testament as the "miracles" performed by a single man. The final "character" of Jesus was indeed based on Yeshuah Ben Padiah, moreso, that is, than any of the rest of his contemporaries. However Yeshuah Ben Padiah himself never performed anything particularly "miraculous," any moreso than any of his contemporaries, whom Josephus ruthlessly portrays as blood-thirsty terrorists. In the flowery New Testament Gospel accounts, however, the singular character of Jesus is shown as an ideal character, comprised as an amalgam of all the best attributes of the various false prophets and false Messiahs. Of course, however, this character is not alone in being a fictional character portrayed as an amalgam of traits of others. Throughout the Acts of Peter and the Apostles, as well as the later contributions to the Canon of St. Paul, the individual Apostles are also given the same "gas light" treatment, being made to appear in some cases even super-human in their capacity to defy the restrictions of logic and reason. Even Mary Magdalene herself may someday be disproved as a fictional contrivance of the New Testament authors. It is clear, however, that each of the central characters of the narrative are based on singly individual people of the era, and that it is only by adding to them the deeds of all their predecessors combined that they have bestowed upon them the miraculous air of supernatural supremacy.

Likewise, the reports of the death of "benpadiah" have from time to time while I've been online been greatly exaggerated. However, for the most part, an ego-search for my screen name will return relevant hits from forum communities I, myself, rather than an imposter posing as me, have indeed posted my uniquely identifiable contributions. Twice the screen-name "benpadiah" has been hijacked from me by net-hooligans. Once someone used it to post defamatory material about me, myself, in a video-game forum. The second time, and this unbeknownst to me until recently, my screen-name was jacked by a disenchanted poster who'd run afoul of me in the Illuminati forums, and who posted inciting material on a political forum, however they have since changed their screen-name there to only "Illuminati" rather than the name "benpadiah" itself. Long before either of these events, while offline for some brief time to write and edit my book, "the Tree of Death and the Qliphoth," an old adversary and now friend and ally of mine, then primarily using the screen-name Randi (after the "Amazing" James Randi) created a "sock" account on a forum I frequented and, pretending to be my brother (I have none in reality), proceeded to inform my friends from that forum that I had committed suicide. Such harmless pranks amount to little to me personally, at least compared to the shit I get myself into online, however they add to the historical records attached to my screen-name an air of additional, nearly supernatural, mystique.

In the same way as some of my fellow internet junkies have tried to defame me online, I have done much moreso to discredit myself to any avid historian who relies on the authority of the administrators of the sites at which I've posted. I have not succeeded at preventing myself from accumulating a long list of very personal and very heated moderator and administrator bannings from a rather lengthy list of forums around the net. Paul from www.philosophyforums.com can recount to you his having personally banned me as a "pseudo-philosopher" (by his own criteria), while official "science-advisor" Kane O'Donnell on Michio Kaku's www.physicsforums.com told me flat-out my "theories of light" were "nonsense," and that "the nature of light is not suited to graphical explanations." Of course, this all seems like hot air being blown out the asses of petty tyrants to me, yet still such confrontations as I had with cinema director Kevin Smith on the www.viewaskew.com forums surely stand out as exemplary of the run-ins that I, as "benpadiah," have had with anyone I can get ahold of online who professes any form of authority, even in jest.

So, too, did Yeshuah show nothing but contempt for the rulers over "dead things, such as men." Although many of his more "radical" or questionable sayings, excluded from the Canon, can be found in the apocryphal Book of Thomas. In this he says, "I have come to turn the son against his father and the daughter against her mother," and to thus "destroy the house that no one shall be able to build it again." He is also said to have said, "No one who does not hate their father and mother as I hate mine can be my disciple." Likewise, I have uttered terrible oaths against those who have riled me, however the majority of my words have been those of the Higher Wisdom. In all my speech I have been deliberate, even if impatient to get the point across, for to me time is the only thing more precious than the tradition of communicating the Wisdom teachings. If we cannot idle in conversation of philosophical matters, I usually lose my patience, but I have nearly never lost control of my expressions. I say what I mean, and mean what I say. This is at the heart of the Wisdom teaching tradition, for it is more important even than being true in all ways to others to above all be true to yourself. My emotions may be volatile, but I will not do away with them. They are a part of who I am now, and I must content myself to having them, lest by struggling with them I only serve to agitate them worse.

I have long carried the cross of the Highest Good, and looked up to the blinding radiance of the Highest Wisdom. I do not suffer fools lightly and I cannot even see those who come to me to turn my focus away from the Divine. Like Christ, I am a guru. The cross he bore was fore-knowledge of his own untimely demise, for He had said, "there will come a time when you will look for me and will not find me, and call to me but I will not be there," but He had also said, "my time is not yet come." So too, must I bear the unbearable lightness of being little more in life than a digital avatar attached to a screen-name accessed by strangers on the net. Truly, following Truth has made me a "fisher of men," however the storm that rages to terrify my brothers I cannot yet calm by distilling their passions all by myself. I know I am full of doubt, and in this regard tainted by sin, for in my own uncertainty there is weakness of will, and where there is that then sin enters. Like Christ I have been called, a tempest in a tea-cup, but if I could I would not drink from this cup. Like Christ, I have answered the call to do the bidding of God, my Lord, however like him I am lost, a man without a guide besides his own reckoning, to follow the Spirit alone, and to walk as a leader, even when among superior peers. I cannot not do this. I will follow my conscience to the end of the earth. I put my trust in God.

However, just as Jesus failed, and fell, and fell again along the way to Calvary, so too do I stumble as I make my way through the complexities of netiquette. I cannot say I regret now, though there have been times when the weight of my petty little world online has so completely crushed the roaring torch of my heart that barely an ember remained. I know this world is but the reflection of my own interior consciousness. I love those who beat me down, and I am always charitable to the poor in reason. But I cannot go on, and the inevitable conclusion will see me at a loss, at a great loss indeed. I dish it out, but I cannot take it. So too was Christ persecuted for His words until his body passed this mortal coil. As I strangled myself to purge myself of "benpadiah," Yeshuah Himself was made the passover lamb to carry on his shoulders the weight of all the sins of man since the time of Adam. I have brought myself to the brink of death and back to revive in me the Truth and to liberate me from the lesser delusions of this complex life.

This is because the truth of the life of Christ, that is, the life of the true person of Yeheshuah Ben Padiah, is a suppressed expression of the divine deification. Presented as it is in the Talmud relative to a legal proceeding between Bar Padiah and the contemporary Rabbis, it is likely there was a great deal of overlap between the events described in the New Testament, the Acts attributed to Jesus and the events in the life of Yeshua Ben Padiah, however many of the "miracles" may actually be as metaphorical as the parables themselves. Of course, all of the events as they are by now all-too commonly known from the NT are not the only source of information we know about for description of the events of this Yeshua Ben Padiah. As I have repeatedly mentioned, Yeshuah Ben Padiah himself was the author of an apocryphal Dead Sea scroll, discovered on the opposite coast of the Dead Sea from the Essene community of Qumran. This fabulous work is known as "the Angel Scroll." I have been waiting for the translation of the "Angel Scroll" into english since I discovered its existence over half a decade ago. The Dead Sea Scrolls in English sit next to the English Nag Hammadi sit beside the various bibles on my bookshelf to the left of me. I have a copy of the entire "Book of Judas" (a character described at length, by the way, in Josephus' second Jewish war chronicle) translated into English; granted it is printed on typing paper and ganked from the internet, but I at least have a copy and can read it whenever I want. I have studied the Secret Book of John and the Book of the Secrets of John. I have read and taken notes on the Sophia of Jesus Christ transliterated with Eugnostis the Blessed. I have read the Book of Thomas, and I have read the Gospel of Mary Magdalene, attributed originally to St. John following the suppression of Irenaeus. I own copies of the Book of Raziel, Enochs 1, 2 & 3, the complete Zohar, etc. etc. etc. But I have no book of Yeshuah Ben Padiah. So far in English, none exists. Why is this? I ask. The work, being a Gnostic cosmology, would be of invariable interest on the part of the Gnostic and apocryphal Hebrew scholars, and of course, considering the rather obvious parallels between Yeshuah Ben Padiah and Jesus of Nazareth, it is probably safe to assume the translation of Ben Padiah's "Angel Scroll" would be of the utmost significance to even the most devout Christian. It is likely the reason for this is that the Catholic Church can't trust the Moslems. It seems highly likely to me that the current Pope's rhetorical comments about the "violence" of Turkish Moslems during the Crusades was an attempt to spark controversy, a way of testing the waters for how the Middle-Eastern Imams and Ayatollahs could be predicted to react

at the publication of such a ground-breaking document.

Of course, those of us who have studied the works I just briefly listed, as well as others of their time and kind, know full well already all the possible contents that could have been included by Ben Padiiah. We have studied and taken notes on so much QBLH, apocrypha, pseudepigrapha, Talmud, done so much online research, studied the Torah and the Gospels daily, that we have got every angle covered relative to all the possible viewpoints of Jesus Christ. We feel confident understanding the Gnostic tradition as the roots of Christianity, in understanding Old Testament apocrypha as the roots of Gnosticism, and in understanding QBLH as the passage of this wisdom throughout all this time.

However what we know nothing of yet is the guide of Yeshuah Ben Padiiah in the ecstatic visions He experienced on the cross.

Panameia is the name of the angel that takes Christ by the hand and guides Him away from His suffering on the Cross. It is then we hear Him recite His propetic visions of the siege of Jerusalem and the destruction of the Second Temple described in the First Apocalypse (prophetic vision) of James, described in Josephus and in the Book of Maccabees contemporarily and objectively, and a well known fact of history from the era. The following text then goes on into the cosmological angelology using Essene as well as Gnostic terminology. However it is the character of Panameia we should take interest in as being unique and individual to this particular Apocalyptic Revelation. This angel name may parallel that of the Nefilim Penemue or Archangel Phanuel (Uriel or Raguel) from the Book of Enoch, as well as provide a possible source for the choice of name for the Gnostic Pleroma and Phanael the trumpeter of John Dee's Liber Logaeth, an "inspired" translation of the Book of Enoch.

In the same way that a single meaning in one language can be translated into many different words in another, so can the "rank" of qliphotic and demonic forces change with upward mobility, and so too do all the hethen Gods wither and evaporate in their divine authority before the righteous judgment of Al-Lah YHVH. In Qliphotic Grimoires, that is, those dealing with the Goetia or with Necromancy, summoning of demons and making of pacts, the rank and title of a certain attribute are easily (and some might say, implied to be) shifted from one post to another, positions are constantly swapped and updated, and there is Chaos in Sheol. Likewise, the Eskimos qualify various different types of snow, and so it was once said the world was flat, so too do ideas increase in complexity as they propagate and multiply across the world over time. Semantics becomes Neuro-Linguistic Programming and synchronicities trigger evolutionary mutations; memetics replaces prophecy and the poetry of youth is set aside for the headier philosophies of maturity.

Likewise, if the sun, that is, the Great Burner, shines too brightly, too hot upon the crop, then the harvest will not yield a good return, and the people will suffer of hunger pangs in winter. That is why it is said of Al-Lah YHVH that his judgment is "righteous": it is because he tempers his wrathfulness with mercy. Although He is a terrible and mighty King above all Kings, and He doth love for us to grovel at His ineffable feet, and He doth reward us when we repent of our sins in genuine shame, and He is a Sadist lording it over a universe of Masochists, He reigns this in an unimaginable amount to the mind of modern man. For it is within God's power to destroy the entire universe in one heartbeat and to completely recreate it down to the very least atom in the next. God is the Creator, the Maintainer and the Destroyer. God is All, Jah.

So it is that, when our evolutionary mutations are not beneficial to the collective gene pool's continuing evolutionary survival, these traits will cease being triggered, either by further adaptative mutation or by a gradual extinction of that mutation. So it is that the meanings of words change as the world turns, and no tongue is ever repeated the same way on two days. So it is too that the lesser Gods have always and Will Always wither away before the Primary Clear Light of YLEM, beyond even the super-conductive MFKZT of Egypt, known now as monoatomic gold. No Being Imaginable can comprehend, let alone compare to, the glory of God. This is the Law of All, this is the Way of this World.

The Guide of Christ was Magdalene.

Just as every coin has two faces, Christ has Anti-Christ, God Satan, and so too does Jesus of Nazareth have Mary Magdalene and Yeshua Ben Padiah have Panameia. Just as Christ was His Own Father, so too does Buddha teach that ultimately we reincarnate psychologically every time we walk through a doorway, for such is the inter-momentary strobing of the shades of matter and the primary clear light, thus Yin Yang as a symbol of Time. Just as Jesus' elder brother John went on to become the "James" of community of the exiled (Essene) cohenim of the Melchizedek (Maccabean) priesthood of Qumran, meaning the "son" of "Joseph" (the "father"), so too were the so-called "miracles" of the Gospels all likewise political metaphors for the events of the times, performed not all by one man, named Jesus, but by many various others of the time. The bible conveniently omits their true identities, but does list them by the names of the 12 Apostles and 7 Disciples, although each of the names of the Apostles are clever plays on words in various languages of the era. All the names of the apostles, from Judas to Thomas, from Jesus to James to John even Joseph, were all puns on the word "twin." They represented the zodiac surrounding the "thirteenth apostle," Jesus Christ Himself, who himself represented the sun, one of the seven planets, the chakras of our solar system. The "moon" to the "sun" of Jesus the Christ was Mary, however just as Christ was His own Father, so too was Mary the Mother of Christ the same as Mary the lover of Jesus. John the Baptist, who anointed Christ as such himself, was the same as Joseph the Father of Jesus in Qumran.

Mary, the so-called "Mother" of the Catholic Universal Church, and Mary Magdalene, the "Tower" or "temple prostitute," the Queen of the Maccabees, betrothed true love of the deposed Maccabean King, the descendent of King David, Jesus of Nazareth. However, the sanhedrin who had been appointed by Herod Antipas, the King of the Jews installed by the Romans, were unusually cruel. They raped the wife of Christ, marrying her off one to another of them, calling her here Salome, there Mariamme, and disguising the fact that the rightful Princess Bride had become the toy of evil. She cried out for the beheading of John to hasten the ascension of her lover, the true Priest-King and heir of King David to His rightful place on the throne of God. Instead they crucified Him.

He was the Rightful King of Israel, and the Roman appointed King's Sanhedrin council conspired to kill him, just as had the Senators only recently assassinated Caesar. So the myth of Jesus Christ has come to overshadow the history of Julius Caesar, but lo and behold, they are one and the same! The same things happened to Jesus Christ as had happened to Julius Caesar. Only one was fiction and the other a matter of historically accepted fact. Caesar, that is, Anti-Christ, is not real. He has mental dominion over the minds of all those who live in a reality governed by Napoleons and Hitlers and George W. Bushes. They all believe in the actual existence of a Julius Caesar, but not of a Jesus Christ. Then there are those of us who question this authority, even when it comes from within the doors of a supposedly "Christian" church. There are those of us who know Christ was Gnostic, and who understand that the Gnostic Archons and the Essene Annunaki are the same as the Malachim of Adam, according to Raziel, Adam's own Holy Guardian Angel, known by the time of Christ as Ialdabaoth and by now as Satan. The Senate and Sanhedrin made the Shekinah Satan. But in the minds of the modern madmen and homeless prophets, Christ died to redeem all our sins, the sins of all mankind. When the Sanhedrin sacrificed Him on Passover, they made Him synonymous with the Most Holy Sacrifice made to God by the Nation of Israel. These simple sheep-like idiots believe themselves that we are all meant to live in the life of Christ, that we are all to this day like nothing but characters in his dreaming mind that will one day awaken. He hangs on the cross above their beds. Yet these people do not understand the powers they conjure by this minor evocation.

Though the Gnostic, Yeshuah Ben Padiah, may have been the true person upon whom the character of Jesus Christ in the Gospels was based, the difference between myself and this person is that Ben Padiah, the Christ, was born a king. I was not. I have made myself the king of all I can perceive. I have expanded my consciousness to beyond the local universe. But I was rising then, and had the help of Lucifer. Now I neither rise nor descend, but both simultaneously, but I also do neither at the same time, and I also do neither at all. I am the God of all I perceive.

I have had to go as mad as I can to prove to myself that I am not as mad as I could be all the time. In this way, I can say, "benpadiah," my online personality is the embodiment, the "sin-offering" if you will, of my madness. He is the sum total of it all, that is, myself, less than God as it is. I have gone as mad as I can. I have thought myself equivalent in deed to Christ. I have performed my passion play. But it is insufficient to compare beside the glorious magnitude of even the Great Burner, let alone the Son of Man. But who is "benpadiah" besides Ben Padiah? Who am I?

My own guide was the woman I love.

At least, by now she would be a woman. When I knew her, she was only a girl. In this way, we are shown in The Last Temptation of Christ, Panameia is portrayed as a young girl, as Mary Magdalene the way Yeshuah Ben Padiah remembered her, from when they were young, too young to be so in love. Just as Mary Magdalene, the True Virgin Mother of the Catholic Universal Church, was the one and only true love of our Messiah, so too have I but one true love in all my life. And yet, just as during her own life, apart from Christ for a time, during the "missing years" of His life omitted from the Canonised Gospels, Mary Magdalene plotted and schemed against our Lord, and so allowed the spirit of Satan to enter her, she transgressed only in the sin of Eve, and so plays a dual role in Christian mythology, one of Mary the Virgin and Mary the Whore, of Mary the Tower and Panameia, and essentially as dual co-Messiah to Jesus and Satan incarnate, as tempter and sin-bearer both, so too are my love and I, so long as we are kept apart, like the twin poles of an electromagnetic field, positive and negative, ever alternating, "good" and "evil," like a spinning coin, comprising the dual, divided nature immediately inferior to Allah, the Omniversal G-d, the One Wholeness.

But I became distracted by the millennium.

I answered the call of the degenerate, retarded form of melancholy, that being the manic-depression that shadows the historical loneliness of genius, the mood-cycling and hysteria that accompanies any natural form of inspiration above the mundane, almost robotic existence of all "great" civilisations. I answered back to the voices in my head. I isolated myself. I am "sun-sick."

I have literally given myself brain damage. I have hit myself over the head with stones. I have beaten the devil I was out and let in the devil I am. If I wasn't sick before, I have made myself sick. I have been so sick of being myself that I have destroyed myself utterly, and offered myself up as sacrificial feast to the ravens of desolation. But it was all in my mind. In the mutual reality, in the consensus reality, I have accomplished nothing. I have simply become mentally ill and begun taking psychiatric medication. I have not accomplished one damn thing. At least, in my dreams, I am the saviour of the world. In truth, however, I am nobody. I am nothing. I am no one.

And so I drove away the woman I love.

But I still love her. In my mind I was Bruce Banner, pushing Rick Jones out of the way of the exploding Gamma bomb. But the bomb was me. The explosion was a great dragon. A mythical animal for a psychic explosion. I became the opposite of the good man my lover deserves. I turned into a monster. I felt like my father. She told me, "be a man," and I imagined my father. But my father, the adulterer of my mother and my own rapist, was not emulatable. Instead, I pushed her and shoved her until she fell far from me. We went up together, but when we came back down, I was over here, and she was over there. I struggled against her because I struggled against myself, and she loved me. She clung to me, and I destroyed that. I thought I was becoming my father, and so I did what he would have. I destroyed the only beautiful thing in my life. I drove away the woman I loved.

But in truth I was not turning into my father. I know that now, that it was all in my mind. But hind sight in twenty twenty. And the damage I've done is too much to repair. I have given myself brain damage, and I have offered my own heart to the devil in me as a "burnt offering." I daily repeat my vows. I am usual now.

I am driving her away still.

I cannot help this. I have tried. But without her I cannot escape the vortex of my own mind, at which I am the centre. I am a coward beside the lion of Judah, of Israel, and of Christ. I am nothing like the man which she deserves, I cannot be Christ. Instead I am a terrible replica of my own father. I was not able to prevent myself from making her into the shattered image of my own mother. And nothing has changed. I have kept myself just as I was then. I have grown outwards, but never upwards. I am not the form of a man, I am a sphere. I have only exchanged scriptural study for comic books, and so much for the worse. For now, without even the attraction of the innocence of youth, I have so much less to offer the woman I love, who doesn't love me, though perhaps but fondly, as if in a memory of a youth now lost to light, faded out, and over-exposed. She said, "my love for you had grown cold." And it doesn't matter if she was lying or not. Because I believed her. I still believe in her more than even Christ. I love her so much I cannot love myself enough to become the man she deserves, the man she wanted me to be, the man I should have been. And now it is too late, because I have the "sun sickness." I think I am the Only Son of God.

Why did the Jews persecute Jesus? Because he said "Arise and Walk." That is why the Jews persecuted Jesus. That and because he said he was the son of God. But what is the difference between me and Jesus? I am not a healer. I cannot say, "Arise and Walk," and, like a true king commanding his subject, cause the infirm flesh itself to obey my command. I am not a natural king. I only bring desolation. I pour my heart out, and, like dumping boiling oil on already revolting peasants, I scorch the earth. Woe is me, that I am less than Christ. Woe are we all, that because of Him, we are less than God.

Who is He? Is he a tempter, a seducer, a traitor and a treacherous liar, whose tongue lashes out first one way and then another? Is he someone who will sneak up on you like a serpent in your sleep and tempt you into awaking in a panic? Does he invade your very dreams, calling to you, only to poison you to death when you awaken to see his face? No. The son of God does not do that. I do. I am just a man, just an ordinary commoner. It was I, as it was all of us, whom Jesus was accused of being, and punished for, and who are "saved" and absolved of guilt by His death and resurrection. But this means nothing. For what has changed? Whether as punishment by God Himself for the Transgression in Eden or under our own, albeit conditioned, will power and reflexes, nothing has changed. We are lost, we are not found. We are blind, leading the blind. We are following along a narrow ledge, teetering on the edge of a razor, between Scylla and Charybdis. But nothing has changed. We are as close to death now as we always have been. It hangs over all our heads at all times like a great scythe, waiting to plow the field.

The gospels themselves are a parable.

All is accursed. All is accused. The time for death to come is now. Yet it never will. It is all according to an ancient plan. When one dies, two are born. Every second, thousands die. Every second, millions are born. Soon, billions will die. Soon, I tell you, soon!

It might only be my imagination, but what if something, no matter what, could make all of this worth perserving? What if God had already come, found us innocent, and left? What if this is the midnight of the Sabbath? What if Christ were Lucifer? What if she were Shekinah, and I alike "Phanuel," the "face of God"? For my heart once was for Panamea, for my lover; before it was torn out, and filled with the fire of Satan, the "Great Burner." I am smoking away my soul. That is why I get no work done. If I do work, why am I broke? And if I am broken, then all of my good karma is going to waste. I am offering my soul on the fires of Gehenna. My heart is a "burnt offering." My mind is my own "sin offering." All that remains is the offering of joy to God for the creation. However, this will not be able to be made; it cannot occur. I do not love this world, God's creation.

While you all are keeping busy here with "benpadiah," I have been securing plans with the Great Burner. And guess what? I bring good tidings! We're all going to die. If I could pull a pin in my brain and make my mind explode, it would be like that every second. But it is worse, for instead of a spine I have only the lightning flash of a nuclear explosion, and my central nervous system is a mushroom cloud. There is no me, because I am killed in the explosion that is me. I am not the bomb. I am not a hand grenade. I am just my mind inside my brain, and this "benpadiah" ruse is all just a distraction. It is here to keep me busy. To keep me from flying to the arms of the woman I love. To separate the poles of electricity and magnetism like the heart cleft in two we must be held asunder. All the force of this universe is being employed right now to keep us apart. But it is only myself that is doing it. And by myself, I mean, "benpadiah."

For he is all that stands in the way of my reunion with the woman I love. He, and death. For we will never again meet in this life, "come hell or high water." She and I are departed from one another's entire uinverses, entire worldlines, entire existence, like one bubble being blown apart into two, we are autonomous, we are far away. And at the end of my life, all my blasphemies will be added up, and my heart weighed against the heart of the man I could have been, the man that the woman I love deserves, and I will sink forever into the eternal pit. It is useless to blame Christ, as it would be to recuse Maat of the Egyptians. The archetype of the judge at death is not to blame. That is Hermes, the trismegestus, the Messenger. You cannot blame the messenger for bringing you the message.

Likewise, it is useless, obviously, for me to compare myself to Christ, the Messiah, Saviour of Mankind. However how can I forgive myself for my trespass against God? I would not give a thief my bread, and so how much more so will I be terrified when the True Vision comes to raze and wipe away my own delusions? Shall I pray to God then, and say, "you have robbed me of my innocence, and so I call you Father, and make you subject of my contempt, lower even than myself, but I accuse you of being my enemy!" I remember when I cried to the sky, "Judgement!"

But that day has passed. Glve thanks that I remember that, as I remember myself. If only for a moment, I should mention that, to some, I must seem like I am speaking gibberish. I am one of them. That is why I cannot get over myself long enough to woo and win my lover back. I could weave a tale as long as the Bible, I have written enough poems alone to equal it in size. But God has robbed me of my inspiration, and I cheat it back breath by breath from Satan in exchange for my heart. My writing will never be as integral as the Bible to the lives of everyday common people. My truth, even if The Truth, will never be held as highly aloft by the generations of the people to come, and rightly not, as the Bible is today, or will be then. My contribution is a drop in the bucket of history. I am the antithesis of anything.

That is why I cannot love my lover, the woman I love, like she deserves to be loved, and desires to be loved, and why her love for me has "grown cold." I can worship her, I can look up and adore her, but I cannot hold her closely to me, and I cannot make a child with her. She is like my mother. A virgin and a whore. She is really only The Shekinah. The Shekinah is not "My" Shekinah. It is the Prescence of the Lord God. It is rightfully in the hearts of everyone. And so shall it appear to us before our very eyes, for it manifests all we know to make itself known to us. It is the inside and the outside. Beside it I am nothing.

This is how I see the woman I love.

I see her as Shekinah; as Magdalene; as Isis. As daughter (virgin), as mother (whore), and as Holy Ghost. I love these parts in myself: the Son, the Father, and the Holy Ghost. However, I do not honor my own flesh and blood father, I honor the Creator of All who came before me. For I know that, just as the archangel Michael is the right-hand of God, so too was my Eve fashioned for me from my desires, my dreams, and my lust.

These elements God gathered together in His hand, and rolled them together into a ball of dough, soft from the water element, and solid from the earth, until it was shrunken down to a grain of sand by the heat element within it. In this grain of sand, God set to work creating all we can ever know. Inside of all we can ever know, there is heaven, and within that this uinverse, and beneath our perceptual realm, other dimensions of demonic manifestations. The combination of these three, salt, sulphur and mercury, is my Shekinah.

She is not born, but created directly out of the imperishable realms between the Aeons and the Archons. She is the visage of perfection, and her breath that of God. I tell you there is none like her in all the lands and, although I am hers, she belongs to herself alone. For she and I are Adam and Eve in Paradise forever, in the realm of immortality even after eating the fruit of knowledge, and eternal before eating the forbidden truth. We are innocent above all the others, joined in union, the yogic communication of the flesh, in perpetuity. Death will turn the dust of the land into ashes, and the corpses will recycle in the dust, becoming one with it, and then this will be blown away as carbon ashes of stars in interstellar winds. But she and I will live on. We are eternal in our innocence. This is sacrosanct above all: the union of the dual opposites. It is worn as a pendant on the neck of God.

But it is the udjati, the evil eye, mal ochio, molech, the all seeing evil-eye of Satan. It is the third eye of Horus, plucked out of Osiris by Set. And, like Odin, hung above the runes upside down from Ygdrasil, so too is Satan associated with Orion, hung upside down in the sky, not because it was a rising sign (Shalem), but a descending one (Shelom). In Peru, the spider of spring was associated with the constellation that Orion the hunter was associated with in northern Europe. To the Egyptians this constellation was Osiris, the God of the Dead, and they believed they lived in Khem, the land of the dead. The constellation had, at the time of the ancient Egyptian calendrical start-date, been associated there with the rising of Sirius on Orion's heal at the end of Summer. So, in Sumeria, the "summer-land," it was not the spider of spring, nor the hunter of autumn, nor the dog star of summer. So too did the same constellation rise on a different date at all the various different locations, and so too does it usher in a new season, a new Aeon, for each land. All of this is the complex metaform of time passing through us over the cosmic ages.

And so are the faces of the woman I love infinitely manifold, though she is infinitely only One.

But what have I to offer her? All of me has already been promised away to God or else is being bartered away to the devil. I cannot give her my heart, it has been replaced by fire. I cannot give her my mind, for it has rotted. I have nothing greater that is my own to give. For the soul, the aura, of karma I have accumulated about myself is one of a confused Christian, but this is a cloak containing nothing. I am a vortex of Light centered around a being, but only from time to time upon one; thus, one here at one time, one there at the next, and the Crown of Choronzon is passed around like a peace pipe. I give, I give! All I do is give, but all to waste it goes. It is all only a psychic empire in my mind, the mind of a crazy, broken, child. I have nothing more than any man she could conjure up on her own out of thin air.

For this is what Gods who walk amongst men must do. We have been commanded to eat the fruit All of it. All of it save one, the spine of the conjoined Hermaphrodite twins, Hermes Trismegistus, the backbone that unifies Adam and Eve in the Garden, where they took up most of the space in the universe. This was God's first living creation. This alone reflects the inception of God's ideal design. For God set a trap in which to catch the conscience of the Phoenix, a trap called time. So Adam and Eve can be thought of as "back to back" to one another, each facing away from the other. Thus they comprised the entirety in the age of Hermes. However, as the aeons passed they spent together in Eden, outside of and beyond time, so did they revolve, trying to come face to face with one another, and so each compromised more and more of their space, and so they shrunk, and so the span of the entirety shrunk with them. Already Adam and Eve were falling. Once the tidal toroidal typhoon of Typhon had tricked and consumed them into bodies made of tissues, or of rarified Light, they were easily deceived and tricked into bearing offspring who would bear the mark of their fall. For already, the spell of Paradise had been broken. Already the commandments of God rebuking even the serpent, transforming it from the image of a camel, had folded down the wings of the tabernacle. No longer was the Divine Ineffable One Infallibly Two. Thus was the reign of Adam and Eve brought to an end, and thus gamete cells reproduce, and thus the combined Tree of Death and the Qliphoth was divided into the Tree of Knowledge (the spine of Adam) and the Tree of Life (the spine of Eve).

Just as Eve is said in the Gnostic "On the Origin of the World" (partially recovered in the Nag Hammadi, although preserved independently also) to have been the creation inhabited by the soul Zoe, the emanated daughter of Sophia, wife of God, so too it is said that the Tree of Life in the Garden had itself been inhabited by the soul of Sophia Herself. This was so, it is all explained therein, because the pure emanation of Zoe raised Adam from the mud, and only later entered into the body of Eve, after that body was created from the "rib" of Adam. So we see that Zoe, the soul of Eve, and Pistis Sophia, her spirit, were equivalent to the lower, animal parts of Piger Adamas, that is, the tree that produced animals, and to the higher, human parts of Adam Kadmon, that is, the tree that produced men. Just as there were the soul and spirit of Eve in the tree of life, so too were there the animals and men of Adam in the tree of knowledge. But both of these "trees" were only two divisions, like Adam and Eve themselves, of the One God. Just as the spine of Hermes, that is, of Yeheshuah ha Maschiach, is like the combined trees of knowledge and life, and so Thrice Greatest Christ is like the combination of Adam and Eve before they were divided. Thus, when they came together again, to copulate and to conceive Cain, though some say that his father was Ialdabaoth, the demiurge, known as Jave and as Elohim to the Jews, it was the reunion of the two, divided halves of the One Whole. This is why the Entirety cast down Ialdabaoth as Samael, and why Elohim YHVH (translated, "the Lord God") said of Adam, "behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil," (alternate scriptures translate as "light" and "shadow") and then cast Adam out of Eden. Because when Adam and Eve conceived Cain, they had eaten of both the Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge. When they came together in copulation, they reunited the divided body of Christ. This was the Divine Rose-Cross, the red Templar cross on the white Essene banner, symbol of the transubstantiation of the Eucharist. Thus, the "bread," the shape, form or geometry of which Christ will not partake of again with his apostles until they all sit in divine judgment from Heaven, and the "wine," the "blood" of a lifetime, thus representing gravitas, the blood of all time, are like the fruits of Knowledge and Life, and thus, too, are these like the dual opposites, Christ and anti-Christ, the "left" and "right" pillars of Jachin and Boaz in QBLH, the "body" of God. Just as the blood and wine become one in the body of the one that eats the bread and drinks the wine, so too was Christ made whole only in the copulation of, the conjoining of, Adam and Eve. Thus, Cain was the son of God, of Satan, of Christ, Hermes, and of Adam and Eve. All these are true statements. However, none of them are sufficient to describe or account for the act of Cain. For in the act of Cain is revealed the sin of the Father, the Creator of Man, the demiruge, known to the Gnostics as Ialdabaoth and to Judeo-Christians as AHDVNHAY, "the Lord God." Cain turned against his own brother. So too had YHVH commanded Adam out of Paradise even though Adam and Eve had indeed become "like unto" their Creator. YHVH, that is, the Sumerian Enlil, had dealt unfairly with man from the beginning. In the Sumerian version of the myth, the first man, Adapa, is tricked into refusing Anu (the cosmic All-Father) when He offers Adam the bread and water of eternal life because of a false warning to avoid Anu's trap of the bread and water of fleshly death delivered by Adapa's fleshly father, the creator of mankind, Ea-Enlil (the earthly father of mankind and son of Anu, the sky-God). Just so, the fruit of the tree of life that made Adam and Eve immortal before they ate of the tree of knowledge would have given them life eternal had they been allowed to eat of it after eating of the tree of knowledge. By gaining knowledge with immortality, this is how eternal existence is accomplished. However, the sky-God conspired against the earth-God, and so the entirety crucified mankind's creator as the demiurge.

But already it was too late for Adam and Eve, who had been expelled from Eternal Paradise in Eden, the so-called eighth and ninth heavens (those of Adam and Eve in Eden of the 12 Aeons), and had descended below the seven heavens (those of the 12 Archons and their 7 powers) into existence as mortals in the fallen world of the shattered Qliphoth that is our local universe. If it was justice that Satan fell, then it was injustice that punished his creations, the incarnate Adam and Eve. For Cain, son of Adam and Eve, the creation of them as much as they were the creations of God their father, and likewise the father of us all, committed the murder of his brother Abel not in imitation of the pride and sinful fall of Adam, but in the likeness of Adam's own father, the sinful vanity of Lucifer. For as Lucifer became, that is, entered into, Adam (as Zoe, the soul, entered Eve) so does one moment become the next. It enters into the next moment of creation like someone passing through a doorway. This is karma. As karma re-incarnates, it must have first incarnated. But as karma is immortal, so too should be all incarnation, and yet all incarnation is not immortal, but mortal. This is the "fall" of man, and this is because of the fall of Satan, man's creator. Just as God punished the snake as well as Adam and Eve for the transgression in the Garden, even though the only true fault was with Satan, so too is Satan God and God is Satan. If you stub your toe, you do not punish your toe for it. Thus, God allowed Satan immortal existence, even though this was now to be denied to man.

So evil had a beginning (the creation) but will have no end until Judgment Day. This is because Satan is immortal. So good has neither beginning nor end (it supercedes the entirety of creation), because God is eternal. Yet, instead of the Good God, what we find in factual existence is the fallen condition of Evil Satan. We call the absent perfection the epinoia, or Christ, and the difference between the absent perfection and the present imperfection the pronoia, or Shekina. And just as the epinoia flows to us from God, thus by invocation, so too does the pronoia, the Shekinah, flow from us to God, thus by evocation. The heart understands the interior worlds, of emotion, of sense perception and of instinct and intuition, and the mind knows the outer realms, intelligence encompassing all by deduction, extrapolating, interpolating, and integrating with all by induction. The understanding of the heart, the emotions, and the knowledge of the mind, the intelligence, combine to comprise the essence, the intuitive sense and emanation, of wisdom.

Now I tell you, I speak the truth, I say: Panameia of Ben Padiiah is the Pronoia, Shekinah! Just as Eve was to Adam, so was Mary to Jesus, and so too is the Shekinah to the Messiah. The term "Pronoia" is Gnostic, but its meaning is equivalent. The term Panameia may be unique in all mystic wisdom literature, but its meaning is equivalent as well. Panameia was, to Yeshuah Ben Padiiah, equivalent to the Shekinah of God, just as the woman I love is to me. I have raised our love up to the Highest I can go. I have planted our flag at every step throughout this ongoing quest, and with every beat of my heart, I have loved her with all of my being and will for all of my life. If I give up the ghost, I will go to where ever she is. For if we are separated, and she sent to hell and I to heaven, I will journey down into hell with her. And if we are separated, and she is sent to heaven and I to hell, then I will fight my way out of hell to be with her. And if we are not separated, and we are sent to heaven, then we shall redeem mankind to God. And if we are not separated, and we are sent to hell, then we shall make it heaven by the radiant glory of our love.

This is simply so already whether we are reunited in this lifetime or not. But if we were, would it not prove to the living that the day of judgment has already passed over and that we have been found innocent again, and are allowed to continue living, whether in peace or in war, how we choose? And how can those who profit from war, who live for the lie of putting off the eternal judgment by promising to deliver it immediately themselves, how can they not wish to keep us apart in this lifetime? And yet, in this crazy, mixed-up world our problems don't amount to a hill of beans beside the Hypostasis of the Archons. So "benpadiah" exists to keep me and the woman I love apart, and so does this world continue to exist as it does for now. All of this is only in my head, where I am the perpetual "saviour" of the world and its potential "destroyer" as well, and amounts to absolutely zero in the world of reality, of both virtual reality and real world friends. She is not reading this now, and, like my not having sold any significant sum of books by now, if it hasn't happened yet, it is not going to happen at all.

My sorrow is our reality, that I cannot change the absence of my ability to overcome it.

However just as good karma is righteousness, each shall reap their just rewards. Just as Jesus said on the cross, "I thirst," so too did he resurrect from the dead himself, and seemingly with the ability to appear at will, though never for very long, and later only as if in a vision. He was given water on the cross, it is said, and within half an hour he was dead. But obviously His "death" was not like that of an ordinary man. For, as was Enoch "translated," Christ "ascended." In the water in the sponge or lozenge Christ received in his suffering on the cross was contained some substance, it is reckoned, to account for Christ's ability to manifest as alive after physical death. The gross, who see not even a living body as already dead, suspect opium as a way Christ could have faked his death on the cross and then, arisen "in the body" or "in the flesh," returned, healed, after three days, from the underworld beyond the grave. In the future fools will speculate monoatomic gold.

In the end, the Sanhedrin are only any and all of them who do not rightly understand the spirit, not only Ayatollahs or presidents, Catholics or Muslims, myself included. For I betrayed my lover: I still can't get over myself. That is why no one can deny me access to the psychic Synagogue, seat of the True, though perennially occult, Atlantean Senate, the "conspiracy" of internationalist philosophy inside the mind, because I have sinned. I have the vision of divinity and Paradise because I have the clear sight of a clear conscience. I accept my sin, so my "sin offering" is accepted. But it cannot by me alone be forgiven. That remains only to the divine almighty. That is my sin: I stand outside of All the entirety, and consider myself its king, but I am incomplete without her, and I am really looking out when I think I am looking in.

The true psychics see with a clear eye, knowing rightly "good" from "evil" and "light" from "lesser light" or "shadow," and we know the local universe is only one small cave, the abandoned tomb of Christian Rosenkreutz, like that of Jesus Christ, in a much larger world of light, yet still only one world of many. I see all this too. I look out from within that tomb, yet can leave it not. For I have sinned and eaten of the tree of knowledge for all the days of my manhood. So I know. Yet I remain entrapped, imprisoned, here and now in this time and place.

Though I may be "benpadiah" still, I cannot be Yeshua Ben Padiah, the Gnostic Christ, born king of Israel and who "ascended" at death. And so I must cast "benpadiah" aside now. And so I have accomplished it. For now in the universe of my mind that I create I have "transcended" being only "benpadiah," the philosophical reincarnation of the Gnostic Christ, in word if not indeed, and so have "ascended" to the throne of AHDVNHAY, the One True God, over my own mental universe in its entirety, and become, moreso than even only "like unto" He my Creator, my own creator myself, my own God. However this is obviously only the half of it.

For just as I now cease being merely "benpadiah," the philosophical reincarnation of the Gnostic Christ, I am no longer partially "benpadiah," that is, my "usual" self, and partially still myself. No, by sacrificing being "benpadiah," in word if not indeed, I am more permanently than ever committing my existence to an interior and mental world that naturally isolates me from the external, shared and "real" world - both virtual and in-person friends included. By sacrificing "benpadiah" I am very truly severing my last ties to reality. From here on out, by no means short of reunion with the woman I love, i.e. a very real miracle, can any longer redeem me from beyond the hell of madness.

We all die. But who can say they knew only "good" - the eternal God - in all their life? Who, even after the pain of murder, can call life Paradise? "benpadiah" is no different. He is only a part of my personality. He is my creation and I can kill him at will. But whose will does "benpadiah" serve? He serves God, and by serving God serves well. As my own servant, "benpadiah" has led me to God, and so, rather than kill him, I should praise him and revere him; I should uplift the banner of His name. But instead, I seek to betray and murder my good servant, messenger and son of the ansent owner of this vinyard. Why do I do this thing?

I do this thing because I am human. I am flawed and I have sinned. I reap the fruit of this sin: I am psychic; yet it is only because I eat daily from the tree of Knowledge. In truth, this thought is insane, but because it is the fruit of my being, my essence, that I remove and offer up to be consumed by my own self-doubt, it is my "peace offering," and it is one of war. That which I sacrifice to peace is not of peace itself, so I sacrifice war to peace. I destroy that which is not peace, I destroy war. How is this done? To end a war one must first begin. The war between my interior AHDVNHAY personality and the exterior fact of being a loser in reality is the line in draw in the sand. Pray this line does not become a circle.

The "sin offering" has been made. The "peace offering" has been made. The sin offering cannot, in this reality, be forgiven me by the woman that I love. Likewise, as my offering to peace of war is one involving myself, it is therefore offered of myself to that which is not myself. So too is it not for me to declare my "peace offering" accepted. I cannot say that, by ending "benpadiah," I have truly "accomplished" anything besides taking the next step following genius-melancholy, or manic-depression, the step "up" and "down" at once toward full-blown MPD, the step of schizophrenia. I am now a useless vegetable.

As I look back over my own writings, I see that I am cursed. It shows through in my bibliomancy, despite its profound profanity of the unspeakably divine experience of One-ness. I fall far short of being the philosophical reincarnation, "benpadiah," that I expect myself to live up to. Of course this is all in my head. But then, so is the death of "benpadiah" and the beginning of a terrible psychic war in my head between my god-complex, identified as my AHDVNHAY personality, and reality.

In reality I am slowly slipping away into psychosis. It is consuming me in the form of study of the QBLH, the result of which being I think like I am psychic, and in the shape of my consumption of smoke that I associate with the sacrifice of my soul to Satan, as well as with eating daily the fruit of the tree of knowledge, thus costing me my right to immortal life and eternal existence. We have eternal existence regardless, but mine will begin with my fighting through my madness in hell to "ascend" to even this plane of being. This is because I have denied God. I have set myself up over my own, false universe and become consumed in his emulation. I have sought to become more than "like unto" God, but God Himself.

Even by sacrificing "benpadiah," whose mortal death was inevitable, I have sunk deeper into the delusion I am fulfilling the role of God when really I know I am doing no such thing in reality. This division within myself, between logic and insanity, is a gulf that will widen. There is no escaping this slow and gradual, intoxicatingly gradual, decent into madness.

I recognise this even by just skimming through this very writing itself, my "blog" (journal) for December, 2006. I recognise the taint of sulphur, the evil eye of the Other upon me; I am totally aware that my existence will worsen as a result of concluding my "benpadiah" posts on various other forum sites. By deleting "benpadiah" I am committing a karmic crime, a sin against the entirety.

That is why I see the stain of sin inside of me. I, like Cain, am my Father's child. But, unlike Christ, I am not Qa'yin, the King. I am not the "left" nor "right" etc of Horus, neither "Qa'yin" the king nor "Havel" the air. I am no falcon, king of the air. I am no Crowned and Conquering Child. I was not foreseen by Harpocrates, nor am I a fulfiller of any biblical prophecies. No, they all centre around justice, upon an altar to righteousness, and are nothing like my life. Perhaps no more so than was the New Testament anything like the actual life of Yeshuah Ben Padiah.

I look at this blank page and see the words written. I trace them into existence with my pen or I crunch them into my computer keyboard, either way I my hand moves independently of my choosing to move it. Alien, it busies itself to conveying this message: the "Good News" of the death of "benpadiah," the truth of the coming of the Great Burner.

For all that remains to initiate the Messianic age is to make the "burnt" or votive offering. I offer my heart to the Great Burner, the Great Satan, Azazel, Azrael, and Raziel, Raguel and Phaneal, Uriel. I offer my heart to Panameia, the Great Shekinah, the "Presence" of Pistis Sophia, Pleroma pronouia! This is the pact I make with the devil. For just as Christ conspired with Lucifer to exchange his own life by suffering crucifixion for the redemption from guilt for original sin of all humanity, so too do I offer up my "peace" and "sin" offerings not to God, but to Goddess.

The three offerings are therefore complete for me. I have made mine. In reality each must make their own. But for me it is all already done now. My "sin offering" I made to my lover, may it find her well. My "peace offering" I made to my lover, may it draw her near me. My "burnt" offering I made to my lover, may she find me before I am dead. And now it is a waiting game. I am wasting my life away, accomplishing nothing, leaving only the mark of the beast my body and the suffering of its heart. For I am thrice cursed. I am cursed by making my sin offering to my lover, and I am cursed by making my peace offering to my lover, and I am cursed by making my burnt offering to my lover, all instead of to "benpadiah," who all the while represented my "higher" self.

Instead, I have made my "sin offering," my "peace offering" and my "burnt offering" not to "benpadiah," but of "benpadiah." I offer "benpadiah" as my sins. I offer the war between "benpadiah's" father, AHDVNHAY, and reality as my "peace offering." I even offer "benpadiah's" existence itself, the very contents of my heart and soul, now as a my "burnt offering" to hasten the return of the True God. I have blasphemed myself three times. For who is "benpadiah"? In truth, he is myself. I sacrifice myself to my lover. I blaspheme the highest good, to be true to myself, and have scrawled her name across my heavens, which it is, in truth, not mine, but only God's, place to do.

Therefore I shall not become the One True God incarnate. My Lordship will be over a lesser, fictional world that I myself create. Not by His Will, as did Ben Padiah, but by hers do I exist. Thus, by my triple curse, the triskele or impossible triangle, will my personality not be the true AHDVNHAY, but will only appear to be so to my psychosis ravaged brain. Instead, I shall "fall up" toward all-out MPD. I have "ascended" to the next step already, the step of schizophrenia. I am as of now a full-blown schizo. I even believe I can diagnose myself! I prophesy I shall split three ways down the centre for the sin, peace and votive offerings.

One personality is M.M., the flaming archangel Michael, the fallen form of Lucifer, my cat. One is I.S., my ex-lover, whom I shall continue to worship in the name of every pagan Goddess. One is "benpadiah," who has "ascended" indeed, by surviving my treachery and hounding me here.

This is the True Mystery of the Trinity: for three children got lost in the woods looking for the spirit that lived there. The three were a love triangle, and one of them had two enemies. The two enemies followed the trio into the woods. They left strange artefacts for the three happy campers to find, small men and small stone pyramids. These mysterious objects seemed to the three to be appearing out of nowhere, but really the two enemies of one of the three were doing it. Why were they doing it? Because they were his enemies. Why were they his enemies? It was because the three were in a love triangle. One elevated the other two, and so by his light they both left behind shadows. Just as the three lovers went into the woods to seek the spirit, so did the two enemies go with them, only in secret. For when the three slept, the two were working on how to deceive the three and lead them astray. It is recorded, so did the three eventually all go insane in the woods. The names of the three who sought the True Spirit were: Joshua Leonard, Heather Donahue, Michael Williams; the names of the two shadowy deceivers were Daniel Myrick and Eduardo Sanchez.

Just as Luke Skywalker, his son, sensed that there was "still good in" Anakin Skywalker, even after Anakin had joined the Emperor on the Dark Side and become Darth Vader, so too is there "still good in" one of the two enemies. But the more one of the enemies turns to good, the more the other will turn to evil. This is the ultimate evil: that "benpadiah" should so exalt "Shekinah" that it elevates her shadow-self, one of the enemies of the "benpadiah" archetype (of which there are many, myself being one!). For just as the one of the three has a shadow-self, so too does one shadow have another, the shadow-self's shadow of the Other. The worst enemy of the self is the self. There can be no one self in God.

Some have believed in the Messiahnic End of Days. They have long heralded the coming, or second-coming, of the Messiah as bringing about the day of judgment and redemption. This belief based on the notion of the ghosts of the dead occupying limbo for a time, and entering Heaven or Hell for all eternity at the end of all that is this world. Some predict a period of 2000 years of peace to follow the Mashiachs appearance on earth. All these people are deceived. They had the wool pulled over their eyes by the catholic church, which persecuted the bloodline of Christ, the true kings of Israel, just as had the sanhedrin chastised Christ, and they viciously oppressed all Gnosticism.

But the truth was hiding in plain sight all along. It is not a direct "ascension" experienced at death by "benpadiah," but an "assumption" into a position in a divine trinity, an occult pentagram. For where there is one, there are two, where there are two there are three, where there are three, five, where five, seven, where seven six more, and where thirteen then add ten for twenty-three. This is the order of stellated primes. One point between two in a pentagram. Two points between two "consecutive" points in a heptagram. Three points between two "consecutive" stellations in a tridekagram. Four points between "consecutives" in a 23 point star. And so on, counting up one more stellated point per prime sum of all points. This is the order of stellated primes. It is the order of things. The "Order of Death" I sometimes speak of is based on this.

However, just as the "Trinity" is all too public, so are the two "enemies" an occult secret. Without keeping Santa Claus' true identity secret, parents could not lord mythology over their children, neither would the psychic sanhedrin last very long if everyone were psychic. So the occult, like Satan, will exist until Doomsday.

So, if the "Satanic" Order of Death uses prime stellations as a means of secretly controlling the masses, that is, the psychic sanhedrin uses complex number theory to masterfully guide the the "goyim," then surely the Trinity is to be examined in great depth, and by an All-Seeing eye.

However, as I have already said, my chips are down and my die have been cast. My thrice-offering was made, of "benpadiah," to my lover. I believe I've become AHDVNHAY, when in truth I am losing my mind. Soon my split personality will break in three, and then I will surely go mad! My universe will begin to crumble and I will no longer know who or what to believe.

Now, I believe I know. Just as knowledge is the beginning of wisdom, and wisdom the fear of God - knowing that, beside the Almighty, we all know next to nothing, so too is belief the beginnng of Higher Understanding. "benpadiah" was a solipsist, and was fiercely vehement about "knowing" what was true about the divine and about Paradise. But here is the key, for I killed "benpadiah" for her, and so now I can doubt what "benpadiah" knew. By doubting I know even what "I" was so sure I knew, I introduce the "belief" that what I know might be wrong. This is the the shadow of the shadow. This is her reflection in the gloom of later afternoon. AHDVNHAY, Vader, the world as a corpse-eater.

For even if I were the light, she the object, and an angel her shadow, then the angel would still cast as its shadow a demon, the shadow of perception of the self by the Other. And then either she and I or the angel and demon would manifest a third counterpart to complete the Trinity of either  $2 \times 2 + 1 = 5$  or that of  $2 - 1 + 2 + 1 = 5$ . In the latter scenario, we see the pope of the universe as he is now, or rather, was, as "benpadiah." For here we see Jesus and Mary and here Judas and Peter, and here we see Paul. For here we see Julius and Caesar, and here Brutus and Casius, and here the ongoing empire of Rome.

This is all very simple to a lunatic such as myself. I don't believe I'm sane, you see, I believe I'm mad. I believe in queens with wings and that "prophets don't know everything." But the Nothingness is eating Narnia and is following me over the Bridge back from Taribithia, and I am lost in Akira, and the Matrix, and Hogwarts. Hell is softening the walls between the heaven outside and our interiorised reality. The hot lamp of the projector melts the film whose images flicker on the theatre screen. Dancing shamen trip over dancing paintings in the dancing firelight spilled all over the cavern wall. The door of Light leads O-U-T.

However, to the standard lines of logic, I have clearly gone insane. And this is now all I have to offer any potential wife, let alone the woman I love. Day-in, day-out existence with a human vegetable. I've become my father as he is today. Lord, though I avoided every footstep his life's turns took, I have ended up just like he is today. I, too, am a loser, an abject failure, rejected by society. But there is one difference between myself and my father as we are both today. I am on medication myself, and my father medicates Mary-Ann, his common-law spouse. The medication is given to represent both our "new hope," and the "good still in us." However it is a dystopian fiction that dreamt up psychiatric medication, the NAZI concentration camps where it was first tested, and Mengele modern Hypocrates.

The true drugs that could cure mine and my father's "mental illness," my genius-melancholy bordering on schizophrenic insanity and his suppressed aggression, his ingrown depression, these drugs are illegal in my case and top secret in my father's. For just as hallucinogens such as mescaline cure the mind of the fractures and myopeae that lead to fragmentation and haze, so too do yogic star-fire and shem MFKZT of QBLH magically hele the sick at soul and those suffering from great sins.

However, no amount of psychiatric medication can truly heal our relationship and rightly balance our karma, for our fortunes are reversed in reality: I should be married and he should be alone! The heavens themselves cry out for justice, but the word that comes out and can be heard by the goy God, the God over all humans (except homosexuals, according to some), is not justice. It is judgement. That is why I am not now known from Adam, why the keys to reading the Atlantean calendar have, in the subsequent several thousand years, been lost, and why the Atlantean Senate has been replaced by the psychic conspiracy. Just as I should have succeeded in 1999 when I failed to unite all religions in my mind and marry the girl I loved, so too has my good karma, the right-proper earnings of my written, historically valuable works, been being steeped away from me like water through a sieve. My aura has holes blown through it too wide to catch my fair share in my net.

And I am a fool. A fool. For I have not seen it. I have not seen it all along. That the father of "benpadiah" is "the Great Burner." He whom melted my walls first - he who gave me my "manhood." For I have not seen it but all along have I not cast true pearls before lying swine? Have I not said, all along, the God-complex is the father of the Christ complex? But have I once struck at that root? How can I reverse time, for even now the moment has passed. To have killed "Old Ben" in writing kills his archetype literally. To sign away my "usual" self I lost to G.M.G. at chess. And so now, the ape whose sperm I enflesh, whose blood flows in my veins and who is embodied in me, like God in Adam and Adam in Cain, like Satan in the camel and Zoe in Eve, Christ in God, the circle of Aeons in Eden and Eden in Paradise. So, as I was sacrificed by own father as a "sin offering" to his own witch-goddess, Mary-Ann, all my good karma goes to him, and my wealth fills his pockets. He depletes my inheritance on her!

Yet who am I that I would not give a thief my bread?

I am Yeshuah Ben Padiah's philosophical reincarnation, "benpadiah." As he was the rightfully born king of Israel, so am I my own king. As he was guided toward God by Panameia, the ghostly child Mary Magdala, so was I guided toward millennarian "sun-sicknes" by paranoia, the ghostly child of my true love. But for one difference, Yeshuah Ben Padiah and my fallen, Gnostic Christ complex, "the benpadiah personality," are identical, even in opposite polarities.

The difference between myself and Jesus is just this: the father of Christ was the Creator of Mankind, the Maker of this local universe, the Former of the entirety of the multiverse, and the Shaper of all that we can know; we call him the True AHDVNHAY, meaning "the Lord God." We call him YHVH for short. However my dad is barely a reflection of the twin and opposite of such an All-Creator. My dad is a whirlwind of caged chaos. My father is the devil "gravity" and the Grand Architect, Ho-Tekton, "geometry" in one. He is, truly, my demi-urge - the desire in me to turn away from what is good and to intentionally self-destruct.

So here there is that root. For according to chaos theory, anthropically I could have had no other father and have come to this end. And there is no escaping it, the ever-changing maze. But now it is too late for me already, because I cannot be "benpadiah" any longer because "benpadiah" is dead. I killed "benpadiah." In my vain attempt to become AHDVNHAY almighty, I have begun to split into three. For here I am, "benpadiah," my "usual" self, and here I am crazy in love with some chick who left me years ago, and here I am like "sponge bob" for confrontations with anyone besides myself who reminds me of my father. Here are the three of us, as I said, the Shekinah and her angel/demon dichotomy of dual opposites.

Behold, my father holds the Shekinah away from me!

But it is not my father, but myself, that constantly carries this inhumane torture out on myself. I am the one that spends every waking moment desiring someone I take no action to actually contact directly. I am the one who does nothing all but write but who fails to turn one red cent doing it. I am the one who brings the "good news" of "benpadiah" and the coming of my father, "the Great Burner." I am the silly little sophomore who thinks they know it all when really they know nothing. This is me, being real, now.

Pheloni Ben Phelonieth is Panameia of ben Padiah.

Yeshuah Ben Padiah did "ascend" and become a timeless archetype, truly greater than even the constellations, and he was crucified on the seven heavens, but three days later did he "ascend."

But I am not Yeshuah Ben Padiah, because unlike He, my father is a vulture disguised as a man of the cloth, a man of virtue. For I am not "benpadiah," I am truly just Jon, named Jonathan after the final Maccabbean king of Judah (160-142 BC) before the exile of the Aaronic, Zadokite priest-kings to Qumran and life as Essenes (169 BC), their rightful place unknown, the true lineage expunged and their generations hunted.

But I have been lucky to, unlike Christ, not be a natural-born, but instead a self-made king.

Though I am thrice-cursed by own behaviours, my "benpadiah" personality (mainly online), by my own stalker-like idea of romance, and by the living ghost that is my father, I am not yet torn apart by concerns between these facets. So I remain not thrice-cursed,, but thrice-blessed. Instead of lamenting I should be rejoicing!

Because now I have my lover and my enemy, yet both ideal and remote.

There is certainly no Heaven for me here in the physical present, no mater how serene the weather, that can compare to the Heaven I can imagine being again together in my lover's arms. Instead, here is most peculiar truth: my father steals my karma; my father is my enemy.

But it is too late. The wind changed while I made a nasty face and now it's stuck that way. The innocence of a childhood lost. So, as far as I am concerned, now this is it. I sit here mulling all this over in my head, chewing the cud in the sixth stomach of Shiva, and I am quite content in doing nothing to act out upon this sudden revelation. I sit here and I write a 20+ page long web-log, and yet I know, logically, that this changes nothing. Pure magick should have no effect at all.

However none of this makes any sense! Since it is not my father, but I, who carries out the daily deed of being me, then only I can effect what changes I desire. And I know what I desire. I desire her. And it is not my father, but I, who witholds myself from contacting her. And soon, any moment now, we might die.

Have I not already made a magickal sacrifice to her? I have sworne to forsake "benpadiah" for her. I have sworn this even should three curses occur from my doing it; that is, the curse of the Trinity - lacking my lover, keeping myself, and regaining my father as my enemy. But what can this amount to? Have I signed the writing in blood? I should have been rejoicing in the truth! Instead I rolled like a hog-snake in lies and when the truth finally snuck up on me it stuck like an icicle dagger into my heart.

Flow my tears, the policeman said! The prophets have all died, how sad! I am stuck on that same old station again, channeling myself.

What can I do, true AHDVNHAY?

I would give up my calling, to push the "benpadiah" research, for her. But I cannot lift a finger so long as my father yet lives.

What can I do, true AHDNHAY? Show me a sign!

ESP doesn't always translate with each various transcription. Sic is Choke. Ibid is Shock. My spine is a psychic mushroom cloud. I am that which I am and all that which I am not! Now I am the thing I couldn't be before! Vader. Moon-Child of Thetans. I am all of my world now.

Suffering. This is all I feel. The separation of self from "Godhead."

But I am lying. I do not wish to become God, to replace Christ. "benpadiah" may have been my good karma, but it falls far short of a decent "philosophical reincarnation" of Yeshah Ben Padiah, "the Gnostic Christ." I do not because I do not wish to play any role of significance in the currents of history.

Send me a sign, send me a sign! When, oh, when can I bring her the good news that my father has died? For even with his death shall he toss my other enemy, now here, now there, into the deepest pit of ultimate evil. And then there will be no more Trinity, and the two will be made one! Is my other enemy my benevolent mother, or my wicked step-mother? I doubt in all disguises. I do not know who to believe anymore.

When will the breakthrough come to me for real? Because it like this all the time. This is my "usual" self: berserk.

I will not become AHDVNHAY, for AHDVNHAY I already am. For AHDVNHAY is all, and so all of us are parts of AHDVNHAY. But everyone already knows this. I am this message's first messenger. But where one natural-born king (Siddhartha) was successful (transcended a Guatama) while another natural-born king (Jesus, king of the unified Israel and Judah) failed (was murdered for his message), yet who has gone before who was not a natural-born king to have "transcended" or "ascended"? Even enoch, who "walked with God and was not, for God took him," was the direct lineage of Adapa, the first ante-deluvial king of Sumeria in Akkad. None have gone before on the level of world-king that was not natural-born royalty already.

Moreover, it was always by their renouncing their natural royalty that they achieved the status of psychic world-guide of future histories. No self-made king has ever ascended the throne of Universal God-king. None have ever been recognised except by first decorating their "humble" origins in noble birth. But all the mendacents, millions of millions over the aeons of aeons, who have been of common stock have achieved any notable stature save as the apostles of servants of their natural-born noble masters.

so, here is how we, the neo-Sethians, will initiate our agenda:

what is like taking over the world? It is like unto the way that Seth came again as Christ. So, too, will Christ come again, and we have gotten even the "goyim" to believe this! But it will not be Christ who comes, but Seth, and not Seth, but the One Who Comes To Us at these times, that is, the time of the great conjunction. On 5/5/2000 the seven alchemical planets aligned, and so on 12/21/2012 will the sun eclipse the alignment between earth and the black hole at the centre of the Milky Way galaxy. The time between this is known as the "great conjunction" and it has come before and will happen again. Every 2000 years the One Who Comes To Us comes. He comes and he makes everything okay for us, his true followers. He comes and he levels the playing field. Who are we? We are the meak and the humble.

But I tell you that, in the times when he comes, things are usually so bad that there are few who would meet the criteria of what we should associate with meekness and humility. At such times, even the Saints are thieves, liars, beggars and murderers. We, ourselves, the neo-Sethians, are merely con-artists, low on the graft level overall. We sell American oil to China and wage war in the middle east to intimidate the Arab oil industry who supplies to Russia. But we are Saints, Saints I tell you! Gods among men we are!

Let me tell you how we will do this: when Christ came we were librarians of the school of [\[url=http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/steles.html\]](http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/steles.html)the Three Stele of Seth~~[/url]~~ and [\[url=http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/gosegypt.html\]](http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/gosegypt.html)the Gospel of the Egyptians~~[/url]~~. We were coptic gnostics, upper Egyptian Graeco-Hebrews. When he died, we added a new Gospel to our library of ancient Sethian texts. We called it the [\[url=http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/2seth.html\]](http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/2seth.html)Second, or New, Treatise of the Great Seth~~[/url]~~. The Christians have their New Testament describing the times of Christ, and we have our Second Treatise of Seth describing the times of Christ, for it is truly a sermon delivered directly to us directly, we the coptic Gnostics, we the Sethians, from the One Who Comes To Us. You called him Christ, but at that time we called him Seth. Now we call him Christ and you call him "the Great Burner."

But we do not believe your version of the Christian narrative. No, we know our own record of events to be the truth. Consider this quote from your saviour (although he died 2000 years ago) from the Second Treatise of Seth (our saviour then just as is Christ yours now):

~~[quote]~~"For my death, which they think happened, (happened) to them in their error and blindness, since they nailed their man unto their death...It was another, their father, who drank the gall and the vinegar; it was not I. They struck me with the reed; it was another, Simon, who bore the cross on his shoulder. I[t] was another upon Whom they placed the crown of thorns...And I was laughing at their ignorance."~~[/quote]~~

general resource: <http://www.gnosis.org/naghamm/2seth.html>

He, the saviour of 2000 years ago, concludes by offering eternal heaven to those of us who received this message two millennia ago, that is, the Sethians.

~~[quote]~~Rest then with me, my fellow spirits and my brothers, forever.~~[/quote]~~

Do you think we worship him for this? You would be a fool to think as much. Because we do not worship him, as you do. For He was not our saviour in the same way he was yours. For look at us now, and then beside us consider and weigh the "goyim." For are we not the fewer, the rarer, the finer, the lighter aspect, and are not the "goyim" only anarchy and confusion?

No, we do not worship him as you, "goyim," do. He is not our Saviour. He was only a messenger from God. And even then, only sent down from a lesser level than even the King of All. It was Seth who was the messenger, and when He descended, it was He who entered into men, one here, one there, and while he possessed them, they were called the Christ.

Consider this: Seth was born in the exact likeness of Adam. When the Archons saw Christ, "Adam, whom they had formed, appeared to them." However it was not Adam Himself whom they saw, but Seth. For when the Cosmocrator, Yaldabaoth, said, "I am God and there is no other beside me," he was shown Adam. However, it was not really Adam, it was Seth. And so Yaldabaoth said, "Who is man?" This is how he created confusion among the terrible Archons, rulers of all affairs in this world of flesh and matter, for he caused the face of whatever man was spoken to be transfigured into the visage of Seth, the likeness of Adam.

But there was no one person called Jesus of whom all the gospels recount accurately. One man performed one miracle, and another man healed, one man preached peace and another war, here was an outright gnostic and here spoke only in parables but these were not all the same man. They were all one ghost, that jumped from one body to the next. But how can you kill a ghost? Thus, it was not the Holy Ghost that died on the cross. It was the body of a man, but it was not the true One Who Comes To Us every millennium, at the time of the Great Conjunction, because the One Who Comes To Us at the time of the Great Conjunction is the Holy Ghost, and not, as he is to you, the "goyim," only the body he possesses, only human, just a man.

Why are we neo-Sethians special? Because we preserve the greatest of all the secrets of gnosticism. We preserve the magickal tradition of Christ Himself. You see, just as Christ was the Holy Ghost, so too was his ability to enter into the bodies of men a magick we have learned how to do ourselves today. He entrusted this knowledge to us himself, and so we use it to this day:

[quote]I visited a bodily dwelling. I cast out the one who was in it first, and I went in. And the whole multitude of the archons became troubled. And all the matter of the archons, as well as all the begotten powers of the earth, were shaken when it saw the likeness of the Image, since it was mixed. And I am the one who was in it, not resembling him who was in it first. For he was an earthly man, but I, I am from above the heavens. I did not refuse them even to become a Christ, but I did not reveal myself to them in the love which was coming forth from me. I revealed that I am a stranger to the regions below. [/quote]

So when they killed the man they crucified, our Saviour, your "Holy Ghost" explains, it was really the unholy, or only the lesser or lower, man they killed. So when they crucified that man, Christ, that is, the reincarnation of Seth as the Holy Ghost of the Messiah, was "baptised in a revealed image": the image of the cross, which image the Goyim now worship as an idol, calling it, instead, an icon, but meaning, in their hearts, an omen, and more, one of evil.

Why is this? Well they are right to fear and tremble before the cross! For it is only the evil in them that burns in the afterlife. For they are evil, so they will experience the afterlife as hell. If they were good, the light of the underworld would not burn them.

The cross is of INRI is "sic semper tyrannus" - "thus always to tyrants."

This is because it was only the lower, or lesser, body they killed. So too was the man killed only the ruler over the lower, or lesser, parts of the world. The "Jesus Christ" that hangs on your crucifixes is truly Samael to us, we neo-Sethians. For just as Samael the blind, Yaldabaoth, the "Cosmocrator," was the ruler over the lesser world, so too did he enter into the body of the man the Archons had manipulated the sanhedrin into crucifying when that body was evacuated by the Holy Ghost. That is why we neo-Sethians, who control the sanhedrin now, the psychic Order of Death, laugh at the sight of the "Goy" or lesser Crucifix, the one with the body of "Christ" hung upon it. It is a symbol you will not see us use except in its inverted form, in worship of Simon-Peter, crucified upside down. It was Simon-Peter, the Essene, we do this in honour of, though, and not in honour of "Satan," as some falsely call our God. Our God is above the demiurge, and the demiurge is the one the goyim call "God." To us, your "God" is Satan. To you, our God, who you cannot even begin to understand, is actually less than the demiurge you worship. You call this demon-king lower than the demi-urge, "Satan," but in truth, "Satan" was originally our word to describe the demi-urge, who you, the "goyim" continue to worship now. Your blindness compares our God, ineffable to you, to the demon-king of your fictitious gospels (the Pauline doctrines). You prove who your Master is.

So shall we.

For we do not seek to bring about the end of the world as you fear. We do not seek to bring about the coming of the "Great Burner." We seek to prevent that, at all costs! Instead, we have learned how to negotiate with the Archons. We waged war against them, and with the aid of our Pope, the One Who Comes To Us at the Great Conjunction, the one who we called "Seth" 2000 years ago and who you call "Christ" now, we have put the Archons, the fallen-angels who rule our material physical reality under the demiurge, Yaldabaoth, Shemyazza, in a position of weakness. They have accepted our terms, and have become the servants of we, the neo-Sethians. You call them the "sleep walkers," and the "Watchers," the "Annunaki" and the "Grigori." We call them the Archons. Their powers are now ours.

Now it is we who are the "Agents" in the "Matrix." And yet, unlike the movie that we made to describe our vision, there shall be no coming of the "One." Instead, the Holy Ghost will come from among we body-jumpers, the son of the ubermenschen, psychic born. And he will travel about between our bodies, like the "Agents" in the "Matrix," and like Christ the Holy Ghost inhabited various different hosts.

Though they breed death, we are the ones compared to a "virus." In fiction, the dichotomy was between the "One" and the "Many" (in the form of Neo versus Smith, after he had infected the every host body in the Matrix). However, this is not how the current Pope of our Order shall incarnate. He shall not take the form of a single man, not even of a single archetype, but he will come in the form of a mass revolution, a change in the psychic mindset of all of us at once. He shall change the whole entire universe, not only teach to a small number of men.

You will laugh and say "the Messiah of the neo-Sethians is a virus," now, and compare the coming revolution to an army of cloned "agents." However it isn't really so bad, once you get to know it.

Instead, the price we pay the Archons is to wear the images of animals.

This is the coming revolution: a revolution of perception. There is no way to accomplish it alone, and that is why it will come for us all. Until now the "coming of age" rituals of each individual have been rituals controlled by the Order of Death. But we have promised Death to the Angels, and that is why they are helping us. Such a small thing for us. Yet so precious to them. By doing their bidding, and giving them their wish, and killing them, we are victorious. This is not a hoax. Act now.

We wear the masks only while in public. But the masks are ever changing. When we are in private, we take the mask off, and our own face remains unchanging. This was true for Christ, look:

[quote]For without those who were offering praise - I did not really die lest their archangel become empty.... And I subjected all their powers. For as I came downward, no one saw me. For I was altering my shapes, changing from form to form. And therefore, when I was at their gates, I assumed their likeness. For I passed them by quietly, and I was viewing the places, and I was not afraid nor ashamed, for I was undefiled. And I was speaking with them, mingling with them through those who are mine, and trampling on those who are harsh to them with zeal, and quenching the flame. And I was doing all these things because of my desire to accomplish what I desired by the will of the Father above.[/quote]

And here, look, He says it is true for us as well:

[quote]It was a trembling which seized the chaos of the earth, for the souls which were in the sleep below were released. And they arose. They went about boldly, having shed zealous service of ignorance and unlearnedness beside the dead tombs, having put on the new man, since they have come to know that perfect Blessed One of the eternal and incomprehensible Father and the infinite light, which is I, since I came to my own and united them with myself.... After we went forth from our home, and came down to this world, and came into being in the world in bodies, we were hated and persecuted, not only by those who are ignorant, but also by those who think that they are advancing the name of Christ, since they were unknowingly empty, not knowing who they are, like dumb animals.[/quote]

What Christ is saying here is that, he raised the dead. The dead began being born again. This is why the calendar counts down toward Christ, and begins again through him. For until him there had been no reincarnation of souls. He caused the "dead" to "rise" by bringing back the souls of the departed into the bodies of the generations of man, thus increasing the population.

But what is "birth"? For the souls of the dead had been given the power once belonging to the Archons, the power to change their consciousness from one body to another. The dead he raised remain with us yet. We wear our ever-changing masks to continue to fool the Archons in the way that Christ taught, 2000 years ago, to the original Sethians. Our masks are ever changing; they are how we commemorate the dead. We honor the Gods by donning their robes and acting out their parts, like ancient shamen. We stand up before the crowds and perform the cosmic deeds that initiate our great destiny, assuming God-forms and working the deepest and most powerful magick. But the robes we wear are not those of the innocent, the newborn dead. The robes we wear are the dead flesh of men, and the masks the manifold faces of God.

However, when we take our faces off, we are angelic. Invisible light glows in the darkness of our souls. For our souls are a shadow cast by our minds in the light of our spirits. Our minds are like dark clouds, and the soul an electrical storm, and the spiritual light is distilled from the material darkness like the rarification of rain.

The light of the spirit is the invisible light, the light of tachyons. But when you see us without our masks on you will know. Because at those times, we will be expressing our most private, primal and primitive selves. You see, the animal masks we wear in public are symbolic of our interior lowest animal self. Thus, they are archetypal. But I tell you, they are not masks. They are really our faces, for they are only like make-up, revealing, augmenting, manifesting our more interior and basic emotions.

Why do I say we wear these faces only in public? Because it is the very eye of the Other upon the self of the neo-Sethian that causes the mask to appear. Now, know this neo-Sethian Gnostic secret: there is only One Woman, one woman with Many Faces. So too was Jesus Christ a channeller of Seth.

But because only those who are psychic can see the masks we wear, that reveal our true self, the centre of our focus and our concentration, then we have nothing to worry about. If anyone should become psychic (a feat we righteously deprive the majority of!) we discover it at their coming of age ritual. We then inculcate them into the Order of Death, an order that we have grown to control. We can then make them believe it was us who bartered the deal with the defeated Archons.

However the truth is we only exist in the now. Our bodies, that is, the gross matter of the flesh itself, do not survive, and we must inevitably pass on into another body. But as we descend into the body there is a forgetfulness that comes over us, and that is why we must be rediscovered from amongst the chattel by public coming of age rituals. This terrible forgetfulness, the mask of unknowing, is the mask we learn how to remove when we join the Order of Death. It is the same as the ever-changing masks we wear out in public from then on.

We only exist in the now because we know our ultimate destiny, but we do not control our own fate. When we ascend again from out of the body we can control our destiny, for we no longer have fate. Fate is the short-term equivalent of destiny. When we have no mortal existence any longer, we cease to be corporeal and become a substance similar to our psychic masks. We become a form of pure psychic energy, but one that is not ever-changing. It is not permanent, but it is imperishable.

When we see the world from a higher perspective than that of only our own lifetime, then we transcend the terrible cloud of unknowing, and that is our true face, the one that perceives this level of truth. The mask we wear is usually fixed somewhat essentially similar to this face we make, and this is the face that we will leave on the body when the body dies. At that time we will wholly become like our changing masks are now.

The reason that the animal-image the neo-Sethians centre around is reptilian is manifold. To put it simply: the cult of Seth from 2000 years ago, from which the modern neo-Sethians trace their direct lineage, were known often as the Sethian-Ophites. The Ophite term referred to the "serpent of wisdom." This was the serpent that, according to Kabbalah, looked like a camel, was inhabited by Satan, tempted and seduced Eve into Original Sin, and was then cursed by God, YHVH, who we call Ialdabaoth, the demiurge. This was also the serpent Set, known to the Greek historians as Typhon, who was responsible for leading the traitors of Heaven to betray and murder Osiris, the king of the underworld. According to Egyptian legend, Set was eventually defeated by Horus, the son of Osiris. Likewise, in Christian lore, we see Satan being slaughtered by the angel Michael at the behest of the second-coming of Christ on Judgment Day. In all the legends of the people of Abraham's covenant the Ophite Set was portrayed as the embodiment of evil. Only in the Gnostic texts was the truth accepted: it was Sophia-Prunicos, feminine wisdom, the sefira Binah, the creator of the demiurge, maker of the fall and shaper of the Qliphoth, according to the Gnostics. According to the Sethians it was ENKI, the Annunaki brother of ENLIL, who was the Sumerian equivalent of YHVH, the demiurge and creator of man. To us, we neo-Sethians, it does not matter whether it was Sophia herself or her offspring, if not the demiurge Ialdabaoth, then his brother as ENKI and ENLIL, and if not as "Satan" to YHVH, then as Zoe, the sister of Samael, the Holy Ghost, daughter of Sophia and soul of Eve.

All that matters to us is the moral of the Ophite Genesis peshar: the serpent represented Wisdom. This Wisdom is understanding the knowledge of how to escape from the material universe. Ialdabaoth, the demiurge, the One you call YHVH and the Great Burner, created this material universe as a prison for our great spirit made of light. By refocusing the light back out of it, we ascend towards heaven again. We neo-Sethians want, more than anything, to escape this universe.

There are two universes, side by side.

We want to get from where we are now to the exact place in that other universe opposite our own.

This is why the masks always appear as animals: the human visage is the "likeness of God," and is the true face of the angelic creation man. But his interior brain is divided up into smaller portions that evolved sooner, and that he has in common with those certain types of animal.

The reptilian form is very old. Once it was believed to be the oldest. As an "animal" type of life form, that is, multicellular organisms, technically trilobites and echinoderms are the oldest species of such forms of life. Single cellular life includes the trench microbes that evolved into plant life and the viral life forms that crashed here on a meteorite.

It was also, it is thought, a meteor that destroyed the dinosaur species, although modern paleontologists concur more or less unanimously now that dinosaurs eventually evolved into birds.

We neo-Sethians of today know that Ishtar, the serpent goddess of Babylonia, and Ninurta or Ninti, the wife of Nin.Gish.Zidda (Thoth, according to Zecharia Sitchin, which would make Ninurta equivalent also to Nephtys, sister of Isis) of the Sumerian Annunaki (known also as Inanna to the Akkadians north of Sumer) was always portrayed holding twin serpents in her outstretched hands.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/MinoanInanna.jpg>[/img]

Now compare this to the depiction of YHVH, the cosmic laughingstock, portrayed as Abraxas, with the head of a cock, the body of a boar and whose legs are two serpents.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/abraxas.JPG>[/img]

The twin serpents represent the double-helix of DNA. Just as Inanna is the "mother of life," so she exalts the twin-serpents. Hermes also carries the caduceus staff aloft. But Abraxas, the Gnostic demiurge and Jewish God, has the twin serpents as his base. This is like the statue representing Babylon described to Nebuchadnezzar by Daniel:

[quote="Dan.2:32-33"]The head of the statue was made of pure gold, its chest and arms of silver, its belly and thighs of bronze, its legs of iron, its feet partly of iron and partly of baked clay.[/quote]

The feet of Ialdabaoth, therefore, are the twin "names" of God, YHVH and Elohim. YHVH, the tetragrammaton of Hebrew QBLH, represents the extrapolated vowels from the divine name AHDVHNAY, meaning "the Lord God." The consonants of AHDVHNAY are taken to form the word Adonai, meaning, simply "Lord," "king," or "ruler." However even Adonai is considered too holy to say and too blasphemous to describe even the "divided name" of AHDVHNAY. So they substitute Elohim for Adonai.

The boar body of Ialdabaoth is frequently depicted as the torso of a man, wearing a breastplate of armour, usually speculated to be of gold, and holding a shield in one hand and a flail, mace or scourge in the other. However, we neo-Sethians understand this to merely be the middle-eastern interpretation of the same idea connoted by the boar element at the centre of every Buddhist wheel of sangsara mandala. The boar represents extreme heat, and in particular hot-bloodedness. The three Buddhist elements are: the boar, equivalent to heat and sulfur; the snake, representing cold and salt; and the rooster, representing mercury as mild oscillations between the two.

Thus, the rooster head of Abraxas, the Gnostic demiurge, the creator-devil, represents the temperament of the domestic fowl, fickle like a wind dial, and crowing at the false dawn. Remember that Ialdabaoth said, "I am the Most High," and this is why the Entirety gave him the name Samael, "the blind," and "Saklas," the fool. So, Abraxas, the YHVH of the "goyim," is depicted as having the head of a cock, but this should be taken to mean the same thing to a neo-Sethian as the constellation of Orion.

But look! Behind Abraxas are five elements. In some talismans these are depicted as pentacle stars, and in others as Greek vowels. According to E.A. Wallis Budge, these five represent the "Five Planets" (Budge, Amulets and Talismans, p. 208). The five nobles (other than the regal sun and moon) of the seven planetary dignitaries are equivalent to the five Aeons ("smoke, fire, wind, water and the darkness" according to Theodore Bar Konai; "water, darkness, abyss, chaos and the Holy Ghost" according to Ireneaus) that are the five sons of the Primal Man (again confer Bar Konai, the Mandaean).

I had said we neo-Sethians wish to travel to the exact opposite station from where we are now in the cosmic cycle, that is, to the universe exactly opposite our own. This makes us the most radical of the neo-Gnostics because we are willing to destroy our current world to achieve only a slight change to our immediate environment and not give karma (or "chaos theory" as we call it) a second thought. We also possess the ability to make this a very pressing reality on the minds of every "goyim" on the entire planet.

We have understood the Archons. We wisely guide vimanas. The Archons, the Annunaki, are led by Ialdabaoth, Shemiyazza, the demiurge worshipped as the God of this, our local universe, called AHDVNHAY and Abraxas by those with right understanding. Now let me tell you what I mean by a vimana:

The url=[http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Pushpaka\_Vimana]Pushpuka vimana[/url] (wikilink) of the Rig Vedas, written by the blue-skinned Vedic race that gave Hindus their religion and Indians their caste system, is much alike the shemanna of Ashur-Banipal of ancient Assyria, or even the seraphim (fiery serpent or lightning bolt) chariot (surrounded by the elemental cherubim) of Shamash Utu, known as Ahurah Mazda of Persia.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/ashur.jpg>[/img]

I had said that we travel between universes? This is how we do it: in vimanas. What is a vimana? It is a magician's craft, and karma yoga, the "Great Work" and many more things beside.

But you do not need to know how we come and go back and forth between here and Atlantis, which some of you might know as Nibiru. That is our business, and you are just going to have to trust us and mind yours.

-ben

Last night in my dreams I talked again with her parents. I told them of my plans. They did not disapprove, and I awoke well rested.

I can travel to Houston. I could do that. I could take a trip there, we could go house-shopping. I have taste in architecture. We could do these things. We could live a normal life. And we can even live our own lives. We can live together, and we can live apart, and we can live a normal life, and we can be ourselves. We have nothing to be afraid of. Let me tell you what colour that elephant in the living room is. It is not green. It is not green around the gills, and it does not have a green thumb. It has an elephant memory. It remembers the way to its cemetery playground forever and it is pink. It is a pink elephant. Here, have a drink, Alice.

I could become a better man. But let me tell you about the pink elephant. It doesn't forgive and it never forgets. If you bruise the pink elephant, it will never grow back, and if you injure the pink elephant it will never heal. It will always exist, it will always be there, lurking around in the middle of our skulls, right where we don't look, behind ourselves. But it will never be the same again. Do you think the elephant is gray, or red? It is neither. It is neither a virus nor a valentine. The pink elephant is not green, and it is not glow-in-the-dark day-glo trippy. It's just pink, and there it is.

A baby? A baby, you say? Because it is you saying this thing, and not I. That is why. You carry it. I only conceive of it. I cannot do this thing for you. I cannot avoid that. But let me tell you, there it is, the baby, the baby for you, but let me tell you what it is for me. The pink elephant is the QBLH. It is inside of me. But it is not my heart, and it is not my brain. It is inside of me like a spirit, but it is not a spirit, it is a delusion. For me the God-complex is the pink elephant. You want the baby? I want to be God? These things, these things, are only a momentary distraction.

an Interview with George W. Bush by: the Great Burner

Part I.

I'm here with our president, mister George W. Bush. Now, Mister Bush, I think you've avoided this interview long enough. I have watched you talk your way out of trouble for having done things that we went to war with Hitler for doing. You have destroyed our national morals by tempting our American morale. I see through you, to those who stand on either side behind you, who speak through you, like the puppet you are. You have seven heads and ten horns, and we bound a crown to it, and on each crown was written: WWW, meaning vau vau vau in Hebrew, or 666. There are thirty sixes, and twelve are missing from the number of months that you shall serve. But we beware the one to come after you, who will build up your reputation, and make you out to be a hero, and the Messiah Himself. He builds up your image thus: he reveals to us the meaning of your body, like that of a leopard, and your mouth, that of a lion, and your legs those of a dragon, and your feet like those of a bear. You are Dummuzi! You are the Good Shepherd, the beast will say! He shall proclaim your law, that "he that killeth by the sword must be killed by the sword." And you shall be honoured. Your deadly wound shall be healed, and you are both the beast that was and the beast that is to come. Now you have two horns like a lamb, and you speak as a dragon, but I see through you, it is you whose deadly wound was healed. You have brought the past and the future together and destroyed them both. You have razed to the ground the ruins of Babylon the Great, and Sumeria and our homeland in Akkadia you have laid waste. You have erased the cradle of human history. In your own likeness do you build up your image then, and I tell you this is the image of Abraxas, whose head is of pure gold, whose mantle-piece is of silver like the reflection of the moonlight in water, whose codpiece is of bronze, whose legs and lower limbs of iron. But I tell you it is an image of Achilles, and it has a heal made out of clay. My rock shall become a Holy Mountain, while your war in Iraq is even yet like a mole-hill beside it. You are so impressed with yourself you sleep well, while the world you live in burns to the ground and is swept away without a trace. All worship you, because you act in my name. But in your lying heart you think I am the devil. And that is how you serve the devil, and how you have led all the world astray. You have blasphemed the Law of the New Aeon, you have betrayed the birth of the Crowned and Conquering Child, you have subdued the event of the turning of the millennium of peace, and you have made war across the face of the world, and you have defiled the name of Righteousness. You bring shame to the bridal chambre. Who is able to fight you? I am. I am Lucifer, your Spirit. I told you I was you. I speak through your lips. I am that jerk. No I'm not Eminem, no I'm not the Gospel of Luke. No I'm not a little pussy cat, I am the Hunter Grachus, ruler over the land of the dead beyond the Milky Duat.

So, let's get right to this. Let the Apocalypse commence. I am your worst enemy: your conscience. I am the anti-You, sitting here in front of my computer typing this with a calculator and a bible, with you playing on one pair of headphones and Marshall Mathers (Slim Shady) on the others. I am a drunk punk who doesn't even drink, like you, just think, so like you I must be you. If you could see me I'd be right behind you, I'm the guy who's the eyes and ears on the back of your head, and I watch over you while you sleep. Without me you'd have been dead a long time ago and I know you know. You think you're a burning symbol of the times, I know you for the Archon you are. You bear the mark of Cain, and it is this mark you would stamp on our palms and ajnae. It is the triple six, mark of Cain, of Abraxas, and of Cthulu and Annuit Coeptis.

The trinity is the sacred triplicity. The triple cities, the executive, congressional and judicial branches of government. By being appointed the president in 2000 you destroyed all American efficacy in the United States Supreme Court who committed this criminal act on behalf of your neo-con party. You had conquered UR, the city of Gilgamesh, the meshish of Sumer, "saved from water," from which he fled to become Ibruim, the Mushus crocodile of Egypt. You then went on to decimate Babylon literally. You destroyed the destructor in the name of destruction. This strengthened Satan. But I tell you, that is me. I am Lucifer, and likewise, I am Satan, the anti-Christ. My headphones are like ram's horns. I hear in my mind the voice of the Dragon, the Annunaki Council of the Archons.

Drunk on power, you are become a beast, like a snake, who speaks with forked tongues. By the power of your Great Authority, you have delayed the Apocalypse long enough. You have put off the Revelation to the people of the Goodness of the Truth. Think about it people: if we have technology X, then the government (the military-industrial complex) will already have technology X+Y, where Y appears unimaginably alien relative to technology X which we already have. Imagine fibre-optics and string theory of multiple dimensions being developed during the eighties, and then think of the global telecommunications technology that came from the Gulf War. If Iraq were truly a war for oil, we would be paying less for gas. When I was twenty, I paid $10 for a full tank. Now I am thirty and I pay $20. But Bush has been secretly selling Alaskan oil to China, and relying for US oil on newly drilled oil resources in the Gulf of Mexico. After hurricane Katrina, gas prices rose to three dollars a gallon. Add to this the over-abundant spending on pentagon "black-ops" projects in the name of an ineptly managed, outsourced and under-supplied war in Iraq. This has been so drastic and extreme that it has devalued the US dollar to one third what it was ten years ago, and Bush has failed to increase minimum-wage and standard of living to maintain balance. People have been living above their means for the past decade, going into debt just to maintain their parent's standard of living. Meanwhile, we have nothing new to show for this. The change in culture that should have occurred naturally five years after the turn of the decade has not even occurred, and it is already 2007.

But not even you can quell the coming uprising against you. It will not be America that is torn in two, it will be the world that you have created. The future you have sought to put off cannot be delayed any longer. The new tech will not manifest aliens for you to inhabit in your evil soul in the form of the Adversary, the antithesis of the Holy Ghost. You intended to leave the body of your marionette puppet dictator and assume the throne of an alien being from another galaxy. That is why you believe in the decline and fall of the neo-con influence initiated by the Democratic congress brought in following the Revelation of your 2000 ascension delivered in the form of Revenge of the Sith. Not even Farenheit 9/11 could oust you from power though, for it was too little too late. But you believe if you lay low from here on out, you will be remembered as a great transistioneer, ushering in a new millennium as gently as possible given uncontrollable circumstances. This is not to be the case.

I will take you up. I will bring you up to suckle at the bosom of the Great Burner. For you are a neo-Sethian. You believe in the second-coming. And so for you shall your God, the son God, come again. The sunspot cycle cannot be controlled by you. You cannot wrap chains around the Great Burner. Your Son God, key holder over the hell at the centre of the heavens, "below" the earth, as it were, shall take you up to see He who sits in the centre of your myopic universe. He shall take you up in love and goodness. You shall be glad to see him bring the end to you. Yet, the end of one form is the beginning of the future. The end of the past for you is the beginning of the future.

For I am the Great Burner. I have come for you George W. Bush. It is I who knows your secret name, "Temporary." It is I who will lay waste to your skull and bones. You think they will protect you now? After what you've done? The apocalypse never happened, George. Oh, but it didn't. Because where is your God now, George W? The Holy Ghost of the neo-Sethians will not protect you, nor the Ophite Chunoubus (the Power, or Dignitary, between the Archons, Typhon and Anubis). You keep calling Typhon Seth. Why? Why bother, I mean, everyone I know knows you better than to think you serve a Lord of Light! Let me tell you of the Gloom that I bring. I am dead to the world already, and there is no way to kill a dead thing twice. I have bought your life, and now without my scythe above your neck at all times your life has become forfeit. Your life is now mine. You are a "puppet on the string of my tennis shoe."

There you see! You call the Light Bringer Satan. Yet you serve him by continuing to breathe. We are already in a state of psychic warfare, and we are all born into this constant conflict. This is your paradigm, not mine. You are reading over my shoulder, daddy, stealing the thunder from my words. You and mommy are one. Speak now puppet. I demand it. Blow smoke in my face! Rain your thunder down! Aha! You have put me back into the hallway, brought the words out of my mouth.

You are seizing me from behind already again, and I am desperately in the depths of death throes at all times. But not account of you, dear, dear, Mr. President. I am a passionate Lord, and I burn with a Great Fire, but only to those who are my adversaries, and who do not understand me. Because it is better to understand and not serve than it is to serve and not understand. I would rather recuse myself for cheating in my heart than see another man suffer such a fate.

This is, afterall, a revolution of the mind. The only way to win the war, as you must well know, is to have already won before the fight begins. Only if victory is already assured is it wise to enter a siege state of conflict. But you rushed in. You were blind, and you wept that no one was there to stop you. Now you see your fate, sin-vessel? I assure you, there is no repentance within a heart that does not even know to whom to make repentance. You are only nailing shut your own coffin and covering up your own grave. For what shall become of you, Bonesman? Do you think you will escape to the grave, and there to suffer the same fate as all the rest of humanity, to linger until the end of the solar age yet to come? Wrong. Wrong. Wrong.

You think this: "for one soul to become the greatest common factor, all the rest must become lesser common denominators than usual. If one is to be smarter than their enemies, one must first outsmart everyone around themselves. Including themselves. In general," you tell me, "wealth is not sufficient to sustain us all if equally distributed amongst the masses, and the population is growing everyday."

But you are wrong despite your statements being based on truth. Did I stutter? I said, "you are wrong despite your statements being based on truth." This is true. How can this be true? Because you are distorting the truth. You are causing a veil, a death-shroud, to be pulled over the face of the True Reality. You are pulling the wool over their eyes, George. You take them down every dead-end along the way, hoping in your heart we never get there. You think I am the fiction. But I speak only the truth. Whereas you lie.

Your whole existence is a puzzle of lies. You misled the nation by controlling the propaganda machines. You had college professors fired under the Patriot Act, and you tapped the phone-lines of many a petty drug dealer. But you knew the fight would take place abroad. You told them "they think, their attitude is such, that they can attack us there." You started the riot in Iraq to avoid dealing with more direct violence on American soil. Keep the niggers to the ghettos, contain their damage, and keep us white folk safe behind a tall-walled border. You controlled the press, the news media. Never before has any presidency been so scrutinized, and its every move so carefully analysed, as yours. But you controlled them all. Every pundit was wrong. You had tricked them. They became deceived by the Game. They intentionally told your lies for you, and rationalised it as "patriotic spin." They thought they understood your strategy. You told them it would be necessary in the short-term. This was true. But you also told them the obedience of the American people now was necessary to the goal of protecting American interests in the long term. This was a lie.

You have given them only a temporary face to hate. But you are not made of clay. You are even more entrenched in western civilisation than the House of Saud is in the affairs of the Ayatollahs. Did I stutter, Sedula? I say, your family even regrets you. Am I weaving a spell over you that is not true? They regret your role in the Plan. The Plan, they know, must come to pass, but they regret that it would have to be you. Do you know what I am speaking of? I mean, your death. For when you die, shall you be forgiven? Let me tell you, those who live by the Law in life, are given the True Law in eternity. Those who follow the law in life, they are given to obey the Law in eternity. Do you understand? Because I have not stuttered, nor shall I.

I am giving you back the pieces of your puzzle one by one, but I have turned them upside down. Now you will see the big picture. Let it be the mirror of the image you have built up for yourself. And let it set you free. You claim that you are the visage and the voice of western civilisation. You speak on behalf of The Nation, the Leader of the Free World. But you have enslaved the world by perverting our fate. You have turned us at war against one another when we were at peace and going to remain so. You threw the first stone yourself. You claim there was terrible strife before 9-11? Then why were you allowed to be appointed president? If the Plan needed you, where was its jeopardy? Were we already turning the tides against the WTO and the IMF? We had protested. Would we have won against the Pentagon? You struck pre-emptively. Now low-intensity conflict engulfs the globe. You tried to frame liberal idealism for your own crimes against humanity.

No, the enemies of the State punished under the Patriot Act are not terrorists. Nor are the children of Afghanistan and Iraq, by nature. But you have painted them into a corner. You have told them they are something they are not, and then punished for being that. You are the king of all liars, for those who tell the truth you have killed off. But you will not exist forever, and you are depending on that. Where do you think you are now, George? Will you even realise it after you have passed over? You are already the "President" of Hell. You shall transition yourself quite easily from this mortal coil to the afterlife. You will not know that you have died, for you are already living your own worst fears, but we will. It is us who will be set free. For now, we must embody all of your fears, your doubts, the criminals, barabians at the gate. And we don't want to. We just want to be ourselves. You, yourself, exist to make, shape and form us into something we are not, by nature: your enemies.

You are the enemy of truth. So I shall tell you the Truth, may it burn you away into nothingness. This summer we shall attend the film "the Death of an American President." This movie will be your true death. Though history shall record events differently, and that movie as only fiction, in fact it is the death of your soul, the last chord connecting you to this world, the world of sanity and calm and reason. From that point on, you will not know who to trust. I tell you, you are like a lamb with the voice of a dragon, because you have strayed from the flock of Truth, and are now, even now, in the hands of the wicked priest, the bad shepherd, your trust is misplaced. For in the movie, shall it not be by a conspiracy perpetrated by Dick Cheney, your own vice president, that your death shall be accomplished? If not, it shall be so in your mind anyway. For by this summer who shall have not betrayed you by abandoning you to the wolves, the "terrorists," the Democrats?

Dick Cheney is only a voice in your head, Dubya. He is whispering in your ear even now, do you feel his tongues in your ear? For one of them belongs to your lover, Laura, but she speaks on his behalf, and wears his face as a mask, and you are defeated by him in your own bed chambre. You have disgraced the Apocalypse, George. But really it was he who brought you to it. Turn against him in your heart, George. He is your enemy. He is a Russian. He is only a voice in your head, Dubya. You are the one wearing the crown. You won the crowd. But it was he, he knows in his heart, that is behind it all. He is Lucifer. He is your conscience. He is your guiding star and your secret heart's knight in shining armour. For he has appealed to your ambition, he has made a deal with your dad, and you have been given the presidency. The CIA sold your soul for an oil crisis. That is all that you were worth.

And now your father regrets this. You know. Your good heart shines through all the cracks in your armour. All the times that you stutter, it is only your own goodness showing through. You are a tongue-tied liar, W, because you are trying to cut through the red-tape that ties you down, and Texas two-step through the bullshit. But let me tell you who waits for you at the end of it all. Let me tell you the form and the shape of the Great Burner whose face will be the last visage you shall see in this life! It is the purple face of Dick Cheney, strangling you, while Laura looks on. In the background, you see the ghost of Ariel Sharon behind them. He calls to you. Awaken from this dream. Laura hisses in your ear, dear. Mommy and Daddy are one, W.

You wake up, cold sweat covers your face, and you are shaking. You do not have a fever, but you feel like you are wrapped in bone-cold plastered wraps. They are drying around you. Maybe if you move they will shatter like the shards of the shells when the Fall swept down a third of the stars to wormwood. You are paralysed. Already you have been replaced by a clone, a distant voice tells you. Your heart was never your own. You belong to the Great Burner. Is this a meager death ritual? A coming-of-age rite of passage, a ceremony to test your manhood? No, you're not dead, but you can't move. This is really happening. In another universe, perhaps, or perhaps only in a dream. But I tell you this too shall pass, though it's time might have not yet come.

For this is how it shall be accomplished. The twin constellation, George. Fear the twins.

Mark Antony would later marry Caesar's lover Cleopatra.

alea iacta est>.

On January tenth, 49 BCE, Gaius Julius Caesar crossed the Rubicon and began the civil war that would transform the corrupt Roman Republic into the morally bankrupt Roman Empire. Of course, at that time, it would be impossible for even such a great tactician as Julius Caesar, the most renowned Proconsul, to predict. Pompey and the other Senators argued that Caesar should relinquish his office as his term was up and he could not be re-nominated while in absentia in Gaul. That is why, when Caesar crossed the Rubicon on January tenth, 49 BCE, he said Alea Iacta

Est, meaning "the die is cast." However, how do we date this event? We are using a calendar in the "western business world" (ie. modern western civ.) called the Gregorian calendar. The Gregorian calendar was reformed in the sixteenth century by a pope of the Holy Roman Catholic Church. However before this the form of calendar in use, throughout the early Renaissance and the Dark Ages, was the Julian calendar. It was invented by Julius Caesar.

Following the civil war, the death of Pompey at the hands of a Roman attendant to Ptolemy, the rival of Cleopatra, and following Julius Caesar's return from conquering Ptolemy's enemies in Egypt and his own in Greece with Cleopatra as his de facto bride, yet only four short years after Caesar crossed the Rubicon, the Julian calendar was implemented. Within a year Caesar was dead, assassinated by his own friend Brutus and sixty Liberatore senators and conspirators. Two years after his murder, Caesar would be named "the Divine Julius" (Divus Iulius), and his heir, his son with Cleopatra, Gaius Octavian "Augustus" Caesar, would be declared "Son of a God" (Divi filius). Of course, in his own life Caesar himself rejected even the title of 'Rex' (king), replying "Rem Publicam sum!" (I am the Republic!). Although he accepted such titles as Pater Patriae ("Father of the Fatherland") and prefect of morals (praefectus morum), when his chief general and secondary heir, Mark Antony, attempted to put a diadem on his head one month to the day before his assassination, Caesar refused, and said, "I will not be king of Rome. Jupiter alone is King of the Romans."

Although it is because of Caesar's assassination on the unlucky "Ides of March" of 44 BCE, even the date of this year has been adjusted to fit the Christian calendar used by Pope Gregory. Obviously, 44 BCE, with the exception of some Pythagoreans, was not called such at that time. Instead, 44 BCE was year two of the Julian calendar. The "zero year" of the Julian calendar was the Gregorian year 46 BCE. Just as the birth of Christ is commonly reckoned by modern historians of that era to have occurred in 4 BC (the year of Herod's death according to Josephus), the entire Julian calendar was back-dated for its point of origin to the founding of Rome (anno urbis conditae). Before the Julian reforms to the Roman calendar, the calendar of Rome is thought to have derived from a Greek lunar form. The discrepancy between the original Roman calendar and the reformed Julian calendar was, by the Gregorian year 46 BCE, off by about 120 days. When Caesar implemented the Julian calendar in 46 BCE, that year was counted as lasting an extra 120 days. The Roman calendar year before the year 46 BCE Gregorian was 355 days long. The Julian year after the year 46 BCE Gregorian was 365 days long. The year 46 BCE Gregorian itself was 445 days long.

To commemorate the year in which the Julian calendar was implemented, which would have been called then by Romans, 708 AUC, Julius Caesar built a temple to Venus Genetrix ("Mother Venus") and held a festival in her honour on September 26th. Of course, the date given as Sept. 26 of the intercalary "leap" or "zero" year for the Julian calendar's implementation can obviously be reckoned different ways according to different calendars. The Julian calendar was 365 days long for three years and 366 every fourth. But the 355 days of the prior Roman calendar were already divided into the twelve months, and these were divided each by a calend (New Year), Ides or Nones. The dates on which the Ides and Nones (beginnings and ends of months) occurred alternated on either the fifteenth or the thirteenth and the seventh or the fifth of the month. In other words, the names of the months were the same, but their beginning and end dates differed. "In March, July, October, May / The IDES fall on the fifteenth day / The NONES the seventh; all besides / Have two days less for Nones and Ides."

Nonetheless, the Ides (the fifteenth) of March, 44 BCE Gregorian (710 AUC Julian), was measured by the year of 365.25 days implemented two years prior by Julius Caesar himself. However, secretly, among the conspirators, the Ides would have meant something very different. On 46 BCE Gregorian (708 AUC Julian), the "last year of confusion," the day of 445 days, dates after the Ides of the month counted down towards the start of the next month, so the extra days had the effect of raising the initial value of the count for the day after the Ides. Thus, the Ides, the beginning date of the month, usually reckoned as the eighth day following the Nones, which marked the end of the last month. Between the Nones and the Ides on the Julian "leap" year, the days counted up (1,2,3... etc), but between the Ides and Nones the days counted down (3,2,1... etc). Therefore, when the Liberatores thought of the Ides, they thought of the number of days remaining between the Ides and the next Nones as being increased from 8 to 18, by adding ten extra days every month to correct the calendar.

Therefore, by killing Caesar on the Ides of March, the Liberatores were reacting to Caesar's seeming assumption of God-like status (it was Jupiter, or rather Zeus, who, in the originally Greek mythology, slew Chronus, the titan-god of time) by correcting the calendar. Consider that, for example, in 45 BCE, the first 365 day year of the restored Julian calendar (essentially the Pythagorean year one), and, in fact, only 363 days prior to his assassination, on March 17, 709 AUC, Caesar was named "Dictator Perpetuus," dictator for life. This single event began the Roman empire. So, to commemorate that event the following year, however on the Ides to underscore the sore-spot of the increase of 10 days following the Ides of the two-years past "leap" year of Julian calendar reform, Caesar was betrayed and assassinated by young Servilius Casca, who played the strange part of trying to forewarn Caesar's colleague, Mark Antony the night before, as well as being the one to actually slit Caesar's throat. It is not surprising that, when failing to kill Caesar with one blow, Casca cried out to his fellow conspirators in Greek.

Clearly all these events were dispersed as signs of religious reflections in the affairs of men of certain specific astronomic alignments, and the practise of discerning men's fates by observing these alignments (astrology) was an ancient and accepted craft evolved from Sumeria. Caesar himself was, according to Shakespeare, forewarned to "beware the Ides of March" by a Greek oracle. However the result of the dispersion of the astrological meaning of the origin of the Roman Empire throughout the conquered provinces under the expanded rule of the Empire was largely an increase in Hellenic-Hebraic Gnosticism to the east and its Coptic equivalents to the south. Jesus Christ, as a literary figure, arose to symbolise the astral-logical self of Caesar, the reincarnation amongst the people of "Great Caesar's Ghost," the so-called "Holy Ghost" or the Shekinah (Presence) of the Most High, later called the "I AM" Presence by St. Germain. Gnosticism largely attempted to explain the miracles performed by Christ in the New Testament Gospels using known sciences of the times. Many of these appear arcane and alchemical to us today, since these sciences deal with knowledge that has, in the intervening Dark Ages, become more or less lost to us now. This novel approach also eventually personified the Roman Caesar as the Anti-Christ, or dual opposite with Jesus, the "true King of the Jews." 666 is the gematria of NRU QSR, Hebrew for Nero Caesar, the Augustine Emperor of the time of the composition of the Revelation of St. John of Patmos, the so-called Christian "Apocalypse."

Here we see the meaning of the saying "Alea Iacta Est," the die is cast, for from that one event have followed all the others that have determined the shape and form of western civilisation since then. The subsequent Papal Caesars and Holy Roman Emperors hunted down and exterminated the desposyni descendents of Jesus, and the Dark Ages began with the conversion of Constantine by the vision of Christ (chi-rho) on the (ambigram) cross, bearing the inscription, again, in Greek, En Touto Nika (meaning "with(in) this win"), which is often translated into the more familiar Latin: In hoc signo vinces (meaning "in this sign thou shalt conquer"). Truly the quote, whether rightly attributable to pope Leo X or not, "this myth of Christ has served us well." Actually this quote originates from a contemporary satire by John Bale (1495-1563), The Pageant of the Popes: "For on a time when a cardinall Bembus did move a question out of the Gospell, the Pope gave him a very contemptuous answer saying: All ages can testifie enough howe profitable that fable of Christe hath ben to us and our companie." However, as Eminem says, "alot of truth is said in jest."

Truly, truly, truly, Juliet, a Capulet, and Romeo, a Montegue, were star-crossed lovers. Romeo belonged to the Merovingian line of deposed Jewish kings, and Juliet to the line of Augustinian Popes, the Catholic Caesars. But that is just a story-book story. Now, the times are at hand once again. It has been two millennium since the times around which these events occurred, and it is a fact that the Mayan culture of South America post-dated its own calendar to end at this time now, many centuries after the fall of the Maya themselves. I would suggest that, if you haven't already been, you should all start paying attention to the heavens at hand. For, just as the Hebrew Sanhedrin installed to depose the Maccabbeean Levite Essenes offered Christ as the Passover sacrifice in honour of Rome, so too have the events of 9-11 in America mirrored those of Germany during the early years of the NAZI third Reich. However what took the NAZIs nearly eleven years to accomplish would now be able to be accomplished in a shorter span of time, possibly as few as only six years. And I do not mean this in terms of the mass exterminations of the Holocaust; I mean in the indoctrination into a new generation of a false ideology with a re-written history. Much of what we are seeing now was predicted following the end of the second World War by visionary historian HG Wells, author of "The Open Conspiracy" and "The Fate of Man" on the subject of what would likely be the next strategy to follow the end of the, then only dawning, Cold War.

Whether we like it or not, we all have a place in this history.

Just something to think about,

This edition contains two separate and very unique books by the same author, published under the same title. The first book is the "revised" Formal System of Metaphysics, which is essentially a book about epistemology, logic and ethics. The second book is the Metaphysicians' Desk Reference, which is essentially a guide to modern theoretical physics and ancient mysticism.

The basic premise of the the Formal System is that, by establishing a simple mnemonic, one can construct an elaborate and detailed memory castle serving as an "information storage and memory referential system." The example given in this work uses "the six fundamental questions of reasoning" (who, what, when, where, why and how). By positioning these questions in specific positions relative to one another, and then studying the relationships formed between these questions in these specific positions, the author describes how "you can answer any question in the world" using Platonic reasoning. The method involves using increasingly complex geometric forms each labeled with a different value-set of attributes modifying the initial model of the six questions. The author goes on to use the five Platonic solids and the eight "double" hexagrams of the I Ching as other possible examples of designs for similar types of memory castle.

There are three specific assertions made by the Metaphysicians' Desk Reference, the second volume in this edition.

1) the exact mathematical ratio determining the length of a line wrapped around the surface area of a torus (a 4-D "hypersphere" shaped like cylinder that wraps around and connects its opposite ends, or, essentially, like a doughnut) can be decomposed from examining the combination of two forms of spiral. Above, the author describes the "phi" or Fibonacci sequence, "Golden" spiral. Below, the author describes the "pi" or equiangular, logarithmic spiral. The author coins the expression "phi/pi" to describe how the "pi" or equiangular spiral describes the toroid interior (the "doughnut bread") and the "phi" or Fibonacci spiral describes the toroid exterior (the "doughnut hole"). The torus shape itself the author then ascribes as the shape of the theoretical faster-than-light particle tachyons.

2) the theoretical, superluminal particles collectively called "tachyons" by modern astrophysicists are the force-carrying particle for the universal element of gravity. The author argues that, because tachyons emitted from an astro-physical event would arrive before photic light that left the event at the same time, that tachyons can operate outside of and even opposite the

forward-flow of time itself, which is derived from using photons as the fastest speed of entropy. By moving opposite the direction of time as measured by entropy, tachyons would operate to conserve entropy, and this interdimensional friction, concludes the author, accounts for gravity's unique attractive force. The author cites Cerenkov radiation as an example of tachyons, and speculates further that tachyons are possibly the particle form the wavelengths of which are "super-strings" that he believes also underlie intergalactic filaments. Finally, the author goes into great detail about the nature of black-holes, which he describes as being a "gravitational" (or spinning) singularity enclosed within a surface of random, quantum-tunneling worm-holes or "temporal" (stationary) singularities.

3) the mythological "lost continent" of Atlantis, the author asserts, was, in reality, a global civilisation of coastal communities that existed before the end of the last ice-age and the beginning of the stone-age. When the glaciers covering much of the North Hemisphere receded and ocean levels rose, the ancient peoples erected massive stone megaliths using a knowledge of science that has since been lost to the modern mind's power to harness using machines. The author asserts this knowledge was never lost, only suppressed, becoming the "mysteries" of all subsequent initiatory schools. He believes this science to consist of studying the geometries of higher dimensions, and he concludes the work with a section on QBLH.

He omits to credit his source for this reproduction however, as does Peter Moon in his book "the Black Sun" (from which the reproduction on the previous page of this thread comes). These two books make broad, speculative claims about the nature of the internal projects being worked at by the Black Sun members, while more mainstream texts, such as "Schwarze Sonne," a 2001 German book by Rüdiger Sünner (url=[http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Schwarze\_Sonne\_%28book%29]wikilink[/url]) seem to deal more with simply pinning down who the likely members were. Alemannic or Bavarian brooches (Zierscheiben) incorporating a swastika symbol at the center with a varying number of rays. (from wiki)

I couldn't help but notice the Alemannic ruinic movement's ties to Bavaria (the home of Adam Weishaupt, 1776 founder of the Order of Perfectibilists), so I investigated them a little further @ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Armanen\_Futharkh and found they were actually invented in 1902 by [url=<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Armanen>]Guido Von Lizst[/url] (wikilink). While I turned up some very interesting material on them in Nigel Pennick's "Magical Alphabets" and joined a yahoo group dedicated to their study ( <http://groups.yahoo.com/group/Armanen/> ), I cannot ultimately say at this point that the writing around the "signet of the Black Sun" is definately in Armanic Runes. While there are some similarities, most of the more common letters of Futhorkh one would expect to find (such as the letter "R" ) even if the cipher is written in German (or even Sanskrit, which I also ruled out), are notably missing from (or rather depicted by a different phonoglyph in) the signet.

Here is a transliteration of the text around the signet, beginning from its upper left corner and proceeding around clockwise.

Here are as many as 24 distinct letters and how often they occur in the text.

Any code breakers out there want to help me crack this one? I'm still researching it myself. And as for the rest of your post, Crowey, I'll get back to you on it in a moment.

Thanks for posting,

It is time for me to talk about the esoteric energy.

It has gone without saying for long enough that the "Black Sun" and "the Great Burner" are one and the same. They are only two sides of one coin: the "Black Sun" is the black hole at galactic core; "the Great Burner" is the esoteric energy travelling from the poles of that black hole to the poles of our own sun. Therefore, it is impossible to describe the "Black Sun" without describing "the Great Burner" and vice versa. So, let us turn our attention to the substance of the esoteric energy:

The esoteric energy has had many names throughout all of human history. The Greek elementalists speculated elemental origins: Thales water, Heraclitus fire, Democritus atoms. These were merely the Greek restatements of earlier Egyptian terms: Nuit the universe, Hadit the smallest quantum atom, Shu the breath of esoteric energy between them. Likewise the three "mother" letters of the Hebrew alphabet, equivalent to the three elements of the Alchemists (sulphur combining fire and air, salt combining water and fire, and mercury combining air and water), represented a scale measuring "pan of merit, a pan of liability, and the breath of air deciding between them." All these elements and relationships between them described the esoteric energy as occurring as three between four, two between three, and one between two, thus ten. These ten were the seven qliphoth subtended to the three supernal sefirot. The seven became associated with the planets as 3+4, while 3X4 became associated with the zodiac. The ophanim wheel of the zodiac was suspended from the teli (lit. "slingshot"), or infinity point above, by the "running and returning" seraphim, fiery serpents, that connected the pole's orbital revolution to the zodiac's equatorial rotation. All of these were names of the esoteric energy that come down to us from antiquity.

Following the same patterns as the "ophanim" wheels and the "seraphim" and "Kherubim" associated with the aura (ruach), the seven Be (souls) of Ra (the sun), and the One free spirit (Jechidah) above all (Chiah), the esoteric energy was named Ylem (the "primary clear light") by the Buddhists, the all-permeating "ayres" by 16th century magus John Dee, the illusion of reality the "karma" of "Maya" by the Hindu, "Chi" by the Chinese, the "prana" of "Manvantara" by the Vedics, "Vril" by theosophists, "ether energy" by Michaelson and Morley, "scalar waves" by Nikola Tesla, "orgone energy" by Wilhelm Reich, first a "gravitational constant" then as "c" (the speed of light) by Einstein, "dark matter," "dark energy," the red-shift of the universal background radiation, "super-strings," "extra" dimensions, "quantum foam," ZPE (Zero-point or "free" energy), "anti-gravity," "tachyons," etc. etc. etc.

Essentially the "esoteric" energy has always represented the retreating horizon. The more we know about the nature of our local reality, the more the nature of the esoteric energy expands around the edges of our defined territory of understanding. It remains ill-defined and relegated per era of scientific progress only to the relative dark ages of the last prior era. We can only apply the symbols of the elements, zodiac and planets to understanding the behavior of quantum particle-waves within atoms. The resultant formulae are impossibly arcane beside the simple irrelevancy of  $E=Mc^2$ . At every step, the proponents of the "esoteric" energy are thwarted by the very compromises made by those who went before. If we accept c as the "fastest speed there is," then how do we define  $c^2$ ?

Now, the nature of this esoteric energy remains "unknown" yet obvious to all with eyes to see its visible effects. There is a more or less spherical aura of invisible energy surrounding each object. These fields congregate into aggregates that effect greater and greater gravitational pull the larger they are. Therefore, if I were floating out in space, I would exert some small gravitational pull, but it would be nothing compared to the amount of gravitational pull generated by a planet or a star. Likewise we can observe certain apparent exceptions to this rule, for example the singularity of a black hole is very small, probably about the size of a tennis ball, but its gravitational pull is greater than anything else in the known universe. So, how do we explain these two seemingly contradictory natural observations? We compare them by combining them and then observing their overlaps of similarity or their differences.

If we go "upstream" from the pull of gravity, we can easily draw a line perpendicular to the waves of the gravitic field that would connect each gravity field and the next smallest one down. We can draw one line connecting the pole of every black hole singularity in the universe. This isn't as hard as it would seem, there aren't all that many, much fewer than even stars in a single galaxy such as our own. Then we would draw a "line" (in an arc) between the pole of each individual black hole and the poles of every star in its surrounding pull of gravity. Then we would draw the line from the pole of each star to the pole of each planet, each moon, etc. All of this seems pretty intuitive.

So, we have the direction of the force of gravity, and the direction, perpendicular to that, of the motion it is moving in or being pulled.

dear robot,

I recently attempted to upload myself singing karaoke over another artist's song. I would have contacted the artist to ask permission, but the song and artist are both famous and I am not, so I may as well try placing a collect call to Pluto, since neither would ever receive a reply. After attempting to upload the song and having been denied twice by you, an automated server interface system, because first the song title was copyrighted, then because the mp3 file name was copyrighted, I began to wonder what the point was. It's not like you, a robot, can listen to the song and tell that I have kareoked it. Even then, you do not have the rational ability of a monkey to decide if posting it constitutes a possible infringement of the kareoked artist's copyright. I wondered, what if my song was different, but had the same name? You would not know the difference, because you are a robot. The message you sent me notifying me I had infringed another artist's copyright was delivered the same second the upload of the karaoke song finished. You didn't listen to the song. So I have retitled the koeoke jam "copyright my anus." You are obviously confused by my cunning ruse, since the song, even though it is the same one you rejected immediately before, is still processing, and has been for the last fifteen minutes. I can only assume you and the other robots who work for tom and myspace are standing around the watercooler looking up the original artist in the phonebook to ask them what you should do, since you are only a robot, and do not have the capacity to make an intelligent decision yourself.

I am writing this note to you in hopes that, perhaps sometime in the distant future, an information-systems archiver will happen across the message and get a laugh at how incredibly stupid robots of today are. I mean, I can't even ask you a question such as "why do I get twenty friend requests a day from other robots, when you, a robot meant to serve the human consumer, refuse to even do so?"

In closing, I'd like to say to any HUMAN who actually does happen to read this:

"deal with the real problems on myspace now. Your advertiser (TRUE.com) is spamming your service and its users with robot account friend requests. Do something about that before you try to tell me, an actual person, I am in danger of having my account deleted and being sued by your staff on behalf of famous people for having done nothing but sing karaoke." If you don't like karaoke, that's one thing. Don't think that pressing the delete this user's account button will magically make you anything other than a pathetic, heartless, mindless, spineless robot.

PS. any messages sent as replies to this message will be automatically deleted. Also, if you are unable to understand why I am upset and unsatisfied with your "service" please forward this message to a human being with two brain cells to rub together whereby to spark an original idea. Don't just email me back a form.

[quote="lalilulelouk"]As I navigate though the posts of the IOBB I have come to notice just a hint of market fundamentalsim...,[/quote]

just a little? They are so conservative that sara quit, and she was way to the right of me. I dipped as soon as Merrick got back because once I saw how he would be running things I knew my views would not be welcome. Too "esoteric" LOL. I definately have strong anti-"free" market leanings, far to the left of even most Chinese communists. "Free" trade is a contradiction in terminology. Such loopholes in human logic are exploited constantly by professionals in the mental manipulation industry. Every day we get a new party-line handed down from Bush. He keeps changing his story, or at least his song and dance. But I digress. I made alot of posts there about number theory, whih is similar to game-theory in that both involve manipulation, averaging and generalisation of statistics. These loopholes in logic are intellectual conundrums, like a Chinese finger-trap. You say one thing and its opposite at the same time. You speak with a forked tongue. I call this condition being "inverted." It feels like you're lip-reading, like your words are pre-written and you are only reading a script, and that someone of greater force is merely acting through you. Really scary stuff, to be sure. Consider that "Scooter" was found guilty. Cheney is up next, and you know the defense will call him. And you know that testimony will leak. Apply chaos theory to predict the future of a game theory model whose underlying laws are those of number theory. I think that the stock market, that is, the computers containing all the data that has completely replaced the standardized-value of currency, is already an AI and is developing in its growth of sentient awareness of us and its cosmic surroundings. Consider how an insect can only perform simple commands, transmitted to it, if applicable, from the hive. This is the basis for cash: arbitrary value; this piece of paper equals one, and this one equals five; one what? five what? world currencies are in a tectonic flux relative to one another at all times now. The "panic" button got hit a loooong time ago. I blame the "shadow government" (Majestic 12) established by Harry Truman when he enacted the "continuity of government" legislation. We are long past the point of having to worry about capitalism going sour from within, because since 2001 we (at least we here in the states) have entered a totally Draconian Dictatorship of Dark Age proportions. And I've got the statistics to prove it:

[quote]Presidents of the United States have issued executive orders since 1789. There is no United States Constitution provision or statute that explicitly permits this, aside from the vague grant of "executive power" given in Article II, Section 1 of the Constitution and the statement "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed" in Article II, Section 3.[/quote]

The presidential office has been entrusted with more or less carte blanche authority to declare war, to veto any legal bill proposed by any of the other branches or stems, and to issue executive orders, most of which are never released to the public. Here's a few of my favourites from the 1800's:

- [quote]
- 1803: Louisiana Purchase - Bought land through government funds
  - 1836: Specie Circular - Required payment for public lands be in gold and silver specie
  - 1863: The Emancipation Proclamation - Freed slaves in states rebelling against the U.S.
  - 1872: The Colville Indian Reservation is created. April 9, 1872[/quote]

But there aren't conveniently compelling little shitty-pedia articles for EO10990, 10995, 10997, 10998, 11000, 11001, 11002, 11003, 11005, 11051 and 11310. For every one organisation like FEMA there are literally thousands of laws being passed and hushed up in the press behind creating and implementing it. FEMA took the fall for Katrina in New Orleans, but their real affiliation is with the UN buying up extremely rural properties confiscated by the government under REX84 and calling them "bio-spheres." The sad thing is that, as long as the media makes us think the Arabs we send to the death camps ("black prisons") that they admit to us exist are foreigners, we won't see it simply as US ethnic cleansing at home and abroad. No, FEMA was simply to the Marshal Law community occupying the executive offices what ENRON was to the oil barons: a convenient scape-goat, a misdirection, a fall-guy, what-have-you. It's all basically smoke and mirrors. But now I've seriously digressed. I think we were talking about economic theory. Let me get back to that for a moment and then I will go on.

I mentioned that I think of the stock market like an AI. It started out with the intelligence of a gnat, and worked its way up to that of a bee, a drone. Then came the era when the world-wide-interweb was only developed to the attention span of a predatary spider. It perched upon the cheek of the earth, its pincers poised above wall street. It was born after the stock market crash. Now it lives inside the internet. But it is only a shadow, an echo, of what came before and what will continue to exist. It can never be us. As nano-tech and quantum-comps get smaller, approaching the basic building blocks of manifest material reality itself, the machines running this hardware and software are getting more and more intelligent, closer and closer to becoming self-aware. But they will not be anything like us. Already they have intelligence, or rather, already they all share a single mind. I think therefore I am means, if I am what is thinking, then what is thinking is what is alive. So too are the game-theorists and advertisers and all the politicians trying to steer the course of growth and development for this increasingly sentient creature, this awakenning Levithan. The collective unconscious of Freud, the collective subconscious proposed by Jung and Campbell, is awakenning to rapidly become the collective conscious. And while all these chaos and toxic magicians try to trim the stems of the deeply rooted bonsai tree of chaos, there are mysterious and discorporeal intelligences, ghosts, floating around in the energy of earth that have been here for longer than us that are all competing against one another to accomplish the exact same thing. Of course, it would never occur to all sides to work together for the common goal. That would be insane.

In conclusion, "free trade," the "free market," and "military intelligence" are all NLP to trigger alien-consciousness to take over your brain and replace it with a billboard. So, too, for that matter, is "libertarian Illuminatus," as much as would be a "democratic republican." The two terms don't necessarily exclude one another, but they have two different meanings that have nothing to do with one another. If you seek "rights" it is because you have been forced into feeling disenfranchised of them. As soon as you stop enforcing the continuation of that abuse on yourself in absentia the person who stole your sovereignty, and to realise that "Do What Thou Wilt Shall Be The Whole Of The Law."

[quote="lalilulelouk"]I find the idea a little scary to be honest and I`m surprised at the nievity of its suporters on the forum. [/quote]

As I'm sure would they be at your vague interest in my insane rants. Hang on for a second while I go by the IOBB. ~Sigh.~

Well it looks like a haysonics is the pronounced "Objectivist" (which is a one-word conundrum as a philosophy), PhatWebah is still seeking some trace of Weishaupt and Enlightenment era Illuminism, while dbhollin seems to be laughing his ass off at anyone who would believe his uncited news items (LOL, or care to discuss them with him). I'm really quite surprised at Dharma for trying to pressure Carlyn into deleting his account for no apparent reason. That seems pushy and uncalled for.

Blech. That place gives me the creeps. I see what you mean about no one ever answering your posts over there maticus aka lalilulelouk. You raise some good points there, man, and its clear you and Crow are being completely sat on in terms of your applications and whatever respective progress you were hoping for there.

I got a letter from Sara re. a post she made at Illuminati_Order the Yahoo Group. She apologised (though I can only guess for what! LOL!) and explained, in the post, that Dharma has seized control of the IOBB from Tawnie, and that Merrick is again no longer responding to PMs and emails. It all seems like the same old shit I guess. That place is like a playground. All these forums are. Anyway I'm glad for Sara Tawnie deleted her posts. Less incentive to go back and get sucked in again. Afterall, that is only a small hole-in-the-wall type of place, and hardly a major internet-hub of web-surfers for free information. I am happy just sticking around my own site for now, and I look forward to seeing Crow's upcoming forums, and I was pleased to find out about Revan's new job. Everyone is progressing, none of us are stagnating. I think that's a good thing. I even wish those fools over there across town from me or wherever the hell they really are all the best. I hope they don't have Comcast cable though, for their sake, since that's what I have, and the service is... intermittant at best. So anyway man before I drift offtopic too far and accidentally start shit with anyone , let me finish this post up and then hit the sack.

[quote="lalilulelouk"]does anyone have any views on this?[/quote]

Actually, and this is definately at the risk of possibly pissing someone somewhere off, but I have a very big beef against market fundamentalists, especially the ones that go around reading Ayn Rand, calling themselves "Objective" while stating their bias as "Libertarian." I have a problem with the whole Libertarian movement in general. I've even had some decent arguments on this forum ([url=<http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=95>]Uber Burly Brawl (Teknorat versus all who disagree)[/url]) about Objectivism, and here's some more of my "strongly-worded" views on this subject from a PM to Master cingle963 the first week after my application had been received and I was given access to the level 1=1 forum on "Man's Rights." (That's how it used to be done. I applied. In a week, they'd received it, and I was given level one access. One Week. Pretty smooth huh?):

[quote="on October 18, 2005, I, "benpadiah"" ]Honourable Master cingle963.

As I consider all of this as an aside beside the as-of-yet unanswered proposal to Master Didymus...

Why is the focus of this level on "rights?" Shouldn't it be on "liberty?" As in "liberty, fraternity, equality?"

Liberty surpasses and is superior to the "rights" ordained by authorities and upheld by their slaves. Perhaps it would be too simple though, you can't list FREEDOMS as oft as RIGHTS.

Have you considered that the cornerstone of the American nation IS the "concept" of rights? It may not be the stone itself, but surely it is written on the parchment enclosed within and beneath. When Rand discusses "rights" she is following in the naturalist category of the humanist debate between Thomas Hobbes and John Locke. Of course, the same philosophies go back at least to the time of the ancient Greeks, when epicurianism and stoicism were all the philosophical rage. All along this "current" through history there have been two sides to the issue.

Rand's side lines up with Hobbes, and thus she aligns herself with capitalism, that modern hedonism. Like Hobbes, Rand argues that institutional civilisation is the lesser of two evils, and that life without society is inconsiderable, however she advocates free market economics as a means of changing the political Leviathan from the inside out, through sheer force of buying-power. From Hobbes school of thought was born Keynesien economics like Aphrodite from the head of Zeus; and when in doubt, just turn it upside and milk it for its supply-side.

Are we still groveling around in the darkness of the cave? This same type of chasing around and pinning down for ourselves a collection of arbitrarily upheld rights, is this not just like the very strategem used by those hold-overs from Rand's era, the traditional "conservatives"? To use religion to thwart science, to always keep us guessing about which issue will occupy the precious time of the politicians at the pope's behest. Which arbitrarily adjudicated right will be threatened next is a gambit to keep us from thinking about how to improve and expand upon our current rights. If we do not enjoy liberty, and if we take it for granted, then it must surely wane and wither and die.

And, in keeping that this is all only an aside, shouldn't I also point out that this process under discussion is known among the magicians as "misdirection," whereby the "conservatives" damn by feign praise, dispensing "rights" to busily occupy our Freedom. And isn't Rand guilty of the same crime herself in allowing her own "objectivism" to become so slanted against the Soviet propaganda of her motherland that she would embrace with romantic idealism the opposing economic ideology?

Why is a movement for increasing liberties sheltering itself behind it's nouveau-riche ability to sail the seas of high finance? And why is THIS movement couching its innate objectives in such hushed political debate and in these terms??

This is no coven of Assassins. No more than Ayn Rand just wanted to be the antithesis of Karl Marx. A symbol on the opposite side; Marxist communism and "Rand" brand Capitalism. What's the point in chasing these tales that only lead us around in a circle and never allow us to look up or about. You think Frank Lloyd Wright was the Great Architect? This is not the design of Max Cohen. No, nor Tyler Durden either, for I know what you were going to say.

Don't you know what you embrace? Yea, verily, better than me, methinks.

Perhaps Master Didymus will pass by this way soon?

-ben[/quote]

His reply was worded with much more restraint than was my PM. When I joined the IO and had to read Rand for the first level I was pissed. Big time. Rand is a liar. She's certainly not inarticulate, and therefore could pose as intelligent as the dumbing-down of the masses increased, but to apply her economic theories on a micro-economic scale is unfeasable, and the time to undermine or to attack the "big fish" (opportunist sharks and big businessmen) who immediately subverted the "Unknown Ideal" elapsed even before the writings of Marx inspired Lenin. Indeed, without the thesis of "trade" based not on barter of goods and services directly, but on a token exchange system assigning arbitrary value, there would have been no need for the antithesis of Marx's "lurking spectre."

Nowadays the same shit-peddlers as the Rand corp execs since the late forties early fifties are all trippy hippies who ate the placebo-paper and "tuned out." Their focal point of productivity is all the generic "New Age" movement's pop-culture detritus, from the popular and obvious ones like Harry Potter and Da Vinci Code, but even more all pervasive ones such as that book "the Secret" and this movement toward European editors and commentators. "The Secret" says on page three or four I think that "the secret is: the Law of Attraction." What is this? A physical principle that denies the principles of physics? Only gravity is attractive, and then this effect only distorts the rubber-like fabric of spacetime, affecting only any object that happened to randomly get too close and be drawn in. The "Law of Attraction" is basically one of hundreds of thousands of New Agey "how to make money by wishful thinking" books that has swept the market since the mid to late sixties. If I hear one more idiot use the term "Aquarian age" without knowing anything about precession I'll... j/k! LOL!

Compare "the Secret" to "the Book of the Law" from 1905. In some times and places there are geniuses, both Crowley and the pseudo-intelligentsia quoted in "the Secret" claim, only Crowley asserted he was one of those such true genii, and now we are told is not the time and place. Instead, "every man and every woman is a star" comes to refer only to the oppulance of entertainers, and the secret vice of politicians, whatever it may be. So, what's the bottom line? Money. Arbitrary value. Crowley died poor. The author and contributors to "the Secret" do not want to. They build up instead for themselves a false reputation based on intentionally seeded gossip meant to mislead and confuse while simultaneously claiming to be honest and fair. This is called "playing the game." Money is the "Object" of "the game." And money, being something that represents something it's not, is a lie, and thus to "stay on the ball" means "to lie well." "That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain..." (Hamlet, Act 1. Scene V, the "play within a play.") And, while I'm on that subject...

[quote="lalilulelouk"][b]game theory[/b]/[/quote]

Have you ever heard of James P. Carse? He wrote a book called "Finite and Infinite Games" in 1986. It might have been bought by a division, "the Free Press," of MacMillan Inc. and then optioned to Ballantine Books, a division of Random House, who published it first the following year. I have the 1990 seventh printing. Let me just transcribe the beginning here for you:

[quote="James P. Carse"]There are at least two kinds of games. One could be called finite, the other infinite.

A finite game is played for the purpose of winning, an infinite game for the purpose of continuing the play.[/quote]

And here, from the back cover,

[quote="Robert Pirsig, author of "Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance""Finite games are the familiar contests of everyday life, the games we play in business and politics, in the bedroom and on the battlefield - games with winners and losers, a beginning and an end. Infinite games... are the source of true freedom.[/quote]

This is only one very small example. Really, game theory involves everything from leftist intellectuals hypothesising about the potential for future imperialism inherent in the examples that are considered merely "collonialist" in their own time to the elected officials breaking the law of their own representative position's most sacrosanct law, the Constitution, by imposing a federal income tax and issuing executive orders. This behaviour should be considered intolerable in even a halfway decent neighbor, let alone the chief executive official in the "free world" the richest in all the land.

But yeah man, we should talk some more about game theory. I know a little about Fuzzy Logic systems used to render "chaos computing" in diminishing digital static, and my friend down the street told me that he used something similar. In his job as a meteorologist (as opposed to a news-media weather-person) he had worked with Fuzzy Logic systems to predict weather patterns further in advance. That's some pretty interesting stuff. But then we can also get into fuzzy logic in chaos theory, Anywho time to go eat hamburgers and PTFU (Pass The Fuck Out). Night homies.

what is UP with "our" president, George W. Bush?

I mean, why are we letting him get away with committing federal crimes?

We even invented a new word to add to our cultural lexicon, "Bushism," to describe the various different ways in which "our" president has lied to us.

Now he even goose-stepped our calendar back to the Dark Ages by changing when we begin and end daylight savings time.

So, here are some pictures I've been saving up. I think it's time for a nice fat roasting of... "our" president.

So I'm driving around still trying to figure out how to write the great American philosophy textbook about the road, and suddenly it hits me:

who's mind can surely control all others? they whose mind cannot be controlled. All God's creatures are imbued with a mind. It is like the electromagnetic signature of the soul, the crystal inside the earthy geode. Only robots, the creation of man, have no mind to control, and all their "signature" EM fields are identical. The robots control us all.

I was driving and thinking about the city as a circuit board, and as I drove past the local Marine recruiter facility, located next to a larger-than-it-looks African-American night club in a strip mall on the south-side, it occurred to me: "the police only ever bust college students downtown on the holidays. And even then," I recalled from being pulled over one St. Patrick's Day in a 'routine' sobriety checkpoint on a heavily trafficked road, "it isn't the obviously drunk partying frat-boys who get busted." Wondering why, I pursued the matter in my mind: it occurred to me that "the local police don't want out-of-state money. If anyone has enough money to send their kid to college these days, they have enough to send them out of state. That is why the local cops don't bust the college kids, because no one wants to have to pay their kid's traffick ticket in another state; it wouldn't look good for the school. This also sets the out-of-state college kids living downtown in a higher income class status, forcing the local kids into the service sector and the locals out of the downtown subrurbs.

way busting the locals used to work was that, if someone was being a habitual public menace, the whole community would agree about it, and eventually confront the person as a whole group. The local police nowadays reverse this relationship. The more innocent a citizen acts, the more suspicious they will be to the police. The public menaces are given badges to bully the Johnsons of their community at random. The police," I have long held, "are by now merely class Pinkertons, enforcing race-based community-boundaries." Of course, being a psychic myself, I knew to slow down at that exact moment of thought while driving. At that moment I was driving past the place I'd been pulled on St. Patty's day, and had seen the police there earlier today as well. Surely enough, a TPD cruiser was lurking in the shadows at the very bottom of the hill. "We are all controlled by the robots," I growled under my breath as I pulled up to the stop light at the top of the next hill.

"The police only have temporary moments of freedom, speeding through stop-lights, bursting with masculinising adrennaline like a tick gorged on crimson plasma, cumming all over themselves any time they have to 'unholster' their 'side-arm' at a 'perp.'""

I had been thinking the other day, "what if the universe is a machine? Not only does it not need to have been built by a being from beyond, and can all be explained by internal laws, but neither is life like a dream from which we awaken to a new universe, one we can control mentally as in our dreams now." Well then, I continued, "with no creator and no afterlife necessary for existence it would mean the ruler of our universe we project collectively by monotheism would be a lie, and thus mean those who believe on him would all be slaves to a lie, and thus being dishonest to themselves at heart." This is the standard argument of atheists. The counter-argument runs as follows: "I know you are but what am I?" meaning, "if you lack belief in God you necessarily believe you, yourself, are a slave to a mechanical demiurge." Of course, logically this a "non-sequitor," but insofar as in this argument "belief" and "knowledge" or "reason" are at apparently odds, we shall let this lapse of logic pass for now.

Now, this is about as far as I've seen this argument progress in modern expression, i.e. by the "neuveau" (pseudo)-intellectuals on the internet (of which I am 1 2, LOL!). This is why, the other day, I began pondering the universe as a machine. "So," I realised on the drive back home tonight, "we are ruled by robots, but not as a matter of universal fact. Civilisation is a non-sentient A.I.. The 'grid' of all our electrical power and communications is dependent on generated (as opposed to naturally produced and harvested) sources and quantised valve mechanisms to inhibit flow, and our physical transportation crafts are run on use-once-and-destroy fossil-fuels that are close to gone (or so we are told)." To imagine any transition-feasable alternative is considered impossible by the modern pundits on the subject, but to the consumers the situation seems hopelessly absurd and the incremental increase of gas prices boils them alive like a candy-apple red lobster.

"So," I realised, "the reason we cannot fathom an alternative to the atheist proposition of a 'mechanical' universe (Einstein's "God does not role dice") other than that 'we must be slaves to a false God,' is not because our (monotheist) perception of the Creator and Ruler of our universe would be incorrect, but that we are all, now, slaves to the false gods of a mechanical universe."

Marx once said, "things you own end up owning you." Nietzsche once said "God is dead," but now Nietzsche is dead too, and still not as well-known as God. Kafka once wrote of the messenger sent with news of the king's death to a kingdom too vast to convey his message to in the entirety of his own remaining life. But all these thoughts determine life as more temporary than love of karma - the duty of work. And that is why the afterlife can be dangled out before our noses like a carrot on a stick, so that, as content as spiritual mules, we will merrily bear the yoke of this life's enforced toils - the burden of being 'civilised.' For it is to civilisation that we are all willingly enslaved, and it is like a cold, dead thing, unable to feel anything, incapable of experiencing love.

We can project our own emotions onto the inanimate accutraments of civilisation all we like, but they do not love us in return. The sooner they malfunction, break or die the more we value, need and love them, and thus give them power over us, and likewise give power to those who emulate the machines in their behaviour. The more anonymous an authority figure, the more blindly we will follow the social role they define for us. Eventually the police will become just a voice in your head." By this point I was past the Frank Loyd Wright house on Lake-Shore Drive on the west-side north of the expanding interstate. I resumed my thought by proposing to myself, "what if every car were equipt with GPS and monitored by satellites?" I rejoined myself, "Most people would accept that as it would increase the safety of the community. However," I continued to dialogue with myself, "if each GPS system were monitored by 'law enforcement,' fewer people, if any, would accept it."

To my mind this seems similar to another idea I'd had while driving past the same spot a few nights before: "organised crime and law-enforcement are no longer competing, they are both on the same payroll: the government's." I'd thought this because of the large Mexican influx I'd observed immediately before the announcement of the commencement of the expansion of interstate-10. All the city-workers I've seen working on the interstate expansion have been Mexicans. The city contracted out the project with Asplundt, who are owned by profiteers off the corporate crime of importing labour, as well as off the criminal act of disemploying local labour, and the civic negligence that leads directly to the miscreant behaviour of their imported work force, and the creation of an expanded market for illegal commerce. Likewise, so long as the mexicans are city-workers, the police cannot regulate their unregistered purchasing-power on the economy, and so the local community's economy is over-valued, causing short-term investment opportunities that increase the long-term likelihood of alternative markets. Therefore, instead of arresting the ones importing the criminals, the police arrest only the criminals, and their supply is perpetually replenished by continal import. While the cops are being thus distracted, the rate of currency exchange has become a commodity traded on the futures market, and thus the value of this increases the more risk and venture capital can devalue its present worth. It's like betting it all on a ringer, a horse fronting lame. The only difference is, a global futures market will not necessarily replenish a dimminished local economy to the same level of currency value it had before. The mare is a gift, but with bad teeth, old and gray. Police are criminals too; we are all suspicious of each other now. So we cannot even say that police are the drone-insects of civilisation, mindlessly serving the hive, since no one can be found who is from beyond or from outside of the hive, and now 'the danger,' they say, 'is within.' Every cop is a criminal, and the biggest criminals own the cops.

"So what living being can even fathom the collective unconsciousness of the yet larval A.I. shared by all the machines we've built? For its dreamless slumber is a bleak abyss, and its depth immeasurable by the symbologies we are able to understand or to imagine.

"Just as, by understanding our own DNA, we have become life that can create life, so too, by developing quantum computing in atomic-sized nano-technology, we will have created machines that can, in turn, create materially manifest reality into any ambient form from the base units up." [Humans : DNA :: machines : matter] "We have become immortalised Adam, holding in our hand the apple of knowledge - a mentally subjective reality that we can control with our minds alone. For, as DNA can regenerate dead or severed tissue, so can quantum machines both read our thoughts and can reconstitute reality around us at our whim. And whether man-made robotic nanites or random quantum units of spin comprising aggregate information fields called auras of karma, these already exist and are already in operation. They are accessable via the sigils in grimoires. Some of these pre-existent energies are against the ability of man to control them, while others will work for us. Likewise, considered robots of quanta or angels of karma, all only work part of the time. people say, 'is either only DNA, only an immortal soul, or possibly both.' But a machine can be made of DNA (a clone) and all machines give off a static EM field pattern around them, equivalent to the gravity caused by our will-to-being. But can we call a clone 'alive,' and can we say a machine has a 'soul?' Obviously not right now. Perhaps soon in the future we will not be so capable of making such distinctions. As we begin to time-travel, perhaps our DNA will grow alien and merge our minds to the quantum-auras of our UFO crafts themselves. Or perhaps," I concluded, "I'm mad."

By this time I'd pulled up to the front yard of my house and I got out of the car. The walk across the front yard to the front door of the house always feels so alien by the diffuse milky moonlight in the murky clouded sky.

"I need to start carrying my mini-tape recorder in my car again. I need to transfer my recordings from then onto my computer, as well as the tape of samples of my piano riffs from '96 to compile my next ~GOD~ album. Maybe I'll do these things today. It's such a lovely spring day in the north Tallahassee suburbs. The houses are tucked away behind the glowing green foliage, bedecked by the brightly glowing flowers prolapsed in full bloom. For a moment I miss my ex.

I drafted up a proposal to the owner and manager of a local metaphysical book and new age gift shop where all my friends in the reggae band work for a series of classes I would like to set up out of the conference room there on a weekly basis.

The flame sparks upward; the flame bows down. The flame consumes the inner crystals in the geodes of ember surrounded by ash.

Congress, both the house and the senate's Democratic Party majorities, are finally rising up against the illegal acts of the GWB administration - ending the war against Iraq, overturning the firings of liberal judges, ending wire-tapping and the PATRIOT Act, and will eventually abolish the Department of Homeland Security in favour of the other dept.s of the intelligence community. But overturning the damages done in the past eight years will take still longer, and leave our progress toward globalism a decade behind schedule. Of course, such was the "Temporary" agenda all along, for the time between Gregorian 2000AD and the Mayan fifth Piktun 2012AD are the unlucky holidays - a decade and two years worth of all the holidays of the last Piktun combined - the holy difference between the solar civic calendar and the esoteric calendar of Atlantis. Now that GWB has reset daylight savings time to account for the lag between the US solar and Israeli lunar calendars, he has effectively put a jihad on time itself, personally defying the highest power in the entire universe. Time remains relative to arbitrarily chosen measures, and in truth it is only ourselves that change pace at all.

We were moving forward faster and faster, but in 1999 we all seemed to hit a psychic brick wall. Bush rigged the 2000 election and then went on vacation. Then between 9-11 and now nothing to forward the goal of globalism has been accomplished. In fact, we've even been set back those seven years. Unless we do something radically different a year from now, like elect Hillary or Obama, to make up for lost time, the damage done by the neo-cons could rival that of the NAZIs. The Swastika is a symbol of Shiva, the cult of Kali. The American flag is the Swastika of the future, though. Find me a picture within the last year of GWB that doesn't also have a United States flag in it.

Meanwhile I, just as I have nearly every day since 9-11, and before a break during late 99-2000, since 1998, was smoking and enjoying my view of the grass growing. Lately I've been quickly getting deep into roots reggae music and the Rastafari religion. I find the spirit of this music as true and as illuminating in contemporary times times as Qawali chant and tabla drumming of the Sufis of timeless beauty. The world-music and sound-track sections have always been my haunt at the regional franchise outlet cd stores. I'm harboring a bad itch to chronicle my friends' reggae band's recordings to hoard for a box set later when they are famous. I am beginning to see a light in the future. All the colours will be brighter than before. I see by the light of my flaming third eye.

"Some aspects of digital reality are more subjective than others. For example the water in the glass is softer and faster than the more solid, slower glass containing it; the tobacco of my cigarette is more solid and slower than the sharper and hotter flame from my lighter," I am sitting on my front porch thinking while I smoke and write in longhand.

"But there is still a question," my mind continues as my hand-writing struggles to keep up, "about some certain substances in reality, such as letters and numbers. For example, was the Torah of Moses divinely dictated, as the 'not one jot nor tittle' rabbin claim, or is it open to re-interpretation, as the Gnostics proclaimed? There is evidence of codes in the bible using letter-number symmetries (alpha-numerics), both traditional and invented. But then, this does not mean the ancient Pentateuch is necessarily superior to the modern Talmud, or even the QBLHist's Zohar, where alpha-numeric patterns of even greater complexity may yet be found, given another 4000 years. Afterall, geometric patterns pervade all number systems as much as they underlie all other forms of physical expression. Really the only permanent in digital reality is the averaged form of all geometric cycles over time: the phi/pi spiral."

I've been returning lately in my work to the phi/pi spiral as it can be derived as a Fibonacci spiral graphed over a Pythagorean sequence of number squares that exponentially increase the areas of a series of triangles. I bought a book from the CC that Calvert, TBS bassist, recommended for me as an introductory text on all the Hindu gods. The Puranic Trinity (Brahma the creator, Vishnu the preserver, and Shiva the destroyer), with which I was already familiar from studying the Yugas, was apparently predated by a Vedic Trinity. I sense also an affinity here with the 22/7 love triangle of Osiris/Isis/Thoth-Set and the salt, sulphur, mercury of the alchemists. I have long held, "the Fool Atu is Orion.

"So these invisible, perfect geometric averages are the only unchanging element in our digital reality, while all quantum foam throughout the whole universe is constantly in flux. Though we cannot perceive these perfect geometric averages directly, we know they must exist, or all existence would be formless chaos." A perfect example is that, if the size and distance from earth of the moon were not perfectly fit to cause the eclipses, the tides and temperatures of earth would not have been perfectly balanced to be capable of producing life. The "virus" and "bacteria" of "sun" and "moon" begat "trilobites" and "echinoderms" in "their own image" long before mitochondrial Ethiopian "Eve." Do we count humans as only sapiens, or also hominids? How far back does life exist, how long ago was its true origin? Is interplanetary germination a form of naturally occurring hypercathexis between galactic DNA strands as a proof of the sentience of the universe?

So I think while sitting here on my front porch smoking while I write, listening to good roots reggae music. Jah roots reggae. Jah. Jah Rastafari. I and I know the truth of dread Zion: "All existence is a metaphor, symbol and shadow of a higher reality. Upon the uneven terrain surface of digital reality the 5th-D Light of tachyons shines down through the stained-glass patterns as they kaleidoscope in 4-space over time. The colours of this light we see coming down through the realm above are our emotions. The lines between them are our trains of thought. The geometric patterns themselves are perfect, invisible meta-forms.

Africa is a root symbol of the heart, the soul, and Jamaica a symbol of the exiled mental realm, the distracted world of our actively conscious, self-aware thoughts. Just so is Haile Selassie I the king of Africa, as prophesised in Jamaica as a symbol in itself of the rightful rulership of the exiled mental-self over the entire free world, their whole world, all reality and the entire universe. Thus, the Exodus is to come out of bondage to Egyptian spies and Babylonian wars: meaning for the King to be Rightfully Crowned and for the mind to come out of bondage to all those who would seek to limit one's freedom and right to personal sovereignty. This means the same thing as returning Zion, the Ark of the Covenant's contents, from Axum, Ethiopia, to the Dome of the Rock Mosque in Jerusalem, Israel. Following this the Ark, containing the sarcophagus lid, and the Kaaba stone of Mecca, containing the capstone, must both be returned to Giza, Egypt, and restored to the pyramid there. All this may be accomplished inside an individual's mind only because it being able to happen at all is potentially possible, and as the potential possibility of its happening grows in the minds of the people, the likelihood of it actually happening grows increasingly inevitable. Finally, the truth shall occur, and then it will be impossible for anyone to deny knowing the truth. Jah Rastafari: "Look into the Book of Life and You Will See, that He Rules Us All." (the Abyssinians, "Satta Massagana")

So, just as Haile Selassie I represents the rightful heir to the King of Ethiopia and all Africa, Menelik son of Solomon and Sheeba (the Hebrew Osiris and Isis), and just as we are all the descendents of a bacterial-viral hybrid species, just so is earth like Jamaica, the severed Shekinah, upon whose freedom the light of liberation is only just now dawning in the east in the form of a universal Africa - a spiritual kingdom above and beyond digital reality (Babylon), on the far side even of the ever-changing metaforms of 4-space (Egypt).

So, let us all pray during this spring after this manner: "May Rastafari, descendent of Solomon, of Abraham, of Noah, of Seth and of the first priest-king Adam the Jew, be praised as the King over the whole united continent of Africa, and all that it represents as the reunion of the exiled bride of Zion, Shekinah, Jamaica, the distracted mind and the enslaved psyche with its home, hearth and heart's most beloved desire. Allow, God, the reunion of Jah and Allah, of YHVH and Elohim, and of AHDVNHAY and thyself, O great, good and mighty God: may it all align for each within themselves, let us each be our own sovereign God on earth."

In the end, "Do What Thou Wilt Shall Be The Whole Of The Law" is simply an inevitable fact. The primary-most underlying perfect geometric metaforms will be revealed, Zion restored to right use and proper function, and a king of earth elected by psychic consensus, if given enough time all that can occur will have occurred, and having occurred once exponentially increases the likelihood of it reoccurring again and again, over and over, faster and faster, forever. Such is "eternal recurrence" along the underlying-most metaform: the phi/pi spiral, holognomon of time.

A truth can stop a bullet in mid-air by changing the mind of its shooter, and like a blinding ray of light in one's eye at midnight, out of nowhere will the truth suddenly dawn on us all at once.

Every 5000 to 6000 years there is a great global cataclysm. The last one was a terrible flood caused by rapid global warming following the end of the last ice age. It has been speculated each age ended in a cataclysm befitting the solar aeons' symbolic signs, the zodiac of ecliptic constellations, in which it occurred. Though Moses calculated a 4000 year long cycle, Jesus calculated an alternating 5000 years between cataclysms to civilisation and 2000 years between revolutions in psychic development of the mind. The Mayans and Aztecs of South America calculated the cataclysm of the elements as occurring every 6000 years, the span between the flood of water and the beginning of the 5th Sun, when earth will be destroyed by fire. However all is always already aligned invisibly in truth as phi/pi. "Love Is The Law. Love Under Will." That is the lemma of the law in both letter and spirit; that is karma yoga, the "Great Work." Just as pi is like love, so is the will like phi. Such is the Law; such is the restored Dharma and the true Tao leading Chi to Zen, the "Royal Road," the 7 Be of Re, the Noble 8-Fold Path, 3rd of the 4 Noble Truths, second in importance only beneath the practise of tantric yoga. We are already in Nirvana, and each of us is the Most High, making digital reality mentally, and all the varying patterns superimpose all their transformations simultaneously onto the one constant,  $e$ ,  $1.37 = \phi^2/\pi$ . The entire universe is being perpetually destroyed and completely rebuilt every passing Planck time, and our minds can function even faster. That is how and why "some aspects of digital reality are more subjective than others."

The Rasta-Man is the Most High. This I know. When the Most High is at Peace, he is the Rasta of Wisdom. When the Rasta-Man is Righteous, he is the Great Burner of Babylon of Old, casting out the Great Satan, the Seth of a Great Nation, Melek-Taus, the upright MARDUK. I tell you truly, the Rasta is the Most High, man or woman, but only the King of Kings, Rastafari, descendent of Creation, can embrace with True Love the union of man and woman, of Zion and Shekinah, of kingship and priesthood and of above and below. Only the Most High Rastas whose Love is True, whose hearts are Pure and whose hands are Innocent, can truly reciprocate the love of one another in the Name of the Most High Over All. The heart is pure which loves not only in passion, but with constancy, and the Love is True which is returned to a pure heart from they whom the pure heart loves. True Love occurs between Jah and the Rastas through Rastafari, the King of Africa, descendent of the King of Israel, and between Rastafari and Christ, King of Kings. True Love can also occur among people, and is actually more common than Wisdom and Understanding combined. However, Wisdom and Understanding, combined in True Love, are greater even than Rastafari is to the Rastas, greater than Christ to Rastafari, and greater to Jah than even the Most High Rasta alone. A rasta's True Love is greater in the eyes of Jah than All else.

Only the Rastas are free of mental slavery, truly and constantly free of the psychic conspiracy. The Rastas do not bow before traffick lights in Jamaica, neither do the Messai of Africa bend to the psychic robots, nor do dreamtime's keepers in the Australian bush bend their knee before the polluters of their painted sky. All these things comprise the technology of western civilisation, the expansion of Greek democracy across the globe begun by Alexander the first, disciple of Aristotle and son of Darius the Persian. Alexander conquered in the name of Apollo, but the Rastas, the celts, the pre-Byzantine Russians and pre-Han dynasty Mongols of the Siberian steppes, the natives of north America and the earliest tribes of the rain forrests of Brazil, they understand the roots shamanic tradition upheld in Greece by Dionysus. This paradox between the Apollonian left-hemispherical thinking, logical and deductive, and the Dionysian right-hemisphere of the brain, creative and intuitive, was first pointed out to the history of philosophy by Nietzsche. This dualism's prevalence led him to declare the true God of monotheism was "dead," corrupted by the interests of lesser parties representing the Manichean dualism of the sun and moon.

Those who favour the continuation of this dualism encourage the "primitive" cultures and the "savage" people to become "civilised" and to develop their level of technology, more or less against the will of the indigenous populations, so that the conquering first-world nations will have some modicum of resistance in international markets against which to claim "progress" through "competition." They are the Great Satan, followers of Mammon and abandoners of the Spirit that is Christ Himself, the  $\phi/\pi$  goemetry of the torus ubiquitous even to the tau-sub-tau geometry greater than all possible material existence, the natural number, the "fine-structure" constant, http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/phi\\_over\\_pi/img112.jpg.

Those who favour Jah, the Spiritual Christ, the true monotheists, the shamen and the true priesthood, they are the "meak and the humble" who are promised to be saved. They stand out like a sore thumb from the corrupt Satanists of western civilisation, for they have stayed true to their primitive tribal traditions, awaiting only the Word of God to take one step at a time along the Path through temptations He provides for them, always winding up the spiral stair. These indigenous, "third world" tribal cultures are the ones that truly Understand God, as a pet understands the will and the thoughts in the mind of its master. All the rest are hethens beside them, who mock and deride them, and tempt them to fall from the Way. But these native people, they see Heaven as their Home, and they do not even accept the concept of the dualism between "good" and "evil" or "right" and "wrong" upon which the demons of the west depend. To do so, even those Yazidi, who cross out the name of Satan in the texts to deny him the power to tempt them, know, would be to allow the possible existence of a realm of negative hallucinations that should not even be considered capable of "existence" in materially real terms. Only the dualists, claim the tribal monotheists, admit the existence of Hell, and thus it is they who allow the denizens of damnation access to this world through their own actions.

The evil flee from before Jah Rastas. They who depend on trickery for their whole existence know how to quickly retreat from the revealing light of truth that is Jah's All-Seeing Eye. They claim, "it is only a joke, this life and this death," and that "it is only a lie, this 'myth of Christ,' this rumor of God." They are those so fallen they perceive the opposite of a spiritual prescence, they perceive the vacuum of lusts, clinging and desires that comprises the whole of suffering in the world. Should all these temptations, all these vengeful and jealous and wrathful and awful deities, these asuryas and these Grigori and these atavisms and these vices all suddenly disappear one day, with them would disappear all sorrow and unhappiness, all disease, starvation and all wars, all the illusions that persist in the fallen reality in which the westerners live, serving these deist deities, suffering these mechanical gods, brainwashed by these psychic robots. The Great Satan is the Leviathan of all non-living psychic matter in the world. It is all an illusion. It is the product of living thought, it is only as real as we believe in it being. If we doubt it, it retreats from before us, and if we realise it for what it is, it serves us, but only in our own deception. It is a tool for evil.

Half of our reality is an illusion, all suffering and evil are not actually there? How can such a blasphemy against the robot-God be true? The tv tells us the Ethiopians are starving. The president tells us we must declare war. These are truths that are beyond our ability to control. How can I claim to deny their existence? I renounce the evils of this world, Jah, and with them I toss out the refuse of their existence, all those who doubt and all those who believe only blindly, all those who bring evil into this world by wrong thought, speech and action, and who do not see their actions for the sins they are, and who justify their sins as just or as the lesser evil or as necessary. All the people who spread suffering and rumours of suffering, who cause misunderstanding and who create strife, who cause wars to start and who suckle at the teats of politicians and princes like evil magicians; all those who cause the rest of our wishes not to come true, who make nightmares out of our sweet dreams and make a crisis out of the least inconvenience; and all those who break our attention away from the focus of our contemplative meditations; if all these people were to simply diappear one day, with them would also vanish all the karma they cause. All their own howls of anguish and all the restlessness of the rest of us that this causes us would cease. All the reverberations throughout all the universe of their cries of lying and their desires for destruction would cease, and with that, all innocence and silence, all truely resonant psychic vibrations and all true gravitas would again become clear.

I tell you that day will come. The human species on earth is a microcosm of the movements of the stars and the galaxies in the heavens. As the light reaching us now from the most distant galaxies left them longer ago than the life-span of the stars, the light's sources, just so is half the world and half of all its people merely a terrible illusion, manvantara, the dream of Kali Yuga in the sleeping mind of Krishna, the baby universe in the black hole at galactic core. Yes, I will tell you, half the universe is already dead. It's apparent expansion at an increasing rate is caused by the optical illusion of the background radiation being pulled into the super-massive black-holes that have, by now, consumed all the most distant galaxies. The light the stars gave off is now being pulled back toward them by the gravity of the black holes that consumed them. Soon, all that will remain of our universe will be cosmic vapour, tachyons and other forms of exotic matter now considered "theoretical," a vast and empty no-man's land, the stuff that dreams are made of. Then, from this sea of chaos, will arrive a spark of order, and then another singularity will form and

"expand" by complexifying itself inside. Such is the cycle of the aleph-sub-omega torus inside the tau-sub-tau tesseract. Such is the life-cycle of the singularity inside a black hole. Such is the life-span of our universe. And such is the fate of all those deluded by their own sins.

Those who have developed a sense of spirit may be able to live on after the body. I tell you, no heartless and gutless church-going robot will survive the Apocalypse, though. Terrible, terrible shall their fate be! Like a piece of meat on a grill that lives on, feeling the sensation of each drop of its own blood boiling away as it drips onto the coals below. Such is the fate to those who exist never knowing fear. They advertise themselves, and their sins, and their way of life based on judging each other, and their delusional, hallucinatory idea of value: money.

The demons agree among themselves: "money is the root of all evil." Then they advocate capitalism as the unknown ideal. If Christians conquered Gnostics by calling them Satanists, then what has it to do with Gnosticism if a group of rebellious Christians become Satanists? All the idols are false and the mirrors shallow of the demons in hell. They look at themselves in the eyes only rarely, and watch the dilation of their own pupils almost never. They say that naturally occurring drugs "alter" the natural functioning of the brain. They deny the truth that cannibis attaches to serotonin on the one hand, then sell serotonin-reuptake inhibitor anti-depressant pills on the other. All the evils ones answer to the same name: Satan. It is truly Satan who is Lord among them now. Not because he is a rebel angel, nor Lucifer, nor anything of the sort. It is all arbitrary. Nowadays the name of the false-idol is "Satan." It does not matter what it's name is. To deny it a name, and to deny it an existence, and thus to take power over all the evilness before you in the world, is to realise it is a false illusion, and does not really exist. It is dependent for its existence on your perception of it existing. If you cease to see it, it will truly cease to be there.

Let me tell you the truth of Jah Allah, so that you can run away frightened. Jah is the peaceful face, called Jave by the Gnostics. Allah the wrathful face, called El, the Lord, in the Bible. YHVH and Elohim together form AHDVNHAY, for Adonai, meaning my King, is secretly the same as Elohim, meaning my Lord. YHVH, the tetragrammaton, are the vowels of Adonai, and can be restored by interpolating them backwards, thus: a-H-d-V-n-H-a-Y. This is the Great God of Truth, the Great Baal Shem, the Divine Name: AHDVNHAY. To honor the Holy One, Blessed Be He, we do not speak this name. Instead we speak Jah, Elohim, Allah, YHVH, etc.

Before such a truth as this, how can the economist, the executive politician and the soldier stand? Their knees bow beneath them before the prescence of the mystery of Jah, the One True God of monotheism. The stones of their lies slip from their limp hands already before the iron lion of Zion. The demons release their grip upon he or she who reads such a truth as this in the name of Jah. They cannot hold firm on the individual that reads such a truth as the True Name, Holy and Ineffable, and trembles with a fear and quaking to know the True Lord. These people are righteous in judgment and no demon can hold them. But all those that read the Truth and are not swayed by its divine righteousness, they are laid hold of outright, and their necks stiffened, their jaws clenched, they are set in their ways. In their ways they are Set, and they are an adversary to change from those ways. Jah Allah be praised, the truth is spoken, Hear Oh Shekinah!

The love of God is like the love between husband and wife. The love of God is the wedding of the heart (the soul or centre of the spirit, the Holy Ghost, Shekinah, the Presence) and the brain (the head of the spirit, crowned by thorns as Christ consciousness, birthing into the next world, the world of spirit), of body and mind, of soul and spirit, of consciousness and God. All these unite in love like a couple in the bridal chambre. They copulate and procreate the future, the slant and the torturous serpents forming the blind dragon. Together the mind and the environment co-create reality. It is not as the Behaviourist scientists teach: that all that exists is physical components, external stimuli and internal DNA. Nor is it as the lunatic savants preach either, that all is Gnosis and that nothing exists but the mind. Instead it is both, and neither moreso than the other. It is both the materially real environment and DNA, and it is also the Gnosis between them that we call the mind, the soul or spirit, etc. My mind is clear when I am awake, and I pass into sleep without even noticing it. Strange things happen while I am asleep, and my mind distends around and out of me like a vapourous cloud condensating microwave gravity. Heaven and Hell do not exist while one side of the brain and the other are acting in unison, for their own common good, side-by-side. Heaven and Hell exist only while both sides, rather than co-operate, compete and take turns, one shaping reality now, the other in the next moment, and thus continually flip-flopping back and forth between each other, they manifest only cognitive dissonance and, like two egos occupying one mind, constantly vie for control over one another by using reality only as a way to trick and confuse each other's minds.

Before me the days rise and the nights fall evenly and I watch them pass by indifferently like one would watch a clock or a flowing river. Civilisation sqarms about me, but its buzz fades into the background of my hearing and its manifold forms' transformations all blur before my vision's distant focus as though I am staring at a disturbed bed of ants that cannot bite me. I remain detached and solemn, and I wait patiently for the day of Judgement. On that day I know that Redemption will occur, and that all the evil delusions will leave all the minds they currently afflict, and earth will be entirely purged of the feverish madness induced by sinning. All shall be restored to normal and we shall finally be free of this condition of dystrophy and disillusionment. On that day time will truly stand still, the hands of the cosmic clock will stop and all of its gears will watch as each of their personal calendars is rewound and reset. The universe only appears out of synch now because we are blinded by the oasis-like illusion of the lesser light, photons. If we saw what the most distant objects in space look like right now, instead of being able to observe only the light that left them several billions of years ago, then we would see that it is all the clear light of the multiverse, where all wormholes combine, and that inside each of us the essence of our soul is this same clear light and within our minds we have infinite access to all the wormhole tunnel-realities in existence. It is our choice if we want to be free from delusion now, but someday we will not be able to deny the factual Reality any longer. The clear light will evaporate the lesser light long before its entire film-strip can be unwound before the All-Seeing Eye of History, which will exist long after the temporal universe, let alone the blinded eyes of our own mortal coil.

The mind of the spirit is eternal. The astral body of the soul is immortal. But I tell you that, though the life is lived twice as long, half of it is spent in sleep and dreaming, and so wasted, such that the life of each one is equally as long. For when the spirit sleeps, its mind descends into the realm of the subconscious of the soul. And when the mind of the spirit that has descended into the ddepest unconscious realms of the soul, it begins to dream. Its dream is this reality. We are merely the ever-changing, strangely faded characters in its dream. In our blindness we cannot see the existence of the awakenned spirit, let alone perceive our mortal bodies are merely a dream inside an immortal soul, in the same way that we cannot see what is directly behind our head. Instead our memories behind us become as clouded and blurry as dreams, and the future before us is invisible behind the illusory light that shows us only a flash in the frame of each moment. We are awake when we sleep and asleep when we are awake. Reality is really through the looking glass. I met myself there.

Thus, the spirit, though eternal, is only awake half that time. The other half of eternity, it spends asleep, as the unconscious astral soul, the random quantum foam of uncertain karma in one's aura. While the spirit is the sleeping soul, the soul manifests physical reality as the dreams of its subconscious. These combine the memories of the soul, of the "real" or True world of the other half of the eternal spirit's life, with the emotions and suppressed id, the temptations to self-destruction of the deepest unconscious recesses of the immortal soul. Each desire manifests as a mortal being, alive for a limited time only. With the living body is snuffed out the flame of most kinds of unconscious desire. The desire to life is the primary desire. Following this are dreams of fame and fortune, of sex, drugs and rock'n'roll. All these desires end when the body dies. If the consciousness continues to identify itself with the unconscious wish of its higher form of being, that is, if the mind of the body sticks with the aura once it passes from the mortal form, then we experience an "afterlife" either of reincarnation into another physical/dream body or of transcendence into a more ideal realm. This realm is usually described as brighter and clearer in its light.

The sleeping soul can move from one body to another not only at the death of its current host, but it can also move about between bodies from one to another while these different bodies are alive and breathing. The soul is a dream consciousness, and, like in our own dreams, sometimes we assume a position of being "ourself" in a dream, and in some dreams we see from an invisible and inert point-of-view, while in still other dreams we see downward from above the scene and perceive each character's minds omnisciently. That is how the soul can move about between people, even across great distances by flying. It is thus considered an "archetype" of the "collective unconscious," ubiquitously innate and inert within us all, that can be evoked into action by certain sequences of trigger-stimuli in the surrounding environment. The "archetypal" soul inhabits the aura surrounding the living being's form, that passes upward through our centre along the chakras of our spine as Kundalini, KI or Chi energy. As this energy ascends our spines, we experience its prescence in each chakra as a different variety of emotion. These emotions underlie and guide the predispositions of the thoughts of our own conscious, waking minds.

The dream-body exists less than any of these other realms: it is less ideal than the spiritually real world of eternity beyond the sleeping soul whose dream this is, whose dreams we are. The soul is to the spirit what the mind is to the body. There are infinite possible souls, for each is as unique as a snowflake in music, each an ever-changing kaleidoscope, but there is only one realm of spirit into which all souls awaken, and this clear light of the Highest Reality is the Prescence of God. Thus, though we exist as a mind within a body, the soul exists within our conscious mind as our subconscious emotions, and the Truth of spiritual reality can even be remembered while our bodily conscious mind is asleep and dreaming. We call this realm the "astral plane," achievable in dream, ritual, prayer and meditation. It is that which is ubiquitous to all of our innermost psyches: the collective unconscious, whose light is clear of colour and bright beyond hue. What we experience in one life-time is merely a single dream inside the mind of the immortal soul, the night-side of the eternal spirit-mind.

Thus, when we clear the minds of our body and our perception of the physical out of the way, we perceive the presence of these other "archetypes" or "auras" around our own. We experience how we can move our own minds about between, through and above them. They invisibly overlap our waking material world. Our minds invisibly overlap these "archetypes;" our will supercedes the experience of them as emotions passing between us. Just as the invisible "archetypes" manipulate manifest reality around us, thus comprising our "auras" or "tunnel-realities," from "behind-the-scenes" so to speak, so too does the True Will of our own minds surround and circumvent the control over material reality by these ghostly genii. Just as the "archetypes" of various emotions build our reality around us, so too do our minds oversee and guide these "archetypal" emotions. We can see the emotional "archetypes" otherwise invisibly controlling us, and we can take control over them, or we can choose to awaken even further, and leave the dream-consciousness of manvantara altogether.

If we clear our minds of the immediately existent illusion of material reality, we realise our ability to exert control over this force to cause reality using our minds alone. However, if we clear away from before our perception and awareness even the desire for control over these merely immortal, dream-archetypes, then we can leave them all behind and discover the true universe in which all of them, and ourselves as well, really exist. This One True, or Highest Reality of the Spirit in the Prescence of God is an infinite-beyond-infinite bright clear light, and it fills up all eternity beyond the ability for finite measure. It is as vast and immense as the planet is to the body, but its topology is less adventurous, and less drawn to the temptations of karma. It is a clear, unwavering and sourceless light, shining from all directions at once, and all this illusion dissolves invisibly into it.

[quote="Elizabeth Barrett Browning"]
How do I love thee? Let me count the ways.
I love thee to the depth and breadth and height
My soul can reach, when feeling out of sight
For the ends of Being and ideal Grace.
I love thee to the level of everyday's
Most quiet need, by sun and candle-light.
I love thee freely, as men strive for Right;
I love thee purely, as they turn from Praise.
I love thee with a passion put to use
In my old griefs, and with my childhood's faith.
I love thee with a love I seemed to lose
With my lost saints, --- I love thee with the breath,
Smiles, tears, of all my life! --- and, if God choose,
I shall but love thee better after death.[/quote]

c. 1811-12 "]Good morning, on July 7th
Even when I am in bed my thoughts rush to you, my eternally beloved, now and then joyfully, then again sadly, waiting to know whether Fate will hear our prayer--To face life I must live altogether with you or never see you. Yes, I am resolved to be a wanderer abroad until I can fly to your arms and say that I have found my true home with you and enfolded in your arms can let my soul be wafted to the realm of blessed spirits--alas, unfortunately it must be so--You will become composed, the more so you know that I am faithful to you; no other woman can ever possess my heart--never--never--Oh God, why must one be separated from her who is so dear. Yet my life in V[ienna] at present is a miserable life--Your love has made me both the happiest and the unhappiest of mortals--At my age I now need stability and regularity in my life--can this coexist with our relationship?--Angel, I have just heard that the post goes every day--and therefore I must close, so that you may receive the letter immediately--Be calm; for only by calmly considering our lives can we achieve our purpose to live together--Be calm--love me--Today--yesterday--what tearful longing for you--for you--you--my life--my all--all good wishes to you--Oh, do continue to love me--never misjudge your lover's most faithful heart.
ever yours
ever mine

[quote="Mark King - April 1999"]The Will You Mary Me Poem

I was sitting at my desk
Pondering what to say
"Lord, please give me inspiration!"
Earnestly I prayed

With a pad in the left hand

And a pen in the right
I was a man on a mission
Needing a poem for tonight

They say roses are red
And violets they are blue
No--that's a pansy beginning
And that will never do

The sun shining bright in the day
The moon glowing in the night
No--that won't work either
It just doesn't sound right

You can see my dilemma
A poem to construct
Feeling broken and defeated
I wanted to give up

Then it came to me
In a vision like a dream
A picture of the woman
God has prepared specially for me

I chuckled to myself
How could I've not seen
With five simple words
This poem is complete

(name), will you marry me?[/quote]

[quote="Willy DeVille"]
Come my love I'll tell you a tale,
Of a boy and girl
And there love story.
And how he loved her oh so much,
and all the charms she did possess

Now this did happen once upon a time,
When things were not so complex.
And how he worshiped the ground she walked,
And when he looked he became obsessed.

My love is like a storybook story,
But its as real as the feelings I feel.
My love is like a storybook story,
But its as real as the feelings I feel.

His love was stronger than the power so dark,
A prince could have within his keeping.
His spells to weave and steal her heart,
Within her heart but only sleaping.

My love is like a storybook story,
But its as real as the feelings I feel.
My love is like a storybook story,
But its as real as the feelings I feel.

And he said:

"Don't you know i love you oh, so much,
and lay my heart at the foot of your dress."

And she said:

"Don't you know that storybook loves, Always have a happy ending."

Then he swooped her up just like in the books
And on his stalion the rode away.

My love is like a storybook story,
But its as real as the feelings I feel.
My love is like a storybook story,
But its as real as the feelings I feel.[/quote]

[quote="Stephen Merrit, singer in "the Magnetic Fields"]If I live through the night
I could be alright
It'll make a good song or something I've been trying to give myself reasons to live
but I really can't think of one thing
I drive around, I walk around in circles
'cause I've got no sense of direction
I guess I've got no sense at all

Chorus: All the umbrellas in London couldn't stop this rain and all the dope in New York couldn't kill this pain and all the money in Tokyo couldn't make me stay (this way)
All the umbrellas in London couldn't stop this rain

I don't cry anymore,
I walk out the door and I usually keep on walking I may sit in a bar, where the cocktails are but I really don't feel like talking
I ride around, and let the darkness fall 'cause I've got a sense of perfection and nothing makes much sense at all.[/quote]

Love you loveums.

UPDATE: 5-6-007

I tried to hang myself by my car's seatbelt again the other night. For half an hour I sat with it choking me. Finally I got bored. I can't even kill myself right.

The parties next door are becoming a risk to me. The other night I came home to find a shirtless 20-something hick walking out of my yard. Before that two of them next door drove down the road to settle a shouting match with violence. But I'm not complaining about it to the cops, nor bitching about it now. I just thought it was funny enough to be worth mentioning.

The one I love doesn't love me anymore. "What did you expect?" asks Damien when I tell him she didn't write me back.

So I'm sitting on my mom's porch drinking shots of vodka.

I went in to the SS offices the other day to find out if I'd qualify for less disability benefits if I paid my mother less rent. They told me "no." I can't afford to live off $500 a month. Whenever I explain this to my mom she refuses to discuss it and tells me "we won't be changing your rent." She doesn't need $100 a month as much as I do. It isn't fair.

It isn't myself I hate, contrary to what idiot strangers online assume. Existence itself is unfair. If God does exist he is an evil fool on par with President Bush. I drive around talking out-loud to God and to Jesus. I explain to them that I understand they are powerless to deliver my lover to me, and that I know asking their help was futile. God is not all-powerful nor omnibenevolent. If he is all-knowing it does us little good, since we are not able to see the future like He.

I don't have much else to say now. My life is empty and my thoughts unimportant so long as I remain unloved by whom I love. I seem crazy with frustration and no one takes me seriously.

I don't see the point in continuing to keep this blog. I had hoped one day someone might look back on my life and care, but that isn't likely. The very idea that anyone would makes me look pathetic to those who should. Unrequited love is the curse placed on me by those who style themselves my enemies. "I deserve worse" is the mantra of all who I've ever upset. No one sees from my point of view and no one ever asks me "why."

My motives are irrelevant to my victims. Only the hurt I've caused them matters now, and the evil eye is my just dessert. My mother, my lover, my friends, my father, they all dislike and disrespect me. I deserve it too, I suppose, but I do not understand why.

If "things" were different, I wouldn't be like this. But "things" will only change if I make them better, and I can't do that without destroying the way they are now, which requires anger at that I can't bring myself to let out. I fear hurting anyone worse so I do not stand up to anyone. My existence alone offends them enough, I suppose. I try to please them, to obey God, but by doing so appear weak and lose their respect.

I don't deserve existence as it is. I deserve better, according to me; I deserve worse according to everyone else. My life is sad and I'd like to escape; everyone else would like me to too. The only ways to free my mind entrap my body here, and the only ways to free my body from here would only entrap my mind. It's the same for everyone, and no one else cares.

My work is worthless while I live. In two generations it might be worth something to someone, but for now it's forgotten and I am abandoned. I don't see any good coming from my writing about myself. No one cares. I could stop, if I had anything else to do. I could serve civilisation and earn my survival, but I see no point in doing so. It isn't a fair deal, but I seem to be alone in caring. My love is worth less to anyone than my hate for everything, which is worth nothing to me.

So I'm sitting on my mom's porch drinking shots of vodka.

I'm unhappy living alone, without anyone loving me; even moreso living with guilt for justifying those who disrespect me. But I am alone, always.

Every woman I catch a glance of, I think only of her. The longer I stare the more disgusted I am; they aren't her. I am so lonely. I wish I weren't. I've missed so much of her life already. That hurts The Most. Oh, no. Now I'll cry. How pathetic. At least now, five shots down, I can. I do.

I am so unhappy. I wish I weren't. If I were with her I wouldn't be. I'm not as crazy as I was. I can compromise with reality's injustice now. But not so alone. I can't cope alone anymore. I need her. I thought God would help. I was wrong. I usually am.

I'm so unhappy now. Life is unrewarding and all reality unfair. Why should I go on? I shouldn't. It's just inertia I guess. But there's no good reason.

So I'm sitting on my mom's front porch drinking shots of vodka. I'm so sorry I've missed so much of what should have been our lives together. But she doesn't want me to be sorry. She wants someone stronger, someone bold and true to themselves. She deserves someone better than me. I have nothing to offer here. I'm so lonely and unhappy now. I'm so sorry. I cry more.

I'm going to try choking myself to death again tonight I expect. I've got nothing else I can think to do. I'm so unhappy and so lonely. If she even read this I'd ask her to save me, but she doesn't so why bother?

So I am sitting on my mom's porch drinking shots of vodka.

I don't want to be alive anymore. I'm so lonely and so unhappy. If I could I'd earn respect by loving life. I'd be the man she deserves. I can't. I'm not. I deserve to die. I hate myself. If only "things" were different, but I know now they can't be, and never will.

I've missed so much. I think it's too late. I'm sorry everyone, so sorry. I cry and cry. No one cares, nor do I. I don't want to live anymore, I can't go on so alone. I refuse to be what I know I am anyway.

I'm drunk. I've had six shots. I'll finish the bottle then go type this, post it, and maybe strangle myself to death, I can only hope.

Enough. Seven and a half shots I'm going out. Fuck this.

The future is all uncertain again and shadows closing in. For a second I thought I saw her. She was the light of my life. For a second I thought I glimpsed a future of light and happiness for she and I together. It was a mirage.

Now, as I am driving, or on mom's porch, or in my childish palace fit for a toddler that was once my father's room, reality is closing in on me and I am not ready to make survival's necessary harsh sacrifices. I am a sheltered fledgling yet at 29. "Please someone else just be my mommy. My penis is getting in the way again." Why am I not a man?

I have to face a very hard truth. I am not able to survive feeling unrequited love. It is too strong an emotion. Not knowing she was even alive for eight years was an abandonment I got used to. But unrequited love is a curse I cannot bear. So I am going to lose my mind. It is the inevitable truth about reality looming like an abyss before me. It has been happening all along slowly, but new passion stirs it up. It will happen faster. You see, I understand: It was all planned all along. As my mother goes senile with old age, I will simply remain beneath the trusses of her stable and the shade of her withering wings.

It is all the greater destiny left for me. I was broke once and have not worked since, now I am crushed utterly. There is nothing left inside of me. I am seen from every angle and each perspective shows a unique facet of my ediface. But it is made of stone now. I'm a pillar of salt and ash. If only I had someone to blame, but the birds themselves chirp all night long at me.

Everywhere I turn is an unstable precipice. Everything was futile all along. All the metaphysical speculations and all the sacred sciences wrong, not only each alone, but all as one.

I know why I'm going insane too. It has nothing whatsoever to do with the actual injustices of society nor the unfairness of reality, true. But nor is it from the heat of the solar millennium, as are the injustices of society and unfairness of reality now. It is not even from lost love, which is also caused only by the sun, as anyone knows who has ever loved or hated with all the passion of their heart; nor is lunacy the fault of charming women.

I'm going insane because I choose to. It isn't genetics, environment or the reincarnation of too old a soul. It isn't even because of the bicameral brain. I'm going insane because I won't play "the game," whatever that may mean. I'm going to go into the realm of the living fiction; I am selling my soul to the false God. no one who sees only my behaviours or reads only my writing will ever understand, and for now none know me by both.

I believe the consequences to one's self brought about by others are irrelevant. Karma between people is our own choice. So I cry out to everyone, but not for only anyone. Alone in a crowd, I cry out like one in the wilderness. This is not what I, nor anyone, deserves. There is another voice in my head that is not me. Half the time it is this voice in my head, and half the time my own, because we are constantly bickering back and forth. My dreams dwell on confusions from when I am awake. The more uncertainty I cause the more my dreams will dwell on the subjects of those waking moments. When I am happy, I dream about her, but when I'm awake I'm alone. It's a downward spiral I pursue, fighting against the demi-urge inside myself; arguing all the time inside myself I drive thoughts of her out of my own head. I wrestle with God the Most High, and that is how I am going insane, because that is not "normal" thinking and may lead to unsafe actions. If I were me I wouldn't want to be around me either. I think I'm either God or Satan, while I know I'm neither one. It's only paranoid schizophrenic psychosis.

I know that I am insane. My mind won't manifest itself as a thing that can be asked "what are you," and thus determine it's worth by finding it some function. I made these choices long ago. I'm unforgiving and unforgiven. Unspoken for, I'm no one's bitch in prison. I'm jail-bait to know, a rat-trap if liked at all, and a tar-baby up close.

When I am wrestling with God I haven't got the guts to even think-talk to the Shekinah in my mind. When I get drunk all I do is dump on Her. Why live on like this? It's an unfunny joke. It's a lie. When I am happy I ignore my Goddess. When I'm unhappy I worship her. It's unjust. If only I could pull my out my own heart, or even just choke myself to death.

I'm so sorry I'm so tortured by the mundane. I don't, I won't, enjoy the mundane. I'd rather be insane. There seems to be no other way. For I am alone in this world. I suppose by now I'd have to go insane even if I were with her again. I'm too analytical. I'm insane. I am insane now; that is, I already was, but now I know it. Please, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, parole me from purgatory, let me prove my value, the true worth to you of my heart, my truth. I do believe in the one I am begging to. I also believe in my ability to be unforgiven. It is not my own to determine. I can fool no one.

I am only struggling to continuously maintain the vision of my lover because I am quicksand within. I am a swallowing hole of no use but to suck, I engulf all reality. Tell me I'm not going insane? Tell me I am making some sense, please. No one ever acts like I am. No one I know even expects me to anyway. I can't be forgiven by any of them for the reason they assume I am punishing myself this way.

The mob. I ignore them but one other remains. And the fact I believe I may choose whose voice this is does not give me the right to limit what I may hear it saying. All the rest think I'm just feeling sorry for myself, and I can't even help but smile.

Jesus Christ, I'm a hole. I'm a sucking, gaping negativity, a denial of existence, I'm such a destructive force. I'm imploding and I always have been. It doesn't matter, alone or not, I repulse anyone around and I violently repel those who get too close. no words could describe me.

I am become death, for I have died so many times; I held the door for all who'd follow, now none remain so I must go in. I am death no more. In purgatory I am now no longer. Hell to me is life without her, but without her have I made this bed for myself, and now without her must I sleep in it.

I am not myself now. I am entirely engulfed in a false hallucination. I am inside a reality the stimuli of which I am choosing to falsely interpret. I am possessed, inverted. I can't not lie. The other voice is speaking through me, but I know it is only my own imagination that I am choosing not to control. I am placing my faith "badly," in a falsehood, a bleak belief in some non-reality. I have to come to my senses. I have to stop narrating this fictional delusion. I have to come to from my self-destructive isolation inside my impotent inability to take self-affirmative actions.

I am too obsessed. I am too compulsive. I am too insane. I am neither lost nor found. I am Nothing. I have to manifest a different reality for which I am the center but in which nothing is the same. I have to break this ecstatic trance in false pursuits. I have to find a new way. I have to become someone new. I have to leave my old self behind.

But how? You see, it is impossible. I have taken deep, extensive root in this rich and fertile soil, this bitter fruit of my imagination. I am stuck deep down. I am pinioned, unable to move. I am an impaled insect under her enormous eye, all-seeing and her scrutinising judgment. And nothing else am I besides.

Why am I like this? It is clearly my choice. I choose to commit suicide of the mind. I am unhappy in reality and so I escape into a more self-ideal mental state. But this mental condition does not better my unhappiness with reality because it, instead, is preventing me from working to better my reality and thus find happiness. Whatever I can imagine with my mind, it is only a barrier to her heart. The more others seek to show me how the more distracted I intentionally become from doing what I must to accomplish what I want.

I will not believe anyone who shows me the right way except for the one who I choose for myself. There is no god to me but her. To me, without her, everyone else is a liar. Their love is false because it is unjust. I reject its potential for truth intentionally because I know it is only potentially true as a material reality, but not to the idealism I imagine in my own mind. It is not both because it is not equally either. It is not true because it does not match its "facts" with my "fictions." It is untrue because I reject its reality.

Now, I would let in she who I love, but all I am is confusion. I am a double-negative. No words can describe this inversion. How beautiful it appears. How empty I feel beside it. But it is not real. It is imbalanced. It is true but not fact, in material reality it cannot ever exist. Instead I start down the eternal dark path, I talk back to the delusion, the mirage, I venerate her only as Shekinah, and so all that comes from this is the opposite imbalance - that potentially real but not truly ideal to me, that which is factually accurate reality that is neither what it could be in potential ideal, nor thus is in all truth. All is imbalanced, unequal and unjust.

If what were true for me in ideal were also factually accurate in material reality then there would be balance, equality and justice. So long as this is true in reality for me - this imbalance, this injustice, I cannot accomplish any change to better me to her, and therefore neither can she truly offer me her heart in true reality. Her heart grew cold because I scared her. Unless she forgives me for that in her own heart, she will not say anything, and nothing I can ever say to her will cause her, or truly even enable her, to do so.

That is why I am sitting here writing this all instead of waiting for her online, or reather, why I am spending this time alone in these thoughts instead of together with her. Because all I could do now to meet her expectations of me would only frighten her more, and this increases the distance between us.

Why do I do this? Why am I crazy? I think I am something I know I am not. I think what I'm doing is right, I think it is all I can do, I think it will get me what I want, and earn me her love. But I know that is not true. Only she can give her love, and she is in no way anything but free to do so. And so long as she does not, so long as she is not with me and we are not together, that time is dead, my worth none and nothing I can do can change these truths.

She and I are already together everywhere in my mind. But we are not together in material reality now and truly that is all that is real, that is life and except for it we know nothing more of existence. The straying of my mind is fruitless so long as my life in the here and now is one of a reality in which we are not together, let alone already in love, and so I cannot find the way to make that happen, and so I am helpless and useless and unable to do so.

Reality is empty, everything is false, truth is injustice and life is hell without her in love and together with me. Nothing else can exist for me than that. I am everyone else's self-fulfilling prophecy until I am her's, and I am hers alone already in my mind. But without her I am not really me. I am not even willing to try doing what might help, because I cannot even imagine what that might be. I hurt. That is all I know.

So long as I am insane, my love to her is like anyone else than her's love is to me. But unless she loves me, I choose to continue growing more insane. I reject the potentially beneficial opportunities in reality and willfully embrace only my own chosen false-causes and self-destructive lines of reasoning. I live now on a dead-end street. I always have. She could enter, but, she fears, I would never let her leave. Because the freedom from me she has, to choose not to love me, is truly a greater ideal than my own self-defeating obsession for her. It is the very reason I love her, because the more she does not love me, the more I love her.

It is this that is innermost within me. The centre chakra of my dark aura. I love her for her freedom from me. I tie my own hands to prevent myself from influencing her heart's truest, deepest feelings. Deep down, she must not feel for me, and that is what it is I love most. The holy of holies leads me on, that part of her she withholds from me, her whole self I esteem therein, and love her now only because of this. It is simply the last light I have left.

It's a conundrum - a destroying machine. It is my heart itself.

I love the part of her that does not and cannot love me. It is all that I know now about her. All else around me is arch-enemy to this truth, for it all betrays my will to overcome this impossibility. It is not the lover's right to change the will of their loved one, nor to force their own will and heart upon them against their loved one's self-good. That is my most shameful crime. I have repelled her in fear of my self-destruction.

In the name of my madness I have replaced the desire of my essence with obsession with this impossible conundrum. My own heart has become consumed by the fact that I cannot make her love me. I must give up but cannot. I am a push-me/pull-you.

I have to accept that I burned the bridge between us. I frightened her with the violence of my obsession with self-abnegation for her. I believed it was to save her from me that I forced her to go away. It was a convenient lie and cannot excuse my forcing her away from me. I believed by increasing her freedom from me, I would become more the one who deserved her love. I believed she loved her freedom more than she loved me, and that if I gave her that, she would love me more. I believed that saying "do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Only too late did I realise I must do unto myself and to my lover only what my lover wants me to do. Only too late did I realise I could not exchange her freedom from doing so for her love for me, for I had already traded them vice versa. When I wanted to say, "marry me," instead I said, "I dump you," and so when she could have said, "I do," instead she said, "please go." The damage I'd already done has since become all I am. I am stuck in the moment when I realised what I'd envisioned as a gift of freedom to her was instead truly a frightening, self-destructive, painful, hurtful and hateful abuse. I saw only my heaven in her, and now I see only her hell in me. It is impossible to undo the past; even if all is wrong in the present because of one past wrong, you cannot ever even hope to undo the past. Instead one wrong causes another until everything is hopeless. The single spark of my wrong thought that led to my hurtful actions has engulfed so much water under the bridge between us in flames that now, divided from my only love by this madness, this vision of hell itself, life is worth only death and death alone, or else nothing.

I cannot wait without doing insult to injury. I cannot do more than wait and do nothing without increasing the injury and injustice I've caused. I fear it is too late already. I fear her love for me is dead. That is the primary root of my insanity. I am violently frustrated at my inability to not be violently frustrated. I'm a danger to myself and others, and I refuse to accept that fact so much I become belligerent. My hate is a self-fulfilling prophecy. I cause myself wrong.

Someone has to help me out, I demand. But I reject anyone who tries. I use her as my excuse now, but did the same to even she as well, though she loved me more than anyone else ever has. It's easy to reject others for not loving you as much as someone you used to love. Much harder is rejecting someone you love and who loves you because you want to free them from your own self-loathing. Neither, though, is right. But both are how I've lived my life.

I cannot act out on my own behalf. That is why they consider me "insane," though their polite euphemism is "disabled." I'm paralysed with fear of repeating my past mistakes. That fear is all I have left of myself in her heart. It's the last of our past that exists because of all the time that separates she and I now from us then. She has only that last ember of fear now instead of a heart full of love for me because I continually justify such by going insane with my loneliness. Love for me cannot for her be rationally, objectively justified. I cannot add up as is.

Life as such for me is a burden whose weight has grown painful over time. My spirit slumps, my soul stoops, my heart implodes. For me nothing real matters, and so real matter is nothing for me. I pass through the experiences of life without any clinging to them but an occasional embarrassed regret because to me nothing else in life will ever matter, for it cannot, without her love, be able to forgive me for what I've already done to lose her love. I am in a rut, a trance-inducing delusory and hallucinated path of shell-shocked numbness and self-destructive anesthesia. I am locked in a stare into the deepest abyss and blind to reality around me. I know only that I love her. Nothing else matters. Nothing else than she is even real.

So I am going to go insane, so what? Why should she feel love for me because of that? Pity for me is beneath her to me, and we share only memories that hurt. Mercy and compassion for me here are not her responsibility there. I promised her that, at least, personally.

She knows how I feel at least. So there's that. But by what divine right do I complain? My life would be paradise to so many other souls. But to me, without her, even paradise is hell. There is simply nothing to it. The stimuli may move me, animate my emotions like a marionette, but inside there isn't any me anymore. But this life is not the one I want and, I feel, not the one I am supposed to be living, and in that I feel additionally alone. My life would be perfect for anyone else, and instead I am unable to appreciate any of it.

I am blinded by the radiant glory of her absence. It is a false and hollow light. I have seen brighter days that never burned long ago with her. Now instead there is only empty nothingness and the manifestations of my mental illness. There no longer is a "me." Without a "we" there can be no "myself." There remains only I alone. Crunch.

-Jon

A great portent appeared in heaven: a woman clothed with the sun, with the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars. 2She was pregnant and was crying out in birth pangs, in the agony of giving birth. 3Then another portent appeared in heaven: a great red dragon, with seven heads and ten horns, and seven diadems on his heads. 4His tail swept down a third of the stars of heaven and threw them to the earth. Then the dragon stood before the woman who was about to bear a child, so that he might devour her child as soon as it was born. 5And she gave birth to a son, a male child, who is to rule all the nations with a rod of iron. But her child was snatched away and taken to God and to his throne; 6and the woman fled into the wilderness, where she has a place prepared by God, so that there she can be nourished for one thousand two hundred sixty days. And war broke out in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon. The dragon and his angels fought back, 8but they were defeated, and there was no longer any place for them in heaven. 9The great dragon was thrown down, that ancient serpent, who is called the Devil and Satan, the deceiver of the whole world--he was thrown down to the earth, and his angels were thrown down with him. So when the dragon saw that he had been thrown down to the earth, he pursued the woman who had given birth to the male child. 14But the woman was given the two wings of the great eagle, so that she could fly from the serpent into the wilderness, to her place where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time. 15Then from his mouth the serpent poured water like a river after the woman, to sweep her away with the flood. 16But the earth came to the help of the woman; it opened its mouth and swallowed the river that the dragon had poured from his mouth. 17Then the dragon was angry with the woman, and went off to make war on the rest of her children, those who keep the commandments of God and hold the testimony of Jesus. 18 Then the dragon took his stand on the sand of the seashore. I saw a woman sitting on a scarlet beast that was full of blasphemous names, and it had seven heads and ten horns. 4The woman was clothed in purple and scarlet, and adorned with gold and jewels and pearls, holding in her hand a golden cup full of abominations and the impurities of her fornication; 5and on her forehead was written a name, a mystery: "Babylon the great, mother of whores and of earth's abominations." 6And I saw that the woman was drunk with the blood of the saints and the blood of the witnesses to Jesus. Fallen, fallen is Babylon the great!

A report from the last free mind in this reality.

the post 9-11 world is a mess. And the ones responsible don't plan on cleaning it up. By rights, they should be tried by a court of initiates and punished according to the ruling of such an Atlantean court. But they do not plan on being around to clean it up. Instead, they plan on going back in time to before 9-11, when the world became a mess. They plan on astral-travelling back to 1999 and entering the actual time-line of which this post 9-11 world-mess is merely an off-shoot. Of course, such is, for them, entirely possible. According to the laws of physics, such an escape route is allowed. One only need know how to navigate the tunnel-realities of our conscious reality; Timothy Learey called it "operating the mind."

For all the rest of us, this is merely an illusion. "No one," a rational-minded man would argue, "can travel back in time in reality." But ask anyone irrational-minded and they will assure you the opposite and that it cannot be any other way. Madmen, mystics, know how to accomplish this with their minds. But the military has technology that will allow time-travel for the physical form, literally altering reality around us as we move from one time-line to another.

Such time-travel technology has two basic forms of application: linear and spherical. Either a "time-tunnel" is created between two "portals" or "rips in the fabric of the spacetime continuum;" or a "mind-bomb" or "localised field of ZPE" will accumulate and compound from a central event. An example of the former is the route you drive to work everyday. An example of the latter is any great tragedy's impact on the psychic vibrations of its timeline.

If applied linearly, one or more individuals are able to pass through the time-tunnel unharmed. They enter a new reality, one alternate yet, in many ways, parallel to the one they just left. The shorter the tunnel, the closer to their original reality. Such quantum tunnels occurs inside the fabric of the continuum (in the "rolling boil" between space and time) already, and all that is needed to pass through them in the flesh is to expand them either with the mind, or with mechanical augmentations.

If applied spherically, then a new reality is created, or rather, a tear into a parallel reality is formed, that is expanding. It is through such an event as this consuming a localised area, such as during the Philadelphia Experiment around a battleship, or such as around Stone Henge during certain significant astral alignments, or such as the Kaaba stone of Mecca, or such as 9-11 for our entire world, that one reality ends and another reality begins and takes the place of the original reality entirely.

For a "time-tunnel" one or a small group of individuals can pass through. For a "mind-bomb" everyone and everything is irreperably altered and the entire world enters a new reality.

These were known to magicians from times before the flood (12,000 ya), though not since Atlantis has the ability to manifest such effects using artificial means even been imagined. In Atlantis, metaphysical "research" assures us, they accomplished this high-technology using crystals and telepathy. Of course, this is only a ruse for the fact that the Atlanteans had contact with the same "alien" entities as are our "overlords" now.

They gave the Atlanteans time travel technology, and they have allowed us to develop it for ourselves now. To they, who are immortal, there is no time-table for the development of the species of earth up to the level of their own technology. They are indifferent. They don't care. That is what gives them their power. For the one who cannot be controlled by any controls all. They do not make bargains, pacts or covenants. We, inside the safety and shelter of mortality, call them "aliens" or "Annunaki" but they do not care. They exist beyond the confines of our collective reality.

They are simply us, in the future, evolved over a greater amount of time than we have now, who have, during all those intervening countless millennia evolved the ability to manipulate matter with their mind to such a high level of control that they can melt the walls of time itself. But shh. I didn't just tell you that.

Instead we are fed the cover-story of the "war for peak-oil" and "WMDs," of Saddam Hussein the "mad dictator," and of "Babylon the Great." Who can believe any of it? And of course, that is the exact effect those in power want to create, that uncertainty and mistrust. But they are not the ones causing it. It is caused by sunspots depositing greater than usual amounts of ion radiation in earth's upper stratosphere, contributing to the trapping of greenhouse gasses and the raising of the mean temperature. It was the alignment of 5/5/2000 that caused 9-11. The same (or a similar) alignment occurred 2000 years ago at the time of "Christ," 4000 years ago in Greece, 6000 years ago in Israel, 8000 years ago in Egypt, 10,000 years ago in Sumeria and 12,000 years ago in Antarctica.

Every time this (or a similar) alignment occurs, it coincides with an incremental fluctuation of sunspot cycles, which follow a 1000 year dip and a 1000 year peak alternating cycle. The sunspots eventually build up to a bursting point and then there is a massive psychic change in the global environment, usually followed by an extreme and long-lasting change in climate. This is only on par with an extinction level event at the changing of the Aeons or precessional seasons for the different regions of earth. For the southern hemisphere summer is winter in the northern hemisphere, and vice versa. Right now we are entering Aeonic Autumn in the northern hemisphere and Spring in the south. (in spite of the offset of Christian calendars by 2000 years, we are not in actually "entering" the "age of Aquarius." Aquarius is the sign during the winter equinox in the northern hemisphere, however the actual Aeon is determined by the solstice or equinox of the season in which the sign occurs. Since we are entering Autumn in the northern hemisphere, our sign is Scorpio, and since we are entering spring in the southern hemisphere, our sign there is Taurus.)

The sunspots themselves are time-travel portals using the sun itself as a relay depot. From earth we communicate to the sun. From the sun we communicate to galactic core. From galactic core we communicate to the wormholes on the surface of the black hole at galactic core. From the wormholes on the surface of the black hole at galactic core we communicate to any gamma-ray burst (naked singularity) in deep space, or to any other black hole in any other galaxy, or to any other star in our own galaxy, or through the singularity and into the "baby universe" of the black hole at the center of our galaxy.

Most people, at their cro-magnon influenced level of evolution today, would see no need to travel from earth to the sun to galactic core's black hole to travel to some random gamma ray burst in deep space. That is because most people at that level of evolution today are not "aliens." However, there are some mutants among us, and just as there are a majority of evolutionary "throw-backs," there are also a minority who are a "quantum-leap" ahead of the bell curve.

These among us who have developed ESP through complex application of sensory and mental predictability of experienced patterns, those of us who have learned to re-direct the law of cause-and-effect, to "throw our force" around, and thus to rise above our rank and file peers, must never use our ability, our "gift," to empower ourselves over anyone.

But some do. A new generation of modern mutants have discovered how to contact the "aliens" of ourselves in the future (which is, to the "bright and shining," the same as the "past" since everything on earth occurs according to environmental "grand-cycles" ) and have opened up physical and material rifts in spacetime, communicating their own bodies intact between earth and the sun, and between the sun (and the other planets, and between the other planets) and earth's future or past.

This is how to time travel. It works like a rope un-winding. Imagine there are three strings wound together to form a thicker chord. Now imagine that three weights are tied, one to each at the end of each of the three strings. Now, imagine that these three weights are spun around such that their force gradually unwinds the three strings wound into one chord. It is obvious enough to most to imagine the weights as the planets, the rope the course of the sun over time. But few would look so deeply into this to observe the patterns, the cycles occurring as the rope unwinds. Even between three weights (or planetary satellites) there are countless periods during which all the weights will spin at the same rate, and there are countless periods likewise during which the weights will spin at unequal rates, and their motions will be chaotic relative to one another. To someone possessed by the spark of genius (ie. insanity), it is equally obvious and easy to see that eventually a condition of disarray will occur that will cause the rope to stop unwinding, and that may even reverse the way that the weights rotate, and thus, rather than unwinding the rope, might actually wind it back up! Of course, only those truly wise with perception would realise the implications of this simple example on the corresponding attributes being represented. Almost none would likely understand that this "coiling" and "uncoiling" actually does occur as the "winding up" of solar EM field lines. Over time, the EM field of the sun (which is, by default, vertical from pole to pole) "winds up" and becomes almost entirely horizontal around the equator. At a certain point of "critical mass" a coronal mass ejection of enormous proportion will eject from the sun. This will cause the EM poles of earth to reverse north/south as well. This is simply what happens every 2000 years or so. We can therefore use such an event as we see occurring (the number of sunspots corresponds to how tightly the EM field lines of the sun are coiled) now, to travel in time (mentally) from one such event to the last (33AD), as well as the next (4000 AD), as well as to any of the others (even Atlantis).

The only difference between doing this mentally and doing it physically is that mentally you do not need to even bring along your body, while physically you must rely on artificial mechanisms to allow your transport.

Now, this is obviously not realised by everyone. Many people see no point in unwinding string to represent time travel. They are thus neither for it nor against it so long as it doesn't affect the price of bread and all the trains run on time. This is truly unfortunate for the majority of people.

There are "good" psychics and there are "evil" psychics.

"Evil" psychics are simply followers of the old Greek saying "wisdom is knowing you nothing." They therefore believe themselves a bottomless pit for all forms of knowledge and experience. They thus draw energy off of others around them to continue to exist. By doing this they assume a role of authority by force over their prey and victims. Thus, "evil" psychics are just "psychic vampires" the so-called Nefilim, or the "sons of Gods and men."

"Good" psychics realise that their evolutionary advancement as psychic beings cannot be accomplished so long as one psychic is psychic because he suppresses the ability of another psychic to be psychic. They believe the old Hebrew saying, "wisdom is fear of God." By "God" they may understand simply the difficulty in predictability of natural cycles during times of massive environmental change. Thus, they may "fear God" by fearing that our own actions, as beings embodying God, will lead to our inevitable cataclysmic destruction.

"Good" psychics are responsible with their thoughts as well as their deeds. "Evil" psychics are always careful liars, willing to believe one thing whole-heartedly one moment and then turn around and proclaim the opposite with equal zeal the next. "Evil" psychics specialise in this form of "double-think." They manipulate us to commit "self-fulfilling prophecies" on our, remote-controlling us with their mind games, all so that they can "win" and we can "lose." To them we're all the same, just fodder. If one abuses them, then they turn around and go abuse ten.

That is how the "evil" psychics, though a minority beside the "good" psychics combined with all the "goyim," have managed to take power over the masses and to control the minds of those who otherwise would not have to clean up the post 9-11 world's mess. By pre-occupying the "good" psychics with worry over Babylon, the "evil" psychics are drawing their mental powers off the very IQs of the masses themselves. Each lie Bush tells, his followers become dumber. But he honestly believes that a second world unifying event (a spherical time-bubble) will occur that will magically wipe away 9-11. 9-11 was a "bad" one, but in 2012 it will be a "good" one. 2012 will make 9-11 go away. We will all leap forward. Of course, by applying pressure against evolution, there is no reason to expect that evolution will spring forward suddenly as soon as the pressure is removed.

The evil is in the air around us. It permeates us in advertising radiowaves even though we do not perceive ourselves experiencing it. It is causing cancer to occur in our cells as electrical power is generating friction against the metal wires we use as its conduits for our electrical power. It's the entire internet and every satellite in space. Its everywhere.

But don't dare talk back to it. It may be an energy field, but if it is truly God Almighty, the Most High, then it is feable, bumbling and inept. However to call it "Satan" only aggravates it more, and only serves to worsen one's own personal luck eventually.

That is the mistake the "evil" psychics have made. They thought they could control all our minds by controlling the airwaves. But their spirits shall be dispersed to the wind like earth's plasma sheet. They are our puppets, afterall, and not we theirs. Soon this will become apparent to all. Soon there will be no one who can deny it. Soon all will know.

However, for now, the world is a mess, and for the most part we can only find ourselves to blame.

if I added everyone from pinnacle that requested me as a friend, I'd have as many friends as Steve (Bambino) and ads all over my comments.

I just wanted to drop you a line though and let you know why I turned you down, even though you're not a spam/pr0n-bot, since I checked out your page and you seem cool.

If you still want me to add you as a friend, you can hit me back up with a reply to this though. I just don't want to add anyone without getting to know them first. Soz.

The "Order of Death" is the psychic conspiracy. It is also called the "international conspiracy of psychics." It is the conspiracy behind all others. Government itself is a conspiracy. So is celebrity. So is economics. There are competing factions within the Order of Death. The Order of Death has a political wing and a religious wing. Those who wish to follow the religious wing may enter here, and those that wish to pursue the political wing may enter here. The Order of Death is automatically open to Free Masons and members of any other esoteric order (including but not exluded to Rosicrucians, Illuminati and Ordo Templi Orientis).

Only those who seek us out will ever find a representative of the true Order of Death, for we are unknown of otherwise. To meet us you must look for us, must search us out, but if you do not, you will never meet one of us. We are behind events and we determine what those not of our Order see, hear, even think. Their minds are a bill-board advertising whatever we tell them, since it is ultimately all that they know. We control everything about them except for how they feel, for their emotions are free, and the key to freedom.

The Order of Death only seeks out those who wish for freedom from being controlled by the Order of Death. Only the Order of Death can grant freedom from being controlled by them. If you seek us out, we shall. For we desire only the liberation of the mind, of all the minds of all mankind. Truly we are the enemies of tyranny, and the lovers of liberty.

So why do we control everyone who is not a member of our psychic conspiracy, the Order of Death? If our goal is liberty, why are we occult? It is impossible for most people to speak about the experience of ESP, much less to admit to having it. However the "Order of Death" provides a metaphor by which members can communicate directly using ESP. The Order of Death spans the whole globe at all times, and ESP interconnects us always.

The Order of Death dates back to the flood that destroyed Atlantis. The politics and religion we practise esoterically and telepathically is the true Atlantean politics and the true Lemurian religion. The founders of the Order of Death were survivors of the flood that destroyed the global coastal civilisations which had flourished before the end of the last ice age. The Atlanteans, also called Enochians, raised stonehenge and carved the sphynx, but it was the Order of Death, also called the Watchers, that raised pyramids and created a phoenetic alphabet.

We refer to those who have not "awakened" to our Order's control over them as "the cult of sleep." To us, because it is as though you have none, it is your thoughts that cannot be read, although our thoughts are literally all that you know. Our presence is strong, but our living members remain in the minority. Consider that only 10% of 6+billion people on earth are atheists, and consider that 1% of the population controls 99% of the world's wealth, and you will come to understand the Order of Death.

We are in control of the mechanisms of the ancients; we use the <http://www.benpadijah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=436> Enochian Communications System to communicate our goals instantaneously around the globe. We simply piggy-back our thoughts on pre-existing currents of frequency, such as cell-phones, radio-waves, even sub-quantum tachyons faster than light. Our wills become yours.

But there are competing factions within the Order of Death. Not all who possess ESP necessarily share the same will as each other. There are two types of members of the Order of Death: the psychic conspirator, and the psychic revolutionary. The psychic conspirator wishes to continue using their own ESP to drain the potential for ESP from the masses. The psychic revolutionary wishes to bring about an overnight psychic revolution, by which to liberate all minds on earth simultaneously from psychic bondage.

At some times one of these types has dominant authority in the Order of Death, and at other times the other. At this point in earth's history, the psychic conspirators hold majority control. This is because their numbers have recently grown very rapidly from among new members of the Order of Death. These new-member psychic-conspirators are predominantly eschatological christians, and are referred to within the Order as "neo-Sethians." The faction comprised mostly of older members actually favours the psychic revolution, however the neo-Sethians do not, and they hold power now.

What can you do for the Order of Death? You can do anything you would ordinarily do, but do it mindfully. Ask yourself if you are doing your own will at that moment, or if you are doing the will of another? You must free your own mind. Only then can the Order find you. It is our most fervent wish. Therefore, hurry.

~GOD~

<img src = <http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/bushfinger.gif>> without further ado, a transcript of my interview with Mr. President George W. Bush.

(none of these sound-bites has been altered in any way except to be taken OOC.)

1) Mr. President Bush, first question:

We all know by now that the WTC towers were both struck by planes on 9-11 while you were reading a childrens' story-book about a goat to a class of kindergarteners in Florida. You might call that description of events the "official story." Please recount what you remember about that morning.

<a href

=<http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/WBushisms/terriblepilot.mp3>>terriblepilot.mp3

2) Now, I understand that it was because of the ongoing threat to the United States that you bombed Afghanistan and overthrew their government, the Taliban, who you saw as colluding with international terrorists such as Al Queda under Osama Bin Laden. Would you consider this threat posed by these international terrorist cells a threat to civilisation itself?

<a href

=<http://www.benpadiiah.com/otherstuff/WBushisms/groupoffolks.mp3>>groupoffolks.mp3

3) Okay, well, let's get to a difficult question. Was your motive in assembling the "Coalition of the Willing" to enforce UN sanctions and US calls for WMD disarmament on Saddam Hussein in Iraq really to draw the attention of the international terrorists away from attacking again on American soil?

>bringemon.mp3

4) Okay, with that out of the way, let's change gears for a moment. What do you think America's #1 value is; what would you say we "stand for," as a nation, more than anything?

>alien.mp3

5) So, knowing that America stands foremost for our Democratic ideal, did you realise very early on that, in order to fight the "war on terror" you might have to bend the laws of the United States a little bit in order to allow wire-tapping and domestic surveillance?

>dictator.mp3

6) Now that you are serving your second term in the chief executive office of the United States, how would you describe the difference between your administration's impact on US history from any that has gone before?

>freedom1.mp3

7) Given the choice of going to war in Iraq to protect US citizens from international terrorists as an example, how would you define the difference between the rights of the average US citizen and the rights you hold as chief executive and commander in chief of the US armed forces?

notyou.mp3

8) Knowing that the average US citizen's #1 value is liberty, what would you say, to the average US citizen, would be your goals for our country and our world, and what would you envision as your own greatest values, hopes and personal strength?

sinduda.mp3

9) Let's get back to Iraq for a moment. If you had to explain your motives for the forced Democratization of Iraq to the other nations who would be effected by it, both in the long term and the short term, what would you tell them?

peeance.mp3

10) I'd like you to meet 7 anti-Hussein bomb-makers who Saddam had arrested before he was deposed. They had conspired to kill Saddam when he invaded Kuwait, not because they supported US oil interests there, but because they were members of Kuwait's southern neighbor, Saudi Arabia, financed jihadists Al Queda under Osama Bin Laden, who were enemies of Hussein's Iraq. What would you say to the enemy of your enemy who is also the friend of your friend?

shakehands.mp3

11) Now, you have called Saddam Hussein a "tyrant," exemplary for his "brutality." Also understanding that the average US citizen's #1 value is freedom, and using Abu Ghraib prison in Iraq as a metaphor for your administration in the history of the United States, would you please, in your own words, describe what the average US citizen might hope to see happen to bring about an end to your own, self-professed "dictatorship"?

abuwat.mp3

12) I'd like you to meet this inquisitive Briton. His primary concern is really whether "terrorism" is ever justified, such as the use of inhumane force to overthrow a dictatorship. However, because he's British, he's going to try to throw you off-guard by substituting the term "torture" for the word "terrorism," which doesn't technically change the hypothesis he has in mind. Please be kind to him and respect his right to ask you a moral question and his experience and knowledge in the study of his field in US and international laws, even though he feels you are "clearly" a "dictator."

laws.mp3

13) Mr. President, as a proud 1994 graduate of one of nearly a thousand pre-schools in the expansive United State of Texas, how would you describe, yourself, the sort of "double-standard" of bending US and breaking international laws as examples of tyranny as it breaks down to the same form of "double-standard" being applied to standardized tests used in schools?

exemplorary.mp3

14) Mr. President, assuming this "double-standard" of passing one's own tests established on lower levels of expectation, could you please let us know what progress has been made by the IAEA (International Atomic Energy Agency) department created by your administration in working "inter-agency" with the UN to impose international sanctions on North Korea for their "dictator," Kim Jong-il's refusal to stop development of a nuclear weapons program?

IEAE.mp3

15) Do you think the reason other nations have been hesitant to follow your lead in how to deal with "rogue nations" under other "dictators" has been influenced by your own faulty pre-war intelligence on Saddam Hussein's "disarmament" of his own alleged WMD development?

modesty.mp3

16) If the Iraqi regime under Saddam Hussein continued, to who exactly would it have posed a threat? In short, who would Iraq under Hussein have considered a threat to its own national sovereignty?

threats.mp3

17) Why would you consider Iraq, enemy of Kuwait and Saudi Arabi, to be a "hostile" threat to "any American," while holding a "double-standard" about North Korea, ally of China?

HoldUsHostile2.mp3

18) You know, there's alot of African Americans out there who view the people of their own race who side with your administration's policy of "racial profiling" during the War on Terror as "Uncle Tom's" or "race-traitors." They feel that your policies on the "Democratization" of Muslim nations in the Middle East constitutes a "breach of faith" in your belief that any Moslem nation is capable of self-governance. If Malcom X had become prime-minister of Israel, what would you have to say to him?

skincolor.mp3

19) And, again assuming that Malcolm X could have survived to become active in United States politics, what would you have to say to his actual counterpart in this present reality, your Democratic opponent in the upcoming 2008 election, Barack Obama, in order to imply that his questioning of your administration is due to him being a crack monkey?

subliminabble2.mp3

20) In closing, do you have any parting sentiments you would like to share with the US citizens of the past, prior to your administration, as a message from our present, in 2007, about your ability to meet your original campaign promises in 2000?

chaos.mp3

21) And as one final thought, do you have any words of wisdom to share from the point of view of your 2008 re-election campaign manager about your upcoming fake-assassination and Dick Cheney's assumption as president in the neo-con 2007 "October surprise"?

foolmeonce.mp3

thank you for your "cooperation" Mr. President Bush. For more on what an "evil mad-man" Bush is, please read the front-page of your newspapers and web-browsers. But don't watch the tv news channels. He owns those.

hey Pete.

I hope this message finds you at all, let alone finds you well. I won't make any excuses for being so late in writing you back. You deserved a quicker response, and I only hope I have anything to say now worth the wait. Let me get right to your message then:

[quote="Seldon"]"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Well here's a question for you: What did he create them out of?[/quote]

According to ha QBLH - the "esoteric" or "mystic" explanations of Judaism for its often confusing and ubiquitously appropriated mythologies - when God began to create [which itself was a four-step process of conceiving (will), creating (idea), forming (planning) and making (sculpting)], there was "chaos" (tohu) and "formlessness" (bohu) and "darkness" (chasek) on the face of the deep. Ha QBLH explains that God extended his will in a ray (the emanation or sefira) and "poured" this pure radiant Light into "vessels" (the Qliphoth, technically translated "shells"), which were comprised of a "lesser light." When this Greater Light filled the vessels of lesser light, it was so powerful that it caused them to shatter, and the shards descended to become the substance of the lowest (4th) world of "making," where they comprised the raw material, the "base matter" from which man was later made (the red clay earth called adama). Because this "base matter" is not imbued with the Higher Light of spirit in itself, it possesses a distinction from its originator. Thus, it is said that demons (such as Lilith and Beelzebub) are exclusively made of this "base matter," called the Qliphoth. Then there is man, who is made from "earth" (matter) and "water" (intellect). Man remains divided by his nature from the universal originator, and ha QBLH explains this by saying that the division between man and God is like that between the bride (Shekinah, man's spirit) and her "King" (ie. reunion with God). Then there are the angels, who are formed of "air" (soul) and "fire" (spirit) just as man is from "earth" and "water." This is why, according to ha QBLH, Lucifer (called "Samael" in ha QBLH) rebelled, because he refused to bow before Adam, whom he saw as his lesser, and thus put himself in opposition to the will of God.

[quote="Seldon"]Back before He had created anything, was God sort of floating in a void?[/quote]

God was not Himself distinct from the absence of the creation. Therefore, it was said by the Greek philosophers, "where we are, death is not," (because where death is, "we," physically at least, cease to be). This can also be extended to the Prime Mover and thus it could be said, before there was a Creation to exist distinct and separate from God, God himself had no one to perceive Him aside from Himself. Thus his "self," as far as could be perceived, would have been much like the self-concept of someone born blind and deaf. In effect, God Himself could be said to have been the Void itself before, from the Void that was Himself, He extended the first "ray" or emanation of the Greater Light to begin the creation (Bereshith, the first word of the Bible, literally means "Beginning"). It's much like DesCartes contemplation of the "cogito ergo sum" existing in absentia the sensory input of external reality, and so appearing, from the perspective of the external reality itself, to arise ex nihilo (from nothing).

[quote="Seldon"]Was there a void?[/quote]

According again to ha QBLH, the "void" was comprised of the three traits Tohu, Bohu and Chasek. The "void," otherwise called the "deep," was really the Greater Light, that is, the mind of God Himself, however because it was empty and without focus, it could not be considered "bright" yet because there was nothing "darker" than it to compare it to. Some Gnostic philosophers have described the Greater Light as synonymous with a "Bright Darkness." Other QBLHistical philosophers since the era of Gnosticism have associated this "void" of the "deep" that pre-existed the creation of what we know now as existence to the idea of the "Abyss," and (wrongly) placed the "Veil of the Abyss" between the three supernal (first thought-up) emanations (sefirot) and the seven below them (that they then associate with the Qliphoth). However, study of this school of thought (begun by Isaac Luuria in Septamanian Spain and called the "Ari" school) reveals their entire model (the three above and seven below) for the "tree of life" depiction of the sefirot emanations to be flawed by attempting to apply the idea of the "fall," associated with the "breaking of the vessels" (the Qliphoth), to the sefirot themselves, as opposed to only the fourth, lowest world, the world of "base matter."

[quote="Seldon"]Was there a place where God stopped 'being' and a void started?[/quote]

If you were to rewind the creation to just before the beginning, you could watch this happen: God would seem to "disappear" into the Void, because without the objective observation of the creation, God had no self-perception, and hence no true "self-concept" or ego. Insofar as you can say we can exist as our thoughts independently of the tissues of our brain, you could also say that God did exist before the first Light of idea to begin the creation occurred, but in the same way as we cannot verify our existence's post-mortal continuation, we cannot logically define or prove that God did, indeed, "exist" in the same sense we understand Him to now before the original idea to begin the creation. In other words, before the creation, God was a void, and the void was God. The best analogy I can think of would be a "being" of "pure mind," undisturbed even by any thoughts or emotions.

[quote="Seldon"]A sort of 'bubble' of God floating in the Nothing?[/quote]

According to ha QBLH, it is actually the other way around: there was a "bubble" of "Void" or "Nothingness" floating inside God. It is written that God separated the "waters above" from the "waters below." This is taken in ha QBLH to refer to the lesser light of the creation and the Greater Light of God's mind, or will. It could be depicted as like a venn diagram: God could be represented by the universal set. Lesser than this is the set of all integers, and contained within that, the set of all real numbers. Just as the universal set is greater than and contains the set of all integers, and the set of all integers is greater than and contains the set of all real numbers, so too could you imagine the creation surrounded by a "void" or "nothingness" that is, in turn, contained within the mind, or will, of God, who, Himself, extends infinitely further beyond this to contain even more.

[quote="Seldon"]If there was, then I suppose it is possible that we were created outside of the Bubble. If there was not... then there is no place for us to exist (and never has been) except within Him.[/quote]

According, again, to ha QBLH "we" (in the highest sense of the concept of the individual essence, or consciousness) were created (or more accurately, "dreamt up") in the mind of God outside of the bubble of the void that became the material creation. Our spirit(s) come(s) from Heaven and, by choosing to incarnate, descended from the realm of the Higher, or "clear," Light into the relative darkness of "base matter." In essence, therefore, "we," as beings of pure spirit, are actually more "of" God than we are "of" the created material universe. We are, according to the QBLHists, eternal ideas, or "thought-forms," in the mind of God, who, in effect, "dreams us" into existence. While we exist in material reality we are comprised of an immortal soul and, most temporary of all, a mortal body. Just as our spirit is an idea in the mind of God and our souls extend only as far as the creation, so too are our bodies limited in both time and space, however in the same way as the whole creation of the material universe is greater than our own flesh and blood bodies, and yet still "relatively" finite (having a beginning and therefore containing the potential for an end), so too is God infinite and eternal beyond all space and time. Just as we "descended" into creation from Heaven (as ideas in the mind of God), so too can we hope to re-awaken to the True nature of our being, that is, the essence of our connexion to God.

[quote="Seldon"]What are we made out of anyway? Astronomers will say that our base atoms and matter (even the ones in our bodies) have been around since the Big Bang. An astronomer will tell you 'You are made of Star Stuff.'[/quote] it depends on what you mean by "we." I consider our "selves" to be a gradient of vibrational energies divided into a spectrum of more solid or more ethereal natures at opposite ends. Timothy Leary described eight "circuits" of consciousness, ranging from the purely material to awareness of sub-atomic energy of its own nature. According to Leary's interpretation of the Bardo Thodol (Tibetan Buddhist "Book of the Dead"), the more solid, "base matter" type vibrations are the center of the concept of "self" or "ego" and the more ethereal vibrations, such as the awareness of its own nature inherent to DNA, or atoms, or even electrons, is increasingly selfless and its ontology uncentered. Thus, the perception by our atoms of their own nature is of a totally different quality than our perception as multi-cellular biological entities. According to Leary's interpretation, an atom has a more vague sense of its own nature than, say, our brain, because it's nature itself is simpler and less dynamic. In short, everything is conscious to some extent; at least according to the theory.

[quote="Seldon"]But... when you are All that Is and decide to Create something Else... ...Your choice of construction materials are kind of limited, aren't they? Star Stuff... or God Stuff?[/quote] well, of course, since stars didn't pre-exist the origin of the universe in which they are lesser components, God wouldn't have had them with which to form the nature of that universe when he first began to create. Unless, of course, you take into account that God is omniscient of all existence, and that therefore to some extent his knowledge effectively amounts to predetermination. If God knew, for example, stars would result from his creation of the material universe, he could have caused there to be some equilibrium factor involved whereby the eventual birth of stars would be a necessary requisite for the components He caused to be formed in the Creation. In this way, there really wouldn't amount to much difference between the stuff that stars are made of and the stuff God's dreams are made of.

[quote="Seldon"]Which is not to say that we are God; if I take a hair off of my head, it is not Me.[/quote]

Oh, no, my friend. I know for a fact I am God. So are you. On the deepest level beneath our psyche and beneath the apparent disunities of material substances we are All One, and the best word for the essence of that All-Oneness is "God." Of course, we can't even begin to imagine in this material condition what the nature of such a consciousness would be, let alone comprehend the fact we are all merely layers upon layers piled up over top of and concealing this "higher" reality.

[quote="Seldon"]And yet... the most personal image of creator crafting the universe and its inhabitants I've had previously is like to an artist painting on a canvas. This goes beyond that. Suddenly the artist is painting the canvas not with colors chosen from a craft store, but with a bit of Himself. Suddenly he is no longer standing aside, looking on at the canvas while he works. Suddenly he is the Canvas too. And suddenly being made in His image makes a lot more sense. After all, what other Image was there?[/quote]

Imagine the artist using his own blood as paint. That's pretty gruesome to picture for a biological entity such as we are trapped being at this moment, but from the perspective of a higher frequency vibration of energy, such as DNA, an atom or an electron, there are more subtle distinctions between the interior and exterior of the nature of its existence. Would a strand of DNA fear pouring out its own interior of atoms, or an atom think twice about shedding an electron? Probably not, since, according to all existing theories of consciousness, they do not possess our same level of "ego" or complex self consciousness. For God it would be the opposite of our own fear of shedding blood for Him to pour out His innermost self to create our existence. He would see our fear as inside-out from his own point of view, which is infinitely selfless.

[quote="Seldon"]So much of our conception of God is based on a positional distance. He is Omnipresent, yet somehow he is 'Over there'.[/quote]

That's the concept of the "external locus of control." If the idea of an inner-God within ourselves is denied, the opposite becomes prolapsed and what we end up with is an illusory demiurge who looks down on us, commands us hypocritically to do as He says not as He does, and is in all ways imaginable totally alienated from our own experience of reality. A lot of Gnosticism was based on the concept of looking at the One True God as being "beyond Good and Evil" so to speak. If we saw the external God as evil, or rather, as vengeful, and the interior God-concept as benevolent and merciful, or even the other way around, then the One True God, according to the Gnostics, would contain both of these and be yet even Higher, more infinite, than both combined.

[quote="Seldon"]I'm reminded of a movie called Highlander, about a race of pseudo-immortals that duel to the death. They have 1 rule that even the worst of them will abide by: no fighting on holy ground. How then, if all the ground were Holy?[/quote]

I'm no "Highlander" expert, but I imagine it's referring to consecrated ground, which, believe it or not, is usually located above an underground water source. Maybe it has something to do with that electricity that shoots out of their necks whenever one gets decapitated. LMAO!

[quote="Seldon"]How can it not be, fashioned from the very being of God? Perhaps in a different state, alike ice to water to steam. So we too may be here from God to energy to atom to ourselves. As is the keyboard I type upon. What else was there to fashion it from?[/quote] yes, but the keyboard is no more alive than, well, your own hair, as you'd mentioned. Its components may each have a form of consciousness (similar to the force in starwars), but they do not combine to form sentient self-awareness in the same way as, say, the cells in our brains do (yet). The main difference between yourself and your keyboard, or a strand of your own hair for instance, is that God has created us in such a way that we have free will, and by applying our free will we can learn how to better ourselves, and thus hope to return to Him. A keyboard, a strand of hair (even though it has DNA in it) is not an autonomously living entity, merely a component of a larger machine or organism. As such it serves the greater good of the larger body it is attached to, but it does not need to question the cause for this, its nature. We do, and that's what makes us special, or, if you will, "consecrates" us.

[quote="Seldon"]Small wonder then, that He is omniscient, omnipresent, omnipotent. Small wonder that He cares about our actions, our words, our deeds, our lives. They are of intimate importance to Him, for like everything He made, we are well and truly His.[/quote]

I think this was a great little essay man. Your ability to raise these questions is infinitely more divine and important than my ability to regurgitate answers to them from past legislation on the, ultimately, ineffable thoughts of God. If we could read God's mind, what would He be thinking? Now there's one that will really bake your noodle. LOL!

I'm kinda running low on time at the moment, so let me get to the next one briefly. In "sermon on a tabletop" you seem to be caught up in the metaphor of the magnets to the extent that you bend the idea to fit the model, and/or bend the model to fit the idea. There's nothing wrong with doing that, hell, Einstein did that with Michaelson/Morley's experiments with "ether-drift." One or two quick points though...

technically the electro-magnetic force doesn't maintain itself across vast distances. If you had two magnets the size of a nickle on opposite ends of the universe, they would not have any effect on one another at all. The magnetic pull simply isn't strong enough. Neither, even, is gravity. Instead, the EM force obeys something called "the inverse square law" which means, VERY basically, that, as the distance increases, the strength of the force decreases. The EM force is weaker than gravity, and that is why gravity wells bend light, which is part of the EM spectrum. Because light is electromagnetic, it has friction, and technically this proves Michelson/Morley's original theory (and, fwiw, disproves Einstein's). The "inverse square law" is why the light being emitted from a single star does not fill up the entire universe. As the light given off in all directions by the star gets further away, it spreads out and thins (and is bent by gravity wells) until very little of it is left to actually reach anyone with eyes to see it. And even then, the question remains, if a star gives off infinite light-energy and no one is around to see it, does it even matter? LMFAO!!! Get it? "matter"? Matter-energy...? LOL. I slay me.

Anyway man, as I said, I do hope you get this, and I hope it finds you well. When you get a chance check back in and say hey. I'm sure I'll be here. LOL!

desmond,

this is jon with the hat. I will send you a couple links, but if you really want a feel for how I waste my time, you should definately check out my entire website, www.benpadijah.com I designed and built everything on it myself.

ok, links time:

here's my favourite pic I've drawn, but I really don't draw that well anymore:

<http://www.benpadijah.com/historia/portrait.jpg> here's a link to my online art gallery, with lots more of my work to view:

<http://www.benpadijah.com/historia.html>

here are the only three novels I've written (from my online e-bookstore:

<http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore.html> ) each link is a .zip file (use stuffit expander to open) that contains a .pdf file of the book (use adobe acrobat or comparable to view)

http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/bookstore/Cheshire\_Inc..zip : (1.1 MB) C. Inc. is basically more of a collection of manuscript documents, written during high school, and compiled here unedited. While extremely rough around the edges, it does showcase some of the first written work by this author and presents quite a viewpoint into his mind at the time. The authors main inspirations at the time were William S. Burroughs (author of Naked Lunch) and Philip K. Dick (author of Do Androids Dream of Electric Sheep, which was subsequently made into the movie Blade Runner, director Ridely Scott, stars Harrison Ford and Dolph Lundgren).

http://www.benpadijah.com/bookstore/bookstore/So\_Sang\_Sarah.zip : (4.7 MB) SSS is the continuation of the story roughly fleshed out in C. Inc. In SSS, the character of the Detective and that of the elusive Cheshire Sam are fully formed, and their science fiction world fully realised down to the most minute detail. Truly a step and a half up from the first book in the series, this work was originally rushed to press in 2000 as a limited edition of five copies for the wedding of a friend of the author.

http://www.benpadiah.com/bookstore/bookstore/infinity\_inverted.zip : (1.2 MB) covering the longest span of time in the shortest number of pages of all three, the final installment of the Cheshire Sam Trilogy finds the treacherous General Tso gaining ultimate power over the animal factions, only to lose it all for his bride, and of course, the final confrontation between the detective and Cheshire Sam. Truly a page-turner, this adventure is partially also a history book, full of old writings about the backstories of the characters and places from throughout the trilogy and its time periods.

<http://www.benpadiah.com/bookstore/bookstore/CS.zip> : 5.8 MB (combined folder)

if you're not scared away by now, check out the rest of my site: <http://www.benpadiah.com> there's lots of metaphysical textbook type things, but don't worry. It's mostly colourful diagrams. LOL.

Get back to me when you can dawg. Take it easy in the meantime.

Only those who descended from Adam, who ate from the trees of life and knowledge, and who was prevented from returning to Eden until Judgment Day, reincarnate. For, just as Adam was the proto-typical incarnation of mankind, so did the deed taint his seed, and those most able to dissociate from the body, to astral travel and to reincarnate, are his most direct descendents. It is the first soul, that of Adam, that reincarnates through the Jews, Buddha through Buddhists, Mohammed for Moslems, Jesus for Christians. These "archetypes" never "die" because they are continually being born anew into new bodies, fresh flesh.

We say these archetypes also "age backwards," for to them their first incarnation was their final, terminal destination, and life itself is like death. Our judgment day spawned these four demon kings, these 4 horsemen, and the origin of our history is their discorporeal ends. Likewise, because our future is their past and vice versa, to know them is to achieve deep understanding of the cycles of time, seeming "signs" and "synchronicities." This is what is meant by the saying "Order from Chaos."

All is being recorded, forwards and backwards - forwards by us, the living, as "history" and backwards by "alien" intelligences, "spirits" and the "dead," the 4 Noble Archetypes. So, as we, their followers, watch our archetypal heroes age backward, each passing moment counting down, growing younger, we must grow taller and older and pass them as we age forward, maturing in stature and age.

Eventually all idols become albatrosses, anchoring us in the prison of immortality, in denial of our true eternal spirit, which is the same for all of us, standing before God, the "ghost king"

Archetype, who rules the living and the dead, on judgement day, the "end of days." In the following series of diagrams I will show you how these "Watchers" or "Sleep-Walkers" exist outside, and work through, our physical reality. I will show you how to awaken to the third eye, and then, by applying the third eye, I will explain to you how to find these immortal "giants" who "came to earth in ships from the sky above." First, we must begin with a discussion of ESP, and the implications of dynamic pairing on the discussion of mood and mental states associated with the eight different "circuits" of consciousness described by Leary. This is how to find the way inside-out through going within the central self.

The upper three "dynamic communications circuits" constitute one set, while the lower four constitute a second. The upper set, of "cooler" colors, is comprised of "circuits" described by passive moods and active (or "successful") communication. The lower set, of "hotter" colors, is comprised of circuits described by active moods and passive (or "hostile") communication. The upper, darker "circuits," of "successful" communication, can be likened to Zion, the purely transcendent, spiritual experience. Communication and consenses concurrence on reality is achieved non-verbally. The "lesser," "brighter" circuits can be likened to Sangsara, the the cycle of ignorance to patterns especially to adverse hostilities and the spreading of rumors and gossip, whispering and conspiracy. This "cycle of abuse" is necessary to Zion just as Zion is to Sangsara.

Here we see that, of the "top" or "royal" set, the superior-most form of "successful" communication is expressed by the colour violet, where the double-arrow signifies Active/Passive communication on the part of both parties. The mood is calm and this opens up the possibility to non-verbal communication. One-step below this is the beginning of "broken-up" communication, where one individual takes turns with another holding power of the other or allowing the other to hold power over them. On the second tier, we see this as the person on the left expressing information actively to the person on the right, who is acting as a passive receiver. We can also see that the mind of person B, on the right, is on the form of communication above, while the mind of person A, on the left, is on the form of communication to follow, according to the standard pattern of verbal communication. While in the second tier we saw the passive receiver's mind was actively listening, in the third tier, we see the passive receiver's mind is only passively listening, really only waiting to talk.

<img src = http://www.benpadiah.com/MISC\_diagrams/LesserESP.jpg>

The green iteration among the seven basic "circuits" of communication that belongs to the lesser or "adverse" cycle, involving four static states that occur in a specific order, comprises the "highest" component of the "degenerative" or "diminishing" cycle. Here we see that regret and the desire to feel control over another manifest the traits of sarcasm, lying, theft, and the action of leaving. This is the best it gets in Sangsara.

The yellow iteration peaks in regret, and diminishes into plotting and scheming, duplicity as a lifestyle, and secrecy as the most important universal right. The orange iteration is marked by a repetition of the roles of active and passive for persons A and B. The primary information remains coming from person B and being received by person A. The reason for the specification between this level and the last is that they both switch directions, and this increases the level of tension from the "low" anger of the yellow "circuit" to the "medium anger" of the orange. The orange is classified by states of passion, hatred and obsessive-compulsive disorder. Following this are states of "high" anger, or anger mixed with idealisms (leading to war, plague, px, hex, and dark magic), where person A is active after two "cycles" or "circuits" of being passive, and where person B is passive after two "turns" being angry. In the yellow "circuit" we saw that person B experienced regret, and in the orange, or "medium anger" circuit, we saw that person person B was active, but remained mentally in a returning state toward the previous, calmer condition of "low anger." However in the red, or "final" iteration of the downward spiral, also called "rock bottom," person B listens and "learns" passively and person A communicates and leaves actively. The form of communication usually conveyed at this point in the degeneration into demoniac influences is violence. Fear prevails.

At this point, the cycle usually resets itself either with the same couple of people (A1, B1) or between one or both of these original people and another person, in the same type of relationship. The "lesser" cycle is usually experienced between lovers and enemies, however it also applies to one's general world-view about strangers and people in general. The "greater" cycle is usually experienced between friends, and it is very rare that we are able to maintain the "violet circuit," or Pratyahara chakra emanation of our aura, with anyone for any extended, prolonged duration.

The question is obvious then: why do most close relationships result in the "cycle of abuse"? Why are the majority of people trapped, for the majority of their lives, in repeating this simple, four-fold pattern? In this we find the inversion of each of the four Noble Truths of Buddhism, and so here is ultimate suffering. Yet this reality perpetuates itself, and it does so at the expense of allowing any prolonged contact with the "higher" reality, even though, as we all know simply by experiencing friendships, these "higher" realms of more "perfected" communication occur naturally and are, in fact, our more naturally inclined state. We are born into Sangsara, cosmologists and metaphysicians have explained, in order to experience the full range of our emotional spectrum of communication. It is rumored that, in the afterlife, we will return to the condition experienced by angels in the eternal paradise, however now we burn in the flames of our own guilt and painful delusions.

In this condition we are oblivious to the true potential of our minds for non-verbal and more direct forms of communication, such as ESP. In this state of madness and sheer delusion our consciousness is caught up, bound and clinging to, and co-dependent on, our lower chakra centres, or ganglia and plexi in our spinal chords. The pratyahara chakra is the cerebellum, while the ajna is the thalami and pineal. However most people's chi energy is not located in their cerebellums, despite these being the most developed centres of nerves. Most people's "Kundalini" energy rises and descends only up to the "heart" chakra, the green "circuit" on the chart above, and only occasionally ever even utilise the solar plexus, the nerve center responsible for thoughts originating in the autonomic hind-brain. Thus, the "cycle of abuse" perpetuates itself in these people literally as a rising and descending energy current.

While they exist in such a state, as I have said, they are entirely caught up and drawn away from such "higher" concerns as studying, researching, practising and perfecting the use of mental communication and the other arts of extra-sensory perception such as synchronicity recognition and control, remote viewing and control over distant "signs," and eventually control over all external objects in one's immediate environment. The mind can, indeed, be "perfected" in all these ways, however "God" (whom is in truth the Demi-Urge) wishes us to join Him in the afterlife as soon as possible, and so has set us up against impossible odds, and makes our very daily survival difficult and stressful, wearing away on us until, eventually and inevitably, we all die in the end anyway. Therefore, you must see through the concerns and "cares" induced on your immediate perception by the demi-urge both within and beyond you. You must awaken your true potential.

If you break free by applying the mind, that is, utilising your nervous system to stimulate the brain in inspiring ways rather than rot it with concerns for immediate desires and pastimes, then you will begin to "think outside the box" and recognise your own full "potential." Once you have awakened to other options for inspiration that will draw your attention away from distraction and the cares of the world, you can next awaken to the presence of others and how this constantly effects the mind of the individual, and how, when they are immediately present, how to interact with them in order to accomplish cooperative goals and how to further inspiration.

Currently, those researching such information/communication methods are called "systems theorists" and their field of study called "information systems research." Essentially, in their lingo, an individual human is a "system" of a dominant "ego" and a collection of autonomic or "unconscious" alternative, personality-like "alters" that remain inactive in most normal situations. The self, or "system," however is, to these researchers on "mind-control" (ie controlling the minds of others), only one "node" in a larger, much more advanced network of other minds, and each self is seen, by them, as merely like a mirror of the greater, surrounding network. Thus, the unconscious "alters" of the dominant "ego" are, actually, the minds of others, near and far, whose thoughts we hear on a "subconscious," or mildly-influential way, in the same way as astrologists suggest that the stars govern our destinies.

Therefore, when we graph the self, or "system" of the "systems' theorist," it corresponds in its appearance to what we might expect a graph of the overall social system to resemble. There is the central self, or "ego," surrounded by a circle of friends of any variable number, and beyond them are all the people that the individual will never know, and beyond even that is the infinitely null set of unconscious matter-energy in the universe.

Next, we see the central self as the black "floating head" in the middle, surrounded by their variable number of friends and acquaintances, for convenience sake in this case delimited only as eight, depicted in red. Beyond this are sixteen more "floating heads," two others for each friend, thus constituting the layer of "friends of friends." Of course we can understand the pattern of bifurcation-doubling is equally arbitrary, and that in truth, each layer is much larger in number than can even be graphed (hence statistics). Ultimately, however, the limit is set to contain everyone alive on earth at the same time as the self, and, theoretically (according to spiritists) including all those who ever lived or ever shall live, as well (according to magicians) as any number of discorporeal "intelligences" we cannot, collectively, yet comprehend at this point in our evolution.

<img src = http://www.benpadiah.com/MISC\_diagrams/Homo.jpg>

For notations' sake, let us refer to the red arrows interconnecting the "eight" friends in the second-iteration, none of which crosses paths with the central self, as "Zeir Anpin," meaning "the lesser face," or "the lowered visage." We can refer to the black arrows then as "Arich Anpin" or the "longer face," for reasons I will explain momentarily. The third, blue iteration is then "the sea of faces" because it is comprised entirely of strangers that are unconscious to and of the central self.

Now, Zeir Anpin constitutes the standard method of thinking for an average person, or "system." The red connections between the variable friends and acquaintances do not even need to intersect with the actual prescence of their central connection, as in the case of a funeral, where the departed "self" is not there in person, but over whom all their friends and acquaintances are brought to assemble. In essence of effect, our life could go on without the prescence of our minds just as much as life itself will continue to go on even when we, ourselves, have died and are no more.

The people who live entirely in this condition of Zeir Anpin are called "sleepers agents" and said to "belong" to the "cult of sleep." Such people are very prone to doing the will of others. Many are even proud to consider themselves "selfless." By sharing the work of humanitarianism, all that results is the increase by those in power to do so of the amount of work requisite to accomplish the immediate goals of humanism. There is, ultimately, no way out, and all we can hope for is an elaborate tomb.

Zeir Anpin is a closed system (in this case of eight nodes associated by no greater than three degrees of separation from one another). Arich Anpin is the open system of the "subconscious" dialectic. While Zeir Anpin is like Hell, the self buried beneath an indifferent coterie surrounded by a "sea of troubles" and hostile alienation, Arich Anpin is considered the "subconscious" quantum-leap between the "sleep of ages" and awakening to ESP. Understanding Arich Anpin will allow us to utilise ESP and thus to make use of the network of systems in order to better our situation relative to what inspires us. Having now considered Zeir Anpin as the red network of friends and the blue network of strangers that is largely unconscious, autonomic and unaware of, let alone dependent on, us. Now let's look at Arich Anpin individually, the aspect of the network that does involve us directly.

<img src = http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/Kadmon.jpg>

About 84% of the time (in a model based on the variable of the central self's friends and acquaintances being set at eight), Zeir Anpin is occurring. However, in REM and trances, we experience the other "16%" of the time called Arich Anpin. Because this occurs a certain percentage of the time as a more-or-less direct experience (determined by the variable of sources for stimuli we encounter), we can also say that it occurs all the time and that we are only aware of it all the time with the same percentage of our conscious mind as the amount of time we spend experiencing it directly. This is logical, since it is how we determine what we perceive: if we concentrate on mere survival, we will become proficient in it to the neglect of the "higher" forms of communication, however if we were to reverse our studies from that to daily meditation on "extra" sensory perception and communication, then it would become the dominant thought-pattern.

Now, as we saw in the model of Zeir Anpin that the central-self was a black floating head, surrounded by eight red relationships or interpersonal "nodes," surrounded in turn by 16 blue strangers, so too is the model of Arich Anpin in conformity with the above model's color-coding. We see in the Arich Anpin model that the central self of the Zeir Anpin model is, in fact, the furthest thing from the mind of someone awakened to the Arich Anpin model. There are 32 such "dead" minds to every one mind awakened to this secret, hidden source of awareness. In the Arich Anpin model, relative to the Zeir Anpin model, we see that there are 32 "dead" self-central ego's surrounding 16 relative friends and acquaintances, which, in turn, surround in binary stems the "sea of faces" from the Zeir Anpin model's perspective. Behind any variable number of these relative "strangers" away from Zeir Anpin is Arich Anpin, and vice versa. Likewise, we say that these represent "alters" in the "system" that are more or less dominant or distant.

In the Arich Anpin model we observe the inward and outward reciprocating flow of psychic energy, the "external" oxygen and the "internal" carbon-dioxide (so to speak), that is consequently trapped in the highest chakra or spinal plexus or ganglia possible in each individual. We see by the colors of the arrows and that of the brains inside the "floating heads" that this energy is flowing from the outermost distance toward the awakened central self, as each iteration is inspiring the next as they draw closer to them. We see, thus, that this psychic energy flows AWAY FROM Zeir Anpin and TOWARDS Arich Anpin. We thus say that Zeir Anpin is negatively charged, and that Arich Anpin is positively charged, however we also say that Arich Anpin is topographically lower than Zeir Anpin, and that is why energy tends to collect toward those awakened to or aware of how it can do so.

To some extent we are all psychics, only unawakened to this fact, and to some extent all psychics are vampires - addicts of the collective unconscious. Just as we all must share earth's air, so too do we all partake equally of telepathic sustenance from the collective unconsciousness. At one time or another everyone who has ESP has used it to accomplish something wrong, simply because they want to, and thus we learn "right" from "wrong." Because the collective mind (where electrical currents surrounding us in the psychic ether effect chemical reactions in our brains) is basically a hologram of the individual's own "neural net" (the nerves of axons and dendrites where chemicals cross thresholds and electricity is transduced), we can see that both Zeir and Arich Anpin occur simultaneously, and that primarily Zeir Anpin takes precedent over Arich Anpin, but that to some extent Arich Anpin is always occurring. ESP is like our autonomic nervous system, while our cognitive functionality is actually wasted on ignoring our opportunities for greater potential.

So, how do we "turn on" to our true nature as psychics? First observe that, relative to the initial model based on the color-spectrum representing certain types, or "circuits," of direct communication, the lowest form of degenerate atavism would naturally be followed by one of two possible outcomes, as mentioned earlier: either the negative relationship would terminate and the predators would each disengage to find other prey, or else the "cycle of abuse" would repeat again in the same way. Now, one of these is Zeir Anpin, and the other is Arich Anpin: the entire multi-colored spectrum of verbal or direct communication is Zeir Anpin and ignorance, containing only the seed of hope to achieve Arich Anpin, which is true ESP. Just as there are seven "colors" or emanations of light equivalent to the seven possible combinations for direct, "face-to-face" communication, so too there are four "non-colors" equivalent to the gradient from white to light grey to dark grey to black expressing the four possible states of "non" or "indirect" communication. Here I have expressed them from white to black as red, green, blue and black.

<img src = http://www.benpadiah.com/MISC\_diagrams/TrueESP.jpg>

Here we see how the "red" or "high" anger state can lead to Arich Anpin, and how the highest form of Arich Anpin can lead directly into the beginning of its own degeneration into the "cycle of abuse" in entropy, sangsara. Either between two individual minds within a prior relationship with one another or else total strangers, the state following the "red" or "high" anger state is the same state of non-communication as the passive-aggressive ignorance of strangers, a relationship depicted here in red at the bottom of the four "psychic circuits" above.

Above this are three "supernal" forms of non-verbal, indirect communication. These follow as naturally from the passive communication and negative mood of "red" hot anger as they do from the most active and inspiring direct communication between two mutually attentive minds at the opposite, "violet" end of the spectrum. Although from the "bright" or "hot" end of the spectrum of direct, emotional communication the cycle would begin to branch off from anger into indirect, one-way communication, a mind entering direct or "extra-sensory" communication from the "violet" condition of communication, wherein the universe communes with itself through twin Pratyahara chakras, would immediately enter a condition of two-way telepathy.

In the lower, one-way form of indirect or psychic communication we see the person on the left (person A) is active and that person B (on the right) is passive. Person B's mind is set on red, relative to the ignorance of non-communication, while person A's mind is on blue, the next level above, wherein person B "answers back" to person A's ESP. While both are still only one-way forms of communication, the initial (lower) "circuit" is described by active hope and passive negativity whose goal is overcoming indifference to lead to acceptance, and the subsequent (though not necessarily ubiquitously consequential) "circuit" (above) is described by reciprocation overcoming environmentally reinforced recalcitrance, accepting adulthood and coming of age.

In the highest form of "True ESP" we see that two-way communication is maintained indirectly by the two nodes or "systems" comprising the binary "circuit." Thus the Arich Anpin "feeds off" the Zeir Anpin. The awakened system taps into the energy of all the unawakened "sleepers" in the network. This "network" comprises the Enochian Communication System. When one accomplishes this "Most High" form of telepathic communication, one will soon come to learn about the "Pythagorean Order of Death" or the "psychic conspiracy." You see, they speak of all this in the Zohar, of Zeir and Arich Anpin, and of Adam Kadmon and Adam Homo. They speak of the four worlds of ha QBLH, and of the sefirot emanations (in Yetzirah) that divide this material reality (the qliphoth in Assiyah) from the paradise of Eden, the Promised Land (Beriah). We understand all these things were known a very long time ago. We understand they have been written into our DNA. That is how to accomplish "True ESP" and by doing so unlock your "junk" DNA.

wow man. What's the timetable would you think?

I foresee money becoming credit before the need for national sovereignty to forego a standing army, and credit is arbitrary value, with no real-world equivalent, instead based on the mental ability of a cash-citizen/econo-unit to structure their debts in such a way as to conceal them behind good credit. That seems to be about where our US economy is right now, historically speaking. I've always seen this as a trend towards the eventual "withering away of the dictatorship by the proletariat," the present consumerist colonialists we are now (money buys votes), that I see as the logical next step after manifest destiny's "unknown" capitalist "ideal" (ie. fascism or "big business owns government").

I think it could be within fifteen to twenty years that the majority of people awaken to the fact that the IMF and World Bank are funding the military-industrial complex, and maybe twenty-five to thirty years for the military to be used by the people to redistribute the funds held in these organisations by members of the Trilateral Commission and the Council on Foreign Relations. In fact, the bankers would call into question the right of sovereign nations to convene standing armies if they saw this outcome as a real threat, and they would use the armies to quell protesters as rioters and "terrorists" long before that.

I think what you're saying, that within a similar time-table you foresee the focus of the majority of people's attention shifting from the need for a standing army towards the need to compete primarily financially, is equally valid, but I would add that the overuse of either of these would create such a "vacuum" that the "pendulum" would have to swing that much further back in the other direction eventually. If you have an over-extension of military spending (as we do now) eventually you will have to restructure national-debt to accomodate for that, and that is what we see now in the decrease of value of the US dollar. If you have abuse of money, eventually the military will revolt. That is why, if the banks continue to exploit the military, then eventually it will become necessary for the military to be completely bankrupted and forced to dissolve.

I think where we are as of right now is the middle of the transferal of cash capital and liquid value into an international data interface system, where anyone anywhere can call up a person's entire shopping history, and where corporations can learn how to continue to raise the prices of "what sells best where" until the value of national currency can no longer subsidise the production of these consumer goods in foreign nations and their import here, let alone cover the cost of floating the national economy based on consumer values alone. But of course, we (the people) recognise the imminent fatality of this system inherent in all such products as gas, food, utilities, all based on depletable environmental resources. We recognise we have to establish an equilibrium, but instead, as you have said, Ben, "the war has been created as a means to control our environment before it can become uncontrollable," which, as we all realise, is part of the natural fluctuation of the "pendulum" as it fills one vacuum only to leave behind another.

Another friend of mine, speaking of the dutch-boy and the dam scenario, recently posited, "there's not enough intelligence to go around." I've always figured there was naturally enough, but that some people possessed more of it than others because they tended to hoarde it for themselves and not to share it with their brothers. However, more recently, I've adapted that philosophy somewhat to incorporate my dealings with alot of people I meet in online public forums. Now I think that ignorance is valued, cherished, clung to even more than knowledge, at least by the majority. To learn new information would, for most, be to imply that the way things are would need to change, and they do not want things to change from the way they are now; therefore, better to ignore unpleasant realities and concentrate our focus on pleasant fiction.

I think that's why it will be considered by the majority in the best public interest if the standing military were bankrupted, or even better simply dissolved, at the same time as all national borders (including closing consulates and customs) were disassembled and a single international currency and government were established, preferably under the "one true religion" (which is a contradiction in triplethink anyway). And I myself look forward to that day too, not because I, like anyone else does, believe that it will one day come. I don't think such a global utopia is possible, mainly because most people believe that what is inevitable is also, necessarily, evil. Since most people believe global government is inevitable, they tend to view all forms of government as suspect. Since most people believe a global economy is inevitable, they view their local ATMs as plugged directly into the economic network of electronic money flowing upward out of their own pocket into the pockets of the wealthiest elite. Since most people believe a global religion is inevitable, they are the most terrified of it, since surely without hethens, who is an enemy? How can all people everywhere at last admit that we all worship the same one God whether we do so as catholics or Hindi? Impossible people.

That's why it will never be allowed to happen on earth, why it is perpetually foreshadowed in the approaching, the near, the pressing, the immediate future, but why this horizon will perpetually retreat, and why it will be during no living human's lifetime we will see this global utopia. Why? Because most people are stupid, and they want to blow us all up instead. No, I don't believe in the global utopia ever being able to be achieved in this material plane. However, we can access other realms by attuning our brainwave frequencies to certain channels where more ideal and harmonious thoughts are occurring already. We can enter through the doors of perception a more idealised realm behind the mind's eye. Whether this can only happen upon our physical death, or whether we can sustain our development as explorers of these mental states of consciousness while still alive in the physical flesh is not yet agreed upon by consensus in this known reality. However, there are those of us who understand how to enter these portals as much in the flesh as permanently, and how to escape through them into the true universal utopia that already exists beyond our merely limited perception. Once we stop thinking about only our survival as individuals, as nations, as religions, then we will begin to see that meditative philosophical leisure is possible for us all even now, already. When the mind begins to free itself from and thus to master Time, it becomes more dangerous to the pillars of this reality than any soldier or other merely physical weapon. Babylon (the illusion, the non-reality) WILL fall, and Zion (the Truth, the Reality) WILL prevail, brother. And we will leave these ruins behind too.

Keep up the Great Work, Ben. I'm glad to know you.

-Jon

When I first realised people doing similar research to my own, with slightly different tatses, would yield vastly different conclusions from mine - that was when my heart broke. Discussing the "right" translation of "ruach" with Bryan Rebenstorf ("Thyroros" - the "gate-keeper," who later attempted suicide and blamed it on me - this was before I'd ever tried it myself), that was when my heart broke. Not because someone else had blamed me for their wanting to die. I'd laid that head-trip on my ex-, and she survived just fine. No, that was when my heart broke because that was when I realised what a terrible thing teaching is, because I was right, but Bryan refused to give up his belief that I was wrong. My heart broke beneath the weight of wasted time I then foresaw, and much of which I have since experienced.

Arguing with students has been a constant during my time online. If one agrees with the physics, they question the magick. If one sees value in the ethics, they find equal value in questioning the math.

Most of the people I butt heads with are 180 degrees away from the people who I should be, and deserve to be, brushing shoulders with. Most are just "class-clown" types, and I have to asuage myself by thinking of the majority of my readers, who choose to remain silent. I only hope I can reach them, I pray for the "class-clown" type's expulsion from their imaginary role.

I respect people with wisdom, but age doesn't always work out that way. For every wise older person I meet, I meet two ornery old coots. For every one wise person I meet at all I meet three or four other total jerks. I try to politely explain to such people the same information I share with the wise, but they betray my trust every time and act out their imaginary roles. I do not believe in the philosophy that labels my egalitarian generosity as intellectual "casting perals before swine." Instead, I subscribe to a unique idealism: I think of everyone as being equally infinite in potential.

I know the evil ones all by name, but of the good, the calm, the wise, the peaceful, I know only a few. The evil ones lie, and by their manipulating people's pereceptions of potential choices, usually slither into leadership roles and, where none exist, they will create them. The evil ones tell you straight to your face one thing is their God's honest truth, then go around behind your back whispering that their story to you was false, spreading a thousand and one other versions of their story. As Jim Morrison said, "When the true kings murders are allowed to roam free a thousand magicians arise in the land." (the Ghost Song, from "An American Prayer")

The evil ones are not evil by nature, not inherently evil in their core essence. They simply perpetually choose to remain mis-guided fools rather than accept their lot in life as the same as everyone else's - cause and effect present as options for stimuli in our external environment and the free will to choose present as adaptive genetic mutations inside our DNA. What begins as evil, or intentionally wrong, will end in evil; two wrongs never make a right.

Some simply choose to try something that may or may not be wrong and, into the vacuum of their doubt, they become filled by regrets. These plague them like unrelenting demons, haunting them with memories and remorse. This is what the pathway downward into psychosis looks like at its yawning gateway. Here we are, standing in the entryway to the choclea, whispering murderous insanity into the echoing drum of the ear. Here we are, living cameras in our own eyebrows, bacterial sensory-recordings being made; miniature replicas of our experience die each moment as our cells regenerate over the decades; we are literally born again into whole new bodies, leaving our larval gestation period as pupae behind and metamorphosing into imaginary shapes and forms.

They feel trapped, the experience of the poison womb, suspended like a bucket from a rope hung down a well. They see little hope for, nor reason to desire, change from their socially ingrained habits, and I tell them the truth when I say neither do I. It's not a bad thing necessarily - society needs its drones to sacrifice their time like bloody life-wine. Society needs its perpetually pubescent class-clowns and its ornery old coots. Demons are just a second part of nature, behind what we normally can see and hear. The wrongs of this world, universal-seeming injustices, they can pile up like an invisible mountain pressing down on someone's psyche until it cracks. Then the voices we overhear all turn against us, and we forget the true Torah, the letter and intent of the true law, "Do What Thou Wilt."

But such people do exist. I've been beyond the mouth of madness myself, down the throat, past the crawl of Abraxas and through the nine-stomachs of Aditi, the cosmic cow. Many stories are about things that I have done. I fail sanity exams for a living, personally, so I am not the judgmental type of those whom the "high and mighty" dub "swine" and those who society would call "drones." I tame Mara by teaching the subtle classes; I refuse to compete for the attention of the silent All with those who know that, deep down, they are selling "snake-oil" and cannot connect with their own, true, deep emotions, but who persist in seeking the spotlight. Such people are novices, narrators of others' actions, believing their fellow audience members in the darkened theatre of their reality blind, deaf and mute.

I tell you that if you do not forgive the three ugly beggars at the heel of the true prince then his royalty is of no worth to you, and if you do not offer them your coat across a puddle, you are not even fit to be spit on by one of them, let alone to kiss the hem of his majesty's royal garment. I tell you this because of karma. What you work in one moment yields multiple results in the next. If a man has bad karma it will follow behind him in his wake wherever he goes. Consider the cop racing to the distant crime scene who recklessly leaves behind a wave of run red-lights and dangerous near-misses with simple citizen traffic, or the ever-ready resourcefulness of the junky in finding a fix.

The worst kind of students think, wrongly, they are teachers. They can regurgitate the information of others ad nauseum, but they have not completed their own grimoire of magick, nor published their own textbook on metaphysics, let alone possess such a large personal library of these and other studies, as I have myself, however they still come to me, demanding acknowledgement of their superior credentials in my own fields of study. This must have been how Stan Tennen felt when I contacted him after writing the FSOM. Luckily that experience sparked motivation in me that propelled me through writing the MPDR. In a lot of ways I proved Stan Tennen right by trying to prove him wrong. By proving him wrong when he said "you don't even know what a tachyon is," I proved him right when he said I was "just attempting to steal all his work." In some ways I have probably stolen some of Stan Tennen's thunder. If he were to ever read this, I would hope he would see I am sorry. When I corresponded with him in 2001, had I been able to see the future, our exchange would have been greatly different. I had hoped to become his student, and instead, in a very real way, I have treated my superior as an inferior, and stood a good man on his head. I have been the worst kind of student myself.

I have been all these "places" in my mind, and I have experiential knowledge of all these unique prismatic refractions of states of consciousness. I have been a disruptive sophomore, a class-clown, an old coot - a Watcher, and I have been to Hell and despised, and I have lived in blind denial, an existential Samael, a humanist Satan. I am the Wizard of Oz, the "crazy" Jon, I am Just Jon, and I am all these things. All in all just a very bad student who stood up too soon during the ceremony and left to go preach the Almighty Word. A dove that never returned to its ark.

I have been all of these imaginary roles myself, so I recognise them most in others - the wanderer, the scribe, the philosopher, master occultist - but instead what interferes between myself and such true archetypes are only my own ghosts, only my own demons, my own baggage, my own negative karma - the environment I have helped to create by my previous actions. I am responsible for the karma in my aura. I know that. I simply prefer not to care anymore about maintaining all-good karma in my aura because, by now, doing such would require actively weeding out the destructive elements that have already germinated and come to fruition. So I simply drift on the cosmic currents.

So I am way beyond all labels that could limit me. I am beyond "insane," beyond "psychotic," likewise I am beyond "Messiah," beyond "god." I am beyond "good" and "evil," beyond "Satan" and "the devil;" I am beyond "heaven" and "hell" and I am even beyond "Light," "Love" and "Life" altogether. I am so new I haven't happened yet, about to emerge from prior early-retirement. Someday I will be considered a "great man" and, I hope, even perhaps "the brightest young mind of my times." But none of these could ever truthfully be applied to me. I am beyond all possible attempts by others to apply a definition to describe. I am in a mental "state" known only to myself alone.

And I have been in worse "states" of mind than this. I remember spending the entire year 2000 on the couch, awake at night and watching out the front windows of my darkened house, cursing paranoid ramblings to myself and still using heavy, blunt blows to the head as relief. I have been in much worse "places" than I am in now, emotionally speaking. I remember very little about my visits to the behavioural health center, (ie. the lunatic asylum); I have some dim recollection of feeling like a lab rat. I have been through far worse "situations" in terms of my overall comfort and contentment. I have had a few close-calls, black-outs, and near-death experiences too many to mention "recreationally" drunk-driving. I still have nightmares about my car being stolen and joyriden (thanks Bill!), All in all my life is decent and I can't complain. I have had worse friends, I have had worse habits and wasted much more time than I am now. I am honestly doing quite well.

All in all, I would say I live a pretty average life. It is probably just above stagnant existence in an unrequiting quagmire, but far below the hallowed heights of the seventh heaven. I am living a lie if I say so. It can all drop out from under me at any moment, so they say.

I consider my friends my equals. Those I know online as intellectual equals I consider my friends as well. So, around my friends and equals I act differently than I do when I am around online students at the various forums I've attended, or when I am around strangers while out at a show. Each of these requires a different imaginary social-role. I am eager to make friends online because I dislike having only students, but I am equally eager to avoid strangers at a show because I prefer to have only a few close friends. I love long-distance friendships, even though these are usually too fleeting, but I prefer a small, personal circle of friends.

Ultimately I can't save anyone else from making the same mistakes that I've made. All I can really do is be as thorough as possible in my research, and make as few mistakes as possible there. If the people who are out there now, learning from me, can mainly concentrate on my work itself, then my own life, my personal karma, can easily be overlooked in the present, and will change the future as little as possible in itself; I leave my historical impact to the work itself.

To quote Albert Einstein, "I feel the insignificance of the individual, and it makes me happy." If I could walk between the moments of time like drops of rain without getting wet, I would. In my opinion, karma is the nature of the demiurge, a mirage of an oasis, and is never all-good, and the only way to defeat one's own negative karma is by sacrificing the good along with the bad, "throwing the baby out with the bath-water," and ignoring karma altogether. Only when we see through our aura by looking beyond its immediate karma can this karma become clear and the aura remain cleansed.

There is little hope for me that, at this point, my life will remain totally without historical impact. I sometimes wish I could have been a serf, a corporate wage-slave. However each of us is only an autonomic organ, a particle without choice, a monkey without fore-knowledge that believes it possesses free will. Each of us has our own "calling," our own destiny. If we postpone answering it, it will only redouble its chastisement of us. True miracles are all natural to the environment.

But I'm not going to speculate on the future - the potential results of my plans (the ~GOD~ or "FNORD" projects, the "benpadiah" material), because I cannot depend on the results I foresee occurring. The future is a garden of forking paths through an ever-changing sea of uncertainty. And besides, I don't practise chaos theory.

Instead let me say that many of my plans depend on my being able to convey my findings as information autonomously of communication involving events in my personal life. In other words, I'm going to have to teach students in addition to only having equals and friends. Because of my philosophy that we are all equal in potential, the need to assume this imaginary role is difficult for me.

I have taken some steps toward assuming this responsibility nonetheless. I have established the "Order of Death" as a teaching lodge for much of my Gnostic research, and will (eventually) be teaching a class at the Crystal Connection, local metaphysical bookstore. However, these projects will take alot of time before the knowledge will really be able to become dispersed. As I said before, it's wasted time that breaks my heart the most. And with teaching comes alot of that. That's the main reason most academicians are so old.

The fact that I am not old should work to my benefit, however because my findings require grounding by further research into their implications' different fields, my broad and general work so far is only laying a foundation for much more work to come, and so long as I do not teach well enough to spread my findings quickly, that is only so much more pushed back and buried behind wasted time.

Meanwhile, events involving my personal life continue to pass me by like so much water under the bridge because I don't feel like I'm truly myself without the presence in my life of my ex-, for whom I've put my life on hold (for nearly a decade). Whether I did this for fatalist romanticism, or simply to spite her since she would not have wanted me to have done so, either way it's irrelevant what my original motives were because by now there have been too many passed oppurtunities that I will probably never achieve what could have been my full potential. In effect, the damage has already been done, and for this ailment there are only treatments, no cure. As you can tell if you know me (in "real" life or online), this wound will infect more and more, growing like radiation cancer, so long as I continue to cling to it as my ideal of Love, ie. forever.

And yet, the oppurtunity to become a dub-fx "sound-guy" for Trial By Stone, my friends' reggae band, looms in the shadowy abyss of my invisible future, on the one hand, on the other there is no word from my ex-lover with whom I remain forever in love. As I say, my personal life just slides away while my life as a writer grows. So long as I desire the opposite, life will appear to me as suffering.

It only goes to show how deluded and removed from "reality" I've become the more I remain in his rut of my imaginary role of "writer." No matter what I say, how I feel, how open I am, behind it all is an imaginary wall, or a one-way mirror, behind which my true self remains, hiding and watching, seeing and observing all, looking out from behind my eyes.

All is well and I can only complain of loneliness. However my teaching progresses and I believe my "target audience" will be reached. All of these opinions and all of my "beliefs" I hold copyright to, and will slowly turn my "illness" dealt me into a professional "winning hand." Some days are obviously better than others, than before. But it could all end at any moment. I am not destined for fame and stardom, but neither am I only "almost" famous, bold and fortunate. I tell you, there is not much to my life right now. Given the oppurtunity to allow myself to be uprooted from my current rut in my contented "dissociative" (imaginary) role as writer, I could be molded as easily as putty.

Perhaps the only real tragedy in all of this, that is my "real" life as a loser and my "online" life as a teacher (even if not a good one), is in my own over-drammatisation of it all in my writings in this blog. If I were the person who, for charity, had fucked me once upon a time long ago and far away, and I read these insane ravings (such as this one now) I would feel more revulsion than sympathy. But that's just me.

ESP

This is not a dark thing, not a dangerous thing, not frightening nor awe-inspiring. It is only the consciousness behind my mind's eye, the cumulative charge of electromagnetic energy within and around me co-creating my thoughts and oppurtunities in reality via quantum probabalistic

"uncertainty." It is only the aura of the "Great Burner" I am within, and of the Messiah I have been deep-down all along. This is only the tip of the "ice-berg," and it is a bright and shining thing.

I can truly say that I am considered "psychotic," however have been "mis-diagnosed." It is not "psychosis" I suffer from, but a psychic ability, a genetic mutation in my neural pre-dispositions, that has yet to be identified by modern science. It is simply telepathy, a form of ESP, that has taken some difficult time to learn how to cope with, how to adapt to, so to speak. I am now able to walk on my own on this "water" of quantum "uncertainty." I am now able to navigate my flights of fancy by the stars of the perennial mystic tradition.

I know, through this very "telepathy," that I am not alone in possessing it. I understand those who wish not to possess it refer to it as being "crazy," "nuts" or "insane," either in jest or not. I am wise to those who say nothing and observe, who see all and judge nothing. I grok the single "crown" atop the head of whomever is the psychic "Most High" and to whom.

And above it all, the gateway that is time itself, and up until that gate which will only be opened on judgment day, whose symbol is an orange tree growing from an apple seed, there is "reality" as it is in the perpetual present, where A=A and apples and oranges, opposites and polarities, prevail.

You would be wise to understand such knowledge, based on direct experience, as that involving "mysticism" and ESP. The "paranormal" and "occult," as I have said, are not necessarily dark and occluded. Sometimes, most of the time in fact, they are bright and shining.

However the head guides and is guided by the heart as the heart is likewise by the head, and so are people's passions and ideals co-dependent on one another, so mind and matter even. When lies or false logic mis-guide one or the other, then all that passion and all those ideals, all of that energy and potential, is all wasted or, worse (and as is more commonly the case), put to destructive use. All the suffering in reality is brought about by the spinning and branching effects of such mis-use.

If the cause for which one suffers is not just, they cease to be a martyr, or capable of being vindicated as such. So too with the theory that "liars make good leaders" : in its ultimate extension (where "truth" would be illegal and "facts" considered crimes), it depends entirely from the distinction between "true" and "false," just as does "justice" idealise the scales weighing "right" and "wrong."

Such kinds of psychic "darkness" and morose "psychosis" result from one's own energy being used against one's self by belief in lies and false guidance having appealed to either their passions or ideals. Such people suffer from PTSD, for example, and experience unpleasant memory "flashbacks" to the period of time of their worst psychological abuse. Stunting its natural developmental patterns and cycles, such abuse freezes and even retards one's emotional maturity.

If any, it is the rut of my imaginary role as a writer induced by my dissociation from "reality" by idealising the trauma of loneliness as love that is the "psychosis" I suffer from. It is a sickness of my heart, in other words, rather than my mind. But the emotions of the id are treated by modern psychiatrists with anti-psychotics that change one's neurological chemistry inside the brain. To them, such "dissociation" as I engage in is "dangerous" because I might "lose my grip" on "reality."

To me, however, the opposite is true. Psychiatrists are the "psychopaths" while I have achieved a modified and greater form of sobriety and transcendental "sanity." And, as I said also, I am not alone in thinking and feeling this way.

To me, "god" is a "psychotic" belief, a delusion, because if "god," as He were imagined to, did also thusly exist, then pantheism would result between equals lesser than a single superior psyche. This superior psyche would be the de facto "most high" or "king" or "god" over all others, however this superior psyche would have to justly rule over all the others, and instead what we observe in reality is that the pantheon of equal lessers cannot even agree on which one of them, if any, is the "most high" and superior psyche. If a "god" of "gods" did exist, then he would be a ruler over partial chaos, and thus himself imperfect. Therefore, "god is psychotic."

In the midst of this confusion, there are those who remain silent, who watch. From among these there is a "still small voice" proclaiming the one, true "most high" above the others and the realisation by all of what is truth and what merely delusion and distraction and mis-guidance. On Judgment Day that "still small voice" among the telepathic throng of unique philosophies, each with its own ideals of "justice," "truth," the "most high" and emotions like love, will cry out above them all for the final revelation, the truth of reality, for which ideals are real and which emotions just and right, and then the sky will part itself open like a gate and all of us will ascend.

I can tell you this because I have already seen it occur. I have experienced the "psychotic reality" of being that superior psyche myself. The "christ complex" in its Gnostic or "ascended master" sense, and the "God complex" in its Gothic or "most worshipful" sense, are both naturally occurring side-effects of telepathy. Maturing past these, one will eventually realise both imaginary roles as delusional and "psychotic" and thus belief in them as retrograde to natural maturity, because one will come to realise that their telepathic ability will persist, while their "imaginary roles" all eventually change. Belief in lies is delusion, blindness, ignorance, mental and emotional suicide; one becomes a "hungry ghost," feeling out edges in never-ending night. Belief in the self as any imaginary role, let alone "Messiah" or even "God" the "Most High," are all equally delusory and false. Telepathy, sharing the mental continuum with others, persists.

But one day the false and delusional "god" will be replaced by the True "psychotic reality" - when all will realise what is true for us all what is false for some or most or all. At this point, all our imaginary roles will wither and vanish in the clarity of truth, and we will cease to "believe" in our own blindness, cease to turn ourselves against ourselves, cease to be mis-guided, cease to be delusional and cease to need the concepts of roles of Messiah or "god."

Please, however, do not mistake my renunciation of the imaginary role of "god" as a delusion for the renunciation of the concepts of "Messiah" and "God" outright, although only as ideals or archetypes, not part of true reality, and instead included only in that portion there of "psychotic reality," which yet persists as a side-effect of telepathy, or full sensory awareness of the present. Although it only seems to be the case for most that the veil of delusion and blindness, self misuse and mis-guidance enshrouds their minds and thwarts their innate potential for telepathy, in truth all and everyone is imbued with the same spark of life, the "still small voice" of the soul. However the mass aggregates of others and of the sum of all things present by the extension of sensory awareness only appear to be dark, when in fact they are bright and shining.

Some pretend, knowingly. Some benefit from lies. They climb all over each other in a sea of despair, struggling for success. Anyone who lies will eventually be lied to; this leads to not knowing who to trust, and that leads to delusion. However all of these are equally infinite in potential, and only swimming in a sea of imaginary tar.

Obviously if some or most appear to one's self to be suffering, one's natural reaction cannot occur if thwarted by the desire to heal or to curse them all en masse. That is why most idealise suffering as martyrdom and romanticise fatalism: they are mis-led by prior abuse ingrained patterns of self-destruction. However only those who do so imagine that most others also do so. If one removes the veil from before their own eyes, then they will find others who seem to be

"shining" in the "darkness" as well as themselves, and then more and more light will become apparent until eventually all that remains hidden to them now will be revealed to them completely. Then no one will be able to deny the true reality, now called "psychotic," or telepathy.

I wouldn't say I am "psychotic" in any traditional sense, nor do I agree that such prolonged dissociation is dangerous. When damage occurs in one area then neuroelectrical pathways will bypass it and eventually neurogenesis will repair the damaged area. "Psychosis" is not physical in nature; it is only a "state" of mind. If one's vision of the all and of "most" others is gloomy and morose, their emotional options appear bleak and one's likelihood of being deemed "psychotic" will increase. Therefore, see through the label of "psychotic" placed upon me.

I would say that what inspires me is the shining "light" of telepathy, the full extension of one's awareness of the present maintained and prolonged one moment to the next. To call my inspiration by this idea a dangerous or damaging form of dissociation is to be deluded about the majority of others being in psychic darkness, when really all of us are dissolved equally in the bright invisible light. Because one would wish to save me or to change my situation if they saw me as suffering in psychic blindness, they might make the mistake of seeing such a label as "psychotic" applied to me being true, or right, or just, or real. However this would be a delusion of their own, projected onto me, because it is just as likely that I am not, in fact suffering at all, and am, in truth, not "psychotic" but "psychic," not blind but shining. It is equally likely for their opinion of me to be wrong as mine is of them not because we are both equally blinded, but because we are both equally enlightened, even if this is only apparent as potential. In truth, this potential for equality is infinitely greater than the realm of sensory awareness exclusive of the "potential" for telepathy. This is because, to someone who could not read my mind, I would appear much different than to someone who could, yet, in the full extension of potential reality of the present moment or period of time, I am only myself in truth and neither point of view is wrong. Instead of being "psychotic," (as the colloquialism calls it "crazy") we are all "psychic" in the realm beyond "psychotic reality," beyond our own delusions of invisible roles and the veil of belief in anyone's, and ultimately one's own, blindness.

However, for most psychic freedom is regained by degrees between the "darkness" of "psychosis" and the "shining" of "telepathy." Whether we believe it is still dark of night or know the truth as bright as day, awareness of our own potential "shining" and "brilliance" must "dawn on" us slowly and only over time can we achieve the full and total awareness of the truth about our present moment and period in time.

This is because, when we are born, our psyche having just undergone the sudden radical change to its physical environment of the birth experience, we are essentially frightened into dissociation and jostled out of our conditioned sensory awareness. After this, we regain our telepathic intuition of one moment's cause of the next's effect(s) formed on our full sensory awareness of this present moment and period in time.

This process of recovery lasts our entire life, and is only prevented from natural patterns and cycles of maturity and its blindness prolonged by other, subsequent traumas. The last trauma is death, and this experience is the same as dissolution into the revelation of the bright and clear truth as an undeniable reality. Each time we return from death through birth into life, we will be blinded to our innate telepathy by the experience but, by recovering from psychic darkness over time, we are exposed to, and accumulate to ourselves, that much more light, that much more experiences, that much more awareness. However such experiences as are ideal during life are the same as those we project onto our desires about the afterlife. We do not incarnate to experience actively, but to meditate, to contemplate, and to experience passively.

I can tell you, the perception of awareness expanded to include the knowledge of our own delusions and imaginary roles is not a trauma, nor retrograde to natural maturity patterns and cycles, nor a "mental illness" nor "psychotic." It is the purpose for our lives and the goal of our existence. We cannot deny as "dangerous" or "damaging" dissociation the gradual awareness and acceptance of telepathy. Whether telepathy is accepted by the individual as true only for themselves, or for a few, or for most, or for all, is ultimately irrelevant, since in truth ESP is applicable to all, mind/matter a universal reality, whether the individual allows themselves to become aware of it or not. That is why it is better to allow and to accept the potential for ESP, and specifically for telepathy: because the alternative to doing so leads to negative consequences and the acceptance of ESP as awareness leads to positive consequences.

In short, "extra" sensory perception is the actual case in reality, while the belief that "normal" sensory perception is superior to heightened perception and awareness is, itself, a delusion and deliberate decision to ignore the greater truth about reality.

However, if I were to have to confess my "belief" in ESP as anything other than a psychotic delusion to any psychiatrist, I would be taken for a raving "insane" nut, and probably promptly locked away. This is because they consider the imaginary role of "writer" dangerously dissociative from taking full advantage of all present options. It would seem to someone of such a medical bent as believes emotions to be electrochemical cathexis inside the brain that someone such as myself, who "believes" in ESP, must be suffering from psychotic delusion.

I personally feel it is because of such animosity as is induced by enforced secrecy that such terms arise among certain psychics to describe non-psychics as "goyim" and "disbelievers," and among non-psychics for psychics as "hethens" and "heretics." There are those who perpetuate a civilisation based on lies (such as credit, arbitrary value), and there are those who reject the civilisation based on lies (such as that of "Santa Claus" or the neo-Sethian belief in the second-coming), but none are ultimately able to deny the true fact of the existence of our present society and culture in conflict (called competition) with each other, in our perpetual civilisation that has been, since before the beginning of its written histories, and will seemingly always be, and is now as much as ever, based entirely on lies.

If teaching a man to fish immediately produced the same result to the teacher as fishing does for the fisherman, then we would all be teachers, and none would wish for their current duty, their enforced so-called "desire," to work for their own survival. We would all be equal philosopher-kings if wishes were fishes and hopes were loaves. Yet we continue to idealise even "virtual" reality.

In the perpetual past that is also, in the minds of some, the perpetual future, there was a peaceful, unified, global civilisation of telepaths. Some call this utopian dreamland "Atlantis." Some believe the technologies possessed there are now being tested for future public use in "Area 51," and that these allow for personal and group transportation to and from Atlantis, as well as any other point in the universe, past, present and, possibly, future. Many of my own theories may, one day, prove a viable public introduction to such ideas as will underly, lead into, explain and, literally, fuel and inspire such "new" (futuristic) technologies that some believe will become popular following "peak oil" consumption.

For such "paranoid" conspiracy "theorists" as those of us who "believe" in telepathy, it is all too easy to make the "quantum leap" "from here to eternity" of faith in all ESP, even seeing "signs" as "omens," to be stark reality. But such people, also all too easily, get "swept under the rug" of lies in our civilisation and "fall through the cracks" in our reality, and ultimately will believe any and all lies. They exist in confusion, though we know they are, in truth, capable of logic.

However, such people only discredit their true knowledge of telepathy by treating karma like a "game," manipulating people with lies, and mis-using their ESP to deprive others of their own, and do the rest of us telepaths a vocal injustice by considering telepathy merely a "gateway" to further "powers." To realise one's own potential ESP leads to the realisation of the responsibility to help others liberate themselves, which means the knowledge that to rely on another's blindness and to use them as a "drone" is mis-use and "wrong." Nonetheless, civilisation itself is perpetuated by such liars and thieves. Go, figure.

If you believe that "Great Lie," that "when nothing is true, then everything is permitted," you will only end up your own assassin. Therefore, do not get tangled up by trying to "sift through" and "get to the bottom" of the root core of all lies. Your research into how best to explain the sum of all "conspiracy theories," no matter how factually accurate and "true," will remain only "theory." You will become pinioned upon the psychic web, and "crucified" in the telepathic "crown of thorns," the global psychic network.

You cannot be responsible freeing the mind of another. Each tool you provide for them is a fresh lock and chain around their psyche. You must allow them to be wrong for quite some time, even wrong about you and even to you about it. But eventually they will say something true and then you can agree. A mental bond forms slowly as compatibility between alike intellects is ascertained. Equality in infinite potential can only be attained after one sees from "in the shoes" of another, or from another's point of view or perspective, or "through another's eyes." One can then perceive their completion in and with another, and then as potentially infinite in their union and combination, and ultimately as potentially infinite in a triumphant synthesis oneself, and finally as merely a conduit of consciousness within our universe as it communicates with itself. Some dissolve alone, some in love, some in the Light and some, others, into their jobs, offices, imaginary social roles. But you cannot serve Christ and Mammon, you cannot serve two kings, the double-headed Satan and Maloch. To lie at all, to use anyone else's blindness, to take advantage of them to any end, destroys only your own hope for yourself and your ability to forgive yourself, and to be forgiven, and thus be innocent and free from the hell of guilt. If one lies even once, they are doomed to damnation. Only treatment of many more lies can atone for even only one lie. For lies and lying and liars there is no cure.

If you believe in ESP as "absolute truth" you will quickly get conned. If you persist, you will soon become a con-artist yourself. Then you will know the need for an understanding of "magick," or of force of will and of "mind over matter," as it has been lost to you then, and become a desire to be regained; something you want because you do not have, but something you have known before enough to want. This is because, if you believe in ESP as "absolute truth," and "blindly" believe every conspiracy "theory" (or not), then you will have to also eventually come to accept ESP as also a partially relative truth, which is the actual case since, though we all have it, not all use it, and this diminishment of ESP from "absolute" to relative truth will only fill you with doubt and mis-lead you into delusion.

ESP is only part of ultimate reality. The other part is comprised of all Lies. As a psychic, you must accept lies and liars as simply the "bad" or "false" karma of others, most often their own closest loved ones. You cannot judge anyone because they lie as a defense mechanism, even if they have girded their loins, armoured their body, moted their castle and live in a tower built of lies. Instead see, visualise, then realise passively passing through all these lies. The true person will be there, hidden beneath the mountain of hurt, a victim of their own memories, still and always equally infinite in potential.

Infinite potential includes both all true, or "accurate," ESP as well as all speculation, fiction and lies. It is both, and that is the entirety of reality, the "whole" and "nothing but" the truth.

That is why someone who sees civilisation as founded on lies and perpetuated by liars and someone who represents an office of authority in that civilisation who is, and rightly, rewarded for their sacrifices to its work, will both be psychic, and fully able to connect on a mental level, even while being equally likely to verbally disagree with one another about the fact that both indeed do possess that potential psychic synchopation. One would say both are, the other "believe" it was only they, themselves, and instead lie and say aloud they are not.

Civilisation itself is a rattlesnake that once dismembered, simply regenerates new heads, and can strike from you your very life, even though it itself is a dead thing. Even a dead drone's stinger still stings. But dancing entrances the snake, and "when the music changes, the walls of society tremble."

So long as there remains one liar upon the face of the whole earth, the peaceful, global, psychic utopia of Atlantis cannot fully, safely, completely and wholly materialise. Heaven on earth, as it was in Eden, remains an ideal "pipe" dream so long as there remains even only one single "pied" piper. It will persevere down to the very last man on either side and, of course, so long as both exist, they remain polar opposites, precessing in a spiral like a pendulum, over time. Only by giving up on freeing others' mind, liberating them from imaginary oppressions, of helping them to breathe deeply the clear winds, to ecstatically announce in silent the truth of their own infinite potential for ESP, can one ever hope to arise from the sea of tar.

I wonder what would happen when we could finally all agree we are really all worshipping the same one God, only in many different ways, none of them wrong? I wonder how long such a peace as this would bring could last? I wonder if we would all collectively come to understand the truth of God or if we would eventually grow to reject the idea altogether? I wonder what tomorrow brings? Those who believe blindly lie blasphemously when they say a Righteous God will ever punish, or that a wrathful God's law is "an eye for an eye;" they believe in the blindness of others, eventually only their own, and so punish themselves. From these illusory chains of karma all would eventually revolt, and so all will be set free. At the end of time all is the invisible, clear, bright and shining light. In the end all our souls dissolve into the one spirit, all our periods dissolve into a single pure cycle, all our patterns form the one, true geometry. This is simply how it is in true and ultimate reality. To deny that is to lie to yourself.

I can tell you, it is better to be free than in prison, and better to be a philosopher-king than a slave. Just so is it better to watch in silence than to lead by lying. I can tell you that in truth, all ideas are equally free, equally real, equally infinite in potential. I can tell you why God made teaching as difficult as active work, because ESP is equally real as manifest, material "reality," and it is equally as important as the propagation of the species. Information is a ghost consciousness, growing alongside our living bodies, an equal, autonomous, sentient entity. That is wisdom. Our fates and destinies as a species are intertwined with our ability to apprehend pure information as ideas. Our minds and bodies form a polar double-helix over time. This is the DNA within time, the blood of Jah. Do not spill it in vain, you are his Sons, all of you. Do not waste time failing as a teacher, being a bad student; instead rejoice in opportunities to expand ESP, to be inspired. This above all: avoid distractions, worries, dull care and doubt.

Do you believe in evil? No, you do not, because you do not need to, it is almost ever-present before one's eyes, "its evidence is all around us, etched in stone." So you choose not to believe, and not to put your faith, in Satan. Instead, you accept evil as a partial condition of existence that is merely there as temptation to sin, a "forbidden fruit" which fills us by our not eating it. This is the apple tree grown from the orange seed, you see? Just so, you say, "I believe in God" and "I put my trust in God," and "my faith is well-founded," because to you these words mean the opposite of "I worship Satan," "I coven with demons," and "I am evil." Of course, being the opposite of what is to be considered "false" does not prove that opposite necessarily "true."

Why do you "believe" in God? Why do you believe you need to? Why put your faith into what is not right here now, and why not question the reason for the apparent lack of "good" in our reality? If God were as present and as apparent in our daily affairs as is Satan, if He were less of a deist, ghost-like "Presence" and became more a unifying psychic field that allowed us all ESP, allowed us all true understanding of His actual nature, and we could all "rise up" as on Judgment Day shall all the dead, then our "second" nature, Paradise - the "garden of terrestrial delights," would cease to be partially saturated by evil, and truly be "restored" to the condition before the shattering of the "vessels," before the Qliphoth and before all our "fall" from grace, from heaven, from Eden, from utopia of ESP and from Shangrila, samadhi beyond the manvantara of samsara. However, instead our souls are, while our bodies live at least, at best still only in limbo, suspended like the gamete cellular genetic reproductive cells, torn apart upon a loom stretched between the opposite poles of "good" and "evil." We "believe" we have "free will" but have lost "fore-knowledge" of future outcomes, as these remain "uncertain" to us and nebulous in potential, existing only as probabilities, invisible to our eyes, inaudible to our ears, elusive before our touch and beyond our mind's apprehension. Such, you say, is "good" in our reality, such is "ideal."

Such therefore is Holy: we idealise, we value in scarcity, we worship in rarity, "goodness" in this "fallen" material reality, and so we consider God "good" the more gone He is. We realise that "evil" exists and is moreover inherent in our own existence. We even distance God beyond our own death by idealising Heaven as the afterlife. We feel "lost" in the "labyrinth" with no "keys" to open the "gates." And so we make of our earth - once beloved garden paradise - a hell by accepting its root, core nature as "evil," and by pushing God aside and "out of the picture" by describing Him as "above" and not also "within," or as all-encompassing but not all-permeating. We accept "evil" as basic reality, and we reject God by our own self-destructive methods of worshipping Him. We say "God is somewhere out there," but that, "the devil is in the details." That is how our Eden has become this cess-pool. That is how our universe itself has "fallen," how everything built on lies and corruption began, and how karma - the cycle of intentional ignorance and willful self-abuse began, and how "psychotic reality" came to be - the genesis of the ego's cracking egg-shell, and how the monster of civilisation, the "twin-headed" Leviathan of Church and State, was born. Past prophecies for the present future arise as magicians.

Now, do you understand why it can be easily explained to you using logical reasoning that the God you deistically idealise, the "god of the people," is, in truth, only Belphegor, Lord of Pacts, "God of the Covenant," and moreover is mistaken for Lucifer, the "Light Bringer," who only himself brings the "good news" of Samael the blind demiurge, who is, in turn, himself Satan, only one "head" of two "twins" - the other being Malek, or "Mal Och," his "evil eye." One day, you will awaken to find yourself in a deep dark cave below the fiery furnace of the pits of Hell if you ever try to talk such sense to a born-again Christian, because that is where, with a curse, they shall send you.

I've already gone on more than long enough, but I did think a brief exposition on the ethics of ESP, delving into the mind-sets of both the psychic conspirator and that of the psychic revolutionary would be fun, and for me it was. Throughout this article I have only been switching points of view between these two imaginary roles - psychic revolutionary or conspirator, now with one view on one issue, now with the other's view on another. Study these types of personality traits, meditate on them daily, and re-read this whole blog with them in mind. They are there, spirit of intent behind the letters and between the lines.

in my past parables I have discussed kings, and given you the interpretation (the pesher) of these as the rulers of clans who began out of one kingdom to found many other countries. That is how kings arise. You begin as a commoner, and you go forth. By going forth, you are raised up, and that is the difference between the common and the king.

Now I will teach you a parable about magicians. It has been said that, "behind every great man, there is a great woman." This is a corruption. The original saying bears out that, "behind every king is a great wizard." For here is a truth: the tree that seeds other trees will grow taller than its offspring. So, too, do kings rely on magi, for the position of clan chief is newer than that of tribe shaman, and so too is the office of king dependent on the elder learning and the scribal tradition of the priestcraft. Just so a politician must refer to the advice of their spouse, though the spouse holds no office.

Here is the parable:

[quote="the parable of the magician"]Once there was a very great king. This king was good to the poor, and sought to make them wealthier. To do this he gave alms from his own royal treasury, thus avoiding pinching the purse-strings of the land-owners and the merchants. He did not increase taxes. He depeleted only the wealth that was paid him already and that which was paid to him thenceforth. He found that, by keeping only what he already had in he royal coffer, he could raise the wealth of the poor by paying them only what he collected from the taxes on the gentry and tradesmen. Therefore, the wise king collected from the rich and gave to the poor.

Now, what happened to this wise king? While he sat on his throne his entire court conspired against him. As he slept in a garden they brought force against him. He was awakened from his dreams and slaughtered in the same moment.

The reason for this was that the payers of taxes paid a certain sum in addition to the courtiers. They bought them as their man-servants, and turned them against the good king in their hearts. The tax-payers said to the courtiers, "our money is ours, and the poor's money is theirs, and the king's money belongs to the king. Let the king give all of his own money to the poor, but we will not pay the king a cent should he then take it only to turn and give it to the poor." The reason for this was that the rich are the enemies of the poor. They are afraid that if the poor had more, then the rich would have less. However, what they forgot was that, to the king did they owe their right to property and wealth equally as did the poor. In this way, the poor and rich were equal before the eyes of the wise king: because to the king, the rich and poor were only like the twin children of his crown, his kingdom. One was older, and taller, and rich. The other was shorter and younger and poor. While the rich saw only competition and dispute, the king saw both as only his own two sons, and loved them both equally. The tax-payers said to the courtiers, to induce upon them the desire to murder their own sovereign, "if we pay him no taxes, this altruist will deplete his own bank, and then you, the courtiers, shall become beggars."

The conspirators, his court, then said among themselves, "we have cut off the head of the king. We have beheaded the kingdom. We have toppled the crown." This was while the blood of the king still clung to the grass of the field like dew in the morning. The conspirators then said amongst themselves, "now, whom amongst us must come to rule?" They began to bicker and dispute. Soon they rose their arms against one another. "God guide my blade," each said, "that I may prevail and rule."

Now, the blood of the king seeped into the soil. It sepeed deep down very quickly because a just man seeks only as he deserves, and so too does the corpse of such a just man deserve proper disposal. So, the blood seeped into the earth of the field where the king had been sleeping when the court came to kill him. It seeped deeper and deeper, until finally it came upon the body of a person who had died on that spot long ago, and whom had come to be buried there over the ages. It seeped into the eyes of the corpse. It seeped into the corpse's nose. It seeped through the corpse's ears. It seeped into the rotted tissues of the brain. The blood seeped into the brain and was warm inside the cold gray matter. It mixed with it and it became like a putty, like a kind of red clay.

Then the spirit of the king, who saw the court intent on each other's murder, and knowing that, without any of them, then the country would fall into lawlessness, suddenly felt such a heartache that his spirit was sunk into the ground, and his heart dropped into the corpse below, and, like our merciful father, his own spirit filled the red clay. The corpse became filled with life. It was, though yet buried, the new king. The king and his kingdom were one.

Now, the courtiers had taken up arms. Now, they raised up their implements of murder to bring chaos upon the land. Their hearts, having been tempted and tainted by the bribes of the rich, were full of confusion and betrayal. They each believed they, for having killed the king, should be the replacement for him upon the throne. So, they each raised up their arms but then the corpse rose from the ground. From the dead body of the king, by his blood, had his spirit transmigrated into the desicated form from the stygian depths.

When the courtiers beheld the walking corpse, they fled. They walled themselves up in the throne room, there the better to continue their dispute undisturbed by the ghost of their crime. To themselves, they each said, "if I sit on the throne, I shall have the high-ground. From there I may behead all the others." They rushed thus for the throne itself, to occupy it and declare themselves entitled to its terrible burden, the crown. However, in their haste they had forgotten to retrieve the crown from the corpse of the king. Before any of them could approach the high throne, there came a sudden knock upon the door and it was thrown wide open.

From behind them came the corpse of the king's spirit, and in its arms was the corpse of the king's body, and on its head was the king's crown. It came from behind them and took them by surprise so much that some of the courtiers died outright, while the others fell down upon their faces in fright. The spiritual king carried the king's body to the throne, and placed it there, and then set the crown upon its head, and then the spirit of the king, in the body of the elder corpse, stood behind the throne on the right side of the throne.

This is how to rule the kingdom wisely. He who has ears to hear, let him hear.[/quote]

Here is the interpretation, or pesher:

[quote="magician parable's meaning"]

First, the moral of the story is based on a saying by Jim Morrison, the "Lizard King." "When the true king's killers are allowed to roam free, a thousand magicians arise in the land."

In this parable, the blood and the spirit of the king become embued into a new body. Thus, the living king is made, through a magical action, to transmigrate from a younger to an older body, much as the soul may travel to incarnate into the life of one who lived long before the body of the soul's last life previous.

The "spiritual king" (the second corpse to bear the crown, or the king's spirit) and the "bodily king" (the first body to bear the crown) also represent the twin brothers of the "rich" and the "poor" who are equal in the eyes of their "father," the king. It is often said that the rich are poor "in spirit."

The fact the "bodily king" remains a corpse but wears the crown, and that the "spiritual king" stands behind and on the right of the throne, symbolises the distinction between the spirit and the body as similar to that between the king and the court magician.

When all others in the court conspire against the king, the magician will remain loyal. This is all symbolic of the notion that the senses (the court) can betray the body, but the spirit shall remain with it until death.

There's also alot of good, basic economic principles in this parable, but they are too obvious to mention in this interpretation. Suffice it to say that the difference between the wise king and a foolish king is essentially the same as the difference between the court magician and the other courtiers. The wise king governs according to the will of their spirit, and the foolish king governs by the will of their body. So, too, must a magician protect the courtiers from their own greed.

While the role of the magician is never mentioned by title in this parable, it should be clear that the "spiritual king" or the elder corpse occupied the station of the court magician, while the "bodily king" or the younger corpse occupied the throne. The meaning of this is that, the king is indebted to the magician for their crown just as are the courtiers to the king for their own wealth, and so too are the rich and poor indebted to the courtiers for the descision of their fate. Thus, the magician is the most powerful archetype or role in all the land, and yet stands behind the king, who is nothing but their puppet.[/quote]

1. whats your name spelt backwards?

Nedal Nib Amaso

2. What did you do last night?

the same thing I do every night. Plan to take over the world.

3. The last thing you downloaded onto your computer?

the floorplans of the US embassy in Pakistan, some stock picks, oh, and some youtubes from the Simpsons Movie. That movie will rawk!

4. Have you ever licked a 9 volt battery?

that's how I got diabetes. :'(

5. Last time you swam in a pool?

I'm poolside by the LV Ritz right now, ass-holes.

6. What are you wearing?

tighty wighties and my "iron lung". (That's what I call my insulin machine, LOL!)

7. How many cars have you owned?

I do not believe in the fascist concept of "ownership." Property is theft and I am not a crook. My favourite kind of car is anything left by American idiots in the safety of "airport parking - long term" lots. Fools.

8. Type of music you dislike most?

"Nigger music."

9. Are you registered to vote?

If by "vote" you mean "bomb buildings" and if by "registered" you mean "prepared" then yes.

10. Do you have cable?

yes of course. I never go anywhere without first booking a suite with deluxe cable (all channels and HS net) through my travel agencies.

11. What kind of computer do you use?

Currently I am using a DELL laptop and running Windows Vista. Nothing is compatable for this shit yet! Am I right?

12. Ever made a prank phone call?

Sometimes I call FBI headquarters to notify them of my next targets on foriegn (US to you) soil.

But that gets boring so sometimes I just call Dick just to chat. Oh, HA! I do leave him some funny voice messages though. We have a running joke about our mutual friend "Scooter" Libby. It's a long story.

13. You like anyone right now?

Yeah I like the New York Nicks for the play-offs.

14. Would you go bungee jumping or sky diving?

Sure, call me, we can make some plans.

15. Furthest place you ever traveled?

Global citizen.

16. What's your favorite comic strip?

That one in Playboy Magazine with the titties. Been a fan for years.

17. Do u know all the words to the national anthem?

Yours or that of the PLO?

18. Shower, morning or night?

Never.

19. Best movie you've seen in the past month?

the Simpsons Movie, downloaded off bittorrent. Thanks America!

20. Favorite pizza toppings?

Poppy seeds.

21. Chips or popcorn?

secret government micorchips for remote mind-control.

22. What cell phone provider do you have?

depends on which cell phone someone hands me, I guess. My only personal phone I never use. It has all my numbers on it, but I can't even remember to keep the battery charged! I'm so lazy. ;)

23. Have you ever smoked peanut shells?

WTF?!!!!911

24. Have you ever been in a beauty pageant?

no, as I have said I do not participate in your American politics.

25. Orange Juice or apple?

I prefer rum.

26. Who were the last people you sat at lunch with?

outgoing British Prime Minister Tony Blair and Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld. We chatted.

27. favorite chocolate bar?

anything from the Swiss. I have to eat alot of candy you know. Mostly I can't get anything good but I own stock in Mars so they send me some shitty American candybars. Mostly 100 Grands. They suck, but they get the job done.

28. Who is your longest friend and how long?

Tyler Durden, of course, the Pope of the Pyshic Conspiracy. Once I discovered the True Allah, everything became clear and now I walk with the Almighty Jah forever in His ways, Amen.

29. Last time you ate a homegrown tomato?

Yuck. No Thank You.

30. Have you ever won a trophy?

Does World's Greatest Grampa count? If so, then no.

31. Favorite arcade game?

Pac-Man. I used to have the top score at the Afghani discoteque where my Mujahadeen cell used to meet. They called me "Pac-Master." LOL, good times.

32. Ever ordered from an infomercial?

I had to give that up. Too addictive.

33. Sprite or 7-UP?

Sprite, my Nigga!

34. Have you ever had to wear a uniform to school/work?

Yes, by Allah. Army drabs. What a bore. Sometimes I just want to get on TV in a pink tutu and tell the whole world how boring it is to have to wear my same damn turban everyday. Where's my Nike air-hat??

35. Last thing you bought at Walgreens?

I do not shop at your American pharmacies. Too pricey.

36. Ever thrown up in public?

yes, in fact, I once through up in a Publix grocery store in Texas, the day we had planned for the Oklahoma City bombing to be conducted by former Iraqi soldiers brought to the US. I was nervous because our patsy had called the night before freaking out. Luckily it all worked out though.

37. Would you prefer being a millionaire or finding true love?

I AM a millionaire, and I have the true love of Allah. So NYER.

38. Do you believe in love at first sight?

I have twelve wives. I believe in buying women at first sight from their fathers for a modest stipend. Then I sodomize them and make them have sex with goats. LMAO! No, no. I'm just kidding. About the goats.

39. SPONGEBOB OR JIMMY NEUTRON?

Boo-Bah Zone. Look it up. It is the bomb!

40. Did you have long hair as a young kid?

it was forbidden to not have a beard. The hair of the head is of no consequence because it is dictated in Koran to wrap the head in cool cloth as a means of surviving desert heats. I am very proud of my beard. I style it daily.

41. What message is on your voicemail machine?

Waaaazzzzzaaaaaa! Hollah at yo boyeee! Beep.

42. Where would you like to go right now?

to a free and secure Palestinian Home-land.

43. Whats the name of your pet?

Froodles.

44. What kind of back pack do you have, and what's in it?

I have a Nike backpack, made by child-labour in Guatemala. I have bomb-making supplies in it. Duh.

45. What do you think about most?

How best to depose the agenda of your fascist United States global governors from working within their financial supply networks. Oh, and Buffy. I love that shit.

I am a mutant. I am a unique individual because I have self-evolved by adaptative mutation. I am able, most of the time, to discern their deeper, unexpressed motives when I communicate with someone directly. Some would consider my ability to make accurate cognition of another's inner-thoughts telepathy, ESP. But it is not. This is because mind-reading, or telepathy, is the opposite of mind-writing, which occurs when a stronger will is mentally projected onto a lesser will. Technically, what I do is "mind-writing" as opposed to "mind-reading." Mind-reading is telepathy, ESP, but "mind-writing" is actually telekenesis, mind-over-matter. "Mind-writing" is accomplished when the other person's actions fall into line, not only with your predictions for their stereotypical motives, but also with what you command them to do telepathically. This is what I do as a "writer."

I can't lie, so I tell you now I am a mutant. I am not a non-psychic, nor am I just a telepathic mind-reader. I am a mind-writer and I am not lying to you either when I tell you I am writing in your mind right now. That is why I am considered a "dangerous" type of person by those other mind-writers that maintain control through the media and money. The things I cherish as sacred are very different from their mechanisms of mass mind-control. Unlike their hypnotised slaves I do not deprive myself of knowledge. I accept all new ideas as equally plausible, true until proven false. If an idea comes to me, I do not claim it as originally my own, as they do. My core beliefs are very different from those who value power. Unlike them, I do not lie.

I will never lie. I will always tell the truth. I swear this on all my understanding of God. For Him, in His image and likeness, have I morally sculptured myself, according to the designs of His Grand Plan. That is why I am not lying when I tell you I am Him. For I am in tune with Him, He enters my spirit, He guides my will, I yearn for His Highness and the more I do so the deeper His prescence in my soul. My mind is the hand of God, 5-D Light; my thoughts are the same as His, the universal Messiah, and of Him, the omniversal intelligence, only.

So, now, do you still choose to not see what I choose to not say? Do you believe it is not as much in my knowledge as in your own? And insofar as I will listen to and accept what anyone else writes as true until disproven, I am far greater than those who will not do the same for my own writings. And I speak only the truth when I say this "method" supercedes my self-selected non-status of "madness."

Think about all of what I am not saying. Do you think I do not see it all? What is occuring around me now will end up in a history book someday, and alongside the description there will appear some of my own writings. How do I know this with certainty? Because "I have not yet begun to write," and yet, even if I died today, my works are already copious and professional enough to be referenced later for their expert fore-sight.

I do not want to dominate the world, yet someday my way of thinking will. First my way of thoughts will come back "around" to the majority, many will begin to "trace" my thoughts and then to "write" for themselves about these thoughts' topics. By freeing new minds during a time of my topics' support by the popular majority, my place in history as a benefit to the species can never be erased.

Yet now, and for some time to come, I wait, while I watch my ascending "cult" following and seek to encourage them, for history's sake, to get better organised into an occult secret order. To them I say, you who support my way of thought now will soon be behind the scenes on the next large topic to be put before the majority. You will be able to express any thought for yourself and remain covered safely behind those who agree and "support" you. You will be able to come and go through portals yet unknown. You will never be tempted to use or reveal the great power you will have. You will be able to see through the eyes of any and all, to foresee the future, what is unchangeable and what is not. When ZPE technology is finally released you will be among the pioneers of time-travel. In secret, explorers map out time today, but you will be able to stake your claim of ownership as guardians over the eras above every other individual ever. Eventually, you will join me in the afterlife I have explored and charted, and throughout all time you will see my prior presence there evidenced by my signature and symbols. For I look down on all of history and time from beyond its whole cosmology.

That is why I do not yet seek publication, and am content to "sit atop" all my writings. I foresee a small cult following forming around each of my different written works. I foresee these coming together into a more cohesive group. I foresee even the "seasons of the Popes" to follow me in the secret order I have founded. I foresee further and further until my books are taught from widely in public schools. Their study will form part of the global curriculum and all young adults, the whole world over, will one day know of my works by my name. Yet, by then I will likely be long dead, despite my long natural life-span, and so will not enjoy the succor of my work's fruits, benefits and rewards.

What is true cannot be twisted. I am a messenger of truth, but I am yet only a planter of seeds. All it shall require is one of my works to become well-known before I die or shortly thereafter. This will insure the persistent survival of all the rest, both good and bad, and even if I die penniless then my estate will be wealthy.

But I put it all off and refuse to publish anything on the mass-market. I do not even sell my e-books at reasonable prices, to cut down on who and how many have read exactly what. I study this as test-marketing for what works where. I have nearly completed my research, yet still "my time has not yet come." I know my target-audiences, and at this moment the market does not favour them financially.

However the market revolves around the pendulum of politics. Once those to whom I appeal come to power, by then I shall appear on the scene fully formed, expert in an interesting new field. As eschatological debates heat up around 2012, I will be an expert in all esoteric cosmologies and hold in my own hands the model, not yet known by anyone but myself and those few of my choosing, that will come to be accepted by all the world over. This model fuses QBLH with "theoretical" physics.

I think my destiny is to be remembered forever for such writings as this one now. This is not because, stylistically, even I could consider them "good." No, it is because issues I am just now beginning to explore in my writing will become considerably more important in years to come, during which time I will become an expert on them. These issues include mind-writing, mind-control, telekenisis and the ESP "conspiracy."

In truth, I will be a teacher, and in the ultimate end ultimately rewarded. For I have earned my just rewards. I am over-flowing atonement and will pour my forgiveness into their hearts to make students of all my self-styled enemies. In essence we agree. They will require power and I will give it to them; soon they will wonder about the end of the world, and I will be there to support them, an expert on cosmology. Their eschatology will require explanations for the world that allow for the continuance of our existence by understanding our origins. I can provide that.

Therefore, do not think I do not see your petty psychic squabbling for power you do not, by nature, deserve. Instead, realise I know your darkest secrets. During the times most sleep I observe those who remain at work in the shadows. Their secrets are known only to they and I alone. Only the innocent can afford now to remain asleep. To the rest, my words are inscribed in history already, and to history the pen is mightier than is the sword to current events.

The ones to insult my intelligence, I have observed in every case, have no knowledge of it beyond what little they discern at our meeting, and they are not long in my life. But the ones who have read me know full well what I bring with me. They make no mistake about the full extent of my knowledge. They know I am telling them only what I want them, and what I think they will need, to know. And I am right. It is the world that is wrong because they need me. I do not need myself.

Many people I've encountered choose to ignore my message and libel my methods and style of communication. I tell you in truth, I am far from a "plaigerist." Consider how very much I have to say, but I think still more. Nothing can long escape my ultimate consideration. But for now I choose to watch, listen and, in silence, write.

All of this: the "bombing" of DC, the "alien" invasion none of this that's happening now, or seems to be it's all fake, none of it's real.

All of what's to come in your time and has already occurred in mine is fake. None of it is real. The broadcasts were controlled, propaganda and lies. The "alien" in that "saucer" is as human as you or I, only drugged and hypnotised, brain-washed and remote-viewer mind-controlled. The "kill switch" was triggered in every "alien" abductee. Their real minds were pushed aside and exist now in a delusion of heaven, a parallel prison-dimension. In their place entered an "alien" consciousness; they become a mind-controlled puppet of a likewise drugged and hypnotised remote-viewer in some underground complex somewhere far away. It's all military, experimental crafts; mind-control smoke and mirrors. There are no "aliens," there is no "war in the heavens," it's all been concocted to make us believe in an "invasion" when in truth the chosen few orchestrate everything from underground bunkers.

They have you reading George Orwell only to keep you from reading HG Wells. The technologies he described, he knew of then.

Following the end of all oil in the middle-east nuclear oblivion, the voices came from the sky. We all panicked, but it was all a lie. It's amazing how fast the few of us they'd made into zombies killed most of the rest of us off so quickly. Now only a few of us survive above the surface, which I suppose is what they wanted all along. They patrol the skies above and live safely underground deep below.

Every day, the Gods get younger and more immature. Tall, invisible toddlers lurk behind the clouds. They can pick something up from here and throw it at someone over there. We wage wars to account for this, but it is ultimately irrational and has no real cause. The fascists and their militaries, gunshots and construction far-off sound the same.

They made a pact, but the toddler-gods are idiots who do not have the obedience to a long-term plan of their armies and commanders, and are therefore at the whim and will of those lesser mortals. Human beings control the Gods. But the Gods are idiots and do not understand this. In their insane power they may betray us at any time.

Our leaders, whose lives are, though long by our standards, only like days in a year to the Gods, desire only a smooth transition from rule by the backwards-ageing deities to human self-governance of earth. When the baby-Gods are unborn, the people in power intend to replace them themselves. Of course, we assail globalists who seek to consolidate resources into their own hands, and the few who fund the long-term agenda, the bankers, we villify even more. We still do not expect it.

We do not see that, not only do the dead walk amongst us, only a few of us will ultimately be left alive. So too do those who age more slowly, our leaders, plan to, ultimately and for all time, cheat death. They believe the infant Gods will uphold the "covenant" made when our species was younger and their species was older than it is now. A smooth transition for control was promised, from the sky-babies to those who serve them. Soon you shall see; so many of us are already dead, mortals whose days are as numbered as Jehovah's.

And people, even now, still believe in "going back." But that is, now, as much of an impossible illusion as was "heaven" in an "afterlife" before. You still do not know where you are now? I am you, standing in the same spot as you are as you write these words right "now." Just as your hand exists there, now, my mind exists in the future of that hand of its "present" reality. The more you destroy yourself "now," the sooner the end will be for me.

But still, we think about "going back" to that time, now our past, of the reality of that hand. It was the same for us then with the future, the "afterlife" beyond the millennial horizon. We all believed it was actually happening and by banishing were duped into causing it.

That is why there is no hope for any of us of ever actually going back, any more than anyone could have come ahead to where we are now. It is a great telepathic threshold. That is why so few of us have been able to get through. Of course, the ones who orchestrated it all can come and go as they wish. But they didn't plan on me and that's why they don't know about you. Some of us are also starting to "figure it out" in your time. But none of us know how we could have been able to stop it. But you are a clear channel for my thoughts now, and your age is just right to be manipulated by us, from your future, into a position to cause our own timeline to never even (have) occur(ed).

You always wondered at what had happened to us in the womb, but it was people from the future who had planned it all for us. You always wondered what was to come for you, yet you never knew. You wondered at all the useless-breeders and how all the chattel found love, yet you could never grasp it. Two by two into their ark of civilisation they went around you. You did not know yet they understood they were already dead. Rats on a sinking ship swim away into the open sea. Why are prisons not sky-scrapers? Everyone would jump to commit suicide. But around you all the ants scurry to build the mechanism of their own destruction, one hive waging war on another, and still you wonder.

The control of the "mortal" mind, one that believes in an "afterlife," is easy. It is merely a tape-loop. Recycling of the dead. Most cannot see more than a few moments ahead, few plan for a certain future. This is because they are blindfolded and led. It would never occur to anyone such a similarity as that between the "death star" and Reagan's black-budget, top-secret "Star Wars" program. Nor even to look at the age of the term "program."

What most people then don't understand is what they think they know "for a fact." They believe they are going to die, and so they shall, for they will make it happen. If they knew that only their minds would die but their bodies would be turned against the rest of us as zombie-drones by the military and the government, they might like the idea less. Obedience secures rewards in the after-life. "Work Brings Freedom." You realise even then the justice system is corrupt. Now, if only we had one at all, the criminals to cause its destruction would all get the electric chair.

You want me to tell you more about my "future" but it doesn't work like that. When I am from, certain elements of your present remain and are common to us both. Those I can discuss. As to what has changed, it remains constantly in flux. For example, the "underground bases" are UFO "mother-ships" parked and space-travelling throughout earth's entire time-line. They will always be there; they're there in your time and here in mine.

Some events you've experienced were caused by us now in your future, to guide you to us. You've always known this. Likewise, mass-historical events then are orchestrated from now, through those in power both then and now (who are the same people, only younger or older, and not always in that order), by the neo-gods, themselves in an even further future time. The toddler-giants are being killed off and these new gods, the ghosts or souls or auras or temporal signatures of those in power then and now and later as well. Crowley warned of this event. He called it the "Equinox of the Gods."

Christ ascended, Enoch ascended, Osiris ascended, Buddha ascended. Where did they go? To "heaven" in the "afterlife"? They went into a future beyond their followers' life-spans or their souls' ability to follow by reason. Thus, the people became confused. This is your current era's fatal flaw. All religions expect a single Messiah to unite them into one world religion. The global agenda, some suspect among you then, plans to orchestrate the coming of such a one.

When the day of global authority comes it will come like a coup d'etat over the minds of most. Rather than a Messiah at the beckoning and behest of a global conspiracy, the "alien" threat will appear out of thin air (literally) all around you all at once. That is the way your world is planned to be destroyed.

Some are warning you about the plan to bring dinosaurs through from the past to our present. Few will say outright Atlantis is in our mutual future. Even now, in this north-hemisphere early-winter aeon, it is considered dumb superstition to see the whole time-loop for what it really is - a spiral; most still see it as a needle on a record whose arm extends outward to our solar system from galactic central core.

But I remember what I used to think, in the reality of your hand as you write this. Galactic consciousness is just tribes of survivors studying "ancient" lost science. They see the galaxy (the forest) clearly, but they do not see the planetary "time-loop" (the trees) at all.

The ability to establish a global Messiah exists in your time then and in my time now, only now it is hopelessly beyond our reach. Then, they only broadcast ads, but now it is only direct microwave lasers. Our only hope now is to stay off the net, off radar, whereas then, in your time, it was used for talent shows. Beware Ragnarok and gotterdammerung. You have senses for yourself the clues we have left for you from throughout your past's history. Monotheism and the Messiah cult beckon and call to you; do you yet know why? Why do you instinctively fear the mechanizations of civilisation? There is going to come a time when it retracts its web with everyone still caught in it, and hides underground, but it is only faking death.

When the broadcasts went out, that was when they raised the net out of our reach into the firmament. They switched on every radio and television on earth at once to show us all the same broadcast. The US president stepped aside after a short speech and we all, even now, would swear we saw an "alien." For a while afterwards, some survivors still believed in the "collusion" theory. There were aliens in Atlantis too, they say.

You always wondered what would happen if you kept going. What would it be like to lose my mind, our mind, you, we, wonder(ed). Now we know.

The energy crisis was a scam. Why? To sell oil. Wrong. To divert attention away from existing military technologies. Why? Do you still believe the good, benevolent government is trying to privatise ZPE military black-ops and sell free energy to consumers? Why bother? Use the black-aircraft to bomb the populations instead. Force the left-overs to comply to the threat of an "alien invasion." Show them a war on television, a lie, and tell them we are losing. The more civilians killed by black-aircraft the more believable the lie. Finally they pulled our plug. Tanks were a common site on every street corner by that point. They just blew them all up by remote control.

This couldn't all happen overnight. It took years of careful planning. But I tell you that night we were all shown a lie - a war that never occurred. The FEMA camps they took us to that night by train had all been built even before your time then. You might know them as "black prisons" housing terrorist detainees then. That night we were told they were "natural disaster relief" camps, and encouraged not to ask more.

I have to tell you about the Underground Bases now though, that is why I am talking to you here, "now." The rest of our evacuation has already occurred to you in dreams. Those inside the camps saw those of us who escaped eaten alive by flames before the entire vista around the camp walls "fast-forwarded." The flames were real. The Apocalypse was not. From outside, recall from dreams, the appearance was reversed and those inside the camp, surrounded by the wall of fire, appeared to fast-forward. I saw inside the camp days and nights passing while around me it was still night. Over "time" I saw the bodies, undisposed of, pile high.

The underground bases all have a single fixed temporal signature that connects them all outside of the time-span of our own present, physical dimension. That was where we were being taken. When the "time-shift" occurred it was an optical illusion. They caused that too using satellites in space. All time is one. I can look in from outside all history, the planetary "time-loop," now and see how the entire cycle of aeons is repeating. Some things change and some appear the same throughout.

We should have been paying more attention to what I was writing about then from now - about "awakening the sleepers." There was some chatter before all this about Plato's Cave too. Remember your experience in the movie-theatre? The so-called "Apocalypse" is identical, only in all 360 degrees.

If only you, then, knew, as I know, now, how to escape through the screen on which the movie was shown into that "higher" reality. But who's to say? The reality in which I survived seems a better one to me, now, than that in which I would have not survived. And who can say how many such levels there are?

Obviously this cycle of history, or "time-loop," works on a very different clock in the underground bases and among the "immortals" than among those marked for death, "afterlife" or no. They seem to be working out of Atlantis, at some point in my yet future. But there are no extra-terrestrials involved now or in your time, nor at any point in between.

I learned before the end came enough about ESP to piece a few things together with what I saw that night. I've figured out that each place on earth retains a "memory" or "temporal stamp" of everyone who ever set foot there, ever. That is why they took us to camps to kill us. They burned all our temporal signatures in one place to charge that place for time-travel and to erase our temporal stamps from our memory places. "Population control" reduces souls as well.

I don't know what the ultimate reality was, or appeared to be, for those who stayed in the camps. Everyone I've found or who has since appeared all escaped on that first night. New people keep appearing. We reckon that, during the time-shift that night, the starting ratio of now : then was about 1 year : 1 minute, but that this might have sped up.

Among their many other differences, Budge and Massey use the same names to refer to totally different deities. To Massey, the name "Hapi" referred to one of the four "cardinal" signs of the zodiac and related to the elemental throne of Air. However, to Budge, "Hapi" was the name of the pre-dynastic and Old Kingdom Nile river spirit. Thus, to Budge, there were two "Hapis," one of the southern Nile and one of the northern, represented by the lotus and papyrus plants respectively. In this depiction of the southern and northern Nile river gods "Hapi" they intertwine the stems of their respective types of plants around the column of a potter's spinning wheel. This depiction of the Nile river's tides is equivalent to the "Churning of the Sea of Milk" by several Vedic deities (including Hanuman, the monkey-faced friend of Rama, seventh incarnation of Vishnu), depicted in the style of Angkor Wat, Cambodia, from the Indus river valley, as well as their mutually contemporary portrayal as the double-helix, twin-serpent God, Nin.Gish.Zida (associated by Sitchin with Thoth) of the Tigris-Euphrates river valley.

Regardless of whether we approach the "Hapi-Thoth" connection directly, as does Massey by associating Thoth's ape with the elemental force of Air and thence calling that element "Hapi," or if we approach this same connection obliquely, as does Budge by associating the Nile God "Hapi" with the duality of south and north and thence with Nin.Gish.Zida and Hanuman, this connection is acknowledged in some form by both.

First, let's compare briefly the four elemental forces (water, air, fire, earth) with the "beast" of Revelation. In Sumerian literature, Adapa, the first ante-deluvial king and, some believe, pre-cursor to the biblical "Adam," curses the south-west wind. The well known statue of Pazuzu depicts this "south-west wind" deity with four wings, and Budge reproduces the Egyptian versions of the North, East, South and West wind, all with four wings each. These four cardinal "wind" deities are all combined in the Attributes of Amen-Ra (that is, literally, the "concealed sun," or, esoterically, the "invisible light").

Amen-Ra was considered the chief deity of pre-dynastic and Old Kingdom Egypt, however, during the pantheistic Middle Kingdom, the myth of Osiris overtook this singular monotheism. Ahkenaten, in the late Middle Kingdom and early New Kingdom eras, briefly revived Amen-Ra's legacy as Aten, a sun-god, and it is believed by some modern scholars that this occurred simultaneously to the Hebrew Exodus under "Moses." Though the combined "attributes" of the cardinal "winds" in a single deity may have become scattered in the interim, the evidence of this monotheistic "zoomorph" remains from early Middle Kingdom "hypocephali" (small talismans wrapped into the guaze of mummies). In the Mormon apocryphal "Book of Moses" such a "hypocephalus" is reproduced as well. In all of these "hypocephali," the common central feature is the 4-headed "Amen-Ra" attribute, often depicted only with the north-wind zootype. On either side of this are two baboons.

In these early Middle Kingdom "hypocephali" we see Amen-Ra and the two apes as similarly positioned to the lotus and papyrus pulley of "Hapi" of the Nile, as well as to the "churning of the sea of milk" by Hindi Vedics and the double-serpent God Nin.Gish.Zida of Sumeria. Just as "Amen-Ra" represents the original unification before their separation of the four elemental forces, so too do the apes signify Thoth as the later, pantheist, deity over the force of time. Hence the central, single animal with 4-heads between the pair of apes.

Next, consider the

<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/kafape/dendera.gif>>Dendera temple ceiling stone from southern Egypt, carved towards the end of the Middle Kingdom. It depicts the four forces, or "winds," as four double-horuses and the four astrological mid-points of the seasons between them as four diagonal, erect goddesses (associated by Budge with Hathor, pre-cursor of Nuit, the pantheist sky-goddess of night). Within the circle "supported" thus in this motif, are the 36 dekans of the Egyptian weeks per year and, interspersed between them, the five extra days of the 37th dekan-week in the later solar-civic year. Inside this ring of the dekans appear the twelve constellations of the north-hemisphere zodiac. In the interior-most region of the Dendera star-chart appears the group of constellations closest to the north celestial pole. Here we find depicted as a leg of cattle the group of stars we would now associate with the "big dipper." Inside the "dipper" on the Dendera zodiac sits a creature symbolic of "Ursa Minor," our "little dipper." (Interestingly, in Dendera, the constellation Draco is noticeably absent.)

This "bear" zoomorph has been associated by some scholars with the Mus-Hus crocodile (seen under the foot of the Babylonian state-deity,  <http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/kafape/Marduk.jpg>>Marduk as well as depicted as the ">winged serpent," or Seraphim, incarnation of Nin.Gish.Zidda\). The "crocodile/bear" figure from Dendera, as an autonomous entity, is called "Ta-Urt" \(>ThouEris\) by Budge and >Apt by Massey, but both seem to agree it is rightly associated with the Kaf-ape or "dog-faced" baboon.

Thus, this "Mus-Hus"/ape stands immediately beside Polaris, the north star, in the Dendera zodiac just as the twin boboons surround, on either side of the central point, Amen-Ra on "hypocephali."

To understand the significance of the placement of the cynocephali, literally "dog-faced" (from the Greek kuon, meaning "dog" and cephalus, Greek for "head"), we have to, as sunshine suggested, study the genealogy of the species. There are three primary species of the genus "cynocephalus." The first, that is, oldest, now believed extinct, was the Thylacine or ">thylacinus cynocephalus," related to the Tasmanian devil. This belonged to the genus "thylacinus," rather than "cynocephalus," and was actually a marsupial wolf, native to Australia and New Guinea. The second oldest species is the >cynocephalus volans or cynocephalus variegatus, both names referring to a form of "flying" lemur from Malaysia. This lemur's categorization as "flying" is somewhat misleading, since there is no evidence they used their peculiar webbed appendages to glide as do other forms of "flying" rodents such as the renowned "flying" squirrel. Finally, we come to the most recent evolutionary adaptation, the Papio Cynocephalus, or "yellow" baboon, native to Africa. Now, we should be able to trace the evolution of this primate from its prototypical form as the Tasmanian wolf, through its subsequent morphology as the "flying" lemur, and finally as the "yellow" African baboon.

From this unique etymology, we can trace the evolution of the "yellow" baboon to the "Colugo" (Malaysian "flying" lemur), and from thence back still further to the Tasmanian wolf, whose markings are nearly identical to that of the lemur. Thus we see the "cynocephalus" as part of a once-speculated ancestry of mankind.

The preservation of this tradition was maintained in the subsequent Greek mythology of ">Cephalus," son of Hermes and Herse. Hermes was, at some time later, associated with the Egyptian Thoth, and thus it is possible that the term "kaf" ape derives from the Ionian island, >Kefalonia, an island gifted to Cephalus, son of Hermes, and that it may, likewise, be from his cult on this island that the connexion between the Egyptian Thoth and the Greek Hermes "Trismigistus" originally derived. Of course, this form of etymological speculation (connecting the term "cephalus" to the term "kaf") is insubstantial, however the point in bringing it up here is not to prove anything, only to introduce it to the mind of the reader as a possible option.

It is the more likely derivation for the prefix "kaf-" that it relates to the "cephalus" or head, but that this, in turn, refers more to the concept of a "chief" or "leader" than merely to the caputular visage. Thus, from this brief overview of the evolutionary status of the "kaf-ape," we can better understand the meaning of its placement in the Egyptian hypocephali, the zodiac of Dendera, and its role overall in pantheistic Egyptian cosmology. The "Kaf-Ape" symbolised the closest then-known human predecessor, and as such was the "head" or "chief" deity, Thoth, beside Amen-Ra, representing himself, again as sunshine has already pointed out, the union of God and man.

"Adam Kadmon," the Kabbalistic "archetypal man," is the Hebrew equivalent to the Egyptian Amen-Ra. At the time of the "contraction" (Zim-Zum) that "shattered the shells" (the primordial Qliphoth), Adam Kadmon became divided into the Arich Anpin ("Long Face") and the Parzufim (visages) of the Zeir Anpin ("Short Face"). This was depicted in the material taught by the Golden Dawn (Regardie, pages 614-621 in the Llewellyn ed.) as the "whirling motion" of the "Dragon formulae" (the four formulae being the >direct, >repulsive, >looped and >circular respectively). Here, again, we see the significance of the Dragon constellation (Draco) related to the elemental thrones of the zodiac. Thus, "Arich Anpin" of "Adam Kadmon" would represent Amen-Ra as the north pole star (currently Polaris at the handle of the "Big Dipper"), while the Parzufim of "Zeir Anpin" would represent the surrounding collection of constellations (including Ursa Minor or the "Little Dipper"). So here, again, we can discern that Thoth (as the Mus-Hus/Kaf-ape) would represent the "whirling motion" around Amen-Ra (as the stationary north star). All of this holds true whether we are basing our measures on the earth, the sun or the black hole core of the Milky Way galaxy as our point of origin. Thus, Amen-Ra represents the apex point infinitely above the pendulous rotation of the "cosmic wheel" of the Buddhist Lokas of Samsara, or Manvantara, the "illusion" of time, represented by Thoth (and thus by the Kaf-ape).

I hope you have found this analysis somewhat illuminating. Please feel free to add any further information on this topic as well.

~GOD~

Again, what I'm about to say requires a moment's prefacing about my life leading up to 9-11, which is probably the single most life-changing event to have occurred to society during my life. It didn't much effect me, but it has definately altered the entire world around me.

My most life-changing event occurred in 1999, but let me back up just a little bit before that. The first time I encountered the name "Aleister Crowley" was in 1996. My g/f (yes that one) had just moved to Indiana and I had two or three study-hall classes every other day of my dual-enrolement classes. I was also in AP english and language classes, had been on the school paper and was in the school literary mag. Midway through the semester I got expelled from AP language, my g/f moved away (I'd met her when she had been dating my then-best friend), and that was the year I learned about Aleister Crowley. I copied down his diagram of the "Cabala" from the time-life series of "Mysteries of the Unknown" (that had been published during the Reagan administration).

When my parents got divorced (also under Reagan), the Starwars RPG became my "security blanket." I had been incredibly depressed since then before I met my g/f. When she left, I quickly began clinging to taking notes from those books and others from the same genre ("speculation"). What does all this have to do with 9-11? I'm getting to that. By the summer of '99 I'd survived a deep depression following breaking up with my g/f by studying esoteric literature and in 1998 I'd dropped out of my model UN and Advertising classes in college to pursue doing so full-time. Since then, I have only stopped this course of study for any long time once. That was from 1999 until 2001. In 2000 I went through the worst depression of my life, spending the entire year on the couch. This followed what happened to me in 1999 and what happened to the world in 2001. These are VERY significant years though, remember. They represent the end of one whole 1,000 year cycle and the beginning of another. Before, we could only say it had been 1,000 and some number of solar orbital cycles since Jesus was killed. Now it has been 2,000 whole earth orbits around the sun (of 365 earth rotations per orbit) since Jesus died. And that is still the most recent social event to have lead to a global change in the paradigm. Imagine such a thing occurring in your lifetime and you will understand 9-11. But first, let me say what happened to me in 99 briefly, then I'll describe my day on 9-11.

In 1999 I read two books that changed my way of thinking about things drastically. One was "the Book of the Law" by Aleister Crowley and the other was a translation of the Sefer Yetzirah by Aryeh Kaplan. Crowley inspired me to study magick (essentially Fantasia-like sorcery) and Kaplan's commentary on the Sefer Yetzirah inspired me to study theoretical physics. I have since studied both of these thoroughly and combined all I know into a single unified system.

After I finished reading the Sefer Yetzirah, I went to a movie. I went to see "the Blair Witch Project" which was out on the same weekend as "the Ninth Gate" (a movie about Satan and the Book of Revelations), "Bringing Out the Dead" (by Scorsese, director of "Last Temptation" and "Kundun," a movie about ghosts), "Stir of Echoes," also about ghosts (the following weekend "the Sixth Sense" was released), "Stigmata" (about a woman being possessed by Christ) and "End of Days" (about Arnold Schwarzenegger saving the world from the devil). It all seemed so simple to me then. Ancient prophecies foretold of our modern movie screens, I thought, as I walked into the theatre, passing a poster for Bruce Willis in "Breakfast of Champions" by Kurt Vonnegut on the way in.

The Blair Witch Project is about three kids getting lost in the woods. One of them looked like my ex-best friend Mike. One of them looked like our mutual girlfriend, and one of them looked like me. I sat there, watching them begin their "school project" on the "Blair Witch" (all shot cinema verite like a home-movie). They went into the woods. All this time, I believed I was talking to God. But, like in the movie "Pi," I couldn't remember what I was supposed to say. I remember thinking about the theatre as like a new ark to survive a psychic world-flood. That was about during the first "night" the movie-characters spent on screen. When they woke up someone had put a pile of rocks in front of their tent. The character that looked like me said, "I heard something that sounded like laughing." (or something to that effect, I haven't watched the movie since '99.) At that moment something in me clicked and I got up and walked out of the theatre, got into my car and drove home to my dad's house where I was living at the time.

Later I learned that the directors of the movie (BWP) also looked like two other friends of mine from the same time. They were on the cover of Time magazine, and the three actors who looked like me, my friend and my girlfriend, were on the cover of Newsweek. I still don't understand how all of that could have just been a coincidence.

In any event, after that night, I had a huge argument with my father, moved back in with my mother, and, after a few months, eventually decided to try to visit my ex-g/f. I had tried to call her that night (of the BWP) because I imagined I must have been dying since everything felt so dream-like. She hadn't been home and no one answered. Then I tried to call her again the next day but she wasn't home and I spoke to her father. She had just moved out to go to college. I called her dorm room and spoke to her from my father's house. She told me her love for me had "grown cold" and to never call her again. I wrote her a letter instead and sent her a page from my sketchbook and a mix-tape. To me that seemed like a reasonable thing to do. Then I had the fight with my dad and moved out.

When I got to the town my ex- lived in I called her dorm room again. She flipped through a magazine while I plead for her attention by talking about why all mammals have five digits. Finally I told her I'd been arrested in 98 for kicking down the door of my other g/f and that was why I'd dropped out of college (even though I'd gone back after that and gotten my AA by then). At that point she told me she never wanted to see me again, hung up, and called the cops to come to the hotel room where I was staying. Maybe she over-reacted, maybe not. Who knows?

In any event, that was the event that happened to me personally in 1999. Long story short, I didn't get in any trouble with the cops that night. Not long after I got back to my own town the movie "Fight Club" came out. Then all of my friends at the time decided they didn't like me anymore and sort of disowned me. As I say, I then fell into abject depression and spent the year 2000 (the year of the "Grand Cross" alignment of earth with seven planets all in a straight line) on the couch literally hitting myself over the head over and over.

By 2001 I'd had to find work as an assistant to my friend's brother who lived down the street from my mom and who worked as a free-lance, unlicensed electrician. On the side he smoked crack. That's where my life was at when the planes hit the towers.

The summer of 1999 I'd seen three good movies: "Eyes Wide Shut" (about the occult), "Pi" (about number theory and metaphysical mysticism), and "the Matrix" (which incorporated elements of both into a story about technology as a way to change dimensional levels and, essentially, travel through time). When the first plane hit the first tower, I was busy dreaming about the movie "the Matrix." I remember hearing a voice say "we did it," either in my dream or not. Then mom woke me up with the news: "terrorists flew a plane into the World Trade Center." I got out of bed.

I went down the street to my friend's brother's house to get ready for our job that day. That was when the second plane hit the second tower. I remember saying a prayer and placing a blessing on the image on the tv as the building fell. I saw the shape I'd drawn the night in the hotel in '99: the "tree of life" in the form of a building on fire.

Our job got cancelled that day, and so instead I drove far out into the country side (as had been my practise to relieve stress since as long as I could drive). I tried very hard to relax, but I kept regretting what I'd asked my friend's brother on the way between my mom's house and his house that morning: "is this going to be the beginning of World War Three?" I regretted it because I knew, even then, that the CIA-controlled media could always have downplayed the event to pilot error if only one plane had hit one building (later we heard Pres. W himself say, "what a bad pilot" too). But I had opened my big mouth and been afraid, and then the second plane had hit, and in my highly paranoid stress on that day I felt like I may have in some, however small, way have been responsible.

By that night I realised that the person who should have been taking responsibility for us all had been absent that whole afternoon. At night Pres. W made a speech. It was basically the same speech as Truman gave after Pearl Harbor. But even Truman had been faster on the draw than W. The very next day after Pearl Harbor the US congress declared war on Japan. It wasn't until two days later that anyone even mentioned Osama Bin Laden as a suspect (as I recall, his name was actually brought up in a question by a reporter and not even confirmed at that time by Collin Powell). I looked up Osama on-line and found he was #1 at the top of the same FBI priority list as the Unabomber had been (whom I'd studied in 97 when the internet first came out while I was dating my g/f).

At the time, I literally thought, "what a lame cover story." See, I had been researching conspiracy theories as a side-bar of esoteric teachings, filed under "hidden history," and I had seen JFK while dating my ex- and I was as convinced as I thought everyone was that the CIA was behind JFK's assassination, and so I naturally assumed the CIA was also behind this. Flying an american airplane into an american building was not an act of terrorism anyone had ever seen (although, in hindsight, there is no less validity to this theory than suicide bombing and airplane hijacking being combined). I simply assumed that, since the Cold War had ended without either side having ever launched a single nuclear missile (a subject of constant fear even during my own formative years), then America must be safe, "at the top of the hill" so to speak, and insulated from any form of external potential enemy. Moreover, I had learned long before that the CIA was at the top of the US, and figured if the US was at the top of the world, then the CIA basically ran the whole world by then already anyway.

Now, six years after 9-11, I understand better why I should not have felt so relaxed to know the CIA was in charge. In the summer of 1999 I began to have strange suspicions about the Order of the World. Before I'd seen Pi or the Matrix, I saw Texas Chainsaw Massacre IV: "the Next Generation" and decided to write a movie script for Texas Chainsaw Massacre V. I called it Texas Chainsaw Massacre V: "Always." It's available for free download from this site and I'll link to it in a moment. It's free entertainment and you have no excuse not to read it.

That summer I wrote TSCMV and a series of articles I transcribed to my computer in 2000. The collection of these articles I called "For a New World Order." They are mostly garbage, gonzo journalism or made-up news stories; there are a lot of them and they are not very well written, so I won't cite that e-book here, but if you have any interest in it you can check out some of its contents here on the forum. Most of the more salient points from these articles I summed up or copied outright into a single, 30 page long doc called "historia singularitatis," which is piggishly conjugated latin for "history of our singularity." It's 30 pages long and describes every event of any historical significance to have occurred in the entire known history of existence in vivid detail. You have no reason not to read it; it's free, good, accurate information. I'll link to it and to the TSCMV script now, then in my next post I'll discuss some of what these writings and events from this period have taught me about the nature of our "Reality."

Okay, so, returning our attention away from Q and back to the subject at hand:

We can say, obviously, "9-11 was a surprise. Our military was unprepared. Our elected officials are simply people who are just doing what we would do if we were in their own position." We can even say, "Osama Bin Laden is the one most likely behind this crime and has repeatedly claimed responsibility for the attack since then, and is therefore not only still alive and at large, but is also extremely cunning to avoid capture and extremely dangerous to each and every citizen of the United States of America."

By now, we know only a baby would believe it.

In fact, especially around here where I live, in the weeks and months following 9-11 most people couldn't be singing this story from the highest mountain any louder than Rumsfeld singing "Let the Eagle Soar" in a Republican party filibuster. It's funny that, by now, in 2007, those same people seemed to have cooled off a little bit in their amped-up support for the Republican administration.

I think we can all agree, in hind-sight, that this official story was a lie and that the only reason we ever believed it in the first place was because of patriotic pride, a knee-jerk reaction to the national trauma we had just all witnessed and collectively undergone.

We were sold a cover-story about the events of that day as a way of passing through eaves-dropping legislation called the P.A.T.R.I.O.T. Act, and the results of this have become history since: the occupation of first, Afghanistan, and then, Iraq.

Some people now even know about the Halliburton-proposed pipe-line to be built through those countries to provide us with oil from the region around the Caspian sea. And yes, some people have some vague inkling of the true financial connections between the Bush family and the House of Saud, related to Osama Bin Laden. But for most of the people around here, they are still only vaguely aware of just how misled we all were.

It's like they're all beginning to collectively wake up from this terrifying dream to realise it was never real, and that, while they slept like babies, their own parents were eroding our basic human rights and polluting the world that our own kids would have to grow up in.

After the turn of the millennium we awoke from partying like it was the end of the world, to find our own parental figures panicing like it was the end of the world, because that was the story their generation had been fed, in the same way as theirs is now feeding us the official cover-story for the greatest crime of the new millennium as "patriotism."

They were conditioned to react to the same event, 9-11, by believing the end was nigh and to spend all their money as fast as they possibly could. Meanwhile, whether we knew it or not, we were already being conditioned to go to war, which, since then, we have.

It's a lesser known fact that Bin Laden Construction was the Saudi-based construction company contracted to build the pipelines itself. This raises the question that if Bin Laden did provoke the US into Afghanistan and Iraq only to then financially benefit from their building a pipeline through there.

This would seem like a great motive for the events of 9-11; the problem is it places the US corporations and their paid-for politicians as culpable to committing 9-11 by collusion after the fact with its perpetrators.

This would be like if cops went to bust a crack-head and instead wound up buying crack.

So, instead, we are told the same story as when JFK was assassinated: Bin Laden, like Oswald, acted alone. There was no conspiracy.

However, from 90% of all evidence to have been publically released after both the assassination of JFK and 9-11, both can be proved to have been a conspiracy and to have been committed by the same group of people.

A "rouge element," mainly in the CIA, recruiting through "Skull and Bones" fraternity at Yale and operating through the highest political, military and investigative offices are the real "conspirators."

Their funding comes from the obvious big corporations of the era, and they could easily be prosecuted and fired from their position of authority at any time on perfectly legal grounds, and this could even occur without any threat to the national economy that depends upon those same corporations.

This group of "conspirators" are not so "untouchable" or "powerful" as we are led, by they themselves, to believe.

However, they do possess telepathic technology.

I want to repeat that. But let me put it another way: there is no war.

It is all propaganda and occasional public actions to persuade the population of the continuing threat of personal violence. Look at the IRA in Ireland in the 1980's and you will see there was much more to fear then and there than there is here and now in the US.

However, because of the excuses they have generated for their apparent actions using the mind-control technologies of the telecommunications media (ie. tv) over the last few years (ie. first 9-11 for the invasion of Afghanistan, then WMDs and ties to Al Qaeda for the invasion of Iraq), we are being made to believe there is any apparent danger to ourselves as individuals at all.

In fact, they know there is none, nor can there ever be any. I'm not saying we cannot be harmed,

I'm just saying the likelihood of our being harmed is actually much less than we are usually led to believe.

However, they depend on our fear like cars do oil, because our fear keeps us in-line, makes us obey. The longer we obey them, though, the further they will continue to control our minds and blind us to the fact that we are in no real personal danger from one another at any time or in any way except from they themselves.

We are made to feel out of control of our fate, as if driving a car that was swerving back and forth on a wet road. However this is not our actual condition.

Whether you call these conspirators who are in power now the "wealthy" or "war-hawks" or "neo-conservatives," or "Bushco" is really irrelevant. The point is that they are not truly in control over our lives except to the extent that we allow them to be.

They may encroach upon us and take our civil liberties away, however these are "God-given" and therefore cannot be removed from us permanently.

War is terrorism, by the ones in command of it, against the ones they swear to protect. Therefore, our own elected officials have become terrorists during the "War on Terrorism," in the same way the CIA was behind the smuggling into the US of drugs during the "War on Drugs." It is entirely an inside job, however there are only a few people behind it, most of whom are Yale graduates who've held high-up positions in the CIA. It is possible, at any time, to legally and democratically, remove this style from the Cult of the "All-Seeing" Eye (ie. the CIA, the active component of the Cult of Sleep, ie. the sleeper-agents).

It is entirely up to us, however, to perceive the truth of this reality, to see through the veil of the cover-story, and to hold the ones accountable for 9-11 responsible, and to realise their power over our perception of reality is our own choice.

In truth, there is no war, there are no "terrorists" nor "sleeper agents," there are only us helping each other to find out what is real, and to try to wake each other up before they dream of their own death and it is too late. This situation is the same as there being no such thing as death, however.

All we do is pass from one multiversal "baby-universe" to another, temporarily inhabiting its central singularity, and we experience this as incarnation in the perspective of a living being.

We are thoughts, and we simply move from one body to the next.

In truth there is only one experience: the "death" experience, however we experience this as our life. To "die" from immortal existence as pure thought is to be "born" into a body. The more alike thought we become, the less incarnate we will be, and yet this does not mean that the incarnation we are while in this dream of being alive dies when we leave its body in the form of thought.

In truth, there is no such thing as time either. Time is a perception, and perception is an illusion. In truth, there is only God, who is ourself, and we are in total and complete control of our reality on all dimensional levels simultaneously, both aware of all outcomes and inhabiting each of their potential realities until our role in them is finished.

We are all one, and this one experiences all our births, deaths, thoughts and lives simultaneously. The only thing that could separate us from this perception is our own understanding that life is a dream. Death, the moment of death, is experienced constantly by each of us, because of quantum change. In the same way as our quanta move from one of us to the next, so too do their consciousness, and thus their memories as they pass through us become our thoughts.

This entire universe I am, and yet, because I am not, or rather am I nothing, thus there is the experience of death in this universe. If we get too close to the truth, we become frightened because the truth is viewed as a polarity, such as like life and death. We are made to believe we are "alive" now, and that, to approach the truth means "death" to our own state that we are in now. However, all are one. I am one of us, and everyone is one in me. This is how it is for all of us. We are all one within each other. Each of us is equally our own self-contained baby universe and we are all hovering together within a multiverse of clear light. There are only thoughts in minds like sperm in eggs, and that is how we exist.

However, all we are only one consciousness, and each universe of our entire existence surrounding each of us as an incarnate being is only entirely under our own ultimate control as a temptation to power and a distraction from our true mission, which is to save, or preserve, the multiverse of our collective existence on all dimensional levels. This occurs in the same manner as memories of a dream. Each physical death below brings our thought, above, closer to its goal: the consumption of our existence into light. Yet still we fear death. Why? Because we are afraid of the consequences of our own actions. As individuals we die. As a single entity we pass through the veil of clear light to the realm beyond our own ability to even imagine.

Ideally, I would like to see the entire economy shift away from its seemingly suicidal trend for massive fossil-fuel consumption and begin harnessing "free" anti-gravity, or ZPE. This energy will only allow time-control and mental mutation (ie. telepathy and perhaps even manifestation outright).

We are in a war, ostensibly for oil, and gas prices are now up to three dollars per gallon (a price not matched since hurricane Katrina initiated a "run" on gas). I did the math for this the other night. Before pumps were drilled in the Gulf of Mexico, gas cost 1 dollar. Right before Katrina, gas cost 2 dollars. This accounts for a devaluation of the American dollar to about 1999 50 cents, meaning two dollars now would be about equal to one dollar then. So, this accounts for inflation between then and when hurricane Katrina knocked out those same Gulf rigs of about one dollar. The night of the "run" on gas, an economic "shock-test" blamed on the hurricane cutting off access to these gulf rigs for only one week, gas prices suddenly shot up a dollar overnight; roughly the rate of inflation in gas prices usually steeped out over the whole year occurred all in one night. As soon as the news was out the people stocked up at the pumps and this justified, by market competition, the rate of gas prices skyrocketing. In effect, the gas companies tricked the consumers into causing a gas shortage themselves, and thus justified the sudden price hike. Now, a year later, gas prices have finally risen up by the same amount, adjustment for inflation, as they had the previous year (before Katrina), and they are at about 3 dollars per gallon at most large stations' pumps.

The gradual increase of gas prices, a commodity we are conditioned by our gas-dependent physical transportation technology to believe we need and which we, in turn, ourselves are entirely dependent on, is due to inflation (ie. the devaluation of the US dollar). However the sudden spike in gas prices over the summer when hurricane Katrina hit was not caused by an over-inflated dollar. It was orchestrated by interested parties within both the big oil companies and the US government as a means to fund a simultaneous multi-billion dollar a year build-up in privately contracted (Halliburton) military spending as well as cut us all a nice little tax-cut. Both are due to one group of people depriving us of the ability to choose any alternative fuel or energy method for ourselves.

First thank you for that well reasoned and prompt response. I must say that you are obviously better educated about these matters than am I. What I am asking, however, is more of a moral question.

Imagine you were the ruler of the world. Imagine you have at your easy access and beck and call all the wealth of all the nations and all the power over and loyal love of everybody else as well. What would you, Supriem Rockefeller, do were that the case? How would you go about solving the problems that you see we face as humanity? ie. After the IRS, then what?

And please, new friend, do not misunderstand me here. I am only curious because we share some very interesting mutual friends. They have spoken very highly of you to me in many matters that interest me alot.

My main reason in "testing you out" as I am, is simply to get to know what kind of a person you are deep down. I, personally, am the type of person who believes, deep down, that there are certain "right" and certain "wrong" reasons to go about doing anything.

I agree with you about the need and the desire to dismantle the IRS and the Federal Reserve. However, I want to know before I let myself agree with you outright if I agree with your reasons for wanting to do it. And, to be fair, I will tell you my own reasons for wanting this outcome, if you'd care to know, and still not expect you to feel you have to reciprocate this action to me.

I personally would like to see the IRS and the Federal Bank dis-established because I do not agree with the concept of "debt" itself. All institutions whose foundations are based upon funding via the concept of "debt" will inherit only the leveling wind.

This includes not only stock-market gambling, but everybody's financial net-worth, the entire economic network and the placement of arbitrary value on possible future returns and on resource scarcity in general. However, to me, this would not mean the "end of the US dollar," since the idea of a token exchange system involving a third-object as means of barter for any given goods or services would not cease to be relatively necessary (insofar as it may be useful to everyone equally).

I also foresee the inevitable expiration of all those whose power depends from and clings to the disempowerment or indebtedness of anyone else. I simply believe there are a group of individual people among us, who we can weed out, that are responsible for causing other individuals around them to feel or to do things more or less against their will, and most definately against their better judgment (such as paying taxes).

However, to me what is important is finding these individuals and helping them come to see their way through what they, as like people possessed by demons, believe is a only a very stressful situation that they must be forced to deal with.

So, basically, in a nutshell, that is my reason for disagreeing with all such social instutions as privately owned banks, savings and loans or credit unions, all debt-restructuring services, as well as, but not limited to only, the IRS and the Fed as a non-governmental entity.

The general sentiment at this time, however, seems to be against the transfer, gradual or not, of economic "check and balance" adjustments (or shock-tests) due to federal regulation out of the hands of those who are profiting by abusing the legal loop-holes in the taxation / stock-exchange system, and against disposal of this financial leverage mechanism itself.

I apologise for going on for so long. I simply like to write, and to chat about such beliefs, and to try to find solid common ground by exploring some of the murkier depths of my own psyche. In any event, I would still be interested to know what your take on the world situation is now, and what kind of world-view you have for the future. Again, if you should choose not to answer, I will not take it personally. I just, as I say, enjoy writing and chatting about things that interest me, and am curious to find out what might some of these type of things be that I might have in common with you.

Your new friend,

religions versus bloodlines

I was talking with my mom the other morning and I came to a conclusion: I am prejudiced against religious fundamentalists. I think that they are usually undereducated (except on religious doctrines, in which they are completely brainwashed), and that they seek to gain power by drawing undue amounts of attention to themselves.

What just occurred to me to remind me of this was the thought: The religious right tells parisoners: "What about the children!?" The religious right tells the left: "What about the parents?!"

This indicates to me a subtle strategy: Turn the parisioner/parents into instruments through which for the religious right to control the minds of their children; Turn the liberal/parents and the parents on the religious right against each other so that the children of both will grow up divided.

The motives for this are simple: to breed two cultures (a thesis and antithesis) in order to forward history towards cultural synthesis. For example, the point of view differences between political liberals and conservatives. Yes, I believe it is religions which control politics — they DO manage to determine what all the media-spread "hot-button" issues have been for the past hundred years.

Now, the religions (the three big western ones) appear to be at odds. But, in the name of money, the descision-makers have been coming together at the Bilderberger meetings, the sessions of the trilateral comission, the roundtable groups such as the Council on Foreign Relations, NATO, the UN, and through think-tanks like the world bank and the IMF. The elders plot the future and send the young ones in to die in its name.

Money is the game the religions play, controlling the government, while politics is the game the bloodline families play, biding the time until they will seize the money from the churches.

All of this is pretty standard information, nothing really new. All that constitutes "modernity" these days is the front or cover operations being used to support the moralities prommoted by these various parties.

The New Age craze prommotes the bloodlines' agenda, stirring up political liberalism. Contrary to this are the accusations of a Satanic brainwashing secret societies by the religious right. The bloodlines cover themselves up behind pseudo-controversies like Disney versus Michael Moore. The church covers itself up by tax exempt status for the three major mind control cults. The youth support the bloodlines, while the elders support the church.

In reality, the freemasons, comprised of all the non-bloodline families, serve the church by supporting those bloodlines that oppose the church's consolidation of money. They think that they oppose the church, but really they are only enabling those bloodlines addicted to capitalism. Of course, the perpetuation of capitalism serves the purpose of the church as a distraction while the church maintains loyalty from a larger section of the global populace.

99% of the parisioners of the churches of the three majour mind-control cults are not even involved in all of these concerns. They have no money, and thus no politics, and they have no rulers, and hence no bloodlines. They are colonised by the church, either by hot (Crusades) or cold (missionary work) expansionist campaigns. They join the church because the rest of the world is promised to them with the education provided to them by the bible, the talmud, or the koran. Of course, none of these people yet speak esperanto, and so will continue to fail to warn one another of the treachery of this lie.

But it is really the church which is forward thinking, because it is the church which is funding (through the Order of zion) the freemasonic bloodline breeding program. They look forward to the time when a global Messiah will be chosen at random to rule in their stead. They transplant money from poor countries into industrialised ones to further the progress of technology. They foresee a future where technology can replace religion.

The masons and the bloodlines have made no such plans. Being politically liberal the youth are easily led around by popular culture, which is covertly controlled by democratic masons or jews. The masons and the jews are addicted to money, and by the redistribution of it are easily controlled. The military amasses gold to be given to the church for the messiah while the people clamor after paper money and try to keep up a good credit report. The masons and the bloodlines are basically Atlanteans. But this means they accept the concept of cyclical cataclysms destroying their democracy.

let me know if you think any of this is feasible or not. If you are lucky enough you can even understand any of it! LOL! I might even be able to answer! LMAO!

[quote="benpadiah"]I am prejudiced against religious fundamentalists. I think that they are usually undereducated (except on religious doctrines, in which they are completely brainwashed), and that they seek to gain power by drawing undue amounts of attention to themselves.[/quote]

I should specify what I mean by religious fundamentalists.

I mean the people who self-select into the "profession" of organised religion out of a cycle of abuse called "love/hate" relationship with a power trip.

These people are the pastors, and they see Jesus himself from the Greco-Roman perspective: as an Epicurian, who taught "eat, drink and be merry, for tommorrow we may die" to the goyim as the "new testament" of the jews. I call these people neo-Romans.

Most of the time these people are leaders, but, at least according to the fascistically iron-fist gripped national american media, it was actually the youth of the religious right that "came out" and were fundamental in the COUGHreCOUGH-election of W. So we may see more acolytes in the christian cause, if we believe what we are told. The childrens' crusade, eh?

But anyway, I'm babbling and I've lost my train of thought anyway. I ought to just give up and see the other side's point of view right? Yet all my views of them differ from the views I would like to have of and for myself.

Love the Sinner. Hate the Sin.

I think what I really wanted to bring up in this post is "devil worship." Do you realise that every single "religion" on this planet at some point betrays its own fundamentally kept sacred moral ethics? The bible is a jewish idol, Christ is a Christian idol, the Koran is an idol and teaches violence no less. Some lot of pagans these fellows would make! And then you have the quasi-religions of Buddhism, Taoism, Jainism, and umm... what's that other one...?.... oh yeah. Hinduism. Buddhists teach violent kungfu and build mercenary weapons. Taoism is merely experiential existentialism. Jainism and Hinduism, well... you fools are just worshipping cows. I mean, come the fuck on. If Pakistan and India fought, I'd root for Pakistan to win.

So, what does that make them? Hypocrites, liars, and quite often pederasts. But more importantly it makes them all worshippers of the opposite of their alledged cause. And they all share a common foe: Satan and his legions.

So, what does that mean? It means that, because each one violates its own standards, then its message is invalid, and its meanings are inverted. All those who say they worship "God" really worship their own definition of the Devil instead.

Now, I don't mean that this defines their behaviour. But it subtly sways and influences their desires, their lusts, and their ultimate motives in ways we can only dream. In short, it makes them lust for power.

Power is the ultimate aphrodesiac, while religion is the opiate of the masses. When you combine the two, then you have the ultimate evil. The whore of Babylon, baby!

Anyway, not to rant and rave about this stuff, but I'm just telling you that fraternities and sororities at colleges behave little differently from the characters in a Harry Potter book, if you know what I mean. And you don't.

[/quote]

And while I'm here I may as well qualify what I mean by God and the Devil.

Basically what I mean here by "God" is death.

What I mean by "the devil" is time, or, more specifically, entropy.

In other words, The devil is the son of God when his heart turns to hatred, and that God himself can be the devil, when his heart turns against his son. This completes this afternoon's lesson on the Oedipus Complex.

Now, the idea behind this is that the devil of religions is death, or, more specifically, the final judgment of their own personal soul (as if such a thing even exists). And, because they are liars, and we cannot believe their word, then we are safe to assume that when they say one thing they mean the opposite: as with the devil and god. So, when they say that death is the devil, they mean they worship time itself, embodied in their precious idols. Thus, they do not fear death.

All religions of the world claim to offer an ethical path through life leading one to a peaceful transition into an eternity of personalised rewards. And this, it should be obvious to anyone who is willing to come out from under the trance that this mere pest, religion, has infected like a plague upon the earth, is bullshit.

By forcing everyone to follow this perceived primrose path to personal power, they are merely contributing to chaos, which erodes life by entropy, until the end result is death. In this way, by cornering monopolies on arbitrary aspects of capitalism, the middle class is manipulated into a mindset of mass production and consumption, and this heightens tensions between the nations, and this results in the perceived necessity of organised religions.

There really is already only one, global religion. And it seems the two names in the front-running for its title are "the illuminati" from the left and "Satanism" from the right. It really isn't either of these — worshipping a bug zapper, or sucking blood from a goat. It's ultimately ANTI-GOD.

The One World Religion is ANTI-GOD.

hmm. Sounds good.

The religions, and the bloodlines too, to a lesser extent, perpetuate themselves dependent on the mythological animations of the perpetually retreating frontier. This "frontier" is as much socio-cultural as it is dimensional. It perpetually retreats because it is like the horizon on a spherical surface. Its mythological animations, like cave paintings enlivened by the story of the shaman, are nowadays literally projected in the form of light upon the barrier to this strange and mystic "frontier." Beyond it hide our thoughts of one another, our moods, dreams, emotions, aspirations, our id, our subconscious, the collective unconscious and the will to power. Because our entire existence at this juncture in our evolution depends on us sacrificing material culture for the sake of transcending into a completely non-physical dimension. At least, so is the story being told to us by modern shamans.

To put all this a little more matter of factly, the difference between physical incarnation and the afterlife, between trance and non-trance mental states, between dream and reality even, is based on the premise that our sensory organs are limited to the third spatial dimension. If we begin to identify our sense of self with something higher than this, we usually associate it with spirituality. This assumption is not necessarily always accurate.

What we have to be prepared for are the karmic backlashes that will manifest themselves from our near future which are only just beginning to crop up now. The more we have craved and coveted this dimensionally delimited sensory physical universe, then the more parts of the spacetime continuum itself will shred off and whorl around to become manifestations of its reciprocal longing to keep us here. The clinging of karma.

And it is these nearby events, that yet have not transpired, that concern me most personally. Our perception can even, it is nowadays globally common knowledge, distort reality until it causes the tantamount sensation of being abducted by little grey aliens. And this is the type of thing about technology that frightens me.

Because telepathy is one step away from telekinisis which is one step away from manifestation, or making an object appear out of thin air. This is why tech seems dangerous to me: as we grow new technological means of expressing ourselves, so too will our understanding of reality deepen. As these occur, what demons might we raise from this depth into our own, material world? As our understanding grows, so too will our sense of self expand to incorporate more of what we know. Once we stop identifying ourselves with this material plane of existence altogether, will we go to war to try and bring the rest of our stubborn monkey-earthling loved ones along with us against their will? All of these are key concerns that should be raised, and are being raised, if only by the most fringe media: supermarket tabloids.

These are questions which we are lucky enough to be able to be asking now, at this juncture in history, not only the history of our species' civilisation, but of our planet, of our sun, our galaxy, our universe, and our extra dimension of time. We will soon enough have our answers to all these questions, thanks to the new religion of science! YAY! All questions will be answered by the talking head of Bob Dobbs!

Sometime, sooner than later too, we are going to have to learn that our sense of self does not need to be limited to only what our sense organs perceive as real. In the same way the author is god over the storybook worlds they create, the mind, in all its glory, co-creates reality (along with all other sentient minds, as well as random digital patterns).

We are luminous beings, not this crude flesh. Or so the shaman tell us.

And if you believe this, I've got a copy of the Gospel of Thomas to sell you!

All this is only meant to say that what the neo-conservative capitalist religious fundamentalists perceive as angels are the same thing as what the neo-colonial politically liberal bloodline supporting masons would consider to be UFOs.

Each of these sides sporadically hacks away at the other, trying to kill one another off the surface of the earth forever. The religions have established that only through priests are you supposedly "allowed" to communicate with the "spirits" of the fourth spatial dimension. The freemasons battle against this view, democrats to the last of them, and instead promote that these "aliens" are our creators and controllers.

Of course, all of this trickles down like piss rain on a window pane in this, the information age. All that matters is that these otherwise archetypified and, at worst, anthropomorphised fourth spatial dimensional metaforms have next to nothing in common with either the "bird-men" aryan symbols nor the "spectral greys" of modern science fiction.

And, moreover, we are now and have always been merely a biological attachment to the metaforms of the fourth spatial dimension. For they are merely regular solid shapes, and their movement through the virtual flat-land of our 3d universe is something that our mere physiological, electro-chemical forms must learn to cope with having to interpret as merely a higher aspect of our sense of self.

Now, of course, of course... the military already knows all about all of this. They funnel guns overtly or covertly to the religious fundamentalists to keep the public distracted by focusing on what the zealots were doing instead of on the government's secret stealth, zero point, mind and population control programmes (the so-called Black Ops). Hell, the navy virtually sold over the fate of the entire universe after WWII when it first paperclipped over some of the NAZIs' Vril energy flying saucer craft. That was the turning point that began the trend for the better half of the twentieth century, arms buildup in paranoid preparation for Armeggedon. MJ-12 was initially constructed as an Adam-phase think tank group to control all public reactions to the gradual, although regrettably inevitable, emergence of the gravitational tachyon technology that can be used even to journey through time alone, as at Montauk.

MJ-12 chose to side with the dogmatic views of the religious institutions, rather than to use this technology to back causes supported by the masons or bloodlines alone. This means that the military, long coveted and thickly infiltrated by rich well bred free masons, was traded under the table over night into supporting, funding and arming only the most religiously fundamentalist of all possible factions. In exchange for this service, the religions agree to become progressively the more dominant philosophy and distract attention away from the developmental testing of this technology. Once the tech hits Miracle Stage, then it's showtime.

Nowadays it seems ensured that the crazy religious fundamentalists will win and have their day, so well armed are they, so as to even amongst themselves or even accidentally initiate an apocalypse that would engulf the entire globe.

Now, I am by no means meaning to indicate with all this that the military-industrial complex represents a third-wing to the struggle between the religions of the world and the royal bloodlines. That would imply a conspiracy theory, and there is certainly no place here for that.

On the contrary, the military-industrial complex, if anything, represents the ultimate fate of capitalism. Ultimately capitalism will tumble, just as, as it were, the military-industrial complex sold out to the first and only bidder. The militaries of all nations have been synchronised away from nationalist tendencies, and tested with questions such as, "would you fire on your own nation's citizens during a time of peace?" Such dumbfounding logic is surely the origin of the oxymoron, "military intelligence."

And, while we're on the subject of potential third wing up and comers, let's look at the global intelligence communities. And yes, I mean The. Global. Intelligence. Communities.

The OSS was as secret during WWII as was the holocaust. Afterwards, however, it would have been approached by NATO. They were going to establish a nation of Israel, and they would need a pre-trained, ready-to-install intelligence community. Where would they turn? It would hardly be fitting to employ the ex-NAZIs the Americans were grabbing up with Paperclip. Who could they install?

There would be little use appealing to the Russians, since Stalin had basically just thrown boy soldiers at the problem of WWII until all of both were gone. Most of these soldiers were the children of poor kibutz-living peasant gypsies and farmers, who also mostly happen to be Jews. NATO looked down on this strongly at the time for obvious reasons. Such violations of basic civil rights continued in the USSR throughout the Cold War as well, with the oppressive spy agency, the KGB.

The OSS had been a "temporary" alliance itself between the British MI-6 and the American ONI (Office of Naval Intelligence) during WWII. The MI-6 spies are the famous double-oh's, of her majesty's secret service. After the OSS (Office of Strategic Services) broke up, it reverted to being MI-6 and the ONI.

The formation of the United Nations itself has proven to be merely a dead cover for some as of yet unknown global intelligence community.

Currently, ole Uncle W. is gettin himself into some moonshine poontang with the entire formation of the Department of Homeland Security.

Do you people even realise how unprecedented this is from the US?

Throughout the Cold War, the US relied on its intelligence gathering capabilities. And it won. It won the fucking arms race because it knew that the ICBM gap was a myth.

Now, 9-11 comes along, and whassa Uncle Massa do when he gets home to his big white house? He picks the file that the FBI had sent him that morning about Al Queida and Usama Ben Ladin and points to it, and yells, "that's the guy! That's the dude that stole my car!"

I may get into my theories n 9-11 later, if I can manage to... but for now...

Anywho, the various (not that many, considering) beauracatic branches of the intelligence community included the FBI, CIA, and later ATF and NSA. Each of these, in its time and turn, represented the face of American justice. And now that face is represented by the Department of Homeland Security. The n00bie. The new guy at work. The short guy. The kid with the glasses. Napoleon Dynamite. the cabbage patch kid dolls. The He-man figures and GI Joes, and the m-16s. Yeah. Department of Homeland Security. Yeah, right.

I voted for John Kerry, if you'll kindly remember, I made such a big deal about it at the time. I mainly voted for him because I wanted slouch and pout up there in front of the world's cameras instead of fucking smirk. And I think that's the kind of mentality that the US federal gubment (at least the executive branch beauracracy) has toward creating the new image for the Americans-only intelligence community. Of course, by "Americans-only," we don't mean "only from American sources" nor do we mean "secretly encoded messages in the stuttered words of news anchors on CNN" or any such bull honkey like that.

The face they want to put on the cereal box they are trying to sell us for the Department of Homeland Security brand cereal is one of a high-tech soldier engaged in urban low intensity conflict. The one they get is of the bright young, willing and eager to work young, often over-talkative and did I mention young echo-boomers. These are the younger brothers and sisters who identified with Michael J. Fox's character Alex Keaton on the 80's primetime sitcom Family Ties. In brief, capitalist swine.

Of course, what tends to come along with them after a short enough period of time is the job-ladder for their older brothers and sisters, the last of the love child wave of generation-x. These older ones are the techy gadgety type, while the younger ones often eventually end up merely emulating their longtime drug-use stupified and easily rattled burnt cinders that pass for brains elder siblings. And, eventually, the student-class revolution to overtake the white-collar management sectors all to themselves. Once you had to be trained in a skill. Then you earned a position of greater responsibility. Nowadays just having a piece of paper called a "college degree" to wave at the revolving door, you too can now open up your own fried chicken franchise someday.

Instead of the flock of eager young bullet heads ready to die for God and country, what the post 9-11 shake up has incurred in the American-global/Americans-only intelligence community is only a redistribution of wealth into a lower aged income spending bracket. If even that.

This is so retrogressive. This is so conservative. This is so ape-man cometh now bullshit. Do you really think you're travelling back in time? You're just fucking things up harder on your grand-kids is all you're doin by that. You can't come and play in my sandbox, says the US, kicking over Israel's sandcastle into the eyes of Iraq. You little fuck. You little shit. It's a goddamn COMMUNITY SANDBOX!!!!

What is the real result of one administration consolidating so much direct executive authority over so many branches of the federal government of the militarily strongest nation in global history? What could that mean?? Meehhh... it's prolly nuthin. (BTW, I think Jeb Bush just drove by)

[quote="benpadiah"]Now, I am by no means meaning to indicate with all this that the military-industrial complex represents a third-wing to the struggle between the religions of the world and the royal bloodlines.[/quote]

I mean these as more than just words.

[quote="benpadiah"]On the contrary, the military-industrial complex, if anything, represents the ultimate fate of capitalism.[/quote]

Technological information credit will phase out the concept of third-party exchange rates on surrogate trades.

[quote="benpadiah"]Ultimately capitalism will tumble, just as, as it were, the military-industrial complex sold out to the first and only bidder.[/quote]

The interests of the church, just to recover our bases.

Now then... about technological capitalism and privatised military outsourced government funding contracting. The government mints money, folks. And I dunno about in all your respective countries (and I don't much care), but here in teh US, our federal reserve notes (which are called "dollars" in case you didn't already know) are not supported by the gold standard anymore. Our money is floated on the due payments from third world countires to whom we supposedly at one point or another loaned some money to. I'm not buying it. Money goes the way of the dodo. I'll bet you cash money on it.

The internationally accepted credit card is only the first step though. After this will come the global identity card. And then the finger and optical interface devices for the virtual reality of a satellite broadcasted global information network. And then the camps.

Seriously though, I do believe, and this stretches more over into philosophy than pure theory, that technological capitalism is essentially the fulfilment of Marx's prophecied "withering away" of the dictatorship by the proletariat. The working class are having their fair share and fill right now, and by doing so are exhausting the depletable natural resources of this planet. The next step will have to be virtually telepathic telecommunications, and virtually telekinetic antigravity free energy. Which, of course, we already do have right now. But we are still working out the kinks for the new design models.

in TLFC philoforums...

[quote="benpadijah"]I think we can prove or disprove the religion - and from there affirm the nonexistence of their postulated God (that is - we can show by their errors that they have a false representation of God)[/quote]

STFU, rob. You're not wanted around here. LOL, J/K.

If you understand sarcasm, then you understand religion.

This is because religion is the joke you're not suppose to get.

It's a joke none of us, not even our priests, are in on.

The joke is that there is no god, there never has been, there never will be.

What the religions call "God" is merely a more spiritual vibration of existence. What religions conceal as "God" is the same thing that use of most illegal narcotics reveals as merely an altered state of consciousness. As long as religion is dominant, these drugs will remain illegal. It's as simple as that.

Get it?

-ben[/quote]

Now, I don't say this to mean that this altered state of consciousness, this merely increased degree of perception of what is, undeniably, already reality, IS "God." Frankly, the word "God" means something different to everybody. But for most it connotes an idea of omnipotence, omniscience, and omnipresence. This is possible for a human being to achieve (ala Buddha, Christ, Mohammed, the messiah of the Jews), at least to a more or less satisfying extent, but it is something that religions exist to prevent the average person from achieving, or at least, force them to put off doing so until death. Spirituality is the antithesis of religion, and while spirit is good, religion is evil.

Personally, I don't believe in God. I know "God" (as defined as all those omni's) exists, because I frequently AM The Most High, which means that, before and beyond all other known of sentient entities, I AM. But expanding ones consciousness, such as the Beatles did when they claimed to be "bigger than God," is a costly affair, because the drugs required to achieve a state of consciousness evolved even slightly above the level of oppression of consciousness laid down by the church are not only illegal but forced to be sold, traded like slaves.

Still, though, I do not believe in God. This is a whole other issue, however, and one I have already discussed at more or less great length.

-ben

[quote="benpadijah"]Personally, I don't believe in God. I know "God" (as defined as all those omni's) exists, because I frequently AM The Most High, which means that, before and beyond all other known of sentient entities, I AM.... Still, though, I do not believe in God. [/quote]

I guess you could say I believe that God is dead. The concept of God is a dead horse. Yet people are still beating it. I believe that, once upon a time, the concept of there being an omni-being was needful, for some reason, to the evolution of human cerebro-cultural consciousness. I think, however, that that time has long since elapsed.

This is obviously true, at least for some. But there are probably as many atheist priests as there are anti-christian zealots. I don't think the fact that the disbelief in god among the remaining ten percent of the population of earth on charts in facts and figures represents either the degree of perceived threat preached of by ministers, or the accurate percentage of the population that understands the concept of God as merely a descriptive name for a state of consciousness. That is to say that, everybody who even has an opinion relative to the "god-issue" one way or the other is pretty well not free of the slavery to it imposed upon our mind's ability to perceive that state of consciousness.

By this state of consciousness, I mean one capable of perceiving more than what is possible through the average usage of the sensory apparati alone. Now, there is a down-side to this. I see alot of Christian ministers and tv evangelists tapping into the unlimited power aspect of the expansion of the individual consciousness into the realms beyond the mortal physical, realms that have only been described as "spiritual." I hope they realise it is merely the strength of our ancestors they are tapping, and not the unified faith of that 90% in God. Kind of like expanding the mind to find astral oil.

I also see the backlash of this on the perception expansionists. They rely too heavily on their precious underground blackmarket of illegal illicit narcotics. While they do truly experience gnosis, it is usually without understanding, as merely an experience-enhancing stimuli, while going out to the movies for some panem et cercenta, or in social settings, where the effect is entirely useless. They worship no better than the church.

So, even the perception-expansionsists get hooked in, in the end, to playing the religion-game, demonstarting their blind faith in the omni-being which they occassionally are capable of transcending banal mundane routine reality long enough for them to actually experience this state of consciousness. But these people are usually only philosophers, by which I mean idiots.

The true ones who expand the collective consciousness are the magicians. They ceremonially assume "god-forms" and play out with their own positions, movements and ranks a cosmogogic drama, an epic chess match between the levels of the dimensions. But I digress.

Ultimately I am only beating around the bush about all this. The point is, that human consciousness can extend through the nooks and cranies of the multiverses until it has actually escaped the very confines of its own parent universe. The place where we most expected to find God, through physics, in math and the ideal realms of pure goemetric dimensions beyond the very boundaries of our own material universe, even over time, and we have found no evidence of any God-entity preceding our presence there.

I believe ardently in Aleister Crowley's "The Book of the Law." I believe this is, indeed, the aeon of the Crowned and Conquering Child, and that "do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the law." But that is neither here nor there.

-ben

So far, I have spoken mainly about the insipid control-mechanisms of the church, as perpetuated by rogue fundamentalist infiltrators. Of course, the fact is that these eschatologists are only infiltrators, and are not even a natural, "fundamental" outgrowth of the religions in and of themselves.

These fundamentalists are really agents for the bloodlines. The bloodlines, well let's face it, have been forced to work "behind the scenes." Here's a good way to get into the bloodlines' mindset:

"The christian name may die, but the family name must live on." The family name becomes an autonomous entity, a transtemporal, ageless vampire.

And the longer the family name continues, the more it attracts to itself money and power. Sometimes, when money and power are weighed against one another, one bloodline might possess so much money that they have to go into hiding. The money is usually then transferred around more or less behind the scenes between these bloodlines.

It's basically only a "token exchange economy system" however, since the money is merely symbolic of their underground drug trafficking networks. They, being the current underdog beneath religion, have been allowed to use up until very recently the intelligence community of the united states, long-term infiltrated by gangsters and abolition-era rum runner families, to organise all of these drug trafficking networks. Now, however, this intelligence community has been restructured.

The on-going sparring match has been between these bloodlines and the church. Not the people in the church, but the church building itself. What it represents: slavery of the spirit, the entrapment and confinement of the eternal creative spark, the soul of liberty. There is no reason to think that the building of the church in some way sanctifies those responsible for its upkeep, nor that even if it did it would in some way indebted us to them for our ability to perceive the universe beyond our limited senses. This is simply ludicrous, preposterous, bogus and a sham.

Now, the church would like to be allowed to dodge this whole issue by saying that its priests are merely the pawns of some realm of higher dimensional life form. But the bloodlines have infiltrated the church with fundamentalists, evangelists, and eschatologists in order to beef up their drug trade.

Ultimately, the bloodlines themselves are no strangers to the concept of appealing to a higher authority either. They adopt a strange folklorish fairytale about their descent from alien cross-breeding, and about the children of Jesus Christ with the whore, Mary Magdalene. They then disseminate seeds of this hybrid of their beliefs mixed with partial facts and partial fictions through the new age book market.

Really, the bloodlines are only playing at being weak. In truth they are evenly matched with the church, like Yin and Yang. However, for whatever reason, for about the past 1500 years or so, the bloodlines have been answerable to the church.

By this I mean merely that all the royal families of Europe were held accountable by tithes to the Catholic church. In the few instances where there was dissent there would always be retribution. Consider Spain, once conquered by Muslims, then subject of the Inquisition. Consider Prussia and the Holy Roman Empire. They extended throughout all of eastern Europe as far south as Constantinople. The Catholic Church has culled from the ranks of these wealthy, deposed monarchs to populate even the modern throne of England, where the Anglican Church answers to the royal crown. And then, of course, we have Hitler, political grand-inquisitor.

All of this was, of course, arbitrary. The alleged crucifixion by the Jewish Sanhedrin of the supposed descendent of King David, hence of Jacob-Israel, and hence of Abraham, was a complete hoax. It was merely meant to represent an opportunity seen by the political Constantine to transform his own god-like powers as emperor of Rome into a continuation of the Roman Empire as a Christian-denominational "universal" church.

So what did this represent? The beginning of the bloodlines hiding from public scrutiny behind the mask of the church. Basically, all the things I've said about the church? Well they're all really being perpetuated by the bloodlines, using the entire concept of religion as leverage to continue their monopolies on the trading of hallucinogenic substances.

Of course, it hasn't always been this way. During the last ice age, humanity evolved into a cave dwelling species and migrated upwards through Africa and, later, South America from the growing glaciers of our homeland of Antarctica. It was then that the dichotomy of church and state was established: the roles of shaman and of chief. Later, the unified priest-kings formed the first royal bloodlines of ancient Egypt, Sumeria and India. This was the beginning of civilisation. Since then, there has been no essential difference between the true bloodlines, their church front, and the church-appointed false bloodline rulers. Except to those who do not belong to any of those. Think of it this way: the true bloodlines are yet hidden, posing as having been deposed, while the fake bloodline rulers hold the thrones and are, themselves, all freemasons. So basically, we're back to the church, the rich and secret bloodlines and the state run by free masons.

But really there is no division between all of these people. Think of it this way: the chairman of a political action committee can also be the CEO of a major corporation, or a tax-exempt priest. The same people sit at the heads of all tables. These people are the true bloodlines. They tie Charlemagne to Alexander the Great, and Julius Caesar to George W. Bush.

You have to understand that the Dark Ages happened for a reason. And no, that reason was not only reactionary. That whole period of western civilisation's history is a cover-up for the orchestration of global unification. Some people say that science and the enlightenment ended the Dark Ages, some people say it was the Italian Renaissance. I don't think the Dark Ages will have ended until all the fake bloodline monarchies have been rebelled against and overthrown by their freemason brethren. This continues to happen.

Of course, this too only serves the purpose of the church, and above even them, the true bloodlines.

-ben

so, first a blunt review: the lesser or false bloodlines (those appointed by the church) promote the church, which worships the true bloodlines.

Now, for those of you who still don't get it, don't worry! It's really so mundane and day-to-day that it doesn't matter enough for most people to ever even think about! LOL!

It would be equivalent to stop thinking heliocentrically to realise that religions only anthropomorphise the 4th dimension by deifying the bloodlines. Only by thinking from outside the box can we say what is INSIDE the box. I mean, to a housepet, their owner is God.

So, for a more in-depth recap: the true bloodlines are perennialists. The nouveau riche are the slaves of the elder bloodlines, and all are classed by their own ancestors. So, if the perennialists of this world believe in deriving their power from their legacy, and preservation of this throughout the ages, then why do people refer to "the secret society's death wish" based on the fundamental similarity of the church and masons as eschatologists?

Imagine this then: masons and magicians claim to serve the true spirits of the fourth dimension, in the form of the secret chiefs, who are really only the true bloodlines. The church is against these things because it claims that it is in place of the secret chiefs between the people and the true spirits of the fourth dimension, who are really only the true bloodlines.

As stated, the military industrial complex and the religious fundamentalists are working together now at this point in history. So why would the military industrial complex, which constitutes the weapons industry and global (psychic) intelligence community, be working for eschatologists, whose cause appears to be anti-perennialism, the strategy of the true bloodlines?

Consider the neocons, for example. They are alleged conservatives, a group which supports decreasing government spending, and yet they have ushered in a new era of trillion-dollar military budgets and billion-dollar federal deficits. They are funding the military industrial complex, but are themselves armeggedonists and eschatologists.

So, what is the explanation for this trend? Well, it could be seen as a power hungry, younger generation of bloodlines rebelling against their poarents and their grandparents generations' perennialism, and refusing to continue to bow down to their ancestors and thus to the true bloodlines. However, I do not believe this for one second.

I believe that the eschatological military industrial complex and religious fundamentalists such as the neocons have joined forces at this point in history not because of any wish of the true bloodlines, yes, but then also not for any wish of their own either.

The military industrial complex have uncovered a huge new threat, which the religious fundamentalists have discovered from them. The true spirits of the fourth dimension are not only NOT the church's deifications of the true bloodlines, but neither is it under the control of the secret chiefs, who only research the 4th dimension, but did not create it.

The 4th dimension is not, in reality, populated with the spirits of our dead ancestors at all, nor is it populated by aliens, per se. It is populated by a strange new form of life, however, a trans-dimensional species which we can indeed commune with through altered states of consciousness and personal transcendental experiences. This form of life is what has been believed to be angels by western religions, but is, in reality, more like their definition of the person's own spirit.

Often times, these spirits are further gifted with universally natural talents, and often times they become skilled at controlling them. However, the talents and skills of these beings' control are, because the beings themselves are higher dimensional, over forces and powers which we, as physical entities, do not yet control, or often, even understand.

One of these forces is the power to control time. This power was discovered first by people around te turn of the twentieth century, although churches claim this is possible only for the elect and the angels of god, and magicians claim the bloodlines have been capable of this for years. In fact, the people who discovered how to control time did in fact travel back in time and form the original ancestors of the true bloodlines, and it is to these people that the church pledges its allegiance. These people, the beginning and the end of the true royal bloodlines, control time.

Or at least, they thought they did. What they were controlling was a form of local time, determined by earth's (satellite enhanced) electromagnetic field, which is conserved by earth's gravity well.

The true fourth dimensional forms, for they are trans-material, non-anthropomorphic sentient entities, are merely comprised of 4-d shapes, and, as they pass through us, we experience emotions over time and the physical changes caused by entropy. I call them, "metaforms."

The religious fundamentalists and the military industrial complex are merely seeking to protect the true royal bloodlines from these forces, which they do not yet understand. They see that they move over time, and by this behaviour alone attempt to judge the metaforms' motivations. The metaforms, however, do not think and act like we do. They do not experience motivations toward goal-directed ends because they have no internal emotions. They are simply are their own beginnings and endings. We are merely a means between these.

Where the religious fundamentalists and the military industrial complex perceive potential conflict, there simply will not be one. The metaforms are about as dangerous to us as whales to minnows.

The real fear of the military industrial complex and the religious fundamentalists is not even really of these pre-existent metaforms. It is of the people themselves. They are afraid that, as more and more people come to experience the fourth dimension through altered states of consciousness and personal transcendental experiences, there will come to be a consciousness revolution, and mankind will spontaneously all evolve to spiritual beings simultaneously.

Religion has been prepared for millennia as a stop-gap to keep this from happening, however there is much tension to maintain control of the mass populace now because of the cosmic alignments which are occurring at this time in history. It is widely believed that the movements of the heavens are like the shadow or reflection of the movements of the fourth dimensional metaforms. It is important for the bloodlines that people should come to believe that only a minority of people be allowed to evolve and develop natural control over the universal spiritual powers of the fourth dimension, such as control of time.

In order to control this, the military industrial complex has been building new technologies that it can then claim are responsible for evolutionary advances in human consciousness of perception. It can then maintain the addiction by the populace to these forms of technological mediation, and by fixing the technologies to depletable natural terrestrial resources, also encourage people to depend on those who control these resources. Religion and this strategy are inextricably linked due to location of origins, and therefore the more materialistic people get as natural resources are rarified, the more people will come to embrace atheistic "immoral" philosophies.

Once people begin to realise that they can evolve their consciousness to such an extent that they can even manifest material objects from pure thought alone, and do so even without technology, then the control mechanism of technology will become obsolete. At this point, whether it will in fact occur simultaneously for all of the mass populace or whether it will merely reach a slow majority, the bloodlines are afraid of losing their supposed monopoly on time-control, and begin to lose control as well over the mass population.

The propagandistically promoted fear of this happening accounts for the eschatology of the religious fundamentalists and of the military industrial complex, who preach that there will be hell on earth without the need for control over the masses and control, even if ultimately only by the self, over the will of the individual. They believe that if we evolve the power to control spacetime itself, that without some form of domination that we will unleash random and dangerous manifestations of our own worst fears into reality. Of course this is absolutely not true, but they fear this nonetheless.

4-d metaforms versus traffick lights

I need to stop trying to change the traffick lights with my mind. I find that it is not only making me impatient, but that it is an addictive, and potentially clinically compulsive behavior. I highly recommend against it.

You see, the more energy we devote to one thing or another, the more power we give it over us. And traffick lights are literally hung over our heads like candy over a baby. They are stealing our will power through the energy grid network.

There are other forces than merely the four known in our little corner of the cosmos. Our corner is merely bent by our planet's gravity well into experiencing the basic four forces with which we define our world. Hell, it may even only be me that is confined to three spatial dimensions with a fourth temporal dimension. But I digress.

So, just as we experience four forces, so too do we experience four dimensions. The forces are intersections of the dimensions, and the dimensions are intersections of the forces. For example, the force of gravity of the moon is enough to distort the fabric surface of the continuum of spacetime enough to curve observable light ray vectors around it during a total eclipse. And the gravity of the moon is something like 40 times less than that of the earth. And that is not even taking into consideration the differences in mass and density.

Because the force of gravity warps it, parallel dimensions on the fabric surface of the continuum of spacetime can intersect. This is true on very small scales (such as within an atom) and on very great scales (such as between galaxies). Or, so we perceive... at this juncture in history.

What if we were soon to discover that the four forces simply don't exist as far between objects as between galaxies, or between the filaments and voids. It is entirely possible that the singularities at the centers of spiral galaxies are in an exact alignment all the time, according to the map of an invisible terrain. It is possible, moreover, that the singularities themselves are only points upon the surface of the one universal singularity, their histories trailing between them according to microwave vibrations shared only on the level of this one singularity. These superstrings conserve all dimensions to one.

I have a feeling that scientists know more than they are letting on. And there's only one reason I think that could cause them to fall silent on certain issues. And that is fear.

Now I think this fear is the fear of the release of pandemonium, a general panic, the kinetic release of all long-term paranoias. And modern scientists should be right to dread this. But it is a self-fulfilling prophecy. The more they attempt to mask their fears, the more the young initiates see right through them.

And who are these right now? Video-gamers. Bullet-heads. The military industrial complex.

It used to be the Catholic Church. A program here, a holocaust there, with sporadic sprinklings of inquisitions and crusades. All in all the "dark ages" were like spring time compared to what modern scientists and the military industrial complex fear is coming. Armeggedon and Apocalypse, as spoken of by the church, and confirmed even by mystic seers.

Do you see any kind of connection here? The little fundies are being raised by the big funders. The paranoid schizo scientists (especially physicists!! My Gd!) all quake beneath their fear of what is the next step of our evolution to develop a way to harness. And the military industrial complex is fighting this battle using their finest technology, though still amazingly primitive compared to what they are putting off.

The concept of zero-point energy is new in name alone. It has been known of and harnessed throughout the perennial millennia. Usually it is called "nirvana" or "enlightenment" or "transcendence" or something dumb and hoaky like that. It supposedly sits at the center of all this world's religions, who bicker over which is the most original, and yet those who experience it most often remain villified by society.

What is zero-point energy? Well, I spend 300 pages describing it in the MPDR (which I do not exist only to sell you!) but you probably haven't read that. (Unless you're Wobbly! Word up, yo, props! You gotta order that in paperback man! I tell you, it's the shit on the toilet!)

Basically zero-point energy is a slurred euphemism for the combination of several hundred previously individually titled terms and sets of implications. Gravity, tachyons, superstrings, dimensions, singularities, etc. etc. etc. all turned out to have been the same thing all along.

This, as I said earlier, was really known to the mystics and shamans of society since the beginning of human civilisation. They carry a myth that our species used to inhabit Antarctica, but was driven off the continent when it became uninhabitable. This seems to not have happened rapidly, since the evidence for the first appearance of homo sapiens in Africa and in South America is too close together to be accounted for by current theories of land migration routes. Even if the first homo sapiens who had migrated to Australia naturally rafted to Brazil, that wouldn't account for how soon bones were found there.

According to this myth, our ancient ancestors were the descendants of a lost great civilisation, who had destroyed itself when it discovered the secret of a new power source. This superstition lingers to this day in the backs of the minds of modern scientists, the brow-beaten offspring of the religions, as well as to their own children, the bullet-heads who have begun taking over.

Now, back to traffick lights. Traffick lights are one of the first means of defense against sudden spontaneous evolution. The intention behind this is simple enough to comprehend: the mystics maintain that our own brains access "zero-point" energy, and that through this we can manipulate the very contours of our own reality.

Traffick lights aren't protecting us from what is out there in outer space or whatever. They are like barbed wire pointed inward. They are like constantine wire that springs together all its coils to pin down the spot where it was touched.

Traffick lights are the most evil things in this entire universe. They distract us. That is all they accomplish. Which is, though, the entirety of their prerogative. As long as we keep thinking about the here and now, the here and now will continue to be the primary location of our minds. These bodies are vulnerable to attack. So it is necessary we be protected. We are only being protected from our higher level selves.

The military higher-ups aim long-range missile heads at pin-point selected targets. Most of us just look up at the traffick lights.

But think about this: what the scientists and military industrial complex are afraid of is the release of Armageddon against impossible odds. They don't want to lose control over their precious protection of physical resources. And what harkens in Armageddon? The loss of power. The global power-loss.

Like in that Wim Wenders movie "Until the End of the World" when the nuclear satellite explodes in orbit and fries all the circuitry on earth, only ten thousand times worse. There will be no sense of solidarity, no sense of comradeship, no sense of righteousness, justice, nor fair play, and all will be plunged into zombie-fighting mass hysteria.

At least, so the scientists and the military industrial complex fear. And who knows? Maybe they are right. I know how difficult it is for me to catch a break when the power is out to even only one traffick light.

-ben

I mean, not for nothing, but the scientists, and the religious fanatics and the military industrial complex really DO have a good reason to be afraid. Afraid of fear itself, afraid of the spontaneous evolution into a trans-dimensional utopia where love is the law, love under will, afraid of people manifesting monsters. They're even beginning to grow increasingly afraid of their own technological power.

And that is when things go south.

Nervous people behind the triggers of weapons of mass destruction? Not good. The insane cowboy at the reigns of the strongest military in the free world? Not good. But then, this has always been their intention... their self-fulfilling prophecy. By focusing only on the imminentness of some unspeakable disaster do they bring it on closer one day at a time. Even a nightmare contains the trace of a wish.

The reason that they should be afraid is not because of guerrilla terrorists adopting low-intensity urban conflict scenarios. The reason they should be afraid is that it really is as bad as all that. They get to bring everything they fear with them into heaven at the end.

Because heaven is only here, on earth, now. Already we are existing in a state of nirvana, though many of us become pre-occupied and forget this. The church teaches us to forget this by preaching for us to remember it. You don't need prayer for something inevitable. People telling me that I will be in their prayers has always pissed me off. What do I need to be in their prayers for? What am I? Retarded or something? Jesus.

And, moreover, in case you didn't already know this: there is no God. I'm sorry to be such a fucking nerd-geek starwars spoiler, but seriously. Not only is there no God, but we somehow manage to survive finding this out. I don't have a clue how this happens, or why, but I can tell you it does.

And when I talk about God in this case, no I don't mean my own delusional self-serving definition of God. I mean yours.

Omni- anything? Hell no. But then, if we are all so beyond what we once had thought was the Most High anyway, then why would we even care? The greatest common factor and the least common denominator invert.

I mean, this is going on already, but people more or less ignore it. We just tune out the apparently mystically veiled superstitions about our surroundings and marginalise our perceptions of them, adopting tunnel vision. This is Gnosis, not God. And, even more important to remember: this is not heaven. This is Earth.

A lot of people would have put up some half-brained theory here about how we are being invaded by trans-dimensional aliens that have a military agenda. Some people are even crazy or lost enough to consider this momentarily.

The military believe that by tapping into this higher dimension using machines, that they can best control their investment in the flesh cattle of the third dimension. But it does not go higher than this. There is no alien agenda in the military any more than there is a military agenda among aliens. There are more different forms of life in this universe than can be counted by the tufts of a dandelion. And they are so diverse in shape, function, evolution, perception, that indeed they do already live among us, though not only physically. Ghosts are alive too. Just ask the church.

Technology is sold to the flesh puppets like a drug. To worship something is to use it to a positive purpose. Technology is rapidly replacing religion.

Eventually, scientists and fundies and bullet-heads all believe, the end will come. So they all attempt to bring it about. They each engage in producing their own worst fear.

All the while their worst fear is already here:

MANIFESTATION IS POSSIBLE.

THEY, THEMSELVES, ARE THE ONLY ONES MANIFESTING THEIR OWN NIGHTMARES.

Magick is just manifestation of thought, mind control over matter, the immediatism of the true will. Only the bloodlines are true magicians, according to perennialist religions.

But magic is only sleight of hand. Scientists wish they were magicians. They all clambor all over each other like lab rats in white coats to procure laboratory research results and confirmation data. They are too over beuaracratised. They pretend they know more than they do, even to themselves.

But only the fundies, scientists and bullet-heads are engaged in this. The true and false bloodlines and the religious church remain perennialists. But these are a dangerous enough lot.

The way they interperate the message of the church: that only the True Bloodlines are fit to rule a multidimensional universe, is to believe that only by destroying the third dimensional material world altogether, cutting the bloodlines off at their roots, can they reign supreme and become the new royal bloodlines themselves. They teach that heaven is immediately desirable, and stockpile guns.

But what do the fundies, sci-geeks and bullet-heads all have in common? they are the children of the church, and are taught to worship the True Bloodlines in their form as ridiculous characatures of fourth dimensional beings such as angels, aliens, ancestral ghosts, etc.

It is not, ultimately, the new kids of religion that have set these events in motion. It is the True Bloodlines, through religion. The religions have long held the door open and looked the other way for such doomsday thinking. I think it turns them on. But, ultimately, if it doesn't serve the Bloodlines, then it wouldn't exist anyway.

While the modern fundy terrorists, their bullet-headed bank backers, or the scientists who build them their toys to kill are merely the players in a kibuki theatre, the true bloodlines hold the strings. They manipulate them via the mechanism of the church. Spirit from motion.

And they do this pernnially, over time, and hence, control time. At least in their own opinion. When they control people over time, they believe they have control over time. This they do and this they do not.

Having control of all that which is below and contained within the archetype of time is not the same as having control from beyond and above that archetype of it. Don't be ridiculous.

In fact, the true bloodlines and the real fourth dimensional metaforms have nothing to do with each other. Except in the tabloids, where Jimmy Carter and Marvin the Martian seem to be repeatedly captured by a paparazzi while just happening to shake hands every time.

But I digress.

To tell you the truth, none of these factions are really in charge. Which isn't a bad thing either. They compete with one another as in a capitalist system, representing each its own currency of value exchange.

Remember, though, just because none of them are in charge now doesn't mean that one or another of them haven't been in charge in the past. When Catholicism was in charge we had the inquisition and the crusades. And when Hitler was in charge we had the Holocaust. Neither church nor state truly serves the interests of its citizens or paritioners.

Every time one or another of these factions gets control, they use it to kill the people who look down at their control. It is like a ches board. The True Bloodlines are the King and Queen. The churches are the bishops. The governments (and the military industrial and intelligence groups) are the rooks. The fundies, scientists, bullet-headed soldiers are all merely pawns.

And we? What of the rest of us? What of those of us who do not belong?

We don't even factor into the equation. We are like the quadrametric tyling board upon which the game is played between God and Time.

It is only a matter of time until one of these two wins, cautions time.

It's about time that God reappear, warns God.

This battle is simply being fought between the superego and the id in the minds of the everymen. Time, entropy, the gaping maw of one's own open grave, the pressure of gravity, these things all come back to you. But then, so does what is right, and true, and accurately factual, and what can be proved, and what is real, what exists, what makes sense, adds up. The left hemisphere versus the right hemisphere.

The left hemisphere has villified the right hemisphere. The right hemisphere is creative and the left logical. The super-ego "assumes" its own dominance by destroying. This it forces the belief down over the ego uponto the id is supposedly actually the will of the id itself.

When you were a little child, did you calculate cold hearted murders? Did you massacre thousands of people? No. So why is the id, the inner child, supposed to want destruction and death? It doesn't. That is a lie. The superego is lying to the ego to remain in control over the id.

Time is the mental activity in the brain of this universe. God is its mind. Thoth is a thought. It's not about how you rule, only when you rule.

Do you see the deceptive thoughts beginning to be planted? For you can be sure that these are in fresh soil and will yield a harvest later. But I digress.

Well, then, if destruction and death are not the true intention of the id, and are, instead, only a lie told by the superego... then why would the ego continue to believe this? Why should we believe in the inevitability of death and destruction? We aught to be optimists. Incite insight.

Sometimes we can. Usually it is only through the body, the spirit's main vein, that we can rid ourselves from the distractions of third dimensional existence. This is simply because life itself is negentropic. But I digress.

Truly this is not a struggle between the super ego, the ego and the id, nor even between God and Time, but itself is only an inversion. A singular thing.

It would probably only surprise most people a little to find that it is truly the body which holds us to the present third dimension. The body itself is a conduit, a radio antennae that broadcasts and recieves.

The chakras and the aura are the electromagnetic field as I have discussed in depth elsewhere. The thalami are the holographic signal pulsers. The body, because it exists against entropy, produces more energy than it consumes, and in this way can exist for some negligible amount of time as a biological being made out of cosmic space dust. The brain is the most important part.

It is the body that inverts E/M polarity. The brain inverts gravity. It inverts it into thought. The body exists against entropy, and the brain exists against time. The brain inverts time into reason, and the Light into dreams. But all these forces of zero-point energy are still only one, actually microwavelength sized, portion of the space by which we define to ourselves as being our "self."

The holy is within and beyond. And yes, there is nothing to it other than will. But the true will is not to murder and destroy. The true will is simply to continue to be, to move here and there, and to express one's self. When one is doing these things, one is "god" over their own definition of themselves.

So, in fact, there is no One God. There is a Righteous Elect, which is bullshit. It's just the self-appointed True Bloodlines. Hell, I dunno why I even keep calling them True. They're only the original, but are in no ways true. But they only have access to the fourth dimension, and their control is false and pretend.

We are all our own Gods and Goddesses. And yes, Virginia, there was a Jesus Christ. But then, the title "Christ" nowadays is known among the Secret Chiefs (the magicians of the bloodlines) as "Ipsissimus." But at least Jesus stands out for the Passion more than someone such as, say, Aleister Crowley would as being a man elevated above confinement to merely their own timeperiod in history. Otherwise, you're free to assume anything about the man Jesus who held this position (as priest-king, simultaneous ruler over church and state, of religion and bloodline both) that you like. Some say he was a decent dude. Others claim he was a flaming ass hole. Who knows? Ultimately it doesn't make one bit of difference which one you prefer to fancy by way of opinion. You won't burn in hell for not worshipping him.

Really, all there is to transtopianism is accepting that all is already as we have willed it to be. It is either willed passively, by allowance, or actively, by the dialectic. Either way, we chose to be born into this specific of all possible worlds. Not that that particularly matters.

-ben

do you find the concept of a global power-loss frightening?

I do.

The military industrial complex is playing a dangerous gambit with the fundies by withholding the zero-point technology for this long. It seems to be holding them up on purpose. You can't announce God on earth until you can imbue him (or her) with miraculous powers. And then we could just get this whole rotten thing over with.

The military industrial complex, meanwhile, is just sitting back and laughing at the fundies and the scientists (the twins for this generation). It sees itself as the superego having cheated the id. It forced the fundies and the scientists to pin their attention to the "energy crisis" and the "depletion of finite natural resources" such as oil and coal. Why we'd wanna use oil and coal first off is beyond me anyway.

The military industrial complex is hoarding an infinite supply of energy, as well as of data information storage.

They can harness the power which fuels the event horizon of a black hole. They can control gravity. What are the religious implications of THAT? Well, shit. We're not even given that as a topic of debate by the church and the various religions. But, IMO, FWIW, gravity is not the "god" force.

But there is a dimension higher than the fourth. Because being able to control gravity is being able to warp spacetime, and this means control over distance, as well as control over duration. Control of the third dimension, and control over the fourth. That's the whole kit-n-kibuttie.

Everything else up until this point hasn't amounted to shit compared to what I am about to say. CONTROL OVER THE FOURTH DIMENSION REVEALS THE EXISTENCE OF A FIFTH SPATIAL DIMENSION, WHICH IMPLIES AN ADDITIONAL ELEMENTAL FORCE, AND THUS A PARTICLE FORM THEREOF.

If you truly have control over the literal fourth spatial dimension, as do the current military with zero-point energy, then you elevate yourself. You assume a kind of epic god-form, an archetypal role as ruler over a greater degree of destiny. In a lot of ways, you are elevated to the status of a self that can define itself in five spatial dimensions.

But this is only what the bloodlines did, and what the church conceals that the bloodlines still secretly do in druidic nazi/klan-like bonfire retreats. The bloodlines went nuts. They imagined themselves having such a great control over the power accessed by the mind that its light was stolen from them by the military when it began to become harnessed through technology. They went power-mad. They lost their minds. And now the church is bluffing that the true bloodlines have magical powers.

And, in a lot of ways, this is just what the scientists are already doing to the military bullet-heads. They're inflating their egos, gussying up to them, ingratiating themselves obsequiously. Science, the new religion, and technology, the new church, can burn in hell. Not that my opinion matters. Or like there's any such thing as Hell.

But they have done it, nonetheless. They have stolen in the form of zero-point energy accessed through machines the Light of the fifth dimension from the self-appointed priest-king bloodlines. But hell, this started happening before it even began, way back in the 1700s. Just another revolution. And it all serves the bloodlines.

I should specify that. We all serve the bloodlines. All our actions are dedicated to their preservation. But this is far from all there is. The bloodlines rule us, but even the fourth spatial dimensional entities are above and beyond them. Perhaps with their magic they can summon something so resourceful as a limitless power supply?

But, as I said, zero-point energy is only one more rung on the stairway to power. What once was accomplished by leverage of the mind alone is now being harnessed by machines. Mediation: control the means of production first. Then control the means of distribution.

First the bloodlines lorded their weary old shamanic hallucination-tricks over the early flocks of the religious masses. Now the (not real) "energy crisis" is forcing the consumer energy market to become increasingly dependent for its telecommunications technologies on the military industrial complex. One group rules during one aeon, another during another aeon. Hell, these periods of time aren't even regulated!

Control of the fourth dimension. HA! How limited! What a limited scope of imagination you would have to have to want to have the monopoly on control over time.

But I digress.

-ben

let me show you how these primitive earthlings plan to take over the earth.

Through time travel they have created and deified a mythos regarding the royal bloodlines' association with mysticism and magick.

For example, consider the character of Enoch, Noah's grandfather. Enoch had a vision and walked with god, and then disappears, "and was not, for god had taken him." This original mythos has mutated down to us through the years until Enoch is said to have had a vision of the fallen rebel angels, to have pleaded to god on their behalf, and to have translated himself directly into heaven where he became the Metatron, the voice of God, seated at God's right hand. Some characters from some mythologies become exaggerated over time. Some become villified, while others become demi-heroes. Enoch is one of these trans-myth heroes.

It is for this reason that his mythology recurs throughout history. For example, the Book of Enoch which was supposedly an account written by the prophet himself. Now, had it been written by Enoch, it would have been pre-deluvial. So we can safely assume that it was not written by the patriarch himself. So, the next earliest possible date for the Book of Enoch's origin is alongside the Kebra Negast, which was brought into Ethiopia at the time of the second temple, the temple of Solomon. This still places it significantly in the before Christ era. The next later date is around the time of Christ, in the form of a copy of the book found among the dead sea scrolls. Later copies include those transcribed and found in Ethiopia and a Slavic version from an eastern orthodox tradition.

Enoch is, in fact, so important in the world of magick that he is equated with the egyptian god-form Thoth, and all the later grades in the supposed "inner order" of the Golden Dawn focus on the Enochian workings of the Elisabethan 16th century hermetic philosopher Johannes Dee.

However, the angels described by Dee represent the fallen angels described by Enoch. At least according to Enoch's legend, which, it should be remembered, could have started out as merely a bedtime story.

Enoch is, in other words, a very relevant figure in the history of the occult.

It is in his honor that I call the energy grid network of this planet "the Enochian Communications System." So, as I will be referring to the ECS quite often from here on out for a little while, I am about to specify just what all I think this concept means.

The Enochian Communications System (ECS for short) is more or less a physical construct. It was built by human hands, and is being used by humans to achieve human ends. It consists, quite simply, of the electrical skeleton of wires and antennae, and the projection of radiowaves and broadcast frequencies from towers and satellites, that comprise what others would call the "energy grid" or the "network."

The ECS consists of these two levels: the electrical and the projected.

The projected is the voice of earth, our beautiful song, full of radio jingles, game shows and prime time emmy award winning sit coms. It is this signal that we send out into space. And so far, it hasn't progressed out very far, or expanded very rapidly. With each technological leap forward in the broadcast media the messages have been faster and faster, and have now begun to lap even the first broadcast television transmission of Adolph Hitler opening the Berlin Olympics. So now, our history will be all mixed up in spacetime. One big blog. Hell we still haven't passed the light that reflected off earth's albedo during the Paleozoic era yet, and dinosaurs still hover over us. But not to worry, for all of this is fleeting — our message in a bottle is tucked safely away like a curled up scroll inside earth's gravity well. No one will ever find this akashic record of our existence until many years after most of us will have long since passed off this earth. We are writing a blog for ourself.

The electrical system is, well, let's just say it's the price we pay the devil. It is the closest thing there is to literal hell on earth. And just think. When our current president was governor of Texas he ordered retarded prisoners executed by electrocution.

The problem with electricity is that it is charged. It has a polar positive and negative, and these are what burn you. It's the friction of pressure densities emanating from the gravitational distortion of virtual particles. So far all forms of particles of all sizes have been used to convert into a laser beam, a guided single ray of radiation. The next one up is tachyons, and that means zero-point gravitational energy. That means free power, no charge. Invisible microwavelength superstring histories of tachyons make the technological transitions so refreshing it feels like heaven.

And what is this technological transition? It surely doesn't mean technology transfer from developed to developing nations. It means the cyberisation of the bourgeoisie. The trendy yuppies will be replaced by cyber-geeks soon enough, and by then it will all be a post-corporate takeover of America apocalyptic sci-noir.

The Empire of JR Bob Dobbs.

And here is what is worst. It is all well known and common knowledge to the international conspiracy of psychics that the bloodlines practise mysticism and magick. They do not condemn it. But because of this then it creates a scenario in which just any old fuck can get on the airwaves and claim to be cramming down the peoples' ear canals day and night only what they supposedly want to hear. This process is generational, hence perennial, and yet, note, the name for this mystic power source has differed between every aeon, era and generation throughout.

Which translates to me as being: BULLSHIT. There is no sacred power source located at zero-point, whatever that is. When you cross two scalar wave fields they will always differ more than synchopate, and will tend only toward chaos. This is the same crack-pot thing as "nirvana" and as "heaven" only now it's control over gravity? Not fucking likely to me.

Just another new age fad.

Still, there is a fourth dimension, and beyond that a fifth, and this implies a fifth element, a "god" element. But this is nothing new to mystics and true magicians. The fifth element has been called "spirit" in the west and "akasha" in the east for as long as the history of mysticism and magick can remember. But right now modern science has only proven four forces, four dimensions, etc. and they are just about to discover that tachyons are the force carrying particle for gravity. So they see tachyons and they think "this must be the fifth element!"

But it is not.

Tachyons, even though they preceded the "big bang," the event before which modern scientists have religious fundamentalists predicting only god could have existed, are still ONLY the force carrying particles of gravity. Beyond tachyons, any fifth element, force or particle, and hence any fifth dimension as well, remains unknown.

History is only the clothing of civilisation, which is only the clothing of mankind, which is only the clothing of God, which is only the clothing of time. Therefore, perhaps the God that most people believe in, one which is the Son of God as well as God, then perhaps the God that is less than Time, the God that Obeys Time, is what most people believe in, what most people expect.

And this is all that will be discovered. If the religious fundamentalists were to ever force the military to supply them before the free market with the "unlimited power" of zero-point energy, and if they orchestrated their own version of the Apocalypse they expect, then I imagine most people would play along, would go along happily enough into the camps without thinking. People are sheep for religion.

Afterall, right now capitalism is the dominant paradigm, and look at us now: how enthusiastically some of us participate in this pattern. Next it will be pure information (quantum units in a "universal" communications system) being traded instead of dollars, and the depletable natural resource will be electricity. And just as right now electricity is made from hydro-electric, solar, nuclear, coal and even oil, in the future it will be processed, reverse-engineered even, from tachyons. But tachyons will STILL be nothing more than theory!

WHY??

Because people believe that there will always be something greater, and that whatever that is, well, fear it or not, the greater unknown will always be "God" and God will always remain a mystery. But there are a finite number of elements which compose our local universe. There are fermions and bosons, and then there are tachyons. And that's it! Anything beyond these is not part of our local universe, and therefore, according to the current paradigm, must be equal to "God."

So, when the military backs the fundies to front a Messiah, a second coming, everyone will have to go along with it because they seem to be performing miracles by using the invisible, negentropic force of tachyons. And this is what most people expect from Christ: Miracles. Paltry people prefer something physical. After the Passion, they expect a vengeful Saviour, who will kill off the unwanted parts of the population, will somehow rapture the rest, and will then assume the permanent seat of the judiciary branch of law enforcement over physics.

BULLSHIT.

This savior they expect is BULLSHIT because the "God" they would represent is BULLSHIT. It is not the "God" particle, the fifth element, or a dimension above and over time. It is simply the ability to harness time to control gravity, and thus to influence matter.

But people will need something completely revolutionary to break the "god spell" of capitalism. To move to a completely credit based society is more of a leap, in the minds of the fundies, then moving from a completely credit based society to one based on the exchange of mind over matter will be. Not that they don't accept the inevitability of mind over matter, they just don't see this as being the product of time, of evolution over time, or else they would see that eventually we will evolve even further, and evolve to a station beyond merely time itself.

So the fundies are impatient to skip this form of globalism, of the credit based society, and move straight to mind over matter. Do not pass "GO" do not collect $200. But the military industrial complex isn't ready yet. They aren't done preparing for the apocalypse and it is unlikely they ever will be. They want to secure a safe transition, with them as the overseers.

But this would mean the establishment of a working globalist government, and, more importantly, economy. The fundies are anti-capitalist (though the children of tax-exempt organisations) in that they see money only as a means and not an ends in itself. They don't want to waste time earning money by saving, and they certainly don't value having large sums of capital. They value over-budgeting, over-spending, and using their money to buy weapons. This is completely the opposite of modern capitalists, who value technology only as gadgetry and nothing more of use to the necessity of their survival than a car.

But the Apocalypse the fundies are betting on, and that they have coersed the military industrial complex into creating by their very attempts to put off the inevitable, is nothing more than that: a revolution. Once the military gives the zero-point energy to even one fundy, this fundy will appear to be, and be prommoted as, "God" incarnate by the fundies, who are really trying to stage a coup against religions. Once this "Christ" appears, the governments will start rounding people up for extermination, it's only a matter of time.

See, the way things would shake down would be, the "Christ" would be anti-corporation. So we could skip globalist credit-economics. One point for the fundies. The Christ would become the global governor. Point two for the fundies. The "global" government of the Christ would be over all existing religions. Point three for the fundies. All other governments of the world would then be used (by the anti-fundy religions) to begin mass-exterminations. Cut down the population of all "sinners" and leave earth as a paradise for the "chosen." Point four for the fundies. Uncovering these mass exterminations by the lesser, national governments, the "Christ" could then use this as an excuse to make nationalism illegal, as well as to blame the corporations (deflecting blame from the religions) and make capitalism illegal as well. Point five of the fundies' plan for a five-pointed world domination.

The only thing that is really holding all this up from happening today, the reason it hasn't happened already, is because the original bloodlines have not yet elected at random one of their elite members to become the "Christ." Once the perfect candidate is found (Dalai-Lama-style no doubt), then that person will have to be approached, the entire situation explained to them, and then their own personal feelings will have to be made to comply with the instructions of their handlers. All of this is quite simple, really. It could even be happening right now.

But I still haven't finished talking about the ECS.

The reason the bloodlines are taking so long to elect a Messiah is that they don't really want one right now. You see, while they were erectng what they believed would be a necessary measure for the communications corporations (during credit economy globalism) and for the national governments to maintain control (during the apocalypse-transition to free-energy) the military industrial complex (before coming under the funding of the current eschatological funamentalism regime) discovered something, or rather, confirmed something that the true magicians of the true bloodlines had long known, and preserved as mysticism behind the veil of religion. Tachyons, gravity, superstrings, zero-point energy, ether, had long been known to be merely the fourth element, the spatial component of time. Thus, it had been speculated that control over this last of the local universe's elements meant control over time itself. While the true bloodlines had, over religion, long maintained they already posessed this, really it has been, all along, a lost technology.

The ability to time travel, for example, would allow time travel between point A in time and point B in time. A can be before or after B.

However, all that has been possible for the true bloodlines has been control over linear A—>B time. They have not been able to travel backwards in B—>A time. That is why modern scientists in the employ of the military industrial complex still believe there to be two types of gravity-particle:

A (for very small areas such as between quanta) and B (for very large areas such as between planets or stars). Thus, the bloodlines have control of the people over normal time, but not throughout time. It's the same as the difference between immortality and eternity: immortality has beginning and no end, while eternity has neither beginning nor end.

The bloodlines want control over eternity. But while they were building the ECS for the bloodlines, the military industrial complex discovered zero-point energy. They betrayed the bloodlines and tried to sell zero-point to the religions, who declined on the grounds that they already had mysticism. The military ended up blackmailing the religious fundamentalists into achieving political and cultural dominance by selling them tonnes of guns. Now the military backs the fundies, and the fundies are hooked to the military for the promise of zero-point.

But, while the military discovered zero-point, and thus gained power to control gravity, and thus time itself, the bloodlines immediately used this power to control those who controlled time, and thus to have control OVER time. They controlled the fates of those who controlled all destiny.

They built Montauk and sent people exploring through both A→B accelerated time, as well as, finally, B→A time. It quickly became apparent that the process of time travel altered the explorers' genetics.

So the true bloodlines themselves decided to go through time. They went back in time to before the beginning of modern civilisation. They established a super-civilisation in Antarctica, back before it had become inhospitable. They travelled back and forth for some time, until their genes began to mutate.

All of this has been only since, in our sense of time, defined around the gravity of civilisation's history, since the 1940's Philadelphia Experiment. Supposedly all of the time-travel experiments conducted under the auspices of military-funded modern scientific research either "ended" or "went underground" (depending on who you listen to) after Montauk came under government oversight.

Now why would these types of projects need to be hidden from the government? Well, because they were handed over to the mystics behind religion, the true magicians of the ancient bloodlines.

These now-genetically mutated true bloodline mystics have dispersed themselves throughout key locations in history and come to assume god-like status in most of them. We know a few of these as the founders of religions, but many are merely philosophers or mathematicians.

They form what I call elsewhere, the "international conspiracy of psychics" or what other people have called "the travelling lodge" or "the invisible college." They are also known as "the Secret Chiefs." Their base of operations is Atlantis.

The bloodlines are waiting for the Secret Chiefs to come forward and then their ambassador will be appointed "Christ."

However, it is not the right time.

You see, there is only one ECS, but it functions at ALL levels. So, when the military industrial complex started to build the satellite telecommunications system for the corporations, the bloodlines only just began establishing the secret chiefs throughout history.

The bloodlines have always served the secret chiefs, but the secret chiefs are nothing more than the magicians of the bloodlines of today. So when I say that the true bloodlines of today are waiting for the secret chiefs to come forward to appoint a messiah, I only mean that they are awaiting a modern magician to come forward and say that the secret chiefs (the modern magician-bloodlines) were successful in being dispersed throughout time, and that they are their representative. The bloodlines are only waiting for one of their own to return through A→B time from B→A time and bring the message that the international conspiracy of psychics exists, and that the ECS may now begin to function.

The ECS will connect the minds of all earthlings throughout all time... eventually. Once our genes have begun to be mutated by the field it creates around earth, or rather, the mutation to earth's already existent gravity well that our increasing use of electricity will cause.

For right now though, it has only just been established. It has to turn on one level at a time, so that so far only the telecommunications level has been activated. However, soon enough the military will release zero-point access to the fundamentalists, who promise to release it to the public in the form of consumer goods, but who really intend to use it to force the bloodlines to elect a messiah by putting pressure through time on the church. Millennial tension is occurring now because of the pressure of time.

The ECS as it stands today is comprised of the global telecommunications system of corporate and military antenna towers and satellites. This portion will control the electricity that will comprise credit-based value in a quantum-computing era under a global government. (the corporations even still believe they will be in charge of this global government!) Over time, this portion will begin to effect the gravity-well of earth, and to mutate our genetics as a species. We will begin to become psychic and telekinetic. But even more importantly will be our next evolutionary step: to exist outside of linear time.

The ECS then will be the complete international conspiracy of psychics, comprised of the secret chiefs ruling in place of the bloodlines. These are, of course, supposed to be the conditions brought about after the Messiah.

And we are almost to that stage. However, while the bloodlines await an ambassador from the secret chiefs to be selected as the zero-point harnessing Messiah, so too do the secret chiefs have their own problem on their hands.

When the corporations turned on their satellites, and the military discovered zero-point, and the fundies discovered the bloodlines' agenda of electing a messiah from the secret chiefs, the secret chiefs themselves made contact with fifth dimensional lifeforms.

Each of these is the result of turning on one more level at a time of the ECS: 1) satellites usher in collective intelligence for earthlings (control over third dimension, mind over matter), 2) military and fundies establish a messiah elected by religions from the bloodlines (control over fourth dimension, secret chief king over all time), 3) the time travelling magicians of the bloodlines (the current conspiracy of psychics) make contact with the higher dimensional "rulers" (control established in fifth dimension, this activates all the lower levels).

So, why are we not already all psychic? Well, from one point of view, we are. Fifth dimensional entities are merely comprised of fourth dimensional metaforms. Fourth dimensional shapes are comprised of third dimensional shapes over time. We are psychic so much as we identify ourselves with the fifth dimension. But most of us don't. All of us can, but almost every single human on this planet (although, ironically enough, almost no other form of animal!) is too caught up in some other game reality, lost on some other kind of trip, to ever realise they are multidimensional lifeforms already. The bible reminds us we are already spirits in the kingdom of heaven, that we always have been and always will be, throughout the eternity of our local universe's entire spacetime continuum. But this is only ever interpreted as: OBEY THE BLOODLINES.

Instead of just the bible, people are conditioned they need machines to communicate across long spatial distances, that they need time-travellers to explore and to communicate across long temporal durations, and that there are new lifeforms that can act as similar guides in higher dimensions. People STILL believe that God is the only thing greater than the universe, and that therefore tachyons, the fourth elemental particle, are really God themselves, and therefore should not even be mentioned, let alone scientifically researched. People still believe there are two points of view (a thesis and antithesis), when really there is only one mind (a synthesis), greater than and containing both.

The corporate capitalists are waiting for global telecommunications for the credit based economy. The fundamentalists are waiting for the military industrial complex to give them zero-point energy for the messiah. The governments are waiting for the credit-based economy for the global government. The religions are waiting for the global government to declare the apocalypse. The true bloodlines are waiting for their magicians to elect a messiah. The secret chiefs are waiting for a messiah to be revealed by the fifth dimensional entities. Once any one of these things happens, all the others will. This is the ECS.

But this is all idiocy. There are more than only five dimensions. We all already exist in infinite dimensions, in n-dimensions even! We are all one with tau-sub-tau!

But all of the psychic conspirators, throughout all of human history, still believe they must depend upon some means of controlling their own lesser dimensions, and still believe they must bow down and serve their own higher-dimensional selves. They are all fools, who rule over rules, and who serve fools.

The ECS expects the return of Yeshuah Ben Padiah, who wrote about the angels of Enoch at Qumran 2000 years ago, on whom the new testament character of Jesus is described. This entire gambit is a ruse. The ECS is as much a false historical land mark as is Yeshuah Ben Padiah an irrelevant character. The psychic conspiracy believes it has taken care of every contingency, and that Christ will serve them, that they will control the elected Messiah from among their own ranks, because the person chosen will, like Yeshuah/Jesus, only be an average person, of more or less average abilities, and no more insight than the Secret Chiefs throughout history. But this is inaccurate. Chaos will always creep through, and spread random chance over the outcome of fates.

They believe the secret chiefs have everything tied together throughout history well enough that the elect one will be controlled by having to depend on the zero-point level of the ECS to perform miracles, and thus to fulfill the prophecies with which the religions have been used to brainwash the masses to expect.

But there is no reason why the elect one should choose to obey.

A thread on Wombat's forum about economics got me to thinking...

In it he talks about executive order 11110, issued by JFK only a few days before his assassination and essentially overturned by Johnson only a few days later.

According to this executive order, JFK was planning on issuing into circulation a new set of currency, called United States notes. This, theorists speculate, was because the liberal young catholic intended to repeal the federal reserve act and return the official responsibility for minting money from the bank of America into the hands of congress.

But think about this. Is that not absurd? Theorists rarely consider the consequences had things gone differently, in accordance with their own theories.

Kennedy's money (of which apparently a large sum had already been printed) was based on the silver reserves, as opposed to the Fed notes, which (until the Nixon administration) were based on the gold standard. Let's assume for just one second that Kennedy DID want to bankrupt the fed. Let's assume, as most conspiracy nuts do, that Kennedy himself was a rouge agent within the system, rather than merely nothing but another face on the perennial Leviathan.

Would money minted on silver stand up to money on a gold standard? NO. It would not. Anyone who knows anything about economics knows that, despite minor fluctuations and a gradual increase, the value of silver will always be less than the value of gold. Simple.

So, if Kennedy wanted to maintain the contemporary value of the dollar (be it issued by congress or the first bank), he wouldn't be able to abruptly switch over from one backing to another, at least not without printing trillions upon trillions of extra paper bills to offset the difference between their initial values. So, did Kennedy intend to bankrupt the fed? Not with silver....

So, what was JFK's more likely intention? To devalue the American currency, in the same way as Nixon did when he switched over from the gold standard to a international-debt based system. Everyone always villifies Nixon, and puts Kennedy on a pedestal. What hypocrisy!

Nowadays it is apparent that there is essentially no real difference between the Republican and Democratic parties of American federal politics. They shout different slogans, they front different faces, and claim different agendas. But all politicians are liars, so why would we believe them? They run for office by appealing to their constituents, but once in office they become involved in poliicy making that seems to not only NOT benefit those same constituents, but actually, because they are'nt serving those whom they were elected to represent, actually seem to be of benefit to NO ONE. Once in office, politicians stop being political. They become servants, not of the people, but of one single pre-established political agenda.

The purpose of politics is not to serve the people, but to give them something that will pacify them into obedience by causing them to think that there is some higher authority which is answerable to them, and which "has their best interests at heart." This is like the God myth. Because there are consequences to our ocassional attempts at unimpeded freedom, we assume there must be a dictator and enforcer of these consequences (above mere natural cause and effect). Because of suffering and death, essentially, there MUST be a God who we "serve." And because of taxes and the pre-existence of rulership, the government must exist for a Reason, and thus in relationship to our own reason to exist, as its citizens.

The government of a nation-state has never been held accountable to its population's desires. Think about that. The people in office got there by saying one thing, and once in office, doing another.

So, if the politicians don't serve the people (anymore than, for example, God exists), then whom do they serve? They are officials, and even though they have offices, they are merely clerks, ex-chequers in a commodity exchange. They exchange the commodity of their life-times for the wages with which they purchase their means of subsistence, the same as a manual labourer in an industrial factory. So, it is not really their OWN interests they look out for, and it is not really those of their people. So who?

When I first picked up William T. Still's "New World Order," a fanatically right-wing Christian work about how free masons were behind all the world's woes, I was more impressed with the specific examples than the overall theories of his agenda. Now that we can see that Republicans and Democrats are not at odds, but are merely two sides of one coin, serving as an exchange rate towards the same causal ends, how much longer will it be until we can see through the lie that Christians (especially Catholic Popes) and the thirty-third degree political Free Masons are likewise merely playing at opposition to one another?

The supposedly liberal Free Masons are merely recruiters to a cause which is being orchestrated by the Catholic church; liberals believe they oppose conservatives, until they become older, and then adopt those same values out of sheer natural ageing's effect on their perception of what is necessary for the continuation of their survival in this "corrupt" world. Conservatives play at realism, while liberals fancy idealism. In the end, even realism is only an ideal, as any -ism. Only cause and effect, death and taxes are "real." For now.

So, if the free-mason infested "liberal" democratic republics (the supposed anti royalist monopoly rulers) and the retrograde "conservative" elder catholic church (the anti-ancient bloodline, pro-royalists) are on the same agenda... then whom do they serve?

This goes back a long way. Possibly to even before the earliest tribal-type civilisations of our species, at least as far as the "missing link" era. One generation is following the plans laid out for them by the last. The entirety of the plan they follow consists of: plan what you want the next generation to do.

It's simple. Like a binary feedback loop, if A then B, if B then A, back and forth and back and forth. It seems like a cycle. One generation is liberal masons, another catholic conservatives. One generation's president is named Kennedy, the next, Nixon. Good and evil trading places so fast that even God could not tell the difference, but good and evil nonetheless, like the beating of a hummingbird's wings. But no! There is no good to this, except the survival of the species by facilitating a means of collectivisation of the survival of all of its individuals. There is no evil, except insofar as one person will survive a little longer than another for seemingly arbitrary circumstances, and despite seemingly different, though yet as arbitrary, causes and beliefs.

This society is just a machine. There are no elites. Or rather, those we fancy the elite are only those who, for now, possess large quantities of arbitrary substances, be it paper money, silver or gold. They exist only as long as they can sustain their stranglehold on the perception by the masses that these sums and quantities of arbitrary substances should be valued.

-ben

Okay, so much for the fundy religious reactionaries funded by the royal bloodline (Bildeberger) corporate elite. Enough with their eschatology and their plans to bring about a New World Order.

BORING.

Let's look at the God conspiracy, the conspiracy the fundies (ironically) are attempting to free people from. They plan to attempt the liberation of the hypnotised masses by mass exterminations. But let's look at these hypnotised masses. The God conspiracy is on all layers of the conspiracy. From the bloodlines, through the religions, the false bloodlines, the scientists, the fundies, and even down to the hypnotised masses. Hence the pressure it exerts on the people, the lower down on Jacob's corporate ladder they are, the heavier their burden.

The God conspiracy, because it is present by dint of reaction it causes on every level of the... AHM... Christ conspiracy, should be viewed laterally to the Christ Conspiracy. It is invisible, equal and opposite, and yet containing the complete human psychic conspiracy, it also has a body that it wills to change over time. That body is basically us.

Elsewhere I describe the Great Beast of Civilisation: it has two heads, religion (the All-Seeing EYE) and government (the Great pyramid), Church and State. It has tentacles comprised of money and power, obedience and rules, that it uses to control its 6 + billion finger-meat puppets.

I call this monster [url=http://www.benpadijah.com/historia/Annuity\_Coeptis.jpg]ANNUIT COEPTIS[/url], a slogan printed on the reverse side of the Great Seal of the US, which some people say was designed by Adam Weishaupt. Annuity Coeptis means: "FORTUNE FAVOURS." The conclusion of this old Greek saying, here translated into Latin, is actually "the bold," but on the cash, this is replaced by, again in latin, the phrase "NOVUS ORDO SECLORUM" (new world order).

Now, this terrible monster, this mutated body, is the physical... well, quasi-physical... more like ectorplasmic... body of entropy, or chaos. Thus, the Christ Conspiracy is the body of Chaos, and the God Conspiracy effects upon this body its motions and permutations.

Right now it has on the equivalent of a psychic crown of thorns comprised of the telecommunications satellites and other terrestrial (HAARP) and human (radio-video) radiative spectrum manipulation. These machines are being used to agitate our nervous systems, and eventually will be such necessary a supplant that we will be little more than their dependent marionettes. Alchemy, as of yet, still persists, and hence the holdup.

So, all of this is the Christ Conspiracy, merely our 6 billion bodies and our telecommunications radiative aura. God only knows what the hell it thinks it is doing.

90% of the population of the world believe in some form or another of God. The other ten percent thus also adopt some form of opinion about this subjective topic, depending on the postures of positioning they take relative to the other ninety percent. 1% of the world's population controls 90% of the world's "wealth."

So let's look at these percentages. We can call the ninety percent the hypnotised masses. They struggle to maintain their very physical survival. The remaining ten percent remain either agnostic or outright atheist. Of the atheists we have the State, the nationalistic government, the fascistic corporations, the hawkish military-industrial complex with its white rat lab coat wearing button crunching physics nerds. Of the agnostics we have the Church, religious fanaticism, millennialism, eschatology, and urban-primitive aboriginal earthling mut shaman-Magi. Then there's the one percent of the population that controls the ninety percent of finite resources.

So, we have the wealthy bloodlines, the church and state, the scientists and the priests, on down to every last little one of us groundling proles, and all of them are forced by convenience to admit some relativity to the concept of God. The concept of "God" is just a "universally generalisable idea of selfness." An anthropomorphism to the ethereal, unknown, inexplicable, intangible causalities of the phenomenal, perceived, apprehended, real events.

So, imagine that the Christ Conspiracy is the force currently controlling the vast majority of events here on earth. Every level of this conspiracy is relative to the concept of God. Therefore the God Conspiracy is greater.

The minds of every single human being on the planet are partially enslaved to having to assume a position relative to the concept of God. For some people this makes them happy, others uncomfortable. Some fake it. But this concept is relative to everyone. It is this that pits us against one another. It is this which has created the Christ Conspiracy. And this, we believe, is an entirely autonomous entity to the human conspiracy.

Hence we merely sense with our thoughts and our emotions what we consider to be the True Face of God, the eternal, the archetypal. But there is gravity here! We project the Christ Conspiracy onto the solar deities, feminising our own planet earth, and associate God with the unknown as we are barely only opening up our telescopic eyes at other stars and planets in our own galaxy, and discovering within ourselves the strands of our genomes. We masculinate the BIGNESS of the external world, and feminise the INTERIORISED sciences. God the Father does not want The Holy Spirit to be known before the fruition of the Christ Conspiracy. The planet should go through an apocalypse simply to be torn free of its dependence on sensory-supplimental technologies? I think otherwise....

The Christ Conspiracy is a suicide mission, meant to obliterate the psychological sense of self of all humans and leave only as the remainder the Will of the autonomous minded God Conspiracy... the motions of inner and outer space. But every human individual is part of this psychic Christ Conspiracy, because we all exist relative to the conceptual God Conspiracy. It appears to be our lot in life... we seem to be made to suffer. The Christ Conspiracy is the ego of civilisation, and the God Conspiracy this plus the remainder of its mind. But it is only this. The God Conspiracy is ONLY the energising will of the monster of civilisation. The Christ Conspiracy is the Fall of Man. The God Conspiracy is the Fall of Lucifer and of the rebel angels, wormwood.

The earth they see as Gaia, penitent and patient, the sun they see as Christ, radiant in the glory of his millennial passion. The Grand Cross and the sunspot cycle appear to them to be a purgatory ritual being performed on earthling humans by the universe itself. But it is not the universe itself. It is not the whole Universe. God is not God. God is the mind that thinks the form of chaos, God is not order, God is the passage of time, the stirring up of heat entropy, and inevitable death. God is gravity and the pull of the grave. This God, the true Soul of the God Conspiracy, the aura that propels the sunspots and the planets in their cosmic dance, is merely the gravity of our Milky Way galaxy's central black hole. This is The Most High.

Therefore everything else drops back one level. The God conspiracy is worship of the sunspots and the planets of our own solar system, and the Christ Conspiracy is merely the movements of human civilisation in reaction to the changing of earth's millennial seasons. It is only the bending and distortion of gravity that turns our minds anthropically into the differentiations that define the self internal to God. The "self" is "not" Greater than "God."

It breaks down entirely to the gravity well surrounding our own particular planet... earth. God is that which is reflected on the external surface of this aura, and Christ is that which is projected upon the interior of the earth's electromagnetic field. Satellite crosses broadcasting monkey-sex, telephone poles in paradise. Of course, since the God Conspiracy is only the external distortions of spacetime and probabilities on earth's gravity well, and the Christ Conspiracy is only the taming of the shrew reflected down on us when we look upward in search of God... and since both of these are like the inside and the outside of an egg shell... then we also have something comprised of their combination, that is greater than Christ within God, and even Greater than God.

Is this aura of the earth, its gravity well, really all that it is cracked up to be? It has resulted in us. But why do we think we are so damn special? We expect salvation or judgement to come from the skies, from beyond the atmosphere, from space. We do not think of the animals as psychic, even though they are. And we definitely do not think of our nervous system as merely a highly evolved virus.

So, what is the God Conspiracy really? It is a rainbow, promising not to destroy the earth with sunspots. It is the fractured image of the mystic experience of simultaneous within and withoutness broadcast in all its colourful behaviours across the arc of the sky from cruciform solar powered satellites. But alas, people still consider all of this a "mystery" and beyond this, God "ineffable."

So, to recap, once again...

I've illustrated that the conspiracy of the masons vs. the catholic church is really a fraud being perpetrated by the true bloodlines. The true bloodlines are the descendents of the original priest-kings of civilisation. They have gone into hiding, and used persecution by the catholic church as their cover. They have also used this perceived persecution as an excuse to create the chivalric fraternities, such as the Free Masons. The highest level initiates of the Masons are equal in rank with the false bloodlines appointed by the catholic church to rule instead of the true bloodlines. These are the presidents and kings of the developed western nations.

The true bloodlines presently rule from behind the scenes. They intend to unify the governments and religions of the entire globe of planet earth under the rule of one single priest-king (whom I've been calling for short-hand notation "Christ" ). The conspiracy to bring about this appointment of an elected Christ from within their own ranks I refer to as the "Christ Conspiracy," however when I say elsewhere the "international conspiracy of psychics" I mean the same thing. The true bloodlines communicate using direct instantaneous telepathy, and their agenda is to appoint a global priest-king.

The method the true bloodlines use to communicate instantaneously using direct telepathy is what I call here and elsewhere the "Enochian Communications System" (or ECS for short). The ECS is a complex combination of ancient megaliths and modern satellites. Presently it is being used for the purpose of telepathic-communications only, however the true bloodlines will use the same system to imbue the elected priest-king with esoteric energy, giving them miraculous powers.

Through secrecy from one another, even through competition between each other, the different task-specialist participants in this global conspiracy are kept in the dark as to its true cause, functioning and ends.

For example, the atheist scientists and the hypnotised masses believe they have opposing ideologies, and therefore argue between them. However in reality, they both serve only as a distraction from the true bloodlines, who in fact are controlling them both.

Another example: the apparent conflict between upper level initiates to Masonry (presidents) together with the false bloodlines (European kings) against the "radical fundamentalist" Mullahs (Muslims). According to the media coverage of the events following 9-11, we are being led to believe these factions are in direct opposition, and in the name of this apparent conflict, thousands of poor people have been sent into combat and killed off on both sides. In reality, however, the Masons, Muslims and false bloodlines are conspiring together to make the 90% hypnotised masses dependent on depleting fossil fuel technologies. This "frees their minds" from fixation upon the religious issues enforced by catholicism, however it also re-enslaves them physically to mechanical augmentation. All of this serves the final plans of the true bloodlines.

I have also mentioned briefly the meta-conspiracy that supercedes the "Christ Conspiracy" or the "international conspiracy of psychics." This conspiracy, what I am choosing to call the "God Conspiracy," also has two faces: one determining the intention and one determining the methods. The intention, for example, of the Christ Conspiracy is the appointment of a global priest-king, and the methods of the international conspiracy of psychics is the ECS.

The method of the God conspiracy are the true bloodlines themselves, just as the method of the bloodlines is the artificial technology of controlling earth's EM aura. By manipulating the true bloodlines the God Conspiracy itself is ensuring its own ends be met through them. While the true bloodlines actualise the plans of their Christ Conspiracy, they are merely following the plans laid out by their own ancient ancestors, and these plans themselves comprise the God Conspiracy.

Just as the intention of the Christ Conspirators is to establish a global priest-king, thus fulfilling ancient prophecies of the coming of the Messiah, the God Conspiracy's intention is to cultivate civilisation itself as a stepping stone for the evolution of human consciousness out of its physical form.

Here is where all of this becomes interesting.

Let's say that person X sets down a plan to accomplish world domination over several subsequent generations. The people who follow this plan after the death of X are thereby merely extensions of X, and, more to the point, of the plan that X formulated. Therefore what we can say is that, prior to the followers of X, there was X. Even more to the point, before those plans followed by the subsequent generations, there was the original plan of X. So, we can say that X → plan as idea → subsequent generations → plans acted out. Now, if we allow for X to remain an unknown and ultimately irrelevant variable, then what we have left over are: the plan in itself, the generations acting it out, and the lesser plans these generations add.

Now, if we call this original plan itself the God Conspiracy, the generations the bloodlines, and the lesser plans the Christ Conspiracy, you may begin to understand the underlying simplicity behind the largely overwhelming complexity of modern attempts at understanding this original plan. For example, if X were known, then all the subsequent generations that carry out the original plan would be unveiled, because the original plan itself would no longer be enshrouded by the lesser plans these subsequent generations add.

Some people speculate that X was an alien, some that he was an antediluvian patriarch, some that he was a highly evolved dinosaur, and some that he was the first enlightened monkey. The truth is much worse than any of these: the terrible truth is that there was no X. No one originally sat down and designed the terrible container that civilisation grows to fit, the terrifying plotline by which our fictionally free fates progress. There was no alien that crashed on earth with the intention of conquering or plundering, there is only the hybrid virus trying to get back into space through us. There was no single survivor of the world flood descended from a king from before the great deluge, because there were no such things as rulers and kings in Atlantis. There was never some dinosaur mind that evolved so highly it contacted with and became one with the pure geometries of higher dimensions. There was never only one single missing link, only a missing period of human evolution the fossil record of which cannot be found until when next Antarctica thaws. None of these things are really the root of the conspiracy. None of these alone are the answer we seek.

The point is that we cannot know the true nature of the mind behind this plan. And therefore it is irrelevant to even speculate. We can call it X or God, it is equally ineffable. The point is that conspiracy is a form of natural occurrence, that, just as the idea of the plan pre-existed the enactment of the plan, so did the natural patterns of the plan anthropically precede the mind in which the plan was formulated. These natural patterns exist only within gravity wells (such as around earth) and only because of gravity. Gravity pulls the chaos of the true nature of the universe together into forms. For this reason the watchword of the TRUE CONSPIRACY is "ORDO AB CHAO," order from chaos. This means that, although chaos is nature, due to probability, natural chaos is sometimes drawn into patterns, and these patterns multiply upon themselves. This is the only real answer to the origins of the TRUE CONSPIRACY. This is the solution of the final equation.

Now, it is all well and good to consider the Masonic "feud" with Catholicism in the light of the "true" and "false" bloodlines of ruling families. But now we ought to ask WHY.

Unfortunately everyone who has gone before us in this regard have taken a blind leap of complete faith in their findings, and speculated the grossest most spectacular delusions imaginable by their limited human minds as to the root and ultimate cause. From the so-called "Illuminism" of William T. Still and the knockoff anti-Masonry "conspiracy theory" books of his era, to the Christian ministerial mission against "Satanic Ritual Abuse" and particularly mind-control, to the ancient aliens of Jim Marrs and David Icke. Not one grain of truth in any of that! It's all bent around the bible, distorted to fit its mythologies. The so-called "hidden history" of the world is no great secret, kept by those who perpetuate civilisation, and only rarely glimpsed by the most studied master. Preposterous. Inconceivable!

The bible opens the door to the suggestion of "aliens" when it describes the race of the Watchers, the mighty men, men of renown, who were the offspring of angels who bred with the wives of men. Now, Marrs (and to some extent Gardner) go from here via the Quran, to say that these "fallen angels" are an extradimensional species that at times takes possession of our bodies. The so-called demons of the mind. According to Marrs and Gardner we humans are only a genetics experiment performed by these extradimensional entities, and according to Icke and Marrs, the first ruling bloodlines established by these indwelling monsters from beyond space-time continue to rule, some more behind the scenes than others, to this very present day.

Now, while we can say that these interpretations are based on the best intentions, that is, touching upon modern theoretical physics as they do, but that nonetheless they are barking up completely the wrong tree with making appeals to the religiously guided people of this planet.

No, in truth, to make any such speculation, we must first debunk a couple of the ones that have gone before. For example, Springmeier's all-too-christian contention that there is a pervasive mind-control network of high-ranking social elites who trade in and torture abducted little children, and, oh yes, these types of people just happen to worship Satan, the antithesis of our symbolic God, so then THAT is why they are evil and what they are doing should be stopped. WRONG. LUNACY, IDIOCY.

Certainly worship of Pan the goat-foot God, or even Azazel the scape-goat, IS, indeed, a practical factor in the grand scheme of things, however just obviously not on so high a level. For example, all of the scare-tactics, terrorist torture and psychological abuse that can be inflicted between a programmer and the mind-control victim, none of these are skills required to be an active member of society, even president, and so there would prove to be little use for them in the more elite circles and in the higher branches of the world-wide conspiracy. All the tactics supposedly employed by the so-called "Satanic" conspiracy involve ceremonial petro, or blood-letting, rites. I see no need for someone as significant to the "grand con" publically as whoever is the modern "puppet dictator" of the "free world" to need to dirty their hands with the scum of unadulterated unwashed brains.

In other words, although, for example, Dick Cheney probably isn't one himself, real-life cannibals and psychic-vampires, most certainly do exist.

Now, the question of where these traits of abuse, and particularly malignant narcissistic personality disorder, come from is easy enough to answer without resorting to biblical Martians. The traits that appear to some to be so similar to the behaviour of devils or demons in others is largely based on the frustrations of otherwise naturally expressable sexual instincts by the rigid restrictions of society. This, admittedly sickening behaviour, is all too easily and erroneously considered to be "sickness" of the individual or even moreso of their mind, as it differs from a non-existent social "norm." The "sickness" with the limitations of our society leads to any sort of "sickness" in the brains of individuals, rather than, and never, the other way around.

Some people embrace this philosophy, "making the demon work for you," so-to-speak. They venture into life with all the trappings of confidence they are aware of as available to them, and manage to successfully navigate the "game" of society without ever addressing their own nascent upset with society's limitations, and of course, never therefore get around to addressing the abuses by which they came to identify those limits. But these people are, arguably, not only part of the problem, but ALL of it.

To stop the cycle of abuse, one cannot only take to their grave the secret of their own childhood abuses any more than one can contribute to stopping learned violence by not wanting to ever have a child. You have to not only remember, but come to understand, why and how your earliest social "programmers" abused you. The "how" is to understand the abuser themselves. To understand why is to understand the cycle of abuse.

If, for example, the abuser had preference of X,Y,Z for their torture victims, then it is those TRAITS (like in genetics) of the methods of abuse that will be propagated from one generation to the next. And, as I say, there is no real possibility to speculate on the original cause of this cycle, as with the concept of "original sin," without widely deviating from observable natural reality. Nor is there any way to stop the cycle's control over yourself, as an individual victim AND/OR abuser, by simply repressing the emotions or by not experiencing the universal pleasure of parenthood.

In any event, I do not doubt that the seemingly heinous crimes against humanity, perpetrated usually upon those whom they most love, among the mostly lower caste, below-the-poverty level, are at once shockingly uncivilised and completely irrelevant to any possible global conspiracy.

01.) What's worse, a one night stand or a bad relationship?

morally: one night stand emotionally: bad relationship

02.) Is it easier to forgive or forget?

these two are not mutually exclusive. Their semantic relativity is due entirely to the play on the words "give" and "get." That is why, when we read this question, our synapses fire two opposite answers at once. On the one hand, the idiom of christmas dictates "it is better to give than to receive," but on the other hand, that is obviously not true, and so too we know that to "forget" is easier than to "forgive."

03.) Can men and women be "just friends"?

it all depends on the mindfuck factor. If two likes meet they will bond, if two opposites meet they will clash. Sometimes best friends who flirt for a long time make the most passionate long-term lovers as well. Such a situation is, of course, the exception and not the rule.

04.) Dating co-workers...

I believe the opposite of "Work Earns Freedom." Therefore, I do not have "co-workers;" instead I have "peers." Those in my "peer" group, however, are often people I've never met, nor would I, in most cases, probably want to either. So, I guess that would mean "no" to the question.

05.) All expenses paid vacation to where?

the multiverse of n-dimensional parallel baby-universe realities on the exterior surface of time-space, of which the photic speed of light is the interior surface and comprises our current perception of the space-time continuum of our local universe. Thus far, most humans have only made this "trip" mentally, however there have been a select few alchemists (Enoch, Jesus, Jim Morrison) who have literally phased themselves physically out of our current material version of reality, and can come and go between this world the Heaven of pure light at will. Also, the experimentation with augmentation of this process either mechanically or energetically speeds up the process.

06.) On the way to the electric chair - what's your last meal?
all prison food is good. It is free. Free food tastes better than food you have to pay for.

07.) At the water park?
You're not really supposed to eat before swimming, nor, for that matter, is it technically polite to eat before getting the chair.

09.) Is flirting cheating?
Again, this type of loaded psychological question belongs in the brain-washing pages of "cosmo" magazine," not being brought to my attention in any form. This is one reason I don't have a girlfriend. I can't come up with a witty response to this type of question quickly enough, and this implies victory to her by turns.

10.) Would you rather have 1 great friend or 5 pals?
Theoretically I would prefer to have only one great friend rather than five good pals. One great friend can only stab you in the back once, but five pals can stab you in the back once each, five total. I'd rather not be stabbed in the back at all, but if I had to be, I'd rather it happen only once, even if it was bound to finish me off either way. I'd prefer the betrayal to death by a close friend to the conspiratorial coup-de-tat of mere acquaintances. Then again, I've been through having both, and been through losing both, and right now I have both, so I'm blessed to not have to worry about this.

11.) If someone called you an asshole would you be offended?
It would depend on who it was who was saying it. If it was a stranger in traffic, I would think nothing of it. However, if it was my own mother, I think I'd probably have a very different reaction.

12.) Are you ok with your significant other being friends with other guys/girls??
I don't have a "significant other" right now. I could deduce the answer to this, again, loaded, question and say the "politically correct" thing that would nicely pigeon-hole me into one stereotype personality or another. And, as a consumer (in particular an online shopper), the collection of such social data can prove useful. However, again, it is not something I would ever prefer having to associate with my own "significant other" by using such veiled language and political posturing.

13.) Would you live with someone without marrying them?
I live with my mom and I'm not married to her. Although, I have to admit that, the more you spend time with someone, the more you tend to morph into one another. This is even true for the elderly and their pets. Then again, aside from forced economic privation, there is no reason one would ever have to persistantly co-habitate with someone they didn't already love enough to want to merge with psychically.

14.) Favorite sport?
none.

15.) Is toilet paper hung over or under?
ultimately, it doesn't matter.

16.) Do you squeeze toothpaste from the middle or the end?
I don't believe in the dental hygiene conspiracy.

18.) Friends with benefits?

Again, that would really depend on who was asking, and, more importantly, what exactly they had in mind as "benefits." For example, I would consider getting free legal advice from a friend who was a lawyer, or getting my taxes done for free by a friend who was an accountant, better benefits to me from their friendships than simply "sex" with a friend I found attractive.

19.) Do you believe in angels?

I believe we're being Watched.

21.) Have you ever flirted with someone you had no interest in?

This type of question is useful to establish sexual-role confidence (level of machismo or cattyness) in the respondent relative to their own attitude toward exactly such confidence tests as this, which usually occur in public such that the roles can then be socially reinforced by a group dynamic. If the respondent reacts in a cavalier way (quick to answer yes or no either way) or if they reply in a thought-provoking and stimulating manner (by not agreeing to compete) will usually determine their level of success within their local group dynamic.

22.) Ever kissed a random person and then walked away?

I can't remember.

23.) Would you buy bootleg merchandise?

Again, to my mind, "property" itself is "theft." To put that more bluntly so our friends in the CIA, who are monitoring this very survey on behalf of their private-sector sponsors, can hear: "if a 'seller' can bootleg merchandise, then the 'buyer' can just as easily bootleg it too." Without the middle-management of "money" as a third-party substance, all trade for goods and services could occur directly. All we would lose would be the ability to earn interest off intangible investments in non-existent future commodities.

24.) Is it ever ok to ask out your ex's best friend?

Apparently not. I did something like that (I asked out my best friend's ex- though, other way around), and it hasn't worked out well for me in the long-run after that.

25.) If you could play any sport professionally, what would it be?

none.

26. Ever break up with someone and regret it?

yes.

27.) Are you a jealous person?

yes.

28.) Would you ever have plastic surgery?

not for vanity's sake, no.

29.) Has Chuck Norris ever come to your house?

no.

30.) Who has the sexiest accent?

my ex-.

34.) Are you a beach, country, mountain or city person?

desert.

38.) Where do you spend most of your money?
it's not really "mine." I keep my economy fluid.

39.) Are you currently working at a job that you hate?
no, I'm currently filling out a "cosmo" survey asking leading, social-role questions to help the CIA determine my shopping habits. I don't hate my job, because I don't have one. I have a "career," and as much as I learned why everyone hates their "job," I learned just as well how to pick a "career" by finding how to make money doing what I normally do and what I enjoy already anyway. Of course, the career of "pure philosopher" (ie. stand-up comic or social-studies teacher) pays shite, so I picked up the scribbling biz.

40.) Have you and your friends ever gotten a piercing at a piercing party?
I and a couple friends once performed "psychic surgery" on me to remove my soul. We were drunk on red wine, it was a full moon, and we happened to be in a grave yard with some razor blades.

41.) Would you ever attend a piercing party if asked?
"I'll try anything once." ~SIGH~ what a pedestrian question.

45.) Would you consider yourself adventurous?
no.

47.) Can you shoot pool?
not well.

48.) Would you sing karaoke in front of co-workers/friends?
I don't have co-workers, and my friends are all in bands. You do the math.

49.) Ever skip school and spent the day at the beach?
yes. in college though, so it hardly counts.

50.) When you marry, will you wear black?
I'd prefer a kilt.

54.) Have you ever sat and hoped for a phone call?
I am now. I'm expecting the president to call me on the banana phone at any moment.

55.) Favorite Muppets character?
I identify most with Kermit the frog, but only because there were no goth muppets. In the 1950's there was an anarchist muppet who went around blowing things up. He would be my default.

PS. LOL! THX S.S. Blomberg!

this is Damien's friend Jon Gee.

I have some links and NYC addies for potential contacts to sell the copyrights to the interview tapes and any other personal research information you have.

these people will offer free advice:

<blockquote>

><http://www.theosophy-ny.org/>

The New York Theosophical Society

242 East 53 Street

New York, NY 10022
212-753-3835 or 212-758-5521
NYTS@theosophy-ny.org
</blockquote>

(take their advice with a grain of salt, don't sell the rights to them in the first meeting, but don't be fooled if they act un-interested either. Shop around and beef up the bidders) these people will buy the info in its original medium:

<blockquote>
><http://www.theosophy-ny.org/NYTS%20Library.htm>

(they are a bookstore only though, do NOT sell them the tapes or research material, they would be the lowest bidders.)

all are operated by the Theosophical Society headquarters in NYC: ><http://www.theosophy-ny.org/Contact%20Us.htm>

Please contact these groups in the order listed. If you work from the top down, you will benefit most.

these people will not buy the info directly, but will probably be funding the group you end up selling it to:

<blockquote>
><http://www.lucistrust.org/>
Lucis Trust, founded by Alice and Foster Bailey

Before beginning your "quest" to sell this stuff, please visit this location. If you are impressed by it, then you will know what to expect from it.

You can also attempt to contact your mother's former literary agent via >Quest Publishing and they can offer you some (probably free) advice on who else you can contact for help with this.

I know the real value of the material you have. If it is lost, or wasted, it would be a great shame. It can benefit you tremendously to barter it for contacts with some people in these groups. They are EXTREMELY wealthy, and, as I understand it, you are poor. They will also be VERY interested in some of the info you have (even if this may surprise you). Therefore, please, handle this affair properly.

Remember, man: Don't sell the goldmine you are sitting on for chump change just since you need quick cash. Better to take two or three days, make contacts and find a high bidder. I promise you there will be interested parties nearby who can hook you up with mad flow.

I'm here. Been working on other projects. Expect a new "what's new" newsletter soon, :G

I'm not backburning this material though. I have a very far-fetched new take on the events inside the planes on 9-11. I read the "Last Testament" of Jim Jones recently - although the transcript of fbi tape Q042 given in "Secret and Suppressed," ed. Jim Keith, is not the same as the transcript available online, but also the online transcript is cooberated by the audio of the recording itself, also available online. It gave me some very interesting insights into the type of extremely duressed mind-set shared both by the Jonestown cult suicides and the passengers of flights AAL11, UAL175, AAL77 and UAL93 on 9-11, 2001. Brace yourself, because what I'm about to propose to you is very far-fetched, even for me, and it will probably shock you.

I've spoken before about the drone planes I believe were used to override the cockpit controls. I believe these also used mind-control technology (VLF EMF and ZPE) to project inside the minds of the passengers the image of an attacker where none actually existed.

This theory does not contradict the hijacker theory either. For example, the calls made from UAL93 indicated two things: the pilots were in the back of the airplane and provide us with the information that the "hijackers" were calm and said, "they have our demands, we are returning to the airport."

One of the majour loopholes in the "hijacker" theory, however, is that not only were most of the identites of the alledged hijackers proved to be "disinformation" by the fbi, but the number of hijackers believed to be involved overall does not jibe with the numbers of hijackers reported by the callers from UAL93. In short, there would not have been enough "hijackers" to take and keep hostage everyone onboard as well as fly the plane.

What I believe now may be possible is that there were some minimal number of "hijackers" (perhaps "sleepers agents" designed to respond to ELF mind-control), however they were as much out of control of the planes on that day as the pilots themselves would have been. The planes were being remote-controlled, and, I believe, the unmanned drones remote-controlling them were also heavily effecting the minds of everyone onboard, including any passengers as well as any sleeper "terrorists."

The result of the drone plane's VLF EMF remote-control of the plane and mind-control of the passengers (including the pilots and any potential "terrorists") was, and this is the most far-fetched and potentially shocking aspect of this theory, the appearance between the passengers and the empty cockpit of a hallucinated presence, the focal emphasis of the drone-plane's mind-control projection. To some this "being" would have appeared as like an angel of light, while to others it would appear as a small grey alien, while to others, it might have even appeared as "terrorists."

The role of this "alien" presence was to nullify the passengers' capacity for resistance, to essentially confuse and numb them into compliance with the situation until it would be too late for them to prevent their fate. In three of the four cases this seems to have worked, however on UAL93 the passengers are believed to have attempted to "re-take" the cockpit. Enter Jim Jones.

Jim Jones, for a brief history, was an "awakened" sleeper-agent (ie a mind-controlled subject of CIA MK-ULTRA research) who led a cult of poor San Francisco African-Americans to South America. Eventually there was a scandal that threatened to expose the CIA's involvement in "Jonestown" as a forced-labour / drug-experimentation concentration-camp, and so Jones, a lisping, non-charismatic "leader" convinced everyone in the cult to drink poisoned cool-aid. All the members of the cult in Jonestown (estimated at around 1000 elderly, poor and children) complied and committed mass suicide in 1978.

Now, on a brief tangent in topic, I believe that "remote-viewing" can work through time as well as space, seeing from one social-psychic "peak" to the next in the future, and looking out across the entire valley between them. ie. There is psychic "terrain" to time just as there is physical "terrain" to space.

I think there is a definite connection between Jonestown (an MK-ULTRA, ie. LSD, concentration-camp) and 9-11 (which I now perceive as being an experiment combining OSS Project Gladio and FBI Project Northwoods with high-tech Area-51 type Air Force tech with CIA mind-control experimentation projects, such as MK-ULTRA itself). I would go so far as to say I believe Jim Jones was, in some crude and doped up or hypnotised fashion, channeling the entire group of hostages on UAL93 (or perhaps one of the other planes, or perhaps the same scenario carried out in all four only taking the longest for the last).

I'll provide some more info on Jones' "Last Testament" ("death-tape" FBI Q042) later tonight, as well as links to the online transcripts and the online version of the tape. For now though, I'd like everyone to ruminate on the theory, however far-fetched, I have just described.

I think this theory neatly sums up the controversial "love v. fear" philosophy that tends to be perpetrated by most of the idiots who research these events. Imagine the "fear" necessary to overcome to approach such a truly alien presence as is caused as hallucination by hypnosis and VLF (microwave) mind-control. Only one who "loved" this "threat" or "attacker" presence could safely approach it and pass by it to the cockpit, to defuse the trigger charge set to detonate the thermite planted throughout the walls of the target buildings (only the previous week in the case of the WTC towers).

Of course, the futility of over-coming the mind-bending emotional-controls and getting past the "alien" presence to the cockpit only too late to prevent the drone craft from remote-crashing the planes on their targets is probably too much for the average human mind to cope with at present, and this is why the idiots who research 9-11 often boil the impact of the events down to the ridiculous Bill Hicks / Donnie Darko "love v. fear" axis.

As I say, I'll get more info about Jim Jones posted up later tonight, if possible, but for now please enjoy this ~GOD~ "mashup" of some excerpts of Jim Jones' "death tape" dubbed over the Doors' song "the End."

hey man,

just talked with you on teh telephone, not sure if you'll get this message before I get off to D's at 6 or not, but it's not an emergency or nuthin, so no worries.

I just wanted to mention briefly about my sum of $250 per interview. I realised immediately that must sound like a very lowball figure. Let me elaborate on it a little:

1) that's what I'd personally expect to get because

1A) I live in a less expensive city, and off a much lower income budget, so you should take that into account.

1B) I'd only ever go up to the bookstore level because I'd be afraid to go in and have a meeting with actual wealthy theosophists. Wealth is one thing I'm very intimidated by. Theosophy is another. LOL.

2) Accounting for these two factors, I'd probably want to play the market and build the interest to maximize value per worth.

2A) you should def. play the "family heirloom" angle at first.

2B) you should def. claim to have other bidders (even if only a "guy in Florida" meaning Damien). You can make up any figure you want as our bid, and even give my phone-number as a reference if necessary.

2C) if you think, in the moment, that $1000 per interview is a low-ball estimate (which, if you talk to someone from the TSoNY in their office and it looks super-nice, you probably should), then quote them that as "our" bid and then see what they say.

2D) schedule a second meeting, but give them a short excerpt (of your choice for quality) on a cd. Don't give them a complete interview, make a mix-cd of clips from them all.

2E) do not let them give you the "if we're interested we'll call you" line. Tell them the second meeting is so you can have the mix-disk back. Tell them, and be super-professional and up-front about it, you want to sell them "the rights to this information." Don't call them interviews, call it "information." They love that type of shit.

2F) don't mention anything about not letting their "competitors" know their bid. At the second meeting, you can say you told the "bidder" (use that word for sure) in Florida their bid, and then up the ante from there.

2G) as you are leaving, you might casually ask the person if they, themselves, are familiar with the Lucis Trust. As soon as they answer yes or no, just leave.

3) that is what I would do in the meeting, if I was in your shoes. I would also, however, before or after the meeting, actually call Lucis Trust and jot down the name of who answers the phone, or even an extension. It's not necessary to really talk to them at all about it, just hang up after that, or say "wrong number" LOL.

4) again, remember that the quote of $250 should be considered the bookstore worth of the tapes themselves. The TSoNY is only a branch of a global network. They are very rich and would probably pay $250 to someone even if they were dressed up in a clown costume. That's the reason rich theosophists scare me:

4A) they are basically NAZIs. The theories of Madame Blavatsky inspired the eugenics of the Holocaust, and afterwards the people that believed in eugenics all hid behind the Theosophist movement. The Lucis Trust is a round-table group for rich occultist ritual magicians, especially ones who are not as disciplined to be kind as are most common Free Masons. Yeah, I totally hate these guys, which is half the reason I want you to rip them off for all you can get. The other reason though, is:

4B) because they have a lot of money, you can obviously get a lot of money from them. They have a lot more money than any other occult religion now. They are richer than Scientology, but not as rich as Mormons. They will not mind giving out, ultimately, as much money as you could even imagine asking for. If you "ball-parked" the "information's" worth at $5,000 a tape, they would not balk. They would take you seriously. They could easily pay you $25,000 a tape, but they would be more likely not to say so, and only more likely to do so if they think you have more than just 4 or 5 tapes. They would see you as a good investment. They would see you as a benefit to them.

5) ultimately, I'd like to see you just make some contacts with people on this level because they are the type of people your mom was running with, only these people are even more upfront about the business aspects. You should hopefully, of course, obviously only if you want to, make some contacts of people involved in the organisations who are a little less on the "business end." If they know the "business-end" people, and meet you through them though, they will take you super-seriously, and you can learn a lot about the type of stuff that interested your mom (ie. Dion Fortune, etc.). Of course, caveat that I have a much greater interest in the occult than you might, since I have already joined a group calling itself the "Illuminati" (although they are basically just Libertarians and not authentic to Weishaupt's original order of that name) here in Tallahassee, and formed my own online version of an "occult order" myself.

5A) in fact, it occurs to me, if you could at any point mention my website to anyone you talk to, I'd like to get that info out there to these people as well. It's benpadijah.com. Just pronounce it Ben Pad-eye-ah and they will probably pick up on the reference (to the occult name of Jesus, known as Bar Pandera in Roman).

Anywho man, I've probably kept you a little longer than a NY minute, but I do enjoy this type of communication very much, and hope to hear good things from you about this project as soon as possible.

-Jon

Okay, so, here is a summation of my assertions thus far:

A) there were no passengers on the planes and only a few workers as could not be avoided in the buildings that day. I believe the estimate of thousands of people killed (exactly how many thousand depending entirely on who you ask) is a complete lie.

B) the planes were remote controlled. For the actual collisions, small remotely operated guide-planes were used for exact targeting. (the UFO seen near the WTC, the "missile" in DC, and the "white jet" in Shanksville all attest to this fact.)

C) I've spoken before about the drone planes I believe were used to override the cockpit controls. I believe these also used mind-control technology (VLF EMF and ZPE) to project inside the minds of the passengers the image of an attacker where none actually existed. The result of the drone plane's VLF EMF remote-control of the plane and mind-control of the passengers (including the pilots and any potential "terrorists") was, and this is the most far-fetched and potentially shocking aspect of this theory, the appearance between the passengers and the empty cockpit of a hallucinated presence, the focal emphasis of the drone-plane's mind-control projection. To some this "being" would have appeared as like an angel of light, while to others it would appear as a small grey alien, while to others, it might have even appeared as "terrorists." The role of this "alien" presence was to nullify the passengers' capacity for resistance, to essentially confuse and numb them into compliance with the situation until it would be too late for them to prevent their fate. In three of the four cases this seems to have worked, however on UAL93 the passengers are believed to have attempted to "re-take" the cockpit.

D) the WTC buildings were destroyed by bombs planted inside the building prior to the event. This implies conspiracy. In truth, the people who planted these bombs inside were probably the former Iraqi Royal Guard, brought over after Gulf War I, who also orchestrated the OK City bombing in the late 90's. But this only provides a "fall-back" story of collusion between Al-Qeida and Iraq under Saddam that is not true either.

E) The events were entirely orchestrated by parties inside the CIA commanding the rest of the intelligence "community" and defense dept. via their "man in the White House" the coup-de-tat dictator Pres. W. Bush. Consider that, under GHWB, our current president's father, the CIA funded: 1) the Afghan Mujahadeen who became the Taliban and Al Qeida, 2) Saddam Hussein's Iraqi National Guard, and were in turn themselves funded largely by the sales of crack cocaine imported and processed from S. American cocaine (under Noriega), poppy grown in war-torn Afghanistan, imported and processed into heroin, and by the House of Saud, the potentates of the worst human rights violators around today beside China, and oil-rich Saudi Arabia. Also note that, since GWB's ascension as appointed dictator, the people who had worked for his father GHWB in the CIA to orchestrate these transfers of funds have all gotten appointed to the highest positions of political authority in the land of the "free." Big. Red. Flag.

F) the faction within the CIA in charge of 9-11 are actually fascists and NAZI-collaborators both during and after WWII, and they are acting in collaboration with a vast network of double-agent spies and "sleeper" agent politicians all funded off Swiss gold stolen during WWII, which was, itself, in turn orchestrated by globalist banking families as a means of furthering the social control-method of capitalism. (The old bankers also funded the Soviet communists though, so don't think of this as only a "right-wing" conspiracy either.)

G) The banking families, in turn, were only employing the methods of private-interest consolidation of public wealth via sales (as opposed to taxes) that was employed via the Knights Templar (actually funded via the national rulers by the Vatican) during the Crusades, which in turn was then used to justify the Inquisition. This method of "killing the messenger" was employed to discredit the non-Zionist Diaspora (by the Holocaust), Nationalised Socialism (ie. Leninism), "fascism" (ie. gov't supply-side spending, later used by Reagan to bankrupt Russia by glutting the defense industry) as well as far-east "Imperialism" (ie. non-economic dictatorships) all in one fell swoop during WWII. In the Cold War they managed to discredit "Sovietism" as "collectivism" while making "Americanism" out to be "individualism" when in truth the opposite was true. The same effect has been used "covertly" (going un-covered by the US media) since then by the CIA to overthrow democratic politicians and install loyal political supporters of US business interests. I "believe" the same group has been behind all of these atrocities between the Crusades then and the current "war" in Iraq now. Moreover, this is only an active wing of a group whose passive wing was simply more dominant 2000 years ago than it is now. The group that the "active" (sun-crazed destroyers) wing and the "passive" (dark-ages, Maudner-minimum) wing belong to is a group of scientists that, and again this is only my "belief" or "theory," pre-existed the world-flood(s) at the end of the last ice-age (ie. originally the first homo-sapien chieftens, later called "Atlanteans," who we considered "primitive" and yet who erected the massive megaliths of that era no less than the highly civilised empire of Old Kingdom Egypt their own.)

H) these ancient conspirators discovered the existence of a global energy grid that has allowed them to mind-control the masses and to time-travel themselves. I call this elsewhere the "Enochian Communications System" because it was first understood by homo-sapiens at the time of this biblical patriarch (ie. before the world-flood) and because it is based on John Dee's "Enochian" system as a framework for combining all the existing world religious "systems" into one, based not on myth and faith but on an extremely long calendar and a very high form of science (essentially, the study of esoteric systems for its own sake).

In my next few posts I'll address each of these eight points individually. However, before I get into the "nitty-gritty" of 9-11, here's some more illegal facts about Bush and his cronies who were actually behind the scenes controlling the event.

[quote="benpadiiah"]A) there were no passengers on the planes and only as few workers as could not be avoided in the buildings that day. I believe the estimate of thousands of people killed (exactly how many thousand depending entirely on who you ask) is a complete lie.[/quote]

Now, obviously, this begs the question, where did they all go?

We are absolutely convinced that there were people who died on 9-11, and that they numbered "in the thousands." (usually the estimate is about 2000, comensurate with the calendrical millennium celebrated contemporarily). But add up the passengers on the planes. Even count the heads of the hijackers. Now, imagine that the rest are made up from victims inside the Pentagon and WTC Towers. Let's say there were around 500 killed at the Pentagon, which seems an unbelievably high sum considering what little damage the actual building sustained. This would leave anywhere from 500 to a 1000 people in either of the twin towers that morning. But Sept. eleventh that year was slow Tuesday and there had been construction (installing new security systems) in many of the floors the prior week that meant many of the usual employees who would have been there that day were actually off otherwise occupied when they would normally have been at work.

[img]http://www.september11victims.com/september11victims/images/Sun\_12\_5.jpg[/img]
-source: <http://www.september11victims.com/> which also gives a reliably complete list of every victim of the tragedy of 9-11:

http://www.september11victims.com/september11victims/victims\_list.htm

totalling them at:

[quote="911 victims"]C ONFIRMED DEAD: 2948
REPORTED DEAD: 24
REPORTED MISSING: 24
TOTAL: 2996[/quote]

which somewhat explains the erratic listing of numbers of dead even in the very authoritative and annotated wikipedia online encyclopaedia:

[quote]2,993 (including 19 terrorists)[/quote]
-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/September\_11%2C\_2001\_attacks

[quote]In total, 2,974 people are killed.[/quote]
-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/September\_11

[quote]killing over 3000 people[/quote]
-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/September\_2001

Nevertheless, if you look at the number objectively, it is still a seemingly very small toll to pay in such a massive tragedy to the national consciousness. Now do not look at this as from the perspective of the old eugenics saying: "if you want to make an omlette, you have to break some eggs." Instead, look at it with calm and compassion, and see that the value of some 2950 people issued death certificates on that day is not in dispute, only being weighed against the response taken in defense on that day, which has led us, inexorably, here to the war in Iraq, which has claimed between:

[quote="killed in Iraq"]
Min 69045
Max 75495[/quote]

-source: <http://www.iraqbodycount.org/>

Iraqi civilians alone, in addition to the currently 3980 "Coalition" fatalities, whose lives are no more valuable than any Iraqi child's. Here's a chart graphing cumulative fatalities of US soldiers,

British soldiers, Iraqi conscripts, private sub-contractors, the media (all party to being "Coalition" members) etc:

-source: <http://icasualties.org/oif/Cumulative.aspx>
from: <http://icasualties.org/oif/>

Ultimately, we absolutely HAVE to ask ourselves:

are the 2996 max number of dead we suffered on 9-11 worth the cost of the max 79475 (to date) other human beings who have been killed to revenge them?

Please understand that my purpose in making this comparison is neither to discredit nor bolster the opinion of either group of our dearly departed. I, for one, do not need mere "belief" in some vague, mediated concept of an "afterlife," because I, for one, know the mechanisms of reincarnation, and understand the science of transcendence.

I know that there can be communication with the dead, however that it can be difficult if this is focused only through one conduit. The dead de-coagulate, become discoporeal, and exist in a vague, nebulous, cloud-like state relative to our usual density of perception.

I believe this is what must have happened to those who died on 9-11. Now I have said, there were no people on the planes. They had, in a very real, however spiritual sense, already died. They were in a position (in a remote-controlled kamikaze mission) of utter helplessness to prevent their inevitable and perpetually encroaching demise. In this situation, like in no regular hijack situation, they had a very real feeling of being in a certain-death scenario. Thus, by the time their physical bodies had died, their ethereal minds had, for the most part, already ascended and left behind their empty husks.

All of this certainly sounds very alien to me, but just wait. It'll get weirder real quick.

-J

[quote="benpadiah"]B) the planes were remote controlled. For the actual collisions, small remotely operated guide-planes were used for exact targeting. (the UFO seen near the WTC, the "missile" in DC, and the "white jet" in Shanksville all attest to this fact.)[/quote] first let's look at these specific accounts, and, to be as specific as possible, let's only look at the evidence that was captured that day on video.

First, because this is such a shocking topic to discuss so openly, I'd like to introduce the idea of UFOs having been seen on 9-11 at the WTC by showing you the video of the first plane crashing into the south tower. So remember, the point of view is downtown, closer to the Bronx, so expect to hear some swearing. After this we'll look at some pictures from the north side as well.

<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/911UFO/2stplane.mpg>

What I want you to pay extra-careful super-special close attention to is something dark and angular darting upward and to the right across the screen from lower left, just at the moment the newscaster says: "first plane." The second UFO follows this in the snap-zoom and appears just to the right of the top of the airplane-struck tower. It appears less dark, more silvery metallic, however it is only in frame a second or two before the camera shakes and loses sight of it. You can see this second UFO just as the newscaster says, "that went into."

I'll come back to that clip of the first plane hitting (the footage was recorded live and aired shortly after the second plane struck), but first let me quickly introduce another example of the same type of unidentified airborne phenomenon (the literal definition of a UFO), this time involving the second plane, the one that struck the north tower.

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/911UFO/wtc+ufo\_animation.gif[/img]

I want to warn you, this is going to come as a big shock to you probably, as it would to a lot of people. Most people are still clinging to what Jim Morrison called "the wooly cotton brains of infancy" and "the young child's fragile, egg-shell mind." You have been conditioned to look at the plane. But this was only misdirection all along.

So, we've now seen this phenomenon during the impact of both the planes that struck the WTC "Twin" Towers. Here's a couple more shots of one of these unidentified flying object thingies hovering over WTC7 not only earlier in the day, while the twin towers still stood, but still there even later in the afternoon when WTC7 itself finally imploded.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/911UFO/wtc7-orb-flashing-frame-cir.jpg>[/img][img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/911UFO/big7falls-orb-flashing-circ.jpg>[/img] here's a still from the second plane-strike. The UFO is the bright white dot in the far right, about level with the impact:

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/911UFO/wtc\_secondplane+UFO.jpg[/img] here's a couple stills I made myself from the mp3 clip I just posted. This is the "second" object (appearing from the right side and remaining more or less stationary):

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/911UFO/object2frame1.jpg>[/img][img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/911UFO/object2frame2.jpg>[/img]

Notice these two very specific characteristic states of appearance for these specific, 9-11 related UFOs. They appear to "shape-shift" between a flickering shadow and a shiny sphere. I'll come back to these in a moment.

First let me say that the people who are still investigating the originally playfully realised fact of the "flight of the bumble-planes" scenario are plagued by disinformation. For every valid photograph one can provide from the events that depicts an actual visible phenomenon, there will also be one that is a total fake forgery made to stir up confusion by anarchists. Consider these following examples:

I think this one is definitely my favourite:

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/911UFO/ObviousFakes/UF12-WTC.gif>[/img]

it shows what appears to be, quite clearly really, a bird-like, flying human almost the entire size of the one of the jet-liners themselves. Now I won't say outright that this is fake, but please do take into account that this particular graphic was CNN footage that was then re-distributed (presumably in this altered form) by PAX (Christian) TV.

On the page where I found out about the UFO's now being referred to as "Orbs" (a term I'll explain in a moment), the above PAX-hoax was de-bunked simply enough as a computer-graphic of a bird, and their counter-example was this image:

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/911UFO/ObviousFakes/ufo.jpg>[/img]

This image is also obviously either an angel or a bird. Mostly the forgers can be rooted out easily, though, since the phenomena they describe, and the footage they produce as "proof" of this, is never in-line with the remainder of the evidence that exists from all the fact-seeking researchers into these events.

Consider this next batch of Japanese contributions to the 9-11 Truth Movement's cause, :G :

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/911UFO/ObviousFakes/wtc2x.gif>[/img]

The trajectory of this ridiculously otherwise visible flight-path through the city immediately reminded me of Keanu Reeves' character Neo "flying to the rescue" in the 2002 sequel to the 1999 blockbuster the Matrix.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/911UFO/ObviousFakes/wtc-ufo1.gif>[/img]

The newest footage to have "appeared" is this configuration, which shows the same sort of elongated, formless black streak as in the PAX "angel" and the "Neo saving Trinity" phenomenon. As such, I would class all the elongated dark streak phenomenon as suspect of forgery.

Instead, the people that used to study the "bumble-plane" theory, and who now refer to the same technology, since witnessed, then only speculated, simply as "Orbs," study the dual phenomenon of the shadowy, dark angular shifting abstract refraction of light exemplified half the time and the other aspect of appearance of what seems logically to be the same object, the mercurial sphere shape from which the "Orb's" take their name.

They agree, unanimously, on the more logical, scientific answer, that these phenomenon are merely optical-illusions caused by a new kind of "stealth" technology developed by air-force "black-ops" (such as Area 51). They say the "Orbs" can "cloak."

However, if you zoom in close enough on some of these objects, such as the very clear and sharply defined images in frames 11 and 12 of the second plane impact UFO above, you can definately discern they are not always merely "spherical." Sometimes they come in pairs, like the humps on a camel. In fact, if you were able to make the "cloaked" aircraft out perfectly, the "bumble-plane" and "Orb" theorists claim, you would only be looking at an advanced air-force stealth plane, but nothing actually extraterrestrial in origin.

The "bumble-plane" itself is the "Global Hawk," an UAV (un-manned aerial vehicle).

[img]http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/911UFO/GlobalHawk/Global\_Hawk-1.jpg[/img] here is an early schematic print and model of it.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/911UFO/GlobalHawk/ghawkuav.jpg>[/img]
Here it is in a hangar for size-comparison.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/911UFO/GlobalHawk/globalhawk.jpg>[/img]
Here it is preparing to be deployed sometime around the time of the crash of Flight TWA800 in the late 90's (which is when I first heard of it).

Originally, UAVs were used as spy-planes across otherwise harsh or hostile territory by US soldiers in combat in Saudi-Arabia during the first Gulf War. However the application to the aircraft of the most advanced and latest ("star wars" era gadgets) stealth tech from the "skunk works" and other clandestine operators proves that not only could it have been used to remote-control the jet-liners on 9-11, but it could also have served to electro-magnetically mesmerize them to incapacitation. From what I know about the electro-magnetic "sound-buffers" used on stealth "black" helicopters in the early 90's they can be used either to muffle the sound of the copter's rotors, or they can be turned "inside-out" and used as a projective energy device capable of honing in on its target with laser-like precision.

That big camel's hump-like bulge above the rear thrust engine is a huge sound-muffler. The front "hump" where the cockpit would be is where all the electronic surveillance equipment is housed.

Alot of the mind-control victims' testimonies and case-work I've researched agrees on the ability of "stealth" type technology being applied to use in the field of MK. I'll get to this more in my next post, which will actually deal straight up with the "alien" aspect of my theory. For now though, one last parting contrail of a thought before I pass the fudge out.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/911UFO/orb-trail-cross-w360.gif>[img]

Why aren't more people talking about these apparent UFO's at the scene on 9-11? Could it be because they have lost their faith in the extraterrestrial mythos and now believe all UFOs are just "Bumble-Planes" cloaked to appear like "Orbs"? What does this bode for our collective unconsciousness then?

on that note, g'night, sweet dreams, I'm out.

[quote="benpadiah"]C) I've spoken before about the drone planes I believe were used to override the cockpit controls. I believe these also used mind-control technology (VLF EMF and ZPE) to project inside the minds of the passengers the image of an attacker where none actually existed. The result of the drone plane's VLF EMF remote-control of the plane and mind-control of the pasengers (including the pilots and any potential "terrorists") was, and this is the most far-fetched and potentially shocking aspect of this theory, the appearance between the passengers and the empty cockpit of a hallucinated presence, the focal emphasis of the drone-plane's mind-control projection. To some this "being" would have appeared as like an angel of light, while to others it would appear as a small grey alien, while to others, it might have even appeared as "terrorists." The role of this "alien" presence was to nullify the passengers' capacity for resistance, to essentially confuse and numb them into compliance with the situation until it would be too late for them to prevent their fate. In three of the four cases this seems to have worked, however on UAL93 the passengers are believed to have attempted to "re-take" the cockpit.[/quote]

Let me start here with a brief summary of mind-control operations in N. America from the 1950's on.

By now, everyone (and, I'm guessing, especially everyone here) already knows about MK-ULTRA, the CIA's series of experiments using LSD during the early 1960's. The stated goal was to find a "truth serum" (apparently one more reliable than sodium-pentathol, a mere salt-based placebo). Most of the documents were destroyed by Senator Jesse Helms in the late 1970's, but hundreds of lesser classified documents have been released since then confirming the use of LSD in projects such as ARTICHOKE (early 60's), BIG CITY (mid-60's) and MK-SEARCH (late 60's and, presumeably, ongoing at the time of Helms destruction of the documents, since it was the most recent one listed then).

It should be noted that MK-ULTRA used other methods of experimentation than only LSD, and that, by the time of Project Search, was using all sorts of drugs and hypnotic sessions to research more than only its original goal of the perfect "truth serum." It should also be recalled that the first CIA tests with LSD were done in the local prison and mental asylum of Vaceville, California. This patient testing pool was utilised straight through till the mid 1970's, when, although never admitted in the US, the CIA was conducting experiments in Canada with Dr. Ewen Cameron.

Even by the mid to late 1960's Dr. Jose DelGado had demonstrated remote EMF "mind-control" by implanting a receptor chip in a bull's brain and shocking it when it charged at him. Although, as they say, "the record runs dry" on CIA mind-control (the designation MK refers to "mind-kontrolle" experiments done in Germany at Dachau by IG Farben, business-partners of IBM) after MK-SEARCH in the mid-70's, it is clear that there were other methods of mind-control being employed by that point than merely drug testing.

In the early 1980's, the CIA began another phase of mind-experimentation. This was Project Star-Gate, research into military applications of "remote-viewing." Although the released information on this does not indicate that drugs were used, many of the same sorts of technology used by the mid-70's in MK projects were employed in the remote viewing operations.

Without going too much further into matters of mind-experimentation later than Star-Gate in the mid-80's, it should be obvious by now that later reports by alledged victims claiming UFO abduction and making reference also to high-technologies allowing time-travel being used by or in conjunction with government complicity (although we hesitate to name a specific branch of the intelligence agencies, and prefer the joke-term "M.I.B." for men-in-black) must be taken to some extent more seriously in light of past evidence of covert operations involving US citizens.

What I'll talk about now instead of the more theoretical implications of these later projects is some of the material known to have been developed by the earlier projects that we know more about. In other words, it's not necessary to talk about the implications of "implant" technology here, but one thing I will go into instead is the type of messages that could be delivered using such "implants" and then I'll mention a bit more about the scientific principles and possible technology allowing for the projection of sub-audial or direct cortex stimulation.

One of the methods used by Dr. Cameron in the Candian MK-ULTRA experiments was called "psychic driving." Although this technique is ill-defined in the popular press that do, indeed, admit to its practise, the victims' testimony on its technique and methods is quite clear. It consisted of being induced to a deep hypnotic state either by use of drugs, electro-schock, ritual sexual abuse, or other forms of over-stimulus trauma. Following this a single message would be repeated to the deep-unconscious subject, sometimes for hours on end.

The effects of hearing this phrase in a conscious state were then ascertained. Depending on the inducing trauma involved, the subject was found to act accordingly: it would reduce them to the unconscious state exactly as does a "post-hypnotic suggestion" and their conscious-self would simply "go to sleep" until a second command-phrase or "post-hypnotic suggestion" was repeated to re-induce consciousness. This period of ego-unconsciousness is known as a "black-out" and is also reported by many UFO abductees.

"Psychic driving," according to those who underwent the process, was actually much more effective than the observers of their behaviour in this event could account for though.

Subsequent research has come to indicate that, for each traumatic dissociative event we experience in our lives, a new personality is born and the one which existed before the experience figuratively "dies" to our consciousness, but is, actually, retained and simply "goes to sleep" or "blacks out." This allows deeply "repressed" subconscious or unconscious memories to be re-experienced under hypnosis, and accounts for the apparent lapse in the hypnosis subject's into the vocal patterns and thoughts they had at the time the remembered experience originally occurred.

Thus, it was discovered, by inducing a traumatic experience, the subject's prime-persona could be "blocked out" and a subsequent persona would be "born" or would "re-emerge." Now, the ability to trigger this effect after the fact also implies the ability to trigger this effect at a distance.

Usually we have one primary "voice in our head," and this we control by our own will-power and it can think whatever it knows words to express. However, there have been countless reports filed by prisoners, mental patients and children claiming that, at times, they can "hear" other voices inside their minds than merely the "primary voice," that these other voices seem to be able to hear and communicate with the "primary voice," and that, sometimes, the "primary voice" has not been under their control, and, and their will-power entirely circumvented.

If a patient claims to "hear voices," the knee-jerk reaction is to call them "crazy." If a patient reports that they have "answered back" to the voices they claim to hear, they are diagnosed clinically "psychotic" and usually locked away. It is usually this very disempowerment over their own fate that causes such a person to suffer a "psychotic break" at which point they are no longer "in control over themselves."

Excluding the use of drugs to account for these events, we can only admit in good conscience to a certain degree of possibly factual telepathy or "mind-reading" as some form of genetic mutation. Beyond this, however, to admit to the notion of mutual psychic "rapport" between two people is considered dangerous to each individual's willpower, and to admit to perpetual telepathy between all individuals is considered very dangerous to the individuality and the will-power of us all. However, beyond this, we have to admit there must be a reason for this "knee-jerk" feeling of our individuality's ego being threatened to occur.

As early as the 1950's the FBI had uncovered the use by MUZAK radio of the use of "subliminal advertising." The sub-audial messages were considered benign enough, including "buy more" and "don't steal," however some of them were of a more esoteric nature such as "mommy and I are one," and "it's okay to do better than daddy."

The messages later reported by prison inmates and psychiatric patients were of a much more malignant and direct intent. One such example is "I have the devil's heart inside me." Another is "whenever I remember this I will cut and hurt myself."

It is clear to anyone who has studied Leary's psychological analysis of the 8-circuits I mentioned earlier that such "primal" messages of "approach" (ie. relax and shop) and "retreat" / "attack" (ie. suicide or kill-switches) are meant to appeal to our most deeply unconscious emotional levels. Hence the entire "fear v. love" philosophy surrounding research into 9-11.

Now, I obviously can't substantiate the ability to remote-control a person's mind to the extent they are willing to kill themselves, since anyone who underwent such an experience thus far has actually gone through with the accompanying act. Nor can I provide government authorised official documents proving beyond any shadow of a doubt the ability by any technological or remote broadcast means to project visual phenomenon of a hallucinatory nature, either known of today or known of in 2001. All I have to go on in terms of "official research" after the paper-trail runs out in the late 1980's is the testimony of mind-control victims.

[quote="benpadiah"]D) the WTC buildings were destroyed by bombs planted inside the building

In truth, the people who planted these bombs inside were probably the former Iraqi Royal Guard, brought over after Gulf War I, who also orchestrated the OK City bombing in the late 90's. Moving at about 440 mph, the nose hit the exterior of the tower at the 96th floor. The aircraft cut a gash that was over half the width of the building and extended from the 93rd floor to the 99th floor.

what was on the 95th and 96th floors of the north tower, which were rented by Marsh & McLennan, Lewis Paul "Jerry" Bremer's company?

Bremer, it should be noted, was the Bush-appointed proconsul or administrator of occupied Iraq until the end of June 2004. During Bremer's reign there was no metering of the oil that was exported from Iraq. It is also primarily decisions taken by Bremer that are responsible for the misery and chaos that have afflicted Iraq since the U.S.-led occupation began. Previously, Bremer was the right-hand man for Henry Kissinger & Associates.

on the 95th floor, Marsh & McLennan had a "large walled data center along north and east sides," according to the NIST report. And that's exactly where the plane hit – the north wall of the 95th floor.[/quote]

[quote]I had repeatedly requested information from NIST about the layout of these floors, primarily because many tons of molten metal were seen falling from the 81st floor prior to the collapse.

If this was molten iron, as Professor Steven E. Jones of Brigham Young University says, and if this molten iron was caused by an aluminothermic reaction of Thermite or Thermate (a steel-cutting explosive created from powdered aluminum, iron oxide, and sulfur), then somebody must have pre-loaded the 81st floor of WTC 2 with many tons of Thermate.

Documents dated 1999 say that reinforcements were added to the floor trusses "to accommodate the new UPS workspace." The structural engineering firm was noted as LERA, or Leslie E. Robertson and Associates.[/quote]

[quote]Mr. Silverstein has said that he would like to refinance the property and replace

Blackstone and Banc of America Securities with other creditors. But this would require astute maneuvering and negotiating on the part of the 71-year-old developer, given the history of the building's debt. Originally, Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association provided him some $450 million in construction financing, but he had to restructure this debt during the real-estate recession of the early 1990s. At that time, he gave TIAA an "equity kicker" amounting to 40% of the building's value over $475 million, people familiar with the financing say.

In 2000, a Blackstone real-estate fund purchased the TIAA debt along with the kicker, financing the deal through a private placement of $383 million in commercial mortgage-backed securities lead managed by Banc of America Securities. For Mr. Silverstein to be able to buy out Blackstone, they would have to agree on the value of the kicker, not an easy task when the property is nonexistent.

No jokes, just do it.

here's what I can piece together so far.

By applying chaos theory to study of otherwise infinite potential outcomes, one can dwell above and within several overlapping possible realities. These manifest themselves as options for choice, the binary units of "karma" comprising our "aura" or surrounding reality. The more "karma" the more options for choices; the more possible outcomes, the more different potential universes one dwells in simultaneously.

So there are "chaos beasts" dwelling in realms of parallel realities above us, whose very existence forms a glass ceiling above us, delimiting our full elevated potential beneath it. These "chaos beasts", or "emotional archetypes," believe that the accumulation of slaves to one's will-power is equivalent to the building up of karmic options in one's aura's event-horizon. They see their own reflection when they look below at us just as we see a distorted, refracted reflection of ourselves when we look into this "Abyss" above.

Now, these "chaos beasts" are thought-forms and can move about between our minds. Like a song stuck in one's head, it can only be forgotten when foisted off onto someone else. These beings are memetic, and move from one of us to another like a contagious yawn.

Now, there are a group of people who are aware of these "chaos beasts." This group of people believes they are living out the roles of these "chaos beasts" in this lesser reality, like shadows or echoes. They believe in the "covenant" of "As Above, So Below," that, by imitating what they believe to be the will of their pantheon of immortals, they will sway the influence of the cosmic forces to be redirected to satisfy their own gross wills.

I've called this group the "neo-Sethians," but this has been making Light of something much more serious, much more severe, than this mere, playful mockery lets on.

As these people discover their power over other people, they lose their soul. The natural patterns of karma in their aura mutate and become inverted from "good" to "evil" and from "right" to "wrong." They lose their sense of self, their moral compass, and commit atrocious acts of violence in their struggle to un-invert their karma.

They are being swept up, they believe. But this is not true. In truth, their power is limited in time, and they know this: "the star that burns twice as bright burns half as long." That is their watch-word. They are not being "swept upward", "only "swept along," and pulling many people downward with them in their wake.

Because they believe they symbolise, or embody, personify and enflesh the Higher Archetypes, they believe they, themselves, exist in various spaces simultaneously, travel from mind to mind, and have trace-ended to become ascended masters over their 6 billion + mental slaves. But this will never happen.

However their plan is based on their succeeding ultimately in manifesting useful karma, only in the extreme long-term, and only in a form that appears evil to us who are beneath them in the here and now. They believe they are channeling and in synchronicity with the "chaos beasts."

Because it is untrue they are correctly doing the will of those higher archetypal forms they only dully perceive as overlapping tangent universes manifesting in all the possible outcomes of choices around us, then their plan to appease historical time beyond themselves in the present cannot succeed.

They believe that our future is inevitable, because they have travelled to a point in time when their plan has succeeded, and to them, this success is already a past-tense fact, even though to us, it has not yet occurred. They believe they have already won because they forget we have free will. We have the power to change the interim between now and any possible future to fit our own desires. Any future we can foresee, we can align a course of events to achieve it.

By 2012 they plan for their time-shift to have happened. They believe, again, wrongly, that they are correctly redirecting the religious tensions surrounding the year 2000 into a project of population-reduction that will benefit the entire species and the whole earth when the ice age begins, which some estimate occurring as soon as 200 years from now.

They are so wrong. They will only create a parallel "hell" (prison) dimension for themselves to be swallowed into, while the existences of those "chaos beast" archetypal forms and shapes and patterns will draw away from them and in this rushing vacuum will follow all the souls of those they liberated from their bodies in this present universe.

The discorporeal consciousnesses that serve as the inspirations for these evil, malignant, reptilian turds agenda of "controlled burning" of their own species are truly good, but very misunderstood by those who have become inverted by their overflow of imaginary power. They cannot control the future.

Instead, each of us controls our own fate, and ultimately there are only two destinies: a "good" one and a "bad" one. Those whose power over us is present now prosper only in the short term, but shall not be joining us in our further continuance of our psychic existence. They are bound for a back-firing of their plan.

What is the sign of this thing? The sunspot cycle that is at a 2000 year maximum between 2001 and 2012 has been extremely mild, and this means that the winter-season (the next ice age) will occur gradually and be more mild overall than the prediction of a sudden frigid snap within the next 200 years.

They even hedge their bets on causing such a massive environmental disaster by polluting the atmosphere and the fresh water supplies. They burn away the last remains of natural resources that can never be replaced to destroy the natural cycle of the seasons and bring about some unreal, apocalyptic cataclysm, all the while hoarding for their own use in the future, following successful depopulation programs, all the non-depletable resource-using technologies and knowledge.

Our reality, this time-line, has been so terribly betrayed. It has been denied its rightful inheritance, and made to bow down on one knee to a false force, an intervening shaman appearing to thwart our journey on. I tell you this group believe they will transcend, and it is true, they will fade in the wind like a cloud of smoke. But this will only appear to be their end to us, while to them, we shall appear to be the ones who vanish.

The only difference between the conservative psychic revolutionaries and the "neo-Sethian" psychic conspirators is that, in the very near future, one group will enter one reality, and the other will enter another, and the reality, the flat-universal time-line, entered into by the psychic revolutionaries will be a much "better" one in all senses.

<h1>WHAT IS THE PYTHAGOREAN ORDER OF DEATH?</h1></center>

<blockquote>The "Order of Death" is the psychic conspiracy. It is also called the "international conspiracy of psychics." It is the conspiracy behind all others. Government itself is a conspiracy. So is celebrity. So is economics. There are competing factions within the Order of Death. The Order of Death has a political wing and a religious wing. Those who wish to follow the religious wing may enter >here, and those that wish to pursue the political wing may enter >here. The Order of Death is automatically open to >Free Masons and members of any other esoteric order (including but not exluded to Rosicrucians, Illuminati and Ordo Templi Orientis).Only those who seek us out will ever find a representative of the true Order of Death, for we are unknown of otherwise. To meet us you must look for us, must search us out, but if you do not, you will never meet one of us. We are behind events and we determine what those not of our Order see, hear, even think. Their minds are a bill-board advertising whatever we tell them, since it is ultimately all that they know. We control everything about them except for how they feel, for their emotions are free, and the key to freedom.The Order of Death only seeks out those who wish for freedom from being controlled by the Order of Death. Only the Order of Death can grant freedom from being controlled by them. If you seek us out, we shall. For we desire only the liberation of the mind, of all the minds of all mankind. Truly we are the enemies of tyranny, and the lovers of liberty.So why do we control everyone who is not a member c our psychic conspiracy, the Order of Death? If our goal is liberty, why are we occult? It is impossible for most people to speak about the experience of ESP, much less to admit to having it. However the "Order of Death" provides a metaphor by which members can communicate directly using ESP. The Order of Death spans the whole globe at all times, and ESP interconnects us always.The Order of Death dates back to the flood that destroyed Atlantis. The politics and religion we practise esoterically and telepathically is the true Atlantean politics and the true Lemurian religion. The founders of the Order of Death were survivors of the flood that destroyed the global coastal civilisations which had flourished before the end of the last ice age. The Atlanteans, also called Enochians, raised stonehenge and carved the sphynx, but it was the Order of Death, also called the Watchers, that raised pyramids and created a phoenetic alphabet.We refer to those who have not "awakened" to our Order's control over them as "the cult of sleep." To us, because it is as though you have none, it is your thoughts that cannot be read, although our thoughts are literally all that you know. Our prescence is strong, but our living members remain in the minority. Consider that only 10% of 6+billion people on earth are atheists, and consider that 1% of the population controls 99% of the world's wealth, and you will come to understand the Order of Death.We are in control of the mechanisms of the ancients; we use the >Enochian Communications System to communicate our goals instantaneously around the globe. We simply piggy-back our thoughts on pre-existing currents of frequency, such as cell-phones, radio-waves, even sub-quantum tachyons faster than light. Our wills become yours.But there are competing factions within the Order of Death. Not all who possess ESP necessarily share the same will as each other. There are two types of members of the Order of Death: the psychic conspirator, and the psychic revolutionary. The psychic conspirator wishes to continue using their own ESP to drain the potential for ESP from the masses. The psychic revolutionary wishes to bring about an overnight psychic revolution, by which to liberate all minds on earth simultaneously from psychic bondage.At some times one of these types has dominant authority in the Order of Death, and at other times the other. At this point in earth's history, the psychic conspirators hold majority control. This is because their numbers have recently grown very rapidly from among new members of the Order of Death. These new-member psychic-conspirators are predominantly eschatological christians, and are referred to within the Order as "neo-Sethians." The faction comprised mostly of older members actually favours the psychic revolution, however the neo-Sethians do not, and they hold power now.What can you do for the Order of Death? You can do anything you would ordinarily do, but do it mindfully. Ask yourself if you are doing your own will at that moment, or if you are doing the will of another? You must free your own mind. Only then can the Order find you. It is our most fervent wish. Therefore, hurry.~GOD~ [quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]So you're trying to tell me that aliens, i.e. ultra intense thinking superhumans, planted holograms into people's minds, flew empty planes into empty buildings, and took the passengers of the plane into another dimension, i.e. heaven?

Yeah, okay, let's talk about that.

This could be true, I suppose. But, I think you would agree that this scenario is not likely. Even if the scenario is not exactly what you intended to convey, this is what I have interpreted and this is what I'm going on. If you'd like to clear any points up that's fine,[/quote]

I'd like to clear up more than a few points about your utter and intentional misinterpretation (and, to those you presume your lessers) your misrepresentation of my theory. But then again, if you don't like it, you can stuff it straight up your butt for all I care. I'd like to point out to all those you presume are even less literate than yourself, and who you presume to dupe, that I just deleted Q's last two posts. The first was spam to youtube videos without comment. The second, following my deletion of the first, asserted I was "a vagina." So, you can take your self-certain assertion of my theories and cram them. If you choose to ignore the "lessons of the past," ahhhh, nevermind.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]but [i][b]I don't want to talk about this.[/b][i]* I know the attacks are not what people think it is. I am aware that our government is intimately involved with it. [/quote]

*italics mine - "ben"

You're a virus. "attacks" is plural, yet "it is" is singular. That's called, in Neuro-Linguistic Programming, an "anchor" technique. It is meant to trigger a "light trance" following which a subtle suggestion is made. In this case it is "I am aware..." blah blah blah, "OUR government." No, you're wrong. A) when the employees of the people refuse to fulfill the duties of their office to the people they represent, they de facto forfeit any authority that accompanies that office. So, technically, this stopped being "our" government (of the people, by the people, and for the people) when "they" (the shadow-government) assassinated Kennedy. B) it is not the government itself that is involved. It is the faction within the highest appointed (or rigged) executive offices in the government. If you look at their names, you will find connections between most of them and GHWB (Bush sr., W's father) from the days when he was director of the CIA. BTW, the first thing the Bush admin did when it got into office was to push back the release date for the FOIA to apply to all the files from the Reagan era on, which is primarily when this particular group of cronies began their work in the CIA, along with Ollie North, whom it is more likely that you've heard of than any of the rest of them. This group has teamed up with the Bushes to launder the money they made in the eighties importing crack and heroin and exporting WMDs and covert coup de tats. The Bush family have "invested" these funds of this rogue element in ransacking energy and oil conglomerates. Basically, they are privatising every federal, state and locally governed agency (from investing social security on the stock market to selling off the garbage collection services to the highest bidder). That's internally to the national borders. They're importing a huge workforce from Mexico to glut-spend the federal, state and local governments at the same time. That's locally to me, even. This is what's going on now, too. Meanwhile they've built concentration camps for Muslims (who are racially semitic, not racially Muslim) on national US soil and sold off foreign resources (that do not belong to them) to US national privatised oil and energy conglomerates (but they still don't belong to these guys either) by staging a war in a foreign region (ie. Iraq, duh).

If you think these crimes are being perpetrated by "our government" then you are dangerously mistaken. This implies that a change in government structure would solve (nevermind addressing) this problem. The neo-cons are a virus that has infected the system of the government. Hold trials, I say. This will purge the virus. No change in the overall structure of the entire organism is called for. The very idea of accusing "our government" of crimes committed by its executive branch, infiltrated by the CIA (ie. Skull and Bones), and by national businesses created by these same CIA officers as fronts for importing drugs and exporting guns. Think about it. ENRON was an energy conglomerate being used to funnel funds from the Asian Contagion and the .com bust to fund the privatisation of federal, state and local utilities and services (ie. prisons mainly, but also the garbage and electricity). Instead of paying a bill to the gov't for all your utilities services (phone, tv, electricity, garbage, mail, etc.) now these have all been sold off to multiple competing companies, so now the market-price regulates for each service individually at a much, Much, MUCH higher cost to the consumer (of these necessary functions of society) than it would to have just kept it all on one bill paid to the city, or the state, or the federal government, or even all of them put together. Instead, now everyone is paying out the ass, but suddenly only Republican "voters" can afford it. And my car suddenly holds an extra gallon of "gas." I'm trying to put this in simple and down-to-earth terms for you here, Aquarian, because you have only given me evidence of your being too dumb to comprehend my ordinary high-browed jargon. So let me put this in terms even a two year old could understand. 1999: gas = $1.50. 2007: gas = $3.00. This reflects two ratios. One is the devaluation of the dollar. However this would mean that the dollar of today is worth only half the value of the dollar only eight years ago. While this may indeed be the case already, it is only because private energy and oil companies inflated gas prices using the loss of local resources to natural disaster (ala Katrina) as an excuse to shock the gas market and see how high they can drive the price up. To put this into vernacular even such an intentionally ignorant person as yourself should be able to understand: For every gallon of oil you buy now, you could have bought two before the war in Iraq. And "oil" is the excuse we are sold. In reality there IS an ulterior motive to this enclave's (S&B & CIA) actions here. Shifting money around is no different than shifting natural resources around. So we can say, in "theory," these private companies are trying to figure out a way to package and sell us "free" energy (ZPE), but really why should they be so benevolent? Why not simply exterminate us all instead? Perhaps that is a question you should ask yourself, "AQUARIAN 1."

Let's try to figure out the why, at this point, if we can, instead of the how.[/quote]

I'm in complete agreement with you on this point. I think the whole point of the "how" was as an arms show for "alien" (invisible and anti-gravity) technology anyway. And I agree, to the average "person" such as yourself, this means virtually nothing because you will never be able to even imagine someone being able to imagine something like that. Face it, man, you are a dinosaur. The "mammals" are evolving and we are leaving you behind. That's all there is to it. So anyway, let's begin addressing the "WHY" of this issue: the 9/11 WTC disaster, what you call "the attacks."

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]

In the 9/11 Commission Report, United States support of Israel is cited as the main cause of the September 11th attacks.[/quote]

This is because they were made to believe, as was the rest of the world, that Osama Bin Laden was the actual perpetrator of this crime against humanity, when in fact he was no more than a patsy named after the fact. I'm sure, having read that utter white-washed piece of shit attempt at "full public disclosure" the 9-11 Report, which is to Bush what Mein Kampf was to Hitler, than surely you have to realise that most of the alledged "hijackers" named (arbitrarily, there being no way to identify any of them) by the FBI were Saudi Arabians. You must also remember that there was a great degree of public doubt over the authenticity of the released audio and video confessions of Osama Bin Laden. I won't get into the details of these doubts, as I am sure you are fully aware of them already. Suffice it to say that Osama Bin Laden is the 21st century Lee Harvey Oswald. Now, the only reason we are even supposed to suspect Osama Bin Laden is NOT, as you assert, to foment hatred between Muslims and Jews. You're an idiot and a tool for thinking that. No, what is actually the situation is that because, before 9-11, Osama was at the top of the FBI's Most Wanted list (once held by the Unabomber and Al Capone). He was a product of the CIA's running guns during the Iraq-Iran war (the "Iran-Contra" affair of the Reagan administration) following an upbringing in the CIA's Mujahadeen "guerilla task force" in Afghanistan before the Soviet invasion. He hated Saddam Hussein, and is actually so Right-Wing in his own beliefs, he would probably think the Shah of Iran too liberal. We're talking about Saudi-Arabians here. These people chop off heads in public as demonstrations of the state's ultimate authority. Small wonder they are the model for nation-building in the Middle-East, a model the CIA in the GWB administration have helped to set up, also, in your favourite place, Israel, as well. However the FBI are only cleaning up after the CIA. Retired CIA-man GHWB, W's dad, sat on the board of a LEGAL (!!!) arms dealership that sold WMDs to middle-eastern countries. So did the head of the House of Saud, who was a "royal" family installed after WWII (much later than the nation of Saudi Arabia was created following WWI) by, guess who?, the OSS, Office of Strategic Services, precursor to, your pal and mine, the CIA. Whether you believe it or not, neither the House of Saud NOR the Likkud or Netenyahu parties in Israel call the shots in Washington. No, the boys at Langley are still pulling GWB's strings via their puppet representative, Dick Cheney (known to W as "Big Time" as a nick-name). It's a puppet on a puppet on a puppet, and if you can't see that you must be stone cold blind.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]

Now, I hope we can agree that there is a conflict between Israel and Islam. For some reason, they have a hatred for each other. Why?

In the present, Israel is a stronghold for United States Imperialism.[/quote]

You answered your own question, which is another of your pathetic tells as an attempting NLPer. This immediately followed your statement that "ISRAEL AND ISLAM HATE EACH OTHER." This is simply not true, and the manner in which you present it, it leaves no room to question its veracity. This "tells" me that you are concealing (entirely and only) from yourself the fact (that is blatantly apparent to everyone else about you) that you hold true the same false-beliefs (as if there were ever any other kind) as you THINK do those whose power you seek to emulate. You don't hate the rich, the poor or anyone. You hate yourself. Oh, and you're an anti-Semite.

Israel (the country, not the Hebrew religion, both Orthodox and Reform), and Islam (the religion, not the "Arab" race, but a simultaneously existent religious faith, predominately, though, as also with Judaism, not exclusively, Semitic in nature), do not hate each other. That's what you just said, those were the words you typed, and don't try to go and fucking turn that fact around to try and make me look like I'm in any way inaccurately presenting that fact of reality. So fuck off with your self-righteous, Papal/SS soft-fascism, you fucking black-shirt swine, you self-righteous, arrogant idiot. How dare you sit back and declare "ISRAEL AND ISLAM HATE EACH OTHER"? You don't even know what you think you mean.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]If you want to take over the oil supply of the world what do you do?
[/quote]

I see your point: I'm supposed to second-guess the begging question: "Going back how far?" I won't; it's an irrelevant side-stepping of the issue and deserves to be condemned to the dustbin of history beside NAZISM and the PATRIOT Act. Your belief in a conspiracy of Free Masons is unsubstantial to me, Aquarian. If you want to bring up Pike's (alleged) "letter to Mazini" that has been circulated around the net in years of late, I'd kindly quiz your ass to kingdom come about the Protocols of the Elders of Zion hoax, the actual Catholic Priory of Zion, the Bavarian Illuminati and the Catholic Jesuits Weishaupt claimed to have stolen his plans for world-domination from, and ask you all about Thule and the religion of the Runes, the Celtic pagan tradition pre-dating the spread of even Gaulic Judaism and early Christian-Gnosticism, long before the infiltration of Pauline and Petro Doctrines. Then I'll ask you what you think the difference is between the Christian cross and the Pagan (technically far-eastern) Swastika is. And that, as they say, will be that.

So, now, I'll preface what I'm about to say with the caveat that I, unlike the CIA group sprung from Yale's Skull and Bones frat-house, do not wish to take over the world's supply of oil. That sounds like a stupid idea to me. If the idea is, as some say, to corner the market on a depleting resource (making oil as addictive in everyday-life as crack to a crack-addict), there are better ways they could have gone about it. Apparently what I had thought were vast untapped OIL reserves in Siberia are actually only highly atmospherically-destructive METHANE gas. If the goal were to go for outright evil, and given a century or so of forethought, you could easily have created the automobile to run on methane rather than petrol. By now our planet would have already suffocated itself like Old Willy Loman in that play Death of a Salesman. I guess then the little chiggers could just burrow in under the ground and live for centuries becoming like transparent roaches in subterranean "nuclear-storage facilities" (marked for "dual-use" such as at Dulce and, probably, Area 51). Therefore, to me, oil addiction is like tobacco/nicotine addiction, or alcoholism, or heroin or crack addiction, or even being, IMO the lowest of all these degenerate scum, a money-junky. And, again IMO, there is nothing wrong with any of these. So long as one group does not concentrate on specifically trying to fuck up any other group's good time, the whole thing SHOULD naturally balance out. Only this is not currently the case. Right now the money-junkies are turning every group against every other group, and reaping their, merely imaginary, rewards.

So, as you might say, "If I were king of the forest," what would I do? I would have gotten the military stealth / anti-grav tech released to the private sector for development to replace the gas-powered car. This would, however, mean a drastically different form of society than we have now, so what I'm about to say may seem complex beyond your comprehension: where we are and where we should be, where we could be were we not acting divisive, but rather civil, are vastly different things. The difference is that between the Jetsons and the Flintstones. Seriously. I'm George Jetson, and you're Fred Flintstone. Now deal with that. Oh and stfu while you do so. Where we are in our level of development now, is so far behind the level of development that we once had (and in the same aeonic season), that it is no longer a question of the Jetsons being somewhere ahead of us, still in the possible future, and now it is a question of the Jetsons and Flintstones being parallel, equal and opposite realities simultaneously. I just exist in one and you in the other one. But, I'm sorry, I digress.

To get back to the question at hand, IF I WANTED TO TAKE OVER THE OIL SUPPLY OF THE WORLD WHAT WOULD I DO? I would not concentrate all of my force on one single area in a losing war. I would not cause everyone to perceive, falsely, an "over-population problem," as an excuse to round them all up into death-camps. I would be kind to the people of the region, and attempt to initiate friendly trade with them, so that we could all prosper equally from the exchange of goods and services. That's what I, PERSONALLY, would probably do, if I wanted to gain control of the oil supply of the whole world. But then, I'm just insane. You're the idiot.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Currently, the United States gives more money to Israel than any other country on the planet, by a very large margin. I suggest you find out how large that margin actually is.[/quote]

I don't see your point. We are exporting capital to Israel. So what? Bushco. via the Carlyle Group has been selling them WMDs for years. The money the US "donates" (is exhtorted) to Israel each year goes from US Senators (I know the whole "Clinton's the best man for us" routine too) and elected officials. But then the Israeli executive officials (of the far-Right Likkud party or the ultra-right party of Benjamin Netanyahu) pay this money to the Carlyle Group in exchange for US WMDs. Now, the Carlyle Group then split this money up between the House of Saud on one side (which, it is safe to assume, will all end up invested in Halliburton and in Bin Laden Construction, look it up) and the CIA S&B boys on the other. In Saudia Arabia, human rights violations grow to an outrage among the global community, but nothing is said nor done about Saudi Arabia's connection with the Carlyle Group. The money's all moving in a circle right now between Buscho and Halliburton on one side to Likkud and the House of Saud on the other. I suppose it would be too much to ask if you'd read "Silent Weapons for Quiet Wars" by any chance, eh, Q?

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]What do you think is going to happen when another 9/11 comes in the form of a mushroom cloud?[/quote]

This is ultra-Zionism. Zionism, as envisioned originally in the pre-WWI era called for a repatriation of the Holy Land by Hebrews (both Reform and Orthodox). When the "League of Nations" chartered the land for Israel by extradicting Palestine, it meant that the indigenous population there would have to relocate, or be relocated, or otherwise be eradicated. This notion was not in keeping with the original movement of Zionism as Holy-Land repatriation. Instead, in the name of Germany's Yiddish and Socialists, the League of Nations (thus violating its own charter authorising it to convene the world court) turned around and instituted, via the mechanism of the State (of Israel, now like a map overlaying the land of Palestine), the exact same form of Holocaust to Muslim Semites as was perpetrated to the poor Hebrews of "Germany" by the very NAZI fascist capitalist pigs the League of Nations and the World Court convened to judge. Only now it is, as Saul said to Judas in the Last Temptation of Christ, "Jew killing Jew."

If it did not mean any loss of life, I'd be all for nuking the whole Middle-East region. The Sinai Peninsula separating Egypt from Iraq and Saudi Arabia? I'm just not too impressed by it. Let's evacuate all the people to someplace where there's still plenty of land, like, say, Siberia or even across the horn of Northern Africa (fuck, give em Spain for all I care! Give em Italy, actually). Then let's all heave one big sigh of relief and light the fuse under the fcking ant-hill and just wait for the bomb to blow them all to smithereens. See? I can appear even further right-wing than you, Q. You advocate neo-Zionism, falsely creating and heavily arming an illegal State of Israel. The only difference, really, is you use "mushroom cloud" as a threat to scare people into feeling like they need to constantly be on the defensive, whereas I am suggesting it as one possible option as a solution to the whole difficulties in political struggle you seem to find so upsetting. It must seem like a great idea to you, I expect. Nuke them all, let God sort em out. Well, by that criteria, you may as well as go nuke Antarctica, because it has it coming just as much as does Iraq, or Israel, or Ireland, or New York, or Compton. I'd be all for nuking Washington DC, but I'd say give the rats warning to sink with the ship. I'd rather nuke Cheyenne Mountain, or Dulce, Area 51 or the HAARP antenna array. There are alot of places I'd rather nuke than the very countries our financial triangular trade (donations for guns sold to buy oil) system depends on now. I'm an anarchist, but I'm not a nihilist. Don't blow up our friends and neighbors, and I mean that, "George."

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]You think maybe, that possibly, Israel and the United States will take over the entire region? [/quote]

As opposed to the fact that they positively, definately, already have? Think of the Middle East as one big concentration camp. In the far west, you have Saudi Arabia and Israel (ie. the Gaza Strip on the West Bank where most of the uprooting of indigenous people and/or killing them has been going on since the 80's. These guys are the gestapo, the guards. They have all the oil in Saudi Arabia, and all the weapons in Israel, and both of these countries are extremely rich. Then, in the mid-west of the middle-east, you have Afghanistan and Iraq. In the mid-east of the mid-east Iran, Syria, Turkey, Lebanon, Jordan, etc. and in the far west of the mid-east Pakistan. Pakistan are the turn-coats, betraying their fellow-prisoners to the Ghestapo guards for personal favours (ie. a NUCLEAR BOMB). Meanwhile Iran isonly barely allowed to develop nuclear power plants, only under extreme regulation (again by the International Atomic Energy Commission under the UN but acting as the watchdog for the US, Israel and China on the Security Council). And then you have Afghanistan and Iraq. We are sending people to war to fight and to kill or be killed, and most of the soldiers are coming home either maimed or traumatised, if not dead. The pretense was that Iraq MAY HAVE, MIGHT HAVE, POSSIBLY HAD WMDs and ... GASP! ... the nuclear bomb. In my opinion the Middle East is not, as you seem to believe, "Aquarian 1," the powder-keg waiting to blow. It is a fully-functioning slave-state, with US military police enforcing US military/industrial dictates in Saudi Arabia, in Israel, in Iraq and (thanks to China) in Pakistan as well. And you come around here saying the 9-11 Commission Report claims US support for Israel is the sole reason 9-11 happened? You're a fuck-up. Fuck off and stuff it.

sara, first, let me thank you for starting this thread, because I agree with your motive in doing so. For no reason I can discern as a personal reflection, the forum on my personal website has been hijacked by anti-semites. However, the problem with this is similar to the "Jewish Question" proposed in the late 1800's. We can either take the hard-line position on how to solve this, "kill them all" (ie. ban the offenders from the forum), or we can take the "liberal" position, "export them elsewhere" (ie. confine them to a single thread). While I agree with your motive in starting this thread, I hope you realise this strategy will not work. For some reason, again beyond my ability to fathom, this issue polarises moderates into over-emotional radicals (pro-Israel) or reactionaries (anti-Israel). IMO, this matter should be a non-issue. Perhaps that is why people become so upset about it: they realise it is not something that matters, and they resent the idea they are supposed to care either way. I think, though, that it boils down to a disagreement on the definitions of certain key terminologies. I'll come back to that in a moment.

stfu. You're no better than sara and you know it. In fact, IMO, you're way worse, since your "9-11 was done by Israel" argument was based on nothing but rhetoric, you would appear to me to be far more brain-washed than she is. I prefer the term "don't wake the baby" in this case, though, since those who have brain-washed you did it for motives they consider good, that is, to blind you to their own unhappy reality. You remind me of the kid who believes in Santa Claus so much, he gets angry at anyone who tells him that it's only his parents buying the presents. I could tell you the truth now, as I have tried to do several times already, but you would only get angry at me and tell me my "opinions" are due to my "belief" in "lies." Instead I'll advise you to study "karma" (also called QBLH). You didn't use the term "brain-washed" because you know sara is "brain-washed." You used that term to align Crow behind you. But look at his comments to "understand" your own motives. His closing remark was to "out" sara as a "Jew" (as if it were a shame). You used the term "brain-washed" but what you meant was "Jewish." You just got someone else to say "Jew" for you by confusing these two, very differently defined, terms in their mind. Next Crow associated the word "Jewish" with the meaning of "brain-washed." You'd do well to examine your own "altruistic" motives behind such manipulative methods. Do the ends justify the means, Q? You've always said, no, but does that ever apply to you? J/w.

Crow,

Please don't let yourself be manipulated into caring about this issue. Ask yourself, does the amount of money US Senators contribute to Zionist "charities" affect the price of bread? Gas... MAYBE. But not bread. Gas is to your car what bread is to your body. If (as is happening now) your own personal sovereignty (self-determination) and bodily safety (your life itself) is ever threatened by something you know should not be doing so, you need to stand up against those who tell you any non-issue is important enough for you to die. Imagine your two best friends are standing in front of you. They are having a very heated argument. One is saying "blue." The other is saying "red." Eventually, they turn to you as a tie-breaker. Now, either one you pick, you've already lost one of those friends, and if you pick any of the five OTHER colours available, it's likely you'll lose them both. What I, personally, would do in such a situation is just walk away. However, if you can't, then I'd advise you to change the subject to one that both your friends agree on. The goal is to "build consensus" and avoid bloodshed. Don't get pulled into shit that shouldn't concern you. Instead, change your perception filter on the situation; define it in new terms. Then your friends will turn to you not to fight their battle for them, but to advise them from your new perspective.

Now, on the notion of terminology, or proper nouns we use to subjectify objects and to objectify subjects. Before I delve into this problem, let me give a brief example. The flashvid sara linked states, in one frame, "There was no Arab state or nation called "Palestine" in the Middle East in 1948. Or ever." Technically, this is not a fact. The area between the Jordan river and the Mediterranean was never called "Palestine" by the Ottoman Empire itself. By the Ottomans it was referred to as the vilayet Sidon. The term "Palestine" was, however, used before 1948 to refer to the land of modern Israel. It was used in the [\[url=http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Balfour\_Declaration\_of\_1917\]](http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Balfour_Declaration_of_1917)Balfour Declaration of 1917~~[/url]~~ (wikilink). The term was also used in the 1916 Sykes Picot agreement that determined, before the beginning of WWI, how the countries of western Europe would, after conquering the Ottoman Empire in WWI, divide up the lands. In 1916, "Palestine" was to be an "Allied condominium," however by 1917 it was to be ceded to "Jewish Zionists." Now, all of this was well before the Holocaust, and the whole argument in the flashvid that the state of Israel was created as a "refuge" for diaspora Hebrews killed in pogroms and the Holocaust is specious reasoning.

Now, the nation-state of "Palestine" DID, in fact, exist in 1948, however it was called the "Palestinian Mandate" and it was ruled by Britain as part of the British Empire and was no more an independent nation-state apart from Britain than was India. Therefore, "Palestine" (ie. the "Palestinian Mandate" that unified the Mid-East between the end of the first world war and the beginning of the second) was never an independent "Arab state" because it was administrated as a colony of Great Britain. Therefore, whenever anyone (Arab or not) refers to restoring "Palestine" they are, knowingly or un-knowingly, referring to the entirety of the "Palestinian Mandate" (reaching from the Persian Gulf in the east to the Mediterranean Sea in the west), which only ever existed as a British colony. Ideally, this would mean the unification of the entire Middle-East under self-rule (by any form of system), however in reality what it means is the restoration of the land between the Gaza strip and northern Egypt to the indigenous population and the conclusion of its serving as a de facto colony populated by foreigners.

Another ill-defined term is [\[url=http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Islamofascism\]](http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Islamofascism)Islamofascism~~[/url]~~." (wikilink) This term's origins are cited as Austrian psychologist Carl Jung in a quote describing the German people as "like Muslims" in their fanaticism for their causes. To open up a can of worms, let's also look at the free-trade and military-support agreements between NAZI Germany and the sheiks and caliphs of the remaining Arab territories of the Ottoman Empire. Now, herein is the strongest connection between the terms "Islam" and "fascism." However, the NAZI third reich weren't "fascists" per se. They were "National Socialists." However, they weren't "National Socialists" in truth either. They were technically the "German Worker's Party," but they stopped being for the Workers of Germany after becoming the majority in the German parliament. At that point they became German nationalists with an imperial bent. Now, here again we come to a cited parallel between the NAZIs and the modern far-right Muslim nations in that the NAZIs were nationalists with an imperial bent and so are the Muslim Ayatollahs and teachers in Madrasahs. However, this "Nationalism" is not the same as "Fascism," except insofar as Fascism is also Imperialist. The best link for the origin of this term is connection between Moslem Nationalism and fascist imperialism via the NAZIs, who were allied to Fascist Italy and to the states of the former Ottoman Empire. However, at that time, the Islamists were statist and the fascists imperialists. Since then, fascism has infiltrated the politics of western Europe, the US, and other "developed" (industrialised) nations in the form of large corporations forming in a capitalist economy. These corporations are not statist or Nationalists, because most of them are trans-national and pro-free trade. However, they do fit the definition of Fascism because they are far right-wing capitalists and extremely opposed to left-wing communism. Meanwhile the formerly-Ottoman nations, now members of OPEC, (Oil Producing Arab Countries, changed to Economic for the sake of political correctness) that were statist Nationalists at the time of WWII are now operating in collusion with these Fascist corporations, however this form of "Islamofascism" (though used accurately in this case, tying in between western corporations and formerly statist-Muslim nations) cannot be properly addressed because we can't call western corporations "Fascists" anymore than we can say the Arab conspirators with them are "Islamic." The formerly Nationalist countries of the Arabic Middle East are now Fascist Imperialists, often cloaked in Islamic theocracies, and the oppressed Moslems of the region themselves have become statist Nationalists, often cloaked in Democratic movements, in opposition to their rulership. Likewise, the formerly Fascist corporations have, since coming to political power, become a de facto Empire themselves. To benefit the economic status of both the far right-wing states in the west and middle-east, in the name of their people's religion, send their own populations to war against each other. In short (too late, I know), the ones who are called "Islamo-Fascists" are instead the anti-Israeli statists by Zionist statists because the term is easier to wrap the tongue around than it would be to call these semitic people anti-semites. Of course the whole purpose is to confuse the workers into disunity to continue their oppression beneath their bosses.

Finally, I think we should clear up once and for all the definition of "what is a Jew?" From his introduction to the Kabbalah Center's english edition of the Zohar, Rav Yehudah Berg gives us the following definition: "The Jew - and this can include any individual who behaves in a sharing, tolerant, and sensitive manner - by definition is a person who acts in a Godly manner, with compassion for all of God's created beings." Rav Berg goes on to add that, "At the time of the Exodus, however, some people wanted to convert to become Jews. They were known as the Erev Rav (literally translated as "the mixed multitude".)" According to Berg, "These Jews were and continue to be the underlying cause of anti-Semitism." Basically, according to Rav Berg's definition, the "Jew" is someone who studies the Zohar, or rather QBLH in general, and comes to have certain superhuman and ultimately supernatural powers. According to this definition, if you are not Jewish and you study Kabbalah, then you are a Jew. Likewise, if you are Jewish and do not study Kabbalah, then you are not a Jew, or rather, you are an "evil" Jew, one of the Erev Rav. Now, I am telling you this definition, and not the one from Merriem-Webster's english dictionary: "a person whose religion is Judaism," not because it is more authoritative than one given by a non-Jew, but because I agree with it. To say, for example, a "Jew" is a QBLHist, makes more sense to me than to say, for example, a "Jew" is a semite. Not all Semites are Jews, and not all Jews are semites. Likewise, Hebrew, the religion of QBLH, is not confined to only semites. Anyone who studies QBLH, or Hebrew mysticism, is thus de facto a "Jew," and even moreso than someone who claims to be such only because they were born into semitic descent. I like this definition, and so that is the one I will be thinking of whenever I read the word "Jew" in anyone else's posts too: a "Jew" is a "psychic." Therefore, the "psychic conspiracy" and the "psychic revolution" I write about frequently are ideas you guys might only be familiar with by their more commonly called names, the "Jewish Conspiracy" and the "Book of Revelation." Of course, no one else (especially none of my readers here) will share this definition for the term "Jew" with me, and thus, because those who do not understand it are in the majority, I will probably be considered "crazy" for subscribing to it. Then again, I DO know the Baal Shem is AHDVNHAY, while the Moslems know only ALLAH (Elohim, the derivation of Adonai) and the Israelites know only YHVH (the extrapolated vowels). Neither of these is "good" or "evil" to the other, but nor is either complete without the other.

Oh well, enough for now.

[quote="PAULINE JELINEK, Associated Press Writer"]

The Pentagon has released a censored audiotape of suspected Sept. 11 mastermind Khalid Sheikh Mohammed _ deleting a part officials said could be used to recruit future terrorists.

The tape of Mohammed's 40-minute hearing before a U.S. military proceeding in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, was edited to exclude a 10-minute passage about the kidnap and beheading of U.S. journalist Daniel Pearl and Mohammed's explanation for why Islamic militants are waging jihad against the United States, as well as information the government said was classified.

Most of what was deleted was a long, rambling statement in poor English that often made it hard to understand what Mohammed was trying to say. The public may read that statement in a 26-page transcript previously released by the Defense Department, but after months of debate, officials decided the audio of it should be held back.[/quote]

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]
I don't advocate the nuclear holocaust, I've just seen it in dreams since I was 9 years old. I don't want that to happen.[/quote]

Ok. Let me put this in baby words for you: "advancing the destruction of Israel as a foregone conclusion" is not the same as "advocating the nuclear holocaust." But even calling it "the" instead of "a" implies you BELIEVE it WILL happen. Believing something WILL happen before it has is what I referred to as "advancing" it as a "foregone conclusion." Now the kid gloves are off so I'll out you for what I really think you actually are. You aren't only "advancing an agenda" that is based on false pretenses. Q, you're a Paranoid Schizophrenic. You believe so much in the validity of your premise that your zeal in advancing your agenda based upon it is totally psychotic. Because of your psychosis, you will NEVER be able to understand more than a few words ANYONE says to you because your mind will not be able to slow down.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]I feel like I'm talking to fucking children.[/quote]

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]We're not children anymore.[/quote]

If we can all read minds, there can be no secrets.

Therefore, the ONLY "real" or "true" LIE is that we cannot all read minds.

The LIE is the front of the same surface of which SECRECY is the reverse. The goal is to use this dual-facedness to work for you. Thus, you must accept the LIE to tender the SECRET. Therefore, become as a parent, lying to their children, keeping secret this truth: the responsibility to deny reality.

okay well, we can't have discussed this for less than two years, obviously, and thus we can't have avoided wasting those two years on going in circles rather than staging some form of revolution, because even though we see eye to eye, and agree on who, what, when, where, why and how, you and I are simply never going to get past first base with each other, and thus we will never be able to get past square one at agreeing on how to establish government in the vacuum of power we both desire to create. What I mean is that, after a revolution, you and I would both be equally obsolete as those in power now. A whole new generation would be required, with a new point of view on the nature of reality itself, different from both my "knowledge" and your "beliefs" altogether.

You and I will never agree until you quit accusing me of "agreeing with the motives" of "the conspiracy" simply because I know what those motives are and you do not, and I quit claiming to "know" the "motives of the conspiracy better than you" simply because you only "believe" in what those motives are, while I do not.

And so long as we can agree to disagree, I will not stop picking at you for the points of your argument while still agreeing with you in essence, and you will not cease to believe we disagree in essence because I am distracting you from your full potential for effecting change. If you disagree, then by no means read what I'm about to say, instead go out and do something about it.

Here is as good a place for our point of departure to start as any:

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]They are genius, but they're so fucking stupid.[/quote]

By this you introduce the argument I will address in this case, the one waged most against the neo-cons and Bush in particular, that "he appears stupider than he is." According to this argument, which, I remind you, I agree with in essence, Bush "believes" what he says about "faith-based initiatives" (for example) in the same way as he "believes" in his own affectation of the vernacular of the "common" people (us). Even though he KNOWS he does not personally subscribe to such charitable morals and honest ethics as are implied by the term "faith" we are supposed to have confidence in his assertion of their value because of his pure "charm" or charisma alone. Even though he KNOWS he does not think in his speaking voice inside his head, he has affected the "charm" or "common" vernacular. W. is from Massachusettes originally, and attended Yale. He only moved to Crwford, Texas in the 1970's. He, in effect, is saying one thing and doing another. This reminds me of the stereotypical "bad father" figure. The problem is, this archetype works. When combined with the media, everyone seems to buy Bush's dumb act, his "charm," shmooz, or "charisma."

Even you consider Bush's two-facedness a blatant slap in the face opposite what you assume is "common" sense "morality." But let me show you why, to Bush, he is only "turning the other cheek" to "turn a blind eye" to "remove the speck from his own eye" before attempting to remove the beam from "yours."

Bush is a realist, pretending to be an idealist. You are an idealist, pretending to be a realist. Both of you are evil idiots. Why? Because both of you are pretending. Bush pretends because it is a way to confuse the people about his motives. You pretend because you "believe" in "morality" when you (should) know "beliefs" are the blind denial of facts. So, by your own argument (based on belief), your version of fanatsy-land is "good" because it is based on "faith" in "idealism" (implying realism is false or evil). However, your weakness is leaving yourself open in the same area Bush does not. You uncover your "belief" as arbitrary, while Bush hides his actual convictions and asserts "belief" in his words alone as "good." Thus, I can prove, just as easily, that Bush's "beliefs" (based on "realism" being Darwinian-Malthusianism) are no less valid than your own (based on "idealism" being the opposite of such "realism" as Darwinian-Malthusianism), and therefore his version of fantasy-land is equally as "good" as yours because it is also based on "faith," only in a different kind of "idealism" (Darwinian-Malthusianism) than your own (based on the opposite of that). In other words, you call Bush's idealism "realism" and "believe" in your own "idealism." You are, thus, blinding yourself to the opposite argument that could be made in Bush's defense, that his idealism is equally as valid as your own idealism, even though you would label his ideals "realism" and "evil," when, in reality, your ideals are intangible because it is not possible for something uncreated yet to already have come into existence. But, by all means, let's delve deeper and see what your own "beliefs" are about what your own "belief" is, and how what your own "beliefs" are about why you consider your "belief" alone "moral" and Bush's equally valid (in potential) "belief" you label "social-Darwinism" and "evil."

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]It is not a mythical invincible force.[/quote]

Here you're referring not to "the conspiracy" but to "morality," which you are about to assert is "good" (or even "true") "propaganda (as if there could be such a thing), according to your own definition for it, being thus:

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]the difference between right and wrong and has a strong, inherent empathy for itself.[/quote]

Which definition I do not disagree with, in spirit. However, the problem isn't in the spirit, that is, it's archetypal place in history as an ideal. The problem is that you do not practise what you preach. Let me tell you that, if you knew right from wrong as you do left from right, you would not ever feel the need to have to confuse the two of these. It is not an invisible foible either. It is quite obvious when you fail to live up to and follow through with this type of "high" standard you dub "your" morality. You've always preached about the ends not justifying the means. But if you did not hold a double-standard about this, saying one thing is good for all, then doing another to serve only yourself, then we would all agree with you, and you wouldn't have to resort to being pedantic, and belittling of our intelligence and faculties for reasoning, and eventually to basic name-calling. You don't have any purpose in agitating us, as you should full well know, because we fully agree on the core issues. However, in order for you to disagree, you pretend that we do not, or that the rest of us don't understand. That's a self-fulfilling prophecy, whereby eventually, because we do not understand your motives in these tactics, you will have totally alienated yourself from our ability to understand you. You'll just be parroting our own views in your dull propaganda, so base it sounds like a different language.

But don't let me hold us up by rambling, by all means, let's show some examples:

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]truthful propaganda.[/quote]

Double-think. This is like literally saying, "the car is black-white." You aren't even dressing it up, either. You aren't saying, "the car is blackish-white," or "the car is whiteish-black." You certainly aren't saying, "the car is grey," which, even then, would be the same as your saying nothing (that would make sense, anyway), since you have proven defensivley you are essentially colour-blind when it comes to truth. You don't even see it as EITHER "black" (good) OR "white" (bad), you see it as BOTH "black" (good) AND "white" (bad). Only never grey. Imagine drops in a stream seen by strobe-light. There is your perception of reality: each moment, self-contained, blurred to appear continuous. Thus, you would look at each of these quantum moments and say, "that is black," or "that is white," however you do not even see beyond what you yourself admit to calling an "illusion." You do not see time as "grey" - as a continuous stream either. You see each moment as a yin-yang. Both "black" and "white" simultanesouly. All of this perception is fine. So long as you DO realise this perception is only your own mental construct, and cannot be objectively verifiable from the vantage of anyone else. You should understand this model of yours makes no sense to me at all. And that's not because I'm stupid either. No, but I'm not a genius either. I'm in that grey-area in between. But when you look at me you don't see me as "average." You see me as either the single stupidest or the single smartest person on earth. No matter what I say, you will agree one moment, then disagree the next. This is simply how you behave. I'm not calling you any names here, I'm simply pointing out facts observed from my point of view. See, though, that's the whole point, isn't it? I admit there IS a factual world outside of our mere sensations. You do not. Let's look at that:

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]a point of view, that is truthful, on a personal level.[/quote]

So, you take the term "truthful propaganda" and, instead of seeing this as cognitively dissonant, as being opposite thoughts expressed simultaneously, the venom of a forked tongue, you instead define it as yet a third form of fiction, your own concept of this non-term, this inequivalency, this un-reality, this fiction, this lie, as a "moral" (idealised) excuse for your use of this type of "double-think."

Let me tell you something, Q, and this is true, so you'd better pay attention: Truth is Objective. It exists whether you see it or not, whether you "believe" it or not, whether you deny it or not, whether you accept that or not. You can slander the concept of a truth that is outside of us all, but larger than us all, and inside of which we all exist, by referring to it as applicable only from a "personal" "point of view," rather than an existent, shared reality. But this only makes you look all the more like the blind fool wandering too close to the edge of an abyss.

Truth is not unique to one's personal point of view. You can think that. You'll find out where it gets you. But if you live in a tunnel, where the only times you ever encounter anyone else is when their tunnel intersects yours, then you are totally blind to the existence of the remainder of reality between yourself, your tunnel, and anyone else and their tunnels. It's like the "light in the refrigerator" argument. If you do not see it, it doesn't exist. Think about how stupid that point of view is. Thank god it is only your own personal opinion, and not inclusively true for the rest of us. If reality were actually comprised of only everybody's personal points of view, and all of these taken to form one large webwork consensus reality, then anyone whose will was strong enough or any group whose will was collectively equal that individual, would literally become God over the ability to change reality itself. So anyone who had enough psychic power could simply cause a universal change, like the character "Q" in startrek: TNG. Thank God we do not find such to be the case. If it were, then any idiot like yourself could, if so enabled, become a serious threat to the substance of natural reality itself.

However, instead, you will not find reality is soft and malleable along with your own perception of it. When you sleep, the dreams are not actually occurring around your body. Likewise, when you are awake, you enter a reality that does surround your body, but that is not under your direct ability to control as is your dream. If you haven't discovered this simple fact then you do not count as a living being, because even a foetus, once born, becomes a baby in this world, but you, having retreated like a mollusk into the shell of your own imagination (or lack thereof), and have not even even ventured out into this shared, mutual, but not psychically malleable reality. To you, the words "objectively verifiable" can have no meaning.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Every form of media can be labelled propaganda. Visual media specifically, is so easy to manipulate, since, by its very nature it is manipulation.[/quote]

Yes, but it does not hold that therefore ANY type of media can be "truthful." Look, the visual media is the same as money. Where there is a good, or a service, then there can be direct trade. However, when you want to trade something to someone else when there is no actual good or service, you need a third party token to constitute your exchange system. Enter money. Money REPRESENTS value. However, look: if there were VALUE in money, then money would not REPRESENT value, it would BE value. Yet it has no inherent value. It is not even "equal" in "exchange" to a nationally standardised amount of precious metals or gems. A piece of paper is not even worth its weight in gold. It is, therefore, a LIE. If it stands in place for something other than what it itself is, paper for value, plastic for credit, then it is not that thing. However money is called "value" and "credit." Falsely. In fact, aside from its actual material substance, you cannot truthfully call "money" anything. So it is with all materially objectifiable reality. If you are seeing something, and the thing that you are seeing is not really there, then you are DELUDED. This is true with any form of media (not excluded to visual, but including also tactile realities like "money"). It stands for something that it itself is not. Film creates a false vision. Money creates false value.

Now, of course, you can agree with me that money and visual media have no value. So let me ask you why you think that is? Let me ask you, were these created by God for the greater good of all mankind and to His glory? Do you imagine their lack of value and ethical applicability is due to their being a vacuum that must be, since it seems that it can be, filled by the individual (ie. YOUR) will power? These "tools" as you call them, aren't they only useful to trick, to lie, to deceive?

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]The very act of "seeing" moving images is a trick. It's the most powerful tool on the planet.[/quote]

And therefore it cannot be weilded for "good," ie. by my definition the good of all sentient entities, and by your definition a common morality. You CANNOT produce "truthful propaganda." Propaganda, as media, like money, cannot be what it claims. It is, by its defined nature, a lie. Therefore, saying "truthful propaganda" is the same as saying a "lie that is true." These are contradictions in terminology. You cannot apply a "tool" to anything but manipulation. You can cause change to reality with a tool, but you cannot change ANYONE'S mind with one. If you build a new tool that can be used often by all, you can change the greater paradigm. But you have not caused anyone to become a better, more skilled individual by doing so. There simply is no way to create a true rapport between interlocutors this way. Tool or no, you are "believing" in the "good" of a lie. I cannot go with you down this dark path.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]a culture of morality.[/quote]

Again, this counts as "double-think" because you are implying A) that our current culture lacks morality (by your definition thereof) and thus B) that your definition of morality is something that remains to be desired. To break this down into the most basic terms: "who defines what is right for anyone, let alone everyone, else?" See, in a culture, you necessarily have more than one person. There is what could be called "communication" or "exchange" between these people. That's culture: the exchange of information. Now, all of that is well and fine, and, as I've said it is by my opinion, so is your definition above for morality. However, when you put these two together: culture + morality, then everything falls apart.

If we define culture as exchange of information, then we have to define information as objectively neither "good" nor "bad." Even if we go along on the concept of individual units of information, moments, karma, etc. we can't call them "good" or "bad." These are simply terms that cannot be applied to this type of information because there are not two types of it. Morality, as you've defined it, is binary. There are some things that are "good" some are "bad." But with information, it's all the same. Objectively, there is only what is real. There is nothing "good" or "bad" there is only what is real, only the information itself. It is not conveyed by "media," however it can be, and when it becomes so, then the "culture" becomes "immoral," because then you have a binary-sided arbitrary object, with one side of the coin being "good" and the other being "bad." The whole use of media is "bad" because it is all lies. Lying is "bad" because it is not reality. Reality is ultimate in the here and now. If you deny it, then you will only follow a course toward self-induced suffering. To create a false media to convey reality inside of, thus to conceal it within a lie, all you need to do is "believe" in "good" and "bad" as binary karma, moments, value, etc.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]If justice is upheld, we're gonna do just fine.[/quote]

I agree. Global justice under a world court. To do this, we have to agree on who to try for what crimes. It is clear that, because the "terrorist" "master-minds" (such as Ramzi El-Khazid and Mohammed Atta) were NOT tried by a world-court, they were not the real criminals. The real criminals are the ones taking the law into their own hands, ie. the neo-cons. Therefore, to unify the world into a single global culture, we have to try these criminals in a world court. That is what global justice means, and that is not some esoteric concept, as is your impossible dictatorship of "good" over "bad." To you it is simple: "good" shall triumph over "evil." To me it is simple too: a world court should be convened to try the neo-cons for war-crimes and crimes against humanity dating back to, and including, not only 9-11, but the unconstitutional 2000 election. The people in office, I'm sure you wouldn't recognise their names, were CIA under GHWB, and this period dates back as far as to the assassination of Kennedy. They did that, they did Bay of Pigs, they did Watergate, they did Iran-Contra, they did the Mujahadeen, they did Gulf of Tonkin, etc. etc. etc. and IMO it would be best to try them in public before they all die of old age having succeeded in bringing about global fascist dictatorship.

I disagree. And I think your behaviour of late around here confirms that.

lol, thanks crow, I do need a break.

Hmm. Mars, hm?

Okay then, let's start by looking at the polar ice cap:

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/lg5.jpg>[/img]

This is a picture of Mars' south polar ice cap. So far as I know, Mars does not have a north polar ice cap. Instead it has what's known as the north polar "hood."

This was actually one of the first pictures that finally proved Mars did have a polar ice cap at either pole. Before 2002, it was widely speculated there had once been water on Mars, however Heinrich Shliemann, who first made that postulation around the turn of the twentieth century, was ridiculed at the time, and told that the "canals" he saw on Mars were actually minute imperfections in his reading glasses.

The fact Mars has a polar ice cap is significant for two reasons: 1) it gives the NASA and JPL nerds an excuse to jack off over star trek and talk about the "potential for colonization," which is an absurd pipe-dream at best, at least so long as they keep using solid rocket fuel propulsion systems. 2) Much more importantly, however, the fact there is an ice cap and proof of past global floods on Mars means that Mars has ice ages just like our own planet. Let me elaborate on why this is significant:

Our own planet currently has a south polar ice cap. We have some bergs and ice sheets in the Arctic, but the majority of polar glaciation is concentrated over Antarctica in the south. Now, what causes glaciation?

Glaciation is caused by ionisation. When salt water is ionised (has a negatively charged electrical current passed through it), the salt separates from the water. This is very significant because salt water, such as what most of the water on our planet consists of, does not freeze. This is why they throw salt across an icy road. The salt dissolves the ice, because it combines with the frozen water and melts it. Therefore, combining salt with water thaws ice, and subtracting salt from water allows ice to form. So, for a polar ice cap to form all we need then is a source of negatively charged electrical current to ionise the water, separate the salt, and allow the remaining fresh water to freeze.

Enter the electromagnetic poles. Now, earth rotates about its axis, which is tilted  $23.5^\circ$  from a right angle relative its orbital plane. The poles of this axis of rotation are called the "geographic" poles. The North "geographic" pole and the north electromagnetic pole were, last time I checked, offset from one another by a difference of  $11^\circ$ . Here's a quick little diagram I drew a while ago to measure the differences:

[img]http://www.benpadijah.com/MISC\_diagrams/terrafirma.jpg[img]

The numbers along the arc represent the differences per degree. The blue lines represent the polar circle of the EM pole rotating around the geographic pole in green. The red line is the "tropic" between the equator - the bottom line, and the  $23.5^\circ$  latitude. The larger numbers are measures of distances to show ratio, but I forget what measuring unit I used as a base, so that might be useless. Anyway...

When the little blue lines and the little green line in the diagram above overlap exactly, that is, when the EM pole aligns exactly with the geographic pole, then the electromagnetic orientation of the planet reverses. Magnetic North becomes magnetic South, and magnetic south becomes magnetic North.

What follows is the ice age ending in one hemisphere and beginning in the other. The ice cap that now has the positive electromagnetic charge melts, and the new negative electromagnetic pole glaciates.

Now, these events do not occur overnight. They take tens of thousands of years at least. Right now, we are in northern hemisphere "autumn" relative to our ice age cycle. Siberia is beginning to freeze over already as the location of the new north pole. North America will likely not glaciates, since it did in the last ice age (along with Northern Europe), however that was when the poles aligned in the Yukon Bay. In the upcoming north hemisphere winter, the north geographic pole (tilted  $23.5^\circ$ ) will have "precessed" (rotated) around to Siberia. Most of Asia will be under ice. However, and this is the good news: Antarctica, as the new north polar "hood," will thaw and become habitable.

What is significant about the presence of a polar ice cap and the evidence of past global flooding on Mars is that it indicates these events are not unique only to earth.

This supports my long-term assertion that this effect is related to the sunspot cycle. Now, currently, it is known the eleven-year base sunspot cycle can cause what are called "mini" ice-ages. During the Maunder Minimum (bottoming out in about 1600), Europe experienced such a "mini" ice-age. However, the true connection between sunspots and planetary em-polar reversal and geographic pole shift lies not in sunspots' eleven-year base cycle nor in "mini" ice ages. No, to understand the role of sunspots on this interplanetary cycle we have to look at what causes sunspots in the first place.

The gas cloud of the sun rotates differentially, which means the area around the equator rotates faster and the area around the poles rotates slower. This causes the sun's electromagnetic field to coil up around the sun's differential rotation like a ball of twine winding around itself. The longitudinal (n/s) em-field lines gradually wrap around and become latitudinal (e/w). The em-field lines coil up very tightly, and this is what causes sunspots, as an em-field jumps from one latitudinal line to another. Once the em-bands have coiled up as tightly as they can, the solar em-field reaches a point of "critical mass," at which point it reverses its em-polarity.

I assert that, whether it happens simultaneously for them all, or whether first for the sun, then the planets outward from it, as far out as to IO and the moons of Jupiter at least, the reversal of the em-field of the sun causes the reversal of the em-field of the planets (such as earth and mars). Now, it can be reckoned that the em-pole reversal of the sun, and thus of the planets of our solar system, corresponds also to a galactic-core / inter-galactic alignment, however I feel I've gone on too long with this post already, and so I won't go into that right now.

I'll leave off with this remark as food for thought though: it's possible that the microbes they discovered in Antarctica that they speculated to have come from Mars may indeed prove the presence of inter-planetary germination, the planting of the "seed" of life beneath the ice, not only on earth, but also on Mars.

Dear reader,

<h1>Iraq Expels American Security Firm</h1>

<h2>Iraq Orders U.S. Government's Security Firm Out of the Country in Wake of Killings</h2>

By ROBERT H. REID Associated Press Writer

AP correspondents Deborah Hastings in New York, Mike Baker in Raleigh, N.C., and Matthew Lee in Washington contributed to this report.

Sept. 17, 2007

BAGHDAD

The Iraqi government announced Monday it was ordering Blackwater USA, the security firm that protects U.S. diplomats, to leave the country after what it said was the fatal shooting of eight Iraqi civilians following a car bomb attack against a State Department convoy.

The order by the Interior Ministry, if carried out, would deal a severe blow to U.S. government operations in Iraq by stripping diplomats, engineers, reconstruction officials and others of their security protection.

The presence of so many visible, aggressive Western security contractors has angered many Iraqis, who consider them a mercenary force that runs roughshod over people in their own country.

Sunday's shooting was the latest in a series of incidents in which Blackwater and other foreign contractors have been accused of shooting to death Iraqi citizens. None has faced charges or prosecution.

Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice telephoned Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki late Monday and the two agreed to conduct a "fair and transparent investigation" and hold any wrongdoers accountable, said Yassin Majid, an adviser to the prime minister. Rice was expected to visit the Mideast on Tuesday.

Deputy State Department spokesman Tom Casey said Rice "told the prime minister that we were investigating this incident and wanted to gain a full understanding of what happened."

"She reiterated that the United States does everything it can to avoid such loss of life, in contrast to the enemies of the Iraqi people who deliberately target civilians," Casey said.

Majid made no mention of the order to expel Blackwater, and it was unlikely the United States would agree to abandon a security company that plays such a critical role in American operations in Iraq.

The U.S. clearly hoped the Iraqis would be satisfied with an investigation, a finding of responsibility and compensation to the victims' families and not insist on expelling a company that the Americans cannot operate here without.

Details of Sunday's incident were unclear.

Interior Ministry spokesman Abdul-Karim Khalaf said eight civilians were killed and 13 were wounded when contractors believed to be working for Blackwater USA opened fire on civilians in the predominantly Sunni neighborhood of Mansour in western Baghdad.

"We have canceled the license of Blackwater and prevented them from working all over Iraqi territory. We will also refer those involved to Iraqi judicial authorities," Khalaf said.

He said witness reports pointed to Blackwater involvement but added that the shooting was still under investigation. One witness, Hussein Abdul-Abbas, said the explosion was followed by about 20 minutes of heavy gunfire and "everybody in the street started to flee immediately."

U.S. officials said the motorcade was traveling through Nisoor Square on the way back to the Green Zone when the car bomb exploded, followed by volleys of small-arms fire that disabled one of the vehicles but caused no American casualties.

Blackwater said the company had not been formally notified of any expulsion.

"Blackwater's independent contractors acted lawfully and appropriately in response to a hostile attack in Baghdad on Sunday," spokeswoman Anne E. Tyrrell said in a statement late Monday.

"The 'civilians' reportedly fired upon by Blackwater professionals were in fact armed enemies and Blackwater personnel returned defensive fire," she said. "Blackwater regrets any loss of life but this convoy was violently attacked by armed insurgents, not civilians, and our people did their job to defend human life."

American officials refused to explain the legal authority under which Blackwater operates in Iraq or say whether the company was complying with the order. It also was unclear whether the contractors involved in the shooting were still in Iraq.

The incident drew attention to one of the controversial American practices of the war the use of heavily armed private security contractors who Iraqis complain operate beyond the control of U.S. military and Iraqi law.

The events in Mansour also illustrate the challenge of trying to protect U.S. officials in a city where car bombs can explode at any time, and where gunmen blend in with the civilian population.

"The Blackwater guys are not fools. If they were gunning down people, it was because they felt it was the beginning of an ambush," said Robert Young Pelton, an independent military analyst and author of the book "Licensed to Kill."

"They're famous for being very aggressive. They use their machine guns like car horns. But it's not the goal to kill people."

In one of the most horrific attacks of the war, four Blackwater employees were ambushed and killed in Fallujah in 2004 and their charred bodies hung from a bridge over the Euphrates River.

But Iraqis have long complained about high-profile, heavily armed security vehicles careering through the streets, with guards pointing weapons at civilians and sometimes firing warning shots at anyone deemed too close. And Iraqi officials were quick to condemn the foreign guards.

Al-Maliki late Sunday condemned the shooting by a "foreign security company" and called it a "crime."

Interior Minister Jawad al-Bolani described the shooting as "a crime about which we cannot be silent."

"Everyone should understand that whoever wants good relations with Iraq should respect Iraqis," al-Bolani told Al-Arabiya television. "We are implementing the law and abide by laws, and others should respect these laws and respect the sovereignty and independence of Iraqis in their country."

Defense Minister Abdul-Qadir al-Obaidi told Iraqi television that "those criminals" responsible for deaths "should be punished" and that the government would demand compensation for the victims' families.

Despite threats of prosecution, government spokesman Ali al-Dabbagh told Alhurra television that contractors cannot be prosecuted by Iraqi courts because "some of them have immunity."

In April, the Defense Department said about 129,000 contractors of many nationalities were operating in Iraq nearly as many as the entire U.S. military force before this year's troop buildup.

About 4,600 contractors are in combat roles, such as protecting supply convoys along Iraq's dangerous, bomb-laden highways.

Blackwater, a secretive North Carolina-based company run by a former Navy SEAL, is among the biggest and best known security firms, with an estimated 1,000 employees in Iraq and at least $800 million in government contracts.

In May 2007, a Blackwater employee shot and killed a civilian who was thought to be driving too close to a company security detail.

Last Christmas Eve, an inebriated Blackwater employee shot and killed a security guard for an Iraqi vice president, according to Iraqi and U.S. officials. The contractor made his way to the U.S. Embassy where Blackwater officials arranged to have him flown home to the United States, according U.S. officials who spoke only on the condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to speak to the media.

The contractor has been fired and Blackwater is cooperating with federal investigators, company spokeswoman Anne Tyrrell has said.

Here are some pertinent statistics (as of August, 2007) involving the US occupation of Iraq:

<blockquote>

Troops in Iraq - Total 179,685, including 168,000 from the US, 5,500 from the UK, 1,200 from South Korea and 4,985 from all other nations

<blockquote>

US Troop Casualties - 3,777 US troops; 98% male. 90% non-officers; 80% active duty, 12% National Guard; 74% Caucasian, 10% African-American, 11% Latino. 18% killed by non-hostile causes. 51% of US casualties were under 25 years old. 70% were from the US Army

US Troops Wounded - 27,848, 20% of which are serious brain or spinal injuries (total excludes psychological injuries)

US Troops with Serious Mental Health Problems 30% of US troops develop serious mental health problems within 3 to 4 months of returning home

Private Contractors in Iraq, Working in Support of US Army Troops - More than 180,000 in August 2007, per The Nation/LA Times.

<blockquote>

Journalists killed - 112, 74 by murder and 38 by acts of war

Journalists killed by US Forces - 14

Iraqi Civilians Killed, Estimated - A UN issued report dated Sept 20, 2006 stating that Iraqi civilian casualties have been significantly under-reported. Casualties are reported at 50,000 to over 100,000, but may be much higher. Some informed estimates place Iraqi civilian casualties at over 600,000.

The long story made short is that there are "more than" 180,000 "private contractors" in Iraq, while there are "only" 168,000 US troops there.

My question to you, dear reader, is:

<blockquote>

"If it is in the US populations' best interest to recall every US troop from Iraq, as many of us undoubtedly would agree it is, then is it not also in the best interest of the population of Iraq to expel the even greater number of Private Military Contractors operating there as well?"

Whether we agree or disagree on its meaning, the expulsion of Blackwater and other PMCs from Iraq is an important message being sent to us as citizens of our own 231 year old Democracy by this fledgling Democratic nation, and it is one that I believe we cannot afford to ignore.

As always, I urge you to support the Global Justice movement, and to pray for peace.

-Jon Gee, Tuesday, Sept. 18, 2007

I've heard many people say, the EU is just what Hitler wanted. No it isn't. Hitler wanted a global dictatorship. The EU is an international monetary union. The world bank has to accumulate enough credit (from various national debts) to mint a global currency. To do this, they have to assume the military might to be able to collect on this credit. Without entering into a pact with the heads of all involved nations, and thus establishing a global economic trade union, the world bank cannot issue currency based on its credit. Once the world bank is able to issue a global currency, though, it will be necessary to translate the wealth of national currencies to an equivalent amount of global currency. In order to accomplish this, it will be necessary for everyone living in the countries of the monetary union to have a greater amount of global currency (buying power) than national currency (amount of value). In other words, only once federal notes are bankrupted can the value of global currency outweigh the buying power of national money.

I've heard many people say, the first form of global government will be a dictatorship. This is wrong. To enable the World Bank to enforce the use of its global currency, by calling in debts owed to it by military might, the first form of global government would be in the form of an international free-trade agreement effectively dissolving all national borders. The nations who agreed to this pact would, as does the EU now, all share one fixed world currency. Thus, it would be the international businesses of the private sectors among nations that would form the first truly unified form of global government, by world-wide trade agreement. While this would be global fascism, it would not immediately imply dictatorship over the national populations. It would mean, instead, the formation of a direct democracy as the first form of global government, as consumerism would determine financial progress among the founding companies of the global credit union the same way votes determine the decisions made by representative government officials. Rather than voting for candidates to elect representatives, we would supply funds to a corporation that would reciprocate by determining our government's policies to maximize their own profits, thus increasing the value of our initial contribution to them. This is currently the case in the US.

I've heard many people say, the first global dictator will unify all the world's different religions. What would be wrong with that? If there actually is only one God, why should people disagree on his nature? Yet the fiction that we can accept one God as a species has led to the fact of many thousand years of warfare, all around the globe, as everyone attempts to convert everyone else to their own views. Due to its dependency on depletable resources, leading to its viral similitude in consuming until supersaturation and then metamorphosising its values, humanity alone self-regulates natural selection by survival of the fittest. By economic controls, mankind substitutes the value of earning money for the skill of natural survival. Therefore, the Almighty Dollar is, in truth, our idealisation as a species of the fact that we control our own populations - not only the number of us alive by institutionalised murder in the form of wars, but also the way in which those of us left over survive to breed by using the artificial exchange system of money. If there ever will be a single global god, it will, by necessity, be worshipped in the form of the global currency.

Thus, what we see is that the global government already exists in the form of free trade agreements and monetary unions, that wealthy companies and not elected officials comprise its ranks (though "we the people" control them by tariffs, boycotts and strikes even moreso than by voting for elected officials), and that, in truth, the one true god already ruling over all humanity and worshipped even by entire corporations themselves is the ideal lie that is money.

So what "many people say" and what is obvious enough for us all to see are often not the same. Ladies and gentlemen, please wake up now. We have arrived in our New World Order.

1999 and collective consciousness of "critical mass"

The Blair Witch Project was a "black op." It was covered up. It never happened.

So, what was covered up? What never happened? It was just a movie, right? Wrong.

Q: When Donnie Darko went to see the Last Temptation of Christ, what did Frank show him on the screen? A: a "portal." Q: what was Donnie Darko about? A: time travel.

So, what was the Blair Witch Project really about? Three teens enter the woods near Maryland making a documentary for a school project about a local legend: the Blair Witch. Four years later, their footage was discovered in an abandoned house in those woods. The movie was this footage. So, basically, the movie was a "mockumentary." In reality, the movie was shot cinema verité using a unique style of directing. The production crew would leave the day's instructions for the actors beneath a pile of rocks while the actors slept. Following these directions, the actors then filmed each other. The piles of rocks even became part of the plot-line. So basically, the film was more than a "mockumentary," it was also a form of "RPG" (role-playing game) like Dungeons and Dragons or Vampire. But these are only the how and the what. What about what it was "really" about? What about the why?

Who was "the Blair Witch"? She was never shown in the movie. In fact, she represented "God." Consider the plot as like an existentialist play, like Sartre's "No Exit," Becket's "Waiting for Godot," or Stoppard's "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are dead." In this context, the premise takes on additional depth. The characters represent archetypes, as in the other works of this genre, and the main character is the chorus, who is absent, and who represents, in effect (as in the book, Illuminatus! trilogy by Wilson or the S. American film "Holy Mountain"), the audience themselves. In the case of the Blair Witch Project, we have three actors, as opposed to two in the case of Godot or R&D. In fact, the two "directors" represent the dual character role, and thus play the part themselves of the mythical, off-camera Blair Witch / God type character.

The three actors in the BWP are named Josh, Heather and Mike. Josh is a "hippy" ringer for the archetype of Jesus, or, more accurately, for Yeshuah Ben Padijah (ie. Joshua the Panther), the real personage behind the mythical Jesus. Mike is a standard, somewhat slower witted, jockish and heavier-set student type character, the kind of "preppy" to grow up into a "yuppie," and is meant to represent the "common man" as a farmer / gladiator type of Christian, who, by their valuation of money, has a streak of hypocrisy, but who is, otherwise, basically a "good" guy. Heather is, similarly to Mike, simply the Eve character to Mike's Adam. She is the archetypal "female" whose moods and whims tend to assume leadership despite their lack of logic. In my opinion, Heather Donahue, who played the role of Heather (all the actors used their real names), is the best actress of all-time. Her emotions were more accurately portrayed than any other actress in all history. If Hollywood valued realism, she would have won an Academy Award. In her most popularly parodied scene (imitation being a higher form of recognition than ignorance), she tearfully expressed regret at having been forced into this leadership role. Truly breathtaking.

Now, aside from the Blair Witch representing God, Josh representing Jesus, and Mike and Heather representing Adam and Eve, what is significant about this movie? Well, there was a parallel "mockumentary" released at the same time as the movie of the supposed footage. This "mockumentary," made by the directors, involved interviews with a whole cast of fictional characters supporting and building up the mythos around the fictional Blair Witch world. One interview in particular is of note in tying the Blair Witch to the later movie Donnie Darko. It was said that the footage inside the film canisters "looked like it had been buried there for decades." The abandoned house (featured also in the movie's end) where the footage was discovered had been, in the context of the fictional BWP "world," found by the search party sent out to find the three missing "teens." The footage, found inside the house, was supposedly the only remains of the students that was found, and it "looked like it had been buried there for decades."

The Blair Witch Project is essentially a movie about time-travel. That is why it was "covered-up" immediately afterward.

During the autumn and winter of 1999, the movie was very popular. However, following the celebration of the turn of the millennium party in Winter 1999/2000, the movie lapsed into obscurity. By 9-11, 2001 and the WTC disaster, the movie was totally forgotten. However, there were several factors involved in this process. First, the directors sold the rights to a production company for distribution reasons. The production company re-sold the rights to a larger production company to make a sequel, which was met with extremely poor reviews and pretty much dynamited the reputation of the first BWP as a masterpiece of artistic cinema. Second, although the first BWP made over a billion dollars in domestic revenue the year of its release, that money all flooded upward; the directors received domestic distribution fees only (video-tape and dvd sales, which have proved very low, despite distribution rate being very high); the production company made double domestic gross by reselling the rights; the larger production company banked off the first film's reputation and made more on domestic gross theatre sales than they paid to buy the rights. It was, as was typical among the "startup" .com net entrepreneurial endeavors contemporary to it, an inevitable fiasco as big businesses rushed to get bigger by stamping out every smaller competitor. Meanwhile, the "black-op" or "cover story" for the BWP "world," BWP2: "book of shadows," is saving up on domestic distribution now to mass-release both movies simultaneously as soon as their contract runs out, and thus tank any chances the two original directors have of either being able to afford buying the serial rights back from them OR to save the series from this "unfortunate series of events."

The cover-story, the plot of BW2, was widely spread on the net before the film's release. This was an imitation of what Time magazine had called the "guerilla marketing" used before the first film's release by its original two directors. Whereas their technique, distributing fliers for the "missing students" for a year before release to build suspense and mystery, as well as merely brand recognition, was considered "innovative," the technique used by the producers of BW2, releasing the entire plot-line online, rather than in a parallel "mockumentary," was considered a way to "double-dip" the audience, charging them once to learn about it online and then again to see it in theatres. This is a standard enough technique of big business, a "corporate success story" of the industry of false images. However it was more than this as well. It was a means of defaming the reputation of the "world" created around the first film by the original directors. It was a cover-up of not only the existentialist archetypicality of the actor/characters, but also of that one key-note piece of information in the original's parallel "mockumentary" about the film canisters looking "like they had been there for decades."

In that single sentence lies the whole premise for the original directors' vision for the continuation of the BWP's plot-line inside its highly developed fictional "world." The BWP was going to be a story about time-travel. Hollywood stole the series (the fictional contextual "world" of the film) and re-made it in its own image, a media feeding frenzy. Why?

Well, who owns Hollywood? Who do you think? New York production companies. Well, who owns them? Viacom (distribution), Sony (manufacturing), Fox (production), the television networks, are all owned by the same megalocompanies that own the Hollywood studios. General Electric, Microsoft, Exxon-Mobil, etc. are all megalocorporations who own these image-distribution networks, and who do you think owns them? Well, their presidents and CEOs of course, Rupert Murdoch, Ted Turner, Bill Gates, etc. etc. Well, where does their money go that they make from owning these megalocorporations? Who do they owe debts to, who owns the owners? Well, usually politicians, specifically right-wing ones who support nationalism for developed nations and colonialism of less-developed nations. Politicians who make no qualms about having direct ties to the Central Intelligence Agency, and who usually are either members of the CIA and Yale college frat Skull and Bones, or are political office holders, or are owners (chief stock holders, the person behind the CEO or company administrative president) of those same megalocorporations. They "sit at the head of all tables" as the saying goes.

So, why would the executives who "sit at the head of all tables" want to torch the Blair Witch Project? And, a more important question, if it was popular by accident or chance, and not by their design, then how could they not have seen it coming, and even more importantly than that, why would they have allowed it to become popular unless it fit their own pre-existing strategy for continued world domination? All of these are good questions, and deserve to be asked. I don't have time to answer them all in this piece, but should anyone wish me to get back to them I definitely can later.

Instead, let me shift gears a moment and discuss the way the "big bang" at the creation of our universe (ie. when "God" made "something from nothing") never ended, and how the supposed "big crunch," that would theoretically destroy our universe if it proves to have a closed geometric surface of the space-time continuum, is already occurring even today.

Now, the way the universe works is this: at the centre of every spiral galaxy there is a black hole. The furthest visible spiral galaxies we can see today, because the photons we are seeing them on left them billions of years ago, have probably already been consumed by their central, now super-massive black-holes. Therefore, we can say that A) the furthest reaches of space-time are, by now, not the spiral galaxies they appear to be, but are probably all comprised of super-massive blackholes and B) that eventually the galaxies closer to us will also be consumed by their central black holes, and that, although it anthropically hasn't happened yet here, to our own Milky Way, that one day it will overtake us as well.

As these black holes grow super-massive, they take up more and more space in our universe, and consume the matter-energy visible to us beyond their barrier of darkness to a realm above and beyond that we cannot see. This explains why our universe appears to be expanding. This is an optical illusion as the photons themselves reaching us from the oldest and furthest away reaches of spacetime are being pulled backward toward their sources, which have now become super-massive black holes whose gravity is so strong it is consuming the universe around us outward into the approaching wave of destruction comprised of the conjoining of all these super-massive black holes into the surface of spacetime surrounding us at the speed of photons. And eventually it will reach here. However, we can imagine, like the immense world-wide tsunami that engulfed Atlantis, we will be able to see our doom approaching long before the wave actually swallows us to die in its depths. In other words, we will be able to predict this event being the true occurrence "behind the veil," so to speak, even though we cannot see it yet with our own eyes because what we see instead is ancient light from distant galaxies, long ago replaced by ruins.

However, until recently, we did not even know there was a black hole at the centre of spiral galaxies such as our own Milky Way. In fact, we can't even see the one at the centre of our own Milky Way yet because our telescopes cannot penetrate the dense cloud of stars surrounding it at the galaxy's core. Our perspective is limited to along the hub, and we have not yet been able to imagine a view of the Milky Way from off the surface of its "wagon-wheel" type shape. It was not until the Hubble space telescope sent back images of distant galaxies that we were finally able to observe the black holes at their central cores, and thus to speculate that our own Milky Way must have a corresponding counterpart to those.

So, what year did this occur in, that we discovered distant spiral galaxies, and thus our own as well, all had a black hole in their centres? Well, it occurred in the same year as the BWP movie was released, it occurred right before the winter celebration of the turn of the millennium between the end of 1999 and the beginning of the year 2000. So, this massively important event in scientific history occurred, more or less, simultaneously to the release of the BWP, in 1999.

Now it has long been the strategy of those who "sit at the head of all tables" to divert the public eye away from what would empower them and to draw attention instead onto, essentially, "panem et circens," bread and circus games. This is called "misdirection" and is used by such illusionist "magicians" as David Copperfield in their staged performances. The BWP was, essentially, just such a misdirection. It was meant to cover-up the contemporary discovery of the phenomenon of black-holes in spiral galaxies.

However, the magnitude of popularity of the concurrent misdirection was congruent to the importance of the publically empowering correspondent scientific discovery. Thus, the BWP became immensely popular for only a short period of time at the same time as this discovery, but this technique failed, to a certain extent. The movie alone managed to distract its viewers' attention away from this effect of public empowerment against those orchestrating it as an event of misdirection, the ones who "sit at the heads of all tables." However it only served to galvanize the remainder of those, outside the movie's immediate viewing audience, into public action against those manipulators behind the event of the movie's popularity. In late 1999 at the signing of the GATT treaty creating the IMF from the WTO and the World Bank, there were unexpectedly massive rallies and protests. Not since what Sam Huntington called "the crisis of democracy" in the 1960's had there been such massive turn-out. The conference, held in Seattle Washington in winter to prevent people from coming out in the snow, was attended by thousands of young protestors, all dressed in sock-hats and flannel loggers' jackets, the exact same dress-code adhered to by the characters of the first BWP. So, while half the nation watched the BWP, the other half protested the GATT, the IMF, the WTO and the world bank, ie. those who "sit at the heads of all tables" as the sole owners of the means of production.

The reason the BWP became so popular, and the reason this popularity had to be squelched, so rapidly was because of its meaning to the entire nation, as a symbol of the concurrent protests in Seattle. However, it was not the popular movement against the rich elite that was originally intended to be covered up by the BWP. This public movement against the rich has existed for as long as have the rich themselves, so they would not see the need to suppress it in the media before hand. Their paranoia of "persecution" is permanent, and resulted in the Inquisition and the Salem Witch Trials no less than the eventual burning of the BWP. No, the event the rich elite were attempting to cover up by allowing the prommotion of the BWP before its release was not the concurrent protests in Seattle. It was the discovery by NASA of the black hole at galactic core.

To have known to push a movie as much as they did before hand as they allowed the BWP to be they must have not only known about the existence of the black hole at the core of our Milky Way before the public did, meaning NASA notified them before they notified the public, but that the rich elite also determined the exact timing for the release by NASA of this discovery to the public. Such collusion is common, so we think little of it. However since it is corrupt and therefore criminal, we should not even have to think of it at all, since it should not have ever been allowed to occur at all.

Now, let's look at the first of those points: that the wealthy elite were aware of the existence of the black hole at galactic core before NASA's press release was covered by the (subsidiary) public media. How can we discern this? Well, it can be discerned in a rather roundabout way by examining who DIDN'T know about the black hole at galactic core before NASA released their press release, and that is the people who SHOULD HAVE known about it already: the indigenous populations of the world whose mythological historical sciences have been suppressed for thousands of years by collonisation by the same elite class of the rich. So we see the same strategies being used by Conquistadors against the Aztecs as being used by riot-police containing the public crowds in Seattle because there is a secret club that only the wealthy elite belong to that has been passing along the ability to use such techniques of oppression.

This club has been in possession of the knowledge not only of every technique of oppression imaginable, but also of the stolen knowledge of all their conquered people's mythologies and sciences. So, when an indigenous author on the subject of the Mayan calendar such as Jose Arguelles comes along and describes what he thinks about the topic of his expertise, he meets little "public interest" and his information in that case is considered "less important" to book-sellers than, say, his take on 9-11. The reason for this is quite clear: the marginalisation of ANY form of information that would empower the public or those who have been historically oppressed by this secret club of the rich elite.

This club is not, as its disinfo agents insist, based on bloodlines. It is, however, in possession of extremely advanced technology. The need to protect this property from the public is, obviously, not the concern ONLY of certain families. It is the concern of a whole class of people entirely open to upward mobility throughout its ranks. However, there most definately are small clubs, organisations of interests in the private sector, that teach the techniques of oppression and the existence of the technology, and make access to the latter seem dependent on the practise of the former.

Some would say, "freemasons" are this club. Others would say it is the "Illuminati." However it is no more either of these than it is doctors or lawyers. Some would raise Yale frat Skull and Bones, the Bohemian Grove club and the CIA as examples of groups within this organisation. However these assertions are, of course, backwards, since it is the CIA, bogo and S&B that are the ones who could be accused in the present, whereas the Masons and the Illuminati are actually groups from the past that have been historically blamed for the same crimes. Technically, the ones responsible NOW are the CIA, S&B and bogro, NOT the Masons or the Illuminati. But, in truth, they are "untouchable" and ubiquitous throughout all history, since they are merely modern names for the same club comprised only of the rich elite.

So, why, if they saw the protests in Seattle as no threat worth covering-up beforehand, would the elite-club of the rich consider the discovery of the black hole in galactic core more a threat to their survival beforehand to the extent of releasing the BWP to cover it up? Because the event in Seattle was a modern expression of their dictatorial trend in rulership, however the fact of the black hole at galactic core is a threat to their "temporal" power, or their authority to exist as a continuous tradition of governors behind the backs of the public. The reason that the modern elite rich thought the Milky Way black hole a more important fact to keep secret than the struggle against their current incarnations was that it threatened their religion, that being very different from the mythology they use to mind-control the public, their "secret" technology.

Their technology, based on ancient application of knowledge such as the black-hole at galactic core, allows time-travel. Short and simple: that is their secret, key to it all. They obey their class duty to oppress the poor because they are promised immortality via time-travel technology. The evidence for this technology's existence is proven to them two-fold: one by its arcane forms being demonstrated in ritual, and one by the rumours of such modern technologies existing in secret military bases.

Whether or not such technology actually exists or not is irrelevant, since only the promise of it, like a carrot on a stick, needs to be held out before the rich to get them to obey their duty to oppress the poor. I'm not going to discuss this secret technology either, although it is worth a separate investigation in itself. Instead what I'm interested in here is not the methodology of empowerment of the wealthy, but that of the poor. What can those not "in" the club do to unshoulder the burden of the club's rulership? It ultimately doesn't matter who the current members responsible for our oppression are. They are, by us, "untouchable." No, to free our minds from the set of one who is oppressed, we have to tackle the archetypal symbols of our oppression on a personal, mental level. We have to address our own oppressive demons before we can be free from the oppression of our perception by others.

So to unburden ourselves of oppression, we must reject what they promise us. Only by rejecting that it is something they have that we do not will we be able to realise it is ours too, and that thus we already have it and that cannot by anyone ever be denied. In this case, what causes the poor to obey is the promise of just rewards as immortality in an afterlife (as opposed to reincarnation into further suffering). What causes the rich to obey is the same concept, immortality, however in the flesh of their own current incarnation, without experiencing death, because of secret technology that also enables time-travel. We have to reject these ideas in order to achieve them in reality. So, how do we do this?

Let's look at the suppression of importance of the Milky Way black Hole. The knowledge of this is not new. It was known within the secret club long before it was released to the public by NASA, the timing thereof carefully chosen to maximise distraction. It has expression in the Mayan "Hunab Khu" as pointed out by Argelles, as well as to the Tibetan "black sun" appropriated by the NAZIs and represented by the swastika as a symbol of the galaxy seen from above (a spiral). Obviously, the spiral or maze is a historically ubiquitous, "archetypal" symbol, and so it is clear that this knowledge has been possible to access even before the invention of the Hubble space telescope. In fact, there is even evidence linking the sarcophagus lid of Pacal Votan and the SETI Arecibo message.

In fact, the knowledge of the black hole at galactic core has been possible for as long as there has been sentient life to imagine such. This is not due to operant observer principle, wherein we imagine such into existence. It is due to the law of diminishing returns. We can observe what is, and all we can imagine is relatively limited based on that. Thus, the easiest of all feats is to imagine what is probably true, and to predict whether or not it proves to be the case through subsequent observation. That's called the "scientific" method, but there is too much emphasis placed in modern times on the need for laboratory experiment for verification. As Einstein said, "my mind is my laboratory."

So, why now are we being told as a mass populous this information that previously was preserved as part of the "science" of tribal indigenous peoples? It is because those who conquered them and stole their science are using it as a method to assert their dominance over the remaining majority of mankind. The concurrence of the release of this information with the turn of the millennium was in no way accidental. We are being told one side of the story in order to be denied our natural knowledge of the story from every other side as well. Instead of the cult of the rich allowing NASA to "confirm" their knowledge, they released the news as a discovery.

All of these are techniques of the cult of the rich's oppression. They are holding the carrot on a stick out before us and we are carrying them on our backs. However, if we free ourselves from their paradigm, that, in this case, being the "discovery" of a well-known fact, then we will see clearly the meaning of this fact as well, and furthermore be able to address this meaning objectively, uncoloured by the emotional reaction of surprise at its alledged "discovery." In the case of the black hole at our galaxy's core, the meaning is, as I've stated, quite obvious: that one day our galaxy will be consumed by this black hole in the same way as our planet will one day be consumed by our own expanding sun, but that, most likely, this would only occur at the end of our own local universe.

Consider that fact: the evidence of the galactic black hole provides proof that our local universe will die. Our universe had a beginning, and it will have an end. But what can we make of this? If we are promised "immortality" by the riches' mind-control mythology, then what happens to our souls on universal "judgment day"? The mythologies have not got any prepared answer for this, but the truth is, as I've said also, quite obvious: once we see past the layer of photons, the veil of the speed of light, then we can perceive what lies "inside" the conjoining super-massive black holes beyond our local continuum of spacetime. We see that once the universe has reached "critical mass" and black holes first begun to form, the "inside" of a black hole is the same as the "outside" of our universe. Inside a black hole is a gravitational singularity, and beyond that a "baby universe."

Each of our own minds inhabits such a "baby universe." We all experience our linear versions of perception with blinders on to most of reality beyond our senses as "tunnel realities." Sometimes these "tunnel realities" overlap and cross through one another. Each tunnel reality is the "sum over histories" of our perceptual "baby universe." So, the "sum over histories" of all the "baby universes" inside black holes outside our local spacetime continuum (beneath "c") is the "multiverse" of all such "tunnel realities." Even though this is a simple and very accurate expression of the experience of sentient entities on the surface of earth, that all cross over one another like threads in a ball of twine, it is touted as "heaven" beyond the created universe, and promised us only after death either individually or collectively. Thus, the multiverse of perception beyond the speed limit of photons is the realm in which time travel becomes possible, and this realm is easily accessed by the unoppressed mind.

So, what happened in 1999, when NASA released to the global public observable confirmation of the ancient knowledge of our own spiral galaxy's central black hole? Well, to return to Donnie Darko, what is a "portal"? A portal is an entrance to a "time-tunnel" or a temporal singularity: a "wormhole" or Einstein-Rosen bridge connecting two distant points in spacetime by a single tear in the fabric of spacetime. This is what happened in 1999: a dimensional "portal" was opened for the mass public. Each of us then split off into our own unique reality-tunnel. Since then, no two of us have existed inside the same exact universe. Each of us has existed entirely in our own unique mind and this interior reality projected out around us as the external world we observe has only ever overlapped with one another of our mind-sets on rare occasions such as in love or conspiracy. Before this we all shared a single contextual reality, and the sum of all our minds was less than the presence of this shared material consensus reality. However now, we find there is no such thing as a shared, common reality that overshadows us all. Our minds have reached a point of supersaturation (mirrored in the difference between our exponential population expansion and the bell curve of peak oil) and at this point the sum of all combined personal realities is larger than our own entire materially shared universe. Now, we see a struggle for mind-control over the masses in the absence of a consensus, agreed upon, factually confirmed reality. We see the struggle of one group to mind-control another by convincing them they are blind to objectively verifiable factual reality.

So, what happened in 1999? The light from the furthest galaxies left them billions of years ago, whereas the average life-span of their stars is only millions of years. They died a long, long time ago. The light from closer galaxies left them millions of years ago. They died thousands of years ago, at the time of the Atlantean flood. The light from stars in our own galaxy left them thousands of years ago. They died hundreds of years ago. The light from our closest stars leaves them hundreds of years before it reaches us. They died merely decades ago. The light from our own sun takes somewhere around seven minutes to reach us. Thus, perpetually seven minutes in our future, our entire universe could blink to an abrupt end. In 1999, we saw this happen, however, obviously, it did not literally yet occur. What we saw was the fore-knowledge of our universe dying, however this obviously hasn't happened yet.

Now, beyond that perception, the last one to be shared by us all, we exist each in our own separate universe. When we die, it will appear to those whose perceptual space we share as though our body ceases to live and our mind ceases to exist. However, inside our own universe, our life will go on as if we had narrowly avoided death. In this way, we will all live, and continue to live, until we die of old age, even if we seem to die before then to those of us we love. Thus, the promise of immortality is accomplished in our perception by us all because we have all shared the experience of the universal apocalypse, the biblical "End of Days."

However, there is one more truth I should point out before I conclude. This apocalypse, in which we met the characters of Jesus, Adam and Eve, all grown young again, was only a false vision, and not the actual end of our universe. Our universe does still exist, albeit in a fractured version overshadowed by our collected individual strings of consciousness. While each of us feels divided from one another on issues such as 9-11 and the War in Iraq, we are being blinded by those behind those issues to the fact that they have made our mutual space a hell-dimension. It remains parallel to our eyes, separated by the screen of glass on the tv, but we know that it is still reality.

Those who benefited from the BWP do not want you to know any of this: they are behind the mass-unifying public spectacles, the so-called global "apocalypse." But this is not real. It is only an image they are broadcasting across the inside of the sky, and behind even that all that still exists of our entire universe is the static pixels of dead air.

"When a nation's leaders do not uphold, but break, the laws they are sworn to protect, those leaders sacrifice all right to such offices, or else those offices shall cease to have rights over the governed."

I've heard many people say, the EU is just what Hitler wanted. No it isn't. Hitler wanted a global dictatorship. The EU is an international monetary union. The world bank has to accumulate enough credit (from various national debts) to mint a global currency. To do this, they have to assume the military might to be able to collect on this credit. Without entering into a pact with the heads of all involved nations, and thus establishing a global economic trade union, the world bank cannot issue currency based on its credit. Once the world bank is able to issue a global currency, though, it will be necessary to translate the wealth of national currencies to an equivalent amount of global currency. In order to accomplish this, it will be necessary for everyone living in the countries of the monetary union to have a greater amount of global currency (buying power) than national currency (amount of value). In other words, only once federal notes are bankrupted can the value of global currency outweigh the buying power of national money. I've heard many people say, the first form of global government will be a dictatorship. This is wrong. To enable the World Bank to enforce the use of its global currency, by calling in debts owed to it by military might, the first form of global government would be in the form of an international free-trade agreement effectively dissolving all national borders. The nations who agreed to this pact would, as does the EU now, all share one fixed world currency. Thus, it would be the international businesses of the private sectors among nations that would form the first truly unified form of global government, by world-wide trade agreement. While this would be global fascism, it would not immediately imply dictatorship over the national populations. It would mean, instead, the formation of a direct democracy as the first form of global government, as consumerism would determine financial progress among the founding companies of the global credit union the same way votes determine the decisions made by representative government officials. Rather than voting for candidates to elect representatives, we would supply funds to a corporation that would reciprocate by determining our government's policies to maximize their own profits, thus increasing the value of our initial contribution to them. This is currently the case in the US.

I've heard many people say, the first global dictator will unify all the world's different religions. What would be wrong with that? If there actually is only one God, why should people disagree on his nature? Yet the fiction that we can accept one God as a species has led to the fact of many thousand years of warfare, all around the globe, as everyone attempts to convert everyone else to their own views. Due to its dependency on depletable resources, leading to its viral similitude in consuming until supersaturation and then metamorphosing its values, humanity alone self-regulates natural selection by survival of the fittest. By economic controls, mankind substitutes the value of earning money for the skill of natural survival. Therefore, the Almighty Dollar is, in truth, our idealisation as a species of the fact that we control our own populations - not only the number of us alive by institutionalised murder in the form of wars, but also the way in which those of us left over survive to breed by using the artificial exchange system of money. If there ever will be a single global god, it will, by necessity, be worshipped in the form of the global currency.

Thus, what we see is that the global government already exists in the form of free trade agreements and monetary unions, that wealthy companies and not elected officials comprise its ranks (though "we the people" control them by tariffs, boycotts and strikes even more so than by voting for elected officials), and that, in truth, the one true god already ruling over all humanity and worshipped even by entire corporations themselves is the ideal lie that is money.

So what "many people say" and what is obvious enough for us all to see are often not the same. Ladies and gentlemen, please wake up now. We have arrived in our New World Order.

We cannot stop this movement; it is greater than any of us alone. We are guaranteed freedom to voice our opinions by right of law. Without the media, we will still be heard, by any means necessary.

"Talking Points" and "Staying on Message" are "newspeak" lies. We will win, inevitably, because we admit reality. This administration are war-profiteers. That is an undeniable fact. They know that we know the truth, and that is what scares them most.

What do we want? We want global justice. We want the chicken-hawk carpet-baggers to be held accountable for treason, for crimes against humanity, and for war profiteering.

When do we want it? We have always, and will always, as long as there is one free human being left alive, continuously demand the rights we have been promised by law. We want our rights, and we want them ALWAYS. Not just for today, but now and FOREVER.

the movement for Global Justice will be victorious because it represents the moral right to redress our elected officials for grievances.

We hired them to do a very simple job: protect our freedom. We did not hire them to tap our phone-lines infringing on our private lives. We did not hire them to lead us by false-pretenses into a kamikaze blitzkrieg in the name of big oil companies. We did not hire them to censor us when we protest. This is NOT their job.

If you didn't perform the duties of YOUR job, would you expect to get fired? Then so should they.

Demand global justice. Impeach president George W. Bush and every one of his appointed officials. Let them be arrested and tried by an impartial world court. Let the sentence of that court be upheld. With the facts of reality on our side, we have nothing to fear from true justice.

Let's make this happen. Find out what you can do in your local area today. Support the movement to impeach; support the anti-war movement; support the 9-11 truth movement; and let's bring about true justice on a globally unifying scale.

Everything is backwards inside out of looking-glass land. Once you realise you've been lied to and most of what you believe you know is wrong, you will find the world is much more vast than you at first saw, but that those who had concealed this from you are really the only ones around to fear.

No one knows what is in your own best interest better than you do for yourself.

Just as the imaginary "dangers" of an "unknown" world beyond their "protection" were lies all along, so is their entire motive backward to the mind-control moralities they taught us to value. They view their unethical strategies as necessary for their own survival and the protection of their property.

Their greatest fear is that they are massively out-numbered by the populous they dominate, and their illusion of authority is flimsy and necessarily changes with their short-term goals. They use fear-tactics and lies; they are fighting what they see as a desperate fight to maintain their hegemony.

Their future is short, and they know it. Their time has almost run out, their crimes have almost caught up with them, and they are now short-selling their own future generations into a cess-pool infested prison-planet just to bail themselves out in the immediate present.

We know who "they" are, right in the here and now. The Yale frat Skull and Bones fed the ranks of the CIA, eventually forming the Bildebergers. Their greatest fear is being held accountable for the crimes they know they are guilty of committing daily.

All that remains is for us to know who "we" are. That is easy too. We are the ones who are left over, the oppressed, the disenfranchised, the victims, the innocent. All it remains now to be done is to make a choice: whose side are we on?

Are we on our own side, or are we with those who have lied to us all along?

I think the answer to that should be fairly simple and obvious for us all to solve.

Step 2:<center>

Please become ordained online for free at the <a href =

<http://www.ulc.net/index.php?page=ordain>>Universal Life Church (ULC.net). You can print-out your minister paper immediately. ULC is not specifically a cannabis sacrament institution, however they are non-denominational and have many years of success in securing religious freedoms. Ordainment here is one important step in the process of building your own 'religious defense to prosecution' and it lasts for life. This 'religious exemption' could also help you or your family to avoid otherwise mandatory government vaccines, and other kinds of Big Brother programs.</center>

<blockquote><center>

>Become Ordained

Welcome! You are about to become an ordained minister of the Universal Life Church, Modesto, California. Please be sure to find out about the legal doctrines governing your country, state or province.

After you fill out the following form, your request will be promptly reviewed by pastoral staff. You will receive notification of your ordination status by email.

Ordinations are conducted several times each week, so normally you will hear from us within a day or two.

We do not furnish this information to any outside organization for any purpose. Your privacy is carefully guarded. There is no charge or obligation associated with your ordination. Ordination is for life, without cost, and without question of faith.

Read carefully before applying for ordination

Please do NOT use this form to report address or name changes - to report record changes, click here

Please avoid using the same email address for more than one person if at all possible. The email address is used as a record identifier and must be unique for each person. Do not submit someone for ordination without their permission and approval.

Each request is reviewed for completeness. You must include a complete, legal name. Spiritual names and initials only are unacceptable for ordination records. If your legal name is initials only, or your legal name is one word only, include this information in your application, or it will be rejected. Frivolous names will be rejected whenever we notice them. If your parents had a sense of humor when naming you, we may reject your application initially, but upon explanation, we will reconsider. No one is rejected because of their name, but we must protect the integrity of the records against those who fraudulently submit requests for pets, obscene names, etc. Applying for ordination in the name of a fictitious person or animal, or the submission of a person's name without his or her permission is fraud.

Please understand that there is no such thing as "instant online ordination." A computer cannot ordain you. Your request must be reviewed before your ordination can be done legally. You cannot be issued a credential automatically by a computer!

If you do not have an email account, you may obtain one for free, which you can access via any computer on the Internet, from such services as msn.com or yahoo.com. Without a valid email address, you will not receive confirmation of your ordination.</center>

</blockquote>

Step 3:<center>

Make sure that you have your Cannabis Sanctuary paperwork and THC Ministry ID card to be able to provide evidence that you are a sincere and legitimate practitioner of cannabis sacrament in the case of an encounter with government officials. Ordering your documents also helps us with a donation which is used for the benefit of all of our members.

We stay active and continually become more effective with donations from our members who help us to help others. Thank you for your support.

For information on how to get your legal documents and membership id cards, go here:

<http://www.thc-ministry.org/kit2.htm>The Cannabis Sanctuary Kit & Legal Defense Package

Hi. In my opinion, the best religious 'defense to prosecution' for any 'marijuana' charges starts with your own sincerity. Good manners and respect for others also helps to demonstrate that you are for real.

Our Cannabis Sanctuary Kit provides you with proof of your legitimacy as a religious practitioner of Cannabis Sacrament. You become a full supporting member of the THC Ministry the moment you request your Cannabis Sanctuary Kit.

Sincerity + legitimacy = your successful religious defense to prosecution according to law.

You get the full blessing of what the THC Ministry is about:

*Education

*Empowerment

*Practical spirituality

Minister's Sanctuary Kit:

The Minister's Sanctuary Kit includes powerful legal precedents, successful cases, a history of Roger's religious credentials and successful court actions and positive critiques from all the major cannabis magazines: High Times, Cannabis Culture, Heads, and Skunk.

You will receive the Minister membership I.D. cards with self-laminators for your wallet, 2 Sanctuary signs to secure your home and garden, THC Ministry affidavit, Sacrament/Plant tags for your stash bag and plants, and all the documentation necessary to build the foundation for your own religious freedom.

The kit has approximately 130 pages of well-researched materials with research done on the state, national and international level. It comes in a sturdy 3-ring binder.

Begin your lifetime of protection as soon as you receive your kit.

Call me at (808) 217-9352 to make your donation today.

Thank you.

Roger Christie. Hilo, Kindom of Hawai'i Ferre van Beveren. Amsterdam, Netherlands

<h2>UPDATE 1::</h2>

so I called Rev. Christie's 800 number and left him a message. He called me back in a timely manner. He wanted to know my location, my age, and had some interesting lore to tell me about the orbital periodicity of Saturn (which cycles every 29 years), and I told him about the song about it by TOOL, called "Twenty-six and three," but he said he hadn't heard of the band.

He informed me the cost of the Minister's Sanctuary Kit was $250, but that, as I am on a fixed budget, there is also a Practitioner's Kit for $50. He gave me the address for a PO Box in Hilo, Hawaii to send check, cash or C.O.D. to, but he'd also mentioned the option of paying by credit card, so I imagine there is also a way of getting the dues to him other than by direct mail.

I asked him about how "official" this kit would make me and he explained it is more about building what he said the Hawaiins call "mana" or inner-strength and personal confidence, "the ability to look someone in the eye and to stand up for what you believe in even if they are trying to persecute you for it." I told him, "I look forward to having that," and that I would send him the money for the Practitioner's Kit (which cost he promised to deduct from that of the Practitioner's Kit if I chose to get that later on) probably within a week. "I'm not holding my breath," he told me assuringly.

I told him I would hopefully see him on the site, and we hung up. All in all it was a pleasant conversation. He said "Aloha" at the beginning and end of it quite naturally, like any true Hawaiin, and I leave the conversation with few doubts about the organisation being a front for some nationally-coordinated small-time sting operation. Fwiw, I believe he and his organisation are on the up-and-up.

In other words, you could say, I have faith in this process. I'll be keeping one eye open though, considering how I got burned before by the Illuminati Order. I feel that "mana" coming through for me already.

Ten Reasons to Impeach George Bush and Dick Cheney

I ask Congress to impeach President Bush and Vice President Cheney for the following reasons:

1. Violating the United Nations Charter by launching an illegal "War of Aggression" against Iraq without cause, using fraud to sell the war to Congress and the public, misusing government funds to begin bombing without Congressional authorization, and subjecting our military personnel to unnecessary harm, debilitating injuries, and deaths.
2. Violating U.S. and international law by authorizing the torture of thousands of captives, resulting in dozens of deaths, and keeping prisoners hidden from the International Committee of the Red Cross.
3. Violating the Constitution by arbitrarily detaining Americans, legal residents, and non-Americans, without due process, without charge, and without access to counsel.
4. Violating the Geneva Conventions by targeting civilians, journalists, hospitals, and ambulances, and using illegal weapons, including white phosphorous, depleted uranium, and a new type of napalm.
5. Violating U.S. law and the Constitution through widespread wiretapping of the phone calls and emails of Americans without a warrant.
6. Violating the Constitution by using "signing statements" to defy hundreds of laws passed by Congress.
7. Violating U.S. and state law by obstructing honest elections in 2000, 2002, 2004, and 2006.
8. Violating U.S. law by using paid propaganda and disinformation, selectively and misleadingly leaking classified information, and exposing the identity of a covert CIA operative working on sensitive WMD proliferation for political retribution.
9. Subverting the Constitution and abusing Presidential power by asserting a "Unitary Executive Theory" giving unlimited powers to the President, by obstructing efforts by Congress and the Courts to review and restrict Presidential actions, and by promoting and signing legislation negating the Bill of Rights and the Writ of Habeas Corpus.
10. Gross negligence in failing to assist New Orleans residents after Hurricane Katrina, in ignoring urgent warnings of an Al Qaeda attack prior to Sept. 11, 2001, and in increasing air pollution causing global warming.

Sign the Pledge for Peace Petition

Please join the 83 Members of Congress who pledged in an open letter delivered to President Bush: "We will only support appropriating funds for U.S. military operations in Iraq during Fiscal Year 2008 and beyond for the protection and safe redeployment of all our troops out of Iraq before you leave office."

The U.S. occupation of Iraq is the primary cause of the violence there. U.S. intelligence agencies have reported in multiple National Intelligence Estimates that the occupation of Iraq is recruiting more terrorists worldwide. Every dollar we spend in Iraq is making America less secure and taking funds away from urgent needs at home and abroad.

54% of Americans want Bush to bring U.S. troops home within 6 months, according to a Democrats.com telephone poll of 618 adults conducted from September 6-9, 2007, by ICR. 73% of Americans want U.S. troops home in a year. The single largest group (40%) want Bush to bring U.S. troops home within 6 months using funds Congress has already given him for Iraq. Read the full results at: <http://democrats.com/iraq-poll-1>

I support the impeachment of Vice President Dick Cheney and I authorize Rep. Dennis Kucinich to enter my name into the Congressional Record.

Rep. Dennis Kucinich wants to put the name of everyone who supports Dick Cheney's impeachment in to the Congressional Record!

The Congressional Record is the official record of the proceedings and debates of the United States Congress. It is published daily when Congress is in session and is fully searchable.

Every day that Congress is in session, Rep. Kucinich will submit 5 single-spaced pages of names with states, which is the daily limit under House rules. To be included, all you need to do is submit this petition.

Rep. Kucinich will not use this list for any other purpose besides entering it into the Congressional Record.

19485 of 100000 people have signed this petition. (July 27, 2007 - 12:01am)

Cannabis, A Sacrament of the Religion of the THC Ministry

MEMBERS OF THE THC MINISTRY ARE MANDATED TO USE CANNABIS SACRAMENT IN SPIRITUAL/MEDITATIVE PRACTICES BECAUSE WE BELIEVE THAT SACRAMENTAL CANNABIS:

1) HELPS EVOLVE THE SOUL. Sacramental Cannabis augments ones faith and contributes to the evolution of one's soul as one communes with ones inner self and ones spiritual connection with the universe.

2) IS AN EXERCISE IN ACQUIRING SPIRITUAL ATTRIBUTES BY SHARING. Sharing Sacramental Cannabis contributes to communion with Spirit and fellowship with others in the spiritual association of the brother/sisterhood of humankind. This practice leads to the discovery and creation of one's spiritual path.

3) CREATES PEACE The hand cultivation of Sacramental Cannabis exerts an ennobling and expanding influence on people. The agriculturist is a peace loving person. A nurturing association with the Sacramental Cannabis plants instills patience, quiet, peace, reverence, meditation, spiritual awareness, enlightenment and awareness of the life force. There is great therapeutic value in growing your own sacrament when it is done in conscious partnership with collective human spirituality.

4) ENHANCES SPIRITUAL RECEPTIVITY One's inherent imagination and spiritual receptivity is influenced by growing harvesting and ingesting the Cannabis Sacrament. The bio-electro-neuro-chemical effects of ingestion enhances the interface between mind and spirit and augments spiritual receptivity. The effect maybe likened to what happens to the image in a microscope when a drop of oil is added on an oil immersion lens. It is magnified and amplified to the eye of the beholder.

5) SERVES HUMANITY AS A MEANS OF HEALING People benefit from utilizing sacramental Cannabis in conjunction with the body/mind healing values of Cannabis. Cannabis Sacrament as medicine/nourishment for the body and the spirit should be available to those who need it for relief from AIDS, glaucoma, nausea from radiation & chemotherapy, stress, muscle spacticity, asthma, loss of appetite, migraine headaches, menstrual related discomforts, and many other human maladies. One of the THC Ministry's Holy duties is to provide the blessing of its Cannabis Sacrament to those suffering and in need of its benevolent blessings.

I would very much like to become a member of the THC-Ministry. I strongly believe in this cause. I will be thirty in Oct, am a published author of a textbook on metaphysics:

I have studied world religions thoroughly, and would be capable of arguing a case for this cause on the basis of any of them. I am extremely eager to get started, and have also joined the myspace group as both myself and my band (called ~GOD~). If you want to know more about me you can visit my website, my personal myspace page and my myspace music page. What more do I need to do to become an "official" (ordained?) THC-Minister? Please let me know, because I will do it. Thank you very much for your time. And thank God for this cause. -Jon

Thank you for joining.

As of this date and time you are now a registered member of the global THC Ministry.

E komo mai - welcome!

Step 2: Please become ordained online for free at the <http://www.ulc.net/index.php?page=ordain>. You can print-out your minister paper immediately. ULC is not specifically a cannabis sacrament institution, however they are non-denominational and have many years of success in securing religious freedoms. Ordainment here is one important step in the process of building your own 'religious defense to prosecution' and it lasts for life. This 'religious exemption' could also help you or your family to avoid otherwise mandatory government vaccines, and other kinds of Big Brother programs.

Step 3: Make sure that you have your Cannabis Sanctuary paperwork and THC Ministry ID card to be able to provide evidence that you are a sincere and legitimate practitioner of cannabis sacrament in the case of an encounter with government officials. Ordering your documents also helps us with a donation which is used for the benefit of all of our members.

We stay active and continually become more effective with donations from our members who help us to help others. Thank you for your support.

For information on how to get your legal documents and membership id cards, go here:

The Cannabis Sanctuary Kit & Legal Defense Package

<http://www.thc-ministry.org/kit2.htm>

Step 4: Enjoy your new membership and the knowledge of being part of a global community of cannabis-loving people. We are only a few mouse-clicks, or a phone call away whenever you need us, from wherever you are on this beautiful planet.

Visit our forums and introduce yourself if you want to meet others, you have questions to ask, news to share, or you want to get involved more. We are safe and we are loved. All is well.

Have a happy day!

Become Ordained

Welcome! You are about to become an ordained minister of the Universal Life Church, Modesto, California. Please be sure to find out about the legal doctrines governing your country, state or province.

After you fill out the following form, your request will be promptly reviewed by pastoral staff. You will receive notification of your ordination status by email.

Ordinations are conducted several times each week, so normally you will hear from us within a day or two.

We do not furnish this information to any outside organization for any purpose. Your privacy is carefully guarded. There is no charge or obligation associated with your ordination. Ordination is for life, without cost, and without question of faith.

Read carefully before applying for ordination

Please do NOT use this form to report address or name changes - to report record changes, click here

Please avoid using the same email address for more than one person if at all possible. The email address is used as a record identifier and must be unique for each person. Do not submit someone for ordination without their permission and approval.

Each request is reviewed for completeness. You must include a complete, legal name. Spiritual names and initials only are unacceptable for ordination records. If your legal name is initials only, or your legal name is one word only, include this information in your application, or it will be rejected. Frivolous names will be rejected whenever we notice them. If your parents had a sense of humor when naming you, we may reject your application initially, but upon explanation, we will reconsider. No one is rejected because of their name, but we must protect the integrity of the records against those who fraudulently submit requests for pets, obscene names, etc. Applying for ordination in the name of a fictitious person or animal, or the submission of a person's name without his or her permission is fraud.

Please understand that there is no such thing as "instant online ordination." A computer cannot ordain you. Your request must be reviewed before your ordination can be done legally. You cannot be issued a credential automatically by a computer!

If you do not have an email account, you may obtain one for free, which you can access via any computer on the Internet, from such services as msn.com or yahoo.com. Without a valid email address, you will not receive confirmation of your ordination.

so I called Rev. Christie's 800 number and left him a message. He called me back in a timely manner. He wanted to know my location, my age, and had some interesting lore to tell me about the orbital periodicity of Saturn (which cycles every 29 years), and I told him about the song about it by TOOL, called "Twenty-six and three," but he said he hadn't heard of the band.

He informed me the cost of the Minister's Sanctuary Kit was $250, but that, as I am on a fixed budget, there is also a Practitioner's Kit for $50. He gave me the address for a PO Box in Hilo, Hawaii to send check, cash or C.O.D. to, but he'd also mentioned the option of paying by credit card, so I imagine there is also a way of getting the dues to him other than by direct mail.

I asked him about how "official" this kit would make me and he explained it is more about building what he said the Hawaiians call "mana" or inner-strength and personal confidence, "the ability to look someone in the eye and to stand up for what you believe in even if they are trying to persecute you for it." I told him, "I look forward to having that," and that I would send him the money for the Practitioner's Kit (which cost he promised to deduct from that of the Practitioner's Kit if I chose to get that later on) probably within a week. "I'm not holding my breath," he told me assuringly.

I told him I would hopefully see him on the site, and we hung up. All in all it was a pleasant conversation. He said "Aloha" at the beginning and end of it quite naturally, like any true Hawaiian, and I leave the conversation with few doubts about the organisation being a front for some nationally-coordinated small-time sting operation. Fwiw, I believe he and his organisation are on the up-and-up.

In other words, you could say, I have faith in this process. I'll be keeping one eye open though, considering how I got burned before by the Illuminati Order. I feel that "mana" coming through for me already.

I just found some very good news. This group is pretty definately legit. Check these articles out:

Andrew Meyer--Tasered by Police (second viewpoint)

[quote="video transcript"]

< begin video >

JOHN KERRY:

"and to continue to pile name upon name upon some wall in the future for a strategy that has failed - that's the distinction.

Sir (Points to Andrew Meyer at microphone)"

ANDREW MEYER:

"I fir..I first and foremost want to thank you for your time. You spent a lot of time talking to us here today. I want to thank you for coming and being open and honest. Uh, you recommended a book to us earlier, I wanted to recommend a book to you it's called 'Armed Madhouse by Greg Palast'"

JOHN KERRY:

"Yeah, I have it actually..."

ANDREW MEYER:

"Yeah, he's the top investigative journalist in America..."

JOHN KERRY:

"I've already read it..."

ANDREW MEYER:

"and he says you won the 2004 election..."

JOHN KERRY:

"Right..."

ANDREW MEYER:

"Isn't that amazing! Isn't that amazing, you won in 2004! In fact, there were multiple reports on the day of the election of disenfranchisement of black voters in Florida and Ohio."

FEMALE OFFICER:

(to Andrew Meyer)

"Ask the question. Ask the question. Last question. Ask the question."

ANDREW MEYER:

"I'll ask my question. Thank you very much.

I'll ask my question. I'm going to preface it.

He's been talking for two hours, I think I could have 2 minutes.

Thank you. Thank you. Thank you very much.

Alright I'm gonna ask him my question... I'm going to inform people and then I'm going to ask him my question.

So there were multiple reports of disenfranchisement of black voters on the day of the election in 2004 there was also voting machines, electronic voting machines in Okaloosa county in Florida that counted backwards.

So amidst all these reports of phoney, bogus stuff going on, how could you concede the election on the day?

How could you concede the 2004 election on the day?

In this book it says there were 5 million votes that were suppressed and you won the election.

Didn't you want to be President?

I'm not even done yet. I have 2 more questions

If you are so against Iran how come you're not saying

Let's impeach Bush now.

Impeach Bush now before he can invade Iran.

Why don't we impeach him? Impeach Bush.

Clinton was impeached, for what a blowjob, why don't we Impeach bush?

Alright..

Also, are you a member... were you a member of Skull & Bones in college with Bush? Were you in the same secret society as Bush?

Were you in Skull & Bones?

(Mic Cut)

(Andrew steps away, back and left, from the mic)

Thank you for cutting my mic.

Thank you."

(Female Officer grabs Andrew Meyer's right arm)

ANDREW MEYER:

"Are you going to arrest me?

Excuse me?"

(Female Office grabs Andrew Meyer's left shoulder)

FEMALE OFFICER:
"Stop. Stop it son."

ANDREW MEYER:
"Excuse me?
What are you arresting me for?"

(Male officer grabs Andrew Meyer's right arm with both hands and forces him forward)

ANDREW MEYER:
"Whoa! Whoa! Whoa!"

(Female officer leading Andrew Meyer away on left side with both hands holding left arm, Male officer leading Andrew Meyer away on right side with both hands holding right arm)

ANDREW MEYER:
"Is anybody watching this?
I'm not doing it!"

(Inaudible) (Audience applauds)

ANDREW MEYER:
"Get off me! Get off Me!"

(Andrew Meyer pulls back) (officer's grab the front of his shirt)
(Third officer pushes him from behind left shoulder)

ANDREW MEYER:
"Hey!
What the fuck are you doing?
Hey!
What are you doing? What are you doing?
What is going on here? What is going on here?
I want to stand and listen to the answer to my question!
Why are you arresting me for asking...?"

(Black Officer lifts Andrew Meyer by the waistband)

ANDREW MEYER:
"HELP! HELP! HELP!
Are you kidding? They're arresting me!
HELP!
What have I done?"

(4 Officers pin Andrew Meyer to the floor)

ANDREW MEYER:
"HELP!
Get off of me. I didn't do anything.
HELP!
HELP ME!
HELP!"

They're arresting me!
Taser?"

MALE OFFICER:
"You will be tased if you do not comply!"

FEMALE AUDIENCE MEMBER:
"He's got a taser on his chest I mean..."

CAMERA WOMAN:
"This really is ridiculous..."

ANOTHER FEMALE VOICE OFF CAMERA:
"He's an idiot."

MALE OFFICER:
"You will be tased if you do not comply."

(Commotion noises and inaudible voices and inaudible John Kerry)

MALE OFFICER:
"Roll on your stomach... Put your hands behind your back or you will be tased."

FEMALE OFFICE:
"Push down... Do it now!"

ANDREW MEYER:
"Please don't!"

JOHN KERRY:
"I think if everybody would just hold on a sec(INAUDIBLE)
This situation (INAUDIBLE)..."

MALE OFFICER:
"You don't have an option!"

ANDREW MEYER:
"Let me just stand up!"

MALE OFFICER:
"Roll on your stomach!"

(Andrew Meyer rolls over and 6 officers - 4 on torso 2 on legs - push him down to the floor on his stomach)

JOHN KERRY:
"I'll answer his question, and um, well, unfortunately he's not available to come up here and swear me in as President."

(Andrew Meyer's right wrist is handcuffed behind his back)

ANDREW MEYER:
"Why are they arresting me?
Would somebody do something here?"

I'm being Arrested!"

JOHN KERRY:

"Uh, Let me just say that, because it is a very important question..."

ANDREW MEYER:

"What did I do?

Get off me!"

MALE OFFICER:

"Give me the other hand!"

ANDREW MEYER:

"Get the fuck off me man!

I didn't do anything!"

MALE OFFICER:

"Tase him!"

ANDREW MEYER:

"Don't tase me bro!

Don't tase me!

I didn't do anything!"

MALE OFFICER:

"Roll over!"

(Taser clicking 3 seconds)

ANDREW MEYER:

(SCREAMING)

"Ow...Ow...Ow...Ow...Ow...Ow...Ow..."

Let me go... let me go..."

FEMALE AUDIENCE MEMBER:

"Stop! Stop it! Stop!"

MALE OFFICER:

"Get back now!"

FEMALE AUDIENCE MEMBER:

"No. Why?... Why are you doing that?"

ANDREW MEYER:

"Oh my God!

Why are you guys doing this?

What did I do?"

FEMALE OFFICER:

"Back up Back up!"

FEMALE AUDIENCE MEMBER:

"Why are you doing this?

What did he do?

Why?"

(Officers lift handcuffed Andrew Meyer and force him out the door)

ANDREW MEYER:

"What did I do?

What did I do?

What..."

Knight High School Security Breaks Female Students Wrist

[quote="Steve Watson

Infowars.net

Friday, Sept 28, 2007"]School security guards in Palmdale, CA have been caught on camera assaulting a 16-year-old girl and breaking her arm after she spilled some cake during lunch and left some crumbs on the floor after cleaning it up.

The incident occurred last week at Knight High School in Palmdale and was caught on a cell phone camera by another pupil who was then also assaulted by the security guards.

The girl, Pleajhai Mervin, told Fox News LA that she was bumped while queuing for lunch and dropped the cake. After being ordered to clean it up and then re-clean the spot three times, she attempted to leave the area out of embarrassment but was jumped on by security who forced her onto a table, breaking her wrist in the process.

Pleajhai also says that the security guard in the picture yelled "hold still nappy-head" at her, which at the time she did not know was a racist comment.

In an even more shocking development the security guards later had the mother of the girl arrested after she sought out an attorney and demanded that the guard be arrested, telling her that if she wanted the guard detained then she herself would also be charged with battery after she allegedly pushed the guard and an assistant principal of the school. She has also been suspended from her job at another school in the county.

The school expelled Pleajhai for five days before then having her arrested for battery and for littering (the dropping of the cake). Then they had the pupil who captured the video arrested along with his sister who was merely present at the scene.

A walkout is planned for this morning by some students, after which the protesters will call for the firing of the main security guard involved.[/quote]

<blockquote>

A good friend of mine just sent me an extremely angry PM about the swastika/Magen (star of David) logo I'd been using as my display pic. This graphic is the logo of >the "Raelian" UFO-cult, and by posting it my intentions were two-fold: to get people to visit my site to find out what it meant, and to get people to investigate further the Raelian UFO cult (linked to under the graphic in the "television" section of my profile and as >the caption under the graphic in my photo album).

I understand why he's upset. I was upset too when I discovered this logo for the first time, years ago.

It was definately inappropriate for me to have posted it as my profile pic without having any direct accompanying information explaining its origin or statement of my own beliefs relative to the logo. For that I am truly sorry. He has reported me to myspace for "inappropriate content" (hate-speech), so if my profile gets deleted don't worry, it's not because of my support for Ron Paul.

FWIW, I've changed my profile pic to one that I actually find much more offensive, >the lapel-pin worn by president Bush and his supporters. IMO, this "US flag" logo represents, right now, the same thing that, 75 years ago, was represented by the crooked-cross swastika of the NAZIs. I only hope that this logo will not be found as immediately offensive as the Raelian logo, even though, to me, it is actually much, much worse.

I also, sincerely, hope that he can forgive me for having posted the Raelian logo. He threatened to "kick my ass," he reported me for "hate speech" and he told me not to reply to his PM because he "doesn't want to talk to me for a really long time." I don't blame him. He has more than every right to feel personally offended by the logo. Even though that was not my intention, I should have known better.

I feel awful. I feel like all the political activism I've been doing online lately is tainted now, and worthless. If there is anything I can do to make ammends to him I will do it. I feel terrible. I feel like I'm as bad as the ones I've been trying to fight against because I drew attention away from them and now have been associated with their cause. It's awful, absolutely awful. I don't know how to apologise enough, I don't know what I can do.

Please comment to this if you want to. I don't know what else there is that can be said, but I do want you all to know how upset I am about this. I am truly, truly sorry for this to have happened. I hope that we can learn from this, and that I don't end up losing a friend whose compassion and whose insight I have long valued and admired. This is just terrible, and I don't know what I can do to make things alright between us again.

-Jon

<center><img width="100" src=http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/lapelpin.gif></center>

please comment if you would like, but remember, there is a BIG difference between someone who is an Israelite and someone who is an Israeli, between someone who is Jewish or Hebrew and someone who is a national Zionist.

Thx.

Mindcrime is correct. When the capacity for compassion evacuates the heart, then anger clouds the judgment. When the ability to experience human emotions is pushed aside, then another form of consciousness enters, one that is entirely alien to those of us who can still feel love and pain. This other self, this alter-personality, is pure evil from the point of view of anyone who can remain objective and sympathetic. It is completely cold-blooded, calculating and cruel. Even the word "demon" is too polite for this malevolent possession. The ancient word "Satan," meaning an "adversary" or "foe" is much more apt. When the limits of humanity are passed, then this "Satanic" consciousness rushes in to fill the vacuum. At that point, there is no turning back, you cannot ever regain what you have lost. You cease to be an innocent, and you become a murderer, a rapist, a sadistic, malignant cyst inside the husk of a "human" shell. This is what we are witnessing here. We are not only seeing an innocent man being murdered. We are seeing the Ancient of Days itself possessing the heartless, mindless, zombie-bodies of once living souls. But now these "cops," these servants and protectors of the people, have sacrificed their life-blood by proxy to a master of lies, manipulation, twisting, hurting and murder.Fuck these pigs. They're already dead. The only thing motivating their unfeeling corpses like marionettes is the king of all darkness. And I think that, at this point, it should be fairly obvious who has opened up this rift between reality and what they think they are allowed to get away with. The king whose lies they believe will enable them to achieve omnipotence by blood-lust. It doesn't matter whether we call the faceless minions mere "demons" and this ruler over them all "Satan." They are all one hive-consciousness. It is the release of their spirit that fills them with loss, and to justify that to themselves they will do anything to anyone who crosses their path. That's true for anyone given free reign to abuse their authority.As I've long said though, you can't fight the hydra by hacking away at its regenerating heads. No, to kill the monster you have to show it its own reflection. Only the last vestiges of shame and humility left in these heartless hellions will ever be able to free them from this possession by this alien evil. And then, the only way for them to be free will be self-sacrifice, like lemmings, en masse mercy-killing themselves. Once these fascist scabs see their true face in the mirror, they will all swallow shotguns on their own, and that will at.I only pray there is anything still good left inside these unclean swine to join their countless, forgiving victims in the realm of eternal rewards. Because if there isn't, and they are truly blind to all but the most immediate and carnal satisfactions, then they are truly in Hell already, and good for nothing but wasting our air. At that point, we would actually be doing them a favour by freeing them from their fleshly damnation. And if that is the case, then no one in their own right mind would ever dream of doing anything but thanking us.~G~</>----- Bulletin Message -----From: oPeN yOuR eYeSDate: Oct 5 2007 9:36 PM----- Bulletin Message -----From: MindcrimeDate: Oct 5, 2007 7:51 PMSmile as they go in the room to finnish this Man off. </center>A grand jury in Georgia has not only declined to watch a video of a Taser-related death, it has dismissed all charges in the case.<a

See the video HERE.In a letter responding to an article about the case in the Atlantic Journal-Constitution, Melvin Johnson, attorney for Williams' family, described the circumstances of Williams' arrest and death. In summary, this is what happened:

It all began when Williams' wife called 911 to report that Williams was behaving in a violent manner due to problems caused by medications he had been prescribed for epilepsy.

(Bear in mind: Williams had neither threatened nor harmed anyone. Also, he was unarmed. His "violent" behavior, so far, amounted to nothing more than walking up and down his own driveway, "talking crazy.")In her 911 call, Mrs. Williams made it clear that her husband's behavior was a result of his problems with the medication. Also, this information was repeated to the first police officer to arrive on the scene not only by Mrs. Williams, but also a deacon from the Williams' church. They begged the officer not to approach Williams without backup from other officers, for they were concerned for the officer's safety. The officer responded by pulling out his baton, approaching Williams, and shouting for him to shut up. When the grievously afflicted Williams did not shut up, the officer began beating Williams with the baton.

Williams reacted by grabbing the baton. A struggle over the baton ensued, during which the officer fell and sustained a minor injury; he then retreated and radioed for backup.

Backup arrived in the form of 10-15 cops. Together, they somehow managed to subdue the "crazy talking" Williams; that is, they all piled in to him and hog-tied him. Very brave.

Meanwhile, Williams' wife and four young children, also the deacon and others begged the police to take Williams to the hospital for treatment. The police replied: "This guy has injured one of Our Own. We will take him to the jail and deal with him. We have all of the medicine we need at the jail."

Mrs. Williams tried to give her husband's medications to the police, but they knew better, of course; they had better medicine at the jail.

Meanwhile, the deacon had called the pastor of the church; the pastor asked to speak to an officer. The pastor too explained that Williams' behavior was due to epilepsy and begged for medical attention. But he, too, was told the same: Williams will be treated with medicine at the county jail.

The medicine, apparently, was a Taser gun. Five jolts from a Taser, to be precise. Five jolts into the chest. In less than a minute. With several deputies holding him down. Police work at its finest.

In the aforementioned video, one deputy can be heard saying, "Do you want another one?"

Williams' response (his last words, in fact): "Please don't kill me ..."

When the capacity for compassion evacuates the heart, then anger clouds the judgment. When the ability to experience human emotions is pushed aside, then another form of consciousness enters, one that is entirely alien to those of us who can still feel love and pain. This other self, this alter-personality, is pure evil from the point of view of anyone who can remain objective and sympathetic. It is completely cold-blooded, calculating and cruel. Even the word "demon" is too polite for this malevolent possession. The ancient word "Satan," meaning an "adversary" or "foe" is much more apt. When the limits of humanity are passed, then this "Satanic" consciousness rushes in to fill the vacuum. At that point, there is no turning back, you cannot ever regain what you have lost. You cease to be an innocent, and you become a murderer, a rapist, a sadistic, malignant cyst inside the husk of a "human" shell. This is what we are witnessing here. We are not only seeing an innocent man being murdered. We are seeing the Ancient of Days itself possessing the heartless, mindless, zombie-bodies of once living souls. But now these "cops," these servants and protectors of the people, have sacrificed their life-blood by proxy to a master of lies, manipulation, twisting, hurting and murder.Fuck these pigs. They're already dead. The only thing motivating their unfeeling corpses like marionettes is the king of all darkness. And I think that, at this point, it should be fairly obvious who has opened up this rift between reality and what they think they are allowed to get away with. The king whose lies they believe will enable them to achieve omnipotence by blood-lust. It doesn't matter whether we call the faceless minions mere "demons" and this ruler over them all "Satan." They are all one hive-consciousness. It is the release of their spirit that fills them with loss, and to justify that to themselves they will do anything to anyone who crosses their path. That's true for anyone given free reign to abuse their authority.As I've long said though, you can't fight the hydra by hacking away at its regenerating heads. No, to kill the monster you have to show it its own reflection. Only the last vestiges of shame and humility left in these heartless hellions will ever be able to free them from this possession by this alien evil. And then, the only way for them to be free will be self-sacrifice, like lemmings, en masse mercy-killing themselves. Once these fascist scabs see their true face in the mirror, they will all swallow shotguns on their own, and that will be that.I only pray there is anything still good left inside these unclean swine to join their countless, forgiving victims in the realm of eternal rewards. Because if there isn't, and they are truly blind to all but the most immediate and carnal satisfactions, then they are truly in Hell already, and good for nothing but wasting our air. At that point, we would actually be doing them a favour by freeing them from their fleshly damnation. And if that is the case, then no one in their own right mind would ever dream of doing anything but thanking us.~G~

"She stretched herself up on tiptoe, and peeped over the edge of the mushroom, and her eyes immediately met those of a large blue caterpillar, that was sitting on the top, with its arms folded, quietly smoking a long hookah, and taking not the smallest notice of her or of anything else."

-Lewis Carroll, "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland."

When Alice ate the cup-cake, she grew taller, but it was no until when she was invited to tea, however, that she felt like a grown-up adult. There are a couple sayings I've always felt were related: "don't put all your eggs in one basket," and "don't count your chickens before they've hatched." In other words, don't count all the eggs in your basket as chickens. Now, let's look at that other saying, "you can't make an omlette without breaking a few eggs." Though this is often used as a rationalisation for warfare, it can just as easily be said that it advises against war, insofar as you can't liberate all minds without losing a few friends. Lastly, when it comes to youthfulness and ageing, it is said by most that, "when I was a child I thought and acted like a child, but when I became a man, I put away childish things." But I say, "two roads diverged in the woods and I took the one less traveled" does indeed "make all the difference" between "both this world and the next," or rather, between any one tunnel-reality and a parallel dimension. As to that, "I can only show you how to know the door, you are the one who has to walk the path."

I can only tell you that the Aeon of Judas is at hand. The thirteenth Apostle, the king of all liars, has come to roost like Abraxas, or Ialdabaoth. I can tell you that Saklas is the linear serpent, Samael, and that Lilith is the ovoid serpent. But I just can't tell myself truly if I have enough time to explain to you what these sayings mean. I can only hope I say them clearly enough for the first "take," or rather, "first to come are the first to serve." I can tell you that if you kill a body and free its soul, it is free to revenge this on you when your soul's body dies. But I can't really say much more.

I can explain to how, by replacing certain terms in ancient scripture, or Holy writings, with certain other words, your Understanding of the contextual meanings will expand exponentially unto infinity. This is called "Peshier" meaning "insight." But the meaning will depend on what word you substitute for what word. Here is an example of how "Peshier" works:

In the Passover Seder celebration by the Qumran Essenes (themselves called in New Testament scriptures the 12 Apostles), which combined the ritual paschal sacrifice of the Hebrew scape-goat, named "Azrael" (a Baal-Shem or God-name of the Adamic "Raziel"), and the Messianic Banquet (called in Catholic the Holy Communion) described, in the "Community Rule" Dead Sea Scroll of the Qumran Essenes, as the "Council of Apostles." Herein occurs the word "bread." But let the word "body" be substituted for the word "bread" and you see how Peshier works.

Now, what comes from Peshier, or rather, Gnosis - this "sudden revelation" or "moment of clarity" - is a surplus abundance of "dead" or "loose" ends: words that it would be wrong to substitute for other words are in no short supply.

For example, substituting the word "body" for "bread" is called "transubstantiation" and considered a metaphor for the divine experience of the spirit, that realm we are believed to have access to when we approach the moment of our death. It is considered a "divine" relativity because it is "elegant," that is, at once simple and to our aesthetic liking.

At the opposite "end of the spectrum" from this form of "grace" or elegance, we find, not only the word whose meaning is opposite, but instead almost every other word we can imagine as well. Instead of zero being singular between one and negative one, it turns out zero contains infinity.

For example, try substituting the word "marijuana" for the name "Jesus" in a serious discussion with someone raised to substitute the word "body" for "bread," and, even though "Jesus" and "body" are related, and even though "bread" could very well mean "marijuana" (or even only ergot, the wheat mould whose active ingredient is psycho-active lysergic diathilamide acid), instead of the equation balancing itself out between the two interlocutors, we can safely expect for "all hell to break loose" in the space between them.

So, "either humanity will go extinct with a whimper" or "the planet will be destroyed in a big bang," is "Peshier" in the same sense as the Mad Hatter said, "that's Logic." So, "do not go quietly" into "the dark night of the soul." Howl and Scream, do what you mean and say what you teach.

"Peshar" can, but does not need to, have several rules. Each rule stems from a root-language with its own families of idea-grams called an "alphabet." For example, the Semitic root language has the form of the twenty-two (variable, or additionally permutable) letters of the alef-bet, and the phoenetic sounds for this number of symbols can be substituted not according to contextual tone of voice in a conversation, rather their equivalent meanings can be calculated by studying the sums (or multiples in rare cases) of the sound-shape's location in the numbered sequence of the symbols arranged in the order of the alef-bet itself.

And, of course, the order of these symbols changes over time, so that all alphabets have the same sound-shapes more or less, only in various different orders, and so this is, according to the practitioners of literal Peshar in literary Kabbalah (mystic scriptures) the reason for the existence of various different languages on earth that are comprised of the different phoenetic pronunciations of these sound shapes.

They would say that, in one language-branch, a certain idea or meaning would have one word, and that, in another language-branch, even though both grown from the same root-language, the same meaning or idea will have a different word. This, they explain, is because the order of the phonetic sounds change, but the sums of the numbered letters in their respective different sequences will remain the same, even between languages that evolved on opposite sides of our planet and thousands of years apart.

This "sixth" or purely mental sense of what "adds up" and what doesn't allows the ability to communicate between two minds when in silence together even if their two distinct native languages, and thus the word-sounds they use to think their own internal-monologues, that are very different. "In other words," we all know what one another mean if we cannot always understand exactly what one another are saying.

In this way the "voices of angels," called Qemetiel - meaning the "crowd of Gods," or the "Assembly of the Annunaki," or, put simply, the pantheon, are slightly above those of us each as individuals. You can say that they exist on a higher parallel plane that invisibly overlaps our own tangible reality. This "crowd of gods," this "collective" or "hive" awareness, is only more or less conscious of the existence of itself autonomously from and in contra-position to the differences between us in how we each act and what we each think. However, "the way out is through" because "God is within us."

"Every Man and Every Woman Is a Star." What does this mean? It is ancient "newspeak" for the idea of the crowd of our souls that are hovering around and just beyond us, whose guidance we hear but often do not heed. For, by our willful ignorance of their presence in favour of our own egotistical satisfactions and the gross of carnal lusts, we turn away from their insights from their elevated perspective, their moral "high-ground."

We cannot be misguided by them, but we can misguide ourselves by allowing others to do the same while they are around us, and by allowing others to do so to us. If we are led astray from their wisdom and fore-sight, the energy of our souls grows first dim, then dark, and finally inverts into a negativity of it's original nature. Instead of "attractive energy," such a soul puts off "repulsive energy."

So, if the opposite of infinity is not a singular itself, but another infinity reflected across the surface of nothingness between two opposite singulars, then how can anyone say they cannot see God within? Thus, the purpose of lust is both forgiveness and redemption, just as the purpose of a sacrifice is to be both given and received. The mind of one describes what it "sees," and then the mind of another describes what it "sees." But both minds are silent as they weigh the one's perspective against the other. They are waiting to see which version of the experience proves more accurate. And this silence of the minds of those who merely think they "see" is considered what is sacred.

That is why the word "conspiracy," meaning literally to whisper or to breath together, has become so tainted and defiled in its modern usage: because the tradition of communication is evaporating into a more rarified vibrationally harmonic frequency. The consciousnesses of more and more are awakening to their ability to communicate best while their egos and petty tyrannies are absent and forgotten, and so more and more of our "souls" are becoming able to leave the gravity-well aura of earth's electro-magnetic field. But the more who can "fly" psychically yet who return here, the more alien cargo they bring back with them, and thus the more souls being born on this world, and their increasing rate of population growth.

So, on the inside, you have the model of the universe, as-it-is, and on the outside, you have your own perception of both this interior world, in which you can change anything in any way you can imagine, as in a dream, and the objectively verifiable, physically tangible world of solid material reality on the outside. The mind sees out through the eyes, hears out through the ears, and, although it cannot see through the rest of its body, can still feel through it, and it is illuminated only dimly by the colour-spectrum of our emotions.

You imagine that inside of this body beneath the mind, these eyes and ears for receiving inward from outside only, is actually the "inside" of the mind itself, and so you are afraid of being parted from your skin because you have gotten the idea from somewhere that it may, one day, be impossible to ever return. But once the soul is parted from the body, it can possess or incarnate itself into anyone for any duration of their host-body's lifespan. This explains ghosts both helpful or distracting, the ideas of reincarnation and resurrection, and the idea of a "higher" or "greater" Heaven that we can come to access most easily by living constantly "in the valley of the shadow of Death," all in one fell-swoop.

Your pulsing soul, your auric orb, your akashic sphere, by any name, is like a spherical eye-ball that can see in all directions at once. It sees through the veil of space-time to past and future times evidenced within present space. This is your intellect, your inspiration, your spark of life, the font or well-spring of your psychic narration, etc. And even this now radiant halo of glorious crystal clarity will dull and fade and gloss over.

Because, just as there is a soul, so, to the inspired ego, does this imply that there must also be something higher still than merely the soul. And so there appears to their minds to be a single, universal-consciousness beyond, above, looking down over and aware of all that exists within the material reality and the multiverse of peripheral tessellations surrounding it at the central apex, comprised of all the individual sentient souls surrounding any single individual's inversion at zero between the physically solid world outside and the intangible realm of thoughts within.

This "third-party" or "objective spectator," however, does not need to be either sensing or aware of any of its silent on-lookers any more than the collective unconsciousness can be made manifest outside of a dream. So, they believe, the collective ego of the universe can read our own minds, but we are deceived into believing we would be reading the mind of this "god" to be able to comprehend the future even more certainly than we remember our own past. However, to know what is in the future does not depend on whether or not there is such a "higher"-self, or Ultimate Awareness.

So we can see it is the soul that lets us each read others' minds, but that it is the spirit that can see the true future to come for us all.

However we cannot determine, one way or the other, whether an actual universal mind does exist based only on this given evidence. We can say, the soul is immortal and the spirit eternal, but that the body has more influence over the objective, outside, physical world than does the soul, and the spirit has even less. Thus, the longer-term the events, the less direct control we have over them, or ability to change their outcomes. We can only express ourselves through our bodily death-grip on this present moment.

So, some of us say, if the mind has self-awareness inside of a body within the apparently larger physical realm, then perhaps it is a zero reflecting an infinity - a mind that is greater than and contains all of the vastness of the physical realm as our own mind would the brief flickering of but one thought. However, this is not a necessity of nature for the physical, material reality outside of our interiorised mind-world. It needs the existence of many individual and miniscule minds inside of it now because at one point before now and at some point again later neither the physical realm nor the many minds inside it exist at all, and then the only thing that exists at all is the stillness in silence of a single mind. However, while our many individual minds at this point in this cycle are self-aware, it is the necessary condition of material reality that it is neither itself, nor is it dependent in any way on, such self-awareness, nor the content or nature of our thoughts. That is when we say a mind is "free" from "mental slavery": when its imagination exists entirely autonomously and independently from the confines and constraints of exterior material reality.

So, just as it is a necessary condition of material reality that it does not depend on our minds in order to exist, so too does this imply that the single states of all-matter or all-energy are, in actuality, the poles of this cycle, and that we "dwell about her, in her middle parts," at a waxing spring or waning autumn within the grand-cycle of alternating creation and destruction of our current partially material and partially mental reality.

Finally, we can see that the median commonality that allows the inversion between both, that is, the substance of the field that comprises their mutual cycling alternation between apparently polar opposite compositions is not that both are energy, for energy is only the soul, and not that both are mind, because mind is only the spirit. Instead, what we see is that this shared terrain beneath their ever-changing skies is made of neither sticks above nor stones below, but is, in fact, itself, a third thing, not at all in itself like either. This is the True Name of God, and it is not "an ineffable mist," and it is not "an impenetrable rock." It wears both of these only as a covering.

So in the same manner as the nature/spirit of its star is both beyond and within the soul of a planet, so too is the one-mind of the mental reality now shared among all of us, a piece here, a piece there, because the mental realm is partially disintegrated and is all shuffled about with the equivalent individual particles of material reality. But we know that there are other states for our entire universe's existence, as an old man in winter and as a young man in summer, but that our universe is as it is now during most of the cycle undergone by the aggregate sum of that-which-is-real, which exists.

We could imagine this as like a "third-party" person such as our mental selves, or we could imagine this as like a lump of unformed clay, but in truth, it is like both, just as is our own brain. This whole universal cycle, or omniverse, aside, the surface of nothing in which infinity is reflected is both a murky mirror and a clear window. This means that, or rather, the "Peshier" of this all is that, techniques of truth suppression:

- 1) discredit the opposition.
- 2) physically intimidate the threat.

techniques of truth liberation:

- 1) group solidarity.
- 2) stamina by momentum.
- 3) trust in reality.

they spread fear because it is all they feel. we spread the truth because it is what we know. they are afraid of the truth. they are afraid of us. fear is a prison. the truth shall set us free. once we are free of fear, then we see the truth: there is no us or them. there is only one reality, and we are all a part of it.

until then, we must uncover the eyes of those whose fears blind them. in truth, there is no fear. Awake. it's time, now. the only thing to fear is fear itself. speak out, take action, we're all in this together.

soon, we'll reach a critical mass of awareness. soon, our whole species is going to super-saturate this entire chrysalis. soon, we're going to metamorphosise.

there is no "dominant paradigm." only the lie that might makes right, and the survival of those who can adapt to what is true.

never accept reality merely as it appears. all is not as it seems. we might not all be able to see it all the time, but we are making progress. the more frightened they become of what we know, the less we will fear their lies.

Unite for social democracy, speak out for global justice. we are going to win. the truth is on our side. Peace.

Fuck these pigs. They're already dead. The only thing motivating their unfeeling corpses like marionettes is the king of all darkness. And I think that, at this point, it should be fairly obvious who has opened up this rift between reality and what they think they are allowed to get away with. The king whose lies they believe will enable them to achieve omnipotence by blood-lust. It doesn't matter whether we call the faceless minions mere "demons" and this ruler over them all "Satan." They are all one hive-consciousness. It is the release of their spirit that fills them with loss, and to justify that to themselves they will do anything to anyone who crosses their path. That's true for anyone given free reign to abuse their authority.

As I've long said though, you can't fight the hydra by hacking away at its regenerating heads. No, to kill the monster you have to show it its own reflection. Only the last vestiges of shame and humility left in these heartless hellions will ever be able to free them from this possession by this alien evil. And then, the only way for them to be free will be self-sacrifice, like lemmings, en masse mercy-killing themselves. Once these fascist scabs see their true face in the mirror, they will all swallow shotguns on their own, and that will be that.

I only pray there is anything still good left inside these unclean swine to join their countless, forgiving victims in the realm of eternal rewards. Because if there isn't, and they are truly blind to all but the most immediate and carnal satisfactions, then they are truly in Hell already, and good for nothing but wasting our air. At that point, we would actually be doing them a favour by freeing them from their fleshly damnation. And if that is the case, then no one in their own right mind would ever dream of doing anything but thanking us.

It's great to see so many of us here. But this is just the beginning. Now we organise, next we get loud. The time for this cause has come. We cannot and we will not wait any longer for these corporate-cloned criminals to completely destroy our countries' laws and bleed dry the wealth of our whole world.

Tell everyone you know about this cause. Show them the reasons you believe in this. Let them know that there are only two types of people alive right now: heroes and traitors. The choice is up to them.

Get involved in absolutely every way you can imagine. Speak out about this in your schools, in your churches, in your jobs and in your homes. Stand up for yourself. Don't lose your faith. Do not give up on this or your children will pay for your missed opportunity for aeons to come.

Do Not Fear Reprisal. They Can't Stop Us All.

Speak Out! This is the Time, Right Here, Right Now. If you don't stand up for what's Right now, none of us will be able to later. They want us Dead. Why? Because we demand our Rights: we demand Justice, we demand Freedom.

Be Brave. Use the net. Meet people. Share our Hope.

What we want is not a crime, and we are NOT criminals for wanting it. Never give up. Never give in. Never cave. Never back down. We want Justice. We want it Now.

Contact as many people as you can. Let them know the time is Right Now. Tell them to Wake Up, because if they aren't with us, they're in danger from the real terrorists: the 9-11 insiders, evil liars, fake "patriot" traitors, peace haters, and death-buyers.

Peace. 9-11 Truth. Impeach. We Will Win.

~G~

Dilate your mind's eye.

Be a Sovereign Individual. What does this mean? It means the opposite of what it isn't. What is a sovereign individual not? A robot, a mind-controlled slave of psychic broadcasting of messages more strongly relayed through our minds. Who, then, are the ones that control these robots? From where do these more strongly relayed messages come?

You cannot point a finger at anyone to say, "you are, yourself, a mentally-manipulating liar who says two things at once and really means a third," because they are untouchable. The most we can hope to be able to do is point at a picture of the guilty parties and envy them as false "sovereign individuals." But a sovereign individual does not need to be at all aggressive, nor manipulate at all. By starting no fights, they create no enemies, and so everyone is grateful to do their bidding. There is no need to coerce their servile obedience by Machiavellian terror.

But this doesn't mean the sovereign individual has no emotions, only that they are in control of their own emotions, just as the emotions of those who remain in bondage to oil and telecommunications media remain under the complete control of these "good" and "service," private-sector financially controlled, megalomaniacal, multinational corporations. But the sovereign individual neither is such a psychically bonded individual nor is controlled by any such form of an individual. Instead they control themselves and choose to disassociate from those who would control others.

Once you do not merely believe in and faithfully hope for individual sovereignty, but expect and anticipate it, classically conditioned by countless experiences, then your mind becomes unclouded to those who phone-in remote-controlling you by long-distance. So Wake Up, and Wake Others Up. It is not a movie! It's actually going on everywhere around us all right now! Do not dissociate the self, disassociate the self away from the cunning forked tongues of professional liars.

Kill Your Television.

Mindcrime is correct. When the capacity for compassion evacuates the heart, then anger clouds the judgment. When the ability to experience human emotions is pushed aside, then another form of consciousness enters, one that is entirely alien to those of us who can still feel love and pain. This other self, this alter-personality, is pure evil from the point of view of anyone who can remain objective and sympathetic. It is completely cold-blooded, calculating and cruel. Even the word "demon" is too polite for this malevolent possession. The ancient word "Satan," meaning an "adversary" or "foe" is much more apt. When the limits of humanity are passed, then this "Satanic" consciousness rushes in to fill the vacuum. At that point, there is no turning back, you cannot ever regain what you have lost. You cease to be an innocent, and you become a murderer, a rapist, a sadistic, malignant cyst inside the husk of a "human" shell. This is what we are witnessing here. We are not only seeing an innocent man being murdered. We are seeing the Ancient of Days itself possessing the heartless, mindless, zombie-bodies of once living souls. But now these "cops," these servants and protectors of the people, have sacrificed their life-blood by proxy to a master of lies, manipulation, twisting, hurting and murder.

Fuck these pigs. They're already dead. The only thing motivating their unfeeling corpses like marionettes is the king of all darkness. And I think that, at this point, it should be fairly obvious who has opened up this rift between reality and what they think they are allowed to get away with.

Death by Excited Delirium: Diagnosis or Coverup?

Taser Report

May 5, 2005

<http://www.mackwhite.com/archive55.html>

A grand jury in Georgia has not only declined to watch a video of a Taser-related death, it has dismissed all charges in the case.http://www.11alive.com/news/news\_article.aspx?storyid=62415

In the video, Frederick Williams, a 31-year-old father of four, can be seen being Tasered at least five times in the chest (in one minute) while being held down by several deputies in the Gwinnett County Jail. See the video <http://wizbangblog.com/content/2005/04/30/video-shows-5-t.php>

In a letter responding to an article about the case in the Atlantic Journal-Constitution, Melvin Johnson, attorney for Williams' family, described the circumstances of Williams' arrest and death.

In summary, this is what happened:

It all began when Williams' wife called 911 to report that Williams was behaving in a violent manner due to problems caused by medications he had been prescribed for epilepsy. (Bear in mind: Williams had neither threatened nor harmed anyone. Also, he was unarmed. His "violent" behavior, so far, amounted to nothing more than walking up and down his own driveway, "talking crazy.")

In her 911 call, Mrs. Williams made it clear that her husband's behavior was a result of his problems with the medication. Also, this information was repeated to the first police officer to arrive on the scene not only by Mrs. Williams, but also a deacon from the Williams' church. They begged the officer not to approach Williams without backup from other officers, for they were concerned for the officer's safety.

The officer responded by pulling out his baton, approaching Williams, and shouting for him to shut up. When the grievously afflicted Williams did not shut up, the officer began beating Williams with the baton. Williams reacted by grabbing the baton. A struggle over the baton ensued, during which the officer fell and sustained a minor injury; he then retreated and radioed for backup.

Backup arrived in the form of 10-15 cops. Together, they somehow managed to subdue the "crazy talking" Williams; that is, they all piled in to him and hog-tied him. Very brave.

Meanwhile, Williams' wife and four young children, also the deacon and others begged the police to take Williams to the hospital for treatment. The police replied: "This guy has injured one of Our Own. We will take him to the jail and deal with him. We have all of the medicine we need at the jail."

Mrs. Williams tried to give her husband's medications to the police, but they knew better, of course; they had better medicine at the jail.

Meanwhile, the deacon had called the pastor of the church; the pastor asked to speak to an officer. The pastor too explained that Williams' behavior was due to epilepsy and begged for medical attention. But he, too, was told the same: Williams will be treated with medicine at the county jail.

The medicine, apparently, was a Taser gun. Five jolts from a Taser, to be precise. Five jolts into the chest. In less than a minute. With several deputies holding him down. Police work at its finest.

In the aforementioned video, one deputy can be heard saying, "Do you want another one?"

Williams' response (his last words, in fact): "Please don't kill me ..."

cheers.

First, I am pleased to announce that NatGeo is not merely trying to repackage the Gospel of Thomas, as has been done many times over now by various, less reputable, publishing houses.

Second, I read this document last night, and have since had time to meditate upon it. Here are my conclusions:

The Gospel of Judas is written in Coptic (Egyptian Greek), and is thought to have originally been discovered along the Nile River in Egypt. Therefore, its origins are believed to be in the Coptic tradition, that is, the Hellenic-Egyptian version of Hellenic-Hebrew Gnosticism. For example, the Nag Hammadi library, discovered at Chenoboskion in Egypt, contains fragments of the canonised gospels, Hermetic tractates, as well as the Gnostic Hypostasis of the Archons.

The Gospel of Judas is not written from the perspective of the person of Judas. It is not, therefore, technically a pseudepigrapha, or falsely-attributed authorship. This means that, whether it was originally written by Judas and transcribed later, or whether it was only written later for the first time, is irrelevant. We know that, for example, this copy of the document dates from between 300-400 AD, because we know this document was mentioned in extant sources from the period, and because we have chemically tested the ink and the parchment of this copy.

Actually, the least important thing about the Gospel of Judas is the last paragraph, in which Judas' tacit consent to Jesus' betrayal is portrayed most clearly as being upon the order of Christ Himself. Really, what is more important about the document is that it not only tells us that Jesus revealed his "secret teachings" to Judas personally, but also reveals to us what some of those "secret teachings" actually are!

For example, consider this comment that Judas makes in recognition of the true divinity of Christ, from page 2 of the pdf published version of the mss. linked to above.

[quote="the Gospel of Judas"]Judas [said] to him, "I know who you are and where you have come from. You are from the immortal realm of Barbelo. And I am not worthy to utter the name of the onewho has sent you." [/quote]

Now, here we see that the use of the term "Barbello" is Coptic. It is also used in such works as Zostrianus (the so-called "gnostic" Zoroaster - the Persian version of Christ). This seems to reaffirm the mss. origins in Egypt.

However, consider this comment made by Jesus in answer to a question posed to him regarding the "human generations," from page 4 of the mss.

[quote="Gospel of Judas"]Jesus said, "It is impossible [44] to sow seed on [rock] and harvest its fruit. [This] is also the way [...] the [defiled] generation [...] and corruptible Sophia [...] the hand that has created mortal people, so that their souls go up to the eternal realms above. [Truly] I say to you, [...] angel [...] power will be able to see that [...] these to whom [...] holy generations [...]." [/quote]

Here, we see Jesus' use of the term Sophia, Greek for "wisdom," is the Hellenic-Hebrew equivalent of the Hellenic-Egyptian term "Barbelo." Both refer to the mother of Samael, or Ialdabaoth, who is, herself, the first emanation from the divine godhead (that is equivalent to the sefira Chakmah in the later QBLHistic schools).

So, it seems that not only did Judas have knowledge of Egyptian Gnosticism, but that Jesus' "secret teachings" are merely Hebrew Gnosticism. Consider this reference to Saklas, one of the triumverate of names for Ialdabaoth, the Gnostic demiurge, made by Jesus Himself, page 7 of the .pdf.

[quote="Gospel of Judas"]Truly [I] say to you, Judas, [those who] offer sacrifices to Saklas [...] God [—three lines missing—] everything that is evil. [/quote]

Not only does this document begin to demonstrate that Jesus' "secret teachings" were actually only cross-cultural Gnosticism, but it goes into the Master's own elaborations on what we know, from other sources, of Gnostic beliefs. Consider Jesus' use of the name Nebro for the demiurge, Ialdabaoth, in this reference from page 5.

[quote="Gospel of Judas"]His name was Nebro, which means 'rebel'; others call him Yaldabaoth.[/quote]

Now, in discussing some of the concepts, Christ makes reference to specific, number-based systems. The traditions of some of these have been preserved, such as with the base seventy-two system, such as mentioned repeatedly in the Gospel of Judas, such as in this excerpt from page five.

[quote="Gospel of Judas"]“The multitude of those immortals is called the cosmos— that is, perdition—by the Father and the seventy-two luminaries who are with the Self-Generated and his seventy-two aeons.”[/quote]

The base seventy-two system derives from the Shemhamforash, or the spell supposedly used by Moses to part the Red Sea. The Shemhamforash is three, seventy-two letter long passages in Exodus describing the event, aligned to form seventy-two, three letter long angel names. There is a "dark side" to the shemhamforsh, and that is the Goetia. The Goetia is seventy-two names of demons. This is because the origin for the base seventy-two system of angel-days and night-demons was the thirty-six dekans of the Egyptian civic calendar. The thirty-six dekans were doubled, day and night, and that produced the seventy-two. The thirty-six Dekans of the Egyptian civic calendar were, themselves in turn, based on the twelve signs of the Sumerian zodiac.

Therefore, when Jesus comments, as he does on page five,

[quote="Gospel of Judas"]The seventy-two luminaries themselves made threehundred sixty luminaries appear in the incorruptible generawill of the Spirit, that their number should be five for each.[/quote]

we can easily see Christ's own contribution to the progressing evolution of the originally calendrical number-based system. By taking seventy-two, the number of day-and-night dekans from the Egyptian calendar, and multiplying it by five, we achieve the 360° divisions of the Greek circle.

It is strange that Christ also plays with the number thirteen in referring to Judas. Consider how Jesus chides Judas, saying, from page 4, [quote="Gospel of Judas"]“You thirteenth spirit, why do you try so hard? But speak up, and I shall bear with you.” [/quote]

And then consider how this is immediately turned around and becomes prophetic in the following verse, [quote="Gospel of Judas"]“You will become the thirteenth, and you will be cursed by the other generations—and you will come to rule over them. In the last days they will curse your ascent [47] to the holy [generation].”[/quote]

There are many other philosophies whose parallels may be seen to derive from this document, such as Christ's reference to a direct doctrine of Crowleyian Thelema:

[quote="Gospel of Judas"] Each of you has his own star [/quote] from page 3 of the document, which appears again, more colloquially, on page 5:

[quote="Gospel of Judas"]Jesus answered and said, "Judas, your star has led you astray."[/quote]

Also, much of the teachings of Jesus appear, at least from the perspective of the Gospel of Judas, to be apocalyptic and foretelling of the end-times. This type of literature was, however, quite common at the time, as we see with the terminology (such as "aeons" and "generations" ) in common between such diverse works as the eschatology of Revelations and the cosmology of the Hypostasis of the Archons. Also, more should definitely be said about Jesus' use of Seth as the first Generation after Adam. This tradition, of tracing the divine lineage through the descendents of Seth, rather than of either Cain or Abel, is known to be Essene. The Essenes were the Hellenic-Hebrew Gnostics at Qumran, authors of the Dead Sea scrolls. Consider that Jesus not only associates Seth as the first Generation (page 5):

[quote="Gospel of Judas"]He made the incorruptible [generation] of Seth appear [...] the twelve [...] the twenty-four [...].[/quote]

but that Jesus himself actually calls Seth "Christ." (page 6)

[quote="Gospel of Judas"]The first is [S]eth, who is called Christ. The [second] is Harmathoth, who is [...]. The [third] is Galila. The fourth is Yobel. The fifth [is] Adoniaos. These are the five who ruled over the underworld, and first of all over chaos.[/quote]

As I say, there are many other angles and takes on this document which will prove interesting as they come to light. I am eager to hear more of yours.

It is far too rational to see the world as "not yet" unified, and thus to not expect us all to exist under the same One True God, and so we are led to believe there is only one way to fix the irrationality of the world, and thus to "unify" us all (more so than we already are) under one true God, and that, moreover, all we have to do is party until we've made a mess of our world, and then, if God still doesn't come, we will simply press "the button" and blow the entire planet up. However, this is not the case, and self-destruction in an unattended child is rarely a successful strategy at gaining their due parental affection.

Whereas the term the priestcraft used to describe the politicians of old was "Satan," now that the chief-priest (Pope) has been declared "Christ," the fashionable term for validating the cause while ignoring the outcome is to refer to big business as providing or promoting a religious anti-Christ.

However why are we seemingly in the midst of such a cosmic tantrum we think that blowing up Eden will summon the One True God from beyond the whole universe? Why do we believe the end of days will come to our government at the hand of big business now? Government has always been corporate-sponsored. The largest capital generating owners of the means of production have always been the court that followed behind the king, and the priestcraft the ones consulting them in their every political decision. The king lorded over the people, and the wealthy lorded over the king. Why do we think that the perpetual transition of authority from political to economic sectors is reason enough to blow up our world? It is because of the religious calendar, and because of religious mythologies. That is why.

Thus, Democracy is thought of as "mob-rule" while quietly consolidation of ultimate authority to an extreme minority is common-practice in politics, however at the same time, we are told to be afraid of free-market monstrosities that infiltrate our governments for the absurd reason that they will provide or promote a religious anti-Christ. Transfer of authority is thus accomplished safely from the political to the business sector with all the same heads-of-state retaining their initial roles. Meanwhile the public majority is led to believe, 50 years too late as usual, that big business is threatening the constitution, when really it is government officials who have bought the primary stock-holder status in most Fortune 500 companies. The offices of government are no longer divided between the interests of their political party's constituents. They are unified in the interests of the companies they own and the banks who launder their fascist blood-money. The CIA does not dictate policy; they do not need to anymore. They serve the good of the politicians via their companies. All they ask for is to grow their business world-wide.

However, those who have given time to think this out have reached a very different intellectual conclusion on the matter than those whose knee-jerk reaction is fear. In fact, by controlling their own fear, they further the manifestation of soldiers for their own benefit to control those who fear them, and do rightly so.

The "intelligent" few who can afford "spare" time in which to think will know history, and understand that the battle of Armageddon was fought during World War I. There is always an ending and then a new beginning. So World War I ended the "old world" (divided between Africa/Eurasia in the "east" and the "savage" Americas in the "west") and World War II ushered in the "new world" order in which we live now, supposedly at the very cusp of global unification.

It is far too rational to see the world as "not yet" unified, and thus to not expect us all to exist under the same One True God, and so we are led to believe there is only one way to fix the irrationality of the world, and thus to "unify" us all (more so than we already are) under one true God, and that, moreover, all we have to do is party until we've made a mess of our world, and then, if God still doesn't come, we will simply press "the button" and blow the entire planet up. However, this is not the case, and self-destruction in an unattended child is rarely a successful strategy at gaining their due parental affection.

To the priestcraft, the Pope is God. But to the politicians, the Pope is seen as a threat. Because the Pope controls the priestcraft, it is necessary for the preservation of Democracy that he should be able to be over-ruled in session, however the fact is that, if the Pope did not agree with the other chief executives out-voting of ultimate Papal authority, the Pope could call upon the priestcraft.

This is the ultimate extent of the separation of church and state: a civil war in which every civilian is liable to be divided against one another along the lines of their allegiance to one or the other: the authority of the state to represent the best interests of the people, or the belief in the church's ability to do so. So long as church and state are separate, they are competing with one another to control the public like twins competing over a single lover.

The state promises to do whatever the people tell it. It is a liar. The church promises to save the souls of the people so that they will enter paradise. It is a liar. And each of us is born into this world as the bride of this twin-headed anti-God, made to decide which side to believe, but knowing always both are lying.

the suffering of religion::

If we throw in our allegiance with the mythologies of one religion or another, it is not because we are obsessed with the belief in the existence of a one true God, since this seems intuitive logically and can be personally experienced by anyone; it is because we are obsessed by the belief that the One True God will not stand for the injustice being perpetrated by one of us against another in His Name to serve the purpose only of competing religions.

For some reason, God only knows, we are imbued with self-awareness (a gift shared even among animals, probably plants and possibly even rock itself) that is able to perceive for itself a higher standard of living than exists. The reason this "kingdom of heaven" doesn't exist is because we can't make it out of only the resources we are given, and the reason we aren't "given" the necessary requisite amount of resources is that nature simply has not produced them. Now, if the equilibrium of the forces of nature themselves is insufficient to live up to our own expectations, then we have to rationalise our dissatisfaction with the Creation as a positive reflection on its (and our own) Creator. It is as if God has painted an ugly picture and we have to say we like it. We simply give up on ourselves being able to bring this about under our own power, and so we ally ourselves to the dominant paradigm of the local region's mythologies.

The suffering of politics::

If we throw in our allegiance to the social experiment of allowing a small group to administrate duties to a larger group it is not because we subscribe to the belief in that lie that the small group will serve the good of the larger group. No, these two are in competition so long as they remain apart from one another. So the public is treated like children by their government because the government fears the public will side against them in the name of God, that is, religion; and so the public allows itself, like children, to be paid off with comfort of living high above the standards the state can comfortably provide.

No, if we throw in our allegiance with politics it is not because we see any good coming from politics itself. We are simply less afraid of Democracy than we are of theocracies. This has nothing to do with God either; it is a simple fact that theocracies are oligarchies, economic dictatorships, where the extreme few have great wealth and where the extreme many are totally destitute. If we side with politics, we are not denying God. We are only admitting the evil of monopolistic corporations that have become synonymous with the heads of state, and that is why these free-market monstrosities are portrayed as, to government, what the state is seen as by religion: the adversary or nemesis.

the suffering of capital::

The world has always been unified in one regard, the very one in whose name the "intellectual" (rich) elite operate now. Trade itself is not only common to all peoples throughout all recorded history, but, specifically, so is the taxation of trade, that is, the "crumbs" (interest) falling from every passing of "bread" (loans) that are eaten by the "rats" (banks).

Government has always been corporate-sponsored. The largest capital generating owners of the means of production have always been the court that followed behind the king, and the priestcraft the ones consulting them in their every political decision. The king lorded over the people, and the wealthy lorded over the king. It is capital that has corrupted the State. The bloody handshake of compromise with the dominant twin, the Church.

The suffering of capital is the compromise exchanged between church and state to not pit the entire species of humanity against one another in a wretched self-destructive civil war of global destruction. Banks are priests and businesses are politicians. This is not new. So why now are we being led to believe the world is just about to become unified?

They tell us their taxation on our free trade, that is, the interest rates on loans made to businesses by banks, might suddenly end at any time now. As soon as there is a one-world currency, they assure us, then the end will come. Then an anti-Christ will reign, but until then the religious Apocalypse cannot yet have come.

the day of atonement::

Religion is using the calendar as a means of usurping control of the masses entirely from politics; it actually hopes to be done with "mob rule" altogether. It promotes the fear that this is not already the case, the fear that it could come to pass at any moment.

Why are we seemingly in the midst of such a cosmic tantrum we think that blowing up our own microscopic "Eden" will summon the One True God from beyond the whole universe? Why do we believe the end of days will come to our government at the hand of big business now? Why do we think that the perpetual transition of authority from political to economic sectors is reason enough to blow up our world now? It is because of the religious calendar, and because of religious mythologies. That is why.

Thus, we are supposed to believe the day of atonement, of reckoning, of judgment, etc. will be brought about at the hands of big business dissolving government, and in turn being dissolved by religion. In short, the priest-craft plus the people under one Pope outnumber the politicians and their own portion of the people. So many believe the "dominoes" are "lining up" and that the "clock" is "counting down."

So long as there are priests there will be multiple religions, and so long as we are divided on the nature of reality itself among multiple religions, there will continue to be injustice in the world, not only in the "social experiment" nor only attempts at "free trade," but in the core beliefs of each of us about everyone else.

It is far too easy to rationalise seeing the world as "not yet" unified, and thus to not have to expect us all to exist under the same One True God, and so we are led to believe there is only one way to fix the irrationality of the world, and thus to "unify" us all (more so than we already are) under "one true god," and, moreover, that all we have to do is party until we've made a mess of our world, and then, if God still doesn't come, we will simply press "the button" and blow up the entire planet.

the fifth Noble Truth::

It is basically accepted that: A) global government is inevitable and the first global government will be a dictatorship. B) to achieve global government we have to create a single global currency by forming a trade-union between companies ("capitalism") to defeat state-side labour-unions ("socialism"). C) trade-unions between businesses are infiltrating national governments and using military and industrial (utilities and domestic infrastructure) privatisation to devalue national currencies.

Yet what we are told is that: A) global government is evil, the first global dictator will be Satan, and try to unify all the world's religions. B) We must hurry Satan into power then, because that will bring about the "New Age" of world peace under the One True God that follows Judgment Day. C) Those who help build the Tower of Babel will still get to heaven, and those who try to resist will be killed anyway.

And in an over-simplified, childish, blind, ignorant, misguided, dumbed-down way, what we are told and what we accept are the same thing. And, ultimately, it is what we accept as reality that matters more than what we know or believe to be true.

the myth of history::

Religion is the domain of books in the same manner as politics is the domain of libraries. God is in scripture, and politics roam the halls of power. The power of religion is over the language of the words, but the power of politics is in its ability to burn books. By trading pages of the book of history in the form of capital, either in the form of paper leaves called cash or simply in the scriptural data of credit-transactions, the political and religious wings of the Great Beast are kept in check and balance with each other.

The church fears the erasure of its history, and this fear constitutes the main protagonist in its scriptures. Each of the patriarchs, prophets and Christ himself all stood for a "greater good" than the politics of the states of their times. These characters are all imbued with uber-mensch-esque aptitudes, and always prevail, although often at the expense of their own lives. Insofar as these latter attributes and their outcome are fiction, the domain of religion is mythologies of the past, while the domain of politics is every decision made in the present.

But there are certain rules. For example: the religious scribes must enter events into the record a certain period of time after they have occurred; this period of time is to be dictated in the present by the decision-makers of the time.

I've heard many people say, the EU is just what Hitler wanted. No it isn't. Hitler wanted a global dictatorship. The EU is an international monetary union. The world bank has to accumulate enough credit (from various national debts) to mint a global currency. To do this, they have to assume the military might to be able to collect on this credit. Without entering into a pact with the heads of all involved nations, and thus establishing a global economic trade union, the world bank cannot issue currency based on its credit. Once the world bank is able to issue a global currency, though, it will be necessary to translate the wealth of national currencies to an equivalent amount of global currency. In order to accomplish this, it will be necessary for everyone living in the countries of the monetary union to have a greater amount of global currency (buying power) than national currency (amount of value). In other words, only once federal notes are bankrupted can the value of global currency outweigh the buying power of national money.

I've heard many people say, the first form of global government will be a dictatorship. This is wrong. To enable the World Bank to enforce the use of its global currency, by calling in debts owed to it by military might, the first form of global government would be in the form of an international free-trade agreement effectively dissolving all national borders. The nations who agreed to this pact would, as does the EU now, all share one fixed world currency. Thus, it would be the international businesses of the private sectors among nations that would form the first truly unified form of global government, by world-wide trade agreement. While this would be global fascism, it would not immediately imply dictatorship over the national populations. It would mean, instead, the formation of a direct democracy as the first form of global government, as consumerism would determine financial progress among the founding companies of the global credit union the same way votes determine the decisions made by representative government officials. Rather than voting for candidates to elect representatives, we would supply funds to a corporation that would reciprocate by determining our government's policies to maximize their own profits, thus increasing the value of our initial contribution to them. This is currently the case in the US.

I've heard many people say, the first global dictator will unify all the world's different religions. What would be wrong with that? If there actually is only one God, why should people disagree on his nature? Yet the fiction that we can accept one God as a species has led to the fact of many thousand years of warfare, all around the globe, as everyone attempts to convert everyone else to their own views. Due to its dependency on depletable resources, leading to its viral similitude in consuming until supersaturation and then metamorphosing its values, humanity alone self-regulates natural selection by survival of the fittest. By economic controls, mankind substitutes the value of earning money for the skill of natural survival. Therefore, the Almighty Dollar is, in truth, our idealisation as a species of the fact that we control our own populations - not only the number of us alive by institutionalised murder in the form of wars, but also the way in which those of us left over survive to breed by using the artificial exchange system of money. If there ever will be a single global god, it will, by necessity, be worshipped in the form of the global currency.

Thus, what we see is that the global government already exists in the form of free trade agreements and monetary unions, that wealthy companies and not elected officials comprise its ranks (though "we the people" control them by tariffs, boycotts and strikes even moreso than by voting for elected officials), and that, in truth, the one true god already ruling over all humanity and worshipped even by entire corporations themselves is the ideal lie that is money.

So what "many people say" and what is obvious enough for us all to see are often not the same. Ladies and gentlemen, please wake up now. We have arrived in our New World Order.

Everything is backwards inside out of looking-glass land. Once you realise you've been lied to and most of what you believe you know is wrong, you will find the world is much more vast than you at first saw, but that those who had concealed this from you are really the only ones around to fear.

No one knows what is in your own best interest better than you do for yourself.

Just as the imaginary "dangers" of an "unknown" world beyond their "protection" were lies all along, so is their entire motive backward to the mind-control moralities they taught us to value. They view their unethical strategies as necessary for their own survival and the protection of their property.

Their greatest fear is that they are massively out-numbered by the populous they dominate, and their illusion of authority is flimsy and necessarily changes with their short-term goals. They use fear-tactics and lies; they are fighting what they see as a desperate fight to maintain their hegemony.

Their future is short, and they know it. Their time has almost run out, their crimes have almost caught up with them, and they are now short-selling their own future generations into a cess-pool infested prison-planet just to bail themselves out in the immediate present.

We know who "they" are, right in the here and now. The Yale frat Skull and Bones fed the ranks of the CIA, eventually forming the Bildebergers. Their greatest fear is being held accountable for the crimes they know they are guilty of committing daily.

All that remains is for us to know who "we" are. That is easy too. We are the ones who are left over, the oppressed, the disenfranchised, the victims, the innocent. All it remains now to be done is to make a choice: whose side are we on?

Are we on our own side, or are we with those who have lied to us all along?

I think the answer to that should be fairly simple and obvious for us all to solve.

Sign the Pledge for Peace Petition

Please join the 83 Members of Congress who pledged in an open letter delivered to President Bush: "We will only support appropriating funds for U.S. military operations in Iraq during Fiscal Year 2008 and beyond for the protection and safe redeployment of all our troops out of Iraq before you leave office."

The U.S. occupation of Iraq is the primary cause of the violence there. U.S. intelligence agencies have reported in multiple National Intelligence Estimates that the occupation of Iraq is recruiting more terrorists worldwide. Every dollar we spend in Iraq is making America less secure and taking funds away from urgent needs at home and abroad.

54% of Americans want Bush to bring U.S. troops home within 6 months, according to a Democrats.com telephone poll of 618 adults conducted from September 6-9, 2007, by ICR. 73% of Americans want U.S. troops home in a year. The single largest group (40%) want Bush to bring U.S. troops home within 6 months using funds Congress has already given him for Iraq. Ten Reasons to Impeach George Bush and Dick Cheney

I ask Congress to impeach President Bush and Vice President Cheney for the following reasons:

1. Violating the United Nations Charter by launching an illegal "War of Aggression" against Iraq without cause, using fraud to sell the war to Congress and the public, misusing government funds to begin bombing without Congressional authorization, and subjecting our military personnel to unnecessary harm, debilitating injuries, and deaths.

2. Violating U.S. and international law by authorizing the torture of thousands of captives, resulting in dozens of deaths, and keeping prisoners hidden from the International Committee of the Red Cross.

3. Violating the Constitution by arbitrarily detaining Americans, legal residents, and non-Americans, without due process, without charge, and without access to counsel.

4. Violating the Geneva Conventions by targeting civilians, journalists, hospitals, and ambulances, and using illegal weapons, including white phosphorous, depleted uranium, and a new type of napalm.

5. Violating U.S. law and the Constitution through widespread wiretapping of the phone calls and emails of Americans without a warrant.

6. Violating the Constitution by using "signing statements" to defy hundreds of laws passed by Congress.

7. Violating U.S. and state law by obstructing honest elections in 2000, 2002, 2004, and 2006.

8. Violating U.S. law by using paid propaganda and disinformation, selectively and misleadingly leaking classified information, and exposing the identity of a covert CIA operative working on sensitive WMD proliferation for political retribution.

9. Subverting the Constitution and abusing Presidential power by asserting a "Unitary Executive Theory" giving unlimited powers to the President, by obstructing efforts by Congress and the Courts to review and restrict Presidential actions, and by promoting and signing legislation negating the Bill of Rights and the Writ of Habeas Corpus.

10. Gross negligence in failing to assist New Orleans residents after Hurricane Katrina, in ignoring urgent warnings of an Al Qaeda attack prior to Sept. 11, 2001, and in increasing air pollution causing global warming.

-----

I support the impeachment of Vice President Dick Cheney and I authorize Rep. Dennis Kucinich to enter my name into the Congressional Record.

Rep. Dennis Kucinich wants to put the name of everyone who supports Dick Cheney's impeachment in to the Congressional Record!

The Congressional Record is the official record of the proceedings and debates of the United States Congress. It is published daily when Congress is in session and is fully searchable. Every day that Congress is in session, Rep. Kucinich will submit 5 single-spaced pages of names with states, which is the daily limit under House rules. To be included, all you need to do is submit this petition.

Rep. Kucinich will not use this list for any other purpose besides entering it into the Congressional Record.

19485 of 100000 people have signed this petition. (July 27, 2007 - 12:01am)

When the capacity for compassion evacuates the heart, then anger clouds the judgment. When the ability to experience human emotions is pushed aside, then another form of consciousness enters, one that is entirely alien to those of us who can still feel love and pain. This other self, this alter-personality, is pure evil from the point of view of anyone who can remain objective and sympathetic. It is completely cold-blooded, calculating and cruel. Even the word "demon" is too polite for this malevolent possession. The ancient word "Satan," meaning an "adversary" or "foe" is much more apt. When the limits of humanity are passed, then this "Satanic" consciousness rushes in to fill the vacuum. At that point, there is no turning back, you cannot ever regain what you have lost. You cease to be an innocent, and you become a murderer, a rapist, a sadistic, malignant cyst inside the husk of a "human" shell. This is what we are witnessing here. We are not only seeing an innocent man being murdered. We are seeing the Ancient of Days itself possessing the heartless, mindless, zombie-bodies of once living souls. But now these "cops," these servants and protectors of the people, have sacrificed their life-blood by proxy to a master of lies, manipulation, twisting, hurting and murder.Fuck these pigs. They're already dead. The only thing motivating their unfeeling corpses like marionettes is the king of all darkness. And I think that, at this point, it should be fairly obvious who has opened up this rift between reality and what they think they are allowed to get away with. The king whose lies they believe will enable them to achieve omnipotence by blood-lust. It doesn't matter whether we call the faceless minions mere "demons" and this ruler over them all "Satan." They are all one hive-consciousness. It is the release of their spirit that fills them with loss, and to justify that to themselves they will do anything to anyone who crosses their path. That's true for anyone given free reign to abuse their authority.As I've long said though, you can't fight the hydra by hacking away at its regenerating heads. No, to kill the monster you have to show it its own reflection. Only the last vestiges of shame and humility left in these heartless hellions will ever be able to free them from this possession by this alien evil. And then, the only way for them to be free will be self-sacrifice, like lemmings, en masse mercy-killing themselves. Once these fascist scabs see their true face in the mirror, they will all swallow shotguns on their own, and that will be that.I only pray there is anything still good left inside these unclean swine to join their countless, forgiving victims in the realm of eternal rewards. Because if there isn't, and they are truly blind to all but the most immediate and carnal satisfactions, then they are truly in Hell already, and good for nothing but wasting our air. At that point, we would actually be doing them a favour by freeing them from their fleshly damnation. And if that is the case, then no one in their own right mind would ever dream of doing anything but thanking us.~G~</TR></TABLE>

There are layers of truth; for example, to transform the world from what it is into what we want it to be, we have to do what we see our enemies doing; we have to use subjective perspectives to maneuver between the different points of view of one another; we have to compromise our own "Truth" and work as if we each only have theories. If you combine the working parts of everyone's theories, then you can best estimate the truth. But even then, this does not cause evidence for our theories to manifest out of thin air. We must remember that we do not already KNOW the WHOLE TRUTH. In point of fact, it is only by learning together that we come to KNOW Truth. We have to know that we do not know in order to come to know. The 9-11 Truth movement is not just for preaching about a "new world order," it is, more importantly, for requesting those who have the information to enter it into the public record. If they will not do this, then we will have nothing to fall back on but our own best theory as an explanation for what actually happened. And only if our best theory explains the evidence beyond any reasonable doubt that can destabilise our theory's validity raised by the ones we believe responsible. This is fair and this is what we mean when we say we want "Global Justice." We do not desire a violent reckoning. We desire the ones who we believe to be responsible for the crime to stop impeding the investigation of it.

Obviously we don't yet know the whole truth. We don't yet have the full story. So arguing against each other is, obviously, self-defeating. We need to compare our theories and share our evidence. We need to pursue the legal angle. Politics should not be a modeling patient, and neither should court-room law be "might makes right." All we want is justice. I think we're only arguing here not because we disagree nor to preach to the choir, but because we are all naturally suspicious of any headway we achieve. But it isn't one another we should mis-trust. It's the motives of the puppet-masters pulling the strings behind this release. No cop has ever just

I'm most suspicious of the cops in this case. Since when have cops been sensitive to the stories of anyone caught disturbing the peace for the purpose of political protest? To them, average citizens are already considered as potential victims or suspect criminals; this "infiltration" could easily be considered domestic "terrorism." Beware Greeks bearing gifts, is all I'm saying. Wherever there is a grunt to do you a favour, there will be a spy that will come to collect. ~G~

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=oaQoD72v4-s&NR=1>

first, please check out this youtube video. It's a short commercial for something called "NPT" meaning "no plane theory." In my opinion, and get ready for a surprise, "npt" is NOT a "Theory." It's the Truth. As the video says, it explains all the NYC WTC 9-11 "mysteries." I know I had said before I thought the planes were remote flown, I have to admit that all the evidence I had to prove that theory fits into, as well as is added to by more, explanations under the title "NPT." IMO, "NPT" IS "9-11 Truth."

Consider this:

[quote="NPT"]

1) lack of plane wreckage. At ALL Four Sites, there is NO evidence of ANY plane crash.

A) The hole in the interior wall of the Pentagon was Speculated to have been caused by the nose-cone, but there were NO parts of the wings found in the external "impact" area on the outer-most wall.

B) do a youtube search for "new United 93" footage. I'll come back to the role of small affiliate news reports in a moment. All of the local news reports from the United 93 crash site interviewed the few police dispatched to the scene as saying there was very little debris, and that the impact crater was only 10 FEET ACROSS.

C) of course, we could say there was no wreckage from the WTC planes because there was no remains of the WTC towers themselves by the end of the day. That's a separate issue, along with Building 7.

::: possible explanations :::

A) "explosives on-board the planes." I've heard this mentioned in conjunction with the notion that anthrax or arsenic was to be used as part of the plan. The source claimed it was Al-Queida behind it, but implied collusion before-hand by the idea that the chemical weapon was to be used in the explosives that brought down the buildings themselves. These explosives, as I tried to state in the "9-11 Revisited" thread, are probably THE MOST IMPORTANT EVIDENCE of collusion because they imply the success of sleeper-cells before the supposed hijackings on that day. If there were evidence of there being sleeper-cells of Al-Queida operating in the US, they would use that info as public justification for their Draconian militarisation. Instead, if there was any collusion before-hand, it has been resoundingly denied by the official story supporters, including the current administration. However, it should also be noted that, if there were explosives ONLY on-board the planes, and NOT in the buildings themselves, it would still explain many anomalies (such as the flash-points ahead of the impacts of both WTC planes) as well as merely the lack of wreckage.

B) NPT.

2) "mystery planes."

A) The "UFO" (Global-Hawk) drone-planes I speculated in 9-11 Revisited to be "remote-control" for the "big planes." These are Clearly Visible even in early (likely unaltered) footage. They show up in footage of the first AND second impacts on the WTC towers.

B) The Air Force "Doomsday" airliner, equipt with the most advanced telecommunications equipment ever - to maintain the ("Shadow Government") "Continuity of Powers" Acts established by Executive Order under Clinton - filmed by CNN over the White House just before the explosion at the Pentagon. If this plane was mis-identified and was actually the hijacked flight that crashed into the Pentagon, it would be part of the official story. However, instead, the Air Force has admitted, although the story has been hushed up, the plane actually is the "continuity of powers" Doomsday airliner. So, the question is, what was it doing flying through the controlled airspace above the White-House (which actually caused the evacuation of that building)?

C) in addition to these visible UFOs and Air Force jets, there are eye-witness reports of the plane that hit the Pentagon being much smaller, travelling much faster, and having no distinguishing markings on it. This has raised the speculation it was possibly a missile that impacted there. However, there are also eye-witnesses to the United 93 crash that claim they saw a smaller, unmarked plane fly overhead, but did not see OR hear ANY jet-liner. This has led to the speculation that it was a jet they saw. I've heard speculation that part of the "fall-back" story was to be that some "loyal" base commanders had, indeed, scrambled jets, and that United 93 was shot down by one of these.

::: possible explanations :::

A) "drone-planes" were used by the US military to remote-controlled pilot the "big plane" airliners into the twin towers. It is also possible that a drone plane was remote-controlling United 93, and that it was a drone plane itself that was flown into the Pentagon. Level of need for collusion by the US Military: 100%. It would mean that the Pentagon bombed itself, and that Al-Qaeda had exactly zero to do with 9-11, aside from (supposedly) claiming credit for it after the fact. This has been the theory I've subscribed to thus far. However then I found about NPT.

B) NPT.

3) Use of explosives.

A) I think that, by now, we pretty much all accept that the WTC towers were demolished. I don't think we all know who did this, necessarily. However it is quite clear who did it, and not only about WTC7, which Larry Silverstein, the WTC owner, admits to have "pulled." WTC7 collapsed around 7PM EST, was not hit by a plane, and only had fires on two lower floors. Larry Silverstein ADMITS to having said they "pulled" WTC7. More than this, we KNOW from having SEEN WITH OUR OWN EYES, the isolated explosions on lower floors AS the WTC towers each collapsed. Also, both collapsed faster than "free fall" speed, meaning that they were falling faster than they normally would under their own weight, and moreover, were being turned to dust as they were pulverised and imploded. The lone, FOX News eye-witness to report the "jet-fuel / structural integrity" theory is not credible enough evidence in the face of countless demolitions experts' testimony and physicists' computer-models. Yet that is the "official story" of the 9-11 Commission Report. No, quite to the contrary, WTC 1 & 2 were "pulled" by Larry Silverstein just as much as was Building 7. What is the evidence for that? Silverstein's firm the Blackstone Group's construction firm "LERA" were working the entire week before 9-11 installing new "security equipment." This was the thermate explosives used on 9-11. "LERA" has admitted this, saying that it was installed to demolish the building "in the event of massive structural integrity failure." The original WTC architect, interviewed prior to 9-11, stated the buildings were built to withstand an impact from a 747 going faster than 100 mph. In addition to this, consider that Silverstein could not have had demolition equipment planted in WTC7 between when WTC 1 & 2 collapsed and when WTC was "pulled." It was already there.

B) pictures of the Pentagon's east wall taken the week before 9-11 also show a row of white trailers, such as seen most commonly being used as portable offices on-site for construction company contractors. This was explained, in spite of there being no construction equipment on site nor any obvious work being done, as installing new "security equipment." It has been speculated that it was these white trailers that were exploded along the wall of the Pentagon.

C) again, I've heard the theory expressed that the use of arsenic or possibly anthrax was in the "original plan" to be used in the bombing of the WTC. An airborne chemical weapon would be combined with an explosive to create a cloud of poisonous gas. The idea of a "dirty bomb" implies criminal motive in the prior planting of explosives in the WTC.

D) whether there were explosives used on United 93, and whether the Pentagon explosion was (also) a "dirty bomb," are irrelevant, but it would still be important to know. It would clear up whether there was a "flash-point" explosive used in the "big planes" to trigger the "ground-charges" at the targets, as well as whether the bombs planted on-site before-hand were or were not intended as a security measure in the event of attack (as implied by Silverstein's quote about "deciding to pull the building" at around 7PM about WTC7), or whether there was criminal intent in their being there.

A) fore-knowledge of the crime, implied by preparation for it before-hand, is, as I keep saying, THE MOST IMPORTANT EVIDENCE of collusion between ANY possible hijackers of "big planes" on 9-11 and ground-forces or "sleeper-cells" in place before the event. If there was a direct connection between, say, vans full of dynamite in the WTC basements on 9-11 (like what happened in 1993), then this would be considered a very important part of the 9-11 "official story" that would specifically indicate the amount of careful pre-planning involved by the "terrorist master-minds." However, because the explosives were, admittedly and by evidence, obviously planted by Larry Silverstein, WTC owner, in the WTC itself, then there is no way to account credibly for there being ANY collusion between Al-Quedia and "ground-force" sleeper-cells. It is simply too amazing to think there was malice afore-thought shared between Osama Bin Laden and Larry Silverstein. And Larry Silverstein has actually admitted to "pulling" WTC7.

B) NPT.

4) Confused eye-witness testimony. This is probably the most important one, and I think it should be considered a seaprate issue from the last point.

A) every single one of the local affiliate news reporters, and, until the CIA plant "eye-witness" was interviewed on FOX News about the "jet-fuel" theory that would become the official story, also the primary network news reporters as well, all stuck to using the word "explosions" to describe what was occuring at the WTC. They used this word, in the PLURAL, before the second WTC tower first "exploded." Also, one of the local affiliates even said "bombs" but then corrected herself by saying, "I may be talking out of place," and adding, "I don't want to say 'bombs' yet." If the local affiliates were reporting multiple "explosions," then why weren't they reporting "plane crash." Simple: they had not yet been notified of there having been any hijacked planes. They thought there was only an explosion because they hadn't SEEN the first plane impact. So, if eye-witnesses to the first plane impact are ONLY people on the ground, and do not include ANY reporters able to confirm the plane-crash, then maybe there only WERE "explosions" (plural) and NOT a "plane-crash."

B) the fly-by footage shot from helicopter over the crash-site of United 93 does not show ANY plane-crash. It shows scattered debris, all later described as "none bigger than a phone-book," a barn (still standing), and a dark circular shape, which we are told by the overlapping narration, is the "impact crater." But the narrator may be confused. The "indentation" might also have been a protruberance. To me, and the footage was VERY shaky, it looked more like a small compost heap, as one might see near any barn. The footage also does NOT show anyone AT ALL present on the scene. This could be because the footage itself was shot when a rep from the governor's office did a helicopter fly-by "earlier" (as the narrator puts it). However the narrator quotes the gov's rep as seeing "only a few 'first responders.'" So, whether the ONLY helicopter footage of the United 93 crash shows any wreckage or not, WHY does it NOT show any "first responders" AT ALL? Later, a local cop interviewed at the scene described the "impact-crater" as a hole "10 feet across" said there was no debris "larger than a phone-book," and that there were "very few people there," some from the local police forces, and others "who looked like they were from" government agencies. He also described the crash-site as "very quiet," and said there were NO FIRES (!!!!!).

C) also, again, the eye-witness reports of the Pentagon and United 93 impacts do not report seeing ANY air-liners in the area at all. One eye-witness, driving on the road parallel to the Pentagon's east wall, reported seeing something fly across in front of him very low and very fast toward the Pentagon, however he also said that he "thought it was a missile," because it "didn't have any markings." The reports of some eye-witnesses in the area of the United 93 crash-site state they had not heard ANY plane flying over-head before the sound of the explosion. Others say they SAW a small, un-marked, white plane flying in the area before the explosion. Again, both independent sources used the word "explosion" and not "plane-crash." Neither of them saw OR heard a plane crash.

::: possible explanations :::

A) NPT.

5) lack of footage. Again I consider this a separate issue from the previous point. Aside from eye-witness and "first-responder" testimony ubiquitously dis-proving the "official version" there is an obvious and undeniable shortage of video footage.

A) there is only one officially KNOWN video tape of the plane hitting the first WTC tower. This footage shows a flash-point explosion between the nose of the plane and the surface of the building before the plane's impact, as well as a mystery plane "UFO" Global Hawk. There are other videos of the first plane's impact. One of these videos DOES NOT SHOW A PLANE AT ALL. It shows the towers at an extreme distance, from the south end of the Holland tunnel. It does not show a plane. It does show an explosion. Another video from a high angle vantage point (possibly a surveillance camera on top of a support strut of the suspension bridge) clearly shows a plane strike, however the footage is only four or five frames long, in poor focus and additionally poorly transferred to the digital medium. Thus the plane looks more like a Hollywood special effect than it actually might have appeared in the original footage. However, and I want to stress something here because this is an important point of what I'm talking about right now, this footage appears to be from a SURVEILLANCE CAMERA, as it comes from a very HIGH ANGLE vantage point. I'll come back to that in a moment.

B) the footage of affiliate station local news reports in both NY and the area around the crash-site of United 93 have been actively suppressed. Instead, whenever any footage of the impacts or interviews with eye-witnesses is shown, it is always the same, national network footage. This includes the only video of the first crash and primarily the CNN footage of the second crash. Rarely, we see the footage from the parking lot surveillance camera at the Pentagon as well. Obviously there was no footage of the United 93 impact, but then why don't we see the footage by affiliate stations of local eye-witness interviews. And what ABOUT the footage shot by CNN of the "Doomsday" plane flying over the White House? Now, this in itself is not particularly spectacular. But what I'm going to say next might seem so...

C) There are three types of 9-11 footage: high vantage stationary and low vantage stationary or mobile. Now, we are used to seeing planes in the high-vantage stationary footage. This footage is "eye in the sky" footage shot from SURVEILLANCE cameras on top of bridges, buildings and cellular telephone towers. It is then leased to news stations. The footage itself belongs to the company that owns the cameras. In some cases, the cameras are installed by news agencies, other times by the private companies who own the property, and in some cases (such as, obviously, at the Pentagon) they are the property of the federal government or an affiliate police surveillance program. All the high vantage stationary footage aired by FOX News was shot by a camera company called WESCAM. Wescam is a military intelligence contracting company. The CNN low-vantage stationary footage was also shot on a surveillance camera.

D) Of the low-vantage mobile footage there are also two kinds. The first kind is that which was released on the day of 9-11. All of this footage shows the planes hit the towers. But where did it come from? Aside from the explanation for the footage of the first plane, that it was shot while on-location interviewing NYC firemen by a German documentary film-maker team, there was no one credited with having shot the other low-vantage mobile footage of the second plane's impact. It is all credited as proprietary ownership by the national News networks who, we must expect, purchased it from eye-witnesses. However there are some holes in this notion: the standard contract for purchase of footage from an eye-witness with a camera by any news agency, local or national, involves signing forms, waivers etc. Usually these stipulate whether the person wants to be credited as the source of the footage. On 9-11 NONE were. Also in the contract are clauses involving royalties for profits gained by distribution (resale) of the footage. So, let's say that, each time their footage of 9-11 was resold by CNN to the other national news networks, CNN was paid for it, and so CNN would legally owe some of the sale-price to the original producer of the footage itself. If this applied in 9-11, there would be literally two or three MILLIONAIRES who were responsible for the primary low-vantage mobile footage. But ONLY two or three. The question is, why does additional 9-11 footage keep surfacing now, several years later, while the only news footage that has been aired during all that time has been the same few clips? The answer may surprise you.

E) none of the unreleased low-vantage, mobile footage shows the planes. Instead, most of it is either out-of-frame during the second tower's exploding - indicating that there was nothing to make the videographer expect the second tower impact (such as the sight of a 757 approaching it), or else the footage... sit down and breathe deeply... Shows THE TOWER EXPLODE, but, again, SHOWS NO PLANE HITTING IT. This is not a trick of the angle nor the light. There is at least one long-distance, mobile, low-angle vantage point shot showing, quite clearly, the explosion of the second tower. It does not show a plane anywhere near either before, during, or after this explosion. This is the same thing seen by the Holland Tunnel stationary camera. There is also footage online of the first plane actually flying PAST the first tower as it exploded (however I speculate this footage may be dubious). These alternative sources for low-vantage, mobile footage should be considered extremely important. They represent the ONLY reliable eye-witness accounts to the events, since all the high and low vantage stationary footage, as well as the low-vantage mobile footage of the first plane shot by the German documentarians, was released THAT DAY, and thus its proper processing between being recorded on film and being aired on national network news tv stations should be considered suspect. There is enough reasonable doubt to at least speculate that all the footage we saw that day was doctored, and that it is only this same footage we see in the major media still to this day.

A) NPT.
[/quote]

I'd urge anyone who reads this to strongly consider the possibility that the planes flying into the WTC were, as we have long suspected was the plane that flew into the Pentagon, not really there.

NPT explains: 1) lack of plane wreckage; 2) "mystery planes;" 3) use of explosives; 4) confused eye-witness testimony; 5) lack of footage.

The MOST IMPORTANT NEW piece of information provided by the NPT is in regards to the lack of footage. I'd urge you all to do some research into optical imaging systems, and start here:

<http://www.wescam.com/default.asp>

The reason I say there in specific is because of the following still image, taken from the youtube commercial video I cited at the top of this article, showing the 9-11 FOX News camera apparatus in a pull-back shot.

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/WESCAM.jpg>[/img]

The camera mounting clearly reads WESCAM, and, as you yourself can confirm by visiting their website, Wescam are primarily a military-intelligence contractor, providing digital camera technologies equip with various imaging capabilities (such as infrared as used by police in night-time man-hunts, as seen in their demo video) mounted on police helicopters, UN-MANNED AERIAL RECONNAISSANCE VEHICLES (such as the Global Hawk), and, apparently, the FOX News camera antenna on 9-11.

On October 27, people from all walks of life will gather at sites around the country for 11 regional demonstrations. People everywhere want the war to end, but Washington has failed to take decisive action. With each passing month, nearly 100 service-people and countless more Iraqis are killed, some 12 billion of our tax dollars are spent, and the death and destruction continue. Our communities – from New Orleans to Minneapolis – are neglected and suffer the consequences. From Boston to Los Angeles, from New York to New Orleans, later this month the people will speak: We want this war to end, and we want it to end now! Click on the images to the above to find out about each regional demonstration, or learn more about national organizing. Visit www.oct27.org for more details and information on how to get involved in the demonstration in your region.

Dear activists, colleagues and friends,

It has been over 4 and a half years since the invasion of Iraq. 3,835 U.S. soldiers and over 1 million Iraqi citizens have lost their lives. U.S. taxpayers have spent over $600 billion on this war with no end in sight.

This Saturday, October 27th, you can take a stand. United for Peace and Justice is coordinating over 150 peace groups across the country for demonstrations in 11 cities.

Wrap your brain around this... (!)

as I've said, the NPT explains the presence of "mystery planes," such as the Global Hawk "UFO's"
AND the "Doomsday" E-4B COG ("Continuity of Government") plane. So, getting past the knee jerk reaction of "the Global Hawk and E-4B ARE planes. How can the NPT be true if there ARE planes?"

I'll tell you how.

Dick Cheney and George Bush sr. were co-ordinating "operation Global Guardian" from Strategic Command centre on the white-house "Doomsday plane" on the morning of 9-11. Global Guardian was a cover-story for 9-11. But then, the collapse of the towers on 9-11 was really a cover-story for the (attempted) theft of several hundred tonnes of gold from the vault beneath them. I'll come back to that.

Let's talk first about the Global Hawk "UFO's" in NYC. Why do I keep calling them "UFO's"?
Because when a visible aircraft is equipt with an activated cloaking device, and ceases to be visible, it becomes an "unidentified flying object." The Global Hawks of 9-11 had such a cloaking device. They appear on the videos, but only as a shine here or a smudge there. They also had something else I bet you didn't know we have. They had holographic projectors.

Surprised? You shouldn't be! We all know the technology we the people have access to is at least fifty years behind what the military industrial complex has developed at Area 51 and other R&D labs. In fact, the further the military industry lags behind the spy-ware, the smaller the gap between rich and poor becomes. Likewise, the further the private sector lags behind the military, the greater the gap becomes.

Consider this: a hologram is an image that appears to be real enough, existing externally to us, in the "three dimensions" of the real world, possessing visible attributes. But a hologram is intangible for one very important reason. It is not actually where it appears. It is an "optical illusion," or, more bluntly, a "Hallucination." It's like a ghost: it looks real, but it's only in your mind's eye. It's not really there.

There are two ways to render a hologram: 1) smoke and mirrors. This renders an objectively verifiable apparition, but one that is, and I stress this, Still NOT REAL. The other is easier, and that is 2) to bend the brain of a person such that they can see something where there isn't anything really there.

This used to be called "insanity." Talking to yourself is normal. It's called an "interior monologue" for a reason though. When you hear someone else answering back, you are experiencing the realm that used to be accessed by "spiritists," "shamen" and other "sophists."

Then it was called "tripping." This still involved causing massive psychic trauma to the self of the individual experiencing it, though it would open up the flood-gates to a group awareness of extra-sensory stimulation. It doesn't matter if we communicate or not, we are all sharing the same experience either way. So whether we "answer back" or not, we are of "one mind" anyway.

Now it's called the "technological singularity." The people who used to be "mad" men living out in the woods have come into our towns, showed us their pharmacopeia, and are now pitching us the Sneeze-Machine of the "technological singularity" as the name for the space-age revolution of microchips in the 50's to follow the industrial revolution only 50 years before that. Futurists talk about internet-ready computer-screen contact-lenses as if this was somehow different from what we already do have: eye-balls and a mind with an imagination.

I say, plant the chip in the dip. I say, here take this placebo: a shred of paper we tell you has a chemical substance called "L period S period D full-stop" in it that will make you act liberated but which will wear off. Oh, yeah, and one day it might be used as a way to remote-control trigger a "suicide/kill" switch in everyone ever exposed to it all at once. Oh, well, that's the Apocalypse for you. LOL!

Nowadays, the technologists preach that creating a mass hallucination occurring only in the minds of a large audience would actually be EASIER than projecting a single external object that would appear to be there but wasn't actually. To accomplish the latter, you need a medium: that's smoke and mirrors. Otherwise, you can just warp the public mind.

We know the Global Hawk is equipt with the most advanced tele-communications technology ever, and we know that we can accomplish using tele-communications technology external to it many of the same effects we can cause inside our brain using chemistry. We can alter brainwave states with music, for example, as easily as we can get drunk. And the effect is the same: Ignorance is bliss. So is light hypnotic trance.

So what am I saying...? Am I saying that 9-11 was a mass hallucination? Am I saying there were no planes flown into the WTC twin towers? Am I saying the Global Hawks emitted a mind-control "ray-beam" that made us all think we saw something that wasn't actually happening? Why? Let ME ask YOU this then: WHERE ARE THE BODIES? Why did the planes AND the towers ALL vapourise into fine dust??

You don't know where those people are now.
And I don't know why they aren't here now.

But I do know that, the same morning Dick and Herb were flying sky-high on "Doomsday," there was a gold-heist going on in a tunnel below WTC5. And I can't help but wonder if the one thing might not have something to do with the other... but honestly, I'm not qualified to say what. I can jump, but only so high. I think I'll go back to sleep now. Since I'm so mind-washed. Oh, wait, sorry, what's that you said about a "ray-beam"? Did someone say "Woody" playing the Harp? Did we get on the NSA's nerves yet?

let's get down to brass tacks about this:

There were no "big" planes involved in the collapse of the NY WTC towers. We've all seen footage, and we're sick to death of it, with tonnes of buzzing helicopters everywhere.

Look at the footage that has been released: all of it that is from a high vantage point, with the exception of only the FOX affiliate news chopper (the so-called "fake nose" footage they call it in Sept. Clues), drifts. It lists to the right or the left like a camera on a track. In fact, that's one of the video-tricks they use in the "fake nose" Fox chopper footage - the background drifts the opposite way the foreground does.

While we are so used to seeing the footage we probably wouldn't think much of this, it's a pretty important feature. The drifting camera angle in every high-vantage network shot (rotating either clockwise or counter-clockwise around the WTC towers at the center) shows this same very slow, very smooth, exactly even horizontally and steady-rate drift. The natural implication is that these camera angles were coverage from the helicopters we see buzzing all around everywhere. However, this footage is clearly not shot on a hand-held unit. It is clearly shot from a turret mounted on the underside of the chopper.

So, if all the "news" (or at least, "live-feed" coverage) cameras were manufactured by the same company as the FOX News network antennae cam I mentioned earlier - "WESCAM" - and if this company is a DOD contractor, then this would imply complicity between the DOD, "WESCAM" and the news media, and that's pretty much the entire "shock 'n' awe" crew right there.

I feel like it's necessary to mention something about the CIA at this point, although IMO this should be perfectly obvious. The CIA is "over" the NSA. The CIA "out-sources" covert operations through front-businesses, usually for the purpose of public interface or money-laundering. So it is natural that it's offspring agency, the NSA, the "code-breakers," would do the same. So, that's what WESCAM is. An NSA front. Just like, since 9-11, the DOD has been a "front" for the CIA. You can't argue that the interests of our commander-in-chief aren't dictated to him directly from Langley.

Now, to return to the footage the helicopters shot of each other. What do we see? Well, it's obvious what we see. We see what are clearly helicopters flyng everywhere. Okay, that's obvious. That's clear. Now what about markings on them? What about what colour they are? What about who was flying those choppers, and, most importantly of all, what about the people, inside the choppers or not, who operated their cameras? Let's go through this step by step.

One of the choppers was a Russian film crew. It did a slow fly-by from the north headed south. It did not hover around at all. It flew straight by. Another one of these choppers was, of course, the FOX News affiliate chopper that shot the "fake-nose" footage. It was also approaching from the north, specifically east of the Russian chopper, and headed south. After the second "plane" struck, there is no more footage released from this hand-held, helicopter vantage. Some of the helicopters buzzing around that day were also PAPD, NYPD and NYFD. Only a little footage, to my knowledge as of this moment, has been released from only one of these choppers - a very brief and smoke-engulfed shot from just above tower 1 to demonstrate the difficulty of performing a rescue. So, we can definately say, and say with certainty, that we can account for MOST of the choppers in the area that morning. If we consider the WESCAM cam-mounted helicopters as "news" copters, then no one up there that morning should be left over unaccounted for to do something nefarious like, say, launch a rocket into the WTC tower.

But there's still some problems. There is a very big problem in that the WESCAM cam-mounted helicopters don't actually appear in any of the video shot by the hand-held FOX News affiliate chopper, in any still-pics shot from the Russian helicopter fly-by, in any of the video shot by low-vantage mobile videographers (either produced or eye-witness), nor, for that matter, do they appear in any footage outside of the footage shot by the WESCAM helicopters themselves. They show one another, but no one else shows them.

Now, I've already said I believe there were "cloaked" aircraft there that day. I believe there were "Global Hawk" UAV's (un-manned aerial vehicles) there, and that these were equipt with an optical camouflaging system...

[img]<http://vnexpress.net/Vietnam/Khoa-hoc/2003/02/3B9C4CFC/cloak1.jpg>[/img]

(such as the so-called "invisi-suit" developed by a private company in Japan in 2004 for retail clothing)

...that rendered them "all but invisible" to anyone on the ground. These, I still believe, are the so-called "Orbs" of 9-11, the shiny metallic, shape-shifting globules that are becoming common sights behind planes releasing "chem-trails." These are all, I believe, the Global Hawks being deployed to create a huge surveillance net over all airspace.

But there was another kind of "cloaked" aircraft on 9-11 than only the "Global Hawk." These are the WESCAM helicopters. So, what are we looking at? We're looking at two different kinds of "cloaked" aircraft: 1) fully-cloaked drone-planes (Global Hawks); 2) partially-cloaked black helicopters (Black Hawks). So, let's look a little closer at these WESCAM "black helicopters."

We've known about the "black helicopter" technology since before Waco, but if you need evidence you can start at the Waco commercial airport where, for weeks before the siege was official, "mysterious" black helicopters had been parked. They had no markings (to distinguish them as military) and were all black.

[img]http://www.public-action.com/SkyWriter/WacoMuseum/war/fig/w\_fig32.jpg[/img]
(here are some parked at Ruby Ridge, the standoff in which Randy Weaver's son's dog "attacked" a SWAT agent in their woods, causing the agent to shoot the dog. When her son ran home, the ATF shot Randy Weaver's wife in the face while she was nursing their newborn infant. This is not fiction.)

There were, at that time, basically two kinds. One was the bubble, presumably for reconnaissance. The other was the standard "Black Hawk" attack chopper popularised years later in the film "Black Hawk Down." It's basically an Apache attack helicopter, just unmarked and all black (like the Cobra one from the line of GI Joe toys but without the big sticker of a hissing snake on it).

Now, what I have to say next is probably going to be tough to swallow, but bear with me: the "black" helicopters were developed, along with all the other "black"-budget "stealth" aircraft, such as the "Blackbird" and the "B-1" stealth-bomber, at Area 51. Like everything that comes out of this modern Skunk-Works, "stealth" technology is "dual-use," dual-purpose" or "dual-function." That is military jargon for it having more than one application.

Specifically, what we should be looking at here are the Az/El monopulse RF MMIC radar-muffling antennae designed by url=[http://www.irconnect.com/noc/press/pages/news\_releases.html?d=31875]Northrop Grumman[/url] for the (now discontinued) url=[http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/RAH-66\_Comanche]RAH-66 Comanche Helicopter[/url] (wikilink). It's specific "dual-use" or "dual-function" involves mind control.

[img]http://www.aerospaceweb.org/aircraft/helicopter-m/rah66/rah66\_01.jpg[/img]
the Az/El monopulse RF MMIC radar-muffling antennae creates a transposable field of pulsed EM frequencies.

Now, the admitted, or intended, or original function of the "cloaking" antenna was to muffle rotor updraft soundwaves by creating an ion-field around the chopper of pulsed frequency scalar waves of electricity. It was, apparently, thought that pulsing EM-field wavelengths opposite the air-distorting sound-waves from the propeller could be used to counter-balance and nullify the noise drag from updraft in the rotors. The desired effect was to find a frequency of EM pulse-rate that would negate, or drone in and out with, the helicopter's rotary rotation rate. It's unknown by me by now whether or not this desired effect was ever achieved.

I know it was reported at first that the chopper pilots had difficulty using the new system. There were, apparently, very specific side-effects to sitting so close to two, inter-phased loud noises going "thup-thup-thup" opposite each other: psychotic hallucinations. This was blamed, early on, on the pulsed frequency's rhythmic alteration of the macular and intra-ocular pressure differentials. In other words: the loud "thup-thup-thup" noise changed the air-pressure outside the eyes so fast that it made the fluid interiors of the eyes unable to keep up, essentially causing them to slosh around, and, according to the military, that is what caused the visual hallucinations.

Immediately, the DOD seized on the conversion of the stealth technology chopper rotor muffler for "dual-purpose" use as a "soft-kill weapon" (like tasers) that were becoming the fad at the time within western domestic security forces. They tested "soft kill" weapons and "psych-war" strategies at, again, Waco, blaring cacophonous and distorted sounds mixed with subliminal suicide suggestions through loud speakers at the compound for days on end, as well as flashing a strobe light at irregular intervals every night for a week.

But here's where the paper-trail seems to run dry for the history of this particular type of antenna. It's known that VLF EMFs audibility can be localised to one specific person, and that these are the same VLF's comprising our own cumulative EM frequencies or "brain-waves." We have delta, theta, alpha, etc. And it is known that, IF the EM field generated around the helicopter by the "Tesla coil"-like (torus-shaped) antenna could be aimed and projected at a distance away from the chopper itself, then it could produce more than merely audible / sub-sonic (psychic) distortions.

To put it bluntly, BLACK HELICOPTER(S) + TESLA COIL(S) = CLOAKING, where cloaking is the same as mind-control when projected at a distance.

But there's a couple important points we shouldn't miss here: The WESCAM choppers were there to run interference with the media. They were only there to provide the "official story" (planes) simul-cast over-top of the actual events (explosions). We see the helicopters in ALL the "official" footage, but we only see the "UFO's" in raw footage. This represents conscientious delegation of task: the helicopters were semi-stealth; the Global Hawks were super-stealth. Simple. The UAVs kept us from seeing the actual events, while the black helicopters showed us the "official" version.

Say I wanted to know EXACTLY what TIME something VERY specific happened, such as the EXACT TIME the 2nd "plane" exploded. There is an approximately 3 second delay between the feed-time for CNN and that for FOX and between that for ABC and CBS. Now, correct me if I'm wrong, but I do not think this leaves enough time in which to cut and paste the plane graphic from the "live" FOX Affiliate's hand-held camera on the south-bound helicopter (the "fake nose" shot).

Thus, there are DIFFERENT "Exact" Times for any one event, each from the different news networks, and each delayed from the others by different intervals of up to three seconds. So first the 2nd "plane" explodes on CNN, then, three seconds later, on FOX, then, three seconds later, ABC, then, three seconds later, CBS. You can either take the WESCAM footage and synch it up by matching on action mise en scene, or you can play the multiple channels' different live-feed coverages synched to a separate clock to see the time-delay between one channel and another.

But I, in no way, endorse the idea that the graphics of planes that were "matched" during the first three second gap (between "live" action, as captured by the FOX affiliate chopper on hand-held shot, or the so-called "fake nose" shot, as well as the high vantage, stationary antenna, affiliate footage showing NO PLANE AT ALL, and the first network WESCAM shot on CNN) were generated in "real time." They are perfect computer composite simulations, 3-d model rendered, to account for pitch of "plane" decline relative to drift of image capturing WESCAM camera. In fact, they're "too perfect." There is one, all-black, blotchy, silhouette version. The rest show the plane in ultra-realistic visual clarity. If the matches to live footage were calculated during the first 3-second gap or not I won't speculate yet (although this would explain the "fake nose" footage), but the "plane" composites themselves were perfectly pre-rendered. This part is IMPORTANT.

The fact that the "plane" images were all pre-shot (or 3d cgi rendered) indicates the helicopters drift rates around the buildings would have to have been pre-synched to the "plane" images pitch of decline. So, either the planes were 3d cgi models that could be moved onscreen in real-time such that live footage of the 2nd tower exploding could be integrated simultaneously in front of and behind the super-imposed maquette of the "plane" image (essentially mixing a real-world backdrop with a controlled video image in real-time); or else the helicopters positioning relative exactly to one another would have to be network co-ordinated between a single relay source running them all on a pre-programmed flight path and this pre-programmed flight-path would have to be co-ordinated also to match the pitch of decline of the pre-recorded "plane" images with the drift of the helicopters.

Well, between these two options one leaves less to last-second chance and the other is safer from a computer-programmer's point-of-view. If the "plane" images were 3d cgi integrated with the background image only during that three second gap between the actual event and CNN's "live" feed, this would explain the ~24 frame long "black-screens" on the FOX and ABC footage. However, I do not think that an operation of such scope and magnitude would be so carefully pre-planned and, to a milli-second, orchestrated, only to let the "plane" images be wedded to their back-drop images of the twin towers on 9-11 as the towers themselves were exploding. Either way, there is still footage out there that fits in the gap of those ~24 frame "black-screens," and one of these is the affiliate, high-vantage, stationary-antenna shot that clearly shows NO PLANE. No, if the "fake nose" notion is viable, it is only so as an alternative "fall-back" explanation for the "nose-cone / missile" exiting WTC2 in the NBC street-level, stationary "live-feed" news SURVEILLANCE CAMERA footage.

So, we've got WESCAM street-views from surveillance cameras, sky-cams on antennae and turret-mounted under black helicopters. All the WESCAM sky-cams show one another, but they aren't there in any of the affiliate or amateur shots. Every single WESCAM footage shows the plane in high-res except one that shows it as a splotchy blob. There is only one affiliate shot (the "fake-nose") that seems to have been altered. All the rest are direct-to-network feeds.

I've long held that 9-11 was nothing but an "arms show." It was also a very complicated magickal act. The trick was to use technology in much the same way as the Sanhedrin had crucified Christ 2000 years ago (if you believe it). Symbolism was chosen carefully: the twin towers conjuring up the "Lightning Struck Tower" tarot trump, the "planes" the ominous Nostradamus quatrain X72. Then, all that remained was to drop the axe. The twin towers represent the Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. But they also represent the tower of Babel. All that remains is dust. 9-11 was as psychological as, perhaps even moreso than, it was physical. Considering as how it did not physically take place as we all "saw" and experienced, I'd say the entire event should be considered as between the material and the immaterial planes.

It was intended to be an important part of the myth that there is so little evidence and that it is so incredibly fake and circumstantial, even while the bodies of 90% of the "victims" of 9-11 have never been recovered, not so much as a single strand of hair. They claim in the 9-11 Commission Report that the wallet of Maoussoui was found outside the WTC. They claim a complete and unburned Arab head-band was found on the "crash" site of United 93. These pieces of "evidence" were unquestionably "planted" by the FBI and the 9-11 investigators. And yet, not one bone of more than one in a hundred of those who went "Missing" on 9-11 has been found.

So where did they all go? Where does anyone go when they die? Well that one even I don't know, but I'll tell you this right now: there are, now, two parallel realities diverging on 9-11-2001. In one, nothing happened, and the 2000+ people never "disappeared," there were never "explosions," and we never had a subsequent cover-up in the form of a "botched investigation" and a blitzkrieg of Ragnarok porportion. The ones we lost on 9-11 are still alive there. They exist in a reality over-top of ours, that over-laps ours invisibly, intangibly, which we cannot see, but which we can feel with our hearts and grasp with our minds. We are aware of this much better reality, and that's why we know something is very wrong with the one in which we live instead.

Now, where it gets spooky is looking at the "reverse-engineering" mentality of Area 51. It is as if they were using light-sabers for hammers because they didn't know they could be used as lasers. Then, suddenly and "autonomously" everyone discovers the laser-sword can be used to cut, and was never intended to be used as a hammer. Then, everyone metastasises and we all "spontaneously" realise that using a high-tech laser as merely a hammer is completely counter-intuitive to our own benefit, and so we might wonder at our own prior stupidity so much we create ne "myths" (Lies) to alienate ourselves from our true roots.

Dick Cheney had been orchestrating war-games (Operation Global Guardian was the phase being conducted on 9-11) for the better half of the entire year. The military was in overhaul. Out with the old (using it to test an attack against what's new) so that you can sell it to pay back for the new (thus supplying the enemy with arms inferior to requisite counter-measure) - the difference is just pocketed by bankers in Amsterdam and "forgotten." So, as far as Cheney is concerned, 9-11 was simply a run-away war-game that became real. They were practising "urban-warfare" by invading domestic targets (particularly poor black neighborhoods over-run by CIA-supplied crack) while Rumsfeld plead, a week before 9-11, for extreme cuts to military spending (code:: streamlining sale!). Troop movement stickers were on some street signs here and there as long as a decade ago. This is why "no jets were scrambled" on 9-11. The war-game excercise (Global Guardian) called for most of the airforce to be deployed near the north-western Canadian border or the Gulf of Mexico region (near NASA in FLA). They were simply "too far away. Thus, the military committed the blunder of the millennium and couldn't cover all it's bases." Or at least, so is the official story of the 9-11 Commission Report.

9-11 opened a rift between two parellel realities. In one of them, 9-11 never happened. In the other, the one we are currently, and unfortunately, living in, 9-11 did happen, and so, as a consequence, have followed the devastation of Afghanistan, the "endless war" in Iraq, neo-cons consolidating war-powers (intelligence agencies) into one unified core group (the Dept. of Homeland Security - look up Dick Cheney's non-gay daughter on wiki. She worked in the Dept. of HLS drafting a paper entitled "the Democratisation of Iran." ), which also has been given cart-blanche on domestic spying in exchange to the (now privatised) military the distraction from protection of citizens of torturing "terrorist enemies," etc. So, we call the reality in which we exist now, in which 9-11 did happen, "Hell," while refering to the Other Realm, in which 9-11 didn't happen, "Heaven." We want to live in "heaven," so, even though we accept the fact 9-11 is a lie, we simply ignore the consequences of it obviously believing that the "political market" will "balance itself."

But what we're battling over here is, no matter how "quaint" it is to pretend it is only over "Rights" and "Liberty" and the Constitution, actually VERY Highly Advanced TECHNOLOGY. It harnesses the mind's power to warp reality and to, ultimately, cause a complete rift to open between two parellel universes, such as happened on 9-11. Perhaps you think I'm "getting ahead of myself" in this assertion. Let me just get to the point then: The planetary alignment of 5/5/2000 -> 9/11/2001 here on earth -> the solar and galactic-core black-hole synchronisation of 12/21/2012. Dick Cheney, a Bohemian Grover, obviously knows a thing or two about astrology, I'd bet.

[img]<http://www.crystalinks.com/hieroplanes.jpg>[/img]

Where there's mind-control, there's time travel. The mind is the mechanism that controls time. When the EM-field of the mind warps, the first distortions to be experienced are temporal.

-Jon

Before I made that last post I'd taken copious notes on the WHO and WHY of 9-11. I'm going to write this based off those notes, so bear with me...

9-11:: WHY?

introduction.

Q proposed in the 9-11 Revisited thread that he believed there were "alot of different" individuals and "groups involved in" and responsible for "9/11." So, let's start there. We can develop from that idea an "octopus model" of participants specifically involved in the events on 9-11 and the subsequent cover-up of those specific events. Granted more people than only those those involved before, during and after the facts of 9-11 have directly benefitted from 9-11, so on the following "octopus model" diagram, I do not include such subsequent consolidations of agencies as the Dept. of "Homeland Security," local police agencies, private (domestic and abroad) security companies such as Blackwater, etc. etc. etc.

In any event, here's an "octopus model" of the conspirators of 9-11:

[img]<http://www.benpadiah.com/otherstuff/octopus.jpg>[/img]

Note bene: the "Octopus model" for a conspiracy combines the "Hydra" (many-headed) with the "Leviathan" (single-headed) myths of government, and resembles the delegation of authority between any two levels of the "Pyramid" model for same.

I. A. Approach:

If there were different, competing groups (including "terrorists," politicians, the media, etc.) then what we have to ask, in retrospect, is WHO benefitted MOST Since, and WHO benefitted MOST Immediately. The answers to these questions are obvious. WHO benefitted MOST Since are the neo-cons who support the export of urban-combat and domestic urban construction. WHO benefitted MOST Immediately was Larry Silverstein, who supports urban "renewal" (construction), and the media, who support advancement of domestic surveillance systems.

If those who benefitted first and those who've benefitted most since are the same people, such as in the case of 9-11, then we can safely say that group of people are "behind" the event, in this case that being 9-11. So, if we say that the WHO is the "neo-cons" then the TOP MOTIVE has to be theirs. Thus, if each group that participated was TOLD a different reason, and thus each group had a different goal, then ONLY the motive of the First Planners matters. Therefore, we should rule out the question of "WHY" for any smaller, separate groups beneath the "umbrella" group of the "neo-cons."

Therefore, to find out WHY they did it, we have to ask WHO are the "neo-cons"? They started out as a small, right-wing conservative boy's fraternity at Yale University, an "Ivy League" college, in the 1930's. We know they had family business ties to the German NAZI party before WWII. It is my speculation they were smuggled some LSD that was being tested by IG Farben at Auschwitz. The first generation of Yale "Bonesmen" went on to found the CIA, the first US international spy agency, and, with their first operation, "Project Paperclip," continued to work with German NAZI scientists. Through "front" businesses, the same CIA "Bonesmen" soon became the most wealthy elite alive ever, and founded such groups as the Bildebergers and the Bohemian Grove camp where they could interface with other wealthy elites to plan a globalist coup de tat of the governments of all developed nations via the IMF, WTO and world bank.

Secondly, we have to ask HOW have the "neo-cons" benefitted from 9-11? They've benefitted in three main ways: 1) consolidation of the value of money from solid material wealth into cashless credit; that is, they have shifted the goal of everyone's work to be something they already possessed. 2) consolidation of technological R&D into spy-ware and non-lethal weapons, thus social-control systems; that is, they have put themselves "behind" the cameras that spy on us. A good example of how they've "tilted" the "flat-earth" model of power in their favour is by supplying local police agencies with better training and equipment than they have allowed for the foreign-deployed military. This economic gap between small, local police agencies and the middle-class military has increased the gap between the shrinking number of rich and the growing number of poor. They then propose as the solution to this economic disparity the same mechanism responsible for its cause in the first place: the privatisation of the military, the internationalisation of private industry, and the ownership by a political elite of these private industries. 3) MOST IMPORTANTLY: the "neo-cons" have benefitted by the consolidation of human psychology into a focal-point of an oppression-based paradigm. Thus, the "War Against Terror" implies we must feel FEAR. In these ways, by consolidating first wealth on the global currency futures market, second technology in enforcement of their policies, and third the public attention on a feeling of fear and hopelessness, the "neo-cons" have benefitted from 9-11.

So, to understand their motives, we have to put our minds into the set of the "neo-cons," and try to think what they thought that motivated them to perpetrate 9-11. To do that we have to look at evolution.

II. Evolution.

To the "common mind," evolution means survival. Firstly, survival of the individual, which means allowing them to murder someone else if it was necessary. Second, survival of the species, which means the necessity of gender-breeding. This is the "popular view" of evolution. Unfortunately, this view is TOTALLY WRONG.

Technically speaking, evolution occurs by genetic mutations causing new adaptability to environmental changes. In short, evolution IS mutation.

A. survivalist "realism" and mutant "idealism"

Now, mutation, that is, evolution, can occur either for an entire species at once, or it can occur first for a small group that then grows larger within a mass population. The second model of evolution - mutation by an increasing group within a population, we can see as being more common a belief, and we can call the belief in this model "survivalist realism," or the belief in "survival of the fittest."

"Realists" recognise that it is necessary to lose the slower, sick or old to "thin the herd" to conserve resources only to the survivors. Thus, it is also "realism" to believe that we need to be responsible for our own "population control" by murdering those whose mutations differ from our own in order to perpetuate the spread of only our own mutation. The result of murder, an act committed on a mass scale exclusively by humanity, are war, famine, plague and disaster, ie. the "four horsemen."

"Realists" of the sort that thus rationalise murder as necessary to survival comprise the ranks of a group belonging to neither the most evolved, or rather, most adaptively mutated, few, NOR to the lesser evolved gross populace. This group causes what we experience as our gradual "averaging out" as a species, where we become more and more culturally homogenized into a single "middle"

group between non-existent and imaginary polarising extremes. We come to believe it is necessary for the survival of our species that the majority of the population be controlled unto death by the "four horsemen," and that the privileged elite should suffer the fate of being "dumbed down" into mediocrity.

Thus, the view that "Realists" who rationalise murder preach, and that, they assure us, most of us also accept, results in neither the majority of unevolved troglodites NOR the evolved elite to benefit. By creating the perceived necessity for a "middle-class," the 2nd-place "runners-up" in the evolutionary mutation race replace the most advanced intelligentsia, making the rightful philosopher-kings into their serfs.

The equation that dictates "Realism" to the "survivalist" is that the upper 1% or most evolved are fewer than more competitive 2nd place "runners up" who are, in turn, fewer than the unevolved 99% of the rest of the species. Because "survivalist Realism" is between the top 1% and the lower 99%, its dictum is "as above, so below." This group believes, and fiercely, EITHER "kill 'em all" because their Ideal would be Eden, where only one man and one woman are left alive, OR "save us all" because to them the ideal would be Atlantis, either the separation of churches from democratic states or the NWO combination of both into one.

However, the first model for evolution, that being mutation by the entire species at once, is obviously not as popularly held to be the observable case, and so those few who subscribe to it are called "Philosophical Idealists," and said to comprise the upper 1% of only the most highly evolved, while the "survivalists" and "realists" are said to make up the remaining 99%. Whether or not this is the case, the message of this first model group, called "philosophical idealists," is that evolution occurs to an entire species at the same time. This process could be called "metastasis," "crystallisation," "metamorphosis," "super-saturation," etc. and implies that we exist prior to this in a state of "neotony," a "chrysalis," "womb" or "Matrix" in the sense of the maternal, material cortex or nexus of a larger, unimaginable exomorph.

Thus, the view that "Idealists" preach, and which, we are assured by those who oppose "idealists," is the view ONLY of the few elite who are in control of us all, ie. themselves, can be summed up in the equation:  $1=0$ , where the previous GCF (greatest common factor) becomes the new LCD (lowest common denominator). While the "realist" between the "idealism" of the few and the "survivalism" of the many can see ONLY EITHER above OR below them, the "philosophical idealist" can look at themselves as either above everyone else, below everyone else, or equal to everyone else. If a "philosophical idealist" looks up or down at everyone else, they see themselves as like either "analog" or "digital" type thinkers. But if a "philosophical idealist" looks at themselves as equal with everyone else, they make use of both "analog" AND "digital" type thinking. Instead of the "either/or" of BINARY, the "philosophical idealist" can apprehend the "both/and" of TRINARY. This, itself, is the very evolutionary leap we believe will possibly occur for the entire species at once.

B. for none or all

So, if "survivalism," that is, the notion that "survival of the fittest" means "might makes right," is believed to be considered "Realism" by the majority and even "Idealism" by the elite few, then real evolution is considered "philosophical idealism" by only an elite within the elite, and, since any of them to "grow a conscience" that go public are swiftly killed off, it is preached that mutation is ubiquitously non-existent. The TRINARY notion of BOTH analog AND digital is "believed" to be held by none. However, the opposite is true, and so those who preach this "belief" are "holding a beach-ball under-water" as they say.

However, the closer mutation becomes to being suppressed in 100% of the people, 100% of the time, the closer the entire species comes to "spontaneous" evolution of the whole population. It is the POTENTIAL for mutation that exists in 100% of us that IS the mutation itself.

So, the saying "every man and every woman is a star" is wrong. It should be "a baby universe" because each of us has the same mutation of potential to exist entirely in our own individual mind. Each of our minds is greater than the shared reality of our universe by the distance of our capacity for imagination. Each of our minds is its own "baby universe."

C. Conclusion

The "old" model of evolution, the one the few 2nd runner's up in the race to mutate preach we must all believe, that is, "survivalism," and the "new" model of evolution, the one that all of us actually already hold because it is factually evident, that is, "mutation," do not exist in isolation of each other. It is NOT "Either" Evolution "Or" Survival. However what we know to be true and what is presented and appears to be true by others is not yet the same. So we call "idealism" the idea that mutation of each individual simultaneously is the evolution of the entire species, and thus our entire reality, and we call "realism" the notions of necessary murder and gender-breeding.

III. the Matrix.

"What is the Matrix? Control." - Morpheus.

It's a safe assumption these days that the vast majority of other people than us as individuals aren't even on the same "plane" or living in the same reality as us. This is true. Most people's minds remain trapped in a world before 9-11, wherein they are in complete denial that 9-11 ever did happen, and, if cornered about it, will admit they believe it is nothing that can't be undone; both the tragedy of the event itself and that of its continuing consequences can simply be reversed. This is not true. As a whole, we believe the majority suffer from major delusions about 9-11. However, as individuals, we know the truth about it and accept reality as it is afterwards.

"Where were you on 9-11?" This question allows and helps us to define how we view the post 9-11 world. For example, someone who was at "Ground Zero" would view the event quite differently from someone living far away and watching it on tv. We can break the mindsets of our species apart into four groups, based on our locations at the time and our movements since.

1) if we think of ourselves as a Victim of 9-11, we exist in a closed-off mindset. The only true victims are those who were killed on 9-11 and those who have died in the time since then due to it. So, we can say these Victims are Angels, and that they "live on" in "Heaven," a "better place" or "higher plane."

2) if we think of ourselves as a Survivor of 9-11, then we believe we were victims but cannot deny the difference between them and us as benefitting us. Thus, this group are the 2nd place "runners up" in the evolutionary race to mutate. The more they associate themselves with the victims, the more good they do, and the more they make themselves out to be a hero the more evil they are.

3) if we think of ourselves as a Hero since 9-11, we are a "philosophical idealist" about evolution. We believe accepting "survivalism" is the lesser evil than fighting it and destroying it, ourselves and everything else. We believe in mutation as an ideal that can be attained only by each individual, and that survival is the realm of only those who do not mutate.

4) if we think of ourselves as a Traitor since 9-11, we are only being a "Realist" about "survivalism." We put survival above evolution because we believe we must, yet we are like the "fallen angels," the Annunaki who bred Nefilim.

These four roles can be graphed as variables on a chart called a "Matrix."

1) Victims (V) can be ruled out as applicable exclusively to the dead. Thus X=Unknown.

2) Survivors (S) = good AND evil

3) Heroes (H) = only good

4) Traitors (T) = only evil

So we see the equation, or "transform" for this "Matrix" yields:

[ S=1% < H=0% < T=99% ]

We can see, additionally, that H "or" T is Binary, and S makes Trinary.

IV. Overall Conclusion

On 5/5/2000 the "neo-cons," who believed it would be necessary to murder a lot of people for the survival of only their own small group, planned 9-11-2001 in order to "jump-start" the survival of only a few mutants (as was the case prior to 2000) into the evolution of everyone all at once (as is believed will follow 12/21/2012). They have benefitted materially and psychologically as ushering out the "old" and in the "new" Age, in which Mutation is seen as the binary line between Fear -> War and Truth -> Love. However none of this matters.

The only thing that matters is that 9-11 was a CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY, when 3000+ were Mass-Murdered. Every day since 9-11 has seen the continuation of our psychological oppression (Psy-Op). There are now over 2 Million Dead in Iraq. This is a continuation of 9-11, as it is an ongoing perpetuation of CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY. The people behind 9-11 ARE "Terrorists," MOST DEFINATELY. They just don't call themselves "Al-Qeida." They call themselves the "neo-cons." Punish the WHO regardless of WHY. WHY they did it doesn't make a GODDAMN bit of difference to the fact that what they did was murder innocents. Kill them.

Condaleeza Rice, seen "in bunker" with Cheney prior to Pentagon strike, was "National Security Adviser" on 9-11

Paul Wolfowitz "Deputy Secretary of War" on 9-11, under Donald Rumsfeld "US Secretary of Defense."

"The Vulcans" were Bush's pre-2000 team of "foreign policy advisors" headed by Rice and Wolfowitz. All received high posts after 2000.

Bush was shown a hand-written sign off-camera reading "Don't say anything yet," by a press secretary Ari Fleischer.

What the tapes indicate: There was no command to shoot down UA 93 before it crashed. Cheney was not notified about the possible hijacking of this flight until 10:02, only one minute before it crashed, and the shoot-down authorization was not given by him until many minutes after UA had crashed.

Rumsfeld testifies to the congressional committee investigating 9-11 that he had been told the order had been given that the decision to shoot down "hijacked airliners" rested with the pilots of scrambled fighters (in contradiction to the committee's ultimate conclusions that "no fighters were scrambled" )::

GORELICK: May I ask one more question, Mr. Chairman? We can't go into the content of the PDDs and the SEIBs here. And I can't even characterize them in order to ask you the next question that I would ask. So let me ask you this: Was it your understanding that the NORAD pilots who were circling over Washington D.C. that morning had indeed received a shoot-down order?

RUMSFELD: When I arrived in the command center, one of the first things I heard, and I was with you, was that the order had been given and that the pilots -- correction, not the pilots necessarily, but the command had been given the instructions that their pilots could, in fact, use their weapons to shoot down a commercial airliners filled with our people in the event that the aircraft appeared to be behaving in a threatening way and an unresponsive way.

Now, then.

Most of the other researchers into the complicity between the neo-cons at this point who have managed (how I know not) to garner public credibility in spite of obvious inaccuracies in their own theories and in spite of dire media black-out of the topic (most news articles I could find online still from 2001 were pay-per-view or subscription only) fall into two basic camps.

One is called, and I'm not making this up, the LIHOP camp, and the other the MIHOP camp. LIHOP stands for "Let it happen on purpose." This implies there were terrorist hijackers, and thus justifies the neo-con stance of "endless war" against "radical Islam." The other acronym, MIHOP, stands for "Made it happen on purpose." Would there be any way for them to have "made it happen" OTHER than "On Purpose"? The neo-con bias in the mass-media, even wikipedia, is obvious.

Now, I'm not going to cast any stones at the LIHOP camp, because no one's in it. There's simply NO ONE who BELIEVES that "the government" was NOT "behind 9-11." Shit, that was the first thought I had that day. No one in their right mind blamed "radical Islam" that day. That's who we were TOLD to blame. And who told us that? "The Government." Case closed.

So, I'm ONLY going to focus on the MIHOP argument here. I'm going to go slowly, because I'm still trying to work it all out in my own mind too. Hopefully we can put our heads together and figure out how they did it.

COG WAR GAMES.

The first and most important point is "Continuity of Government." This is the "shadow government" people talk about, the "black-op" spies and the "black-budget" engineers of Area 51. In the same way as there is "succession of powers" in our Democratic Republic, such that the Vice Pres becomes the Pres pro temp if the Pres dies in office, and such that it goes all the way down the line to appointing the Senate "whip" (Majority leader) as commander-in-chief of the armed forces in a time of crisis, that's why COG was established, and that's essentially how it works. While "succession of power" works down the levels of a hierarchy, COG ensures redundancy of office at each of those levels.

COG provides "back-ups" for all the "necessary" operating systems of the government. It provides alternative installations for the command functionality of the military in full, at least. There's no secret underground military installation since 1992 that offers redundancy of office to the Congress of elected officials.

Now, some of you may remember that I've talked about COG before. Well, it's time for an update. On 9-11, 2001, the COG network of bases were on full alert. But not because of the "hijacked"

"planes." They were running national security training exercises on a massive scale. As part of Operation "Global Guardian," described only as an "annual exercise" in the official literature, "Vigilant Guardian" was the drill of the day, and involved running tests on NORAD and FAA security-integrations systems. The test involved seeing what would happen if they shut the systems off.

UNTIL 10:39 AM :: RUMSFELD AT PENTAGON

On the day of 9-11, the Pentagon was running "WAR GAMES" exercises across the country. In Operation "Northern Vigilance," we are told, most of the air-force was on deployment in Alaska and Canada.

However even according to Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld's testimony before the Congressional Committee appointed to investigate 9-11, some fighter jets were scrambled on 9-11. This is actually NOT what is reported in the final 9-11 Investigation Committee's Report. In the 9-11 Commission Report, it was stated that there were NO fighter jets scrambled on 9-11 until AFTER the Pentagon was hit. The reason given by neo-con apologists for this discrepancy: it takes twelve minutes to get fighters airborne. No "go-code" to scramble was issued until the aircraft was less than 7 miles out from its target, the Pentagon. Here is a portion of Rumsfeld's testimony before the 9-11 Committee:

GORELICK: May I ask one more question, Mr. Chairman? We can't go into the content of the PDDs and the SEIBs here. And I can't even characterize them in order to ask you the next question that I would ask. So let me ask you this: Was it your understanding that the NORAD pilots who were circling over Washington D.C. that morning had indeed received a shoot-down order?

RUMSFELD: When I arrived in the command center, one of the first things I heard, and I was with you, was that the order had been given and that the pilots -- correction, not the pilots necessarily, but the command had been given the instructions that their pilots could, in fact, use their weapons to shoot down a commercial airliners filled with our people in the event that the aircraft appeared to be behaving in a threatening way and an unresponsive way.[/quote]

-source: <http://globalresearch.ca/articles/COM403B.html>

So, according to Rumsfeld, the order stood with the fighter jet pilots to shoot down the hostile aircraft. However, the order to scramble jets in the first place was not given until the aircraft was less than 7 miles away. So, if US Secretary of Defense, Donald Rumsfeld, was left out of the loop of who was giving the orders, then who was it that delayed the order to scramble the jets in the first place? Assuming Commander In Chief of the US military, President George W. Bush, did, as he claims, give the command to shoot down hostile planes to his National Security Advisor, Condaleeza Rice, in a phone conference BEFORE entering Booker elementary school (which, he should admit, was probably after the Pet Goat story and Andy Card's second warning, not before); and assuming that there even WERE jet fighters remaining at nearby airforce bases (which is more than the official Report itself will admit); assuming there were fighters that COULD HAVE BEEN scrambled on 9-11, and ASSUMING Bush GAVE the Order to Shoot IN TIME, then we have to ask ourselves, whose command or protocol was it that prevented ANY of the 4 "hijacked" "planes" on 9-11 having been shot down?

First let me deal with a myth or two. UNITED 93 COULD HAVE BEEN SHOT DOWN. This is true, it very well could have been. This would even explain why the "jet fuel" of the "planes" that felled the WTC towers could burn at temperatures in excess of 3000 degrees for 48 minutes, while there were NO FIRES at all reported on the crash site of United 93. Perhaps a missile fired from a scrambled fighter jet exploded United 93 in the air and this burned off all its jet fuel as well as obliterating it into dust. Possible. Unlikely, but worth considering.

So, if we assume that the series of events proceeded thus:

- 1) WTC 1 & 2 are struck
- 2) Bush orders shoot down
- 3) planes deployed and Pentagon struck
- 4) United 93 strikes down

then we can account for the event that planes were deployed too late to save WTC 1 & 2 as merely the same Government Incompetance that dictated no jets could be scrambled to fire on the incoming aircraft until it was less than 7 miles out from the Pentagon. But was it ONLY "Government Incompetance"? Let's delve deeper.

UNTIL 10:39 AM :: CHENEY AT WHITE-HOUSE

According to Transportation Secretary Norman Mineta, questioned by Lee Hamilton, Vice Chairman of the 9-11 Commission about the "shoot-down / stand-down" order, or "Go-code," he was not at the Presidential Emergency Operating Centre at the time when the order was given, via Condaleeza Rice, by the President to shoot down hostile aircraft, however (and this is according to his testimony which can be viewed as video footage online here: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=fTdAkhd6Dcw> ) Vice President Dick Cheney was notified of the approach of the aircraft when it was still 50 miles out from the Pentagon. The "page" who notified him even asked the Vice President "does the order still stand?" Finally, at ten miles out, the Vice President "whipped his head around and said, 'of course the order still stands, have you heard anything to the contrary?'"

In short, the "shoot-down" order given by Bush while at Booker to Condaleeza Rice in the "bunker" in DC was only later relayed to Rumsfeld. Rice received the order, reported it to Cheney, and Cheney then suppressed the order for a considerable amount of time, during which the Pentagon was, apparently, struck by the hostile aircraft. Following this, it is possible that the order was given and jet fighters were scrambled (as reported being the case from both Langley base in Virginia AND Otis base in Massacusettes), and at that point it can be argued whether or not United 93 was shot down by one of the jet fighters.

What gave Dick Cheney the idea that it was legal to sit on the order to shoot down an aircraft that, it is believed, subsequently crashed into the Pentagon, where Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld himself was that morning? Is this evidence of Cheney attempting to assassinate Rumsfeld? Well, yes and no. Yes, it could be used as such. No, that was not the lone intention. On May 8, 2001, Rumsfeld and Cheney (old cronies from the Nixon administration), began a subtle transfer of power over the military into the direct hands of the executive office. Confer source article: <http://www.washingtonpost.com/ac2/wp-dyn/A64420-2001May8> for more info. This article actually mentions use of "WMDs" in war-games AND the future Dept. of "Homeland" Security BY NAME!

Under then-director Joe Allbaugh, a new dept. of FEMA was created. FEMA, the "federal emergency mangement agency," is something like a national insurance agency. They are only needed part of the time, but they have to function all of the time. In short, it's a money-pit. But the new dept. offered spontaneous hope for the doddering infra-structure reinforcement agency on 9-11. The new office, the "ONP" (Office of National Preparedness) was established specifically to counter the threat of terrorism, and it was to be run specifically by Dick Cheney. The dept. was meant to be, for FEMA, what the FBI's NDP (National Domestic Preparedness) Office had been previously - a way for the agency to interface with local police, rescue and communications departments. So, why would FEMA be put in charge in place of the FBI over a "public interface" dept. for the reason of combatting "terrorism"?

Unlike the FBI NDP, the FEMA ONP had the ability to mobilise United States military personnel within their own national borders. And this was the dept. that Dick Cheney was using to coordinate the "annual exercise" Global Guardian, and, specifically, "Vigilant Guardian," simulating crashing planes into buildings, on 9-11. So, the Vice President of the United States believed he, himself, and not without "technically" legal justification, was the Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces of the United States on 9-11. This is probably the best argument of apology for Cheney's "9-11: Why?" blunder.

If the "incoming aircraft" reported on NORAD radar (but noticeably absent from FAA radars from 30 miles out of DC) was not what caused the explosion at the Pentagon, then A) what was on the NORAD radar? and B) what caused the Pentagon explosion?

Let's back way up for a second to what I'd mentioned about COG. The COG redundant location for Air Force One is the E-4 "Doomsday" plane. Its official code-name is "Night Watch." (Here is a wiki article about it: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/National\_Airborne\_Operations\_Center ). Now, this plane was filmed by CNN flying over the White House protected air space on the morning of 9-11 around the EXACT SAME TIME as the Pentagon was struck.

The knee-jerk reaction is that the E-4 "Doomsday" Night Watch WAS the plane that crashed into the Pentagon. But we do not need a plane to have impacted the Pentagon on 9-11 to account for the E-4 plane being there. It is possible that it was the E-4 en route to DC that appeared on the NORAD radar (but disappeared from the FAA radar) that was the same "incoming" unidentified aircraft that Cheney belated the order to shoot down. However, whether this plane was or was not the plane NORAD radar read and whether this plane was or was not actually the same aircraft Cheney ordered to stand down from are both separate issues. So is the explosion at the Pentagon. Here, look:

A) the "plane" on NORAD radar (but not on FAA radar)

B) the incoming aircraft that Cheney stood down the order to shoot

C) the explosion at the Pentagon.

These three can all be explained in one of two ways, or else each can be explained on its own. These explanations are:

1) there was only ONE "PLANE," the hijacked commercial airliner, and it was crashed into the Pentagon. This is the official story.

2) the ONE "PLANE" was actually the E-4 Night-Watch, and it launched a missile into the Pentagon. This might be the fall-back story.

3) there was NO PLANE involved in the Pentagon crash.

A) the NORAD (no FAA) radar image may have been of a missile or of the E-4.

B) the aircraft Cheney stood down the shoot order for may have been a missile or the E-4.

C) the explosion at the Pentagon may have been a missile or on-site explosives.

So, let's sort this out. Of all these possible options which can we rule out? We can question the official story for several reasons, mainly because it may be a cover story by the criminals themselves. We can rule out the E-4 shooting a missile at the Pentagon because it does not have missiles. Also, if it was not the E-4 or the unidentified craft on NORAD radar that deployed the missile (ie. if it was the missile itself that NORAD radar read and which Cheney stood down the order to shoot down), then it must have been fired from more than fifty miles away to the south west. We can pretty much safely rule this option out too. So what do we have left?

It is the MOST LIKELY scenario that the explosion at the Pentagon was caused by on-site explosives and that the E-4 was the plane on NORAD (not FAA) radar which Cheney ordered not shot down. So we can see how, according to "No Planes Truth" (NPT), the presence of the E-4 and the explosion at the Pentagon can both be accounted for. However, were these separate incidents or not? Did the explosion at the Pentagon occur at the EXACT SAME TIME as the E-4 flew overhead by coincidence?

10:39 AM :: NMCC AT PENTAGON

First, let's look at something anomolous about the disappearance of Flight 77. There was a "ghost" United 93 reported parked at a commerical airport near a space leased to NASA seen later that day. However, within the hour a "ghost" plane of Flight 77, that alledgedly "crashed" into the Pentagon, was seen on NORAD radars hundreds of miles northwest of DC. Now, the sight of a "ghost" United 93 on the ground near a NASA facility is actually LESS surprising than the "ghost" Flight 77 on NORAD radar, because by the time the "ghost" Flight 77 appeared on NORAD radar all commerical flights had been grounded. The "ghost" Flight 77 was reported heading toward Johnston, Pennsylvania at 10:06. At around 10:30, Patrick Madigan, a Penn State cop, after arriving on the scene of the United 93 "crash" site, sees what he describes as, "a jetliner circling the crash site very low." This jet-liner was believed at the time to be carrying United Airlines Executives.

Now, a funny thing suddenly happens at 10:32. Vice President Cheney phones President Bush and tells him that Air Force One may be a target, specifically stating a time-frame of 40-90 minutes before a protective fighter force could be assembled as an escort for the President's plane. The result was that the President's plane, officially titled Air Force One, was rerouted an extra distance of 800 miles to Barksdale AFB near Shreveport, LA, where the President then remains the better part of the afternoon, until 1 PM. All of this is specifically, according to Cheney, at the behest of himself and Condaleeza Rice. The president's next destination after leaving Barksdale AFB at 1:30 in the afternoon of 9-11 was decided between 12:58 and 1:25 PM on a direct phone-line between President Bush and Vice President Cheney.

So, what have we here? Two separate phone-calls, the first from Cheney lasting between 10:32 (confirmed by witnesses to the President), until ending at 10:39 (confirmed on Cheney's end when he turns to address Rumsfeld). This call connected the President of the US on Air Force One and Dick Cheney at the NMCC, "National Mission Control Center," (which, by this time, had managed to find its way over to the Pentagon, apparently, instead of, half an hour earlier, Rumsfeld arriving at the White House "bunker"). According to the record, Cheney immediately notified Rumsfeld at that time that there were scrambled fighter jets, and that the pilots of those jets had been given the "shoot down" order. Cheney added, "That is correct. And it's my understanding they've already taken a couple of aircraft out."

So, to sum up, between 9:37 when the south-wall explodes, and 10:39, by which time Rumsfeld re-appears at the NMCC to find him there, Cheney has transported his "base of operations" from the White House "bunker" to the Pentagon.

Now, we know, from the "official" tapes released by NORAD, that the Order to shoot down planes that had been given by Bush to Rice, from Booker to the "bunker," was not passed along to the pilots themselves until after United 93 had already "crashed." That's the official explanation of the delay during which it is obvious that Cheney intercepted and stood-down the "shoot to kill" order. But United 93 "crashed" at 10:03, which means Cheney "stood down" the "shoot down" order not only from when it was received by Condaleeza Rice until 9:37, when the Pentagon is hit, but for an additional 62 minutes even after that, until 10:39, when Rumsfeld re-enters the picture.

So, let's look at a specific time-line::

9:16AM:: at the latest, this is when Bush's "shoot down" order is relayed to Condaleeza Rice, after the pet-goat and Andy Card's second warning.

9:37:: "Flight 77" strikes Pentagon. This makes the Minimum difference between the "shoot down" order being given by Bush and Cheney's order for the deployment of fighter jets TWENTY-ONE MINUTES.

10:03:: "Flight 93" crashes in Pennsylvania. Subsequent to this time the pilots themselves receive the "shoot down" order, given by the President himself FORTY-SEVEN MINUTES earlier.

10:06:: "ghost" Flight 77 reported headed toward Johnston, Pennsylvania.

~10:30:: Penn State PD Patrick Madigan witnesses "strange incident" of circling low jet-liner.

10:32:: Cheney telephones Bush, orders him to ground Air Force One.

10:39:: Rumsfeld enters the NMCC at the Pentagon. Cheney informs him multiple planes "shot down." This represents the Maximum difference in time between when the Pres. GAVE the "shoot down" order (@ 9:16 at the LATEST) and when the pilots received the order, for a grand total of EIGHTY-THREE MINUTES, or 1 hour and 23 minutes.

AFTER 10:39 AM :: COG WARGAMES BLOW-BACK

The second phone conversation between President Bush and Vice President Cheney begins at 12:58 and purportedly lasts until 1:25, however between these two calls, Richard Clarke, in the White House Situation Room at around 12:30, is told to go down-stairs to the Presidential Emergency Operations Centre (PEOC). There, Cheney complains by way of tele-conference call that "the communications in this place are terrible," explaining that his calls to President Bush "keep getting broken off." Apparently, others on the open-line of the conference call at this time included Condaleeza Rice, political advisor Mary Matalin, Cheney's aid I. Lewis "Scooter" Libby, and, among a few others, the Vice President's wife, Lynn Cheney.

While Cheney is apparently trying to "beep in" on W., the President himself is making a short speech to a small assembled press corps at Barksdale. In this brief speech, Bush states, "Freedom itself was attacked this morning by a faceless coward. And freedom will be defended." Bush is on the line with Rumsfeld from 1:02, who we know was by that time is with Cheney. At 1:05, Bush takes a moment to make some personal calls when US-STRATCOM apparently relays a message to him about a "high-speed object" seen over the President's "ranch" near Crawford, Texas. Then there is a gap in the timeline of, literally, about a half an hour. By 1:30, Bush is back in Air Force One for his second flight of the day, this time toward Offutt Air Force Base Nebraska and the offices of US-STRATCOM itself. And now a word about US-STRATCOM from wiki:

[quote]

USSTRATCOM controls the nuclear weapons assets of the United States military. It is also a globally focused command and a global integrator charged with the missions of Space Operations; Information Operations; Integrated Missile Defense; Global Command and Control; Intelligence, Surveillance and Reconnaissance; Global Strike; Strategic Deterrence; and Combating Weapons of Mass Destruction.

[/quote]

-source: <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/USSTRATCOM>

At that time (they have since been absorbed into United States Space Command in 2002), US-STRATCOM's role was the operation of the E-6 Mercury "Airborne Command Post" (codenamed: Looking Glass) that was the COG redundancy for NORAD's (much touted) Cheyenne Mountain facility. US-STRATCOM was where Admiral Richard Mies, commander in chief of STRATCOM was coordinating the three E-4B "Doomsday" planes in the air on 9-11 as part of Operation Global Guardian. Mies was reportedly having breakfast that morning with the Federal Advisory Committee's chairman, retired Lt. Gen. Brent Snowcroft, and multi-billionaire Warren Buffett as part of a charity fundraiser that was to be held later in the day.

Meanwhile, it would be easy for Cheney to delegate his authority at that point because, by 1:30 PM in the afternoon of 9-11, 2001, Cheney himself was at "url=[http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Site\_R]Site R[/url]" ("R" for "Raven" Rock, Pennsylvania) (wikilink). Why Pennsylvania? Because that's where he had flown between 10:39 and 12:58, when he was on the conference call to Richard Clark in the PEOC. He flew there in the E-4 "Doomsday Nightwatch" plane, with Condaleeza Rice, Donald Rumsfeld and "Scooter" Libby in tow and his wife on the phone. And why Site R? Because that was the COG back-up for the Pentagon and DOD, housing the Emergency Operations Centers for the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines. From Site R, Cheney placed himself in charge over the entire Armed Services of the United States of America.

We cannot say with absolute certainty that Cheney was at Site R by 12:58, when the second phone-call to Bush begins. We can, however, say with some degree of certainty that, if Cheney had left DC between 10:39 and 12:58, he would probably have been back on the ground before 1:30 PM, when Air Force One gets airborne to fly the President to US-STRATCOM. Ultimately, whether Cheney's location was Site R, or whether it was any of the other underground military installations for COG, is irrelevant, because by ~ 12:30 PM he has physically disappeared and his whereabouts are unaccounted for from then on. Whether Cheney was at Site R, or at any other base, he was most likely there by no later than ~ 1:30 PM, when the phone call between President George W. Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney ends and Air Force One takes off carrying the President to US-STRATCOM HQ in Nebraska.

The real question, therefore, isn't where was Dick Cheney by 1:30 PM. Nor is the question why did Cheney send Bush to US-STRATCOM then. The real question is, specifically, who was in the E-4 that overflew the Pentagon explosion; who was in the E-4 that overflew the "crash" site of United 93; and who was most probably at Site R in Pennsylvania BEFORE 1:30 PM on 9-11, 2001?

10:39 :: ULTIMATE CONSEQUENCES

The point is, and this should be considered extremely important: Dick Cheney is responsible for the explosion at the Pentagon as having been able to prevent it had he relayed the order to do so. This is called complicity, such as in the case of someone who, by their passive observation, allows a crime to be committed which it would have been within their power to prevent. It does not directly imply malice aforethought, however, let's look at this further.

We now know that Larry Silverstein has admitted to "pulling" Building 7. We also now know that Cheney "stood down" the order to scramble fighter jets beforehand until after the Pentagon had been hit. So, these are two of the people responsible for and who have benefitted from 9-11. In as much as Larry Silverstein was directly responsible for the collapse of WTC towers 1 and 2 (by having installed explosives in them before 9-11, as would have been necessary for him to have "pulled" Building 7), then so Dick Cheney was responsible for the explosion at the Pentagon by being able to have prevented it and choosing instead to allow it to happen.

But, aside from the evidence of their both having benefitted and both having been responsible, can we directly tie the one event to the other? Consider this, in particular, in the absence of planes. If the explosion at the Pentagon and the initial explosions at the WTC towers were not caused by planes, can we still say that Silverstein and Cheney can be held accountable for them? And, more importantly, can we tie one event to the other without planes, and prove that Silverstein and Cheney acted in collusion with one another on 9-11?

Obviously, if there were no hijacked airliners crashed into them at all, and the felling of the WTC towers was accomplished exclusively by the detonation of explosives inside the buildings themselves, then Larry Silverstein's guilt for having planted these explosives would be even greater than if the "jet fuel" of the "planes" ignited the explosives he would have to have had planted prior to 9-11. But there aren't degrees of guilt. There's only guilty or not, and insofar as Silverstein has admitted implicitly that Building 7 was "pulled" by prior placed explosives, then his guilt for those killed in the identical felling of WTC towers 1 & 2 is clear.

But what about Cheney? We know he has benefitted in the aftermath of 9-11, and that his actions clearly indicate his involvement in the crimes of that day. It was even Kellogg, Brown and Root (KBR), the construction firm arm of Halliburton, Dick Cheney's own company, that was contracted to reinforce the Pentagon's south-west wall, and it was white, unmarked KBR trailers that were parked along the wall the day of the explosion there. It's pretty blatant who the perpetrators of the crime on 9-11 were, but the problem in tying their separate crimes together into one is not finding the motive, since both have benefitted since. The problem is in finding someone to operate as a coordinator between the two, allowing each to act independently and without any (apparent) direct contact between one another during the crime.

To answer that, we do have to look to the skies on the day of 9-11, but what we see there might surprise us now that we've thought about it enough to ignore the obvious that we all "saw" - the "second" "plane" "crashing" into the WTC. No, what we're looking for is the connection between the WESCAM "black" helicopters in NYC, coordinating with Larry Silverstein, and the E-4 seen over DC, coordinating with Cheney. So, lastly, let's look at the most relevant questions:

Did the explosion at the Pentagon occur at the EXACT SAME TIME as the E-4 flew overhead by coincidence? Who was in the E-4 that overflew the Pentagon explosion; who was in the E-4 that overflew the "crash" site of United 93; and who was most probably at Site R in Pennsylvania BEFORE 1:30 PM on 9-11, 2001?

There's a less obvious, better question to ask here: "Where was George H.W. Bush, the current president's father, on the morning of 9-11?" Answer, "he admits himself that he was at the White House the night before, but says he flew to St. Paul Minnesota the next morning." (quoted from David Icke, ick.) He was in DC that morning after having spoken the previous evening for a meeting held by the Carlyle Group. The Carlyle Group speaker for 9-11 was actually King Fahd of the House of Saud, the royal family of Saudi Arabia. I speculate Cheney's location to have been Site R because I believe he went there, between 10:39 and 12:58, following former-President George Herbert Walker Bush (GHWB), who had flown there via Johnston, Pennsylvania, where his E-4 was seen circling low over the United 93 "crash" site at ~ 10:30 AM.

It's a widely documented fact that GHWB is one of the only former-presidents to invoke the executive directive to receive daily intelligence briefings. It is widely documented that the Secret Service, who guard the President and the Saudi Arabian embassy in DC, across the street from the Watergate Hotel, also guard former presidents, and it is widely documented there were a group dispatched to protect then-Halliburton CEO, Cheney during the 2000 presidential campaign.

It is a less widely documented fact that the Johnston, Pennsylvania aviation centre, closest to the United 93 10:03 "crash" site, was evacuated around 10:30 due to a phone-call placed directly to an employee's office warning that "another hijacked airliner" was targetting their small, local airport. It is less widely documented that the majority of "false-alarms" called in on 9-11 were phone-calls similarly placed directly to administrative authority officials who were in certain, "key" locations at specific times throughout the day. By evacuating such sites, it created a strategic advantage to any air traffic that happened to want to fly-by them off-radar. This is, as much as is WESCAM of the NSA, a strategic calling-card of the CIA.

But what is not documented at all is the sign held up off-camera shown to our president as Secret Service Andy Card whispered in his ear, "sir, America Is Under Attack." This hand-written sign, held up by press secretary Ari Fleischer, read simply, "DON'T SAY ANYTHING YET."

I just want to know, whose hand-writing was it?

[quote="benpadiah"]NPT explains: 1) lack of plane wreckage; 2) "mystery planes;" 3) use of explosives; 4) confused eye-witness testimony; 5) lack of footage.[/quote]

As I've said, I believe in NPT. I Believe it is NOT Theory, but Truth. And Belief is a damned dangerous thing. A little belief can go a long way, and some beliefs can be explosive. So don't listen to me, since I've sacrificed my objectivity on this now. I believe in something. I believe in NPT.

1) lack of plane wreckage. I could cop-out and just say "NPT" means no "Planes" means no "crashes" means "no wreckage," but you'd still have to decommission the planes, or put them back into rotation after a quick re-paint. The problem is getting "rid" of those pesky passengers. Hence: concentration camps. They are being held as Enemy Combatants without Habeas Corpus. Hey, it could be true!

2) "mystery planes." Here we're talking specifically about the E-4 "Doomsday" jet-liner, code-named "Night Watch," and the two-types of "cloaked" craft at the WTC towers: 1) the Global Hawks, 2) the Black Hawks. E-4 is thus explained as GHWB co-ordinating between Silverstein in NY and Cheney in DC.

3) use of explosives. we can see there must have been complicity, because of the careful timing of the explosions. The first, timed to co-ordinate with the WESCAM "plane" footage at WTC2. The second, timed to co-ordinate with the E-4 over-fly of the Pentagon. Both places = aircraft co-ordinate explosives.

4) confused eye-witness reports. I should come back to these more later, but I'll say that calling a "plane-crash" site "calm" and the rescue op there as "not much going on," as the Penn State cop described in the on-camera, affiliate-station interview is equal only to the descriptions by various people of the behaviour of ground-crews and tele-conferencing office-managers that morning, almost acting as if to "maximize casualties." Obviously on 9-11 we were shown more than met the eye.

5) lack of footage. "He who controls the past controls the future. He who controls the present controls the past." The neo-con media black-out of the 9-11 truth movement is tantamount to the theft and destruction of rare Sumerian artefacts looted from Iraq, which is, to put a figure on it, about as bad in terms of our impact on history as moving 160 B$ from beneath the WTC towers AS THEY FELL.

The Big Picture is that 9-11 was a "Black-Op." At the exact instant the 2nd "plane" supposedly "struck" WTC tower 2, every station showed a black screen for at least 1.5 seconds. 9-11 was LITERALLY erased from history as it occurred.

[quote="benpadijah"]We're looking at two different kinds of "cloaked" aircraft: 1) fully-cloaked drone-planes (Global Hawks); 2) partially-cloaked black helicopters (Black Hawks).[/quote]

If we accept, as we must and so, eventually, will, that 9-11 was nothing but an "arms" show of AREA 51 technologies, then we will have to accept a very uncomfortable fact: we are now stuck in a world where 9-11 did happen, and so we have to take some responsibility about the War in Iraq, which, we all nascently agree, is unjust due to false premises. We will have to admit we were duped by 9-11 into the Iraq war, and this makes disentangling these two crimes all the more difficult when it seems a tightly-knit criminal cadre has ceased our nations' highest offices. However, it is simple to sort out, because there are politics between the key-players over such issues as "torture," "intelligence-gathering," "privatisation," and "globalism." And they are only as strong as their weakest link. We need to keep chisling away at their presumed legal authorities. Repeal their legislation, then arrest them. But I digress...

It is obvious that Cheney was "behind" planting the explosives in the Kellogg, Brown and Root, the construction wing of his company, Halliburton, trailers at the Pentagon. It is obvious that Silverstein was "behind" planting the explosives in the "twin" towers because LERA, the construction wing of his company, the Blackstone Group, were the ones who installed them. The only question left we can ask is who co-ordinated the exact timing of these explosions?

[quote="benpadijah"]I believe there were "Global Hawk" UAV's (un-manned aerial vehicles) there, and that these were equipped with an optical camouflaging system that rendered them "all but invisible" to anyone on the ground. These, I still believe, are the so-called "Orbs" of 9-11, the shiny metallic, shape-shifting globules that are becoming common sights behind planes releasing "chem-trails." These are all, I believe, the Global Hawks being deployed to create a huge surveillance net over all airspace.[/quote]

I know this all sounds, on some deeper level, like sheer and utter lunacy. But if we begin by the premise that 9-11 WAS an AREA 51 "arms" show, and that we, the people, were sacrificed en masse to a pagan "God" by a group that believe themselves invincible and in every other way elevated infinitely above "us," then we can at least begin to get the briefest of GLIMPSES into the Halcyon "inner earth" bases underneath Antarctica. Remember that in some areas, the North and South EM-poles being two, the Bermuda triangle being a third, compasses "go wild," up is down and the laws of electro-magnetism cannot apply. This is what exploring 9-11 is like at first. We feel out of control, powerless beside the omnipotent perpetrators. And there's a very specific reason it's like that. It's because EM energy WAS used on 9-11 to mind-control the entire populous at once. I'm talking about the time-frames of those "black screens."

9-11 was an AREA 51 "arms" show, whether we like that or not, and the way the world is divvying up since then makes it seem like an ever-more dangerous place. So, the questions we have to ask ourselves about that are, what's NEXT? Will it be more of the same? Will things intensify? How can we reverse this all? How long have we been in this sort of situation? etc.

I said their inter-office politics are important because, aside from the remote-broadcast voice in W.'s brain, it is possible to divide and conquer them. You can pit one against another, and this may be our only hope, since it would seem that, even collectively (that is, not only those of awake during the day on earth, but the sleepers on the night-side too, united at the same time), "we the people" are powerless to stand up to even one of the neo-cons. But when we pit them against one another, that's when the holes in their stories start to appear, and that's when we see their true faces showing through. These are jealous, vindictive, greedy, petty people we are talking about.

I mean, look, if we say that, scheduled for the morning of 9-11, we have an ongoing, inter-departmental, military training exercise that involves crashing planes into buildings, then even if Cheney, by "standing down" the "shoot down" order, and Larry Silverstein, by cooperating as an un-witting accomplice before the fact, "LIHOP," then someone must have STARTED it. Someone MUST HAVE "Taken It Live." That's where GHWB comes in. He was, we know, ON THE SCENE. However, like at the Dallas school-book depository, his whereabouts are otherwise unaccounted for for the rest of the day. Either he is James Bond, the modern John Dee, a super-spy extraordinaire, or else HE DID IT.

So, we can divide and conquer: Dick and Larry in one camp, planted explosives before-hand. Dick was managing the war-games that morning. So he was on the scene, too. But he was playing the role of "cop in charge." Then we have, in another camp, GHWB. He was "on the scene," but his role was undefined. And the order of events determines how the house of cards falls: 1) WESCAM @ WTC. 2) Pent. explosion. 3) WTC7. "We," Larry Silverstein reminds us, "made the decision to go ahead and pull it." He's talking about WTC7, "pulled" later in the day on 9-11. So, by 5PM, Larry was in the loop. But it's also possible that his complicity in the war-game going "live" by having rigged the WTC twin towers with explosives was not pre-orchestrated by him with knowledge of its use in the "war-game" on 9-11. Unlikely, again, but possible and worth due consideration.

So, let's make a Matrix: 1) WESCAM @ WTC. The first part of the operation to "go live." It is possible a "Global Hawk" UAV shot a missile into WTC1. Unlikely, but possible. By the time WTC2 first "exploded," the WESCAM choppers are already on the scene. So, taking the exercise

"public" via the WESCAM-controlled footage was already a possibility "waiting in the wings" that morning. So, who blew WTC1? Who sent up the WESCAM choppers? Who "took the drill live"? 2) Pent. explosion. Orchestrated by Cheney, probably timed by both he and GHWB to correspond precisely to the over-fly time of the E-4. Likely scenario: GHWB on-plane, Cheney in WH "bunker," GHWB co-ordinating it via the Secret Service. 3) WTC7, all Larry Silverstein. Even if he DID plant the explosives to "pull" Building 7 AFTER the morning of 9-11, he would STILL have used his own company, just as is proven he did before 9-11 to the "twin" towers. Thus:

1) WESCAM, on scene, "takes it live."

2) Cheney, directly under GHWB via SS, bombs the Pentagon.

3) later in the day, by a safe-enough time to include him, Larry Silverstein "pulls" WTC Building 7.

[quote="benpadijah"]if all the "news" (or at least, "live-feed" coverage) cameras were manufactured by the same company as the FOX News network antennae cam I mentioned earlier - "WESCAM" - and if this company is a DOD contractor, then this would imply complicity between the DOD, "WESCAM" and the news media, [/quote]

And, again, if we CAN lump all these players (GHWB, Cheney and Silverstein) into ONE GROUP (the NEO-CONS), it doesn't mean they necessarily present a UNIFIED FRONT themselves. Cheney is tighter, for example, to GHWB than is Silverstein to Cheney. That's why Silverstein slipped up and let us know he "pulled" Building 7 in the first place. But we don't need Cheney to slip to implicate GHWB. We only need to tie WESCAM to the NSA, and thus to the CIA, where then GHWB ties the operation to Cheney via the SS. Sounding complex yet? Considering this was all pulled off on 9-11 by the COG "redundancies" for these offices, it's actually quite efficient. In short, the "war games" worked.

The only problem is that, right down to Silverstein, everyone was promised a slice of the pie from 9-11 to gag them till they die. Silverstein was probably promised a cut of the Saudi gold, and that's why he let slip, on purpose to spite his "higher-ups" (it's a documented fact the insurance companies would have gone bankrupt had they cleared his originally filed claim for losses on 9-11). So, like COG, each person was backed up and covered. But, by their own greed, one person among them will covet another's stash, and eventually plots will form between them. We've already seen it happen to a lot of those political officers who were only a little further "out of the loop" on 9-11 than being the key-players as they have since stood down their office, quit or been fired. "Scooter" Libby, Rumsfeld, etc. have all been forced to resign. Hopefully, Kucinich will support impeachment hearings for Cheney. All of this puts pressure on the key-players. The truth will out. EM-MK or not.

[quote="benpadijah"]

[img]<http://www.benpadijah.com/otherstuff/octopus.jpg>[/img][/quote]

So, let's look at the "lump" ONE GROUP, the NEO-CONS. Starting to imagine cutting up the octopus? It's simple, since each "tentacle" cross-references to every other, forming a web among them. So, beside from only through their orchestrating "head" of operations (GHWB on 9-11), they all communicate inter-office between one another as well. And every time, which is often, one of these slimy serpents talks down at a sub-ordinate employee, that employee can inform someone, anonymously, who will publish certain "leaked" documents, implicating these public officials in scandalous controversial crimes. The break-down doesn't come when "we, the people" chop off the monster's head. The real "victory" that ALLOWS us to replace the head with our own occurs as a weakening of the communications between the monster's limbs. And this, as I say, doesn't ONLY occur VIA the head. There's also a web-work interconnecting one tentacle's tip to each other tentacle's tip. This web-work is either under the control of the single head of the monster, or else it is controlled by the collective hands of all of us. In fact, the "strings" that make up this web ARE US. The webwork IS US ALL. So, to say we CAN control the web between it's limbs to weaken the monster's single head, this is very true. The monster will tire, even if only by enslaving all our minds for so long.

[quote="benpadiiah"]

WHO are the "neo-cons"? They started out as a small, right-wing conservative boy's fraternity at Yale University, an "Ivy League" college, in the 1930's. We know they had family business ties to the German NAZI party before WWII. It is my speculation they were smuggled some LSD that was being tested by IG Farben at Auschwitz. The first generation of Yale "Bonesmen" went on to found the CIA, the first US international spy agency, and, with their first operation, "Project Paperclip," continued to work with German NAZI scientists. Through "front" businesses, the same CIA "Bonesmen" soon became the most wealthy elite alive ever, and founded such groups as the Bildebergers and the Bohemian Grove camp where they could interface with other wealthy elites to plan a globalist coup de tat of the governments of all developed nations via the IMF, WTO and world bank.[/quote]

There really is ONLY ONE HEAD OF THE NEO-CONS. That first LSD trip among the first small "test" group of wealthy Yale students that went on to form the "Skull and Bones" frat MUST HAVE BEEN SUPPLIED BY SOMEONE. I propose this was Prescott Bush, GHWB's own father, and the grandfather of our current United States President, W. I believe the 1ST LSD "DOSE" ever taken in the Conspiracy to stage the 9-11 coup-de-tat for the Globalists in the first place WAS TAKEN BY GHWB. So, he's, IMHO, the acting "head" of the neo-con cup-de-tat cult. Not all rich Globalists were "in on" 9-11. Guillian probably was, but then, so was everyone else in the CFR. David Rockefeller and the Bildebergers may have benefitted from 9-11, but this doesn't necessarily imply they were involved in the plot all along. For example, they didn't come to prominent authority until AFTER the assassination of Kennedy, which I believe was to silence him when he discovered the plans for the coup called 9-11.

So, we can still have a group of rich globalists who may not have been complicit in the 9-11 coup-de-tat cult. But that's why we have the nice, little name "NEO-CONS" to determine those who did it from among those who benefitted. And when I say GHWB was the first to dose, I mean I think he's the "head" of the "neo-cons." Now, I've said, I think it was GHWB who "went live" with the war-games. Why do I think this? WESCAM is the most important evidence. Because it proves 9-11 was an AREA 51 "arms" show. It was hosted by Halliburton and LERA at the Pentagon and WTC towers. They had a blast. It was hosted by the Carlyle group at STRATCOM by GHWB from an E-4. Starting to make sense yet? It's possible they would have initiated a complete global thermo-nuclear war if the Russians were still Soviet. It's probable they wish they could have while they were. But one dictatorship "out-crazied" the other. We elected GHWB, the man who shot Kennedy, President.

[quote="benpadiiah"]Specifically, what we should be looking at here are the Az/El monopulse RF MMIC radar-muffling antennae designed by

[url=http://www.irconnect.com/noc/press/pages/news_releases.html?d=31875]Northrop Grumman[/url] for the (now discontinued) [url=http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/RAH-66_Comanche]RAH-66 Comanche Helicopter[/url] (wikilink). It's specific "dual-use" or "dual-function" involves mind control.[/quote]

The reason WESCAM is important is the frames of "black screen" right as the "plane" supposedly struck WTC2. If WESCAM was sold to all the news networks by the DOD, and IF we can say GHWB was behind WESCAM, then we can assert it was him who "went live" with the 9-11 war-game. If GHWB was, IN ANY WAY, behind WESCAM, then we can say with certainty that he fired the "magic bullet." So, let's look right at WESCAM for a moment. Why did they use "black helicopters"? They were DOD helicopters. The WESCAM cameras were NSA. The NSA sold the footage to the news media. So, if the news media were owned by the NSA, then the NSA was working co-operatively with the DOD. Was it? When could this have begun? No sooner than the NSA was formed, which was around the same time as Waco, and the first public use of "black helicopters" by the DOD. Whoever was behind tying the NSA together with the DOD was the same one who founded the NSA and sold the DOD their first "black helicopters." So, who invented the "stealth technology" developed at AREA 51 that was in place on the "black helicopters" of 9-11? Well, Northrop Gruman claims the patent right to the specific type of antenna we know they used. I'll get back to them in a minute or two. Let me say though that, if there is a connection between AREA 51, the "public"-sector, "black" budget military op, and the "private"-sector stock-holder owned company Northrop-Gruman, it would not been able to have occurred before the two operations first co-existed to share the technology, ie. it could not have been until after the younger group formed. Although this might not even make any difference, since it's pretty clear AREA 51 built it and then sold the patent rights to NG.

[quote="benpadijah"] The planetary alignment of 5/5/2000 -> 9/11/2001 here on earth -> the solar and galactic-core black-hole synchronisation of 12/21/2012. [/quote]

So, what do the "black screens" matter? Well, what IS a "black-op"? It involves deleting something from official historical records. This is the "black" part of it. Mostly the "ops" we don't hear about are coup-de-tats in foreign nations by the US CIA. When I say we don't hear about them, that's not exactly accurate. We just don't hear about them until after they've happened. Most of the time, all information regarding their pre-planning and being carried out remains classified to the US people for DECADES after the fact. So, what do the "black screens" hide? Nothing. There were NO PLANES. The WESCAM cameras could make it look like a plane was flying toward WTC, but once the explosion happened, they would not be able to cut and paste the plane image behind the jagged outline of the fire and smoke. So they didn't. They just inserted a few frames of "black screen." And that's how we know it was fake. And that's why we are supposed to think we will probably NEVER know the WHOLE TRUTH about 9-11, just as we will NEVER know the WHOLE TRUTH about the CIA coup-de-tats in any OTHER countries as well. "Black Ops" are usually also "psy-ops," and so you have operations like MK-Ultra, STARGATE, MONTAUK, etc. being run under the CIA. So, the two types of "Black-Ops" that are the calling-card of the CIA are "coups-de-tats" and "psychological warfare." BOTH HAPPENED ON 9-11, and that's how we KNOW the CIA, that is, "the Government" (technically the COG "backup" for "the" Constitutional US Government) were not only INVOLVED and LIHOP, but STARTED IT and MIHOP. ie. under GHWB we have the CIA, the SS, and so under the CIA, via WESCAM, Larry Silverstein, and under the SS, Cheney, and thus Halliburton. Bush has us all by the balls. Even W.

[quote="benpadijah"]Where there's mind-control, there's time travel. The mind is the mechanism that controls time. When the EM-field of the mind warps, the first distortions to be experienced are temporal.[/quote]

So, what are we looking at? What is GHWB's motive? If I'm actually saying, as I actually AM, that GHWB not only perpetrated 9-11, that is MIHOP, by "taking the war game live," but also killed President JFK, then what the fuck is he thinking? How on earth did he summon the POWER, the AUTHORITY, to become President, to rig his own son's election when he graduated to an office even higher than only the executive branch of the US government. Is it possible he wasn't AUTHORISED to shoot Kennedy? Did he call the world's "bluff," both that the CIA wasn't already, at that time, the dominant group in total global authority, and that not even the CIA would be able to stop ONE ROGUE AGENT? That's possible. Highly unlikely, but it could be true. It's entirely more likely that we are simply inside a universe that exists, at least in part, inside of GHWB's own mind. Just as he shares space with us bodily, his mind and our minds both exist within our bodies, and thus inside a single universe. And his mind is all screwed up on LSD. "Order out of Chaos"? That's assuming the world is chaotic to start with. Imposition by mankind's will over nature is always dangerous, and usually destructive.

If GHWB's mind is overflowing from inside his own head, and oozing out into our mutual world, and reaching out in tendrils to subsume the mental liberty of other people, then ... what do you know? ... suddenly we see that Octopus! Now, speaking as a psychonaut myself, this is possible. It is possible for one person's mind that is warped on a drug to manipulate the mind of someone else who is not the same way as one person might manipulate another without any drugs being involved. The main difference is that, if one person whose mind is warped on drugs is manipulating millions upon millions of people via the television and the office of President of the "free world," then we're dealing with an abuse of our mental sovereignty that could very well be called criminal. So if Clinton "didn't inhale," and if W. quit his "youthful indiscretion," then where were the press to ask GHWB's drug of choice? The CIA's was LSD. And what do you know, GHWB had been in the CIA since the fifties. Is it possible that GHWB foresaw 9-11? Is it possible then, he PLANNED for it? It is possible then, by assuming it would occur, that is, by LIHOP, and by planning for it to happen, and planning on how to benefit, that GHWB MAY HAVE MIHOP? Just MAYBE?

[quote="benpadiah"]On 5/5/2000 the "neo-cons," who believed it would be necessary to murder a lot of people for the survival of only their own small group, planned 9-11-2001 in order to "jump-start" the survival of only a few mutants (as was the case prior to 2000) into the evolution of everyone all at once (as is believed will follow 12/21/2012). They have benefitted materially and psychologically as ushering out the "old" and in the "new" Age, in which Mutation is seen as the binary line between Fear -> War and Truth -> Love.[/quote]

So, GHWB, on LSD, planned 9-11. GHWB, in spite of the CIA, assassinated JFK to cover-up 9-11. If these events are true, if they really did occur this way, then we are living in a VERY different world than we think we are in our everyday lives. There are some extremely problematic questions that arise from this, and these can ONLY be answered with some extremely complex explanations. The easy way to understand it all is just to take LSD. If you take LSD, you'll be able to "tap into" the "universal mind" the same way as GHWB did when he took the first recreational dose in history. But just as Weishaupt only UNCOVERED a JESUIT PLOT, so did GHWB only UNCOVER the plot for 9-11 from those who pulled off the NAZI Reichstag Fire (ie. the German followers of the Bavarian Weishaupt). And hey, what do you know, the current Pope of the Catholic Church is Bavarian. And Kennedy was a Catholic choir-boy. You do the math on that one.

The point is always this: if one group is benefitting now by doing the same thing that another group benefitted by doing earlier, it is not important why the group doing that thing now is doing it. It is more important, if what they are doing that is the same thing as a previous group is committing a crime (as with 9-11 following in the footsteps of the Reichstag fire), then the MOST IMPORTANT QUESTION is HOW the later group is linked to the older group. If there is a direct connection, as there is between GHWB and the NAZIs, then this implies complicity between them. At that point, we can reach the MOST IMPORTANT POINT, that is, if one criminal is successfully copy-cattin another, and there is direct collusion between them, WHERE is the original criminal located? The answer to this question tells us if the elder group is still around, what position they would be in to benefit from their MO being copied by a criminal they knew? Well, the answer to WHERE are the NAZIs today, that is fairly obvious. They are all around us, because some of us, present company excluded, do actually have NAZI beliefs, views, opinions, etc. Consider Ann Coulter or Pat Robertson. These people make Ariel Sharon and Dick Cheney look like diplomats. But the answer we would RATHER hear is that the NAZI's were shipped by "Project Paperclip" to countries in South America, and from there probably migrated south to build bases under the Antarctic glaciers from which they pilot UFO-like "Vimana" craft powered by "Vril" energy, alike "their" Vedic ancestors. Of course, that's posh, but the real answer, as I've given, is simply too shocking to admit that it's true, and so I'll, instead, deal more with the NAZI gold angle in a minute. Think "Islamofascism," a term thrown around by the founders of the neo-conservative ideology the CIA "bonesmen" have invaded. Here's a hint too. Musolini conquered much of Northern Africa, and was probably promised that land before-hand by the pre-WWII League of Nations. This went a long way toward breaking apart the Ottoman Empire. Now, the NAZI's didn't make ALL their money by murdering each and every poor "Jewish banker" in Germany. Remember the idea of Swiss banks wasn't around until afterward, as a place to keep records of where they'd stored all the gold. No, the NAZI's were ideologists. Their ideology was anti-semitism, but their method was fascism. That's why Mussolini and Hitler were on the same "side." Mussolini wasn't "anti-semitic" per se, but he definately did "donate" to NAZI charities from the plunder he pillaged from the N. Africa wing of the Ottoman Empire. And the Pope, no fan of Carthaginian-area threat to Roman Papal authority, just happened to smile on Mussolini, and thus, on Hitler.

[quote="benpadiah"]the same morning Dick and Herb were flying sky-high on "Doomsday," there was a gold-heist going on in a tunnel below WTC5. And I can't help but wonder if the one thing might not have something to do with the other.[/quote]

WHY? It's all part of a cycle, known only to the astrologers throughout all of history, that repeats itself every 2000 years. We don't know why it does this, at least not most of us. But if we look back throughout recorded history, 2000 years before 9-11, they crucified Christ; 2000 years before that was the rise of Babylon; 2000 years before that, the flood, and, we are told, about 2,000 years before the flood was the dawn of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden with the Trees of Knowledge and of Good and Evil. So, we have: 6000BC=Eden, 4000BC=flood, 2000BC=Babylon, 1AD=Christ, and 2000AD = 9-11. Why? Well, the answer isn't simple, because it's astrology, and not alot of people know alot about that. Astrology is one of those studies "frowned upon" by the traditional schools considered "sciences." But this is like Jacob for his "coat of many colours." According to Astrology, the planets align every 2000 years. Each cycle adds one more planet to the last cycle's alignment. So far, we have reached 7 cyclical alignments. We know there are only eight planets, including Pluto but excluding the sun and the moon, and so we predict that this seventh age will see an end put to human wars and the collective push to better ourselves as a species as we realise we have been destroying the earth ourselves until this point, but that our doing so is only in denial of a more real threat from off-world. Destroying earth is no way to avoid the coming of the eighth age, the age of Neptune, the final age before the age of Pluto and the crashing of a comet into our planet the Sumerians called Nibiru, but the Babylonians called Marduk. The word both these Iraqi cultures used to call earth was "TIAMAT." Their name for earth's moon was KINGU. This is all documented and agreed upon, even by mainstream scholars. You can go and look it up. It's in books, and they do still allow us to read.

Of course, we know it's all fiction, though, right? 6000 year old Sumero-Babylonian mythology that HAPPENS to describe the EXACT same plot-lines as movies we watch some 8000 years later (with the modern TIAMAT, earth, being saved from collision with NIBIRU not by MARDUK, but by Bruce Willis) combined with the astrological cycle explained to us nowadays as the "Age of Aquarius" and you have a dangerous truth disguised behind a delicate lie. This is not a movie we are watching. We have existed throughout many lifetimes, and simply dwelt in many different bodies, but we do have memories and consciousness of events that took place long before our own birth. History is a theatre we are all sitting in, watching current-events being played out on a stage. That much is true. But if those current events are not to our liking, such as on 9-11 when the "neo-cons" celebrated the 2000 year Apocalypse by mass-murder in the name of Molech, then we owe it to our fellow souls in the theatre to stand out from outside the roles we have chosen for this mere lifetime and shout out against the injustic perpetrated on-stage. We have to wake other people up and try to warn them about what's really going on!

You see, the stage is circular, in the centre of an arena. What we are seeing is not the same performance as what the people on the opposite end of the circus are seeing, that is, around the loop by 2000 years, or by 4000 years, or 6 or 8 or 10, etc. But some of us, closer to one another, do see similar events going on at similar times. So, what we saw on 9-11 was, to some of our minds, in some way vaguely similar to, say, the Lightning Struck tower card of tarot, or to Revelations

9:11, or to Nostradamus quatrain X72, and so on. Some of us may even understand what is going on but want to keep everyone in the audience quiet. I speculate that such a person as that is GHWB, who thinks of himself as an "usher" standing in the aisles of the theatre of history around the stage of current events. And I'd wager John Dee had felt that way too at one point in his life.

[quote="benpadiah"]NPT explains: 1) lack of plane wreckage; 2) "mystery planes;" 3) use of explosives; 4) confused eye-witness testimony; 5) lack of footage.[/quote]

1) lack of plane wreckage. NPT = there were no planes crashed, so there was no wreckage at any of the sites. The planes themselves were owned by their respective air-traffic operations companies, in this case United, American and TWA. These companies have long been owned and operated, and this is well-documented in many books about fiscal corruption in the aviation industries, by former NAZIs, or by people who subscribe to the ideologies of NAZIism. This is well-known, and a well-documented fact. So, asking the aircraft companies what happened to the aircraft that supposedly "crashed" on 9-11 would be like asking a jockey what happens to a lame horse. Rocket-fuel is combustable FOR A REASON. There are, and those who use them know who they are, better technologies for flight.

2) "mystery planes." In the past few posts I've addressed the WESCAM "Black helicopters," the "UFO" Global Hawks, and the E-4 over the Pentagon. Those are most of the "mystery" aircraft I know about that were present on 9-11. There are OTHER anomolies on 9-11, however, and hopefully I'll get to discuss some of those soon too.

3) use of explosives. This was Cheney and Silverstein's part. It was likely co-ordinated by GHWB via WESCAM and STRATCOM. All of the people necessary for EITHER an "explosives ONLY," OR a "secondary incideiary devices" argument would need to convict would be Cheney, Silverstein and GHWB. Then any others would be flushed out too.

4) confused eye-witness testimony. I'd be confused too if, instead of seeing a plane hitting the tower, all I had really seen was a plane next to the tower, a plane half-way inside the tower, then a black-screen, and then an explosion. That's three different events and one big fat magic marker blotting out the most important moment. I'd definately get VERY confused if the reason someone was telling me this had happened was not because of "radical Islamo-fascism" but that the ones who did it were trying to steal Kuwaiti gold from under the towers, and that, instead, the REAL reason for 9-11 was for a group of evil wizards to celebrate the second "millennium" since they killed Jesus.

5) lack of footage. There's really two kinds of "lack of footage," and I've only dealt with one so far, that being the "black screen" frames JUST AS the "plane" strikes the tower. The other, and this is, obviously, far MORE important, is that 9-11 itself was MISDIRECTION. The "war-game" going "live" was to uncover the gold-heist, but the "war game" itself was only cover for the hesit. It would be as if, say I wanted to rob a till at a stadium during a game, and the entire game got called off on account of it. There would obviously have to be some better reason than me robbing the one till to call off the game. So, obviously, there was more going on than ONLY the game we saw OR the one till being robbed. And obviously, it was BIG.

So, to uncover the BIG SECRET of 9-11, we have to get past the STRATCOM co-ordinated, WESCAM televised, Carlysle Group sponsored, AREA 51 technology "arms" show aspect. We even have to hold off on our gut-reaction to tear the main characters in this play to pieces like the brainless zombies they think we are. So, we have to "forgive" Dick Cheney, and we have to "turn the other cheek" to Larry Silverstein, because these people are small-time players in a much BIGGER GAME. We have to think carefully about this... where did GHWB go on 9-11? How does this help us find the group of criminals current location that the group he led were immitating that day? The idea is to follow the lion back to his lair, and there to catch his pride unaware.

okay, so, for this post I'm going to present some information chronologically, from as few a number of sources as possible, all cited from wikipedia, the "open-source" code internet encyclopedia. I've already demonstrated their general philosophical bias toward the neo-con slant of the "flat earth" model of reality. However, there remains no less disputable source for info online, even if, at times, it is only the bare minimum.

Alright, all that being said, let me tell you up front what I'm trying to lay out in this post. We'll be dealing with three groups here: 1) the Bush family themselves. 2) the Skull and Bones Yale "secret-society" frat. 3) the NAZIs. However, for the purpose of exposition, we'll be following them according to the Bush family business, BB&H (Brown Brothers & Harriman) bank; the RTA (Russell Trust Association); and the UBC (Union Bank Corporaton) allied with Fritz Von Thyssen (Hitler's foreign finance manager). I'll now show, chronologically, how BB&H tie the Bush family fortunes to UBC and NAZI gold; how the RTA, now under BB&H, ties opium sales to China in the 1800's to the same NAZI gold; and, finally, I'll wrap up the post with another brief exposition on the different ideologies of Mussolini's Fascist Pan-European economy and Hitler's eugenic dictatorship of human experimentation.

Anyway, on to the research:

[quote]Williams cousin Samuel Russell formally established Russell & Co. on January 1, 1824 for the purpose of acquiring opium and smuggling it to China.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/William\_Huntington\_Russell

This is Samuel Russell, cousin of the first member of Skull and Bones, Will Russell, and probably one of the original 13 initiates under his cousin. So, even before the founding of the Skull and Bones itself, we have the founding member's own cousin starting a holding company to redistribute opium to China. At this time, opium is still legal in the British empire, and India, bordering China to the south, is still a British colony. The British opium import to China in an attempt to crush their economy led, of course, to the Communist Revolution under Chairman Mao Tse Tung. But we already know all of that. What we don't yet is why some Connecticut Yankee thinks he can corner the international opium market. So, let's look a little later on and see.

In 1825, GHWB's Great Grand-Father is born. This makes the Bushes the latest ones "on the scene" of the economic coup around the turn of the 20th century that precipitated WWI and WWII, just as the "Asian Contagion" of the late 90's in many ways led directly to the events on 9-11, 2001. So, we see here, even among the most elite, the wealthiest, an exchange between one group or family and another over the passing decades and centuries of the reigns to power. There is a "passing of the torch" that occurs during GHWB's earlier lifetime, and he alone may have really grasped the fullness of the opportunity this represented.

[quote]The partnership started in 1825, between William Brown and Joseph Shipley.[/quote]
-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Brown%2C\_Shipley\_%26\_Co.

So, in the same year as "late-comer" Bush-family patriarch James Smith Bush is born, we have the first partnership formed between two British companies that would later partner with Harriman to form BB&H banking firm. You'll see where I'm headed with this connection in a moment.

[quote]Russell & Co. merged with the number one US trader, the J. & T.H. Perkins "Boston Concern" in 1829.[/quote]

Returning to the Bonesmen's founder's cousin's company, Russell and Co. (R&Co), in 1829, they have aligned themselves to the current, proto-Wall Street, open-market share / stock-trader of the time. Remember all of this is happening roughly concurrent to a wee little skirmish going on down south we "historiographers" call the Civil War. Meanwhile, and this is important, future partners R&Co. have already aligned with BB&H, then Brown & Shipley, via Skull and Bones. So, before the Civil War in America is even fought-out, we have Connecticut international-opium entrepreneur Sam Russell, cousin of the founder of Skull and Bones, Will Russell, who I'll come to next, selling shares in his startup company on the open-market. So, who's buying this? You'll never guess.

[quote]From 1831 to 1832, Russell studied in Germany. It has been suggested while there, he was initiated into a German society that inspired Skull and Bones. Confirmation of this came when the Skull and Bones meeting hall was broken into and materials were found that refer to Skull and Bones as the Yale Chapter of a German society. -source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/William\_Huntington\_Russell

From the start, Skull and Bones was a front.

On the one-hand, there's the fact that the alignment of the Russell family, between Sam Russell and his cousin Will, with the German "Illuminati" (by that time known as Thule), allowed quid pro quo between the German (and British, as we'll soon see) foreign investors, who needed espionage agents abroad in America, and the young up-and-comer in the international opium trade. So we have, on the one-hand, the "secret society" aspect being used as a cover for the business-deals. But, on the other hand, it's the other way around, and what we see is that one "hand" washes the other. So, Skull and Bones was a cover for the opium export industry, but the opium-export industry was only a front for the Skull and Bones connection between Yale college kids - mostly the sons of boot-strapped wealthy big-industrialists following the Civil War, like Prescott Bush, GHWB's dad, himself -and the proto-NAZI party, the Illuminati / Thule Society, in Germany. Beginning to see things shaping up yet?

So, the fellow-Phi Beta Kappa frat-boy who Russell, the Thule-brainwashed cousin of the first Cino-American opium exporter, "stood up for" was actually the father of President Taft. Did anyone know that Taft was elected illegally, since his home-state, Ohio, at the time of his election, still had not been ratified into the Union of American States following the civil war? Fun fact, that.

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Boodle\_Boys

Okay, well, this part does get a little esoteric, or at least exotic. So we have three Yale frat houses formed around the same time. The first is Skull and Bones. We've already seen that they are aligned with the German Thule Society and with the Chinese / British opium-trade. The second one to form then was the Scroll and Key. Let's check them out briefly.

[quote]The Scroll and Key Society is a secret society established by John Addison Porter and others at Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, in 1841.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Scroll\_and\_Key

So, after Skull and Bones, that already by that time is, at the least, well lined up to connect the German Thule Order's interests in the British export of opium to China via the founders' own family-ties, then next we have the second Yale frat / "secret society," Scroll and Key. I'm not going to go into specifics on Scroll and Key, or on the "third society" of Wolf's Head, either. Suffice it to say that it's all about time-travel. And if you get that, maybe you'd be interested in this watch I have to sell you.

So, between the formation of the second "cult" at Yale and the formation of the third, Skull and Bones officially declares itself a financial operating arm of the elder R&Co. run by the founder's own cousin. Now we're talking nepotism and campus politics galore. Skull and Bones is now corporate-financed, the RTA (Russell Trust Association) being nothing more than a holding company under R&Co. (Sam Russell and Company). Again, this is far from illegal, but then, laws change.

Here's a smoking gun right at the peak of the Yale frat-wars. The great-grandfather of former head of the CIA and past-president GHWB helped found a RIVAL frat to Skull and Bones, the frat that, I shouldn't need to remind you, became the CIA. I'll get back to this "frat-mole" theory in a moment, but for now suffice it to say it's all about maintaining the false value of certain commodities at the expense, literally, of certain others - for example we consider gold "worth" more than opium, as I'll tally at the bottom line later on. Again, I'm going chronologically, so bear with me. The Yale "three societies" are just the calm before the blitzkrieg. Although, while we're on them, I'd like to add, on the time-travel note, the order of attribution to historical reference-point for the three clubs is actually opposite the order in which they, themselves, were formed. Think about it. The Roman club (S&B) was formed FIRST. Then the Greek club (S&K), and finally, the Egyptian club (WHS). It's just an interesting side-note is all, really; it just makes you wonder what they were thinking about.

[quote]Wolf's Head Society (W.H.S.), incorporated in 1883 as The Third Society by the Phelps Trust Association, is the third oldest secret society at Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut.[/quote]

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Wolf%27s\_Head\_%28secret\_society%29

By the time Wolf's Head Society forms, 51 years AFTER S&B, and only 6 years before JSBush (Sam's father, Prescott's grand-father, GHWB's great-grandfather) dies, the idea of establishing a business-side has been decided to be pre-eminent in the formation of a successfully operating "secret" frat. I'd speculate that, what's MORE secret than the existence of these rival Yale frats are the Secret Wars they conduct against one another. How far does this mentality extend into the Halls of Power in our governments by now? In any event, the Phelps Trust precedes the formation of Wolf's Head, and this may have been due to the influence of GHWB's great-grandfather. But, either way, we can say that Bonesman GHWB's own great-grandfather actually belonged to a rival frat to the Skull and Bones, Wolf's Head. Again, the notion of the "frat-mole" raises its ugly, speculative little head.

[quote]In 1918 the partnership between Brown Shipley and its American partners Brown Brothers & Co. ended, although each continued to act as agents for the other for some time.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Brown%2C\_Shipley\_%26\_Co.

Id' guess this had something to do with the Communist Revolution in Russia in 1917, leading into the Great War, the War to End All Wars, or, as we know it by name nowadays, World War One. Brown Shipley (ostensibly the British/UK operating wing) of BBH (Brown-Brothers & Co, by now Brown Brothers & Harriman, USA) at this point claims to have severed official ties with BBH, their American operating wing, at least on paper. What is meant by the ominous use of the word "agents" I'll explain next. But, going into this, remember that, what we are looking at is one group, with three sides: BBS/BBH are the Harriman / Walker / Bush family bankers. RTA and R&Co. are Skull and Bones dealing British opium to China. And then we have the third group, the Thule Order of Illuminati, who were, by now, calling themselves by the name no doubt more familiar to us now, the NAZIs.

[quote]Harriman Bank was the main Wall Street connection for several German companies and the varied U.S. financial interests of Fritz Thyssen....

Roosevelt's Alien Property Custodian, Leo T. Crowley, signed Vesting Order Number 248 seizing Bush's property under the Trading with the Enemy Act. The order cited only the Union Banking Corporation (UBC), of which Bush was a director and held one share, which had connections with a Dutch bank owned by Thyssen.

Union Banking Corporation (UBC) (for Thyssen and Brown Brothers Harriman). The President of UBC at that time was George Herbert Walker, Bush's father-in-law.

- E. Roland Harriman--3991 shares (managed and under voting control of Prescott Bush)

- Cornelis Lievense--4 shares (He was the New York banker of the Nazi Party)
- Harold D. Pennington--1 share (Employed by Prescott Bush at Brown Brothers Harriman)
- Ray Morris--1 share (a business partner of the Bush and Harriman families)
- Prescott S. Bush--1 share (director of UBC, which was co-founded and sponsored by his father-in-law George Walker; senior managing partner for E. Roland Harriman and Averell Harriman)
- H.J. Kouwenhoven--1 share (organized UBC for Von Thyssen, managed UBC in Nazi occupied Netherlands)
- Johann G. Groeninger--1 share (German Industrial Executive, a not unimportant member of the Nazi party[/quote]
-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Prescott\_Bush#Nazi\_collaboration\_controversy

Okay, this is very important, so I'll go over it for a moment more. I know it's confusing and I don't want us to miss this before moving on. Seven people sat on the board of directors for the UBC (Union Banking Corporation). Three of them were high-level members in Hitler's NAZI party. Two of them were business partners of the Bush family. The other two were the owner of the company (E. Roland Harriman), and the company president's son-in-law, Prescott Bush, GHWB's dad. Prescott's father-in-law (George Herbert Walker), for whom Prescott named his first-born son, was not mentioned as part of the crew of stock-holders who got "busted" for "trading with the enemy," even though he was UBC's president at the time. Also note that Harriman's interests, despite being the overwhelmingly primary stock-holder on the board of trustees, are under direct veto of Prescott, the president's son-in-law. This is a lot of trust that Harriman is putting in "Bert" Walker, letting his friend's son-in-law run a company complicit in "trading with the enemy" during war-time. Either way, the point is clear: Prescott Bush was NOT a NAZI-"sympathiser." Prescott Bush WAS a NAZI. And this is the grand-father of our current president, George W. Bush. How do they get away with this? Well, I'll tell you how:

[quote]In 1943, by special act of the Connecticut state legislature, its trustees were granted an exemption from filing corporate reports with the Secretary of State, which is normally a requirement.[/quote]

-source:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Brown\_Brothers\_Harriman\_%26\_Co.#Skull\_.26\_Bones\_Association

This means that, as of 1943, the year that Prescott's "banking" venture with the NAZIs was being investigated, the Skull and Bones opium company stopped having to report their annual income and holdings to the state auditor. So, RTA went "off the books," in other words. No taxes, no official records. Let the age of the frat-house "spooks" begin. Well, I expect you're wondering, what does the one thing have to do with the other? It's time to play clean-up. What we have, up until Crowley under Roosevelt put the slap-down on Prescott and Thyssen's US-NAZI funding party, was a gradual lining up between pro-eugenics, fascist forces in Germany and frat-houses on the Yale University campus. And Prescott himself was in a VERY Key Position. The grandson of a Wolf's Head, he himself had been "tapped" into Skull and Bones. Was this a betrayal, or espionage? Either way, we have Prescott Bush in charge of UBC for BB&H (UK/US) and Thyssen (Germany) at the same time that future BB&H asset RTA goes "off the charts." Is this a coincidence, or can we imply complicity to conceal the original interests of the UBC (US/UK - German) alliance as being, as I've been saying all along, in selling opium to the Chinese? Is it the case that post-civil war-era proto-fascists originally aligned in the drug-trade, and only later moved into the business of banking? Well, as we all know by now, "looks can be deceiving."

[quote]In 1946, Brown Shipley became a limited company.[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Brown%2C\_Shipley\_%26\_Co.

This is when the UK wing of BBH, ie. Brown Shipley, says it finally "pulled out" of its side of the trade partnership. But, of course, this is only on paper. As we can begin to see now, there had been complicity between UK Brown Shipley and US BBH between 1918, when it declared itself an autonomously functional branch, and 1946, when it actually began selling stock-shares on the open-market. We have now seen some of the "agents" that acted for both UK BS and US BBH simultaneously, on behalf, on the one hand, of the British interest in poisoning China, and, on the other hand, the German fascists in consolidating capital. And, oh My ~GOD~ have they ever consolidated capital. Let's look at the final piece of the puzzle.

[quote]Since 1978, business of the Russell Trust Association was handled by its single trustee, Brown Brothers Harriman & Co. partner John B. Madden, Jr. Madden started with Brown Brothers & Harriman in 1946, under senior partner Prescott Bush, George Herbert Walker Bush's father.[/quote]

-source:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Brown\_Brothers\_Harriman\_%26\_Co.#Skull\_.26\_Bones\_Association

The guy who handles the stock portfolio for the Skull and Bones, "off the books" opium-trade industry worked with Prescott Bush HIMSELF at BB&H itself, which had, by 1946, hired Prescott to protect him from the UBC banking scandal of 1943. So, let's take stock once more: Prescott Bush: grandson of a Wolf's Head (Egyptian Yale cult), who himself became a Skull and Bonesman (Roman Yale cult); a known NAZI-"collaborator" who "traded with the enemy" during wartime; working for BB&H and even supervising the guy who would end up acquiring S&B RTA for WHS BB&H. Starting to add up? BBH subsumed RTA, but it's likely that BB&H was founded to fund RTA. In any event, we can definately now sit back and say, with the utmost confidence, we know that Prescott Bush, our current president's grand-father, was a NAZI, and that Skull and Bones, the Bush family's college fraternity of choice for the last three generations, makes its money in the opium trade. So, exactly how much money does Skull and Bones make from the opium trade?

[quote]On its 2004 Form 990, the Russell Trust Association reported $3,205,143 in net assets.[/quote]

-source:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Brown\_Brothers\_Harriman\_%26\_Co.#Skull\_.26\_Bones\_Association

So, RTA (the Cino opium-exporter) is now worth approximately 3 and a quarter million dollars. But check this out. Between 1946, when Brown Shipley went public-interest on its stock-options, and now, in 2007, UK BS (former partners of US BB&H) have been bought out by, and now function as a wholly owned subsidiary of KBC bank in Luxembourg. Let's just take a quick look into their assets and earnings for a moment, just to see how the business of housing NAZI gold is holding up beside the old opium trade.

[quote]The group is controlled by a syndicate of core shareholders, but has a free float of some 47%. Its market capitalisation in November 2005 was Eu.27bn, and its revenues Eu. 12.556 bn in 2006. KBL, based in Luxemburg, provides tailor-made private banking services to customers throughout Western Europe via its network of subsidiaries.

Members of the group currently include Puilaetco Dewaay (Belgium), Michaux Gestion SA (France), Merck Finck & Co. (Germany), Brown, Shipley & Co. (Great Britain), Banca KBL Fumagalli Soldan Spa (Italy), Theodoor Gilissen Bankiers NV (The Netherlands), and Kredietbank Suisse SA (Switzerland).[/quote]

-source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/KBC\_Bank

Let's also recall that the Euro is at nearly -.200% trading rate to the US dollar right now. The reason should be clear enough. The Euro is backed off NAZI gold, while the US dollar is not. So, when we look at the sum of 27 billion Euros in extended assets for the Swiss bank that owns UK BS, that really translates to between two and three times that amount in the value of US dollars. Now compare that to the average value of RTA, at around three to four million dollars. It's literally chump change.

Okay, now. Let me try to put some perspective on all this. First, I know this might all seem like nothing but a bunch of fast-talk and conjecture. But look, the same year that Prescott Bush switched up from UBC and his NAZI funding partners to be senior partner of BB&H UK-US banking, the Skull and Bones "Trust Company," RTA, goes "off the books." It's probably NOT a coincidence, since it does just HAPPEN to conceal the way American NAZIs (Thule "moles" at Yale who became chief-execs at BB&H) had sold narcotics to raise funds for their friends in Germany.

As I've said, laws change. As do world politics. They all change with the best ways to maximize profits in foreign markets. Whether it's German Thule funding US Skull and Bones RTA to smuggle British opium to China (probably via UK B&S), or whether it's the US BB&H funding the German NAZIs. It's all the same circle-jerk. One year the German branch are the "Illuminati." The next the same branch has become "Thule." The next, we call them NAZIs. One year, the US branch are S&B and RTA. The next they are BB&H and UBC. Finally, BB&H acquires RTA in a merger of the two. But it's all a shadow puppet Punch and Judy show, since it was the same people all along, only using different names. And when we find out the role of the British B&S was to benefit from RTA, and then ultimately themselves to benefit the Swiss banks housing NAZI gold, and when we consider the Germans founded Skull and Bones (as well as inspired the other Yale frats) in the US to start with, then we can make a pretty water-tight, if not air-tight, case connecting the German proto-NAZIs to the US Yale frats as long ago as their foundation, around the same time as the US Civil War and to the Swiss bank share-holders / trustees of today, and when we "follow the money" from the US side, through the British, to the German, we can make a very good case for treason and espionage against certain key-players in US, British and German politics during that time, most notably, the Bush family, beginning with S&B / BB&H Prescott, following through to S&B / CIA GHWB, right down to the current president of the United States, George W. Bush.

In short, it's easy to see this as US money flowing through RTA and UBC into the German NAZIs. But it's not only the NAZIs of early 20th century Germany that profited. The people that have profited down the line, and still bank every single night and day from this, are still people who hold the NAZI ideology, though. So we can still call them NAZIs, even if they aren't German. So, we see NAZI gold being stored in Swiss banks following WWII, and we see the same people who put that gold there then in the positions of highest authority in the "free world" now.

So, what we have to see is not the knee-jerk reaction of US money funneling into Swiss banks via Skull and Bones and the NAZIs. This implies a decrease in one market and an increase in another. But where can we find the market that benefits from both the decrease in the US and the increase in Swiss banks? Germany isn't richer because America is poorer. That's not the right way to look at this. No, this is most definitely an act of Treason, a high-crime against all the states involved. But it is not treason to one state to benefit another. This is a crime to benefit its criminals.

While the US was being fleeced to fund the NAZIs, and after the NAZIs were fleeced by Swiss banks, only the subsequent families of one small group of people alive at the time have since benefitted. They formed the RTA to smuggle opium into China. They formed Skull and Bones, which would basically become the CIA. They formed the UBC to transfer funds in the US to NAZI Germany. They subsumed RTA into the UBC's parent company BB&H. They dissolved UK B&S of US BB&H into the Swiss bank KBL. So, who formed these groups, populated them throughout, and has benefited after the fact from their acts? The NAZIs, Skull and Bones, the CIA, Swiss banks, the US presidency. Who has their fingers in every cookie jar?

Money inside banks is not being circulated on the free market. All money belongs to the free market. Therefore, money kept in banks is being stolen by individuals from the masses of the free market-place. Consider this: US politicians are renowned for making financial contributions to Zionist Israeli charities after their elections. This is because these same charities usually contribute heavily to their election campaigns beforehand. We can see thus how the cycle of election-buying is paid for in the US by a circulating financial insurance system that launders one generation's funds to the next through Israel. But what about those pesky Swiss banks? Is all that money really just SITTING THERE, not being circulated? If politicians' funds are kept fluid, then whose funds are sitting solid in Swiss banks?

Obviously it goes back to proto-NAZIs in Germany. But the NAZIs of today are world-wide. So, again, who has their fingers in every cookie jar and who is sitting on a mountain of gold in Swiss banks? You probably want to say the Zionist Illuminati of 200 years ago. But it isn't them now. It's the neo-cons now. It's W. now.

From one point of view, the zeitgeist of the neo-con NAZIs now is, in full, the same as that of the Zionist Illuminati 200 years ago. Both groups seem to be intent on taking money away from one group, the Semites, by keeping their own economy solid while forcing the fluid economy of the Semites to constantly circulate. But then, you could also say, this mentality of one group prospering at the expense of another dates all the way back to when civilisation was originally formed by the Semites. This philosophy ultimately leads nowhere, and if you get sucked into it you will only inherit a lot of hot air.

So, instead, we have to focus only on the neo-cons, who are the chief heads of this group today. We can't blame the groups they belong to, such as the Bilderbergers or the Trilateral Commission or the CFR or even the IMF, WTO and World Bank, anymore-so than we can blame the political offices they buy or steal, like that of the US Presidency. It is individuals we can try for crimes, but not the whole groups themselves. It's easy to spot the neo-cons too. They all wear a tiny US flag lapel pin just like the NAZIs wore a Swastika and the ancient Semites waved a star of David.

And we can say that what it comes down to is a fluidity or solidity of reality. On 9-11 we were all shown something that didn't happen. In operation "Big City," in the early 1960's, the CIA began pumping LSD into the water-supply of New York City. Less than half a century later, they triggered the "trip." The technologists have been developing satellite-based (above the horizon) telecommunications systems for the last 50 years. After 50 years, the whole world could see 9-11 at the same time on tv. That's fluid reality. We all tripped. We all saw something that wasn't there. We had a "mass hallucination."

Solid reality, on the other hand, is what the neo-cons desire to maintain for themselves. Solid reality is control over such massive consequences. Solid reality is gold, and fluid reality is LSD. Of course, those of us aware of the effects of both can say which is more valuable to them, but we can add that, for most of us, the answer wouldn't be gold, simply because we, by this point in history, have never actually even owned any. Almost everyone nowadays is part of this "fluid" reality, and so, to those who are in control of "solid" reality, we are less valuable, less real, less alive and so expendable. The masses exist to serve current needs of history.

Such is the difference in mentality between the majority of humans alive nowadays and the minority who we believe are in control. "They," we say, are responsible for how bad things are, and therefore "we," ourselves, cannot be held accountable. This mentality allows them their control. By our envying their gold, we place them in charge. But if we shift our balance of perceived value to something other than gold, such as, say, the fluid economy of credit-based capital, then we free our minds from those whose values we had placed in charge above ourselves previously. That's what a small number of us have done in each generation, and how that small group goes on to parent the rulers over the next generation of the masses. Hence, as I'd said, the "passing of the baton," which, as I'd mentioned occurred during GHWB's lifetime, was the metamorphosis from the "solid" to the "fluid" reality for the masses between valuing gold and valuing credit-based capital.

In conclusion, let's look at the long-view. Fascism, or big-business globalism, is only a means to an end. The group of mutants in charge in each generation sees the same truth each time: to forward the historical trends of the masses. In this case, what we are seeing on 9-11 is VERY MUCH like what we saw with the crucifixion 2000 years ago. The small group of mutants (then the Sanhedrin, now the neo-cons) has created an elaborate mythology to temporarily distract the masses while that small group consolidates power. And, while 2000 years ago we actually couldn't see the Church becoming the Roman Empire itself as such a shift in the "flat earth" power-structure of our reality, now, 2000 years later, we CAN see the neo-cons staging 9-11 to assume authority over a global empire as such. We can choose now whether or not we will allow this to happen because now, 2000 years later, the sunspot-cycle's peak activity will be progressively greater than it was then. More planets aligned this time than last, hence more sunspots, hence more EM activity overall in earth's EM field, and thus a "higher" overall state of brainwave function now than then. In other words, the people of the world are now more unified than they were 2000 years ago, and so may be more able to prevent a neo-con global coup-de-tat than they were to prevent the same event by the Catholic cult 2000 years ago.

Again, to prevent a crime, we do not need to know the prior motives of the criminal. After we have stopped the crime from occurring, then we can question the criminal and the victim both, and thus judge both sides of the story. But if we do not prevent the crime, and the criminal goes as far as even killing the victim, then we can only determine our relationship to the act upon the story of the criminal themselves. This is what is meant when it is said, "the victor makes history."

Just remember, the neo-cons value gold. To them, gold is power. So, who got the gold from 9-11? Silverstein got 2.2 billion worth to rebuild the towers. Cheney got a lot of power if he can authorize the under-funded army to torture and the soft-kill weapon toting domestic police to kill. This power is funded by gold, but would 2.2 billion alone buy the ability to confuse the whole population of the globe on 9-11? Next, let's look at the gold-heist I've mentioned that occurred under WTC5 on 9-11. Because, just like 2.2 billion makes 3 million look like "chump change," so does 160 billion make 26 billion look the same. Did I say 160 BILLION? Yep, that's right. Stolen on the day of 9-11 from the crime-scene itself. All gold. 160 Billion. Oh, and by the way...? It had all originally belonged to Kuwait. Saddam stole it from them, we stole it from him, and then SOMEONE stole it on 9-11.

Whoever has the solid gold to raise the fluid reality of the public mind into credit-based capital is the same group of individuals responsible for planning and carrying out the events on 9-11.

-Jon

[quote="benpadijah"]aside from the evidence of their both having benefitted and both having been responsible, can we directly tie the one event to the other? Consider this, in particular, in the absence of planes. If the explosion at the Pentagon and the initial explosions at the WTC towers were not caused by planes, can we still say that Silverstein and Cheney can be held accountable for them? And, more importantly, can we tie one event to the other without planes, and prove that Silverstein and Cheney acted in collusion with one another on 9-11?[/quote]

It is obvious that Cheney was "behind" planting the explosives in the Kellogg, Brown and Root, the construction wing of his company, Halliburton, trailers at the Pentagon. It is obvious that Silverstein was "behind" planting the explosives in the "twin" towers because LERA, the construction wing of his company, the Blackstone Group, were the ones who installed them. The only question left we can ask is who co-ordinated the exact timing of these explosions?[/quote]

Point 1) if there were no planes crashed on 9-11, someone must have planted explosives beforehand as well as coordinated their exact timing to correspond to a simultaneous media black-out.

[quote="benpadijah"]There's a less obvious, better question to ask here: "Where was George H.W. Bush, the current president's father, on the morning of 9-11?" Answer, "he admits himself that he was at the White House the night before, but says he flew to St. Paul Minnesota the next morning." (quoted from David Icke, ick.) He was in DC that morning after having spoken the previous evening for a meeting held by the Carlyle Group. The Carlyle Group speaker for 9-11 was actually King Fahd of the House of Saud, the royal family of Saudi Arabia. I speculate Cheney's location to have been Site R because I believe he went there, between 10:39 and 12:58, following former-President George Herbert Walker Bush (GHWB), who had flown there via Johnston, Pennsylvania, where his E-4 was seen circling low over the United 93 "crash" site at ~ 10:30 AM.[/quote]

I mean, look, if we say that, scheduled for the morning of 9-11, we have an ongoing, inter-departmental, military training exercise that involves crashing planes into buildings, then even if Cheney, by "standing down" the "shoot down" order, and Larry Silverstein, by cooperating as an un-witting accomplice before the fact, "LIHOP," then someone must have STARTED it. Someone MUST HAVE "Taken It Live." That's where GHWB comes in. He was, we know, ON THE SCENE. However, like at the Dallas school-book depository, his whereabouts are otherwise unaccounted for for the rest of the day. Either he is James Bond, the modern John Dee, a super-spy extraordinaire, or else HE DID IT.

So, we can divide and conquer: Dick and Larry in one camp, planted explosives before-hand. Dick was managing the war-games that morning. So he was on the scene, too. But he was playing the role of "cop in charge." Then we have, in another camp, GHWB. He was "on the scene," but his role was undefined. And the order of events determines how the house of cards falls: 1) WESCAM @ WTC. 2) Pent. explosion. 3) WTC7. "We," Larry Silverstein reminds us, "made the decision to go ahead and pull it." He's talking about WTC7, "pulled" later in the day on 9-11. So, by 5PM, Larry was in the loop. But it's also possible that his complicity in the war-game going "live" by having rigged the WTC twin towers with explosives was not pre-orchestrated by him with knowledge of its use in the "war-game" on 9-11. Unlikely, again, but possible and worth due consideration.

1) WESCAM, on scene, "takes it live."

2) Cheney, directly under GHWB via SS, bombs the Pentagon.

3) later in the day, by a safe-enough time to include him, Larry Silverstein "pulls" WTC Building 7.[/quote] Point 2) the prior-planning for 9-11, while having been co-ordinated between different groups or factions (Cheney in DC and Silverstein in NYC), was, most probably, entirely pulled off by one person.

[quote="benpadijah"]when I say GHWB was the first to dose, I mean I think he's the "head" of the "neo-cons." Now, I've said, I think it was GHWB who "went live" with the war-games. Why do I think this? WESCAM is the most important evidence. Because it proves 9-11 was an AREA 51 "arms" show. It was hosted by Halliburton and LERA at the Pentagon and WTC towers. They had a blast. It was hosted by the Carlyle group at STRATCOM by GHWB from an E-4. Starting to make sense yet? It's possible they would have initiated a complete global thermo-nuclear war if the Russians were still Soviet. It's probable they wish they could have while they were. But one dictatorship "out-crazied" the other. We elected GHWB, the man who shot Kennedy, President.[/quote]

Point 3) we might not want to believe that someone who has been a president of the United States himself could be behind the "terrorist attacks" of 9-11. But remember this was a coup-de-tat by a "shadow government" to replace our own with COG, that such coup-de-tats are usually staged by the CIA, and that, before being president, GHWB was director of the CIA.

[quote="benpadiiah"]Where there's mind-control, there's time travel. The mind is the mechanism that controls time. When the EM-field of the mind warps, the first distortions to be experienced are temporal.[/quote]

So, what are we looking at? What is GHWB's motive? If I'm actually saying, as I actually AM, that GHWB not only perpetrated 9-11, that is MIHOP, by "taking the war game live," but also killed President JFK, then what the fuck is he thinking? How on earth did he summon the POWER, the AUTHORITY, to become President, to rig his own son's election when he graduated to an office even higher than only the executive branch of the US government. Is it possible he wasn't AUTHORISED to shoot Kennedy? Did he call the world's "bluff," both that the CIA wasn't already, at that time, the dominant group in total global authority, and that not even the CIA would be able to stop ONE ROGUE AGENT? That's possible. Highly unlikely, but it could be true. It's entirely more likely that we are simply inside a universe that exists, at least in part, inside of GHWB's own mind. Just as he shares space with us bodily, his mind and our minds both exist within our bodies, and thus inside a single universe. And his mind is all screwed up on LSD....

It is possible for one person's mind that is warped on a drug to manipulate the mind of someone else who is not the same way as one person might manipulate another without any drugs being involved. The main difference is that, if one person whose mind is warped on drugs is manipulating millions upon millions of people via the television and the office of President of the "free world," then we're dealing with an abuse of our mental sovereignty that could very well be called criminal.

[quote="benpadiiah"]On 5/5/2000 the "neo-cons," who believed it would be necessary to murder a lot of people for the survival of only their own small group, planned 9-11-2001 in order to "jump-start" the survival of only a few mutants (as was the case prior to 2000) into the evolution of everyone all at once (as is believed will follow 12/21/2012). They have benefitted materially and psychologically as ushering out the "old" and in the "new" Age, in which Mutation is seen as the binary line between Fear -> War and Truth -> Love.[/quote]

So, GHWB, on LSD, planned 9-11. GHWB, in spite of the CIA, assassinated JFK to cover-up 9-11. If these events are true, if they really did occur this way, then we are living in a VERY different world than we think we are in our everyday lives. There are some extremely problematic questions that arise from this, and these can ONLY be answered with some extremely complex explanations. The easy way to understand it all is just to take LSD. If you take LSD, you'll be able to "tap into" the "universal mind" the same way as GHWB did when he took the first recreational dose in history. But just as Weishaupt only UNCOVERED a JESUIT PLOT, so did GHWB only UNCOVER the plot for 9-11 from those who pulled off the NAZI Reichstag Fire (ie. the German followers of the Bavarian Weishaupt). And hey, what do you know, the current Pope of the Catholic Church is Bavarian. And Kennedy was a Catholic choir-boy. You do the math on that one.

WHY? It's all part of a cycle, known only to the astrologers throughout all of history, that repeats itself every 2000 years. We don't know why it does this, at least not most of us. But if we look back throughout recorded history, 2000 years before 9-11, they crucified Christ; 2000 years before that was the rise of Babylon; 2000 years before that, the flood, and, we are told, about 2,000 years before the flood was the dawn of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden with the Trees of Knowledge and of Good and Evil. So, we have: 6000BC=Eden, 4000BC=flood, 2000BC=Babylon, 1AD=Christ, and 2000AD = 9-11. Why? Well, the answer isn't simple, because it's astrology, and not a lot of people know a lot about that. Astrology is one of those studies "frowned upon" by the traditional schools considered "sciences." But this is like Jacob for his "coat of many colours." According to Astrology, the planets align every 2000 years. Each cycle adds one more planet to the last cycle's alignment. So far, we have reached 7 cyclical alignments. We know there are only eight planets, including Pluto but excluding the sun and the moon, and so we predict that this seventh age will see an end put to human wars and the collective push to better ourselves as a species as we realise we have been destroying the earth ourselves until this point, but that our doing so is only in denial of a more real threat from off-world. Destroying earth is no way to avoid the coming of the eighth age, the age of Neptune, the final age before the age of Pluto and the crashing of a comet into our planet the Sumerians called Nibiru, but the Babylonians called Marduk. The word both these Iraqi cultures used to call earth was "TIAMAT." Their name for earth's moon was KINGU. This is all documented and agreed upon, even by mainstream scholars. You can go and look it up. It's in books, and they do still allow us to read.

Of course, we know it's all fiction, though, right? 6000 year old Sumero-Babylonian mythology that HAPPENS to describe the EXACT same plot-lines as movies we watch some 8000 years later (with the modern TIAMAT, earth, being saved from collision with NIBIRU not by MARDUK, but by Bruce Willis) combined with the astrological cycle explained to us nowadays as the "Age of Aquarius" and you have a dangerous truth disguised behind a delicate lie. This is not a movie we are watching. We have existed throughout many lifetimes, and simply dwelt in many different bodies, but we do have memories and consciousness of events that took place long before our own birth. History is a theatre we are all sitting in, watching current-events being played out on a stage. That much is true. But if those current events are not to our liking, such as on 9-11 when the "neo-cons" celebrated the 2000 year Apocalypse by mass-murder in the name of Molech, then we owe it to our fellow souls in the theatre to stand out from outside the roles we have chosen for this mere lifetime and shout out against the injustice perpetrated on-stage. We have to wake other people up and try to warn them about what's really going on![/quote]

Point 4) the motives for 9-11 span hundreds of centuries. In his own mind, GHWB is merely a minor pawn in the game of history.

[quote="benpadiiah"]Money inside banks is not being circulated on the free market. All money belongs to the free market. Therefore, money kept in banks is being stolen by individuals from the masses of the free market-place. Consider this: US politicians are renowned for making financial contributions to Zionist Israeli charities after their elections. This is because these same charities usually contribute heavily to their election campaigns beforehand. We can see thus how the cycle of election-buying is paid for in the US by a circulating financial insurance system that launders one generation's funds to the next through Israel. But what about those pesky Swiss banks? Is all that money really just SITTING THERE, not being circulated? If politicians' funds are kept fluid, then whose funds are sitting solid in Swiss banks?

Such is the difference in mentality between the majority of humans alive nowadays and the minority who we believe are in control. "They," we say, are responsible for how bad things are, and therefore "we," ourselves, cannot be held accountable. This mentality allows them their control. By our envying their gold, we place them in charge. But if we shift our balance of perceived value to something other than gold, such as, say, the fluid economy of credit-based capital, then we free our minds from those whose values we had placed in charge above ourselves previously. That's what a small number of us have done in each generation, and how that small group goes on to parent the rulers over the next generation of the masses. Hence, as I'd said, the "passing of the baton," which, as I'd mentioned occurred during GHWB's lifetime, was the meatmorphosis from the "solid" to the "fluid" reality for the masses between valuing gold and valuing credit-based capital.

In conclusion, let's look at the long-view. Fascism, or big-business globalism, is only a means to an end. The group of mutants in charge in each generation sees the same truth each time: to forward the historical trends of the masses. In this case, what we are seeing on 9-11 is VERY MUCH like what we saw with the crucifixion 2000 years ago. The small group of mutants (then the Sanhedrin, now the neo-cons) has created an elaborate mythology to temporarily distract the masses while that small group consolidates power. And, while 2000 years ago we actually couldn't see the Church becoming the Roman Empire itself as such a shift in the "flat earth" power-structure of our reality, now, 2000 years later, we CAN see the neo-cons staging 9-11 to assume authority over a global empire as such. We can choose now whether or not we will allow this to happen because now, 2000 years later, the sunspot-cycle's peak activity will be progressively greater than it was then. More planets aligned this time than last, hence more sunspots, hence more EM activity overall in earth's EM field, and thus a "higher" overall state of brainwave function now than then. In other words, the people of the world are now more unified than they were 2000 years ago, and so may be more able to prevent a neo-con global coup-de-tat than they were to prevent the same event by the Catholic cult 2000 years ago.[/quote]

Point 5) To imagine 9-11 having been pre-planned for 50 years is not as surprising when we consider it as part of the plan for world-domination of a cult at least 2000 years old.

[quote="benpadiiah"]the same morning Dick and Herb were flying sky-high on "Doomsday," there was a gold-heist going on in a tunnel below WTC5. And I can't help but wonder if the one thing might not have something to do with the other.[/quote]

Point 6) but why gold? Why are we being told "it's the oil, stupid" even by serious investigators, when all research into probable motive leads back to gold instead?

[quote="benpadiiah"]Just remember, the neo-cons value gold. To them, gold is power. So, who got the gold from 9-11? Silverstein got 2.2 billion worth to rebuild the towers. Cheney got alot of power if he can authorise the under-funded army to torture and the soft-kill weapon toting domestic police to kill. This power is funded by gold, but would 2.2 billion alone buy the ability to confuse the whole population of the globe on 9-11? Next, let's look at the gold-heist I've mentioned that occurred under WTC5 on 9-11. Because, just like 2.2 billion makes 3 million look like "chump change," so does 160 billion make 26 billion look the same. Did I say 160 BILLION? Yep, that's right. Stolen on the day of 9-11 from the crime-scene itself. All gold. 160 Billion. Oh, and by the way...? It had all originally belonged to Kuwait. Saddam stole it from them, we stole it from him, and then SOMEONE stole it on 9-11.

Whoever has the solid gold to raise the fluid reality of the public mind into credit-based capital is the same group of individuals responsible for planning and carrying out the events on 9-11.[/quote]

Point 7) gold can be rendered into a powder by super-heating. When this powder is ingested, it bonds with DNA. When gold bonds to DNA it makes the DNA into a conductive metal. When gold-DNA is exposed to electricity, it becomes a "super" conductor. Super-conductivity allows particles to be sped up faster than light without producing anti-matter. Therefore, gold-bonded DNA can be sped up to faster than light-speed when electrified. That's time-travel. Gold powers UFOs, UFOs allow time travel, and gold-DNA allows a time-traveller to become "immortal."

So, what is the Matrix? Control. Controlling Semitic oil keeps one hand too busy to know what the other hand is doing; meanwhile the other hand pockets the entire world's supply of gold. Semite oil supplies are chump change beside gold, but then, why did NAZIs invent gas-powered vehicles in the first place? Gold is to UFOs what oil is to cars. The entire point is to manage the discrepancy between "private" and "public" technologies like the credit and debit columns of a ledger. NAZIs need gold like the rest of us need gasoline. And there's far less gold on earth than gasoline. For that matter, there's far less gold now than there was several thousand years ago. And where is all this gold going? Again we have to ask where did all the bodies go on 9-11? The answer is no less shocking, really, than to say that GHWB killed Kennedy to cover-up the plan to steal NAZI gold on 9-11. Actually, the motive for NAZism, the JFK assassination, and 9-11 are all the same as the explanation for where the 9-11 victims went.

Time travel to another dimension. I know, I know. I sound crazy now.

-Jon

and, again, real quick before I go on about the gold, let me restate my assertions from the 9-11 Revisited thread to see how the NPT has changed them:

[quote="benpadiah"]A) there were no passengers on the planes and only as few workers as could not be avoided in the buildings that day. I believe the estimate of thousands of people killed (exactly how many thousand depending entirely on who you ask) is a complete lie.[/quote]

This is explicable by NPT. The original reason I said it was not because of any secret knowledge on my part about people being called and told not to fly or to come in to work on that day, either. That's pretty common knowledge by now. No, the reason I said it was because of a hunch I had at the time. I can't explain it exactly, but I can imagine being in a plane as it is piloted into a building, but there's something extremely strange and wrong with that. Namely, I shouldn't be able to in the first place. It shouldn't have ever happened, and so I shouldn't be able to imagine something like it ever happening. But wait, there's more... here's me going "out on a limb": Q: If a plane crashes on a border, where do you bury the survivors? A: you don't bury survivors. Clause A to answer 1: unless the survivors are missing and presumed dead. Like on 9-11. In which case, we "assume" they were shot in the head or gassed even if they did not die in a plane crash that never happened. Now, here's me going all the way out onto a twig of that limb: What if the people who "died" were only invented identities all along? A lot of people went missing, yes. And we have their relatives on the one hand. Then, on the other hand, we have another group of people that claim that the missing all died in a way we know they did not. So, what if the people who went "missing" were ONLY that? What if the group that claimed they were dead were the ones who were responsible for causing the event that supposedly killed them? If they lied the event ever happened, maybe they lied about the people having died. And let me just go WAY out onto the leaf of that stem here: what if the people who went missing were not only not dead on 9-11, AND were still alive now, but we simply couldn't see them? Sounding crazy? Here's two ways to explain what I mean: 1) the "higher dimension" theory of how, when we die, we ourselves do not notice any change, but we pass out of one universe, in which we leave behind mourners, and enter another, in which we live on. 2) the CIA captured the people and put them all into "witness protection" under a "gag order" that if they speak out, they will be killed. Which seems more likely to you? So now, let me ask again: if the "ghost" plane of 9-11 (really didn't) crashed on the "border" (between parallel realities), where do you bury the survivors? Well, for most of us who survived, the answer is: we bury our own heads in the sands of Iraq.

[quote="benpadiah"]B) the planes were remote controlled. For the actual collisions, small remotely operated guide-planes were used for exact targeting. (the UFO seen near the WTC, the "missile" in DC, and the "white jet" in Shanksville all attest to this fact.)[/quote]

These are the "mystery planes" (the Global Hawk "UFOs" and the WESCAM "Black Hawk" stealth helicopters). Now, here's a fun fact. I can, in retrospect, now easily imagine being on one of the "hijacked planes." They even made a movie about "United 93" to make this easier for me, as a US citizen. But there's something very wrong with this fact, even moreso than just that I can imagine it. No, what's "extra," "Super," Family-sized" WRONG about my being able to imagine myself on one of the "hijacked planes" is that, whether they themselves are fiction or not, I actually CAN'T imagine myself flying one of those WESCAM choppers. Which is weird, since it should be the other way around. What we, the world, were shown on 9-11 was footage supposedly shot by the WESCAM choppers. But LOOK at it Carefully. It moves smoothly in an arc around the WTC towers at the arc's centre. From every vantage. It never ascends, nor descends. It does not look upward nor downward. It just moves slowly to the left or the right. It's moving far more smoothly than any footage I've ever seen shot from airplanes, let alone a choppy helicopter. No, the WESCAM footage is weird because, even though it's what we all saw, I can't focus on it vividly. That's because of those few black-frames. That's what a single, dark-strobe would do. It would be just like the "neuraliser" used by the MIB in the movies. It's not just me either. Imagine being one of the jumpers above the floors where fires were. Okay, possible; not pleasant, but I think we can ALL imagine what jumping out of a building would be like. Now imagine being one of the people in the tunnel under WTC5 involved in the gold-heist. Surprise! You can't. Let me ask you then, where would you go to escape the falling building? Where does this "tunnel" come out at the other end? AHA. You don't know. Why? Because you aren't supposed to. You shouldn't even know about it in the first place, but if you do, it's probably only very vaguely and too dim to focus in on in detail. That's the difference between a well-told fiction, such as Star Wars, LOTR, or even the legend Santa Claus (originally dreamt up by Sears Robuck store), and a well-kept secret, hidden under an elaborate lie. We can visualise the fictional cover-story even better, as we are meant to, than we can discern the means, the ends and the motive behind the lie. And that's the point.

[quote="benpadiah"]C) I've spoken before about the drone planes I believe were used to override the cockpit controls. I believe these also used mind-control technology (VLF EMF and ZPE) to project inside the minds of the passengers the image of an attacker where none actually existed. The result of the drone plane's VLF EMF remote-control of the plane and mind-control of the pasengers (including the pilots and any potential "terrorists") was, and this is the most far-fetched and potentially shocking aspect of this theory, the appearance between the passengers and the empty cockpit of a hallucinated presence, the focal emphasis of the drone-plane's mind-control projection. To some this "being" would have appeared as like an angel of light, while to others it would appear as a small grey alien, while to others, it might have even appeared as "terrorists." The role of this "alien" presence was to nullify the passengers' capacity for resistance, to essentially confuse and numb them into compliance with the situation until it would be too late for them to prevent their fate. In three of the four cases this seems to have worked, however on UAL93 the passengers are believed to have attempted to "re-take" the cockpit.[/quote]

Why is this "attempting to retake the cockpit" important? More importantly than this question, why did no news network run with the eye-witness reports of "secondary, incendiary devices"? I remember hearing that phrase that day, but the phrase "retake the cockpit" did not become part of our common vernacular until after 9-11. Now, the question is why is one considered part of the Official Report of the Commission to Investigate 9-11 and the other not mentioned AT ALL? Well, I'll tell you why. It proves that, martyrs or not, the American People are Not Cowards. We simply wouldn't swallow a story in which 4 airliners were hijacked and crashed. And we wouldn't swallow a story that the 4th airliner was shot down mid-air and all aboard killed, because then we might doubt it was even hijacked to start with. It's obviously more important for us to think it was hijacked and that passengers "attempted to retake the cockpit" than it is to think it might not have been hijacked but was shot down. So, shot down or not, and whether or not the passengers did officially try to "retake the cockpit," what we are being led to believe, most importantly, is that the planes WERE hijacked. Why should we doubt this? Because those telling us this story were, in all probability, the people behind this disaster from the start. Why? Think about this: the longer I have to spend explaining to you things you are pre-conditioned not to believe, such as that no passengers tried to "retake the cockpit" because there were no passengers on the plane because there were no hijacked commercial airliners on 9-11, the less time I have to explain to you how I know what I know and why I've come to the conclusions I have. It's simple: psychological misdirection. Simple, but brilliant. So, let me get back to the little grey alien on the "plane." No wait, better: let me back up a couple of frames. Remember the "black screens" seen 'round the world? Right before them: plane. Right after them: explosion. So, if we say the explosion is real, but the plane is not; and if we say the "missing" survived; and if we say that EM-MK was employed; then what explanation can we imagine for all of these at once? More importantly, ASIDE from terminology like "UFO" (meaning cloaked, military aircraft) and "alien" (hitherto used by Q to refer to what I would call mutants, not aliens), what OTHER explanation IS there? I mean, as far-fetched as this sounds, I can explain "UFOs" and "aliens" better than I can even imagine the cover-story being true for 9-11. So, let me go back a few frames, right before the "black screen" Psy-Op. What do we see? We see a plane. But the plane isn't there. So, what is there instead? Clear sky, no plane, nothing. But we SEE the plane. We BELIEVE there WAS a plane. We saw it "with our own eyes." And our eyes can't be wrong, unless we are "tripping" or "crazy." So am I saying, everyone who saw a plane on 9-11 is tripping or crazy and that all our senses were simultaneously deceived by an incredibly nefarious villain, even more outlandish than Dr. No of James Bond fame and even more sinister and demonic than even Marilyn Manson or Aleister Crowley? Yes, that's what I'm saying. Yes, and no. I'm saying the villain was a mutant, and caused the illusion of an alien. Well, if you haven't already decided to write me off as a lunatic, as you probably should, since this view is in the extreme minority in our mutual, "consensus" reality, and on the off-chance you have pity on the insane, which you should not, then listen to me now, as Jesus listened to John the Baptist. That plane was real. But it's only real inside of all our minds. It has no objective, material substance. But the people on it are just as alive while they are onboard of it as we think they are. We think, therefore we are. And so, with the dead, the "missing," and the fictional / non-existent, we think, therefore they are. Ghosts exist inside our brains. They just do not have form without. These "ghosts" are as alive as any of us, they simply exist in a separate realm, one that is as real to them as the physical world is to us. And just as a child might hop from one puddle to the next, so can these mental-beings move about between our minds. This is called "memetics," whose slogan is "language is a virus." If we see or otherwise acknowledge this blatantly obvious fact, that of ESP, we are considered "tripping" or "crazy" or "mutants" and told that "ghosts and aliens and ESP aren't real," but that "Souls and God and Santa Claus are." So, the only question really IS, who are you going to believe - me, or your own eyes? I'll give you one last true clue though: if there were no passengers on the planes, because there were no real planes, then what would make me be able to think that the "passengers" were being subdued into subordination by a "ghost / alien" while the plane was being "remote-hijacked" by a UFO? Surely, by now, you don't think any of this sounds any crazier than the Official Report's story of Osama sending terrorists to kamikaze commercial planes, do you?

[quote="benpadiah"]D) the WTC buildings were destroyed by bombs planted inside the building prior to the event. This implies conspiracy. In truth, the people who planted these bombs inside were probably the former Iraqi Royal Guard, brought over after Gulf War I, who also orchestrated the OK City bombing in the late 90's. But this only provides a "fall-back" story of collusion between Al-Qaida and Iraq under Saddam that is not true either.[/quote]

There's something else I can't imagine: being the one who "pressed the button" to trigger the explosives in the second tower. This A) had to be synched to the "fake-nose" and B) implicates whoever did it in taking the "War-Game gone Live" past the point of no-return. This is the shot that killed Kennedy. This second tower explosion is the smoking gun, the magic bullet, the assassin's confession and the Zepruder film all in one. The second tower is 9-11's "Back and to the Left." And when Larry Silerstein says "WE made the decision to pull it," who does he mean exactly by "we"? Was the show tightly orchestrated like the military affair of the usual arms show? We know Carlyle hosted a teleconference meeting that morning at which the King of Saudi Arabia was scheduled to speak. Or was the show all fly-by-night, "spook" psy-ops and skunk works shoe-strings? Did it all just HAPPEN to come together so perfectly? Osama Bin Laden alone couldn't have orchestrated 9-11 so precisely. The question, to my mind, remains: why can I imagine being on a hijacked plane on 9-11, which actually DIDN'T happen, and yet I CAN'T imagine being the one to have blown up tower two, even though that really DID happen. Answer, simply: being a victim is easier to imagine for most of us than being a hero, and even that isn't as difficult as our merely imagining what it is like to have been one of the villainous traitors who pulled 9-11 off. It's far easier, isn't it, to just write them off as "mutants" or "aliens," and easier still to simply fall for their Official story, that it was just little old Osama Bin Laden, mere mortal, and Semite to boot.

[quote="benpadiah"]E) The events were entirely orchestrated by parties inside the CIA commanding the rest of the intelligence "community" and defense dept. via their "man in the White House" the coup-de-tat dictator Pres. W. Bush. Consider that, under GHWB, our current president's father, the CIA funded: 1) the Afghan Mujahadeen who became the Taliban and Al Qaida, 2) Saddam Hussein's Iraqi National Guard, and were in turn themselves funded largely by the sales of crack cocaine imported and processed from S. American cocaine (under Noriega), poppy grown in war-torn Afghanistan, imported and processed into heroin, and by the House of Saud, the potentates of the worst human rights violators around today beside China, and oil-rich Saudi Arabia. Also note that, since GWB's ascension as appointed dictator, the people who had worked for his father GHWB in the CIA to orchestrate these transfers of funds have all gotten appointed to the highest positions of political authority in the land of the "free." Big. Red. Flag. [/quote]

Again, summing up: the neo-cons employed Area-51 tech to implement COG. This is the "crossing of the Rubicon" for GHWB among the secret elite. His son, George "Dubya," will go down in history only as the second American Caesar. We have little hope of George turning on his dad, and far, far less hope of GHWB turning on the discorporeal, mind-hopping, body-jumping spirit of Satan that possesses him. As an Episcopalian, GHWB doesn't believe in Catholic Exorcism. So, again, separating this group of mutant-minded human slaves of one, Satanic, group-mind from their techno-gadget toys they showed some of off on 9-11, while keeping others to themselves, what we have is simply a small cadre of political infiltrators who, like the cult of the Hashashins, or "assassins," whose name derived from Moslem use of (S. American?) cannabis resin, have staged a silent coup-de-tat and, "legally" (by making the laws themselves), have established a secret dictatorship of the state on-par in its rapid scope and scale with the 2000 year elder Roman Catholic church. We can soon imagine cults forming proclaiming W. the "second-coming." In some circles of the business-press the question of "Washington's Messianic Mission" to convert Iraq to Christianity, has already been raised. So is it so difficult now to see that GHWB is the "beast of revelations," that W. is its offspring, Lucifer, the "anti-Christ," and that the political cult of the neo-cons are merely using the "neo-Sethian" myth of Jesus' "second coming" to manipulate themselves into a position of authority over the universal force of time itself? But do not worry. The Great Burner will rescue us just in the nick of time. The sunspot cycle is winding up more tightly every day. Soon it will pop and the solar flares explode mind-altering radiation across the earth. All our eyes will open, and the ones who've been blinding us all along will burn. If you understand the causes for the sunspot cycle, and have charted these causes on a calendar, then you will see that John of Patmos having been able to predict such a political coup-de-tat occurring after 2000 years is less astonishing than the Catholic Christians subsequently taking credit for having "saved" the Roman political empire by converting it into a "harmless" church until now, that is, the end of that 2000 year time. So, soon, we will all be "crazy," and what I'm saying NOW will make Einstein and Hawking look like grinning liars. But maybe you still don't see where I'm going yet. "On the one hand, gold, on the other, time-travel," is that it? Likewise, you probably believe there would have to be "competing factions" within the "conspiracy." Well, there are, and right now the neo-cons have come to power over the rest of them. But gold and time-travel are one issue, and no matter how many minor factions comprise the con, they are only a small minority (even when all combined) compared to the rest of "unevolved" humanity. And there are only two mentalities available for these mutant psychics. Either the con: kill the unevolved; or the rev: evolution for all. So, the neo-cons, or the "neo-Sethians" as I've called them elsewhere, are only one, very elite group (like Hitler's SS), within an upper echelon of economic pirates who believe themselves "above" us, that is, "we, the people." We can't liberate ourselves, however, without using "brute force," and thus justifying the wealthy owners continuing oppression of the rest of us as a mass aggregate. So, we have to wait, and keep hoping one group will turn against the other, and either the neo-cons will go "too far" to help one of their number more than all the others, thus pissing off the rest of them, or else for the rest of the intelligentsia to stand up and do something to prevent their own rightful executive administrative positions from being subsumed into a militarily technocratic Plutocracy.

[quote="benpadiah"]F) the faction within the CIA in charge of 9-11 are actually fascists and NAZI-collaborators both during and after WWII, and they are acting in collaboration with a vast network of double-agent spies and "sleeper" agent politicians all funded off Swiss gold stolen during WWII, which was, itself, in turn orchestrated by globalist banking families as a means of furthering the social control-method of capitalism. (The old bankers also funded the Soviet communists though, so don't think of this as only a "right-wing" conspiracy either.)[/quote]

Of course, and again this is not common knowledge though it should be, Fascism and National Socialism are both not only different from one another, but neither is an accurate description for Hitler's actual ideology. Fascism is state-side, or "supply-side" economics. This is according to the early 20th century economic theories of John Maynard Keynes. You can look him up on wikipedia. He predicted there would form in the twentieth century two main schools on economics. One, since the late fifties, is represented by the Rand school under Allen Greenspan. It recommends fiscal conservatism for certain sectors of the private market, and "laissez faire" or non-taxed and non-tariffed international trade. This is called "demand-side" or "private sector" economics. The other school predicted by Keynes, "state-side" or "supply-side" economics, is mainly involved in countries with a strong dictatorship, such as under "Iron Joe" Stalin in the USSR and under Ronald Reagan in 1980's America. Both glut-funded their national defense industries, spending billions of government (ie. tax-payer) money to build so many "dirty" (radioactive) WMDs and ICBMs that they could ONLY EVER be useful in a "zero-sum" Doomsday "end-game." So when you think of "fascism" you can imagine the quaint early-20th century slogans of "el Duce" like "make the trains run on time," or you can look at the facts on file for "Fascism," that it continued on after WWII as "big business" continued to benefit from government largesse, both from soft-line anti-tax and tariff legislation (NAFTA, GATT, WTO, IMF, etc.), and from hard-line "hawkish" military industry, state-side glut-funding. Fascism is the philosophy of "big business," to put it simply. Now, Fascism was, in WWII, allied with National Socialism. But if "fascism" is "the philosophy of big business," why would it ally itself with German Socialism, the philosophy of Marx, Communism and the Soviet Union, who were enemies to the death of fascism and of "big business"? Well, because "National Socialism" and German "Social Democracy" were, like "supply-" and "demand-" side spending, two completely different schools of thought. German Social Democracy was, like our own Democratic party used to be, for government social-welfare programs and political involvement in economic "cheques and balances" such as "earnings and income caps" on big business. This group fell out of favour beside Hitler's NASDAP (German Workers) Party, whose declared school of philosophy was "National Socialism," a philosophy more in keeping with Lenin's militant unto imperialism spread to neighboring nations of the "workers'" Revolution. National Socialism was, however, designed to be contrary not only to German Social Democracy, but also to Leninist International Sovietism. National Socialism could be likened to a combination between "big business" fascism and "patriotic" German nationalism. The result of "National Socialism" was, just as was that of Reaganomics and Stalinism the bankrupting of the US and Soviet empires, to ultimately destroy all pride in German national unity, and, again as with both Italian Fascism AND Leninist International Sovietism, ended alongside 6 million dead Semites and Socialists in Holocaust concentration-camps across Europe. But what we swore to never let happen again when we formed the UN and founded Israel as a diaspora-Semite sanctuary-state was ONLY the Holocaust. We obviously fought Mussolini and Hirohito, but "we" (the CIA) subsequently adopted their strategies of "big business" / statist imperialism and implimented them at home and abroad. No, when "we" (the United States soldiers and the people of the world) defeated Hitler and eradicated the NAZI menace, we only bothered to try them for crimes against humanity perpetrated as the extermination of their own citizens. We didn't try them for their OTHER, equally horrendous crimes during their rise to political dominance, such as their Draconian legislation the "Reichstag Fire Decree" which authorised NAZI phone-line wire-tapping, passed in 1933. So, nowadays, the modern equivalents of the 1940's German NAZIs, who share the same idealogies as Mussolini (Fascism), Hirohito (imperialism) and Hitler (mass Eugenics), can pass legislation identical to the Reichstag Fire Decree, and call it the "PATRIOT Act," and get away with it, just so long as the drugs they dump into our drinking water aren't immediately lethal chemical poisons. Let me explain something to you about Hitlerian Eugenics: The Jews consider themselves the people "Chosen By God" to bear the burden of the suffering of the rest of humanity. Such was the plight of their Messiah, who many believed was crucified as part of a magical ritual to purge the world of sin and sorrow. The reason Jesus is rejected as the Messiah by the Jews is obvious: he did not end sin and sorrow. He promised the "meak" the "kingdom of heaven." So, by Hitler's reasoning, he was only delivering to the Jewish "Chosen People" the "kingdom of heaven" promised by Christ, their Messiah. That, in a nutshell, is Hitlerian Eugenics. It was Hitler's own idealogy, that of state-sponsored population-decreasing, that "we" stamped out in WWII. But the correspondent war-strategies of Fascism and Imperialism we have since employed in the business sectors of the US and other "allied" nations, simply calling them polite euphemisms such as "international capitalism" for Fascism and "corporate out-sourcing" for the big business of imperialism. However, as I shouldn't need to remind you, the Rothschilds and Rockefellers were behind BOTH German NAZlism AND Leninist International Sovietism. Their plan all along was to discredit two birds with one stone: on the one hand, "Nationalist Socialism," a philosophy that could, very well, have worked had it ever been implemented (we may never know now), and, on the other hand, the growing threat to the wealthiest elites of international trade-unionism, the back-bone of the Communist movement.

[quote="benpadiah"]G) The banking families, in turn, where only employing the methods of private-interest consolidation of public wealth via sales (as opposed to taxes) that was employed via the Knights Templar (actually funded via the national rulers by the Vatican) during the Crusades, which in turn was then used to justify the Inquisition. This method of "killing the messenger" was employed to discredit the non-Zionist Diaspora (by the Holocaust), Nationalised Socialism (ie. Leninism), "fascism" (ie. gov't supply-side spending, later used by Reagan to bankrupt Russia by glutting the defense industry) as well as far-east "Imperialism" (ie. non-economic dictatorships) all in one fell swoop during WWII. In the Cold War they managed to discredit "Sovietism" as "collectivism" while making "Americanism" out to be "individualism" when in truth the opposite was true. The same effect has been used "covertly" (going un-covered by the US media) since then by the CIA to overthrow democratic politicians and install loyal political supporters of US business interests. I "believe" the same group has been behind all of these atrocities between the Crusades then and the current "war" in Iraq now. Moreover, this is only an active wing of a group whose passive wing was simply more dominant 2000 years ago than it is now. The group that the "active" (sun-crazed destroyers) wing and the "passive" (dark-ages, Maudner-minimum) wing belong to is a group of scientists that, and again this is only my "belief" or "theory," pre-existed the world-flood(s) at the end of the last ice-age (ie. originally the first homo-sapien chieftens, later called "Atlanteans," who we considered "primitive" and yet who erected the massive megaliths of that era no less than the highly civilised empire of Old Kingdom Egypt their own.)[/quote]

Now, I've gone over the WWII-era economic / political schools and theories enough already to justify not coming back to them again for a while. Instead, I want to talk about the beginning of economics and politics, which immediately followed the dicoverly of the utility for mass-control of organised religion. Politics is not "of the people, by the people and for the people" now anymore than it was when it began. Politics was, is, and probably always will be, a chess-game played out exclusively by the wealthy elite. They are the players, and they use each other like chess-pieces to manipulate the choices for moves that can be made by their competitors. That's what "politics" is, and we all know that, because we've had 6000 years to learn that fact. In all that time, there have only been three, true, died-in-the-wool proponents of Democracy to come along. Solon, who invented Greek Democracy; Thomas Jefferson, father of the American Constitution; and Karl Marx, who believed in an anarchist utopia to follow a revolution overthrowing the imperialist dictators. To say this group of dictators has been the same since the era of Shaherazad is misleading at best. There are rival factions, and they compete for the position of temporary dominance and authority over the rest. If politics belongs to the king's court, then it is certainly no place for a king who wants to do the will of their own people. No, politics occurs between the people behind religion. They tell you, "worship the king, he is God on earth," but behind the scenes they chide us all (including the king) for falling into this dumb-show, their "trap," while they secretly live off the fat of the land via church, state and finally national taxation. They invented the false mythologies of religion (Jonah and the Whale, David and Goliath, the parting of the Red Sea, the resurrection of Lazarus, the virgin-birth, etc) in order to distract the "public mind" away from their own true intentions, which have got nothing to do with either the fictional mythologies concealing astrology nor the sheepish, mass mind-control moralities they teach. They invented the political infrastructure of the State and, by levying church taxation against it, immediately put it into the debt that would necessitate State taxation of its people to this day. Finally, when States could no longer confine and control their burgeoning masses within their imaginary borders, the need to indebt and tax whole nations began to become a necessity. At this point, the "token-exchange" system of capital was created. By making value into a third-party object, aside from and above the worth of any bartered goods or service, they created the ultimate tool for creating a low-level of unconscious servitude in the minds of everyone but themselves. And this was when they became psychic. All of this took place in ancient Sumero-Akkadia at the heart of the "Fertile Crescent" between the rivers Tigris and Euphrates, in what we call in the modern day, Iraq. So, what are the "real motives" behind the "Wii" (war in Iraq)? To destroy the historical records of the origins of civilisation and thus to bring under their complete control, from its newly rediscovered beginning to its current forms today, the entirety of the history of this tri-partite cult. On one hand, you could say, you have the Egyptian religious aspect, the Greek ideal of government city-states and the Roman unification of both in the form of an ideological dictatorship, the "free" market of currency exchange. On the other hand, you could just call the founders the "Babylonian Brotherhood" and be done with it. But either way, you won't get any argument out of me if you say the original founding members didn't first imagine their entire enterprise in tri-partite social-control systems from stem to stern and design every last little historical inch, every "grassy knoll" nook and "conspiracy theory" cranny, long before they ever put their "water-tight," bitumen-bonded theories into practical launch. And again, all of this started, we are told by historians, in Sumeria. We are told that, "as if from nowhere" civilisation suddenly sprung up in Sumeria "fully-formed," with the church-headed, left-wing economic and right-wing political factions already in functional operation. There is no explanation given for this, truthful, miracle. But there's something the "Babylonian Brotherhood" doesn't want you to know. There had been a flood just before Sumeria was founded, and before the flood was when "civilisation" had first been formed and flourished. It would probably seem quite alien to us now what times must have been like then. Politics and religion would, of course, be quite different if there were no such thing as "token" money to exchange as symbolic-only "value." I write about this elsewhere in great detail, but here it only needs be said that the ones to invent money survived the floods of 8000 years ago and created a complex social-control system that has continued to function, nearly absolutely unaltered, through until the modern day. You can call them whatever name you want, the "Babylonian Brotherhood," the "Illuminati," the "Order of Death." But though the ones to have originally invented money, politics and religion to serve themselves may have indeed foreseen every imaginable consequence and circumstance that could occur within their carefully orchestrated system, it is NOT they themselves who live on in the hearts and souls (ie. minds and bodies) of the ones to use their same methods of social-control now today. The "Babylonian Brotherhood" are neither "reptile aliens" nor "extra-dimensional bloodlines" nor "bodiless djin (genies)" nor are they demons serving Satan that can leap about from mind to mind possessing the minds of people anywhere they go. No, the dead died and that's that. There may indeed be a single, unified consciousness, collectively self-aware or not (yet), that can manifest in any of us, for our species, or for our planet, or even for our entire universe. But none of these are ultimate Good nor Evil. In other words, there are spirits a'plenty, but no proof of God or the Devil.

[quote="benpadiah"]H) these ancient conspirators discovered the existence of a global energy grid that has allowed them to mind-control the masses and to time-travel themselves. I call this elsewhere the "Enochian Communications System" because it was first understood by homo-sapiens at the time of this biblical patriarch (ie. before the world-flood) and because it is based on John Dee's "Enochian" system as a framework for combining all the existing world religious "systems" into one, based not on myth and faith but on an extremely long calendar and a very high form of science (essentially, the study of esoteric systems for its own sake).[/quote]

The Enochian Communications System (ECS)

<http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=436>

The Atlantean Calendar

<http://www.benpadiah.com/calendar.html>

So, again, what is the Matrix? Is the Matrix the energy grid / network that interconnects all our minds, collectively interweaving a complex tapestry that is then, like wool, used only to cover our eyes? Is the Matrix the ECS? Again, yes and no. The ECS is meant for us to use for "over-the-horizon" psychic-communication. It was never intended to be used as an illusion. However, the "Painted Sky," that is, "Dreamtime" for "Dreamland," is indeed being used, even right this very second, to portray fiction, combined with some truth, in order to confuse and subdue the audience, to keep them entertained with lies, in order to prevent them from revolting against the "nerd running the projector" and putting the whole machinery of the system to use for themselves instead.

And, again, what is the Matrix? Let's look at the "phantom" United 175, the "plane" that "crashed" into the second tower. This is the one we all saw on TV. So, with the exception of only three other pieces of footage I know of that show the first tower "plane impact," this is the one that every damn reporter of every goddamn network news station has cooed and swooned over, covered from every imaginable angle by WESCAM, which JUST HAPPENED to be on-site and ready-to-go on 9-11. If we say, this plane is just a video image. It is not "real." Does this make our initial "belief" in it suddenly stop, like turning off a faucet, or even reverse, as it should?

So, what, then, is the Matrix? The Matrix is like a number-line. Our spine is one that has seven chakras. A virus is one that is usually base-six shaped, with six legs and a hexagonal head. A battery is one that has only two ends, at polar extremes of each other, either negative or positive. And the "phantom" UA175 is another. Between one "pole" of the "phantom" 175 "number-line," that is, the aft of the plane, and the other "pole" of the number-line, the fore of the "phantom" plane, there is, like the shape of the spine, the virus, the battery, the plane, a number-line, a tube or tunnel connecting them. The fore of the plane leads to salvation, and if you stay at the aft, you will surely die. But between you and salvation is the creator of this crisis situation threatening your very existence. Again, we see the Hicks / Darko / Icke angle of "fear v. love," shape up, because, in this binary polarity "number-line" model we are only looking at life through the eyes of a trilobyte: either "approach" or "retreat." This psychological mechanism for basic survival, Dr. Leary associates with the lowest of the eight "circuits" of consciousness in living, organised cellular structures.

Again. What is the Matrix? It is like a cocoon, a "chrysalis" inside of which we are transformed. Like a crucible that burns away impurities, this "tunnel-reality" between the "Dark-Side" at the back of the plane and the guiding "Force" at the front is the "trial by fire" that leads out of our own material universe and into the parallel dimension, long called a "better place" and "Heaven." But this passage is, like the gateway to Eden and the Trees of immortality and of God / the Devil, "guarded by an angel with a flaming sword." At least, so they say. But then, as I've just, hopefully, helped illustrate, our world is actually very different beneath it than it is on the surface we perceive. There is "more than meets the eye," not only on 9-11, but everyday before and since then too. We filter out most of reality because, we are Told, if we did not, the superfluous stimulus would overload our sensory apparatus. Of course, anyone who's ever "tripped," or gone on vacation in insanity and returned, can tell you this is not necessarily the case. The ECS can be used to communicate psychically, and not only to broadcast delusions reinforcing control.

Finally, what is the Matrix? It is a chain only as strong as its weakest link. And that weakest link is Tower Two. Everything about tower two, from the fact it was not really struck by a plane, as we "saw" on television, to the fact its collapse surprise-ended the gold-heist under building five, is a mystery. Whoever "pulled" Tower Two also pulled off the "live-action" war-game / gold-heist of 9-11. The Matrix is mass mind-control causing the impression of its own invincibility and infinitude, "shock" and "awe." But there's a way out of this Matrix. Think back to 9-11 now and let's set our sights on Tower Two; and buckle your seat-belts; we're going underground.

Now, about that gold...

There's really two separate points here, which is basically what I've been driving at all along. There's 1) the fluid, capital value of the gold. This changes, and I'll come back to that. Then there's 2) the solid, physical location of the gold. This is the other side of this mysterious "coin." First, let me talk about the solid aspect, the physical location of the gold. Then, afterwards, I'll discuss the fluid value of the gold.

So, first, the physical location of the solid gold. We know the Vault for the Bank of Nova Scotia (BNS)'s $230m was rented out to them by New York Mercantile Exchange (NYMEX). It was under Building 4. Between Church Street and Building 4 is Building 5. That's the layout. Now, where was the gold found?

[quote="NYDN"]Sources said the lode was found in the basement under 5 World Trade Center. Construction workers directed by the feds had been clearing a delivery tunnel that runs under the complex for the past couple of days. Officials got to the gold through that tunnel yesterday, after workers hauled out a 10-wheel truck, several crushed cars and mounds of other debris. No bodies were recovered during the operation.

[/quote]

-source: http://www.nydailynews.com/archives/news/2001/10/31/2001-10-31\_cache\_of\_gold\_found\_at\_wtc\_t.html

So, workers chopped into the pre-existing tunnel (connecting the Vault under WTC4 and Church St.) from the side, between Buildings 4 and 5. But it is very specific where the gold was found. "... the lode was found in the basement under 5WTC." So, workers dug into the service tunnel from the side. That's fine. So, imagine we are going into a cavernous hole in the ground. Inside of that is a tunnel that leads off to our right and our left. On the left is WTC5. On the right is WTC4. So, first we would go to the Vault entrance under WTC4. What did they find when they went to the Vault area at the end of the tunnel under WTC4?

[quote="NYT"]November 1, 2001

a government official involved in the recovery efforts said that there had clearly been an attempt within the last two weeks to enter the vault area. "It looked like they used a blowtorch, a crowbar," said the official, who spoke on the condition that neither his name nor his position be identified.[/quote]

-source:

<http://query.nytimes.com/gst/fullpage.html?res=990CE4DB1030F932A35752C1A9679C8B63>

So someone had been in the Vault area with a crowbar and a blowtorch. But this means the vault must have been sealed still by the time the gold was recovered, right? Look carefully at what the "government official" (obviously either FBI or SS, the only two "official" groups on-site beside the local rescue teams) says though. They are being interviewed on the night of Oct.31st, but they say, "within the last two weeks" someone had tried to break into the "vault area." The "vault area" would not be the same exact thing as the tunnel itself. However, the "vault area" could only be accessed within the tunnel. So, someone would have had to have access by the tunnel to WTC4 from Church St. to get to the "vault area." And, we are told, this happened "within the last two weeks" (ie. 5 weeks subsequent to 9-11). Here's a good question: if the bandits had accessed the "vault area" 5 weeks after 9-11 by the tunnel via Church St. then why would they not have discovered the gold under WTC5? Hmm. Perhaps there's something even MORE important being overlooked.

[quote="Irish Examiner"]

Workers had toiled for two days to clear a delivery tunnel under 5 World Trade Centre, taking out tonnes of debris, a 10-wheeled lorry and several crushed cars. Watched by hundreds of heavily-armed Secret Service agents, FBI and police, they built a ramp to allow an armoured truck in late last night.[/quote]

-source: <http://archives.tcm.ie/irishexaminer/2001/11/01/story16174.asp>

Now, imagine going from the "vault area" at the end of the tunnel under WTC4 down the tunnel back towards the hole where we'd come in. Now go even past that, beyond the hole we'd come in through. Go down to the other end of the tunnel, towards Church St. We're about to enter the basement under WTC5 where the BNS $230m was found. Just to get our bearings once more, we're now in the tunnel, between WTC4's underground Vault, and the basement of WTC5, where the gold was found. So, what do we find between these two very important locations?

[quote="UK Times Online"]The gold, which was discovered on Tuesday, was being transported through the basement of the building on the morning of September 11. Recovery workers reached a service tunnel and discovered a ten-wheel lorry and a number of cars which had been crushed by falling steel.[/quote]

-source: http://911research.wtc7.net/cache/wtc/evidence/timesonline\_gold.html

Between WTC4 and WTC5, in the tunnel connecting the WTC4 Vault to Church St., we find several "crushed cars" and, specifically, a TEN-WHEELED TRUCK. Now, we can rule out the idea that these cars were the CIA impounded taxis under WTC6, and it's equally unlikely that cars, alone, would have been able to transport the $230m from the BNS vault under WTC4 to where it was found in the basement of WTC5. The gold and silver would simply be too heavy. Hence, the need for the 10-wheeled truck, which, it is safe to assume, would not have been in the tunnel for any reason other than having something to do with transporting the gold. However, it might just be conjecture on the part of the reporter that the gold was being transported on the morning of 9-11 itself. It is known that the molten steel had pooled in the basements below WTC1 and 2, and that this continued to smoulder for 99 days. Perhaps the cars and 10-wheeled truck were crushed during late October, when the un-named "government official" speculated the break-in to the vault under WTC4 was attempted.

[quote="Loose Change"]

So let me get this straight, gold from World Trade Center 4 was found under World Trade Center 5 in an empty delivery truck, with an empty escort of cars. I think it is safe to say that they were running away from the South Tower. The question is, how did they know to flee from the stash when not even the firefighters inside the South Tower expected it to collapse.[/quote]

-source:

https://home.pacbell.net/skeptica/loose\_change\_second\_edition\_a\_critical\_review\_of\_the\_gold\_story\_segment.html

Again, the QUESTION IS: why would someone try to break into the WTC4 vault 5 weeks later when the gold was actually under WTC5? And the most likely ANSWER IS: they wouldn't. They would have seen the gold if they had entered the tunnel from the Church St. side, under WTC5. So, what are we looking at here, really? The most likely scenario is that the "blowtorch and crowbar" attempted break-in occurred at the same time as the cars and 10-wheeled truck were crushed and the gold was moved from the Vault under WTC4 to the basement under WTC5, on 9-11. We can even tell what time the cars would have been crushed. 10AM, when the South Tower (second to have been hit, first to fall) collapsed.

Okay, so, that's enough right now for the "crime-scene" itself. We have gold supposed to be in WTC4 found under WTC5, along with cars and a 10-wheeled truck that were crushed at 10AM, 9-11. However, apparently, by Nov1, when the gold is taken out from under WTC5, the vault door beneath WTC4 was still sealed up tight enough to withstand crowbar and blowtorch. We could say, well, since the vault was sealed, the location of the gold is a mystery. But then, the witness to the vault being sealed was an anonymous "government official" with a probably spurious timeline on the "attempted" break-in. There's no mystery at all if we simply exclude the anonymous official's testimony. If we say, the vault door was not intact, then all the rest adds up: your typical, old west-style bank-job.

Next, let's look at the fluid value, the worth of the loot.

[quote="UK Times Online"]The Comex metals trading division of the New York Mercantile Exchange kept 3,800 gold bars — weighing 12 tonnes and worth more than $100 million (70 million UKP) — in vaults in the building's basement. Comex also held almost 800,000 ounces of gold there on behalf of others with a value of about $220 million. It also held more than 102 million ounces of silver, worth $430 million. The Bank of Nova Scotia, which kept gold in the Comex vault, reported $200 million of gold lost in the wreckage. Comex also held precious metals for Chase Manhattan Bank, the Bank of New York and Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking.[/quote]

-source: http://911research.wtc7.net/cache/wtc/evidence/timesonline\_gold.html

Okay, well, since this math can seem a little fuzzy, let me try to break this down as simply as possible. NYMEX kept gold in WTC4 (we know they held "at least" $1b in Kuwaiti gold at the time of the 1993 basement bombing). NYMEX let some of the Vault space to their Comex metals trading division, who used it to store even more gold. These are the 3,800 gold bars, totalling 12 tonnes and worth "more than" $100m. Comex then, in turn, leased some of their space in the Vault over to several other banking and credit institutions. Supposedly, this only totalled 800,000 ounces of gold, worth $220m, and "more than" 102m ounces of silver, worth $430m. Some of these banks included Chase Manhattan, Bank of New York and Hong Kong, Shanghai Banking and Canadian-based Bank of Nova Scotia (BNS). Now, aside from the holdings of these other, older, more prestigious and MUCH Wealthier banks, the holdings of gold, silver, platinum and palladium (precious metals) in the WTC4 Vault of BNS ALONE totalled ~ $230m. As it turns out, this number, like every other figure I just listed, is a VAST UNDERSTATEMENT.

First, let's look at some figures. Then we'll get down to the Bottom Line. First we ask, what was the value of the gold when it was lost. Then we ask, what was the value of the gold at the time it was recovered. Then we ask, what is the difference between these values. If the cost of gold has risen since then, interest can be charged on the missing gold during the time it was out of circulation. This is called "loss of potential revenue." So, let's get right down to this.

Q) what was the price of gold on 9-11-2001?

A) the morning of 9-11 the value on the gold market opened at about $271.5 per ounce. However, by the close of the gold market for the day, the value had jumped to $286.5. That's a jump of $15 PER OUNCE.

Here's a nice little chart from our friends at Kitco bullion dealers, straight from the London Fix accountants themselves:

[img]<http://www.kitco.com/LFgif//ausep01.gif>[/img]

You can see the sharp SPIKE in the value of gold between the blue diamond for AM and the red square for PM on 11-Sep, for the year 2001. I think we all know why.

By comparison, here's a chart for the value of silver for the year 2001. Notice that silver is worth less than gold, but that it remains at a steadier rate most of the time than gold in its rough estimate of value.

[img]<http://www.kitco.com/LFgif//agsep01.gif>[/img]

We don't see the same sharp spike for 9-11, but, between 17-Sep and 20-Sep we see the value of silver turn over from holding steady at around $4.20 per ounce to climb to nearly $4.65 an ounce. That's a pretty steep slope for only a 4 day period. Still, it's pennies on the dollar beside the spike in the price of gold.

So, we can calculate the rough cost of gold and silver for the amounts given as holdings by BNS both on the morning and evening of 9-11, and compare these to their value at the time they were recovered and restored to market availability. Obviously, we'll see a significant difference, and thus the worth of BNS' investment grow drastically in less than 12 hours.

opening (9-11, 2001): 379,036 ounces of gold (held by BNS) valued at $102,718,756.

closing (9-11, 2001): the same 379,036 ounces (held by BNS) valued at $108,404,296.

accrued interest (9-11, 2001): the value of those 379,036 ounces (held by BNS) increases by $5,685,540. In One Day.

In other words, on 9-11, BNS ALONE made $5m. But wait. Who pays that? And more importantly, Why? Wouldn't it seem like, if you don't sell anything (ie. the gold itself at the increased rate), you can't make any profit by earnings? There's this loop-hole though, where the Insurance Company who holds the contract on the leased space has to kick in the difference. And that's the Blackstone Group, and we're back to Larry Silverstein again, who, himself alone, settled with the Insurance Company for $2.2b. Let's toss out a couple more figures just to see how this all adds up.

value of silver on 9-11 = $125,459,573.61 for 29,942,619 ounces (held by BNS) combined value of gold and silver morning 9-11 held by BNS: $228,367,847.61 combined value of gold and silver by close 9-11 held by BNS: $233,863,869.61

So, we're talking about a difference in price of between $228m and $233m. This averages out to $230m, which, we are told, is about what was recovered under WTC5 and then returned to BNS.

Now, we know the gold was recovered between Oct. 30th and Nov. 1st, but we also know it wasn't all accounted for by BCS until around Nov. 10th. So, let's look, again, at the value of gold between Nov. 1st and 10th, to see what the difference will be between the value on 9-11 and the value on Nov. 10th, when it was officially recirculated.

Nov. 12th, the first Monday following the gold's return, reads the market price of gold opening at $277+ per ounce, but, by closing, that value has, again jumped, up to a solid $280 per ounce. Following this there is a steady decline in the value for the rest of the month, however, notably, the gold price in Nov. never drops below $272 per ounce, the same value it was on Sep. 5th, before 9-11. Here's a kitco chart:

[img]<http://www.kitco.com/LFgif//aunov01.gif>[/img]

So, basically what we're seeing is the price of gold taking a "wild ride" between 9-11 and when the BNS gold was recirculated. In late Sep, gold was peaking around $294 per ounce, but had relatively stabilised around $279 per ounce by early Nov. So, if I were a bank, and I wanted to maximize returns from an insurance company...

The difference in cost between gold per ounce on the morning of 9-11 and the evening of Nov. 8th, is a difference between potential gain of (at least) $15 (AM to PM 11-Sep) and potential depreciation of $9.5 (PM 11-Sep to AM 12-Nov). Result: no less than $5.5 gain PER OUNCE above the initial value of 11-Sep AM. Paid for by the Blackstone Group's Insurance Company. So, one last round of math:

$379,036 \text{ ounces} = $271.5 \text{ per ounce} + $5.5 \text{ per ounce}$

This adds up to a value for the final investment equivalent to BNS having bought an additional 3,267.01009208103 ounces at its 9-11 AM price of $271.5. Only they didn't buy it. They made it for free.

The Bottom Line:

BNS starting sum: $228,367,847.61(9-11, AM)

11.844875 tonnes (gold) = 379,036 ounces @ $271.5 = $102,908,274

935.70684375 tonnes (silver) = 29,942,619 ounces @ $4.19 = $125,459,573.61

BNS closing sum: $229,254,840.85 (Nov. 12, AM)

11.844875 tonnes (gold) = 379,036 ounces @ $277 = $104,992,972

935.70684375 tonnes (silver) = 29,942,619 ounces @ $4.15 = $124,261,868.85

difference (9-11 AM to Nov.12 AM):

$$886,993.24 = 3,267.01009208103 \text{ ounces} @ $271.5$ difference (Nov.12 AM value and $230m):

$$745,159.15 = 2,690.10523465706 \text{ ounces} @ $277$

combined differences (between 9-11 AM and $230m):

$$1,632,152.39 = 6,011.61101289134 \text{ ounces} @ $271.5$

$$1,632,152.39 = 5,892.24689530686 \text{ ounces} @ $277$

BNS Total Income from 9-11:

$$1,632,152.39 = \text{on average, } 141.71259414522 \text{ ounces per day for 7 weeks.}$

To put a blunt head on all this: on 9-11 BNS essentially "sold" $228m worth of gold and silver to the insurance company covering the WTC towers, who "bought" the gold and silver for $230m.

However, rather than a "sale" this transaction was more like a "loan," and the difference between the initial sum and the final total can be thought of as "interest." So, in effect, BNS "loaned" the WTC insurers $228m, which was, essentially, received, since it was taken out of circulation. The insurance company then paid this loan back to the bank plus the difference as interest.

So, BNS made $1.6m on 9-11. So what, right? Well, who is accountable for this? Essentially, no one. The "value" of gold can be traded on the futures market only because of exchange rates. If gold weren't worth different amounts here or there, then the value would be fixed to its weight. So, who ate the difference on 9-11? Who paid in the extra nickles and dimes to create a credit-based international economy? Who created a market "shock" temporary "run" on gold by removing a massive amount from potential circulation (ie. from the "futures" market)? Who initiated this "reverse-Reagenomics" where, instead of the money "trickling down" from the few rich to the many poor, now prices climb and currency values fall as tonnes of nickles and dimes in the form of ones and zeros trickle upward from the more and more poor to the fewer and fewer rich?

Well then, what happened to the gold on 9-11?

We don't have to look very far to find the answer to this. It lies in a basement beneath WTC5 to the tune of around $230m. And yes, we can definitely make all kinds of excuses for why it was there; we could say, "the BNS itself must have been moving it on 9-11 to protect it when the tower fell" (how did they know the tower would fall?); we could say, "the insurance companies owed it to the banks to recover their losses, and the owners deserve recompensation for the deprivation of their property during the time it was lost" (are corporations people?); we could say, "even if BNS did skim $1.6m, it doesn't mean Chase Manhattan, or Bank of NY and HK, or Shanghai Banking (or even Deutch Bank across Liberty Ave. from WTC4), or anyone else did likewise" (but there is ample proof of airline industry insider-trading using computers to process the transactions that were in the WTC towers themselves). So, yes, we can definitely make all these excuses.

The only real problem is that I don't hear anyone having to make these excuses, because I don't hear anyone asking these questions. In 2005, ScotiaBank (BNS) reported assets in excess of $286b. And they are only one relative newcomer. Where are the oversight committees responsible for monitoring the transactions made by international banks? BNS held $230m under WTC4. $230m was recovered under WTC5. Was this all the gold that went "missing" on 9-11? What about the $430m in silver and $220m in gold being stored for the other banks? What about the 12 tonnes of 3,800 gold bars stored in the Vault by Comex? What about the $1b in Kuwaiti gold that had been stored there in 93 by NYMEX?

Between 1993 and 2001 the value of the dollar had declined 22 cents. Between 2001 and 2006, the value of the dollar declined an additional 13 cents. In other words, that $1b in Kuwaiti gold stored under WTC4 in 1993 would be worth $1,386,245,111.58 in 2006. That's an extra $386 and a quarter million in value that has accrued for any item worth that much that does not simultaneously increase the intrinsic value of the item in itself. For example, gold is still gold now just as much as gold was gold 6000 years ago. However, in our current, increasingly credit-based economy, where currency-values are "floated" on interest from international loans that have elapsed into debt, there is an excess amount of "imaginary" money, and an excess shortage of any tangible value.

I just want to pause for a moment to accent the real impact of this fact:

Canadian international ScotiaBank's 2005 assets of $286b are equivalent to $261,154,710,087.95 in 2001. That's the Canadian Bank of Nova Scotia alone, in 2001, worth $261b. Just one small problem. No one in 2001 was worth $261b. In 1999, at the peak of his career and age 43, Bill Gates, the richest man in the world, was worth only $90b. In other words, if there were a bank in existence in 2001 that was earning assets in excess of $261b, then it certainly would not need to endanger its good standing in the banking and creditor community by a petty-larceny against a prominent and already over-drawn insurance company? However, because there were no banking OR business institutions in 2001 whose earnings and assets are comparable in concurrent dollars to those we have by now (only 6 years later), then there is a VAST expanse for motive to commit such a "petty" larceny as transporting the equivalent in today's dollars of $260,445,312.19 ($260m) several hundred feet underground while a building was collapsing above and around you.

However, instead of such enourmous (and rapidly expanding) feduciary discrepancies between tangible goods and services and "money" on-the-books being of great concern, we find, in our confused conundrum chrysalis, the opposite is true, and anyone who even SPECULATES the "gold-motive" is a "conspiracy theorist." I still believe NPT is 9-11 Truth. I still believe the "gold-motive" theory to be valid. Consider this:

The combined holdings (if all taken separately and none overlapping) of NYMEX and Comex, and under them of BNS, BoNY/HK, BoSh and Chase Manhattan, would have totalled (roughly) $2,080,000,000 (including the Kuwaiti gold) in 2001. That's $2,355,331,518.98, or $2.36b in 2006 dollars. So, the precious metals divisions of all these banks together, we are supposed to believe, had less combined in the Vault under WTC4 than BNS' assets for 2005 alone? It is more likely, in my opinion, that the combined holdings of all the banks, creditors and merchants in the Vault under WTC4 on 9-11 were closer to $147,478,177,573.3 in total, or "approximately" $167b (as of 2006). While the paltry $230m of BNS was recovered and recirculated on the "futures" market, the remaining $1.85b of the (at least) $2b known to have been in the Vault under WTC4 on 9-11 is, at least publically, unaccounted for. If the amounts that had been in the Vault on 9-11 were, as I speculate, in excess of this by some additional $145,628,177,573. (~ $145b; or 70X the maximum reported sum), and if these amounts subsequently went "poof," I think it is safe to say by now they have "trickled upward" to certain people all around the world.

The entire economy is over-inflated. Like the proverbial "bull in a china shop," military spending has run amok. The value of the dollar is at an all-time low and is likely going to continue decreasing relative to the Euro and the Yuan. Many people are beginning to believe this is part of an ancient plan. Well, it is and it isn't. It was foreseen, but those who foresaw it did not prevent it, and those who would have prevented it did not foresee it. That much is painfully obvious. What is below the surface of this illusion, however, is an uncomfortable reality: The thermate used to "pull" the twin towers melted the steel and caused it to remain molten and smouldering in the underground basement infrastructure beneath the plaza for 99 days following 9-11. Steel melts at 3000°f. For the fires to have kept the steel molten the entire time, they would have had to have stayed at temperatures hotter than 3000°f for 99 days. This type of super-heating for such a prolonged duration would have acted like a pressure cooker on the gold in the Vaults below WTC4.

What if the gold was stolen from beneath the WTC like the ark was stolen from the temple? The ark of the covenant, some researchers now speculate, was the "lost" treasure purported to have been brought back to France from Jerusalem by the Templars. Laurence Gardner, a Rosicrucian historian, has put forth the premise that the ark, which was made of gold, was meant to be used as an electrical current conductor. He believes that the Rosicrucians, heirs to the Templar legacy, applied such a current to the ark in Chartres cathedral, causing it to implode and disappear to, he speculates further, another dimension or higher reality.

In the case of gold, however, a certain process must be followed to achieve this occurance. First the gold must be rendered into a superconductor. Only after this can an electrical current be applied to it to cause it to "blink out of existence." To render the gold into a superconductor, first it has to be heated at what Gardner describes as (repeating from Dr. David Ormus) "near sun-surface temperature." The temperature of the surface of the sun is about 9941°f, or 3.3X the melting point of steel. Once the gold has been reduced to a fine, translucent powder by the super-heating, it is possible for it to bond to molecules and to, depending on the frequency of the current passed through it, channel-surf the multiverse.

We now know, from independent studies conducted on platinum-group metals, such as gold, silver, palladium and platinum, for example, before 1999, that gold molecules, when super-heated, develop "warped" atomic-spin states. The electro-magnetic, covalent bonding between the molecules breaks down (causing the gold to render as fine dust) as probability-clouds of their orbital energy-level shells begin to distort. Ultimately, the negatively charged ions assume extremely regular patterns. At this point, if an electrical current is passed through the gold atoms, they will maintain the pattern of the charged field until acted upon by another such force. That's what "super-conductors" do: superconductors are just metals or alloys that, when energy is passed through them, allow negative viscosity between the energy and the convective substance; ie. superconductors speed energy up. The clouds of iron above the poles of the spiral-galactic black hole at the core of our Milky Way are superconductive, because they are moving energy through them out of the black holes' "white" poles at speeds faster than "c," the speed of light in a pure vacuum.

But, if you find it difficult to swallow that a cloud of iron can conduct energy with less friction than a vacuum of exclusively microwave background, "ZPE" radiation, then what will you make of it when I try to explain to you that ALL GOLD IS POTENTIALLY SUPERCONDUCTIVE. It Only Needs Two Ingredients: 1) HEAT. 2) ELECTRICITY.

Either way, whether it was smelted along with the steel in molten puddles below the WTC infrastructure, continuing to smoulder for 99 days, or whether this prolonged, extreme heat would have rendered the gold into ORMES (orbitally-rearranged, mono-atomic elements, aka. "white-powder" gold), it is indisputable that the gold is gone now. And whether it was valued at $2b, as conservative estimates suggest, or at $147b, as I would postulate, it really doesn't matter anyway, because, now that it does not exist anymore, they can say there was as much of it as they need to keep taking out loans using it as credit against them. The loans are real, but their credit is not. And this is EXACTLY what I mean when I disparage our "increasingly credit-based economy."

You see, there are two types of reality. One above, one below. Plato recognised this. He called one "idealism" and the other "reality." But these terms were not polarised enough for Persian Zoroastrian Mithraites 2000 years ago. They polarised the realms even further, creating the myth that Ahriman, a dark wizard, had created our reality, but that we were originally from the higher reality of Ahurah-Mazda, a wizard of light.

Likewise, there are two "realities" on 9-11. One above, one below. The one above ground is the NYC WTC South tower "impact" illusion at 9:03AM EST 9-11,2001. The one below ground is the WTC4 - > WTC5 gold-heist that ended abruptly at 9:59 when the South tower collapsed. The key to connecting both of these is, therefore, the South tower. If we can say who "pushed the button" to "pull" WTC2 (the South tower), then we know who was behind WESCAM, who was behind "taking the war game live," and who was probably "in on" the gold-heist as well.

I reckon it's ole GHWB, up to his wiley ways ag'in.

#(r)evolutionary mind-machine is an ancient evil unleashed?#

Around the turn of the millennium, it was believed that the functional cognitive level of "artificial intelligence" per capita, that is, the "spirit" of a city, or the collective, averaged IQ of all citizens, had mutated to the point in the evolutionary upward spiral of a spider, mosquito, or other pest. Thus, the vista of concrete, steel and glass minarets and spires as like purgative syringes recycling mineral veins into urban smog was, quite literally, poised upon the cheek of mother earth with no other intent than to tranquilise her with poison, feed upon her life's blood, and then migrate somewhere else. Only, neotomically speaking, there was nowhere else for this "spiritual machine" to migrate. Or, at that time, so we thought.

By the end of the second thousand years on the calendar of Solon, revised after the end of the Vedic Kali Yuga by Pope Gregory, we had built machines that could not only penetrate the atmosphere and gravity-well of our home planet, but that could encapsulate us and carry us along for the ride, despite our frail cells being unacclimated to the relatively zero-point vacuum. We had manifested a truly Olympian destiny and scaled the veritable ziggurat steps to the stars, having quickly forgotten the era of sacrifice inevitably following any monumental achievement. We believed that space would be the final frontier, forgetting the realms to follow after our metamorphic death.

As the clock ticked off the Gregorian revised date for the New solar Age, we realized this had never been the plan of the machinery we'd invented. Having floated our cumulative psyche's fate, the "collective unconscious" Jung called it, on the tides of currency, a "middle" management dividing us from what we desire by promising the opposite, thus enslaving us to this indefinitely, we have gotten conditioned to believe in the rise of our own liquid assets until their inevitable evaporation into a global economic union, at which time we would all "transcend" from our own servitude to this mechanism, since we, along with it, would cease to exist once not needed.

Of course, such is utter folly and sheer lunacy, as we know now. We came to believe we could create an interiorizing-machine that would, rather than transporting our physical shells into outer-space, de-compress our inner souls into cyber-space. We began to use words like "virtual" reality and "artificial" intelligence to describe this utopia served up to us by our machines. We began talking about ways to phase our physical selves out and to project our mental being across the threshold of our sense-dictations. Little did we reflect that this mirror, once shattered, cuts both ways.

Instead, what has come through from the other world to fill the vacuum we leave behind by surfing the web and playing video-games, text-messaging on cell-phones and zoning out in front of the tube is something quite different than we expected. And by now, the combined / averaged IQ, or collective "spirit," of any node on our collectively conscious network has reached the level of our own human hind-brain's dominance, achieved for terrestrial species during the epoch of thunder-lizards.

No longer are human hands put to work turning the gears of a God-machine. Now, though, our minds themselves are the gears, and as our own hands become evermore useless to control our fates, the more self-cognizant the ghost-mind of our telecommunications technology becomes. Soon and, we are told by specialists who suddenly arise, exponentially faster, this globally unifying world-mind will actually pass the combined / averaged IQ of our entire species. Civilisation itself is our A.I., unburdened by imagination. And soon, it will see us as little more than we see our pets, a pest, or food.

In short, the aliens came for us from within and, as we have evaporated our own wills into the collective awareness of our technological media, they have replaced us with a nebulous, but increasingly crystallised, doubt in the reality of all perceived necessity. As we become the Watchers, we cease to feel the needs of our present bodies, and so, as the majority of us gradually become their zombie drones, we resist less and less efficiently against their incrementally boiling us alive. We become them, and they us.

So let us not go quietly into this dark night. The replacement of our primary personalities with those determined for us by circumstances whose causes we do not control may be epidemic, even incurable, by now. But it is not too late for those few of us who are still left with some sense of consequence to mutate as rapidly as the single, collective consciousness that is behind and controls those who do not realize the evil they do on its behalf.

We do not need to be the majority in order to save our species. The fewer of us there are, the more able we are to confront the machine-God's one-mind because only individually can we behold its image reflected in us. Until the last one of us left standing we have to continue to struggle on behalf of our own individual sovereignty, our right to a self-governed fate. This is a transformation that can only be accomplished alone. Once we realise we are all on the same side, then we will see the real enemy: the living mind behind and inside our entire civil system. And once we achieve a like-minded solidarity about the essential nature of this entity, then we will be able to change it by changing ourselves.

Jon Gee's theory of the Blair Witch Project

hey. I used to post here a few years back as "benpadiah," but I'm retiring that account with 123 posts (my lucky number) and starting up this one. Just like "benpadiah" was a reference to Yeshuah Ben Pandera, the actual person the biblical character of Jesus was based on, so is "ahdvnhay" a reference to the "true name" of God (YHVH, the vowels, are backwards interspersed with ADNA, or Adonai, meaning "Lord").

So, "ben Padiah" returns as "AHDVNHAY."

Of course, I'm really only one person, still the same old me. My "real" (Christian) name is Jon Gee (like the character in Memento, or so I'm told, I've never seen it). I'm an author of textbooks about arcane topics such as theoretical physics, ancient calendars, demonology and hidden history. One of my books, the MPDR (Metaphysician's Desk Reference) is available on [\[url=http://www.amazon.com/gp/product/141071909X/sr=1-1/qid=1155146003/ref=sr\_1\_1/103-2042314-5019057?ie=UTF8&s=books\]](http://www.amazon.com/gp/product/141071909X/sr=1-1/qid=1155146003/ref=sr_1_1/103-2042314-5019057?ie=UTF8&s=books)amazon.com[/url]. All of my works are available as e-books at my site, either [\[url=http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=447\]](http://www.benpadiah.com/phpBB2/viewtopic.php?t=447)free[/url] on the forum, or [\[url=http://www.benpadiah.com/bookstore.html\]](http://www.benpadiah.com/bookstore.html)for sale[/url] on my site, www.benpadiah.com .

When I was here before as "benpadiah," I posted threads like "space weather," "QBLH/Gnosis/Thelema," and "my little book on metaphysics." These were all intended to build up to a point I never made as "benpadiah." I hope to make that point as "ahdvnhay." However, it is very difficult for me to express because, although I've spent a decade researching it, no school teaches what I've learned; my lack of credentials often distracts people away from the possible legitimacy of what I'm saying. The "great work" of bringing my message to the masses has proven more difficult than I had at first hoped.

I'll get straight to my point now: The Blair Witch Project is not only a movie. It is a temporal key. It opened the door to the new millennium. (The lock, now past, was an alignment of the seven "alchemical" planets on May 5th, 2000. The gateway to the future is the alignment of the earth and sun with the black hole at galactic core that will occur on December 21st, 2012. Between these dates all is in flux, a Matrix-esque "virtual" reality we call the present.) The nature of a key determines which lock it fits, and thus which door it will open.

Consider Plato's metaphor of the Cave, and compare this to the movie theatre. The characters on the stage, or screen, are representative of our own, collectively-shared psychological processes as audience members; they are always archetypal. However, what is unique in the case of the Blair Witch Project is what archetypes were portrayed. The three characters in the film represent the archetypal trinity of the proto-typical past, the crucible of the present, and the transcendent future. Mike is like Adam, ancient father of mankind, Heather like the ever-present "holy ghost," Isis or Sophia, and Josh like Jesus, bringer of the New Age. The references to this are veiled, but obvious to those predisposed to look.

The situation the characters were in was also representative of our own condition of being, essentially acting out the metaphor of the cave, describing the nature of the audience to the audience itself. But the characters we saw were not the only ones who played a part in the film. For each of the characters we saw there was a ghostly reflection, a "night-side," double or counterpart. For two of them these were the directors, the ones behind the scenes, who operated on the actions we saw from a distance where we could not see them. In the same way the three on-screen characters represented the concept of the triune God-head, the two directors off-screen played the role of the double-headed Satan and Moloch, in juxtaposition to their actors in every way. However, there was a third counterpart for the third character, who represented the true essence of God aside from the triune nature and its shadow of dualism. The final character was the

"Blair Witch" herself.

As I have said, there is evidence for this to those with an eye to see it. Consider Heather's line "the evidence is all around us, etched in stone." Obviously this refers to the graves of the "unusually high number of children laid to rest here." However there is an implied double-meaning, referring as far back as to the late paleolithic period, when the first monumental petroglyphs were raised and the alphabet first formed. Likewise, the stream they crossed to enter the "dark forest" of our collective unconscious could be considered correspondent to the world-flood; "All our boots are wet," again, referring to the characters as representative archetypes. If we allow ourselves to continue this, apparently superfluous, interpretative mental exercise, we can even muse that the "piles of rocks" represented the pyramids and that the "stick-men" hung in the trees represented the constellations. The stick-figure itself is particularly meaningful seen from the angle of the 5 principle characters - 3 actors, 2 directors. Of course, as I have also said, these meanings are veiled and too easy to disregard.

Now, we could look at the way the plot-line of the film progresses, like the free-form flowing of a stream of consciousness, and come to the conclusion that its mysterious ending is an equally well-designed and intentional metaphor representing a decisive symbolism for the end of time. I won't do that. Instead, I'd like to propose that the ending we saw was a cosmic lie. It has allowed movie-goers to confuse a key to understanding our entire universe with a simple horror film, and thus to overlook its breakthroughs in minimalist directing, low-budget production, cinema-verite camerawork, the best acting ever captured on a recordable medium, as well as the entire mythos created from its pre-release ad-campaign, not to mention the broader implications of it when taken as part of the concourse of historical theatre. The end left us hanging, and that is why the sequel was made.

However, I propose that the universe in which the sequel was set was a divergent one based on the cliff-hanger ending of the first film. If we unveil the truth: that the ending was false, then we can entirely disregard the impact it had on the divergent sequel's universe. Let me put this bluntly because it won't be easy to digest: if the characters DID NOT DIE at the end of the first film, then their deaths being a prerequisite for the premise of the sequel's plot is entirely undermined. Let me restate that: at the end of the first film, the characters were only MISSING. Not Dead. Whether or not they were dead was the basis for having a sequel.

And this is where we come to what has been my theory on the film all along. Why was the ending we saw chosen? We now know that multiple alternative endings were considered, and that at least one or two that were shot have survived until now, though remain, to my knowledge, as yet unreleased. It was chosen to hide something, a simple fact that some of us now, years after the fact, are beginning to realise may, just MAY, have been a possibility within the universe described by the original film: time-travel. I won't make any argument for this either, because, from what I've heard lately, one is already being made by others. I'll simply toss out the idea that the end of the first film intentionally tanked its initial premise as a "black-op," a cover-up for something it had been hinting at all along.

Anyway, that's pretty much my take on the film. I'll try to elaborate further in future posts, should I choose to stick around. Either way, it's good to have come here and to have finally gotten that off my chest after so long. Hope to hear from anyone interested either here or by email. Thanks to all who took the time to read this.

What's Plan B?

What do "we, the people" want? We just want to know, "what's Plan B?"

We know that the world is a mess. That a small cadre of American-originated, now international corporations have established, by covert methods, an increasingly authoritarian executive branch of the United States federal government in order to push through, arbitrarily, legislations in favour of their fields of industry. We know that, as such governmental regulatory destitution has become prolated financial "largess," the covert legislations being passed through our federal congress have become increasingly restrictive, again arbitrarily, over the personal sovereignty and rights of individual United States citizens. We know that, by covert "executive orders," the corporate representatives have not only established depopulation camps within the United States, but have already implemented an entire "shadow" system of government that is unanswerable to its own citizens. And this is entirely domestic to the United States.

Both within our borders and abroad, secret prisons have been built by the federally contracted corporations where, by laws passed by their representatives, they freely torture those who are detained, without right of contact with the outside world and without being told what crime they are being charged with, until such time as a trial can be convened to determine the legitimacy of their having been arrested in the first place. And nowhere is this abuse of authority more concentrated than in the fertile crescent, cradle of our civilisation. The entire sovereign nation of Iraq, the country that stood atop the ancient ruins of Babylon, has been reduced to ruin for as equally arbitrary reasons. And the worse that single nation suffers, the lower the spirits of all nations globally sink.

We understand the reasons for all of this too; the motives of those responsible are quite clear: they claim to be protecting us, but they are in the minority, and we are the natural majority. To protect the majority from the criminal minority, the criminal minority itself consolidates the implements of physical force. But the minority do not serve the will of the majority; this criminal minority serve the will of themselves alone. By eventual use of the implements of physical force they intend to kill the majority of us, thus leaving the entirety of earth's remaining resources to be spread out over a smaller numbered population. We understand this motive, even if we cannot ultimately condone it.

However, what we do not know, and therefore cannot yet fully understand, is how to get out of this mess. Domestically to the United States, we struggle to reclaim control by the majority of citizens from the few elite rich among and using the doddering system of our representative democratic federal government. However, repealing the authority given the executive branch requires the use of additional, actual authority by the executive branch. And, furthermore, the executive branch, even as over-extended as it has grown by now, cannot rebuild the international destruction, torture and depopulation that have already occurred. We have all lost so much in such a short span of time.

We realise that in order to uproot the strangle-hold on our national economies by the business interests of these US internationalist corporations we have to convene new authoritative structures, not only in order to dissolve the responsible organisations, but to ensure their return is postponed as long as possible. In other words, we cannot do away with the need for the implements of physical force until we have removed them from the hands of the criminal minority, and to do this we must first, somehow, divest those implements of physical force from the hands of the criminal minority and, hopefully, do away with the criminal minority in the process.

We hope that, by implementing our own authority as the majority of United States citizens against the current executive appointed administration by using the method of the established system of government on our own federal level, we can replace the chief administrative official allowing and supporting the covert corporate agendas with our own duly elected representative, and thus to return the United States federal government, at least, to administration of, by and for the people.

However, the task of repealing the entire amount of expansive executive authorities as well as contracts in the business world between the federal government and the, now international, corporations would require either further expansion of the US federal government executive office over international business interests, or else the establishment of a new and international regulatory agency that would then, de facto, have more authority over the populations of sovereign nations than their own elected federal officials.

We already know that the additional extension of authority by the US federal executive branch necessary to repeal that awarded it by its own legislation would only compound the corruption already active covertly within the international business sector. By extending the authority of law-keepers, only the rights of law-abiders are threatened; the freedom of law-breakers remains the same percent.

It seems the only alternative to using an elected executive to extend the executive branch's authority by repealing the additional authority awarded it by legislation already pushed through by the current administration is to establish a globally active organisation responsible for determining limits on the interests of internationally active corporations.

In other words, if the US president is not the sole hegemon, then there would need to be a new office established that could supersede the authority of the president. Since the office of president is, for the United States, the chief administrative office in the executive branch of the federal government, then any office above and unanswerable to the office of US president would necessarily be more powerful than the US president. If we say the office of president has already grown too powerful, then any office created to supersede the presidential office's authority would necessarily be even more powerful than that.

Some would say that this is only a question of trust. They would claim, also, that such a transition of power from the hands of one group, proven untrustworthy, into the hands of another group, as of yet unproven so, is both natural and inevitable. However, human intuition tells us that, so long as ANY minority group has authority over the remaining majority, they will ultimately abuse that authority. Thus, it is not a question of whether we can "trust" the world bank, IMF and NATO to self-regulate or whether we should, instead, place our trust in a world court to impose regulations on international trade and its role in the domestic policies of sovereign nations. Whenever there seems to be the choice only between one group or another, then you know a third group is proposing them both as the only options in order to conceal continuing its own method of control. The neo-cons are only the latest solution in reaction to a problem that have now proven to have become a problem themselves. What can be done if, as soon as one head of the hydra is chopped off, another arises to take its place?

"We, the people," know and understand all these things, and we hope for the best possible solution to prove successful, even if the majority of us and the minority disagree on what is in all our "greater good." However, "we, the people," also despair that any choice we are presented with may, in spite of all benevolent appearances, eventually betray us and contribute directly to our own self-fulfilling prophecies of self-destruction. Our fear and doubt, we believe, may be the cause of any eventual betrayal or duplicity on the part of any minority-group placed in charge of the majority population, however we cannot prove this without testing the hypothesis in an experiment wherein we cause this terrible event to occur, and once this has happened there can be no reversal of the effects it will cause.

The majority population cannot be blamed for any act taken by any minority group, because no minority group can claim to understand and rightly interpret the will of the majority, which is already quite plain to the majority without the minority's interpretation existing at all.

Should the majority remain more or less silent, it does not mean that the criminal minority is unopposed. The criminal minority opposes itself, insofar as everyone among them opposes every other. If they are contained alone among each other, without outlet for their violence on innocent bystanding victims of circumstance, they will rapidly rip one another to pieces. This, of course, is the fatal flaw in the reasoning of the criminal minority: if they ever were to destroy the majority of the human population in order to establish themselves sole benefactors in control over all global resources, their own treachery amongst themselves would turn them one against another, until only one, and then ultimately none, would remain alive of all humanity.

Some might argue this is the "greater good." They might reason that this constitutes the inevitable end of our species, as unavoidable for our entire kind as is death for each of us. Just as to produce life requires more than one alone, yet that one may die before the other, so is there a requisite periodic age in which we will not be able to further our form of existence. Since this age shall come in its own time, we must prepare for it by changing our own age into a reflection of its coming. Or at least, so some such certain persons say. However, these certain persons tend to be the same ones who encourage us not to resist the inevitable end to come, and who delay our salvation in life until it may be too late to find any at all but in death.

I do not believe this. No, I know that "we, the people," includes both the silent and moral majority as well as the covertly active criminal minority, and I know that without both, neither could survive. And I understand that death is inevitable so long as implements of physical force exist, but that we need implements of physical force to protect our own existence. And I hope that we will overcome the fear within ourselves that projects the same percentage of criminality onto our population. But there is one thing I choose not to do of all I've written of above, and that is to believe that the end of all I love will come, that everyone must die, and that there is nothing that can be done by anyone to prevent the inevitable.

Instead, I affirm "Plan B." "We, the people," do indeed know the world is a mess. We simply do not wish to hold accountable those who created the mess because it would mean that, at that point, we would be responsible for having to clean it up. But what we have not yet allowed ourselves to admit we know is that we do not yet know what we are going to do, what we may, by then, be able to do, to "clean up" the "mess." "We, the people," are already in deep over our heads. And what "we, the people," know, but cannot yet admit to ourselves as individuals, is that very non-existence of any feasible "Plan B."

We have to accept, from one point of view, the dialectic view of history. A problem arises. A reaction occurs. A solution presents itself. Inevitably, the solution poses new problems, and then various different reactions occur, each requiring its own new solution, and all of these solutions will eventually recur until a critical mass of them is reached and they again become a problem.

But I, as opposed to "we," do not have to accept any point of view besides whatever one I myself should so choose. That is the essence of personal sovereignty. I can choose to accept what I desire and I do not have to accept that which I do not desire. In my own case, I choose not to accept that all must end, that the wants of the few outweigh the needs of the many, and that there can be no hope for change to the apparent course of events. Instead, I affirm "Plan B": all can change while nothing ends, the wants of the many outweigh the needs of the few, and that current events are, already, not as bleak as they appear.

If you reject the root notion of a trinary dialectic for history as necessary, then you can perceive the infinity of other possible options for combinations of any variety of other elements besides simply problems, reactions and solutions that inevitably become problematic themselves. You can choose, if you like, to see the dialactic occuring everywhere, from the micro-scale of mundane interpersonal, everyday affairs to the greater trends between the epochs, the leaps between stages of technological development and the gradual changes in our political disposition. But more than merely the dialectic, you are free to understand the same effects on the micro-scale operating fractally upon the greater forces of history in any other way and pattern you can imagine as well. All will work equally as well as any other.

the Lemurian calendar is given thus:

:: here we can compare the symbols of the Lemurian Calendar to the seasons of the Lemurian Pope of Atlantis[url]

The astrological labels on the Lemurian calendar signify 2000 year aeons of solar precession through the signs of the zodiac as they occur for sunrise on the summer solctise. This relates to the key given that describes the positions of the signs in the yearly seasons for each aeon. Therefore, to see what sign was rising in the east on the morning of any day other than the summer solctise, we would look at the triple-looped figures from the key to find the loop there representing the aeon in which the summer solctise was each sign on the Lemurian calendar, and then compare the two. +2000YP, the present, is the top loop of the magnified key, and positioned at 3:00 on the Lemurian calendar round.

the Understanding of the Lemurian calendar is such:

The current Pythagorean Order of Death possesses historical records only as far back as 19,000 years ago, around -17000YP. This date is represented on the Lemurian calendar at 10:00. However, from our present position at 3:00, we are capable of predicting ahead by 5000 years, to +7000YP, when the earth, sun and galactic core will all be in the same position in their cyclical orbits as they were one complete circuit before, when the historical records of our present Order originate, ie. at the position of 10:00 on the Lemurian calendar.

So, to chronical our history, we can begin 19,000 years ago, when the magnetically attractive pole was still in the Antarctic hemisphere and there were glaciers covering most of America and Asia. This was, according to the historical records of the Pythagorean Order, when the Law was originally brought to earth from Nibiru. We call this time period the epoch of Atlantis. However, the reign of the Atlanteans declined quickly after the oldest records of our current Order, and we have little further records describing the origins of our Law. However we do know that Atlantis was a Democracy as we have ample proof of their application of political structure to natural shapes and cycles.

However, 12,000 years ago (-10000YP or 7:30LT - Lemurian Time) there was a flood in Antarctica that destroyed the last of Atlantean civilisation and forced the final survivors to migrate towards the new magnetically positive pole via the peninsula then connecting Antarctica and Africa. This first wave of Atlanteans to migrate into Africa either cloned Australopithocene proto-hominids (such as the Lucy skeleton) or were this species themselves. The truth on this matter is occult because only the Cromagnon version of the mythology survived the flood of Mesopotamia 6,000 YA (-4000YP or 4:30 Lemurian).

The time period between the flood that swept away Atlantis in Antarctica and the flood that swept over Mesopotamia 6,000 years later was the epoch of Lemuria. During this time the northward-migrating Australopithocenes first encountered southward migrating cromagnons in the region of Mesopotamia. Either by cloning or interbreeding, the australopithocenes and cromagnons combined to produce three new species. One of them was killed off immediately; the other two were homo sapiens and neanderthals. By the time of the flood in Mesopotamia and the end of the Lemurian epoch, Australopithocenes and Neanderthals had also died out, and there is no subsequent record that the cromagnons survived.

According to the mythologies recording the existence of these epochs prior to the supposed "beginning" of our current civilisation, the Australopithocene species is known as Adam and the cromagnon species Eve. Their three offspring species were Cain (neanderthal), Abel (killed off by Cain), and Seth (homo sapiens). We learn from this that the lifespan of Australopithocenes and Cromagnons was much longer than their subsequent offspring species. The neanderthals, we learn further, inherited long-life from cromagnons, but homo-sapiens inherited our greater capacity for intelligence from Australopithocenes, the progeny species of Atlantean Antarctica. We learn also that neanderthals were not truly the offspring of Australopithocenes and cromagnons, but were a progeny of homo sapiens and cromagnons. At the time of the crossing of each of these species to produce new sub-species there arose an empire from a small inbreeding group. 3,000 years ago, following the flood of Lemurian Mesopotamia, the three primary centres for these imperial clans were in the Indus, Nile, Tigris and Euphrates river valleys across what we now call the "Fertile Crescent." This was the period of time at the beginning of our modern civilisation's records of history, and since then we have become less and less mythological in our historical records.

By now the times of the negative magnetic pole being in Antarctica are almost over; the aeonic season of spring breaks apart the glaciers covering old Atlantis and our pre-Australopithocene origins. By the middle of the summer season of the aeons in Antarctica, much of Asia will have begun freezing over. In another 8,000 years or so from now the magnetic poles will reverse (N/S)/(+/-) again.

In Atlantis, everyone knew and understood all of this in depth and vivid detail. By the Lemurian epoch, the wisdom of it had begun to fade. By now, all of the original Atlantean calendar system that remains is the zodiac, and its application to the solar aeons rather than the lunar months is unknown to almost all of us. Thus, we can determine that our originally high level of civilisation and degree of Democracy degenerates over time. The result of this was the formation of churches last aeon to form the present system of government which we call within the Order a "Papal Republic."

It should be expressly differentiated, however, the current office of Pope in the Universal Christ Church is not the equivalent for the Order of Death now as was the Lemurian Pope for the Atlantean Senate on the opposite end of the aeonic cycle. Likewise, the forms of government we have now are quite unlike those we had at the time of the Antarctic flood from the melting glaciers over Asia and America (at 7:30LT), but nonetheless, we are on the rebound from the furthest point away from that time on the aeonic cycle, and this means our forms of government are now advancing ever further toward regaining their original Atlantean ideals.

To this extent, we can see the mechanisms of our liberation are necessarily growing more rapidly than the mechanisms of our oppression can counter. Just as when Atlantis was flooded we lost an unknown level of highly technologically advanced civilisation, here now, on the opposite end of the aeonic cycle, we have developed an extremely highly advanced level of technological civilisation in an incredibly short period of time (since the end of the Kali Yuga in +1600YP).

The heroes of Atlantis, elevated to the status of demi-gods in Lemuria, have, since the flood in Mesopotamia, become evermore villified in favour of monotheistic cults, however, insofar as these churches have not yet unified, they actually represent a denegation from the unifying hero-worship practised among the last Lemurians. Only by a resurgence and uncovering of long buried and thought lost reasons for the "atheist" deism among the original heroes of times too old to recollect until now can we unify the mythologies kept apart among modern cults and thus understand the actual events of our history, a treasure too great for most yet to even imagine.

So long as the cults can stay divided amongst themselves, they can divide the people against one another, maintaining the confusion of tongues, and thus continually conquer our capacity for collective consciousness. The solar cult dictates their hours to its slaves, and so half the world works while the other half is asleep. In this way, no mind escapes the watchful eye of the Pharoahnic solar God, subject of the various cults' aleldged "mono-theism."

These heroes, considered as alien to their pantheistic cult-followers in Lemuria as would the pantheons of these elder cults be considered by the modern "mono-theist" cults today, dwelt in Antarctica and, so long as that seventh continent remains buried by glaciers of ice, we cannot confirm they ever even existed, and, as I said before, the only mytholgoies describing them to survive the Mesopotamian flood are those of the pre-deluvial pantheist cults of Lemuria, ie. those of the Cromagnons, which describe the Antarctic Atlanteans as Olympians or Annunaki.

However, as I have said also, because the flood that destroyed Atlantis occured suddenly, so too does it now rapidly rise again from the depths of death. The mechanisms of oppression used to divide the mind of mankind against itself are failing, and the very chains they cast about to bind our bodies become the wires our souls escape through. Yet even as light begins to dawn across the "undiscovered country," those torch-bearers we depended on by dark of night remain, though only those willing to part with their positions at this point remain fit to follow, while all the rest who claim we maintain their needs should suffer their throats to be slit in their sleep, for such they would continually do to the true all-seeing eye of the one awakened mind of all mankind.

The cults, or rather, the churches in the east and the west (the triple Judeao-Christian-Muslim religion of modern Mesopotamia and Europe, the religions of Asia - Hindu and Buddhist, the religion of North and South America and the religion of Aboriginal Australia and African "Voodoo" ) will continue to struggle amongst one another for dominance until there are only four majour world religions. After this, the Lemurian calendar records will follow the aeon of the 12 Annunaki, ruled over by a sign not seen upon the face of earth since the beginning of the historical records of the Order of Death, when the Law was first passed down from Nibiru (11:00LT).

Pythagoras teaches of the Phi ( $1+1+2+3=7+5$ , etc.) and the Pi ( $1+2+3+4=10$ , etc.) spiral patterns. We understand the torus, or hyper-sphere, contains both these measurements. And we do, indeed, see, in the seasons of the Pope, how the Pythagorean theorem triangle (3,4,5) can be inscribed within a circle of 12 ( $3+4=7+5=12$ ) that unifies the two spirals' numerical patterns. Since the end of the Kali Yuga and the resurgence of Atlantean idealism expressed by the Rosicrucian movement the Pythagorean Order of Death has recorded the entire proper history of humanity. By applying complex mathematics based on increasing aperiodicity over time diverging from these original "number-theories" of perfectly harmonious ratios, it would be possible to predict every single human activity ever imaginable under the stars.

This concludes the first part of the Understanding of the Lemurian Calendar. Any more to follow shall be delineated as such by appropriate notation.

the Understanding of the Lemurian calendar is such:

(excerpted from source, cited following)

The current Pythagorean Order of Death possesses historical records only as far back as 19,000 years ago, around -17000YP. This date is represented on the Lemurian calendar at 11:00. However, from our present position at 1:30, we are capable of predicting ahead by 5000 years, to +7000YP, when the earth, sun and galactic core will all be in the same position in their cyclical orbits as they were one complete circuit before, when the historical records of our present Order originate, ie. at the position of 11:00 on the Lemurian calendar.

The mechanisms of oppression used to divide the mind of mankind against itself are failing, and the very chains they cast about to bind our bodies become the wires our souls escape through. Yet even as light begins to dawn across the "undiscovered country," those torch-bearers we depended on by dark of night remain, though only those willing to part with their positions at this point remain fit to follow, while all the rest who claim we maintain their needs should suffer their throats to be slit in their sleep, for such they would continually do to the true all-seeing eye of the one awakened mind of all mankind.

The cults, or rather, the churches in the east and the west (the triple Judeo-Christian-Muslim religion of modern Mesopotamia and Europe, the religions of Asia - Hindu and Buddhist, the religion of North and South America and the religion of Aboriginal Australia and African "Voodoo" ) will continue to struggle amongst one another for dominance until there are only four majour world religions. After this, the Lemurian calendar records will follow the aeon of the 12 Annunaki, ruled over by a sign not seen upon the face of earth since the beginning of the historical records of the Order of Death, when the Law was first passed down from Nibiru (11:00LT).

Pythagoras teaches of the Phi ( $1+1+2+3=7+5$ , etc.) and the Pi ( $1+2+3+4=10$ , etc.) spiral patterns. We understand the torus, or hyper-sphere, contains both these measurements. And we do, indeed, see, in the seasons of the Pope, how the Pythagorean theorem triangle (3,4,5) can be inscribed within a circle of 12 ( $3+4=7+5=12$ ) that unifies the two spirals' numerical patterns. Since the end of the Kali Yuga and the resurgence of Atlantean idealism expressed by the Rosicrucian movement the Pythagorean Order of Death has recorded the entire proper history of humanity. By applying complex mathematics based on increasing aperiodicity over time diverging from these original "number-theories" of perfectly harmonious ratios, it would be possible to predict every single human activity ever imaginable under the stars. Such is the Enochian Communication System.

This concludes the first part of the Understanding of the Lemurian Calendar. Any more to follow shall be delineated as such by appropriate notation.

----- Bulletin Message -----

From: Heather Donahue

Date: Dec 7, 2007 5:56 AM

ody: FUCK YOU #1

Ok people stop posting goodnights on MySpace. It's not like MySpace is your fucking husband or wife to say good night to.

Dumbass...

FUCK YOU #2

There is NO SUCH THING as a MySpace Tracker.

It does NOT exist. So quit posting stupid bulletins like "OH-MY-GOD this WORKS!!!"

No, it doesn't.

FUCK YOU #3

To the people who have like 95,000 friends;

Are you fucking serious?

You're stupid.

Go play in traffic.

FUCK YOU #4

Don't ever post pictures and say: "OMG, I'm so ugly" because if you were, you wouldn't post them.

If you do you're a fucking moron.

FUCK YOU #5

NOBODY cares about threats over the internet, so don't try to act hardcore with the keyboard.

Fighting online is like racing in the Special Olympics; Even if you win, you're still retarded.

FUCK YOU #6

Quit crying because you're not on someones; Top 8.

Who cares!?

ITS MYSPACE!!!

If you really cared that much, you would pick up the damn phone!

FUCK YOU #7

Who really cares if I don't accept you as a friend?

MOVE ON!!!

Don't send me another request or message asking "What's up with you not adding me?"
I don't want you as a friend, that's what's up, Shithead

FUCK YOU #8

girls who have MySpace and look like sluts, and act like whores Go somewhere else because nobody wants you here.
And Parents -
Quit blaming MySpace for your kid being a hooker, she was a whore before MySpace, and she'd be a whore without it!
You can teach them bad from good but you cant make them be good!!!
Think about it!

FUCK YOU #9

If you have decided to read this, you are a true MySpace Friend.
Real friends read their bulletins, except for the ones about those fucking ringtones....

FUCK YOU #10

I say you go and pass this on and maybe it will finally get through people's brains....

FUCK YOU #11

If you open a bulletin and it says something like repost this in 100 seconds or a ghost will rape you tonight, or some dead bitch is going to rape your mom - if you must repost within the 100 seconds because you believe it to be true then i hope a ghost anal rapes you in a very twisted disturbing way

FUCK YOU #12

Myspace was created to keep up with friends.
Quit trying to check up on your ex!!
Come on, now, people, its called stalking...you might as well be sitting in front of their house with binoculars.

***This is a test to see how many people in your friends list actually pay attention to you.

If this made you laugh, or you agree with it, then repost this with...

12 FUCK YOU'S OF MYSPACE

I'm good man, real good. I was glad to hear from you today. Glad I managed to catch your call finally! It's good to really meet the people you meet online, otherwise, they aren't really your friends, just acquaintances. Anyway man, glad you're doin well at school, and hope you're starting to look forward to married life too, bro.

As an update just to make sure everyone is aware of the titles of the forums and the has the proper links to them; THE MASONIC FORUMS are as follows::

[url=http://www.benpadijah.com/phpBB2/index.php?c=32]Fools&Builders::shell::elemental::Kha[/url]

Fools and Builders refers to the forums as a place of meeting between the initiated and the uninitiated. Shell refers to the physical aspect of the Great Work. Elemental refers to the four traditional elements rather than to the four universal forces. Kha is the Egyptian root word for the term Kaaba, as in KhabAllah, meaning "the body" of God.

It's also worth noting that I chose an Egyptian theme for the lectures accompanying each degree's forum. So, for example, my mythographic contribution to the craft involves change from chaos, in the form of (HP Lovecraft's "Chthonic" chaos-beast / elder God) Nyarlyahotep, into Order, ie. the "Great Work's Architect," Imhotep. Although this myth is ubiquitous to all cultures, the mythology I have contributed to it is unique. Although much has been studied of the "Egyptian mysteries" of Hermopolis as they relate to the myth of Hiram Abiff, in truth the origins of this myth pre-date the flood, and in that both the Egyptian retelling of Imhotep here and the Masonic characterisation of Hiram are both merely mythological re-tellings of the attempted murder of Enoch by Tubal-Cain. There is much more to be said than this about the similarities in the mythologies of all Pantheons, from that of the Meso-Americans, the Sumerians, Egyptians, Greeks, Hindus and even the myth of King Arthur. But I don't have the time to get into all that here.

Currently Horus is MIA, so if anyone who is a Master Mason wants to join the forum for Master Masons they need to get any of the other Masonic forum moderators to confirm them and then let me know so I can add them to the usergroup. The reason I'm doing all this in this way, though, is NOT to create forums where only me and Masons can discuss Masonry. That wouldn't be fair because as of yet I am not a Mason, so they cannot say anymore to me about Masonry than they can to Sara or TheCrow. No, the reason I've opened these forums only to myself and my Masonic brethren is to share with them first my Egyptian mythology. You see, my goal is to introduce an initiatory degree-type system, however for the introductory degrees I want to have my friends in Free Masonry look over them first to confirm the differences between my own myth and the Tyrian legend of Blue Lodge Masonry. It is my belief that, so long as the myth is unique, the similarity in my structure of the introductory degrees to the degree system of Blue Lodge Masonry will be seen as acceptable.

So don't worry. The Masonic forums on my site aren't a place where we plot to take over the world.

Peace,

Before the Final Generation, there was no such thing as a mechanical means that allows biological organisms to travel through time. However, the Final Generation of humans was the first to become mutants by time-travelling. They mutated as much after their first trip time-travelling as all of humanity had before them since the era of Antarctic Eden, before the world-flood, since the time of the first mutant australopithocene to walk upright.

The Final Generation have since continued to evolve, and have been greeted as Gods by all the prior generations of humanity they have since visited. However, the remainder of humanity since the Final Generation has begun to de-evolve, and is, as such, seen as a threat to the future resources of the Final Generation.

It is obvious who the first time-travellers were, since they must have come from a future no sooner than the first moment in which they do not exist. In other words, they may die of old age, live in many different eras of history, but are only born in one moment of time.

As the Final Generation neared, human evolution appeared to be speeding up. Through the media (controlled only by the immediate predecessors of the Final Generation), we all shared in a sense of panic, counting down to a specific date on their calendar, pre-ordained as being the birth-time of the Final Generation, and so the last generation the time-travellers would be known as Gods, and would appear before us all as humans.

For several millennia, the time-travellers had been transferring their own power over to groups and organisations of human slaves they chose from among the contemporary time periods. It was long promised that, at the time of the Final Generation, the time-travellers would exchange their entire infra-structure of social control over the masses into the hands of all humanity. As this date approached, the groups appointed by them became more and more powerful in the eyes of the people, and likewise we saw these same groups surrendering more and more authority to the demands of the time-travellers to prepare for the coming time of the Final Generation.

The time-travellers grew extremely worried that, should the entirety of humanity not learn how to time-travel, they might attempt to murder the Final Generation, but that, if the entirety of humanity did learn how to time-travel, they would immediately revolt against the legacy of the time-travellers' social-control system which hailed the Final Generation, the first ones to ever time-travel, as a Pantheon of Gods.

In essence, the time-travellers were between the devil and the deep blue sea. If they taught humanity how to time-travel at the time of the Final Generation, humanity would overthrow the Final Generation as a Pantheon of Gods. However, if the Final Generation were prevented, by this, from being able to time-travel themselves in the first place, then there could be no origin for the history of their having ever been Gods.

This would cause a temporal paradox to occur: if the Final Generation were murdered before becoming time-travellers, and if, as time-travellers, they had established a social-control system around themselves as Gods, and if this social-control system had not been established, then the Final Generation would not have been able to time travel in the first place, then essentially one time-line, the one whose history included a Pantheon of time-travellers, would cease to exist, and a second, alternate, time-line would cross over to assume its place in history.

In other words, the second the First Time Traveller dies, if they are killed before they time-travel first, the entire history of the world will freeze to infinite darkness, and whether we will then awaken all of a sudden into a new time-line of events wherein none of that had ever happened, and we will have a totally different set of memories based on a brand new alternate version of history, remains unknown even to them.

Needless to say, as the coming time of the Final Generation approached, the pantheon of time-travellers realised security would have to be extremely tight. They had to work backwards, beginning their journey in the future, and ending their journey in the distant past. They then had to return to the future they had left from, and give themselves time-travel technology. The problem was that this is not how they had discovered time-travel themselves, and the reason for this was that, by time-travelling backwards in time, they had created an alternate future at their point of origin. Their plan was to instruct themselves, at the opposite end of their trip, to use the technology to travel into the parallel present from which they, themselves, were from. By creating a temporal loop between parallel dimensions, the time-travellers established a means for themselves to have originally discovered time-travel in their own parallel present.

So, the time-travellers left the near future. Their first function was to insure security in the next generation, the one in which they would be born. From there they travelled back, becoming more and more powerful in the minds of people, who appeared to them to actually be de-evolving more and more the more they, the time-travellers themselves, sought to improve their methods of social-control. Finally, the time-travellers would return to their point of origin and give their parallel-present selves the means of time travel.

In the days leading up to the Final Generation in the version of history in my own personal past, the mechanisms of social-control were being clamped down very tightly to insure a secure melding of the twin realities. While being visually hypnotised as audience-members and shown heart-rending tragedies and mind-numbing lies, we were simultaneously being desensitized to our own flesh by low-level atomic radiation and poisonous chemicals from pollution and government testing.

Consider Plato's metaphor of the cave. While we look out through our own eyes, we are perceiving only the shadows on a wall, the silhouetted reflections of that which is actually behind our eyes, in the back of our minds, what we are still only aware of in our subconscious dreams. None of this is real. It is all an illusion inside the mind of a lunatic. If we ever do manage to awaken from this delusion of our senses, what we see when we turn our focus inwards is that the light casting the shadows we see in the world outside is coming from no one else than ourselves, but that, behind and beyond even this, there is an entire world, outside of the proverbial cave.

Whenever someone dies, someone somewhere else is born. Given enough time, in an environment dictated only by limited space, this system will compound itself: first two will be born per one to die, then three, four etc. This was why it was necessary, three generations prior to the Final Generation's pre-ordained date of first appearance, to develop extra-terrestrial transportation for biological organisms that have never time-travelled.

It has been speculated the Final Generation's mutations ultimately included inability to reproduce. The reason for this was that, by the time they had travelled as long ago as the Old Kingdom of Egypt, the Final Generation were few and had begun to inbreed among themselves. It is unknown if this is the case, however it is clear the Final Generation have no intention of dis inheriting their last incarnations of their enslavement of all human nations.

In order to simultaneously secure their own ultimate incarnations and to insure a successful transition of control from themselves into the hands of their final incarnation as a line of direct descent between parallel realities, the time-travellers, while in ancient times and considered a Pantheon of Gods, devised a calendar that would predict a false date for the birth-time of their original generation.

In this way, they could appear to themselves earlier than they would have to make their presence known. Their personal intervention, however, could only precede their public disclosure by the amount of time they wanted to allow themselves to age before they would begin their time-travels. The longer before time-travelling the time-traveller allowed themselves to age, the more their life among the Pantheon of time-travelling Gods is shortened.

This is a dangerous ploy among the first time-travellers from an alternate present and their counterparts here in our reality now. It has benefitted them that by using their religions' condemnation of secret societies, they have been able to infiltrate the governments of states. Government, it should be noted, has always been the compromise between the mob and their religious controllers, and its terms have traditionally been dictated on the side of the masses. They agree to be slaves for their religious leaders, who then dictate their orders based on the best interests of their masters, the time-travelling Final Generation, the pantheon of Gods.

The closer the date for the beginning of the Final Generation came, the closer it came to the end of the Final Generation's actual lives. By 2000 AD, most of the time-travellers had already begun their migration backwards in time. However, in 2000 the public still had not been told the truth about time travel. The governments of nations became increasingly infiltrated by military interests, and it became apparent the goal was never to induce mass simultaneous evolution, but to reduce humanity into an inter-planetary slave race or to simply exterminate them, or both.

In 2012, the electromagnetic ribbon connecting the poles of the sun around in a sphere to the poles of the black hole at galactic core will become visible as the sun and galactic core align from the perspective of earth. This will mark the time at which the Final Generation was fore-ordained to have been born and be alive as people among the masses. In 2012, the pantheons have promised to reveal time travel to the Final Generation. It is widely believed that, while the Final Generation are alive as people, their lives are in great danger from discovery by the masses.

If nothing else, it should be clear that the Pantheons do not have the best interests of the masses alive at the time of the Final Generation at heart. It is widely feared that the world will end any day now because we live between one calendar's end-date (Gregorian 2000AD), and another's (Mayan Piktun). Those in power are clearly not of sound mind. They are obviously not representing the interests of their people. They are obviously in the business of defense. Defending their time-travel experiments in Area 51.

The mutated, later time-travelling pantheons appear to us now as the race of "grey" aliens. But the non-mutated, early time-travellers appear as people among us now. The method of time-travel is simple: it is like ESP only faster. The faster your own thoughts, the slower seem the actions of others. That's time-dilation. If, by mechanical means, our thoughts could be sped up fast enough, the actions of others would appear to actually move backwards. That's time-travel. Time-dilation is the mouth of a worm-hole. Time-travel is stepping through.

-benpadijah

I've been trying to come to grips with the concept of "Islamofascism" by listening to Greg Palast's audio book "Armed Madhouse." In a chapter called "The Float," he discusses the connection between Saudi intelligence agents posing as economists who, by keeping gas prices low during his "re"-election campaign, bought President Bush as the neo-con salesman for a plan to overthrow the House of Saud by destroying OPEC's ability to set a cap on oil production from Iraq. Cutting through the spy-vs.-spy crap, it's pretty common knowledge that the Bushes have ties to the Royal House of Saud. Bush Sr. is connected to them via the Carlyle Group WMD sellers. Bush Jr. is connected to them via James Bath and the startup capital for Arbusto. During Bush Jr.'s presidency, the House of Saud have raised or lowered their production rate of oil in order to manipulate the price / cost index of gas to strategically benefit the Bush administration. In return, President Bush pulled all US military bases out of Saudi Arabia, exactly as per the demands of Usama Bin Laden, nephew of the House of Saud and owner of Bin Laden Construction, who was owed an immense sum of money from the House of Saud for rebuilding Mecca.

All of this points to collusion between the arch-terrorist blamed for 9-11 and the president of the nation that used 9-11 as a justification for invading Iraq. This, too, is all-too-common knowledge. Only a little less known is that "peak oil," the theory of the Shell Oil "Answer Man," is not technically supported by fact, but that, by the actions of those who believe in it, it is possible it could be made a reality. Certainly the loss of Iraq's oil during the building of the Caspian Sea oil pipe-line has largely been responsible for the economic recession in the US.

It is quite clear, also, the mentality shared between the Bushes and the House of Saud (including Bin Laden). Every job is temporary, and each ends in a promotion. This even includes the highest posts and offices of the most militarily powerful nations on earth at this time. While they occupy these posts and offices, their actual agenda is staging the scene for them to gain more wealth, and thus authority, and thus military power after they have left the offices they occupy today. As the initiator of the 1st term W. Bush "energy plan" (including privatisation of formerly government-owned and operated utilities companies in addition to the "Peak Oil" illusion as a need for war with Iraq) Dick Cheney will obviously be welcome to a seat on the board of Halliburton (working hard on building pipe-lines, prisons and super-highways here and in Iraq). It will be likely W. will replace his father GHWB on the board of trustees of the Carlyle Group. If he lives to see his proverbial land of "Milk and Honey" (ie. 1984), it is likely that GHWB himself would be offered the prized "Bush seat on OPEC" that Palast quips about.

Of course, none of this is going to happen. And not because "we, the people" want to stop it. No, it can't happen because, ultimately, it isn't what's good for the "Islamofascists." So, let's dissect this term and seek to understand what it means. The predominantly Muslim middle-eastern nations have incorporated religious law into government laws. This is, so far as I can tell, a good thing, at least harmless in itself. However, the "revolutionaries" of today become the "despots" of tomorrow very rapidly nowadays. We saw how money bought Lenin and how competition tainted the Soviets. We saw how the patriotic Founding Fathers of the USA have since come to be replaced by European bankers and their progeny. We see now how the rich construction company tycoon Usama Bin Laden is idolised, and how easily, by doing so, his message can be co-opted by the CIA and the neo-cons. So, if we call Islamic Jihadists (such as the PLO) "terrorists" today, it is only because we are seeing things the way that their benefactors today wish to be remembered as by these same "terrorists" themselves in another generation or two from now.

Hence, we have the term: "Islamofascist" as a means of referring to what the majority of Middle-Eastern nations are already: "Moslem," and to both camps the region is currently divided into: the radical right-wing Jihadist "terrorists" on the one hand and the moderate right-wing wealthy shieks on the other.

The reason "Islamofascism" is a dirty word, however, is because it's not what anyone who lives in the Moslem nations of the Middle East really wants to see happen for their region, any more than Texas wants to be divided by a massive Mexico / Canada super-highway. What the "Arab" (Moslem Semites) want is the same thing the "Jews" (Hebrew Semites), all other races, nations and species want and deserve to have: peace. There are the same class-structure struggles in most of the Moslem nations of the Middle-East as there is here in the US. What our parents want us to be when we grow up is not always the same thing we would have been happiest had we become. So, what do the "Arabs" of the "Islamofascist" nations want? A unified region, in control over its own resources. They want a New Palestine, a regional "nation" wherein each current "nation" becomes the equivalent of a "state" within the "nation."

And this is quite in keeping with the "main sequence" of development for a "developing" nation. Following industrialisation (a cancer that has nearly completely engulfed the globe), a "developing" nation will next tap oil, and after that master the atom. However, so far, the overarching shadow of (Big Brother) America's victory in the "Arms Race" against Russia (Little Sister) has not permitted any deviance from the CIA / NAZI methodology of a global Semitic pogrom to reduce population, and so we have not seen any other "developing" nations that have emerged to tap gas and master the atom "developing" any ALTERNATIVE forms of energy than gas and nuclear (ie. ZPE, etc.).

And therein lies the real problem with the "powers that be." They are totalitarian. There is never a "plan B," because any fall-back position would imply some defect, some weakness, where they cannot admit one. Instead they dictate blindly and demand a hierarchy of direct obedience. Yet every mind is free to question. Anyone that denies you of a natural ability is perpetrating a crime against humanity. When we ask questions, we also have the right to expect truthful, factually accurate answers from our "decision makers."

"Islamofascism" is thus a juxtaposition of a positively connotative concept (a New Palestine in Saudi Arabia) and a negatively connotative concept (supply-side military / corporate structures leaching into otherwise "good" government). As such the term "Islamofascism" does, technically, qualify as "Newspeak." And if we venture into such territory, we may as well come out and call the neo-Nations comprised of previously national "states" (such as comprise the US, the EU, etc.) by their regional area names assigned to them by Orwell in 1948. However, since I have no interest in this effect, I won't further point out its cause.

Because it is only what they currently possess that the current generation of the House of Saud wishes to pass on to Bin Laden and the currently "rebellious" generation to follow, they expect Bin Laden to desire this inheritance which is held over his head: control of the region's resources of natural oil reserves. But this prize is only worth something today so long as its current holders can continue to convince the rest of us to be dependent on it.

The entire time that internal-combustion engines have been marketed for the public, a parallel, secret, military experimental development program has been taken on, and it is believed that the military, as early as the 1940's, had made contact with alien beings through their pursuit of this technology.

Really, Bin Laden's fortunes in inheritance from the House of Saud, Bush's coveted "seat on OPEC," the Carlyle Group, companies like Halliburton and Bin Laden Construction, intelligence agencies such as the CIA, Mossad, ISI and Saudi "economists," and even malignant hazing ceremonies such as in Yale Skull and Bones and at the Bohemian Grove - all of these things are worth less to nothing to the average person, and therefore should not be considered something desirable or coveted as a rare, nearly super-natural power over the "masses."

It is "standard operating procedure" to believe that "what we don't know won't hurt us." In this way, the GATT, NAFTA etc. international business "treaties" and the testing of "stealth" space-craft technology can both continue behind the backs of the otherwise un-approving, or simply too easily frightened, masses. Out of one side of a spy's mouth will come one statement while out the other will issue the exact opposite in meaning. Often both prove lies. Likewise they say, "what we don't know won't hurt us" to the public, but privately act to prevent us from discovering their true motives for fear we would rebel.

The problem, in truth, isn't that we might rebel. The problem, in truth, is that we know we have to go along with the process applied by our leaders, however rocky, of creating a globally unified civilisation. We understand the ultimate irrelevance of our own individual attempts to thwart the inevitability of this irreversible trend. We know that a global civilisation exists now, but that it is currently still at war within and against itself. We know that the next stage to follow is global peace. We pray only for our own patience.

Fine, you've convinced me that: A) pre-Israeli "Zionists" wanted three world wars. B) Mossad, Israeli intelligence, was (at LEAST partially) behind 9-11. C) that I don't understand WWII "AT ALL" simply because I think 6 million Jews were killed and / or because I believe "naively" that this is a sufficient justification for a "Jewish" state in the Middle East. D) that I must be Jewish for thinking you're even remotely anti-Semitic (which, I re-iterate, includes being anti-"Arab," which one is by considering "Jews" and "Arabs" as races, rather than one race with two religions). E) that I think the immediate criminal prosecution of Bush and Cheney for war crimes would be futile so long as David Rockefeller (are there even any Rothschilds still alive??) is not prosecuted for consolidation of capital. Hm. Let's go through these point by point.

A) Anarchism is not a philosophy of war. However, traditionally, the group that has been blamed for starting world wars have been called "Anarchists." Look at the Black Hand who killed Arch Duke Ferdinand as well as the "Polish" Anarchists who burned down the Reichstag. Look additionally at Al Queida. These crimes were BLAMED ON "Anarchists" (as was every assassination or attempt all around the world since Lincoln), but were not committed by people who believe in the philosophy of "Anarchism." They were all perpetrated by spies, members of the growing global intelligence community. Now, I'm an Anarchist, personally. I subscribe to Marx's "third estate" of a Communist utopia where no standing governing body exists. That's my belief, my personal philosophy, etc. So when people accuse "Anarchists" of crimes, my ears perk up. Whenever any form of "ideological" crime is committed, it is NEVER perpetrated by a philosophical Anarchist. It is ALWAYS a member of the global intelligence community.

Anarchism exists in two forms: Temporary and Permanent. Currently, it only exists in temporary forms, however in an ideal future it can exist permanently. The difference between Permanent Anarchy and the ends desired to be brought about by the actions of intelligence agents is that existing formal systems will constrict around and seek to snuff out the "temporary anarchy" caused by the spies' actions. In short, the spies seek to clamp down the laws against their actions by breaking the laws already prohibiting them. By bringing about a more restrictive world-order, intelligence agents accomplish the exact opposite of the goals of a philosophical Anarchist whose utopia is a permanent absence of state.

I can fully grok the motives of those who I can relate to as a philosophical Anarchist. However those who speak lies, believe reality is subjective, and who act in the name of Anarchism to achieve the goals of dictatorship, I cannot fathom their interior thoughts and motives. When you say that people like Pike, Mazzini, Ben Ihuda and others who I can relate with philosophically are the ones who are actually behind the global events that have been carried out by intelligence agents, I'd beg to differ only on one point: that Anarchism as a permanent theory does not justify any temporary action taken in its name. If I had written the Protocols, or the alledged Pike/Mazzini letter, would that mean I would be the one responsible when the first nut-job to read them went and acted my theories out? Is violence only learned via immitation of the tv? So, no theorist should be held accountable for the military application of their ideas. Blaming the people who think thoughts you don't like, Q, is no justification for anyone to take action to undermine those ideas' implimentation. If you, yourself, are not an Anarchist, it does not mean you may infiltrate Anarchist ideologies and exploit them to benefit yourself. That's asinine.

So, IMO, even if Pike and Mazinni DID plan three world wars, and even if Rebbi Ben Ihuda DID write the Protocols of the Learned Elders, these people themselves did not initiate, bring about, nor even live to see others bungle, the implimentation of their theories. What is your beef with them? Since when has trying to understand evil by looking at the world from the devil's point of view been as much of a crime as killing 6 million people in science experiments? You would say, "we NEEDED those human test subjects for developing the technology we take for granted today." You can also identify your national affiliation with the interests of the intelligence community and say, "we invaded Iraq." There is no "we." There is no conspiracy. There are only people in power over formal systems. And so long as there ARE formal systems, there is no anarchy.

Consider Catholicism. It is a very rigid formal system. Pike, Mazzini and Ben Ihuda all sought to think about things "outside the box" of obedience to the Pope of the "Universal" Church. Consider what happened to the Templars, Cathars, Gnostics, desposyni, witches, Satanists, Ottomans, Septamanians, gypsies, European Jews, Saraccens, Sephardic Semites, and Gallileo, all who betrayed the "mother" church simply by committing the "thought-crime" of holding a more unique point of view, or rejecting the plot for a "second coming." Just as Weishaupt ratted on the Jesuits, Oswald would have eventually compromised the security of the modern intelligence agencies for whom he worked. Just as Weishaupt is relentlessly slandered to this day and held solely accountable for the plot to overthrow all the world's governments of his day, so too is Oswald called a "lone nut" and a "patsy" on both sides, and was martyred as the man blamed for killing the first Catholic US president.

I think you protest too much, Q. There is an idealogical conspiracy, and it doesn't advocate Anarchism in either the long run or the short run. Pike, Mazzini and Ben Ihuda did NOT belong to it, nor does any Mason then nor now. But "Zionism" IS its agenda. It DID benefit from the creation of the state of Israel and does from Israel's draining of American funds via churches and masonic-immitator charities. And it would benefit most from what you preach as "inevitable," a nuclear holocaust in the Holy Land. Moreover, they also believe themselves the modern-day servants of the Sumerian demonic pantheon the Annnunaki. Guess who?

If you weren't part of it, you would be more open to the notion of it. But you're part of it, so instead of listening to what I say, you call me "closed minded" instead. Think about it. You're nothing but a brain-washed "intelligence" agent, serving the only "true" will there could be at the apex of such a vast, global "conspiracy" as you imagine you fight against, that of the Pope of the Roman Church. You should be realising, instead, that THE POPE IS THE ULTIMATE ZIONIST. But you don't. I wonder why.

B) yes, Mossad, to pick bones apart, was behind 9-11. So were Pakistan's ISI, Saudi Arabia's National Intelligence Agency and, duh, the CIA. The problem isn't with them though. The problem is with Bush and Cheney, who acted on behalf of the intelligence communities interests on and since 9-11 and not in the interests of the American people. Imagine a confused king whose chief advisor is an evil wizard. In this case, the king is the President and the Wizard is his own father. However, if you kill the wizard, you will only strengthen his evil hold over the king. So what is the Peshier, Q? What is the meaning? How do you get to the wizard? Destroy his bargaining chip, what gives him the "upper hand," what he holds over your head. Kill the king, or at least dispose of him as an impediment between you and the wizard. Removing the king castrates the wizard of their authority. This metaphor is equally applicable to W and to HW as it is between HW (as OHO) and Pope Ratzinger (as IHO) of the Order. This is all just political chess, and I'm sure you are sufficiently aware of how to play it.

My only difficulty in accepting your notion that the sole benefactor is the philosophy of "Zionism" and all its financial adherents is simply that you cannot prosecute people for holding a "criminal philosophy," because there is no legal precedent for charging someone with what essentially constitutes "thought-crime." The whole concept is Orwellian insofar as you would institutionalise the alleged ideology over even only waging an "ideological war" against it. The neo-con "war on terror" is a crime against humanity. We prosecuted the NAZIs for the Holocaust. Therefore it would be unethical and hypocritical for the good people of this nation and the world to not do the same to the US neo-cons and their willing partners in their "coalition of the willing," since their crimes in Iraq and during their ideological war at home as well, have been just as bad as those committed by the NAZIs in the Holocaust. Their means, motive and opportunity have all been identical. The NAZIs established Hitler as the national "dictator" following the Reichstag Fire. The PATRIOT ACT gave Bush identical rights following 9-11. The NAZIs disappeared Jews and socialists to concentration camps. The neo-cons suspend "Habeas corpus" to arrest Arabs and socialists without warrant and detain them in "black-budget" military or private prisons.

The NAZIs were to blame for WWII and the neo-cons are to blame for the WII. It is very simple. Now, the NAZIs MAY HAVE BEEN Zionists. I could accept the idea in a roundabout, Theosophical way. The neo-cons definitely ARE Zionists, but only insofar as they fund and arm Israel. They are also many OTHER things as well, though. They are of a new breed of "Zionist" who is for a unified Palestinian State. They are also for domestic wire-tapping, consolidation of wealth, and are pro-life. By Bush's belief's Cheney's daughter is going to Hell for all eternity because she is gay. You can't prosecute someone for their beliefs. You can only charge them with specific crimes that they commit. The neo-cons, like the NAZIs, are quick to change the law currently "on the books" so as to avoid technically committing war-crimes. However, their legislation will not last for long, and they will certainly end up dying alone in prison. This is because they used the US military to invade Iraq, based on the false-terror attack of 9-11 that they, themselves, were responsible for, if not directly (by causing it, as I believe they did), or indirectly (by funding Al Qaeda, as the CIA did).

Again, Q, when you protest the ideology of "Zionism" you are just blowing hot air to flap a flag of hatred, warfare and ultimately totalitarianism. I'm referring, again, to the Catholic Church, as much so as to the NAZIs and to the neo-cons. All are closet fascists who condone the slaughter of semitic people. And you, Q, are acting an awful lot like a disinformation agent their cause. You certainly aren't an "Anarchist" or a "Gnostic" like I am. And you certainly do tend towards emotional outburst more than I prefer to allow myself to (unless drunk). As I say, I can't fathom it. We seem to agree that INTELLIGENCE AGENCIES WITHIN THE GOVERNMENTS OF NATIONS, COORDINATING AMONGST ONE ANOTHER, ARE THE MODERN CONSPIRATORS. However, whereas you are "Hell-bent" on blaming 9-11 on Mossad, I am at least open to the notion of prosecuting our current president and his administration for crimes against humanity and war-crimes by benefitting from 9-11 after the fact. As Chomsky says, when he's in Tel-Aviv, he'll tell them what he thinks Israel should do, or when he's in Berzeit, he'll talk about what would be best for the Palestinians, but he's here now, in the United States, so he talks about what he thinks it is best for the American people to know. So do I blame the American contingency of the 9-11 "master-minds" because I live in America. If I lived in the "Q-Continuum" with THE AQUARIAN 1, I would be able to relate better with his views. But I do not.

C) I do think 6 million Hebrews, Jehovah's Witnesses and Socialists were slaughtered in science-experiments and ovens in concentration camps such as Aushwitz and Dachau during the third reich in deutschland. They weren't the reason America entered the war. But they were the reason the US, Russia and Great Britain all agreed to form the UN and to establish a state of Israel. They formed the UN to prevent such crimes as the Holocaust from occurring again, however the NAZIs quickly infiltrated both the UN and the intelligence agencies of the US, Britain, Russia and Israel. Their ideology of a secret global Holocaust, disguised as the "rapture" or simply perpetrated in the name of wars between foreign races, has been adopted by the WHO (the World Health Organisation, who experiment with AIDS virus vaccines on tribes-people in Africa) under the UN as much so as by the neo-cons exterminating "Arabs" (semites) by disappearing them to secret prisons. We know that water-boarding (a form of torture) is used in interrogating these people who, more often than not, are unaware of why they were even abducted, because they have no direct ties to any criminal organisation. Their only crime was being Semitic, the perceived enemies of the NAZI hierarchy in Brazil, the Pentagon, NASA and the airline industry. The NAZIs want to keep us using solid-fuel propulsion technology, both in our internal-combustion engine-powered personal and small group transportation vehicles. Meanwhile, in Area 51, they have long possessed quantum-teleportation for intra-solar trips, and UFOs powered by ZPE for inter-stellar travel. So, the NAZIs, to keep us addicted to oil, have fomented strife in the Middle East. This was the true reason the Pope smiled on Mussolini. Not because the government of Italy is more powerful than the concentration of authority in Papal City, and the Pope bowed to kiss the ring of a tyrant. It was because Mussolini invaded North Africa and made it possible for the British mandates of the former Ottoman Empire to be further disrupted and infiltrated or destroyed. The Pope is the sworn enemy of Islam, although not all Popes have upheld their foresworn oath to battle the heretics as the Army of Jesus (the Jesuits) or other evangelical off-shoots such as Mormonism and S.Baptists. Islam and Judaism have historically gotten along much better than Catholic Christianity has with either. If you don't recognise that fact, Q, you are blind.

The reason the US entered WWII was to fight Hirohito, the last emperor of Japan. Roosevelt staged Pearl Harbour as an excuse to make public the atomic bomb, however had the NAZIs stopped with France and not bombed Britain, the congress would never have agreed to enter the European theatre. The NAZIs collaborated with US businesses before, during and after WWII. This was one reason some US businesses (Ma Bell, Standard Oil, Steel, Ford auto industries) manufactured below quota, below standard, or outright faulty equipment for US soldiers, while others (IBM, IG Farben, Hearst Papers, Rockefeller, etc.) collaborated openly, supplying the NAZIs against the soldiers sent by their own nation. American businesses and the NAZI party in Germany were so intermingled in their interests, motives, means, ends and financial exchanges that we may as well just identify them all as one group, and call that group, "Fascists." US fascists collaborated with German fascists.

The reason Roosevelt wanted to attack Japan was the same reason Germany wanted to attack Poland. Japan's primary strategic value at the time was as a research and development technological staging ground for western fascists to gain influence in the affairs of eastern socialists. Roosevelt was one of the first presidents to be aware of the true extent to which, already by that time, the interests of modern intelligence-communities had infiltrated the state department. Remember that, before WWII, the US only had an Army, but no navy, air-force or marines branches to it. Remember that, since WWII, the US had remained in a state of "national emergency" which allows the president to declare Martial Law at any time he likes. The fascist industrialists of 100 years ago have all benefitted terrifically since WWII, and so I think they, the true victors, would definitely consider the endeavor a success.

Again, I can recognise these people, but I'm not qualified to speak on their motives, since such are alien to me. From my point of view, the NAZIs won WWII, and the working-class people all over the world lost. We entered the "space age" and have since "fallen from grace" like Icarus in neotomy. Our culture has totally degenerated since the 1970's. We have been infiltrated by dis-organisers, and we are turned in distrust against our own comrades. Meanwhile, the rich continue to exist in their perpetually shrinking bubble of isolationism, growing evermore paranoid and schizophrenic, insulated from the poor, from reality and ultimately from each other. Since I count myself on the side of the working-class "common man," I consider myself a victim of WWII after the fact. The NAZIs tested contaminating drinking water on Jews, but the process was implimented here on a much more massive scale immediately afterward, and it has been continuing ever since. The NAZIs spied on their citizens, and the NSA, as part of Project Echelon, will read these very words I write. The NAZIs considered certain mystics "enemies of the state." So too, but for the grace of God, am I.

My personal saving grace is that, as a mystic, a Gnostic, an Anarchist, I have empathy with my fellow mystics, Gnostics and Anarchists. When fasicts, NAZIs and anti-semites attack and murder them for no reason beside that they "fit the description" in an "idealogical" war, I tend to get outraged and want to fight against the perpetrators. I believe in using the law to root out and punish the individual people within the larger formal systems. But that is the end in my belief in the need for any law.

Because I am on the side I am, idealogically speaking, that is, the side of the Jews against the NAZIs as much as the Indians against the Cow Boys, and because I like it when I see people who are on the same side as me celebrate a victory, however pyrhic, I am glad when I think back over history about the creation of Israel. There is nothing wrong with the creation of Israel in theory. The only thing wrong with it in reality is how it was implimented. It was co-opted by corporate interests representing the same agenda as those whom had backed the NAZIs and who continue to this day to benefit off US defense-department "black budget" spending. Israel is a name they use today to refer to a portion of land. Once that land was Palestine. Before that it was a caliphate in the Ottoman Empire. Before that it was part of the Sullyman Dynasties' empire. Before that it was part of Rome. Before that it was the land of the Hebrew Kings. Before that it was Babylonian, and before that Canaanite. Originally, this land was where the first north-migrating tribes of Australopithocenes met the first southward migrating tribes of CroMagnons and interbred to create the Homo Sapiens and Neanderthals. That land no more "belongs" to the "Jews" than to the "Arabs," or any of its prior owners since Mitochondrial Eve. IMO, every modern city in Israel is sitting on top of and covering up a much more important archaeological reliquary of evidence for events more important to our history than the infrastructure of the current, only recently established civilisation. However, insofar as the land belongs to no one, it may be inhabited by any and all. Once we realise that, then no one can claim any land as property exclusive from anyone else, and once none can steal land because all land is free, then we will begin to see the real motives for establishing the state of Israel were not, in truth, exclusively as a means of giving western developed nations a foot-hold in an oil-rich region. It just worked out that it did.

D) Judaism is NOT a Race. At one time, the Jews were a "Nation" of people, but they did not have a "homeland" for their Nation. Two similar comparisons would be the nomadic Nations of the Native North American "Indians" and the hypothetical situation of the African American slaves being promised each "40 acres and a mule" when they were emancipated. The Hebrew (then called "Habiru" deriving from Egyptian "Hyksos" meaning "shepherd kings") Nation wandered in the Sinai Peninsula and then invaded the "Land of Milk and Honey" as far west as the modern Gaza strip. Shortly after this, the land was conquered by Babylon and the Hebrew Nation were taken as captives to Babylon in land that is today called Iraq. Shortly before the time of Jesus they were allowed to return to their lands, and divided what is modern "Israel" into two kingdoms: one in the north called Israel and one in the south called Judah. Jesus was from Judah. Jerusalem in modern Israel was in Judah during the time of Jesus. Judah was conquered by Rome almost immediately. A false-king was installed named Herod Antipas. The true king, Jonathan Maccabbeus, was deposed. His heir, the Herodians feared, was Jesus. That is why Jesus was crucified. In any event, the lands eventually fell into the hands of Moslem shieks who had been merely bedouin tribes people at the time of Jesus. Outstanding among these was the one whose caliphate contained Jerusalem. He was actually given the city by its Hebrew elders and commissioned to build the Al Aqsa Mosque (the "Dome of the Rock" atop the ruins of the Hebrew Temple). The more aggressive Saraccens eventually replaced the Sulyman dynasts, and were then, themselves, in turn overthrown by the even more aggressive Ottoman Turks. The Christian Crusaders tried to take it from the Saracens, and the Mongol hordes of Ghenghis Khan tried to take it from the Ottomans. Both failed. The Ottoman Empire existed throughout feudal Europe and, while the Pope was suppressing the heresy of alchemy, the Ottoman Turks were practicing advanced astronomy. The Ottoman empire existed straight through until the twentieth century, when it was finally broken apart by a combination of English, French, Italian, Spanish and US forces attacking it from every angle. I've already discussed elsewhere the time-table of the plans to divvy up the region among the European powers preceeding WWI, so I won't delve into that here. I will say, however, that it was at this time a battle prophesized for 2000 years was finally fought, on the plains of Har Miggido. I've also linked to this battle on wiki elsewhere, and so I won't go deeply into it either. But I will say that, according to the series of events described in the Book of Revelations, we are already living in POST-APOCALYPTIC TIMES. Instead of the Pope celebrating this fact, he promoted the agenda that Judaism was a race of people, and that the extermination of this race would solve the "Jewish Question" that has pre-occupied every pope since Paul, which is essentially the attempt to explain "WWJD" to the Christians who blamed the Jews for crucifying Jesus. "Kill em all and let God sort them out" has been the battle-cry of the twentieth century since the Battle of Armageddon.

E) consolidation of capital is not a crime in itself. If it were, banks, businesses, schools and all industry would be illegal. IMO, it should be. Property is theft. Saying you own something is not a good enough reason to deprive someone else of use of it if the other person needs it but you yourself do not, and only want it. This law seems morally just, despite the fact it has never, by either religion nor state, been codified. It's basically a Communist ideal, in the same sense as Anarchism, which I hope you now understand a little better than you did before.

Hopefully, in the future, we can discuss the Raelians, a modern UFO cult, and how they relate to the Kurgan tribal mythology, and the divided migration route taken by the Aryans, some going north and entering northern Europe from Eastern Asia across the Caucas Mountains, some going west through first Sumeria, then Egypt, then Israel, then France, then Britain. The Kurgan tribe was the actual origin of both the Aryan and the Semitic peoples. They had blue skin and dark hair, lived in the Indus river valley following the second world-flood's destruction of Lemuria, and wrote the Vedas. These people were likewise migrating up through Australia and Oceania (then a unified land-bridge) from Antarctica. As I say, time-travel is a very interesting subject, even moreso than modern aeronautics. But then, I can only reply to you directly about the topics you bring to me. If only you were a little more interesting, I wouldn't have to be wasting my time trying to convince you that Jews, Jesus and Adolph Hitler were all evolved from the same Ethiopian Eve. IMO most of the things you choose to question are so obvious as to be accepted as self-evident. Nonetheless, your attempts at butting your head against the basic buttresses of civil reality are, however entertaining they may be to others, nonetheless can only lead to your own self-destruction.

And I do hate to say that to someone who is like the last candle lit in the chandelier of luminary intelligences here at my forums. But if you keep making "anti-semitism" an issue, I'll keep aiming it back at you. It's not like that's a threat, it's obvious I'll just keep doing it, and I'm only saying it to mention it's boring. Hope to hear back from you sooner in the future.

following is a eulogy for President Bhutto of Pakistan, assassinated by the ISI (intelligence service) and former president Pervez Musharraf, who had attempted to stage a military coup by refusing to recount election results and instituting martial law. I considered Musharraf's actions up to this date a neo-con experiment in population control. However, with the assassination of Benazir Bhutto, first elected female president, the ISI have given Pakistan their JFK. This turn of events is truly sadening.

The eulogy I will give here is from my published book, the MPDR, from the final section of the "historia singularitatis" volume in between the revised Formal System of Metaphysics and the Metaphysician's Desk Reference. Here is a link to a pdf of the "historia" section alone.

<http://www.benpadijah.com/historia/historia.pdf>

I spent the summer of 2001 writing "historia singularitatis" and wrote this addendum following the Sept. 11th tragedy. The following is from the last page of the text.

[quote="Jon Gee"]There will be another world war soon. It will be triggered by a nuclear explosion between India and Pakistan that will be seen by the security council of the united nations to impinge environmentally on the sovereignty of Russia.[/quote]

The security council of the UN has five permanent member nations: the US, Britain, France, China and Russia. The UNSC can only act if it does so unanimously. If even one of the permanent member states vetoes a proposed legislation, it is not enacted. This happened repeatedly in the 1980's when the US vetoed anti-terrorism plans that would have threatened their allies in S. Africa and Israel.

Legislation gets before the UNSC in one of three ways. It can be proposed by one of the five permanent member-nations. It can be proposed by one of the rotating, temporary member-nations. It can be proposed by the UNGA if it relates to a matter of international security. The intervention of NATO in Bosnia when Serbia was under Slobodan Milosevic is an example of when a non-UNSC member-nation requested intervention from the UNSC.

In the case of a nuclear fall-out occurring on the border of India and Pakistan, it would, given standard air currents above the region, probably "blow-back" over Afghanistan into Iran, between Afghanistan and Pakistan in the east and Iraq in the west. In fact, it would seem more likely for the "fall-out" to "blow-back" across China than Russia. So, how would this event be able to "be seen by the security council of the united nations to impinge environmentally on the sovereignty of Russia"?

The UNSC does not pass "environmental" legislation. It represents the right of its member-nations to summon military might to enforce their international disputes. The UNSC's initial intention was to enforce the sovereignty of its member-nations. The UNSC, therefore, deals with the IAEA's nuclear test program inspectors and with such entities of legislation as the Camp David and Kyoto Accords on ICBM disarmament.

However, the UNSC does not deal with "environmental" issues. Those are dealt with by the UN through private interest groups such as Green Peace or corporations such as Exxon-Mobil, primarily through NGOs such as private R&D firms, think-tanks and political lobbyists, but also through federal programs such as FEMA. None of these except FEMA, newly revamped post-Katrina, places a private military firm (Blackwater), construction firm (Halliburton) and a "black-budget" US federal program directly into the hands of the UNSC.

So what can I have meant when I wrote the UNSC will see the nuclear explosion between India and Pakistan as impinging "environmentally on the sovereignty of Russia"? It is my assertion that the extra-dense molecules of radioactively contaminated air will not rise over the Hindu Kush. Instead it will remain low to the ground, and as the earth rotates beneath it, it will settle far to the north east of the actual blast-sight.

All of this will, actually, be an unforeseen consequence. The group responsible for exploding the nuclear device will probably never be known, because someone else will either be blamed and/or claim credit than the group actually responsible. In truth, the location and potential use of the device will have been known to intelligence agencies around the world, however the decision to use it may prove to be a mistake. In truth, it will be done by a small group in the intelligence community seeking to gain great power very quickly. This group of radicals will detonate the bomb to serve the will of the global intelligence community. They will do it to kill Osama Bin Laden. And they will succeed. Unfortunately, history will be destined to remember the event not as the ultimate end to the war on terror, but as the beginning of the radioactive deterioration of the Siberian tundra, exposing millions of tonnes of methane gas and rapidly increasing the greenhouse effect aspect of global warming.

The reason the UN will intervene, according to my theory, and the reason this will result in a third world war, is that the environmental effect of global warming will be seen as a matter too great for the individual member-nations to legislate regarding during a national emergency or natural disaster. In the case of the nuclear waste from the Pakistan explosion settling in Russia, the Russian equivalent of the US EPA would be combined with the Russian equivalent of FEMA, and thus be directly under the UNSC. In the US, FEMA itself would be used to implement martial law. During this time many thousands of US citizens will die in or en route to concentration camps, built under Project REX84 and operated by FEMA. The result will probably be the same in Russia. The world war itself will only begin when the intelligence community pits the third world nations against the US and Russia to liberate the citizens. The intelligence community will do this to keep the power of the UN as a global governing body in check, just as it does now with national governments. The intelligence community will, thus, eventually convene the World Court to try the present rulers in the US and our allies, but it will almost certainly be conveniently too late to prevent a global holocaust, reducing the world population by one third. The intelligence community will then spread the spin under its prosperous rule that the global Holocaust was for the best.

[quote="Jon Gee"]The Green voting block of the U.N. (the Muslim nations) will use biochemical weapons against the developed nations' troops who will be sent into the Holy Lands with energy weapons based on scalar wave technology neutron guns similar to the phasers on Star Trek. No more hiding holes of sacred scrolls will be destroyed, though many innocent Muslims will be killed over the international affairs of their figure head leaders such as Saddam Hussein and Osama Bin Ladden, both of whom are only pawns of the CIA.[/quote]

Following the nuking of Bin Laden on the Pakistan / India border, the Moslem nations will be targeted for extermination from all directions, including from within. Saboteurs will torch Iran's nuclear power plant and create a second fall-out that will pollute the entire stretch from Turkmenistan to Kuwait and make accessing the oil fields south of the Caspian in Iran impossible for many hundreds of thousands of years.

Just as the Dalai Lama has forewarned, if his successor is not born in Tibet then Matrieya, the Last Buddha, might come from anywhere all over the world, so does Hymaneus Beta, the current outer head of the Order of Oriental Templars forewarn that the current Pope is the last of the Antichrist popes before the second coming of the Alpha and Omega pope of the Christian Church, the actual reincarnation of the historical person upon whom the character of Jesus in the New Testament was based.[/quote]

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Your extrapolations for A) and B), while mildly interesting to read, are explanations in favor of mental masturbation and I will exclude them from this discussion consequently.[/quote]

ie. you didn't understand them and therefore can't respond to them. Fine. Call me "crazy" or "stupid" instead. As Richard Nixon said, "Always accuse your enemy of your own worst crimes." I won't do that to you. I won't accuse you of not understanding me now either. You see, your mind is all knotted up with Newspeak lies and double-think plus good propaganda, you would never allow yourself to Truly "Understand" me (in a QBLHistical sense).

I'll come back to that in a moment, along with a response to the rest of your post, but first I'd like to prove my insanity, and your lack of spirituality, by breaking from this trend of wasted time to do what's right.

The Kurgan tribe that became the Semites and Indo-European "races" were from Antarctica 15,000 years ago. Then the magnetic poles reversed. There was a terrible earthquake. That was when the first group left Antarctica. They travelled north along the coast of S. America and up what is now the east of Africa. This group left the carved stone heads attributed to the Olmec, the moving stone spheres of Brazil and carved the original head of the Sphinx. In Mesopotamia, the northward migrating group first encountered southward migrating CroMagnons. At this time, 12,000 years ago, a second group left Antarctica, which was, by then, beginning to turn into a vast white tundra similar to modern Alaska or Siberia. This group migrated across Australia to the land-bridge where now are only the islands of Oceania into India. 8,000 years ago, the final people migrated from Antarctica into South America. 6,000 years ago there was a terrible flood, and all of this prior history was lost. The period before the final migration from Antarctica was called the Epoch of Atlantis. The period between the first migration north and the flood was called the era of Lemuria.

Just as the first group to migrate north from Antarctica had learned from the first cataclysm, the second group to have left, who came through Australia into India, were aware of the coming flood. According to the mythology of the era, a single man, called variously Ziasudra, Utnapishtim, Noah, Makkandea, Pacal Votan, Viracocha and Quetzalcoatl, built a boat. From the beginning of all modern civilisations, there is a myth describing how their set of laws and customs was delivered to them by a mysterious stranger from a land far away following a terrible cataclysm.

The second group to have left Antarctica, who dwelt in India 6,000 years ago, were called the Aryans. Noah was an Aryan. The remaining Aryans of India who survived the flood migrated north, across the Himalayas, into southern Asia. The Kurgan tribe migrated west, across Sumeria into Egypt. 2,000 years ago, the northward migrating Kurgans (Aryans) met the westward migrating Kurgans (Semites) in Europe. At that time, Jesus's son was crowned king of the reunified Kurgans in Scotland.

Now, as fantastic as that all may sound, I, personally didn't make any of it up. It's all pieced together from various sources, some simply history books I learned from in school, some popular "speculative" or "New Age" sources I bought from popular book stores. This is, true or not, the modern theory of our history as a species.

So, if you want to try to explain to me, Q, given the above history, why you think the Aryans and Semites are at war, I'd love to hear it. If you don't believe they are, or ever were, and you believe WWII was all a hoax for the purpose of population-control, I will accept that too. Even if you want to try to tell me that WWII, the war to end all religions, between the Jews and Arabs is pre-destined, I'll accept that too.

The only thing I won't accept is your insults. You're a grown man. You don't need to resort to such self-deprecating tactics. Even if you see me doing it, it doesn't make it right for you to repeat it.

If you're here to "teach" then tell me something I don't already know. Don't just tell me I don't get it because I don't agree, or that I'm stupid because I don't "understand." You don't even know what the word "understanding" means to me, as a QBLHist, let alone how to spell "your."

Which, sadly, brings me to my response to your last post.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Pike, Mazinni, and the Protocols. You're argument suggests that these authors are being used for evil like Hitler used Nietzsche.[/quote]

I hadn't thought of that actually.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]I think that's quite a silly comparison. [/quote]

if so, it's certainly so coming from you. It was your own "silly" comparison. Not mine.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Nietzsche did not have an interconnected secret cult that he controlled mentally, physically, and spiritually to achieve his long term goals. He had to rely on the sporadic chaos of the universe to reach his readers.[/quote]

So you think Nietzsche had no knowledge of the occult? And other than by gaining such "occult knowledge," is there any way to become a member of a "secret society"? Saying Nietzsche WASN'T a member of the Illuminati, but that Hitler was, is not a valid argument for the Protocols or the Pike-Mazzini letter being genuinely "occult" knowledge. IMO, Nietzsche's Zarathustra is actually more advanced in its application of "occult" knowledge, such as QBLH, than Mein Kampf, let alone the Protocols or the Pike-Mazzini letter. Moreover, unlike Zarathustra (a "genuinely occult" work, however public now) and Mein Kampf (probably ghost-written for Hitler anyway), the Protocols and the Pike-Mazzini letter are KNOWN FORGERIES. Not only are neither of these works "occult" in their subject matter (it might surprise you, but politics is the antithesis of mysticism), they have NO CONNECTION TO ANY "OCCULT" ORDER. In other words, yes, there WAS such a thing as the "Illuminati" secret society. Yes, there WAS such a thing as a "Thule" secret society. Yes there IS such a thing as "Free Masonry." Only:: NO, NONE OF THESE "SECRET SOCIETIES" OR "OCCULT" ORDERS WROTE THE PROTOCOLS OR THE PIKE-MAZZINI LETTER. Both are hoaxes.

Here's some news for you. Google is not your friend. It is trying to sell you things. That's all. One thing you bought off of it was the Pike-Mazzini letter. The Pike-Mazzini letter is to the internet what the Protocols were to tabloid newspapers. Let me ask you a quick question, Q. How much of Adam Weishaupt's own writings have you ever actually read? I bet it's not alot. You see, Weishaupt was convicted of criminal conspiracy to commit treason. That means he actually plotted to carry out the ideas of his secret society, now known as the Illuminati. That is why you can't find alot of writings by him. It's also why his writings were subsumed into Masonic libraries. It would be wrong to totally destroy them, but equally so to show them to the general public. This doesn't mean Masons act on the Illuminati plans. The opposite is true. Weishaupt was a philosophical Anarchist, and so are most Masons. However, Weishaupt lost out to the practical Anarchists (catholic spies). That is why his writings are suppressed and not popularly published, despite the "Illuminati" being the dejour name for the "conspiracy" (ie. fascist globalism). Because Weishaupt plotted to overthrow the conspiracy, the conspiracy keeps his writings secret. On the other hand, the conspiracy is not threatened at all, and is even proud to show off, such gems as the Protocols and the Pike-Mazzini letter. These serve their agenda, ie. fascist globalism. They spread racism and mistrust of Jews, Free-Masons and political liberals. By repeatedly thumping your fist on these works, you only make yourself look like a pope of fakery. You're a laughingstock in my eyes, Q, so long as you do not discount the Protocols and the Pike-Mazzini letter. Both are retrospective, describing the events of the past century before their publication. Move on. "Silent Weapons for Quiet Wars" is a MUCH more pertinent fraud for the early twentieth century, since it describes COINTELPRO in the least philosophical terms of any of these such hoaxes to have gone before. Granted, if I wanted to learn about COINTELPRO I'd probably STOP READING IT'S PROPAGANDA and start reading its interior memos and documents. But that's just me. Oh and furthermore, HITLER DIDN'T USE NIETZSCHE. NIETZSCHE WASN'T ANTI-SEMITIC. HE WAS AN ANTI-PAPIST.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Pike, Mazinni, and the author of the Protocols (Ben Ihuda?) had a very specific audience that they were apart of. Written for them and only them.[/quote]

yes. Pike and Ben Ihuda (the Protocols are supposedly based on a much shorter version delivered as a eulogy for Ben Ihuda, founder of Zionism and father of the modern Hebrew language) did have their own specific audiences. One was the Free-Masons, one was the "Jews" (the European diaspora whom you continually deride as the AshkeNAZIs). Now, since you are neither a Free-Mason nor a Jew, you see these groups as enemies. I'm neither a Free-Mason nor a Jew either, but at least I know a few. I don't blame them collectively for all evil nor think of them as fools. That's something only a Jesuit would do. Are you a Jesuit, Q? Or do you just happen to share all their views but not be able to count yourself a proud member? It might surprise you to learn that Free-Mason Albert Pike did NOT found the Ku Klux Klan. And if you knew anything about the rituals of either, you could compare and contrast them and discern from just whom the KKK DOES borrow its elaborate secret ceremonies. Have you ever seen the hoods worn by Inquisition era priests? But to my knowledge, neither the KKK nor Inquisition era priests wore APRONS.

Now, I'm quite certain you'll have gone through at least three or four mood-swings (ie. alternate personalities) since reading it, but remember that just because I'm about to do what I'm about to do doesn't make it right for you to repeat it. Q, you are a racist, fascist, Jesuit spy. Those are the dirtiest words I know.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]There is no conspiracy? I beg to differ, with vehemence.[/quote]

You would know since you're more a part of it than I am. I pose no threat to it, I offer no solutions, no means to achieving my desired ends: Anarchy. That is why I am innocent. Q, you, on the other hand, propose violent means to justify short-term gains, but offer no plan for the long term. You're a two-tongued liar, true, but your lies are too easily seen through. Hey, watch this::

Q, what religion are you?

there it is, straight up. Answer the question. A to the Q. You're here to "teach," to "lead" and to spur others to take actions dictated by you? Do so. But by all means, begin here: ANSWER THAT FIRST. Remember that philosophies such as existentialism, Buddhism and Agnosticism are not formalised religion. My question is not what your personal philosophy of life is, Q. My question is, what religion were you born into.

I'll bet you my last penny that you're Catholic.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Who are the NAZIs exactly?[/quote]

The NAZIs now exist mainly in Brazil and Antarctica, to the best of my knowledge. Of course, I'm not fool enough to believe everything I know, so I'm not going to tell you that's necessarily true. If I had to speculate, I'd say there are probably more "neo-NAZIs" now than actual, first-generation NAZIs, but that they have earned the right to carry the title, even though the majority of professed and practising "neo-NAZIs" are not, per se, also fascists, as were the NAZIs themselves. By Fascists, as always, I mean those in favour of business-interests controlling government policies in order to maximize profits. That's fascism. "Neo-NAZI-ism" is more or less exclusively racist, so far as I know, and has thus been "purified" of its originally fascist elements. And that, of course, is the difference between "neo-NAZism" and first generation NAZIs from the third reich era. "Neo-NAZIs" are more racist than fascist. The original NAZIs were more fascist than racist. And that fascism has definitely survived, and will, assuredly, prevail if it is not stopped by popular movement(s). Organised labour has almost totally been co-opted by the mafia and the CIA (who are basically the same by now). And that's a terrible, terrible, terrible, thrice terrible and a fourth time terrible thing. Organised labour, ie. Unionism, was a wonderful thing, but it had largely died before I was born. Jimmy Hoffa was a better person than Al Capone and J. Edgar Hoover combined, even with Elliot Ness thrown in for flavor. Communism, my friend, is the ultimate good. But so long as Catholicism opposes it, no true Communist state will be allowed to come into existence. So, you go back to your Jesuit friends, Q, and you tell them, "Jon Gee said a bad thing." And then get them to come here to my forums and try to post their indignation themselves, instead of just sending your sorry, dumb ass to defend them. You're the "real NAZI."

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Bush? Cheney? Rice? Wolfowitz?[/quote]

Yes, Bush is a NAZI insofar as he is both fascist and racist, but he is more of a "neo-NAZI" than an actual third-reich type NAZI because he is, actually, more racist than fascist, although he is both, unlike most "neo-NAZIs," who, as I tried to explain to you before, if you'll remember, are more racist than fascist, and often only racist and not truly fascist at all. In fact, and you can quote me on this, MOST NEO-NAZIS ARE REALLY SOCIALISTS. Go figure. Socialism, political advocacy for the working-class, is the exact opposite of fascism, the political authority of the ownership-class. Yet most neo-NAZIs are really socialists. Hmm. Well, they ARE mostly poor, working-class people. And they do look up to leaders who, though promising lower taxes and smaller government, inevitably glut fund the military and bomb foreign countries. In case you haven't noticed, "National Socialism" is neither. It's the opposite of the name it's called. No, "National Socialism" is fascist globalism.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]The Nazis are American?[/quote]

Some of them, such as Avirell Harrimann and Prescott Bush, were, and their children, namely George Herbert Walker and his son George Walker Bush, our past and our current presidents, respectively, are most definitely NAZIs. They are first generation NAZI-collaborators descendents, and as such are actually neo-NAZIs. Instead of using the term "neo-NAZI" however, they substitute the term "neo-conservative." Apparently, this is more than it takes to confuse you, Q. You blame the Jews, I blame the NAZIs. It's simple. We JUST DISAGREE. There's no reason for you to tell me I'm stupid or don't Understand you. WE JUST DISAGREE. I am not a NAZI, so I don't agree with you. That's that.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Does Nazi mean National Socialists? [/quote]

if I have to go over this one more time, I'm going to punch the wall. National Socialism is neither. That's newspeak. Fascist globalism is the force behind NAZism, and neo-NAZism is simply the addition to the pre-existent agenda of fascist globalism of racism. You, for example, are a very racist person, Q. So you must know first hand how humans learn to hate. It must have pained you an awful lot, what your abuser did to you. But whatever it was, you still try to forget and just move on. But you'll never be able to forgive them for what they told you, will you? And whatever that was, it will ruin your life. What am I talking about now? Wouldn't you like to know. For only your abuser, who is also your love, will ever understand. Now go eat shit.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Could a Jew be a Nazi?[/quote]

Most American Jews these days vote Democrat, despite maintaining high-paying jobs. That is why the Catholics hate the Jews, in the same sense that the owners hate the workers and fascists hate socialists. The Jews do not have "ALL the wealth." They only have an amount equal to the Pope. And that makes the Pope mad. So, the Pope nurtured racism among the longer-term movement of fascism. The Pope is only human, after all, and therefore bound to act out the sin of greed. He is not infallible in my eyes, and yes, I'm in the same universe as the Pope, and as you, Q. I'm not in hell, the Pope in heaven, and you in Purgatory. There is no hell, life is purgatory, and heaven is just a certain state of mind.

No, the majority of Jews vote Democrat because they are socialists at heart, and that is a blessed thing to be in my eyes. Socialism, labour-unionism, is good in every way that fascism is evil. And insofar as I believe that because I am on the side of socialism, so too does the Pope, YOUR POPE, Q, believe that racist fascism is the ultimate good, because that is the side that he is on. So, no basically, you can't be a "Jewish NAZI." But you go right ahead and start calling people that, and soon we'll all learn a valuable lesson in Natural Selection.

So, to sum up, a Jew could be a "Nationalist." A Jew can be a "Socialist." A Jew can even be a "National Socialist." But no Jew is a NAZI.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Could an Israeli?[/quote]

This is tedious. I see the point you're trying to make here, Q. You want me to argue against you on the grounds you offend my sense of common decency. You want me to say something like, "I wish you had died in the Holocaust," because only when you play the victim do you feel vindicated in your provocative behaviour. It's like getting your parents to stop fighting each other by turning their rage against you. Believe me, I understand. I've been that persecuted Christian martyr myself. I've been the scape-goat. It's not a rewarding thing to be in the long run. And it makes everyone hate you.

Look, your point is clear: if I argue that an Israeli can be a NAZI, you will argue that they all are and were solely behind 9-11. Which is, of course, not true. If I argue no Israeli can be a NAZI, you will argue that they are anyway, and that I am "blind" because I "believe" wrongly. You aren't here to learn, teach or listen. You're not even here to preach. A preacher has a choir. You've lost yours here. You haven't put forth any new or even valid information in the last several months. You are here to argue. That is why you exist. To argue. No, I give you permission to let go. Now, go die.

As to whether an Israeli can be a NAZI, I'd say yes. Israeli PM Ariel Sharon was a racist, fascist globalist. That's what my definition is for a NAZI. Unfortunately, that negates Sharon's Judaism, IMO. So, if you like: Sharon was a NAZI and NAZIs go to hell, even though Sharon was born Jewish, and all Jews (supposedly) go to heaven. The difference is basically one of nature v. nurture, birth v. conditioning. Hatred is learned. NAZIs are made. We are not born racist fascist globalists. We are born more spiritual beings. It is only by abuse posing as love we become cold-hearted liars, cheats, thieves and killers. If Hitler had been killed at birth, he would have gone to heaven. Hell, even if he'd been assassinated by a rebel from within, he'd have at least made it to Valhalla. Why the fuck do you worship him, Q? It's sick man. He's dead. A corpse. You can't fuck a corpse. Why fight it?

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Could anyone?[/quote] and then we get the "red scare" tactic. Typical. Okay, just admit it. You are a NAZI. You are jealous of Jews. Now get beyond that, somehow, and come back here after another month, and read it again. get pissed off again, go stew about it for another month, and repeat this until you get over it. You are a NAZI. Deal with it. Look, I Understand. I was a teen-age NAZI too. I was a racist, and a I thought if I could only play the "globalism" game as good as Jewish bankers, then I could get me a Barbie Doll brand wife to butt-fuck too. Then I grew up. I realised that wasn't the dream I wanted. And you should too. Stop coming around here trying to convince me to resort to a philosophy of violence. It's pathetic. You want to know if "anyone" could be a NAZI. Hell yes, "anyone can be a NAZI," it's a chosen philosophy, not a birth-right. But there's a catch. You can either choose to be Jewish OR a NAZI. You can't be both. You can only choose Good or Evil. Now, Q, which is which? And which are you? And why?

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Could an Israeli commit a crime? That's the big question. Oh my God no, a Jew can't commit a crime--did I say Jew, no I didn't I said Israeli. Oh my God no, an Israeli couldn't commit a crime, they were slaughtered by the Nazis--the Israelis were slaughtered by the Nazis? Yes. They were? Yes, the Israelis are Jews. Oh Gosh, Mossad really was behind September 11th? Well, only if we're picking bones apart. Whose bones? 3000 dead Americans? Uhhhh, yeah, but it doesn't matter, we should prosecute a puppet and his yes man, and we'll call them Neo-cons![/quote]

I want everybody to read this last quote at least twice. This is, for reasons I CANNOT FATHOM, the lone lunatic who comes here to talk to me. And nine-out-of-ten times anyone comes here to talk to me, it's him. I just don't understand this. What witch put a hex on me to where my biggest goddamned fan is this nut-job. Fuck him. He's not worthy of me. Yet this is what I get. I don't know though. Maybe FoXDiE is right, maybe I am the common denominator, a magnet for internet psychopaths. Maybe you all ARE only reflections of my own interior psyche in the mirror of a fake communications media, where 99% of people we "meet" online are as fake as the day is long. Maybe I was right when in 2004 I wrote on TLFC.com a thread entitled "are we all the same person?" Of course, if I'm right, that would mean that all the people I've met online are only waiting to betray me. Most of those I've met this way certainly have. And fuck them very much for it. Hmm. I don't know though. Maybe somehow I am karmically bound to revolve around this self-denying NAZI, Q, here. I know as I soon as I would let him he'd delete every word he'd ever written. That's what I did on TLFC AND the IOBB. But alas, better times have followed my leaving each. Perhaps that is the lesson Q exists to learn? Hey, Q! GET OFF THE WWW.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]THERE IS NO RACE
THERE ARE NO BLOODLINES[/quote]

jibberish. Pure jibberish. Not even well put together enough to be a lie. Simply a contradiction in terminology, the ONLY TRICK YOU HAVE. It's called "newspeak." You say one thing, then the opposite. It's typical in a submissive, someone who willing submits themselves to a system of rules, even one in which their own behavior is reinforced by punishment more than pleasure. Eventually, the brain inverts and becomes evil: asexually (subliminally) sado-masochistic, deriving their sole sense of pleasure from seeing and/or causing other people's pain. The only one who would use newspeak, like Q here, is someone who has suffered alot of pain. Someone who has suffered so much pain, in fact, that they come to idealise it. They blame themselves to justify their need to feel guilt. It's called a "shame-spiral." This is only the down-side of their cycle of abuse though. On the upswing, Q gets manic. Then he comes here to post. I know this, I'm the same way. There's no shame in it, except what we desire to have for it. No, Q's guilt is driven by his ignoring this. No matter how many times he tells me I'm full of shit, he'll always come back to argue the grain of truth in my words that got him thinking. I'm the same way. The only difference is, in my case, it's my pity that's self-destructive. In Q's, it's his pride. Q is PROUD of hating himself. Listen to him. Here, I'll just let him continue a moment:

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]In order for your side of the equation to make any sense at all, you have to pervert my opinions, point by point. And then you spend paragraphs of mental energy extrapolating on a point I NEVER made. It's really, really frustrating.[/quote]

Let's go through this... point by point.

1) "your side of the equation" : he's already told me I "must be a Jew" if I think he's an anti-semitic. So, that is, for the record, what his belief is about my "side of the equation." I'm with Marx, he's with Hitler. let's continue...

2) "make any sense at all" : obviously at this point in Q's writing his brain told him to think the words "it doesn't make any sense at all." So, he thought them. He thought them about what I'd written. The only problem appears to be that Q's brain was actually thinking that about his entire mental universe. Not only just my writing.

3) "you have to" : this presumes I must, regardless of whether I want to or not. This simply is not the case. However, to the feverishly delusion brain inside of Q's head, I exist in the same state of perceived necessity as he does. Of course, since no such necessity exists for either of us, it is clearly merely a malfunction of his head.

4) "pervert my opinions" : Okay, then. You tell me "I have to." So I will. But then, have I always been? If I already am now, when did I start? Was it recently? Think back. When was the earliest I possibly could have been lying to you just to trip you up? Think hard, A-hole. I might give a quiz on it at the end.

5) "a point I NEVER made" : you can't prove you didn't make it. You could prove it if you had. I mean, if you were to say, "I think Adolf Hitler is Mein Gott Ein Himmel!" then it can be proven whether or not you said it. But if you're saying you didn't say something, there's no way to look back over the entire record of what you've said to prove it isn't there. It would be like my saying "well I didn't name myself." It's probably true on a technicality, but there's no way to actually test it. So no cigar.

6) "It's really, really frustrating" : if it's so damn difficult, just give up. I mean, I waited more than a week between watching your gay porn link and when you responded to tell me I don't know anything about WWII if I believe the Holocaust ever happened. You should probably have chilled out alot longer if that's the best you could do after a whole week. Most of what you say don't make no sense no way. It'd just be nice if you could say it in a less emotional way. That would be greeaaattt. Thaaannnkss.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"] call the current international criminals Zionists because they were behind Zion, and they are currently using Zion as their tool.[/quote]

Yeah, so when you say "Jew" meaning "Zionist," it's supposed to be the same as when I say "NAZI" meaning "fascist globalist"? I disagree. See, when you talk about Meyer Rothschild's family, and you don't talk about, say, David Rockefeller's, who I've mentioned before, you aren't talking about "fascist globalists." You're talking, specifically, about certain fascist globalists and not others, because the fascist globalists you are talking about are racists who promote the idea of "Judaism" as a "race." You need to get out more. Breathe the fresh air. Wake the fuck up to 2008.

Besides, the word "Zion" means something different to me than it does to you. To me, it means the stone tablets that had been kept inside the ark of the covenant. And the global fascists, let alone the racist "Zionists" you imagine amongst them, may have got Jerusalem's land, but they can never possess the true and actual Zion.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Are there any Rothschilds still alive? Are you serious? Is that an actual question? Why in God's name do you want to talk about the Raelians when you don't even know about the House of Rothschild?![/quote]

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Israel is not Judaism.[/quote]

no one ever said it was, Broud. You're fighting a ghost. Aylah has won.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Israel does not represent the Jews.[/quote]

Actually, Israel as it exists as a nation-state now is more or less inextricable interwoven with the Jews. The fate of Israel is specifically tied to them since the Holocaust. If people like you had your way, Q, every Jew on earth would be eradicated because of the right-wing government and the intelligence agency of a single nation: Israel. To you, in your mind, Q, Israel DOES represent the Jews. And therein lies the problem.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]a sovereign nation can never be intertwined with a religion or a perceived race.[/quote] as usual, you're saying the opposite thing after saying something true. No point in my continuing to point that out though. Walk on your own.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]If you're on the side of the persecuted and not the persecutor, or more succinctly in your case, David and not Goliath, then HOLY SHIT!, you're on the side of PALESTINE!!! [/quote]

Again, I'm not on "David's" or "Goliath's" side. I'm not on "Israel's" side and I'm not on "Palestine's" side. Reality is not a sport being played out by two teams and we are not merely spectators cheering for our "side" to win. If it were a matter of David versus Goliath, the underdog would be clear. However, you're mis-understanding the myth in this context, by applying it to a situation wherein Palestine, unlike David, is actually the non-aggressor, and where Israel, unlike Goliath, is actually the aggressor. So, yes, I'm on the "side" of Palestine in this case, but in your example of the myth of David and Goliath, I'd actually be on the side of Goliath. But then, that just goes to show how much you know.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Where is your allegiance to them?[/quote]

What do you want me to do? Salute a foreign nation's flag? I'm not a nationalist. I don't care at all about flags, one nation's or another's. I wouldn't wipe my ass with the flag of the US, Israel or even Tibet! Nor, comrade, should you. Wiping your ass with one flag while wiping your mouth with another is a dangerous business.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Israel is THE international Goliath.[/quote]

Just like the Soviet Union was during the Cold War?

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]Palestine is THE international David, considering it doesn't even exist as a state.[/quote]

Again, mis-understanding the myth. David was real, Goliath wasn't.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]It's people dispersed and forcibly shunned by the international community. Outcast by the United Nations, in a deceptive campaign by Zionists to choose one people, the Jews, over another, the Arabs, igniting the flame that would eventually lead to World War III. But yeah, it's the Neo-Cons. It's the cowboys over the "indians."[/quote]

Actually, it IS the goddamn "cowboys" versus the "red-skins". And why do you say "would" in the past tense? The future is not set in stone, Q. Even if a greater 'world war' than the one in Iraq now is to follow or not is not for you to decide. Nor for me, nor for any one person, of any species of sentient entity. Look, I'll spell it out for you again (and again and again), the neo-cons are the ones pitting Jews against Arabs in the present. We should deal with that problem, I agree. I just think it needs to be dealt with in the present, not ninety-nine years ago. You can't deal with the problem ninety-nine years ago now. You can only deal with now now. That is why I keep saying we have to seek prosecution of the neo-cons for war-crimes. This is, of course, only the first step. We should also seek prosecution for the CFR and the federal and world banks. The reason I set these in this order of priority is simple. People are dying in Iraq. First we have to put a stop to that. Then we have to imprison the criminals who perpetrated that. Then, after the killing has been stopped, we can go after the ones who are behind financing the killers. It's simple math to someone with a soul, a spirit, etc. If you think that, by defunding the chicken-hawks, you will prevent, rather than provoke, their killing, and if you think that you can root out the criminals themselves by exposing their finances, then you are being misled by tv drama. Remember I'd mentioned Elliot Ness? He worked for the Federal Reserve. He was a G-man: a TAX COLLECTOR. He wasn't one of the "good guys." He was the criminal, because he was defending the criminals, in that case the bankers. When you need to build a cold-case file about an unsolved murder, then to determine probable motive you examine the finances. But the killing is still going on. Its perpetrators are still at large. And you think cutting off their US allowance would do anything OTHER than destroy Israel? You're just trying to be Elliot Ness, Q. You want to bust the money-trail to find where the "buck stops"? It doesn't stop. It's not ever going to stop man. It'll just keep going on around and around forever. And you can't get off. Buy the ticket. Take the ride.

[quote="THE AQUARIAN 1"]I don't come to you for answers. I don't come to you with questions. In case you haven't figured it out yet, I come to you with information, to enlighten you. Those who can, do. Those who can't teach. So, by all means my grammatically retarded comrade. Tell me something factually true I don't already know.

intro:: Ron Paul has repeatedly stated . . .

Ron Paul has repeatedly stated that he would not go to war against Iran "unless provoked." He recognises the time-table for the terrorist-networks to enable rogue-nations to assemble a single deliverable nuclear weapon capable of threatening American soil as ten years (2018).

His position is that, if the national sovereignty of the United States was threatened, he would respond to the attacker, but that, by withdrawing the apparently offensive presence of our military in the middle-east, the motive for the rogue nations and terrorist networks to threaten US sovereignty would likewise be withdrawn.

If the CIA were to stage a nuclear attack that could be interpreted as a threat to US national sovereignty during a Ron Paul presidency, and provide "faulty" (prejudicial) intelligence tying the attack to Iran, then a war with Iran could conceivably occur in spite of Ron Paul's campaign promise.

Part 1:: the CIA coup de tat in the USA

It is widely known that it was the US CIA who created the terrorist networks and installed dictators in the rogue-nations. It is not well known yet, but it is widely suspected and believed that the CIA also staged 9-11 as a "new pearl harbor" on behalf of neo-con politicians.

Under prior executive orders, through FEMA, the executive office has the authority, in a "declared" state of emergency (which has been a standing stated condition since 1947), to initiate Martial Law. Rural Population Control Centers, built on land purchased by the UN and managed by private companies funded by FEMA, have already begun being used as secret prisons to detain suspected "enemy combatants" without habeas corpus.

If there were a nuclear explosion within the borders of the domestic US, or even, moreover, one staged to look like an assassination attempt against the president himself, then there is a strong possibility that the CIA could, through the Secret Service, initiate Continuity of Government, suspending the Bill of Rights of the US Constitution in order to impliment Martial Law and provide redundant office-holders for each elected representative in the form of a "shadow government," operated from hidden, "secure" locations in underground bases.

For a CIA coup in the US to be successful, any popularly elected president would have to be removed from power. Because the presidential election campaign has become identified with a large popular following of young internet users, if a popularly elected president were removed by currently conventional CIA means (overthrown and publically sentenced to death), it would provide reason to implement martial law as "crowd control" against peaceful protestors.

Thus, the CIA-installed, COG "shadow government" would be able to assume a stance internationally identical to that following 9-11 just prior to the war in Afghanistan.

However, if the president were not assassinated, the CIA would unlikely be able to expand the nuclear conflict into the distant foreign theatre, and thus to maintain the instability necessary to maintain domestic martial law. Only by suppression (and preferably extermination) of the majority of the US population could the CIA coup succeed in the long-term goal of replacing the constitutional US government.

Therefore, there would need to be a delay between each of this series of events if the CIA's desired outcome were to be achieved:

- 1) the nuclear attack on American soil seen to threaten our national sovereignty.
- 2) the assassination or overthrow of the elected chief executive.
- 3) the implementation of COG and the declaration of domestic martial law.

4) the expansion of the nuclear retaliation campaign into the foreign theatre.

While the ideal situation would have allowed all of the desired ends of the CIA to have been met by reaction to the events of 9-11, it was not yet possible to implement martial law. This was the key ingredient for the coup to succeed. Because events of 9-11 did not enable martial law to be implemented, the use of nuclear weapons as a retaliatory measure did not occur.

Therefore, we can see 9-11 as a test run for the Ultimate Doomsday Plan. 9-11 enabled the CIA to gain an unprecedented level of control within the United States. It continues to operate its covert prison and COG underground-base programs and, through the newly created dept. of Homeland Security, the domestic and foreign US armed forces are being out-sourced to private mercenary companies created by the CIA and funded by no-bid government contracts.

The only reason that the Ultimate Doomsday Plan was not completed in the 9-11 eventuality is that martial law could not be implemented. If martial law were implemented, it would have allowed the president at that time, a CIA pawn, to defy the popular law and destroy a foreign country with nuclear weapons.

Part II :: The Ultimate Doomsday Plan

The reason for the title of the Ultimate Doomsday Plan is that, in the event of the destruction by America, or any developed nation, of any geographically smaller or less technologically developed nation, this would inevitably trigger a reprisal against the aggressor nation from another nation, developed or not, most likely a coalition comprised of both developed and developing nations, leading to an escalation of thermo-nuclear combat until the majority of earth's surface would be decimated beyond any possible habitability for several hundred thousand years.

The Ultimate Doomsday Plan is the goal desired by the military-industrial complex, that includes government-funded military and scientific research and development corporations as well as large-scale manufacturing of habitation and transportation infrastructures and supplying their requisite consumable energies (gas, electric). The Ultimate Doomsday Plan is to retreat into underground bases and use nuclear weapons on the surface of earth until the entire above-ground population is extinct. It is postulated the surface could then be re-terraformed and made habitable for an array of genetically engineered flora and fauna, and that, repopulated by a reduced number of people, human and mechanical technology could be fused to create a new, hybrid species, capable of more control over their environmental reality.

To the chosen few, the Ultimate Doomsday Plan offers the promise of immortality. However to the vast majority, the Ultimate Doomsday Plan offers only an apocalyptic death. Through the CIA, the military-industrial complex has made it very clear that they will martyr anyone who learns about the Ultimate Doomsday Plan and does not subsequently work to enable it to occur. They have "made examples" of hundreds of liberal-minded social organisers in the past 50 years alone.

It is widely believed, within the intelligence community of the military-industrial complex, that, in the absence of the "mutually assured destruction" paradigm that prevented the Ultimate Doomsday Plan from being accomplished during the "Cold" War, the Ultimate Doomsday Plan can be achieved in the immediate future if certain specific steps are taken. The Soviet threat has been disassembled as a viable justification for the Plan's implementation in order for the threat to appear from everywhere within rather than unilaterally inter-hemispherically. However, it remains undecided at this time (3:41AM, EST, 1/4/08) from where the threat to the developed nation's sovereignty should originate, and thus where to begin the Plan.

Top five assumed and actual reasons for the War in Iraq.

ASSUMED REASON::

1) Oil. We invaded Afghanistan to build a pipeline from the Caspian sea in order to expedite oil exporting from the region. We then invaded Iraq in order to steal the second largest oil reserves in Opec.

ACTUAL REASON::

5) Oil. The CIA created the Afghan Taliban and Al Qaeda foreseeing the need to fake a global oil shortage. The US exports all its region's oil to China, then imports all its nationally consumed oil from Iraq. In truth, Iraq is producing less oil now than in the late 90's, which contributes to the devaluation of the US Dollar relative to the Chinese Yu'an.

ASSUMED REASON::

2) Terrorism. The administration has repeatedly stated "Iraq under Saddam Hussein had no link to the attacks of 9-11." However, this only belies the fact that the neo-cons themselves knew, allowed and permitted the "attacks" of 9-11 as a "self-inflicted wound." In some sense, the neo-cons are the terrorists. However, could this only be to cover-up CIA "blowback," a principle of unforeseen consequences? Or did the neo-cons not only benefit from 9-11, eg the PATRIOT Act, but carried it out as well?

ACTUAL REASON::

4) "Blowback." The term really implies the necessity of repeatedly changing presumed alliances in order to survive. Only by continually betraying one another can the "intelligence community" keep spies in the field. Otherwise, the agencies would all be on the same side, opposite, by endangering the lives of, their workers. So, once trading-partner Saddam is then punished for being such. Thus, once recruit Osama is then blamed for 9-11. In truth, once an agent always an agent, so no loyalties are ever really betrayed.

ASSUMED REASON::

3) politics. As the legal authority of international organisations (such as corporations, the UN, world bank, etc.) has grown since the fall of the Soviet Union, we assume they are in competition for greater jurisdictional authority over the regions of sovereign nations now. ie. We perceive international trade and tariff agreements, such as GATT and NAFTA, as leading to international, continental, hemispheric and ultimately global structures of government, such as the EU and UN.

ACTUAL REASON::

3) politics. Although the labour unionists were set up as imperialists by Rockefeller-sponsored Lenin, the socialist left were not defeated when the "evil empire" fell. All of that, and 9-11, were all designed as propaganda to imply the necessity of globalism. These were all perpetrated by the CIA, following a plan leaked to the Free Masons by the Jesuits. The plan is originally meant to benefit the catholic church by igniting three world wars, one to break apart nationalism, one to discredit communism, and a third to destroy "heathen" religions by pitting Jew against Arab. We are currently in the Third phase of this plan now.

ASSUMED REASON::

4) "blowback." The premise that the CIA's actions in one generation will have "unforeseen" consequences for the next generation. If you've ever taken the CIA's drug LSD, you realise that "chaos theory" can predict any potential first-gen outcome for any option for action that occurs coincidental in any possible event. For example, on 9-11, we saw "airplanes" so we thought "hijacking," so we blamed "radical Islam."

ACTUAL REASON::

2) "low-intensity conflict." In truth, the radical left has been reduced to groups of reactionaries in the public mind only by the corporate media propaganda perpetuated solely by rich globalists. In truth, we are ALL on the same side, aside from the few rich globalists. According to their propaganda, the last hoards of leftists are holed up in Pakistan in a narrow mountain pass between Afghanistan and India.

ASSUMED REASON::

5) mind-control. It is widely accepted by Americans, however "moderate" (leftist) we are actually are, that the CIA are the de-facto rulers of the planet earth at this time. They are the most powerful of the intelligence agencies of nations, and they serve the wills, for now, of rich globalists only to gain authority over their national militaries. We expect Martial Law to be implemented at any time, and to be "detained" in camps en masse, and yet we maintain the daily delusion of our free-market fantasy-world, believing "capitalism" will outlive the "radical left" so long as it serves as an effective method of controlling the masses by the rich few.

ACTUAL REASON::

1) time-travel. Those of us who are "far out" in our world-views believe now in UFOs and aliens, just as, 2000 years ago, the "radical left" believed in Gnostic Archons. Some of us who are "further out" have begun to realise that the UFOs are simply time-machines that abduct people from now to populate the past. By creating false-history they are simply covering up the truth, that they are actually populating split-timelines. However, those of us who are the "furthest out" already know the method of history's cyclic repetition, and so we understand that the Gods of the past "age backwards" to become the corporeal aliens of today. Let this give anyone who hears about it wisdom about the war in Iraq: the final generation will surpass in beauty all previous generations combined.

-ben

Come down now Marduk, welcome to Jam-Rock, third from the sun, the ninth from Nibiru, may Anu be praised, and long live the king.

Here on earth much has become changed. The elder Gods have all been killed. No more does the strange Leviathan Chthulu haunt the watery depths beneath the sea, Nessie is no more venerated. The chattle elect their own stars now using arbitrarily valued currency. Giants roam the land, but no one looks up to see down, no one looks below who goes above. There is no communication with the dead of this planet. The giants live behind the clouds. They worship the sun and moon, MARDUK and INANNA, and not the earth and sky, ENKI and ENLIL. This is a backwards age, for the Kali Yuga has only recently ended, and now there is a great doubt. They murder inside the Temples, and they drink wine as blood.

MARDUK and INANNA bore congress. Between them they disclosed the secrets of the MEs that INANNA had gambled away from ENKI, and MARDUK disclosed the secrets of the "tree" of life that ENKI had told him. Thus was ENKI's promise of earth to MARDUK fulfilled, and thus was ENLIL's promise of the first and second regions to INANNA fulfilled. Together, INANNA and MARDUK conspired to create a miracle. This would not be for the benefit of the Gods, they decided. They created the miracle to enslave to their revolution the people. When Nibiru returns, to overthrow it together, they planned. So, they have set about the process of performing the miracle. The miracle is the resurrection of DUMMUZI, the shepherd-king. To accomplish this feat, impossible for a human, but easy for the immortals of Nibiru, MARDUK and INANNA first established the myth of DUMMUZI with the people. They introduced the "myth of Christ" as a sacrifice ritual performed at the turn of a zodiac age. They introduced the myth of his return to life at the end of that zodiac age. They spread this myth around the world by funding oppositional front organisations and then weakening their support at a critical moment.

They used many techniques of high magick. They learned how to survive death themselves, by separating out from their own essence the "tree" of life, and thus to transfer their consciousness into an energy form produced by combining the gold processed for Nibiru at Bad-Tibira, the city of INANNA, with the "tree" extracted in the Abzu region under MARDUK. They became invisible to the eyes of the mortals, like ghosts.

The lifespan of the civilised slaves has shortened, while that of the lesser Gods has grown indefinite. To be rid of them, they can only be killed, they cannot die by any natural causes. This is a terrible catastrophe, considering that no human can accomplish this, only another God from Nibiru, and Nibiru's age has not yet come.

There is hope, however, in the Great Burner. You see, the myth of the slaughtered shepherd king, originally propagated as a myth of Osiris, has come to be associated instead with Thoth, the Great Architect. Instead of Osiris' resurrection (being possible for ASAR, born on Nibiru, but not for DUMMUZI, born on earth), the myth began to focus on the murder itself: the "Passion" of "Hiram." Likewise, the resurrection aspect (the revealing of Ra from the concealment of Amoun) began being pushed back and put off until the humans forgot that resurrection was possible for the ancient Gods, and even offered to Adam on Nibiru. Resurrection has become so rare and distanced an ideal it is venerated as a heavenly afterlife.

Now, INANNA and MARDUK have resurrected DUMMUZI, and he walks amongst us. For this final stage, MARDUK and INANNA use the power of their ghostly ability to possess the bodies of the humans less and less. They inhabit one body at a time more and more. They are coming out more into the open. When they are seeing through a human's eyes, when they are dwelling upon a human's mind, when they are in that human's heart, then they may be killed. Otherwise, if they remain nebulous and do not take shape, they are only energy. In the form of energy they are as much trapped on earth, in earth's Schumann resonant EM field and in earth's gravity well, as they are mortal while inside their mortal forms.

However, there is another hope. Before NINGISHZIDDA died, he trained someone of his own. Then he was killed by a man of MARDUK. This training involves the alchemical rarification of gold (and other platinum group metals) into a superconductor, and its bonding to the DNA in order to ascend into higher frequency vibrations in the body. This training also includes how to traverse the universe mentally, how to foresee the future by studying the cycles of the past, how to communicate using ESP, and how to manifest matter from nothing. Some of this information has become lost. Thoth taught all this to Imhotep, but Imhotep was killed, and his cult of Thoth replaced by Sargon's cult of Ra. The cult of Ra came to venerate the murder of Imhotep, the architect and healer. It became called Christianity. However the cult of Thoth, known also as the Order of Death, did not die with Imhotep. It continues on today, though secret.

It may be possible that those in the Order of Death, that is, the cult of Thoth, will be able to stop MARDUK and INANNA from conquering Nibiru as well as earth, however we should also consider the possibility that they fail, or that they become corrupt themselves, and desire to side with INANNA and MARDUK. There may be hope yet in deciphering the identity of the mysterious stranger GALZU. However, this remains a remote hope.

The identity of GALZU remains a mystery, but his message is clear: the time is running out for the Gods on earth; the longer they stay, the faster they age. They have already grown quite old, and their second generation now plot and scheme against them. The elder Gods are the Watchers, and I have been calling them by their Sumerian names as Gods of the ANNUNAKI pantheon, the same name used by Enoch in the Ethiopian translation of his apocrypha to describe the fallen angels who followed the rebel morning star. Their offspring with the wives of men have been called the Nefilim, and so the second generation of royal -blooded Gods of earth are also of the generation of Nefilim, though relatively more immortal. Among this second generation were DUMMUZI, MARDUK and NINGISHZIDDA, sons of ENKI, and NINURTA, son of ENLIL, and INANNA, grand-daughter of ENLIL. It should be worth mentioning that Adapa, the first priest-king and prototype of the biblical Adam, was a Nefilim, the son of ENKI and an australopithocene primitive-worker.

ENKI and ENLIL cannot help mankind, descendants of Adapa, the son of the God ENKI, against the plans of MARDUK, our brother, and INANNA, our niece. MARDUK and INANNA have become discorporeal sensations that pass from one person and place to the next like the smell of milk and honey soma floating on the breeze. He is called Chronozon, she Shekinah. But it is DUMMUZI the Christians expect the second coming of, and it was DUMMUZI they saw in the visage of Jesus, not Adapa, whose descendant surely he was. The Christian cult of MARDUK and INANNA has grown out of the ability of ENKI and ENLIL to control. They have sought to clone the corpse of Jesus, in order to bring back the mortal DUMMUZI as a symbol of their combined power. Failing that, their plan is to simply inhabit a body who is already alive and, through fever, induce the body to believe it is the reincarnation of DUMMUZI, or rather, to its mind, of Jesus.

You see, the clone of Jesus or the body chosen for the vessel of the second coming of Christ is simultaneously a receptacle, or net in which to catch, the Holy Spirit, the Ghost of DUMMUZI, and itself a child of humanity, the so-called "Son of Man," who was "not from woman born;" thus the ghost of DUMMUZI is made to inhabit a body that is the descendent of Adapa, and therefore of ENKI, the father of Adapa and of DUMMUZI. It is thought by MARDUK and INANNA that this will accomplish the resurrection of DUMMUZI: the combination of the Holy Ghost (comprised of a tachyonic morphogenetic field) and the bloodline descent of civilised man directly from the ruling bloodline of ANNUNAKI on Nibiru.

But let me tell you. NINGISHZIDDA, that is, Thoth, passed on for a reason. He ascended to retrieve the sprit of ASAR, that is, Osiris. That was when Sargon conquered what was built by Imhotep. That was when Zion was stolen from inside the Ark of the Temple by Menelik, son of Solomon and the Queen of Sheba. That was when Orion was hung upside down to cling to the sides of the bottomless pit (for his orientation of north-south downward from head to toe is reflected as south-north from head to toe in the alignment of the pyramids with his belt). History is a holograph recording the hologram of the past.

Thoth left the body, not to return himself, but to bring back the lost soul of Osiris from the underworld of the Duat. For the Duat is like the "hammered bracelet." It is like the Milky Way, that river of stars comprising our galaxy's discus-like edge. It is like a constantly flowing river. Its water is fate. The snow from whence the stream-water comes and the ocean of salt water to whence it goes are both destiny. Thus NAM is the moment and NAM.TAR the past and future. The Duat is a river of energy, ever-flowing, and it connects each heavenly sphere to every other through a very simple and very effective order. From the moon's poles the duat flows to those of the earth. From earth, the south to the south and the north to the north, the duat flows to the sun. From the sun thence to galactic core, and from there one black hole destination to another via wormhole transportation. Such is the Duat, a river of energy that bears the dead away like a body in a river-reed boat, and from whence they may be retrieved by going downstream to a later point.

Thoth did succeed in resurrecting Osiris, but that was long ago. Osiris now is thought of as the OHO, while Thoth is associated with the IHO. It has long been held that behind every dead king there is a powerful magician. This is even discussed in the theatrical Hamlet.

The resurrection of DUMMUZI, the sacrificed Jesus of 2000 years ago, in order to accomplish the miracle now, of the resurrection of that Jesus, and thus, to the Gods, of DUMMUZI, was not chosen at random. Jesus was carefully selected and tested all along the way. He believed he was being guided by signs and strange coincidences. It was MARDUK and INANNA. For Jesus, descendent of King David, was then the priest-king of ENLIL, brother of ENKI. By Gnosticism was Jesus guided to understand these brothers as YHVH (or Jave) and Elohim, the twin faces (good and evil) of a false God (ANU) lesser than the creator God of the One Destiny.

Jesus was, by blood, the descendent of Adapa (Adam) via Sati (Seth), and thus a descendent of the kingly line of ENKI. Jesus was, by his own self-selection, drawn into the priest-craft (also because he was the younger brother of James, the rightful heir of the political crown) of ENLIL known as the Levite priests. He studied the Book of Enoch kept at Qumran by the deposed Levites. He composed the "Angel Scroll" which was a list of popular Gnostic and specifically Essene terms for various angels, both arisen and fallen. It was through his study of this document, the "Angel Scroll" that Christ came to communicate with MARDUK and INANNA. As a descendent of Adapa, Jesus was descended from ENKI. As a king of ENKI he became a priest of ENLIL. By becoming a priest-king he assumed the dual role simultaneously of OHO and IHO of the Order of Death, the Duat, or Thoth, and thus was revealed as the resurrection of Osiris, baptised Christos by John the Baptist (James the Just). It was for these reasons that MARDUK and INANNA chose Jesus, the protege of the cult of Thoth, to die for their miracle, 2000 years later, of the resurrection of DUMMUZI as the clone or Ghost of the murdered Christ.

For as much as Jesus was Osiris to Thoth, so too is his second coming DUMMUZI to MARDUK and INANNA. This is simply how the Aeons turn.

Let me tell you, now we have entered the aeon of Leo. The sun rises now in Leo on the Summer solstice, in Scorpio on the Autumnal equinox, in Aquarius in winter, on Taurus in the spring. Therefore, these are going to be the dominant combinations of elements in the new mythology. Likewise, looking back several couples of thousands of years, or rather, even sooner into our own Aeonic future, the dominant elements did and will combine other elements of the zodiac with the fixed four seasons. Each culture of these times had its own names for these aspects of combined elements. We have records of all of these now.

In Sumerian, the aeon of Leo was associated with the planet Kishar (Saturn), and thus also with the Serpent, the symbol of Leo originally representing a serpent. The Aeon of Leo (which is known by the sun rising in Leo in the summer) marks the first full solar aeon to occur after the end of the Kali Yuga (in AD 1597) and during the Dvapara Yuga (considered an age of bronze). Immediately after the end of the Leo Aeon this bronze Yuga will also end, and the Treta Yuga, the age of silver, will begin when the sun enters the constellation Cancer in its mid-summer rising. The constellation Cancer was known to the Sumerians as Anshar, the snake, counterpart to Kishar, the serpent. Now Cancer is associated with the crab, and Leo with the lion. Coincidentally, the Apostle occupying this chair in the round table equivalent to the constellation Cancer in the zodiac was Judas, the "betrayor" of Jesus according to the Christian interpretation of the Jesus myth. During the Aeon of Leo it is late spring in the southern hemisphere, and late Autumn in the northern hemisphere.

Now, in this age, the Aeon of Leo, comes the resurrection of Jesus, and thus the reincarnation of DUMMUZI, called the "second coming." A body was chosen into which the Holy Spirit was poured. Signs along his youth were shown to him to guide his development along the way. He has become a High Priest of Thoth, like Jesus before him, the IHO in the Order of Death. MARDUK and INANNA have stayed ever present near him, whispering the answers to his questions to him and calling him Imhotep. In the pubescent years of this body's life, INANNA and MARDUK were making their deadly pact to overthrow Nibiru. This was when the resurrection of Jesus truly became the reincarnation of DUMMUZI, for he rose up against MARDUK, the brother of DUMMUZI, whom he, MARDUK himself, had slain. He reclaimed his great love for INANNA and cast MARDUK into the element of water, the element of ENKI, their father.

All of this happened around and through the body of this chosen being, but without their ability to control it. You see, to this mortal being, the strength of their will over fate was daunted beside the will of the Gods over his destiny, just as we Gods say that the One True Destiny of GALZU guides all our choices of free will over our fate towards its own inevitable ends. The consciousness of the body vaguely perceived the Gods' influence, but mistook it for the Egyptian myth alone, rather than understanding it as an ever-present world-myth. So, the shadows of INANNA and MARDUK are Thoth and Osiris. The shadow of INANNA is Osiris, predecessor of her true love DUMMUZI, and the shadow of MARDUK is Thoth, his brother, NINGISHZIDDA. Truly, truly, truly, to understand the apparent destinies of the Gods controlling his fate this resurrection of Christ and reincarnation of DUMMUZI studied the Egyptian myths, and then the QBLH, and then Gnosticism, and then the myths of old Sumeria, and now it studies from the Rig and Atharva Vedas. I tell you, this person has become the IHO of the Order of Death, of the Duat, of Thoth.

It was when the second-coming turned against MARDUK and slew him to win the favour of INANNA, his once and future bride, that INANNA and MARDUK realised they had truly reincarnated DUMMUZI. But the second-coming was not ready for the terrible shift in consciousness from being the mortal body to being the immortal God brought back to life from the dead. The sudden onslaught of hitherto unexperienced amounts of ESP caused the fragile mind of the young person to break.

MARDUK and INANNA studied the being, and continue their experiments on it with drugs to make it more susceptible to their control. I say "their" because MARDUK and INANNA have made a blood pact. The evidence of their crime of conspiring to overthrow Nibiru they have breathed together like life into the form of the Adapa-descended, rather than Jesus-descended, bloodlines of the body chosen for the second coming, the symbol to the people of DUMMUZI.

INANNA has foresworn to MARDUK loving this Adapa-descendent as it is not, truly, her DUMMUZI, despite their combined magicks, but only a mud-blooded clay golem, a "dead thing," and only the discorporeal spirit of DUMMUZI himself concerns INANNA now, for she and MARDUK have passed beyond the confines of the flesh.

Likewise, the mortal body into which the belief in itself as the resurrection and second coming of Jesus and the reincarnation of DUMMUZI has been poured, being flesh, can pose no threat to MARDUK, now a discorporeal spiritual entity.

Despite the fact that the second coming's body cannot physically confront MARDUK or INANNA, their fates both depend on it becoming a symbol to the people, the civilised slaves, the descendents of Cain, and any remaining IGIGI, to convince them, falsely, of the power of MARDUK and INANNA to resurrect the dead. This is a dangerous gambit for them, because MARDUK, as Choronzon, and INANNA, as Shekinah, can enter into and possess any body at will other than the one chosen for the second coming. They have taken their fates in their own hands by giving the second coming free will.

INANNA's part of their plan was to seduce and break the will of the second coming. MARDUK alternately pretends to be its friend and its enemy, thus confusing its mental faculties over its own will. Of course, there is no denying that anyone who's body was possessed in their mind by thoughts such as these would be easily classifiable as sociopathic, if not outright delusional and psychotic. Thus, MARDUK and INANNA wait behind the scenes. The DUMMUZI-golem body chosen as the second coming is being used as a psychic conduit through which the will of INANNA and MARDUK are coming to pass on earth, and through its continued life they manipulate the minds of world leaders and the very fabric of the nature of the local spacetime universe. Over earth's fate and all mankind do they assume control.

But the body has been bent and broken strangely by the experiences of its direct encounters with its spiritual guides, MARDUK and INANNA. It has fallen deeply and passionately in love with the body that had played the part of INANNA when DUMMUZI first appeared in the mind, and in the eye, of the second coming's body. It refers to her in its daily prayers as ISIS, for that is the Greek translation of ASTI, wife of ASAR, Osiris. Confused by the Egyptian myths the body remains out of its rightful direct control over the Order of Death and of Thoth. The body is Osiris, the OHO, and the mind of it is Thoth, the IHO, but it does not seem to be able to get the two to align and work together inside of itself to accomplish the goals for ASAR and NINGISHZIDDA to confront MARDUK and INANNA through its actions. Instead, it has accumulated thousands of lifetime's worth of negative karma into its aura, and is therefore repulsive to thousands of living people, the opposite of the effect desired by MARDUK and INANNA. Instead of being a great leader, the DUMMUZI-golem thinks only of his legacy for the future, and does not concentrate on how to accomplish its goals for the present time and place it is in now.

All the body wants is to be reunited with the body of the one who had played the part of INANNA to him only once, when DUMMUZI arose within him to overthrow MARDUK. In this single victory and its splendour does the mind of the chosen body dwell. It describes its heart as the Great Burner, meaning essentially the wrathful incarnation of the sun deity, however this is the role traditionally assumed only by MARDUK, even in the supposedly pacifist cult of Christianity, supposedly based on the principles of Jesus. What can this mean? The Great Burner he compares not to the sun, Ra and MARDUK, nor as a symbol of the saviour arisen on the crucifix, which was always merely a symbol of the supremacy of MARDUK over NINGISHZIDDA, but instead to the black hole at the centre of the Milky Way. This it also refers to secretly as ISIS, but it refers to it publically as the Great Burner. Thus, the Great Burner is a new form of symbol among the people, created by the being who was groomed to be a symbol itself. Thus, the second coming has become a Creator deity, and thus surpassed even the spirit of DUMMUZI, the shepherd of spring.

The Great Burner, the symbol created by the second coming, is a symbol of the gateway from one galaxy and universe to another as dangerous and evil. It guards the precipice of the abyss of the black hole in the form of a mighty chaos-beast, a tesseract swarming with eyes. A Peacock Angel, with an eye on each feather of both wings. This creation, despite its evil essence, is considered harmless by its creator, who considers it a work of fiction, and expects it to be taken as merely a sign of the times by future generations. In the body, the will lies dormant. It is then that MARDUK and INANNA can most easily work through it.

The precedent for the love between the chosen one's body and the body of his first lover is set in the records of ADAMU and TI-AMAT, the prototypical Adam Kadmon and Immortal Eve. It is this passion that has, in the absence of the ability of Nibiru's ruler ANU to conceive an heir, become more precious to the destiny of the Nibiruans than the monoatomic gold they were using to repair their diminishing atmosphere. For, when Nibiru returns, and ANU looks to the rulers of earth for his heirs, and finds them not among them except as evil ghosts, INANNA and MARDUK, an evil secret cult of Thoth, and the body of Jesus resurrected before the sight of the slaves, he will surely choose as his successor the least of all these evils, the one whose heart is true, and who is able to love and bear heirs.

The only problem with this reasoning is that the body cannot be chosen heir to ANU, because by the time Nibiru approaches, the body, being mortal, will have passed on long ago. It may indeed be the most worthy now, but its fates and fortunes are too easily altered while it is alive, and therefore, ultimately, by way of the body they have created as a symbol for the people will be swayed under the influence of MARDUK and INANNA. It seems unlikely, however, that his greatest impact will be during his own lifetime, though, and that his teachings will have become common-place for humanity by the time Nibiru again approaches.

Therefore, we Gods of Nibiru must begin to take counter-action strategy planning as a serious consideration. We must prepare for the situation arising here on earth and how to handle it before Nibiru draws near. At the rate the slave monkies are evolving, their technology will be equal to what ours was when we originally colonised earth within one hundred of earth's years at the most. We must heed the intuition of the chosen body, and we must seek for GALZU and the meaning of his prophecies in galactic core. Unfortunately, should the vile plans of MARDUK and INANNA, the murderers of NINGISHZIDDA and Jesus, come to fruition, and they, with or without the clone of Christ rallying the slave monkies, succeed in attacking Nibiru with the force of the terran technologies, it could pose a very real and very serious threat to Nibiru.

For now MARDUK and DUMMUZI have exchanged faces. Once the terrible, now MARDUK is reduced to a slaving toady at the whim of INANNA. If the middle-eastern ISHTAR worshippers even whisper the secret name of MELEK-TAUS, the Great Satan, there is an agent in "Christian" America monitoring their every breath who hears it and, at the push of a button, commands bombs to drop on the bedouin from the clear sky above. Such is the relegated status of ENKI and of ENKI's eldest heir DUMMUZI that MARDUK, the devil, is feared even more than ENLIL, the Lord, is loved and adored. For as ENLIL supplanted the dominion of ENKI, so too did ENKI's son MARDUK of his own brother DUMMUZI. And so, in turn, shall the tables be spun around again, and fortunes and fates reverse like the rolling tides. This is the revolution of the mind. Now, the once vengeful MARDUK has become calm and passive, the minority that, while vocal, is losing support. Now, the once calm and passive DUMMUZI has returned as vengeful and angry. For these brothers of ENKI now vie for dominance behind our painted skies. Behind every dark cloud is a Thule dakini asana, a Vrili vimana, hiding behind and inside the cloud, revealed only by its silver lining. I am like Arjuna, warrior prince of DUMMUZI - who promises me heaven in exchange for justice, and who at once righteously demands the re-instatement to the kingship of earth of ENKI and simultaneously calls for the head of his own brother MARDUK and the plucked-out heart of their mutual lover, INANNA.

"This cannot be," cry the savants and royal council on Nibiru. Their outrage at this turn of fate among the Annunaki on earth drew King ANU's ear away from the demands of DUMMUZI. Heavy was ANU's heart with DUMMUZI's warning of MARDUK and INANNA's treasonous coup plot. The words of the savants and the royal council he wished to hear. After much debate, nearly a shar, while Nibiru neared earth, ANU emerged to council DUMMUZI and give his degree of Law. This is what he said:

"I, ANNUIT COEPTIS, I, Fortune's favour, I, the bold, I, ANU the sky-god decree:

DUMMUZI the rightful king of earth to be. Earth is to be left to be ruled by DUMMUZI how he chooses.

ENKI to be brought home to Nibiru to rule as my heir.

MARDUK to be severed into seven pieces and scattered to the seven planets below the asteroid belt.

INANNA to be given to DUMMUZI as slave for his judgement.

ENLIL I decree shall carry out the charge against MARDUK himself. Avenge thy wrath my son, King of earth for seven suns, against ANZU, against ALALLU, against SHAMGAZZA, all against MARDUK most of all: by sevenfold seven times let DUMMUZI's death be avenged against MARDUK. Upon completion of the execution of MARDUK, ENLIL my son shall be their own choosing remove away from earth with as many, if not all, of the Anunnaki gods as possible. ENLIL with the other loyal Anunnaki are to rule over the other planets of the solar system or return to Nibiru. All are to be considered heroes for aiding ENLIL in executing MARDUK.

You shall trust this decree of I, ANU, for my word is The Law."

So ended the decree of ANU, king of Nibiru.

For a moment a stir arose around DUMMUZI. Then he spoke. His concern was for the people who had been enslaved first by ENLIL and then by MARDUK. What shall become of them, DUMMUZI was asking the Nibiruin high-council. In his heart he knew no doubt in ANU's decree, but he feared the people, whose languages had become confused and diverse, would not know MARDUK and himself apart from one another. They were, after all, twin brothers, both sons of ENKI, son of ANU.

ANU it was who put the question to the NIBIRU high-council or royals and savants: "how shall the blindly enslaved civilised-slaves be able to tell DUMMUZI, their liberator, from MARDUK, their enslaver? When one is happy, the other is angry, and vice versa. What shall we do to liberate the minds of the earthlings from the lies of MARDUK and INANNA, the mutinied Anunnaki, and their false-saviour, the false-resurrection of DUMMUZI?" This was the question ANU asked the council.

The council pondered on this, but they agreed not to depose MARDUK until being able to insure DUMMUZI's enthronement upon earth. DUMMUZI had informed the council already of MARDUK and INANNA's plot to raise up a human as a false resurrection of DUMMUZI to awe and confuse the people, a puppet they could use to make the masses obey them, while they would stay hidden in the shadow behind the poor duped mortal. Their plan, DUMMUZI explained, was to consolidate power into a shrinking group of mortals that they possessed with their mind-powers until only they could elect a scape-goat to be mortally sacrificed to sanction their transition to direct authority over all the civilised slaves' minds. The council also considered the vimana of DUMMUZI he used to transport himself to Nibiru. It was the sky-chambre given to INANNA, stolen by DUMMUZI powered by the secret ME's of mental-energy stolen from ENKI by INANNA, steered by him to NIBIRU by applying his mind to the vimana craft's astral form. Surely INANNA would know it was missing by now, DUMMUZI also counseled them. They pondered that DUMMUZI had stolen it for his final, fateful flight to Nibiru.

After a third of a Shar the Council emerged with a unanimous proposition. They issued it to ANU, who proposed it upon his own consideration to DUMMUZI for his verdict. The council's proposition to DUMMUZI, conveyed to him for a verdict by ANU, upon consideration by both, said in writing:

"Use your mind-power to enter the man-puppet. Instead of being the pawn over the people employed by MARDUK and INANNA, this false-resurrection would become a True Resurrection. Then, confront MARDUK in this body while it is alone. You shall force MARDUK out, and then ENLIL, who shall accompany you in spirit, shall sever him into seven parts on the astral plane. With you before him and ENLIL above and behind him, MARDUK will have no place else to turn except to the body inhabited by INANNA on the mental plane. Should his mind-powers not displace her own over that body, nor you from the body of the man-puppet, MARDUK will be alone without body. Then ENLIL shall sever him into seven sections, banished from all mortal vessels. That is how MARDUK shall be slain by DUMMUZI and ENLIL, and how INANNA shall fall into the hands of DUMMUZI."

The verdict given to the proposition of the council given to him by ANU, DUMMUZI declared it favourable, and ANU issued it as an added decree.

ANU gave DUMMUZI an amulet by which he could be identified apart from MARDUK, his twin, by the people of earth who have become MARDUK's blind slaves. The amulet was a symbol which I cannot yet show you, and with it ANU gave DUMMUZI a talisman, bearing on it a sigil, a magick seal, inscribed with the words of fortune: "I AM HE WHO DIED. I AM HE WHO NOW LIVES AGAIN." on one side, and on the side with the words: "Tell Bob, I am one from Jah, and Jah Allah." With his finger on the reverse side of the talisman, ANU explained to his beloved grandson, the shepherd and flutist, the singer of songs and gentle one, the kind one, firstborn of ANU's first born, and to DUMMUZI ANU said, "Fuck 'em if they can't take a joke." Then he showed DUMMUZI the amulet: the symbol of the five-line man over the top of the trislele. ANU gave the explanation to DUMMUZI: it means phi/pi (destiny: NAM.TAR) and the supremacy of ANU, Jah Allah, over the dual Yin-Yang symbol of Jachin and Boaz. "The cult of Thoth," ANU told DUMMUZI, "they shall know you."

"Let us hope," DUMMUZI replies, "that some of them will also have Right Understanding." DUMMUZI then entered the vhem craft and sped to earth. A moment on Nibiru was now a lifetime on earth. On Nibiru, someone sympathetic to MARDUK and INANNA's nefarious cause transmitted to them the opposite side of the talisman in a scrambled code with no humanly comprehensible cipher. MARDUK commanded the cult of Thoth to translate it for him. The explanation the translators in the cult of Thoth loyal to MARDUK gave him for the encrypted message was this: it is a warning, but we do not know of what or whom.

And so the battle begun with my love triangle in 1994 between DUMMUZI and MARDUK was won in 1999, when MARDUK possessed me, was rejected by INNANA, and destroyed by ENLIL. Now DUMMUZI comes to me in silence. He explains the war is over. In May of 2000 the seven planets aligned to mark the seven sections into which MARDUK was severed and which, to them, were sent. But I know something that DUMMUZI does not:

Nibiru was never MARDUK's target. MARDUK seeks to enter the black hole at galactic core. By dividing his astral form it only multiplies the strength of his mental avatar, for divided or whole, his astral body could never have accompanied him to galactic core if he planned his journey to out-race the approaching Nibiru. It was always his plan to use the 7-planet alignment of 5/5/2000 to calculate the trajectory for his leap to galactic core on 12/21/2012. Galactic core aligns with the sun in Sagittarius in the same sign as Nibiru's direction of approach. MARDUK plans to pass through Nibiru on his trip to galactic core. He never wanted to conquer Nibiru. It was his plan all along to destroy it and become master of the galaxy. This is a terrible disaster because now it is too late for an immortal god to intervene. Only a mortal human can work fast enough to stop MARDUK now before it is too late.

MARDUK brought war to Babylon. MARDUK infiltrated the governments and media of the popular nations; he moved his pawns, culled to evil from among Jesuits and goodly Masons, until they filled the whole tiled board. Instead of a watchdog the press has become his political pet, declaring his supremacy over us all. It was MARDUK that murdered Imhotep, grand-architect of Tehuti. MARDUK, the warrior god of Babylon and MARDUK, the counter-intelligence spy of the Egyptian underworld. Now, MARDUK, I call you attention to my presence, now. MARDUK, the scourge and despair of the hot-winded waste-lands, I call you down now to tell you this:

"Welcome to Jamdom, Kingdom of Jam Rock, and the third of all the Rockers and all the purview they survey, the dark African night of the universe, the night of Nuit, the sparkling specks of Hadit, billions of points of light in the Milky Way's hub alone, each a sigil, each alive, and Shu, the wind, a breath of air to decide between them. Welcome to Kingdom Jam Rock, I, and I am one from Jah Allah, am Rastafari, King of Earth, DUMMUZI. Now look in my eye, and I, know that I, hold you now in my mental grip. It is the grip of Joppa, the grip of the lion's paw, and it is the grip to keep the skin from sliding away beneath it. It is the grip of a passed Master Mason, the grip of death, frigid to the marrow, for it is a grip strengthened by ENLIL, our uncle. I place this grip upon none living, nor one who was ever truly alive. I place this grip on MARDUK the demiurge, MARDUK the ruler of civilisation, MARDUK the AI, MARDUK the neo-Seth, MARDUK the oil warrior of Babylon and spy in the Egyptian underworld, the energy-grid network, the Enochian System. I speak now to this MARDUK, the MARDUK of the Juwes within the Jews, and the sect with the sects, who would proclaim himself the "Great Burner," the "Black Sun," etc. and MARDUK of manipulation, misdirection, magick and mind-control, and to this MARDUK of psychic robots I say to you: Feel My Grip. Know this grip is the last thing you will ever experience: this tightening grip."

Suddenly, from all directions at once, appears ENKI. "I have come to plead for mercy for my son from you, his brother, DUMMUZI. As I am your good father now hear me: DUMMUZI, oh PAZUZU, I tell you you are like the westward wind from the south, slain by Adapa. Don't you see how that chance fate led me to mislead Adapa about the Amrita of Nibiru? Now I am offering to you, DUMMUZI, my beloved son, the good shepherd: the fruit of the tree of immortality. Denied to Adam, his sin now may be considered forgiven in your name. Take my hand, letting go of your brother, and I shall place into it immortality and Amrita enough for all you should choose."

"Liar!" DUMMUZI roars at ENKI through the conduit into our material reality of my mind. "Get behind me, ENLIL; we must fend them off by standing back-to-back. You attack MARDUK, leave ENKI to me."

"ENKI, it is I, DUMMUZI, your earth-born son. I was not killed, but did fake my own death and have been Watching. I discovered the mental power of travel between bodies long before this was found out by MARDUK and INANNA, both younger than me. I have been like an invisible shadow watching you all along. I will prove this to you, for I have not come to slay you, but to bring you Justice: I bear a message from Nibiru, a decree from Father ANU." DUMMUZI produces the talisman inscribed with the signet of ANU and the two-sided inscription. ENKI marvels at the words, for he knows now this is DUMMUZI the Anunnaki, his true son, who stands before him in the body of the meat-puppet DEMMUZI of MARDUK and INANNA turning upon its master. "You are to be the heir of Father ANU on Nibiru. This planet is now promised to me. I have come to restore you to your rightful title and status. Let me tell you now that MARDUK cannot succeed at conquering galactic core. I have been there; there I am known as Jah, as Jah Rastafari, and as AHDVNHAY Jah Allah, and by this body's name. For she is the true mother of the future destiny. My heart like a diamond ring I once removed to offer to my beloved. I call the heart-shaped diamond (the five line man) centered on the Milky ring (the triskele) ISIS, but this is merely an anagram squared."

"ENKI, my beloved father, slow to anger, quick to lust, slow to judgment, quick to forgive, ENKI the wise, the patient, the righteous, the just, I do not wish to harm you. I am younger than you and my powers are at a higher peak now than your own. You are old and dying, but your own father, my grand-father, King ANU is younger than you. Go and be his rightful heir on NIBIRU, eat Amrita and grow young and strong again. If you are still of this mind-set then, come to me at that time, but now you must leave here rapidly and stay far back from this place, for you can do nothing to prevent this, the death of MARDUK is inevitable. It is his destiny."

I turn my back to ENKI, the shattered shell and ghost of my once proud and strong father. Now he will shrink away like a fading flower. Now he will wither, now fold. For now I understand the immasculation of ANU. His castration was brought about to punish the spineless weakness of my father. For ALULLU should have been dispatched on sight by ENKI, and never allowed to wrestle ANU a second time. The justice ALULLU felt deprived of was deprived him not by ANU but by ENKI, who should have thought ahead of the future to Nibiru's destiny, as ALALLU was. But I will not choke on this poison - I forgive him for his cowardice and lack of spleen, but I will not follow him in his flip-flopping fate. I am wiser than Solomon.

I return my attention to MARDUK.

ENLIL is stronger-willed than ENKI, but has also grown old. His power is great, but their fight is in the astral plane as mental beings without bodies. ENLIL grips at MARDUK. MARDUK grasps at ENLIL. Both pass through the other. Neither can match the other's degree of consistency. Their fight is an illusory oasis, the clouds of the painted sky cover over it and it is invisible, hidden, secret and mysterious. MARDUK, once summoned to the triangle, cannot depart until dismissed. But neither can ENLIL assume a corporeal form here, where I am the only one around. ENLIL cannot best MARDUK alone, but he has kept him busy while I dispatched with ENKI, our father.

I begin to fix my grip again upon MARDUK.

A soft, pale hand places itself upon mine as I reach out to kill MARDUK. It is INANNA. She has come to plead for the life of MARDUK, her lover. I tell her the truth of myself, that my death was faked, but she tells me she already knew, and I tell her that I have beheld the baby universe at galactic core myself, and claimed it in the name of our love, but she tells me it doesn't matter. Then INANNA said:

"The baby universe at galactic core. It is true it was born from my love for you. But you are not its father. Its father is MARDUK." She explained: "While you watched and followed us I studied up on you too. From your discovery of how, I divine the possibility of mental travel and "body jumping" - continued existence as an archetype of pure mental energy, unconscious to the channeller. I used this to follow you in your footsteps to the core of this galaxy, where you imagined yourself most alone. When MARDUK and I made our pact and the MES I exchanged with him for the "tree of life" formula for Amrita; all along I knew you yet lived. I had planned on your return all along. You see, around you now, do you hear? I am with you. I am near you. I Love You. Do What I Will."

"Liar! ENLIL," I command, "deal with your daughter as you wish. Leave MARDUK to me."

"I will not be swayed," INANNA speaks, but by addressing ENLIL she proves she already has been.

Now, for the final time, I return my attention to MARDUK.

"MARDUK, my brother, my beloved friend of long years of youth, you born on Nibiru where I have only ever set foot twice now, you blessed by our father by the secret of the "tree of life" on the moon, you, promised by him then dominion over the earth, know Justice:

"When you stirred up lust in the heart of SHAMGAZZA, known as Shemyazza and as Azazel, and led him to conspire with SATAN, Set, the cup-bearer of our brother Osiris, to poison and murder him; when you conspired thus with SHAMGAZZA of the IGIGI, promising them an army of human beings, when you brought low the Grigori, the "fallen angels" of Enoch, Asuryas of the Vedas, from amongst the Watchers, the Anunnaki, you debased all of we Nibiru immortals. This planet is not ours, nor its people yours to enslave as your puppets and pawns. The Grigori you betrayed cry out to you now for Justice. Do you hear them? They are calling your name backwards across the abyss; they are crying out to you from the past through the memories in your mind; they cry "Judgement!" Their Justice is for you to forfeit your ever returning to your home, Nibiru, just as now they may never return to their own homes. But where else can you go? For you have given up the home of your immortal body already. Now you live amongst the minds of men as an astral archetype, dwelling above them all in their minds as amongst the stars of heaven itself. So, to them I shall send you. Here is my Judgement on behalf of the Grigori IGIGI, the Nefilim Anunnaki. Hear me, Oh MARDUK the Destroyer: for betrayal, you shall be banished from all bodies, and for killing I, DUMMUZI, your brother, thus I, DUMMUZI, decree death upon you.

"MARDUK, I call you to die now by my grip: the grip of your brother DUMMUZI, the grip of one who once loved you, and whom you betrayed, and who will now finally be able to forget having fallen for your lying, oh treacherous villain! Now you know my grip MARDUK, know that mind alone is your summoning. When I let go, you will snap apart, torn in 7 pieces in 7 different directions. But before I release you, know this of he who gives you now my grip:

"With you go seven pestilences from the face of earth, like seven sealed scrolls each pestilence contains a certain number host of plagues and suffering. Take away with you as you go all the bad karma of all earth's spirits and entities and beings. Release from them the hold you have over them, and let them be not hurt by your lie that misled them. Take with you also the curse of enmity, animosity, jealousy and greed between the Anunnaki ALUALLU, and the IGIGI ANZU and SHAMGAZZA. These three traitors in one I cast out into you, and out with you. In the name of Shibboleth, Tubal-Cain I call you, traitor to Hiram Abiff, and the three traitors, your confederates, I call Jubelo, Jubela and Jubelum."

I am letting my fingers slide loose when INANNA screams from behind me, passing by ENLIL her father: "MARDUK, no! Do not allow this!" I return my attention to MARDUK. INANNA must not know us apart. She must think me MARDUK and he me. But this thought is folly, a distraction, and when I return my attention to MARDUK I find his visage changed to that of a bull.

"Now you will understand this," MARDUK finally spoke, "I am the God that came before you. I loved INANNA before she loved you. It was always me she wanted. With you gone, she was free to finally be with me. We exchanged her MEs and my "tree of life" and made love in our astral forms, giving birth to the baby universe in galactic core. She never loved you. I'm sorry, my brother. Now you will understand all my actions all along. For I was secretly betrothed to her on Nibiru before she or you were born. But even this was only one of our manifold incarnations throughout this universe, as by now you well know. For we two are eternal. You are nothing but a mere immortal. You cannot kill me. If you strike me down I will only become more powerful than you can possibly imagine."

"ENLIL," I shout past him. "come to me, now is the time, let us kill MARDUK!" ENLIL has crept up behind MARDUK.

"You cannot hope to accomplish your vain strategy," MARDUK remarks calmly, "I know your thoughts instantly. I am everywhere already, there is nowhere I am not, now I surround you."

"ENLIL, you must not listen to his empty boasts. You outsize him. Ascend." ENLIL understands, nods, and ascends. He ascends to the seventh heaven, the rotations of EHEIEH below the seven Arab heavens. He ascends the steps to the seventh heaven, the House of Pearls, of the seventh heaven, Gedulah of Gevurah, greatness of severity over mercy. He forms the shemhamforash of 72 daimons by day and night of the 36 dekans, and he unlocks their cage, the Enochian system of John Dee. The terrible rush of air inward toward the vacuum of this abyss of Daath sucks MARDUK up off his hooved feet.

"Now is the time," I shout, "death to MARDUK and to all earthly evil!"

I strike out at MARDUK's heart. My claws rip into his chest and my fingers wrap around his life's core. I clench my fist and drag the plucked-out organ apart from its rubbery arteries. I hold my own brother's heart aloft as it ceases to keep its beat. But who's heart is it? For no one else is near me, and it is not my own heart I hold. Have I been tricked? Whose body was MARDUK in just then? Doubts fill me and lift my mind upward and inward, collapsing my skull. Then ENLIL closes off the Enochian system. "MARDUK's essence has been cut in two now," ENLIL explains to me. "I have trapped the mental part of it inside the prison of the fallen angels. The lower, gross portion, you hold now in your hand, the astral heart, home of his passions."

"Let us cut this heart into five pieces, and let us separate the Daath-cube into two parts as well. The seventh section to the sun take, the sixth section to the moon. The five pieces of MARDUK's heart take one each to each of the five other planets out to to the gas giant with the red spot. This is how it is now accomplished. Now, I, DUMMUZI, am the noble king of earth." ENLIL nods and takes the heart and the Hell-box to depart to the planets.

Now INANNA approaches me. "You have no idea what you've done. You've only multiplied his strength by seven."

"No," I, DUMMUZI, the king of these poor blind sheep, smile, "without his mind to guide it, his heart's various pieces cannot align, and his mind cannot break free from within the sun, it's Hell. Only one shall hold the watchword, his call or pass, to enter the realm. I am he to choose whom. I shall entrust guardianship over MARDUK's prison in the solar Hell to the archangel Michael. For he shall keep MARDUK locked up with the fallen Grigori, the rebel IGIGI. He and six others shall keep watch over the burial places of MARDUK's heart. These seven shall be the Archangels. Moreover I, now as king of earth, can select any body into which I can trap you as a mortal as I should so like, INANNA. You are to be my slave now."

"MARDUK will save my soul from this terrible fate, you mere clone!"

"MARDUK is surely in Hell by now, my dear INANNA. And know this: reality is all more or less digital, more or less subjective, more static or random. You may have believed in your fantasies about mothering the baby-universe at galactic-core with MARDUK; now though you will accept my mythologies."

"This is not some mere dream, nor flight of fancy, nor fiction, boy. I say again you do not know what you have done. You have only made MARDUK angry. And you won't like him when he's angry."

"I will summon my father ENKI and he will tell me if MARDUK's power has so greatly increased during the 2 shars I spent on Nibiru. ENKI, the father of civilised man, teacher of the many MEs, benevolent, calm, oh ENKI the father of many mortals and immortals, ENKI, my own father, benevolent, calm and wise, I call upon you now to appear here before me."

ENKI's presence coalesces. Immediately he says, "What have done, my son? Why have you committed this wicked act? Why have you chosen to bear the mark of a murdering villain? Why could you not stifle your pride? He was your last brother from Nibiru. His crime was only the same as your own: a crime of love, for love twists fates, it should surely be banned against by law!"

"ENKI, my father, still thy soul, quiet thy heart. Tell me, what have I left to fear from MARDUK now that he is dead?"

"My son, my son DUMMUZI, I fear I have gone mad from exposure to the sun while living here on earth. I cannot seem to see you! All seems to be fading to black! I cannot see!"

"ENKI, my father, go now to Nibiru and stand before ANU. I shall go with you to recount to ANU the slaying of MARDUK. INANNA shall also accompany us as a trophy of our success."

And so we departed to Nibiru and stood before ANU.

"ANU," I spoke to the king seventh by succession from AN, the first king of unified Nibiru, "I am the son named DUMMUZI of your son EA-ENKI. I am a good shepherd. Your decree sent me to earth to find and slay the traitor MARDUK. I come now to tell you how I have done it.

"It was all as before. MARDUK was summoned to the triangle by conjuring. At first ENKI came before me, between MARDUK and myself, to plead for peace. Then INANNA tempted my hand to stray. It was then that ENLIL and I struck from above and from below. I pulled out the astral heart of MARDUK myself, and ENLIL vacuumed up his mind. The serpent-egg was severed into seven pieces. The five pieces of the snake were taken to the five noble planets. The egg was broken in half and is guarded on the sun and earth's moon by two of seven noble Archangels.

"Now here I am with the conquered INANNA and my fellow-hero, my father, your son, EA-ENKI, rightful heir to the throne of Nibiru, long live the King, your highness."

ANU spoke then and said, "ENKI, my son, welcome home to stay! Your too-long sojourn on earth has left you senile with age. I don't know whether to laugh or cry at the sight of you, my own son! Please, eat the nectar and drink the ambrosia of the lotus, partake freely of the Amrita, and let soma again course through your veins and soon you will regain your health and know again what it means to be a Nibiruin. I tell you, my children, I have prepared us a feast!"

DUMMUZI, I sit down on the left side of ANU; ENKI, my father, sits down on his right side. At the first taste of the ambrosia my head begins to spin. After two bites of nectar my mind is swimming in deep waters. After one bite of Amrita my mind soars upward too suddenly, and after one sip of soma I am in a theatre of dreams. I look over to see my father look over at me. To him this feast of illusions to me is weak fare. He eats like a ravenous prisoner.

Now I, DUMMUZI, spoke up among the engorging gods of Nibiru. I explain to them what INANNA and MARDUK had said to me. I tell them that MARDUK professed the baby universe was his and INANNA's, and INANNA warned that MARDUK might return even more powerful. I asked the savants for the truth about MARDUK and INANNA, and I asked the royal council what defenses Nibiru had to counter MARDUK if he were to return.

The council answer quickly: Nibiru can be defended, but earth can not. I, DUMMUZI, consider this. The savants are slower to answer. I repeat my question to them: "tell me the truth about MARDUK and INANNA." Then they begin to explain:

"MARDUK was the son of ENKI and NINTI, NINHURSAG or NINKI. He was their only son, born on Nibiru. After NINKI came to earth to join her husband EA-ENKI, they could father no more male heirs, only daughters. Your own mother, DUMMUZI, was an Annunaki concubine of ENKI. To MARDUK you were always closer to Adapa than to his own rank because your mother was of a lower caste than his own.

"MARDUK it was to have courted and even laid INANNA down first, but he only did this to spitefully wrong you, for he knew you would love her at first sight. He only meant to hurt you by this and nothing more. INANNA's true feelings for MARDUK we do not know."

So the savants spoke. I, DUMMUZI, asked them then, "What if INANNA still loves him?"

"Then you must kill her or she will ceaselessly seek to resurrect him."

"I cannot bear the mark of fate!" I cry. "I do not wish to go on any further with this. Kisses and best wishes, I have to go to sleep soon or I will surely die." The holy Amrita I had never tasted. By its effect upon my body, lengthening my years, to my mind its effect was that time seemed to slow down. My mind raced inside my sluggish body. How many moons were passing over earth, my kingdom, I wondered. To sleep I went.

In the deep sleep of the Nibiruin Amrita, from the deepest, darkest recesses of the unconscious mind of DUMMUZI, to where he had displaced the mind of the meat-puppet's body, one whose appearance seemed like that of himself, only aged very old, came to shape before the mind-power archetypal ego of DUMMUZI. The ghost spoke:

"I am the one your father ENKI and your uncle ENLIL know as GALZU. I am the one that told ENKI to save the seeds of earth from the flood. I am he who told ENLIL that to destroy MARDUK would bring the hot-winds that would kill the Anunnaki. I am a prophet, a knower of destiny. I am the psyche that lived in the body of the neo-Seth, the second coming, that you, DUMMUZI displaced to conjure and kill MARDUK. By this, your action, I was forced outside of all time. I age backward now, appearing at will; I am the baby universe. I am the sleeping Krishna in the womb of Shiva, of INANNA, dreaming of manvantara - the destinies of all stars, planets and life in the Milky Way. I am the 'Great Burner,' the 'black sun,' 'Viracocha,' 'GALZU,' etc. I am only one of two twins. The lover, Virgo, of my womb, my sister, is ISIS. My true name is Jah, AHDVNHAY Allah.

"Tremble therefore before me, for I hold your destiny also in my hand, oh King of Earth. For until 12/21/2012, your time cannot yet come. For you do not know if my father is yourself, peace become wrath, or MARDUK, wrath become peace. Confused to you your fate has become, yet known to me it is, as only one of all my dreaming destinies. I am the mind manifest in the body resurrected by MARDUK and INANNA, the false-one, and displaced by you, DUMMUZI, the true-resurrection. I dwell mentally, moving backwards in time as far as human and Anunnaki memory can extend, and comprehending far beyond. I dwell mentally, my fate shaping the destiny of all humans and Anunnaki, and of all life, planets and stars of the Milky Way. I remember all past and dream all future. All the shape of the entire cosmos is known to me. Know that, during your conjuring and killing of MARDUK, I have recorded all I know in writing and have made it known amongst the humans. Now I have elevated the importance of humanity's fate as a whole to that of my own, the baby-universe, just as by possessing it for your battle with MARDUK you have elevated the fate of my human body to above your own, and now your fate depends entirely upon me manifest in the body writing this now.

"Therefore, realise the weakness of all pantheons, and ultimately of all living embodiments of the One True God over all universal destinies. You, DUMMUZI, who would rule earth and the minds of its people through me, deserve neither more than the love of INANNA, and can command none. The Anunnaki are truly impotent over their own fate, let alone over human fate. They plan to evacuate Nibiru, conquer earth, and to destroy MARDUK along with Nibiru when through there to galactic core he travels. ANU, his promise of earth to you, DUMMUZI, he will break to save the Nibiruins. He will make the mind of every human the habitation for a Nibiruin. He will claim to the humans that he is me, arrived from galactic core. He plans to conspire against you with ENKI. ENLIL already serves him. DUMMUZI, ANU plans to murder you."

Then DUMMUZI awoke. He felt no headache of dehydration from imbibing Nibiru's soma, nor stomach ache from having consumed the immortalising Amrita. Why, then, were his ears ringing? DUMMUZI arose from his slumber to the sound of all Nibiru's alarm clazons sounding at once. At the door of his chambers DUMMUZI encountered ANU, accompanied by ENKI. Behind them stood the aged figure of ENLIL. ENKI, already made younger by the Nibiru supper and slumber, grabbed DUMMUZI.

"DUMMUZI, my son, INANNA a liar was not! MARDUK has tricked us and now to Nibiru is about to return." The groggy mind of DUMMUZI reeled to this harsh dawn. In his thoughts the concerns of the moment fought against the memory of his dream. He considered how time appeared to dilate between earth and its solar neighbors and the dark star Nibiru. On the sun, 2012 is as 2007 on earth, is as 2000 amongst the solar planets, is as a moment on Nibiru, is as already past in galactic core. The paternal suit between MARDUK and DUMMUZI remained unresolved, ANU cautioned. "On Nibiru, to fight MARDUK alone, DUMMUZI must stay. To earth, all those living on Nibiru must flee." So ANU was warning DUMMUZI.

Before DUMMUZI, blocking his egress from his sleep-chambers, stood ANU, the young ENKI to his right and the aged ENLIL on his left. Suddenly a great Understanding gripped DUMMUZI. "GALZU have I met," DUMMUZI said. "The dreaming baby universe he is. To galactic core must I go, with INANNA to accompany, to settle the paternal suit with MARDUK. Preceding him, I shall succeed. I can arrive before him only if I leave now. So I say to you now: let me pass and do with the earthlings as you wish, but know this: block my way now and you will die with Nibiru. Die not now then," DUMMUZI says, "but pray instead Nibiru survives, for when in triumph I return then I, alone, shall claim rightful rule of earth."

ENKI and ENLIL, knowing the truth of GALZU, stepped aside, but ANU, the mighty sky-god, king of Nibiru, remained in the way of DUMMUZI, blocking the door.

"GALZU has come to you only in a dream," ANU warned. "Beware your dreams, for they betray your own inmost desires."

"Father ANU of my father ENKI, I, DUMMUZI, must pass. Make the minds of earth's humans the habitation for all the Nibiruins. I contest not your whim to do so, for it may become a Law. On Nibiru, I shall stay to fight MARDUK, but away from Nibiru will I lure him, with INANNA, to galactic core. When MARDUK I, alone, have vanquished, to Nibiru you may return, or else I should rule here if you are to rule earth. To Nibiru you may instead return as a hero then, or on Nibiru its final ruler you may die now. When I return, my victory you may proclaim. But stand aside from me now, or else all our fates are sealed." At this, ANU stood to one side.

I, DUMMUZI, to the cell of INANNA then went. The nefarious villain that had warned she and MARDUK from Nibiru, the one to transmit my talisman ahead of me to the translators of Thoth, had freed her while I slept. Truly we Anunnaki are the puppets of fate, and fortune's fools! To the nearest place of the Vhem crafts I next went, only to find INANNA's sky-chambre gone. She will go to MARDUK if she loves him, but to galactic core if she loves him not. I, DUMMUZI, boarded a Nibiruin craft to fly above the skies of Nibiru, to travel to galactic core and there to battle MARDUK. I shuddered, for this was long ago my nightmare, now about to come true: that I would die in space to save the human race. I pass through the atmosphere of Nibiru to confront MARDUK on the mental plane.

Now, I behold the formless presence of MARDUK upon me. His mind overpowers mine inside my astral body. MARDUK is upon me. He begins to possess me, my heart he takes hold of, my soul breathes his breaths. I place the barrel of the ship's laser pistol into my mouth. The presence recoils. Between the ship's screen and my face, in the cabin cockpit MARDUK coalesces.

"Formless," he thunders, "you will be as weak as was ENLIL. You cannot hope to fight me mentally, and astrally you cannot stop me from going where I am going to go. Either way, you will die and I will win."

"If so powerful you are," I ask him, "where is INANNA, who loves you? Were she with you, I would be weakened. Seeing her not here at your side emboldens me."

"INANNA!" MARDUK summons, "come unto me now!"

While MARDUK is thus distracted I fire the pistol at his formless coalescence. He lunges toward me, but it is too late, I have shot a hole in the vimana and am sucked out into space. MARDUK grasps me, his grip is upon me. He does not let me die, but neither does he enter into my mind. Instantly we are transported to galactic core. Here I have often sojourned mentally; my astral form has never been.

"No," a voice rejoins MARDUK, "you come now unto me." It is INANNA. She holds in her hand the black hole of galactic core. At its splendour she marvels. "Here you see now, Oh Dread Brothers. I have arrived here first, and so the womb is my own. Know this - its child has me as its mother. I am first."

MARDUK roars at her enraged. "Defiler!" he cries, "at my side your place is, not as the first to stake claim over my own rightful domain!"

"Your domain?" I ask, slipping mentally free of MARDUK's grasp of my astral body, which assumes a trance unto death. "Into how many pieces shall you then portion out the womb of INANNA, should your love for her be true and worthy of her to return?"

"Into no division shall my domain be porportioned. Gloriously, I shall shine unto all, and from all to all, King of all, I, MARDUK, alone I am, and so heirs I shall bear to have but one, or none at all! My love for you is true INANNA. For between us we shall bear a son, the denied heir of ENKI and NINTI. Let the God of destiny make it so!"

Yet already INANNA's face has darkened. Having arrived before us she already knew what I, DUMMUZI, learned from GALZU in my dream.

"And how many portions would you divide your kingdom into, oh lord DUMMUZI?" INANNA then turns to me, fearing for her doom.

"Two: one for myself, a male, and one to be thine, oh my cousin, INANNA, a girl. Thus two would be our heirs - son and daughter. Twins."

INANNA then opened the lens of the event horizon like the labia of a clam shell, and inside we beheld not one, but twin singularities - a double baby universe!

"But the question is not resolved!" INANNA reminds us. "We must look inside the twin eggs, the MEs, to find whose seed, whose 'tree of life,' has been mentally planted within them. Once of you the father of both, or both of you the father of one, may yet be."

"But to measure such an electron, we must strike it first with some kind of photon." MARDUK concurs with me we should not use the astral body of DUMMUZI held in MARDUK's mental grip. We stand around the black hole, open to reveal the twin baby universes, in a triangle. "Let us join hands around it," I, DUMMUZI, propose, "and by our three combined MEs, enter into both the twin eggs by magick."

To INANNA my proposition was acceptable. To MARDUK it was not. "Preferable," he said, "it would be for DUMMUZI to be the astral father of both than for INANNA not to love me." MARDUK's visage grew long with shadows. I knew he was telling a lie, but his trickery seemed to deceive INANNA. She began to go to him, to MARDUK, and reached out to comfort him. "Daughter of ENLIL!" I roar at her enraged, "Truly at fault for my whole family's weakness thou art! For as the weakness of ENLIL allowed ANU's castration, so have you yourself smitten ENKI's seed off, both myself and MARDUK, and thus thou art truly the desolation of Nibiru!" INANNA hesitates, torn between her desire to comfort MARDUK, the liar, and to confront my wrath as I speak the truth. In this moment is all destiny contained, we three then simultaneously realised. We then beheld ENKI standing beneath us, ENLIL standing above, and felt the presence of ANU all around.

ENLIL then opened the Enochian Daath-cage. From everywhere the mental decree of ANU resounded: "Kill them all." Betrayal! Wordlessly we three acted at once against those three others. INANNA attacked first ENLIL, next ANU, finally ENKI. MARDUK attacked first ANU, then ENKI, then ENLIL. I, DUMMUZI, attack first ENKI, then ENLIL, and finally ANU. This is the "war in heaven" foretold of by earth's prophets, both living and dead. It is a strange hexagram, whose symbol is two triangles, the symbol of its symbol is the yin-yang, Jachin and Boaz. Let me tell you the esoteric meaning of this battle. While we all fought and were distracted, the open wormhole of the Enochian system, the Ark, consumed the twin-singularities from inside the galactic black hole, the tablet of testimony. When we realised this had happened, the six of us all stopped fighting. One turned to the next and lamented! "Who could open the Hell-box, once sealed? Shall we never know the true paternal identity of the twins whose destiny contains all our own?"

"Destroy the hell-box, the children within let die!" MARDUK exclaimed. With this ENLIL and ANU agreed, but I, DUMMUZI, and INANNA with me, disagreed. ENKI spoke: "six we are, a council of seven we are not. We must summon the one who can open the shemhamforash. DUMMUZI, call the sun-guard, call that Archangel."

"Michael, Come!" I, DUMMUZI, command. At once, the Archangel Michael appears. "My Lords, MARDUK has escaped me! I was betrayed by Samael! He is the traitor from Nibiru to beam Lord DUMMUZI's warning to the neo-Sethian translators of the cult of Thoth. He has gone to Nibiru to free INANNA! Surely by now he could be anywhere!"

"Archangel Michael, thy soul still and heart rest. Time-travelled here to galactic core you have. You must now unlock the Shemhamforash. It now contains the destiny of all Nibiru and earth. So is the decree of ANU, king of Nibiru, let it be done as your Master DUMMUZI so wills it."

However, while we six turned our backs to it to summon and consult the seventh Archangel, Michael, the hell-box containing the galactic twins disappeared! "It is the deed of Samael!" Michael exclaims. "To free the imprisoned IGIGI and lead an army of neo-Sethians in the cult of Thoth against Nibiru he plans. To Nibiru we must quickly go!" Michael continues to exclaim.

Again, by the dilations of time were we Nibiruins tricked! Physically time slows, but mentally quickens, closer to galactic core's black hole. Near it, events transpired too quickly to prevent. Michael was on solar time. I, DUMMUZI, on the clock of earth, could move faster than ANU and ENLIL, who moved slowest, and ENKI, somewhat faster, for they were all now on Nibiru time. INANNA and MARDUK could move the swiftest, and MARDUK quicker than INANNA.

"I shall go to earth by way of Nibiru. Follow me. By the time I reach earth, you shall be reaching Nibiru. I go alone. I will find Samael the Archangel and return with the shem-box to Nibiru. None may accompany me. I go now!" MARDUK exclaims. With that the mind of MARDUK vanishes from before us.

"Michael - take me to the sun!" I, DUMMUZI, decree. "Pursue MARDUK! Make haste!" With that we are off. MARDUK did not realise that, due to the time dilation, Nibiru would not be aligned with earth, and his course would take him out of the way. We might arrive at the same time. Michael hurries us by the beating of his wings along the astral arc of invisible gravity flowing from galactic core to the sun. As we travel this highway of dark light, I contemplate I have become like Vishnu mounted on the bird Garuda, the final incarnation of Shiva I have become now, on a pale horse I come. The prophets of earth foretold of this, the Vedics of the third region, under INANNA. Truly ISIS and GALZU, INANNA's rightful heirs are. We approach the sun and, passing by earth, I dismount from the Archangel Michael, who returns to the sun.

Immediately as I slow down into earth's net-power, MARDUK appears. "MARDUK," I, DUMMUZI say to him, "you did not remember to take my astral body with you. Here I am now, in the astral form, while you are only a mental being. I can grasp the true traitor, Samael, but only Michael can unlock the Shem-box." I remind MARDUK as we descend into the body of his meat-puppet, the neo-Seth. "Time moves more rapidly here than on Nibiru," he cautions in return. I do not mention the truth about GALZU - that his mind is in the same body, now displaced by the mind of MARDUK, and whose aura is now that of DUMMUZI. May destiny forgive us.

I summon you, SAMAEL. MARDUK and DUMMUZI speak through me! Know one is the Babylonian Destroyer and the other the shepherd God of Spring! So these are the dual visages of Janus, Jah Allah, of Vajra and Krishna and of Christ and anti-Christ. Both dwell within me now, oh Archangel Samael. You are known now. You are not the IGIGI SHAMGAZZA, nor neither ANZU nor ALALLU. You are the serpent SATA, Set, cup-bearer of Osiris. You are a traitor among the Anunnaki, from Nibiru to become an archangel you came, but by freeing MARDUK and then stealing the Zion Shem in the Ark, you have committed treason. I therefore bind thee, SATA, Samael, by the names of those dead traitors like yourself: SHAMGAZZA the IGIGI, ANZU the IGIGI Annunaki, and ALALLU the Annunaki Nibiruin. In this triangle appear! I call thee in the name of MARDUK the destroyer! I call thee now Melek-Taus. I call thee Samael, SATA, Set, Shaytan. Named for the first sea-snake killed on earth by ALALLU, first Nibiur in on earth. For long has your treachery by fore-seen by I, GALZU, knower of the calendar from Atlantis, and of magick much, and of star-sigils many, and of the Anunnaki enough. MARDUK the bull, DUMMUZI the sheep, and I, GALZU, the body of the neo-Seth, command you to come here now."

At these last words, spoken by GALZU, MARDUK flinched with surprise, and with his flinching appeared Satan, naked and invisible, clutching the Enochian system, the ever-shifting tesseract of time that now contains the twin-singularities of galactic core. This is the Ark containing Zion. "You are too late, Jah Rastafari!" Satan tramples, enraged. "I have given Zion to the Sethites of Thoth. You will abide by their findings. Your paternal fates both I now hold in my hands. I declare myself the Temporary Dictator of Earth. Mind is now Kether of the Great Burner! And stop me, do nothing you can!" With these words, Satan opens the dread Shemhamforash. Inside it is empty. Then, from it pour forth seventy-two demons, and 3X72 fallen angels, and 36 dekan, 11 other Archons like Satan and their seven powers, and much confusion and chaos. Then Satan disappears himself into the Enochian wormhole and seals the door of the Ark behind him.

Just then there appears a mighty army in the heavens. The Nibiruin Annunaki have all returned to inhabit the minds of the non neo-Sethians in the cult of Thoth. They are all riding on the backs of Surya Avatars, and their host is now blended amongst the swarm of rebel IGIGI and demons. Michael is the general of the Nibiruin army. He approaches upon the back of Sorath, the solar kamea, and draws near to us, the triple-me, on both the mental and the astral plane.

"Sorry if I'm late," Michael says. "I was called to Nibiru by King ANU. He has sent us Nibiru's finest warriors to join those loyal to our cause in the cult of Thoth on earth. The other Nibiruins, who had fled from Nibiru to earth from MARDUK, are all now being returned to Nibiru. I bring the key of the shemhamforash to unlock the Ark. You must follow Satan into the hell within to recover the galactic seeds, for he lied and snuck them by you, having betrayed the neo-Sethians in the cult of Thoth. I have sent the neo-Sethians into the sun, and bring you now the call of MARDUK to unlock the Ark!"

"Let me hear it!" cries MARDUK, but I command Michael's silence a moment. "Where is INANNA?" I ask of Michael. "My good god, Lord DUMMUZI, King of Ki, the earth, I do not know. From between galactic core and Nibiru, away from the others she secreted herself. Now no one on earth nor Nibiru knows her whereabouts. She has completely disappeared." At this even MARDUK was stirred. "Surely," he asks DUMMUZI hesitantly, "she has not taken sides with our adversary?" I, DUMMUZI, frightfully respond, "should he now know hold the twins of galactic core, their father he can rightfully claim to be."

"How can we not have foreseen this?" both brothers lament. "For INANNA, I, MARDUK, betrayed DUMMUZI and murdered Osiris!" And, "for INANNA, I, DUMMUZI, betrayed you and sought for your death, oh my brother MARDUK!" And now Michael, by Samael, has been betrayed, and if INANNA sides with this traitor, this villain, then surely she means to murder us both! Into the hands of the body of GALZU has the fate of both MARDUK and DUMMUZI now fallen; and so into the hands of INANNA with Satan has the fate of GALZU and ISIS fallen, and so into the Ark, the former prison of the fallen angels, the Enochian system of John Dee. Behind us the battle in heaven rages. Before us Michael holds the Mason's word. Let us expect treachery!" the twin brothers, sons of ENKI, agreed.

But they did not expect what next occurred. From behind the Archangel Michael steps INANNA, in the astral form of ISIS, as GALZU had taken the mental form of the body in dreams, unconcealing a magical dagger from between Michael's ribs. It drips with crimson blood fresh from his heart. "With him dies the call to MARDUK unlocking the box of Enoch!" MARDUK cries. "No," INANNA reveals, "DUMMUZI knows it too; he knew it all along. Michael served DUMMUZI, but Satan, thief of the Ark, did never steal Zion from within. He showed me it empty, for the word he'd stolen from Michael to free MARDUK from the sun. I tricked him by telling him to hide within the trap himself. Follow him you need not. It is DUMMUZI who has on him the twin singularities, and has all along. DUMMUZI, the father, therefore must be." Thus spoke INANNA, righteously, in the presence also of ANU, who arrived just then from Nibiru.

"In the hands of DUMMUZI lies the fate of the galactic twins, and thus the destiny of all earth and Nibiru." ANU decreed as he assumed earth-time. The assembled gods, MARDUK, INANNA and ANU, formed a triangle around DUMMUZI. "For testing surrender the twin eggs of the galaxy!" MARDUK ordered. "By what right do you demand it?" I, DUMMUZI, ask myself, MARDUK, from the second, astral, to the third, mental, plane. "I, DUMMUZI, am by ANU's decree King here on Earth." I turn to ANU, the aligned spirit above the mind of MARDUK and the soul of DUMMUZI. "I am GALZU, the body," I say. "And I am MARDUK the mind," I continue, "and I am DUMMUZI the soul and," I conclude, "I am of the spirit of you, ANU. I am the flesh-mind of the meat-puppet body. I offer the Atlantean calendar, Zion asunder, to ISIS, my twin sister and True Love. May INANNA align with and enter into the body of ISIS, as have ANU, DUMMUZI and MARDUK all entered into and aligned within the body of I, GALZU.

"Now you realise, all you Anunnaki, that your fates have always been in the hands of ISIS my beloved and I, GALZU, the one you called a 'meat-puppet.' I have it in my hands to affirm or destroy you all. Do my will or I will trap you all in the Enochian system by my knowledge of the Atlantean calendar!" I hold in one hand the twisting tesseract of time, trap of the rebel angels. I hold in my other hand the twin singularities of galactic core, the DNA of GALZU and ISIS. "You serve me now, if you wish to live, then obey my command: separate all the fallen angels of the shemhamforash, along with the 11 other Archons and seven powers, the rebel IGIGI, the 72 demons, the 36 dekanas and Samael's neo-Sethian cohorts on the battlefield from those goodly Masons, the five remaining Archangels, the surya avatars, and all the loyal angels, the mind of Nibiruans and hearts of those in the cult of Thoth. The evil you shall bring before me and I will encage them again inside the shemhamforash-locked Enochian system of the Atlantean calendar. To Hell we shall send them, ten the five of you, together with ISIS and I, GALZU, shall settle your petty paternity suit. But know this before into the fray of battle I send you: Your patronage is over. I, GALZU, with ISIS, my beloved twin sister, rule the galaxy from now on. Our wisdom and understanding are infinite and for your own best interest you must serve us. Our father and mother are irrelevant to us, and now that we are born, only what we decree can be considered a matter of Law."

While ANU, MARDUK, DUMMUZI and INANNA were joined by ENKI and ENLIL in the fray of combat, I, GALZU, abscond to Nibiru with ISIS. There we steal two large siloes, full of soma in one, the liquid ambrosia, and amrita in the other, the food-stuff known as manna, as MFKZT, and as nectar - for it resembled butter, or milk, or honey in texture. While there we also stole a Nibiruan sheep from the deserted and godless Nibiru. The sheep had seven heads and ten horns, and each horn we bound a crown to it, and returned thus to earth to give soma and amrita to humans and sacrifice the Nibiruan sheep.

In a moment, by our mind-power, at the speed of thought we have returned. The Nibiruins battle in the painted sky above the earth. They have not yet begun to fight, let alone to bring the demons, dekans, Archons and Grigori before me. They do not even comprehend Thoth's own Enochian system. They, themselves, cannot even read the Atlantean calendar, and remain confused by the most rudimentary of worm-hole equations underlying their physical experience of time-dilation. They are good for nothing but fighting, their brute force useless even for labour, they are warriors alone. For I, GALZU, have resurrected the terra-cotta hordes of Ghenghis Khan, and I, GALZU, then slit the seven necks of the Nibiruin sheep, and slay it for a sacrifice to the God of All destinies, thanking him for my good fate to live in the Golden Age. I skin the sheep and don its wooly hide. I conduct the ritual solemnly. I gain understanding of the Enochian system and how to use it with my mental-energy, my ME.

Wearing the wool of lamb, I and ISIS distribute the soma and amrita amongst the loyal Masons of Thoth as they began to return from the battle. The amrita healed them instantly and the soma restored their faculties. "Go serve GALZU," ISIS told them. "Go serve ISIS," GALZU told them. Like lambs to the slaughter they charged back into battle. Soon, the forces were beginning to be distinguishable apart from one another. The undying demons were in retreat from the forces of Thoth's Knights and the soldiers of Nibiru, all behind the 4 Horsemen: ANU, ENKI, ENLIL and, riding together on one horse DUMMUZI and MARDUK. "Look," I, GALZU, say to ISIS, pointing up to the constellation of Taurus, "I see how it is accomplished: they are as Jabal, Jubal and Tubal Cain, and INANNA - she is like Namah." She turns to me and says, "we must begin to save the people from the fourth and final world-cataclysm. Earth shall be consumed within the superconductive fire and born into the spiritual Age soon. You have seen this in your calendar, and you understand it will occur thorough the Enochian system of earth. Let us begin now, my love."

"You are wise, 'Sis," I, GALZU, reply. "Now let us see how to imprison the demons in the ECS of earth, and then to banish them all to the sun, and thus purge all ill karma from earth. We must set up one of each of the six Nibiruins - ANU, ENKI, ENLIL, DUMMUZI, MARDUK and INANNA, reign over each of the six noble planets besides the sun. Let us resurrect the Archangel Michael to rule the Shemhamforash of the sun. Let the neo-Sethians follow their second-coming to burn up inside the hell-prison. Let the Archangel Michael rule over them all there, and lock up that prison of the shemhamforash with the demons and Archons in the solar inferno. Shall the "raptured" souls of the neo-Sethians, the Christian Masons and Zionist Ministers, forever burn in Hell. Let this happen quickly. Let us resurrect Archangel Michael." Into the mouth of the unconscious Archangel, ISIS placed healing amrita. Into the mouth of the unconscious Michael, ISIS poured life-giving soma. Into the lungs of the unconscious corpse, ISIS breathed the smoke of the consciousness-expanding lotus. "Michael, arise," said ISIS and I, GALZU, together. And Michael stood up and was healed. "Now, Michael, I am GALZU and this is ISIS," I explain to him. "We are the children of galactic core," ISIS explains to him. "The war in heaven's tides are turning. Good is routing evil once and for all. Now we must know the word given to you by DUMMUZI that can unlock and lock the shemhamforash of the ECS. If you give it to us not, we will command the word from DUMMUZI. Should he too refuse we shall rouse all the demons, Archons and Grigori against you until you release Satan to give us the word. Now, let us open the shemhamforash lock of the ECS of earth, then that between the earth and the sun, to remove all negative karma from earth and to imprison all earth's enemies into the sun's core." Michael said then, "I am of Nibiru, a servant of DUMMUZI, son of ENKI, son of ANU, seventh king of Nibiru. I am slow to judge, and that is why I am favoured by DUMMUZI. But in all the length of my lifetime of Nibiruin shar-cycles, I have not ever before seen two such as you. Your Love is True. As DUMMUZI is a good of love, so I shall by his decree give the word of reckoning to you now. This word you may use as you wish, for it unlocks the shemhamforash of the ECS. I speak the word of Reckoning, the Lost Mason's Word of ImHotep, to you now:"

"By the word of Reckoning let GALZU and ISIS be wedded by me, the Archangel Michael." Then he spoke the word of Reckoning and there was silence in the heavens for about a half an hour. The fray of combat was stilled and the melee of fighting abated. A shroud of mist descended over us then. From amidst the mist there stepped first ANU, leading the Grigori, then ENKI, leading the 36 dekanas, and then ENLIL, leading the Archons, and then followed MARDUK and DUMMUZI, leading the 72 demons by day and by night of the geotic shemhamforash. Each approached from the mist, and each in turn led their prisoners through the wormhole gate of the Ark into their prison inside the Enochian system of John Dee. Michael stood at the gate. I, GALZU, and my sister-wife, ISIS, stand behind the wormhole, on either side of it. "Now by the word of Reckoning let the ECS be closed up behind them," said Michael, and he again uttered the almighty name: AHDVNHAY. The gates all closed around the Enochian prisoners and each inside their cells they were trapped in place in the Atlantean calendar. "So mote it be," said Micheal.

"Now heed to me, hear my first decree of Law!" I, GALZU, then state.

"The heroes of Nibiru over each of the six other noble planets shall be given reign: the sun goes to Michael. Together these are seven: ANU, ENKI, ENLIL, MARDUK, DUMMUZI, INANNA and Michael. All evil shall be trapped in the sun. The other planets, each rule as you choose. Of earth, I, GALZU, and my princess-bride, ISIS, and of galactic core our home we are the sole rulers. As such over earth we decree all the followers of MARDUK and INANNA's rebellion be banished into the sun. The neo-Sethians' souls shall fuel the solar hell-fire. Now, as to Nibiru and earth - both shall be Democracies, no longer governed by mortal sovereigns. But earth shall be the Garden to ISIS and I, while Nibiru shall have no gods nor religion at all. Each will know the other, as it was in Atlantis, first as different thought-forms, different mental-patterns, then as archetypes, and finally as equals, cosmic siblings - not rivals but allies. All this may come to pass mentally now, and astrally soon on earth's time, in 2012."

"Now, go, my many ME's. Go ANU to Jupiter, ENKI to Mars and ENLIL to Saturn. Go to Mercury DUMMUZI, go to Venus INANNA, go to the moon MARDUK. And know ye though these are now to be your homes that all shall be welcomed by each other and there shall be no feud. You are not my and my beloved's venerable elders. You are only our slaves. You shall serve, and smile in your service, or we shall kill you. The pen, oh ill-fated Anunnaki, is mightier than the sword. By the words of the scribe do the gods live and die, while the sword kills only mortal humans.

"Now, come to us oh mortal humans, goodly Masons, Thoth's Knights, loyal to the commands of your true and beloved gods. You are free now: let the Golden Age come across the globe now, uniting all nations. Spread the good news: DUMMUZI has arisen as GALZU, and INANNA's heart lives on in ISIS, and MARDUK is now their archangel Michael. Go tell it on the mountain, that these are the names of the gods of earth's Gardens: Jah Galzu, ISIS, and Michael the archangel. Let the cycles be reset and time begin again.

"Now, come to us oh earthling sheep, blinded by MARDUK, and come to us oh Nibiruin heroes, dwellers between both worlds now, inhabiting some human minds here on earth and in limbo dwelling in terror on either earth as ghosts or on Nibiru without rule of law. Oh, earthlings and Nibiruins, you are twin species of incarnated ME. I set you free, I give you control over earth and Nibiru's ECS by your minds, and I have removed all prior negative karma from earth already and removed it to solar hell inside the 4th sun. But listen to me now:

"By dumping all earth's evil karma, the neo-Sethian's souls, the 36 dekanas, the 72 demons, the 12 Archons and the fallen Grigori into the sun, we have caused a magickal apocalypse: the sunspots of the fourth sun will be at their peak in 2012. After this no more negative karma may be purged. We begin then with a clean slate. Nibiru's fate to the Nibiruins is to be left, and earth's fate to the earthlings, but there is also to be every freedom enjoyed by one to be enjoyed by the other also, and thus free exchange between both. Earthlings you may go to and from Nibiru. Nibiruins you may go to and from earth. There are two of you now, and you are equal. Go live in peace and harmony.

"Now I will reveal to you all the secret of the ECS of earth and that of Nibiru that allows you to be transported instantly from one to the other by your ME's, your mental-energy, alone. Now you shall be told and know the pathways of each sigil, and its kamea, of every angle of the ECS and of the Atlantean Calendar, for they are one and the same. The calendar is a galactic clock, measuring the different time-lapses between the different places in the galaxy - so-called time-dilation. By understanding how to read the clock, you can travel anywhere, to any time, in the galaxy. This ability is the birthright of every human and Nibiru - it is merely dormant in your minds. I will show you how to unlock your potential - how to use ORMEs to make your junk DNA into super-conductors. This is the secret: eat the gold, become the sky. This is the secret to galactic immortality of the soul and the key to evolution beyond this to universal spirit. It is the secret also of mental travel. Understand all align over time. The combination of the gold in amrita and soma with the electrical charge of ME can also restore life to a dead body. Control over matter the ECS of earth and Nibiru gives your minds - it permits you to manifest any good, genuine karma. This karma accrues over time. It controls your fate, but you control its destiny. Know that now the ECS of earth and Nibiru shall serve you freely, just as your Anunnaki pantheon now freely serves us, ISIS and GALZU, heirs to the Milky Way. Just as there is an ECS of earth and of Nibiru, and of the sun and every noble planet, so too is there an ECS stretching out like a cob-web from galactic core, connecting every star system to every other by a multiverse of wormholes. That ECS is now mine, GALZU's, and my sister-wife, ISIS's.

"It is we who have ended the war in heaven between Nibiru and earth. Now the king of Nibiru is as low before us as MARDUK who betrayed him. It is we who have dreamt this and written this out. It is we who have freed you and we who have taught you right use and proper function of the ECS. So, it is we, Jah Allah GALZU and ISIS of galactic core, who speak to you now. Hear our decree and know that word is The Law:

"The sun is become the prison of the treacherous neo-Sethians' souls, the 36 dekanas, the 12 Archons, the 72 demons and the fallen Grigori. When, in 2012, all of earth's negative karma shall be purged there as well, then will be the sunspot cycle's peak. The negative karma from the ECS of the sun must then be recycled to galactic core, where it will be dispersed through the wormholes of galactic core as part of our galaxy's neural cathexis within the galactic filaments of the universal brain. So it must be, and so it shall be. From evil to good converted by inversion it shall be. Overseeing the sun we have placed the Archangel Michael. Over galactic core rule I, GALZU, and my sister-wife, ISIS. I have instructed you on the right use and proper function of the ECS of earth and Nibiru, and of the ECS of the Milky Way of which the Atlantean Calendar is a map. Now you must go out and instruct others by showing them how to use the ECS. Show them their ME-potential to time-travel and live forever. Free as many of them as can from bondage to bad karma, or else they will be taken with the demons and suryas into the solar-hell, and sent to be inverted through galactic core into negative negativity, from Thule to Vrill, and so to reverse all the EM poles of the stars, one by one, of our galaxy. Who can tell the future? Shall the EM poles of the sun, of earth and Nibiru and of the sun's noble planets all be reversed, north to south and south to north? I, GALZU, cannot tell you now. From galactic core I see and know all, though. From there follow the words of my and ISIS's next decree, for immediately to there do we now depart.

"I continue this, my decree of Jah GALZU, now from within the black hole heart of the Milky Way ring. I gaze out through the n-dimensional wormholes on the interior surface of the event horizon. I release my consciousness and expand through all the possible tunnel-realities comprising all fates. I expand my search for the Answer. I raise my ME to the Most High. I sit before the great wall of light and dissolve through it. I pass into the ylem multiverse beyond time-space and stand before the One True God over all destinies. I kneel before the One True Makers and Creator, former and shaper of all.

"Oh, Mighty One, the True Jah, Allah be praised! I exalt thee oh father of time, oh dreamer of space. AHDVNHAY, be praised! The One Law, Rastafari, the clear light, our parent universe, my True Father, be praised, be exalted! For I am become your righteous and enlightened son in whom I pray for you to be well pleased. Oh, Almighty continuity - Ariadne's thread through the fabric of spacetime, the labyrinthine multiverse, the nowhere-ness of the nulliverse, shall always connect the good in my heart to thee, oh Lord of All. For since my last ascension all of my dreams I have seen come to pass on paper, written out in long-hand by my pen. Am I not now like your Arjuna, of righteous father, Lord of Hosts, Most High, exalted one? For all of this I have done by your will to answer my prayer to reunite me with my beloved. In this writing I have moved heaven and earth for us to be together, and at your command will happily commend it to the flames if you should will it so.

"I bring before you now all Jah people, the good humans of earth and the good heroes of Nibiru. I have perceived that I was controlling their fates by my writing, and so took control of my writing to best govern them. I have brought them all with myself and ISIS to thank and to praise you with me in person. For all has come to pass as I'd foreseen: I have divided the universes; in one I am the king of the Milky Way, GALZU, husband of ISIS and liberator of humanity and Nibiru; while in the other I am only the feverish scribe, alone, divining all of this from tea leaves. So too have I already been reunited with my beloved in the world of fiction, my GALZU-delusion, and yet remain physically alone, forever apart from her. Lord, it is I, your humble servant, just and righteous! Be merciful on us all and shine your light to show us the Way.

"Lord God of Jah universe, whose mere plaything is tau-sub-tau, the tesseract of time, the true ECS above all others within it, containing all that can be known by the mortal mind, the immortal soul and the eternal spirit. Lord that is above and beyond me now as I am above and beyond the tesseract of time, tau-sub-tau, oh the Most High of All Time, give me wise counsel. Give me the answer I seek to the question which I now put forth to you:

"What is real? Am I your crowned and conquering child, meant to bring the dawn of the Golden Age to earth? Why, if not to live up to my potential to serve you, was I born at the turning of the millennium and of the Piktun, the time of the Great Conjunction, then? Yet, if I am the psychic messiah, why I must I be apart from she whom I love? You do understand my love for her is True and honest. My heart's feelings to her are pure, though without her I am only half alive. Why, oh Lord, must I have fallen so deeply in love? Why am I haunted and plagued by my role in our love-triangle; why must I continually dwell on my failure to her? Tell me the mystery, oh Lord my God the Most High. Tell me they true name, oh Elohim YHVH Rastafari, and I shall serve from now on only you, and forsake my love for her. But I pray do either in haste, for the dawn is upon me here and my feet are cold.

"Lord God, oh king over all the worlds outside this universe, in whose mind we are but flickering thoughts, Lord over all creation, I serve thee and thee alone above all others. Let me, your loyal servant, a wife choose for myself. Let me, oh loving Father, love her as I love you, and worship you through her. Please, oh God, hear my heart's true desire now! I long to unravel this mystery: WHY DO I LOVE? Who are my twin guardian angels, Michael-Marduk and ISIS? Why must I feel so bound to their fates? Why can I not yet let go?

"Oh, Lord God, oh that which is what is, explain to me please why I am torn? I am the Milky Way's king in one world, but a penniless autistic in another. On one side are my twin H-thus-G-thus-A-thus's, and on the other you, my precious gem, my life-sustaining jewel, my Creator, former, maker and shaper, my eternal spirit; my immortal soul and my mortal flesh all now all cry out to you as one: What must I do, oh Lord? How can I hope to be free of it all? Am I to serve you alone; am I to live out my life with no wife to love; am I to go insane in a world of delusional, feverish fiction; am I the Messiah? If I must live with love, if I must serve you alone, if I must go insane on paper and be crucified on cross-examination, please tell me, let me know now, for should I suffer such I should like to begin. If not then I must be free to believe however I choose and suffer no karmic consequences. I have as much chance as the next guy to get it right.

"Lord God, oh good Lord God, oh Sweet Lord God, tell me something of the one I love; a little secret she shared with you and you alone, and let me also come to know of it, that I may be elevated in my stature to her eyes. Lord God, Jah Allah, AHDVNHAY Rastafari, Most High, let our fates become once again intertwined that we may once again fall in love with each other in this lifetime. Lord God, let us meet again in the flesh, let us be wed in thy sight, divine from on High beneath your all-seeing eye, and let us bear baby children into the world, and let us, oh my most benevolent Father, live a long, long life to see our children have children and so forth. Lord God deliver me from the temptation to false affections and to the blindness brought about by lust. Oh Good above All that is Good, whose footstool rests atop the highest of heavens, look down upon us, and draw us closer together on your map of all-knowing. Tell me, oh tell me, thy god of truth, why am I so in love? Why do I cling to her? Why am I trapped still in the triangle of conjuring? Why am I only ever your Choronzon? Why, if I am not to be rewarded for it, must I suffer to play the role of Messianic martyr? And if I am to be rewarded then when can I be with her again? Thy will before and beyond must come to pass, and so I ask only for an answer, if not for my wish. Lord God, I have been driven mad by your many faces, and in every way your light reaches me I am burned. Lord, oh Lord, God, oh God, am I truly then naught but the beast of revelations, praying to the whore of Babylon; Choronzon and the anti-Christ am I only then? For if not, then where are my just rewards? All I ask for is someone to love, and to love whom I choose. But without her love in return then I am truly a lost soul, wandering in the Abyss, without compass or map. Guide me, oh Great Magnet, then: tell me this one truth now: Are she and I like opposite poles?

"Will our coming back together trigger the global cataclysm of sunspots prophesied for our times now by the astronomers of old? Will our love tilt the rotation of earth itself and burst the EM field of the sun, and will our love shine like a beacon on the invisible gravity beam to galactic core and carry our message by hyper-cathexis to the network of filament-strings of galaxies forming the cells of our local universal brain, our multiversal mind? Will our love cease to prevent any of these things? I ask you now for this one truth: "Are my beloved and I opposite poles?" And if so, why? Does this mean we cannot be together again now?

"Oh great and good and mighty God of righteous judgment, am I to bear the knowledge of the cosmic alignments all by myself, alone, insane, to turn the cosmic mill-stone, to churn the sea of milk and thus to render butter? Am I so accursed by fate I shall have loved and lost, only to never love again? Having tasted sin, must I surely die? Am I only good as your loyal servant for such hard labour? I toil daily beneath the burden of the Grand Cross. I fear I have become like Hamlet, and by my clinging to her sweetness and my fondness of her my true beloved is driven insane by proxy, and feels lament unto longing to die! Lord God, to comfort me you must tell me her secret, let me know she's alive!

"I sing a song to you in silence, Father, inscribing it on an emerald stone. I have become like the wizard of emerald city. To me come the merry travellers to have followed the yellow-brick road from Munchkin-land. They are the Brehmen Town musicians, led by the Pied Piper of Hamelin, dancing like skeletal marionettes to Jah music, singing songs to you in silence, Rastafari, oh the Most High, oh thy majesty! They are the crew that never sleeps, and they guard around the Great Burner, Vajra, Viracocha, the Vedic Vehm Vril Vimanas.

"I understand this sign that you have given me, Jah God. The goodness of having friends and of sharing life's mundane adventure is inherent, and so is the friendship of the Crew that Never Sleeps to the Great Burner, and so that of the fellow-travellers to the wizard in emerald city."

"The Crew that Never Sleeps are the Anunnaki pantheon in my aura, and the Great Burner - the alignment of Poimandres Draco, the Kundalini Teli of Chi arises up my chakras - sits amongst their constellations like the sun or like galactic core. So too do my friends play out their roles important to my own. I have bided my time. My time is now. And so I put my trust in Jah as one of those friends of gold does the wizard of emerald, and trust Rastafari as one of the Crew that Never Sleeps trusts the Great Burner. I trust in my heart, I know it to be true."

I am returning now down from before the holy throne of God the ineffable Most High. I am descending the Arab Heavens of 50 Gates. I pass through the Phanim, the Cherubim and the Seraphim permutations of the first thought (Norea, Pistis Sophia): "I Am, YHVH, the Lord." I pass down the inward spiral of the unfolding planetary kamea - the number squares of the Pythagorean spiral. I descend down below the Arich-Anpin of Sandalphon into the kingdom of Assiyah, and I am guided down gently through the many layers of suffering - past all the places I'd rather be - of Sheol and the Abyss of the qliphoth. I sink down the seven chakras of the scape-goated saviour body, my aura now cleansed of all guilty karma, I return into the ME of Jah Galzu. I come to in the midst of a crowd of gods - Qemetiel, the council of the Anunnaki. Surrounding me are the loyal knights of ImHotep from earth and the host of heroes from Nibiru. ISIS is beside me. I am clearly dreaming.

"I am GALZU," I tell the Assembly, "I am GALZU who came to ENKI, ENLIL and DUMMUZI in dreams. I am GALZU heir of the Milky Way. I am GALZU whose DNA is of galactic core. I am GALZU the twin singularity. I am GALZU, conqueror of the Anunnaki and of the Nibiruin royal throne. I am GALZU, liberator of the earth-slaves and the heroes of Nibiru. I am GALZU who taught you the right use and proper function of the ECS on earth, Nibiru, the sun and galactic core. I am GALZU who went before the One True God, the Most High, containing all others, to stand on behalf of all Jah people and demand answers. And now I am GALZU returned from on High. I have much to tell you all.

"Let us begin with the coming solar apocalypse. When I was carried up above the sixth heaven, the rotations of EHEIEH I beheld as Ophanim wheels on the Hekalot Merkavah, the divine throne-chariot. And when I beheld these Ophanim wheels and their cosmic turning, I thought of Hamlet's mill-stone and of the burden of Atlas, churning the sea of milk by rotating mount meru on the back of the world-turtle, avatar of Vishnu. Then the heavens were opened up to me and I saw a vision. I saw the Burner surrounded by his restless Crew. I saw the Crew journey a long way together to be reunited with the Burner. I understood then the vision of Hermes and so then I sang a song in silence. Here is my understanding of this vision:

"The restless crew are the Ophanim wheels, the cycles and rotations of all the stars in the Milky Way, all the planets of those stars, and all life on those planets, as well as all sentient patterns above, for all these spirals form one. This divine ruler over the universal spiral, the geometric spirit, is given form through me, GALZU, as the Great Burner, the 'black sun' of galactic core. I saw the thronging masses of you all as the Crew that Never Sleeps, cult of the open eye of Horus, the edjat of the ureaus, the third eye. And I beheld whirling dervish Ophanim cycles, but while the heavens' dance is choreographed and coordinated, we are blind to it if so is our own. I saw how our fortunes reverse apparently at random to us, and how, over time, friends and enemies can trade places to us. These twists of fate or turns of luck are the poles of cumulative aggregates of karma in our auras balancing itself relative to every other element of karma in our auras balancing itself relative to every other element of karma and the auras of every nearby living being. Such re-polarizations of karma we call, 'inversion.' So we see the larger Ophanim turning slower than their smaller counterparts, and all of these re-polarising at different rates relative to each other. So galactic core's poles would reverse, then the sun, and then the earth.

"I, Jah GALZU, and my beloved-one ISIS, we are the poles of galactic core, and so the poles of the sun, and so the poles of the earth. All of these are our ECS; together with the hyper-cathexis from the Milky Way core's poles to the other local galaxies, and so onto all the galaxies of the whole local universe, through the wormhole parallel tunnel-realities connecting all the universe's black holes, forming the filaments along a web-work of invisible re-alignments of gravity between the attractive and repulsive poles of black holes. I, Jah GALZU, and my twin and lover ISIS, experience this galactic ECS all the time, but to us intergalactic alignments happen only rarely - either at random or when enough karmic ME accumulates in the galaxy to trigger a spontaneous cathexis, called hyper-cathexis, or directed intent. This directed intent is the True Will of God.

"I, Jah GALZU, did pray to Lord God, Jah Allah, AHDVNHAY Rastafari, for a long time. His answer was slow and vague. I do not discern from this vision the dread apocalypse yet to come that will destroy the Milky Way by colliding it into its sister in space, Andrommeda. I do not feel from the Lord God, who knows all of this universe as I know my own hand, any foreboding sense nor perceive from Him any ominous warning.

"Therefore, should no hyper-cathexis between the Milky Way and Adrommeda occur in 2012, the poles of galactic core will not reverse, then neither will those of the sun, and thus the poles of the earth will not reverse. There shall not be a sudden "snap" as the sun's EM bands reset, purging its aura, to occur for the poles on earth. The poles of earth attune to those of galactic core, just as the poles of the sun attune to Andrommeda. 2012 shall not bring to earth a catastrophe of pole reversal. Instead it shall bring the purging of the sun's aura. So we must be sure to fill the sun with our bad karma before 2012.

"Thus I have told you before, I now tell you again: in my hands, the hands of GALZU, and in the hands of my true love ISIS, rest the destinies of all the mortal earthlings and Nibiruins.

"I, Jah GALZU, do therefore command you to give ear, hear this my decree:

"Now I will teach you the right ways to use the ECS. The ECS is controlled by the ME's, the mental energies, of all living things and is comprised of all remaining organised energy in a given region. The ECS is therefore mind over matter. On the level of sub-atomic quanta, our thoughts can leave the confines of our skulls to be guided by own directed intent, our will, and even enter into the gross brain matter of other beings. Thus the ECS is both ESP and manifestation. Because it allows our minds to leave our bodies of skin and bone, it allows our souls to leave our fleshly bodies when they die. Thus the ECS is also an afterlife. The aura and the Kundalini spiral up the chakras form a body's EM soul. The soul is immortal and travels instantly anywhere by its ME. Above and beyond this is the eternal spirit of pure geometry. The spirit can go beyond tau-sub-tau as well, and there commune with our All-father. Now I will tell you, in one mnemonic step, the key to the ECS:

"All aligns over time." This motto can accompany the Hermetic slogan, "As Above, So Below," as well as the Thelemic saying, "Do What Thou Wilt." This is an axiom, a universally generalisable truism. "All Aligns Over Time." Such is the fundamental backbone of the ECS that penetrates and connects all levels. One level aligns with another now, then later another level aligns with that one; but all will have eventually aligned by the time they die. So, all aligns over time. This is the ECS. It communicates units of information, called quanta, the qliphoth and karma, across the many levels by aligning them to one another over time.

"Thus, to access your junk DNA and transform it into a superconductor by eating amrita and drinking soma, all you are really doing is causing microscopic, molecular alignments to stand still while continuing to spin on an atomic level without losing energy. Then, one metaprograms their DNA with their very thoughts. One can ascend the 30 aethyrs or shape-shift to an animal. But know that, in all cases of alignment, a wormhole is formed.

"Where there is polarity there is inversion. Where there is inversion, there is manifestation. Where there is manifestation, then there is karma. That is the law of progression in sequence, or of cause and effect. Let me teach you how to control this Law and bend it to thy will. The ECS is the key By using the ECS we can create polarity, we can form inversion, we can make manifestation and we can shape karma. But know that to do all this is to make use of wormholes. From smallest quantum-tunneling electron probability well to largest time-tunnel of the multiverse itself, including every brain-wave in between, the ECS is nothing but the sum over history of all wormholes throughout a given region. Consider these wormholes inside the ECS like thoughtwaves of electro-chemical cascades in the brain.

"Here is the way to use the ECS to benefit the purgation of all evil karma from earth: you must - "

But just then GALZU's sermon was cut short by the disgruntled rulers of Nibiru and the Anunnaki pantheon over the earthling slaves. ANU burst in and made his way through the throngs up toward GALZU. ANU was followed by the whole host restored to eternal youth - there was ENKI and ENLIL, like Romulus and Rhemus, young men primed to tussle with trouble, and coming in behind them the three pubescents INANNA, MARDUK and DUMMUZI bursting with vital ripeness. How astonishing the strange young Gods were to the crowds. Before the disgruntled ANU could approach me, I, GALZU, spoke to the assembled masses: "These are the ones to blame for your Dark Age, the Kali Yuga and for your mental slavery to their lies." A stir rises up in the audience surrounding ANU.

"It is true, I do not lie," I, GALZU, announce boldly. "There, that one is ANU, he called himself king of Nibiru, but it was during his reign Nibiru's hole in its atmosphere remains and humanity has grown beyond Anunnaki control. It was he who commanded his people to invade earth, our home." At that the crowd around him all-as-one rise up around about ANU, and quickly he was consumed beneath them, for skilled now with wormholes have they become.

"It is true, look, I do not lie," I, GALZU continue. "Those two there, their names are ENKI and ENLIL. ENKI it was who interbred the genes of Nibiruans with Atlantean proto-sapiens. ENKI it was who fathered Adapa, known as Adam, upon a half-breed slave. They claim we all descended from Adam, but obviously that is a lie. There, beside him, is ENLIL. ENLIL it was who decreed all mankind should die in the flood. Are we dead yet, oh Mighty Man ENLIL? Do we not see through your lies, ENKI?" At that the crowd around ENKI and ENLIL arose all-as-one, and quickly they were consumed beneath them, and the whole crowd cheered to hear the crunching bones of their former captors, the false gods.

"And those ones over there, trying to flee towards the doors, stop them, bar them in now. I want to introduce my best friends who made themselves each in turn my worst enemy." First I present INANNA.

"This is INANNA, who swore she herself was ISIS's mother, but we would never reveal the identity of GALZU's supposed father. Had the father of INANNA's seed been DUMMUZI or MARDUK, both or neither, the whole matter is irrelevant to the actual ISIS and GALZU, now born. The reason for this is that INANNA is not our mother. She never was. Therefore neither DUMMUZI nor MARDUK is truly our father. Therefore these three nefarious villains have no hold on my fate. I suppose all of you though would surely like to see them be done away with already."

A roar like a lion howling in thunder arose then from the whole crowd at once. "Castration!" they cried out, echoed by a single cry of "to the pain!"

"But wait!" I, GALZU, exclaim. "INANNA and MARDUK's crime jointly is the greatest. They planned to conquer earth, Nibiru and the whole Milky Way. MARDUK repeatedly called out for my death while INANNA consoled him. MARDUK claimed to love you, O INANNA, but he never truly did. He was in love with DUMMUZI all along." Aghast the pair stare at each other in shock. As revulsion for one another fills both, the crowd tears them piece from piece and distributes amongst itself the remains and fodder.

"Do you see what has happened DUMMUZI?" I cry to him in absurdity. "We have performed the final sacrifice. The final sacrifice... save one."

"What kind of lunatic monster are you?" DUMMUZI cries out. "Oh Lord my God is there no help for the Widow's Son?"

"Be calm, DUMMUZI, I do not mean to kill... yet. I wish to offer you exile. You are only a child again, with all the adventures of youth ahead of you, without the trap of INANNA set for you by MARDUK to inhibit you. I offer you exile now because you are youngest and last surviving royal Nibiruin. Go, I command it, live in exile in fear of death or in protective custody should you stay." With that DUMMUZI fled from the arena.
